Nevertheless, the witch-hunt narrative still insists that the law unduly favors children. The accused, the argument goes, is "presumed guilty" and has the difficult burden of proving his or her innocence.[165] In reality, there was no change in the extraordinary burden of proof the state carries in criminal cases: it must prove the case beyond a reasonable doubt. And even though various reforms allowed some of these cases to be brought—unlike in earlier years, when they were virtually prohibited by law—the difficulties involving children as witnesses remained. Children are not as articulate as adults; they are much easier targets for defense attorneys on cross-examination. There is a general tendency, borne out in jury simulation studies, to consider older witnesses as more credible than younger ones.[166] Children are also more prone to be intimidated by courtrooms and court procedures than adults. Although programs have been developed to familiarize children with courtrooms in advance of testifying, nothing has been done to reduce the stress of cross-examination. Even Charlier and Downing note that "defense lawyers have little trouble confusing and discrediting small children on the stand," although they did not appear to take that into account in their analysis of cases. Some of the most bizarre statements made in the actual proceedings in the McMartin case were from children in the preliminary hearing who were subject to cross-examination by seven lawyers. One child was cross-examined for more than fifteen days. Countries such as New Zealand have designed procedures for limiting cross-examination of children, but the prevailing sense in the United States is that such measures would violate a defendant's right to "confront" witnesses. How this position undercuts the effectiveness of children as witnesses, and leaves some parents unwilling to subject their children to such procedures, is never acknowledged in a narrative that claims child molestation cases are "easy" to win.

Children have also been known to freeze on the stand, resulting in the dismissal of the case. Warren Poole, a police officer in Lynn, Massachusetts, was charged with molesting a young girl. She froze on the witness stand in the summer of 1988 and charges were dismissed. Poole was arrested again in 1989 when a videotape was located that documented his raping the same girl in the fall of 1988.[167] This time, he pleaded guilty. But rarely is there a second chance like that one.

Even though various reforms made it possible to file charges in the day-care sexual-abuse cases of the 1980s, facilitating the filing of charges is not the same as making it easier to win such cases. The high-profile child sexual abuse cases were often the first time young children had been witnesses or complainants in criminal proceedings in their respective states. Several of these cases demonstrate the difficulty of prosecuting such charges even after the reforms of the 1980s. First, some children are just too young to testify. The Maine Supreme Court overturned the conviction of a man who confessed to child molestation, reasoning that without the young child's testimony it was not clear that a crime had been committed.[168] In a 1992 case in Delaware "state prosecutors gave a man his freedom in exchange for a signed statement admitting that he repeatedly had raped his daughter when she was 3."[169] The agreement caused such an outcry that the attorney general released a statement explaining the difficulties in prosecuting such cases.

Second, in order to protect defendants, courts generally have not admitted the same types of evidence that would be most likely to allow disbelieving jurors to see a defendant as a potential child molester. Evidence of prior acts, in other words, though undoubtedly relevant to assessing allegations, is generally considered too prejudicial to defendants to allow into evidence. The Miami Herald described a case in which a father of four was being tried for assaulting an eleven-year-old girl who had been riding her bicycle. The jury, which ultimately settled on a lesser offense, was not allowed to be informed of the defendant's conviction five months earlier for assaulting a different eleven-year-old girl on a bicycle.[170]

In an essay about one of the lesser-known cases of sexual misconduct by a priest, Paul Wilkes wrote in The New Yorker about Father Ronald Provost, who was charged with "posing" a ten-year-old boy for semi-nude photographs. The jury was not allowed to hear that pornographic pictures of young boys had been discovered in his room at Our Lady of Mt. Carmel in 1979, or that he had been "sent away for treatment" to the House of Affirmation. The jury was also prohibited from hearing about the hundreds of pictures found in his possession when he was arrested; only the pictures involving this single child would be admitted. The defense lawyer had successfully isolated the charges in the case "as though they were a single, aberrant—even accidental—episode."[171] Viewed this way, almost any act of sexual abuse, other than an attack on a stranger, is likely to seem like a single aberrant act. In the name of protecting the defendant, courts prevent introduction of evidence that would put those acts into context. (The judge found Provost guilty and issued a ten-year suspended sentence.)[172]

Finally, rules about hearsay evidence often come into play in child sexual abuse cases. The Charlier and Downing article reported that twenty-seven states had expanded the traditional hearsay exceptions to allow parents to testify about statements made by their children. But the hearsay evidence rule can nevertheless be an impediment to prosecution. Charges were dropped in a locally publicized child molestation case after a Michigan Supreme Court decision was seen as prohibiting the use of a detailed statement by a babysitter as to what a four-year-old girl told her about things her mother said were "secret."[173] Similarly, a judge in Prince William County, Virginia, decided that fourteen-year-old Kristi Kauffmann's diary could not be admitted in a prosecution against her father, Paul. Kristi committed suicide and the Washington Post described her diary as "a grim portrait in depression and fear that she said was caused by her adoptive father's sexual assaults."[174] Prosecutors also had a statement from Paul Kauffmann admitting "that he had been fondling his daughter for nearly three years." But a statement by the defendant alone is not sufficient to sustain a conviction under Virginia law, so the case against Kauffmann was dropped. Hearsay statements were allowed in some of the cases discussed in Chapter Three, but a number of those cases were overturned on that basis. This would-be reform has done little to make it easier to win such cases. The witch-hunt narrative misrepresents what prosecutors have always known: these cases are extremely difficult to win.

Leniency for Child Molesters

Those claiming hysteria over child sexual abuse are often careful to add that they abhor "real" sexual abuse. The same can be said of society as a whole. As Suzanne Sgroi observed in 1978, "the sexual abuse of children is a crime that our society abhors in the abstract but tolerates in reality."[175] But beyond the rhetoric, the evidence that actually bears out this abhorrence is thin at best. In fact, there is significance evidence to the contrary—evidence that we actually tolerate child sexual abuse and minimize the offense in specific cases. When the defendant is not an abstraction, but an actual adult, the result is often to embrace the guilty. Minimal punishments are meted out in many instances, even though the crime as a whole has the reputation of carrying extremely severe penalties. None of the factors described here would exist, especially during the 1980s, if the witch-hunt narrative accurately characterized social responses to child sexual abuse in America.

The strongest and most direct evidence of tolerating child sexual abuse is the extent to which "respectable" child molesters are embraced and supported even after they are proven guilty. The phenomenon played out in detail not far from Jordan, Minnesota, at precisely the same time as that case. Curiously, the Jordan case is mentioned in virtually every contemporary account of child sexual abuse in America, while the Minneapolis Children's Theatre case almost never is. It resulted in a book whose title summarizes the phenomenon: Hating the Sin, Loving the Sinner.[176] When the theatre's director, John Donahue, was apprehended in 1984 for sexually abusing students, the New York Times described the theater as "widely respected" and the defendant as the recipient of a Margo Jones Award, "among the most prestigious awards in American Theatre."[177] The article reported the considerable concern about the impact the arrest would have on a major theatre company with "a full-time staff of 100" and an annual budget of $2.7 million. It was eventually revealed that Donahue had been charged with felony sodomy of a student at Carl Sandburg Junior High School in 1961, before he started the Children's Theatre in Minneapolis. (He pleaded guilty to the reduced charge of indecent liberties and received a one-year suspended sentence with ninety days in jail.) It also became clear there were numerous prior warnings and complaints about his behavior at the Children's Theatre. The father of one boy warned Donahue to leave his son alone in 1978, and a complaint was made to the Hennepin County District Attorney's Office. The Minneapolis police declined to take action, apparently because of "Donahue's prominence in the community."[178] Another complaint reached the board of directors, which dropped the matter after Donahue told them there was "no problem."

So many adults were aware of the situation that two teachers were later charged with violations of the Mandatory Reporting Act. Those charges were dropped, however—"with the greatest reluctance," according to the judge—because the statute was considered unconstitutionally vague.[179] When it came time to sentence Donahue, who pleaded guilty, Judge Charles A. Porter Jr. noted "the disturbing fact that collectively this community knew what was going on." Incredibly, the judge argued that Donahue should not "be made a scapegoat for what happened," as if his crimes were committed by someone else. The judge sentenced him to one year in prison; Donahue served eight months. Marvin Costello described the outcome as clear evidence of "society's ambivalence" about these cases.[180]

The same phenomenon occurred with priests, teachers, coaches, and scout leaders. For example, in June 1985, at the height of accusations in the McMartin case, David Slone pleaded guilty to molesting students at Falls-Lakeview School and at the Trinity Baptist Church in Norman, Oklahoma. According to a local newspaper, although Slone admitted to at least eight victims, he "continued to get strong support from some parents, children and officials of the church and at the school."[181] In Inverness, Florida, after Mitchell Matthews was convicted of eight counts of sexually abusing boys, "members of his church stood beside their choir director" and wrote letters to the judge urging probation instead of prison time.[182] The willingness of adults to embrace the guilty is directly related to the kind of grooming of parents that helps provide child molesters with access to children. The disbelief that Debbie Nathan expressed about charges against reputable, middle-class citizens who do not wear "sleazy trench coats" helps reinforce this point.

Although there are occasional cases where the defendant is vilified, the fact remains that perpetrators of child sexual abuse are often defended and embraced even after it is clear they are guilty. The witch-hunt narrative provides no explanation for this phenomenon—and this is because its existence is frighteningly similar to the phenomenon that leads to underreacting, not overreacting, to child sexual abuse.

Finally, the actual punishments meted out to child molesters by the criminal justice system often contradict the witch-hunt narrative, which predicts severe punishment as the end product of "sex abuse hysteria." Richard Gardner, who coined this phrase, made an empirical claim in the Wall Street Journal that our society has become so hysterical about child sexual abuse that child molesters "on average" serve longer prison sentences than murderers. Gardner claimed that his references were "available on request," but his response to a request from this author produced only an example of one long sentence: Robert Kelly's in the Edenton, North Carolina, day-care abuse case.[183] A comprehensive examination of all sentences for murder and for child molestation over a nine-year period in Rhode Island revealed that Gardner's claim was extremely exaggerated. Child molesters often receive probation, but murderers never do; child molesters often receive minimal sentences, but murders almost never do.[184] It is a testament to the uncritical acceptance of the witch-hunt narrative that Gardner's exaggerated claim was published in the Wall Street Journal without documentation or subsequent correction.

It does not require an original study to get a sense of the phenomenon. Newspaper stories are filled with examples of leniency to child molesters during the McMartin era. In the fall of 1983, Albert Breto pleaded guilty in Santa Ana, California, to forty-six counts involving sex crimes against two minors. He received five years of probation after Superior Court Judge Robert Green described Breto as "a gentle person" who "promised he would not engage in sexual activity" with any other minors.[185] That same week, Eugene Gold, who served four terms as Brooklyn district attorney, received probation in exchange for acknowledging "unlawful sexual conduct" with a ten-year-old girl.[186] In June 1984, near the height of the McMartin publicity, Samuel L. Jones, a Burbank, California, airport official, received probation after pleading guilty to felony charges of lewd and lascivious acts with pre-teenage boys. "This man could not suffer more consequences than he already has," his lawyer told the court, employing a logic that would insulate anyone with an important job from actually having to go to prison.[187] Similar evidence can be found in Minnesota, and probably anywhere else in the country. At the time the Jordan case was beginning, a local television station did a documentary about:

> two men—one a city official, another a doctor, both liked and respected in their small Minnesota towns—who went virtually unpunished after it was discovered that they molested adolescent boys.[188]

Systematic studies further contradict the notion that child molesters generally receive extraordinarily long sentences. The American Bar Association's Center on Children and the Law conducted a study in the early 1990s that included an examination of 954 case files from ten DA's offices around the country. The cases occurred in years that Gardner claimed were characterstic of "sex abuse hysteria." Yet, the researchers found that defendants who plead guilty or were found guilty at trial received prison or jail sentences in 59 percent of the cases. In other words, forty-one percent of the guilty avoided incarercation.[189] The distribution of sentences was strongly skewed to the low end. Thirty-six percent of the guilty were sentenced to one year or less, and twenty-two percent were sentenced between one and five years.[190] Eight percent received more than twenty years in prison, the kind of strict sentence the witch-hunt narrative claims to be characteristic of sex offenders.[191] The Boston Globe found similar results in a comprehensive study done right at the time the Amiraults were first being tried in Middlesex County. Those defending the Amiraults have since portrayed 1986 as a time when hysteria about child molestation gripped Massachusetts. But the Globe found that one out of three convicted child molesters did not go to jail at all that year; they received probation instead. Only one in ten was sentenced to more than five years in prison.[192] What kind of sex abuse hysteria is there if thirty to forty percent of convicted child molesters avoid prison and the vast majority of those sentenced receive a light sentence? Wouldn't the hysteria result in a high incarceration rates and lengthy sentences? What generally happens in reality is the opposite.

One consequence of minimal punishments is that they allow, and perhaps even embolden, repeated child sexual abuse. There are myriad cases on record in the 1980s and 1990s where a person who was apprehended for a sex crime against a child turns out to have been apprehended earlier without any significant consequences. This was the case with James Rud, the central character in the Jordan, Minnesota, cases. He had two prior convictions for sex crimes against children in the five years before his arrest in Jordan; both had resulted in probation. So, too, when John Shaver was apprehended in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, in 1988. His day-care center license had been revoked in Hawaii in 1983 after allegations of improperly touching little girls. In 1985, he opened the Rainbow Learning Center in Fort Lauderdale. The police investigated Shaver in Florida as well; three women who worked for him and at least one girl he cared for expressed concerns to police "about how Shaver handled little girls."[193] But there in Florida, in the midst of the so-called sex abuse hysteria, the investigation was closed. Similarly, when Richard Plass, a biology teacher and assistant principal at Stuyvesant High School in Manhattan, pleaded guilty in 1999 to sexually abusing a fifteen-year-old girl, it was reported that complaints about him had been filed by female students at the high school in 1985 and 1992.[194] If sex-abuse hysteria really was sweeping the country in the late 1980s and early 1990s, one wonders why there were no charges in these cases during that time.

Conclusion

None of this is to deny the combination of elements in the McMartin case that caused five teachers to be unjustly charged with crimes. There was overzealousness among many parties in that case. And the dynamics of the case can be found, to a lesser extent, in a handful of others around the country. But there were not hundreds, or even dozens, of cases like that. There were, in contrast, strong forces of minimization and denial at work during the same time period. The grains of truth in the witch-hunt narrative do not prove a major social trend. Rather, they demonstrate that competing social forces can coexist. At the same time Betty Raidor was unjustly being denied bail in the McMartin case, a man in Memphis, Tennessee, named David Slater, who had sexually assaulted a twelve-year-old over an extended period of time through his position in the Big Brother program, was avoiding jail, receiving probation instead and ordered to seek psychiatric treatment.[195] As serious and problematic as they were, the pockets of overreaction to child sexual abuse in the 1980s existed in a sea of minimization and denial of the very phenomenon. These forces are so powerful that they help explain why the witch-hunt narrative itself is so exaggerated.

CONCLUSION I

The McMartin preschool case came to define an era of child sexual abuse cases that began in 1983 and drew to a close in the early 1990s. These cases coincided with the "recognition" of child sexual abuse in America. Two important implications of this fact have been lost in subsequent discussions of these cases. First, the front-line psychologists, social workers, and law enforcement agents who were asked to respond to sexual abuse were pioneers. There were no protocols for interviewing children, few physicians had extensive knowledge about child sexual abuse, and experience with children as witnesses in court was extremely limited. Many of the professionals who found themselves in this difficult position were later criticized for aspects of how they responded. But few critics seem to remember what was being asked of these people: to respond to a problem that was suddenly recognized as serious, with little guidance and few precedents.

Second, there were powerful forces of secrecy and denial that explained why sexual abuse was not "recognized" before the mid-1980s. Those who promoted the witch-hunt narrative arising during this time never confronted what it meant that sexual abuse had been ignored or dismissed for so long. There were multiple reasons for the deafening silence around this issue. The perpetrators of abuse rely on secrecy, and they are skilled at coercing children into silence by various means. Some instill fear in their victims, some instill a sense of guilt or shame, and others rely on the sense of helplessness that comes from convincing children that nobody will believe them. Bystanders also play a role in maintaining silence. Some children speak up, and even when they do not, there are often signs that suggest abusive behavior might be occurring. But bystanders too often turn a blind eye, finding it easier to minimize or deny their suspicions than to confront the enormity of what is occurring. None of these dynamics disappeared simply because this taboo topic became a subject of public discourse in the mid-1980s.

The McMartin case began with a credible medical report and soon involved statements by several additional children supporting the suspicion that children attending the McMartin preschool had been sexually abused. The case spun out of control for a range of reasons, directly related to the fact that sexual abuse had just been "recognized." Pediatricians involved with the case overdiagnosed children largely because there was not a solid base of information about the genitals of non-abused children. Interviewers who were too sure that the children must have been abused read nonresponsive answers as an indication of fear. They were also too literal in interpreting fantastic statements. When similar statements were made in other cases around the country, some people concluded that the similarities had to mean the cases were connected. This led to some of the greatest excesses of the case—the period when many were convinced that day-care centers had been infiltrated by an organized group of people who abused children ritualistically.

But those excesses have been exaggerated in various ways. The infamous claim that there were tunnels under the McMartin preschool, often attributed to hundreds of children, was made by only a handful. The LA County Sheriff's "Ritual Abuse Task Force" took its charge seriously and credulously in 1985. It was disbanded at the end of the year without bringing any charges. Indeed, by 1986 there was a State Attorney General's Report about the significant problems with child sexual abuse investigations in nearby Kern County. Charges against five of the seven defendants in the McMartin case were dropped that year as well. The case dragged along for so many years that Dr. Heger, who evaluated many of the children in early 1984, eventually testified about how medical knowledge had evolved since then. Acknowledging that information about non-abused children had made the medical evaluation of children more conservative, she also verified how some evidence was still considered significant.

The witch-hunt narrative that grew out of the McMartin case tells a different story. Labeling the entire case a "hoax," it dismisses all of the medical evidence out of hand. Relying on the mistakes of interviewers who entered the case in November 1983, it dismisses children who made statements two months before that. The witch-hunt narrative goes much farther, extending the claims about McMartin to cases across the country, arguing there was a national epidemic of cases "just like McMartin." Despite the prominent academics and journalists who have rebroadcast it, the evidence for the claim is remarkably thin. Although the notion of there being hundreds or thousands of such cases is widely accepted, the number of specific cases offered as evidence is nowhere near that number. A few dozen cases, at most, have been offered as proof of this national witch-hunt. However, as detailed in Chapter Three, the evidence pertaining to those specific cases that would support the claims of a witch-hunt ranges from limited to nonexistent.

These cases were some of the most complicated and lengthy criminal proceedings in American history. There are more than a hundred thousand pages of transcripts in the McMartin case alone. Several of the other most commonly mentioned cases have transcripts in the range of fifty thousand pages. Beyond court transcripts, there are a host of peripheral documents, ranging from police reports and medical reports to information from civil cases that shed light on how these cases began, how they were investigated, and how they evolved. None of these cases can be encapsulated fairly with a simple story.

But the witch-hunt narrative, which has been accepted as the best explanation of these cases, does precisely that—it tells a simple story. It claims these cases share essential similarities that make them functionally alike. The rhetoric to that effect is as simple as it is unequivocal: cases across the country were "clones," "cookie-cutter copies," and "just like McMartin." The foundation for these claims has never been subject to careful scrutiny. By her own account, which became clear only in recent years, Debbie Nathan argued that the Michaels case was a cookie-cutter copy of the McMartin case before she ever researched the Michaels case.[1] Other magazine writers published strikingly similar claims, providing a set of definitive statements about lengthy and complicated cases without even reviewing the court transcript. In some instances, it was not even available when the writer claimed to have conducted research and established that the case was all a witch-hunt.

It is a testament to the power of the witch-hunt narrative that these accounts have been accepted so readily. It might also be a function of the fact that doing this kind of research is difficult. This book represents the first effort to comprehensively research the cases that serve as the foundation of the witch-hunt narrative. It is the culmination of fifteen years of locating, accessing, and analyzing transcripts and related documents in the cases that form the basis for the narrative. The challenges in this kind of research are enormous. With an army of research assistants and a substantial budget for photocopying and travel, it still was not possible to cover a few dozen cases completely. But none of these challenges or limitations is mentioned in the works that are the foundation of the witch-hunt narrative. Indeed, none of the magazine articles about the case were based on a comprehensive examination of trial transcripts. Yet these accounts have been accepted, repeated, and enshrined in the academic literature of fields ranging from sociology and law to psychology and English, where they are written about in the extreme language of the witch-hunt narrative.

The result is a deeply flawed account of these cases and of the time period. The witch-hunt narrative offers a simple and satisfying explanation, one that has deep roots in the American experience. But it does not do justice to the facts of these cases, including McMartin. The cases examined in Chapter Three are among those offered as the best evidence of the witch-hunt narrative. These are the cases that should serve as the empirical foundations for the claims the narrative advances. That is, they should all provide strong support for the narrative, especially since the claims of hundreds of cases rest on lists that together cite not more than several dozen. Yet, almost none of the cases on those lists support the narrative's claims. As demonstrated in Chapter Three, even the cases with the worst problems also involved evidence of abuse. And the lesser-known cases, which have received almost no attention in the witch-hunt canon, involved surprisingly little evidence for the claim that they were "hoaxes" or lacked a basis in fact.

The witch-hunt narrative was first written by journalists, and then adopted by academics. It was never based on comprehensive research of multiple cases. From the vantage point provided by fifteen years of in-depth, original research, I would say the narrative certainly appears to have begun with a conclusion and then sought information to support it, using documents and claims provided by defense lawyers as primary sources, and even as coauthors and "fact checkers." It is, in short, the defense view of history. In this way, the witch-hunt narrative is guilty of the same shortcomings it criticizes. While claiming that prosecutors and interviewers consistently minimize or deny evidence that does not support their position, the proponents of the witch-hunt narrative have done the same thing in the direction of the defense. Instead of disregarding evidence that might point away from guilt, they disregard evidence pointing toward it. Instead of automatically believing any statement from a child, they seem to automatically believe the denial of any adult. Instead of assuming all the medical evidence presented by the prosecution must be true, they take the position that it should all be rejected.

The structure of the witch-hunt narrative makes for powerful reading, but it creates a distorted picture of these cases and of the time period in which they existed. The McMartin case is told in an exaggerated form that ignores all the evidence of guilt. But the Papoose Palace case from Reno, Nevada—which proves that sexual abuse can occur in a day-care center on a wide scale, for years, without detection—is forgotten. The Jordan, Minnesota, cases are similarly described in a manner that ignores evidence of guilt. But the Minneapolis Children's Theatre case, which demonstrates how adults turn a blind eye to abuse, is forgotten. The wild claims made by some parents in West Point are recounted in detail, while the fact that a girl had a puncture wound to her vagina that almost certainly occurred at the day-care center is forgotten, along with the fact that nobody was ever apprehended. Claims about child pornography that were made in some cases but never proven are well preserved in the witch-hunt narrative, but the realities of Jack Shaver's case—multiple complaints that were ignored, lenient penalties on more than occasion, and child pornography that involved day care—are lost to history.

The witch-hunt narrative is not just an inaccurate view of the cases it describes; it is an inaccurate view of the time period in which they occurred and the social forces at play. These inaccuracies matter for reasons far beyond the historical record. These cases have had a major influence on the field of psychology and on the perception of children as witnesses. Those issues are best illustrated through the Kelly Michaels case, the subject of the next chapter. The implications of what happened in that case are the subject of the remaining chapters in the book.

PART II

THE TRIUMPH OF THE WITCH-HUNT NARRATIVE

5

The Turning Point

State v. Michaels

The Kelly Michaels case became a turning point in the public discourse about child sexual abuse in America. Unlike many other cases from the 1980s, which ended in hung juries or acquittals, the Michaels case, which emerged in 1985, ended in a resounding guilty verdict in 1988. It appeared to be a textbook conviction in the kind of day-care sexual abuse cases that had made headlines but posed great difficulties for prosecutors. Learning from some of the mistakes in other cases, the prosecutors in the Kelly Michaels case successfully discredited Ralph Underwager, then one of the leading defense psychologists on child suggestibility, and won a sweeping jury verdict.

But everything changed on appeal. In a dramatic decision in 1993, the New Jersey Appellate Division overturned the conviction and endorsed the concept of pre-trial "taint hearings" to ascertain whether children had been so "tainted" by the interview process that they should not be allowed to testify at trial. The New Jersey Supreme Court upheld the decision, and charges against Kelly Michaels were eventually dropped. The view that the case was all a witch-hunt has since become the conventional wisdom.

This chapter argues that the conventional wisdom is wrong. On the basis of a comprehensive examination of the record, it is apparent that the witch-hunt narrative omits key facts and distorts others—all in favor of the theory that the case can be explained entirely by "child suggestibility." The actual evidence in the case has been overshadowed by academic research purporting to demonstrate that children were highly suggestible under conditions much less intensive than what happened in the Kelly Michaels case. But the critical claim that compares the approach in their experiments to what was actually done in the case is not borne out by the record of the case.

The Case and the Conviction

Margaret Kelly Michaels, who was known as Kelly, moved to New Jersey in the summer of 1984 when she was twenty-two years old and a few credits short of graduating from college. In September she took a job as a teacher's assistant at the Wee Care Day Nursery in Maplewood, a prosperous suburb of New York City. The day-care center was operated out of St. George's Episcopal Church, a sprawling three-story building that rented rooms on two floors to the day-care center. Soon after starting at Wee Care, Kelly Michaels became a classroom teacher; she replaced a teacher who left unexpectedly. Michaels had her own classroom and a naptime group with some of the same children, and she took care of children in the late afternoon when the center was nearly deserted. Two events in late April 1985 are critical to the case that soon developed: Kelly Michaels left Wee Care abruptly, and shortly thereafter a four-year-old boy blurted out something disconcerting while having his temperature taken anally at his pediatrician's office. A basic timeline of the case appears in Figure 5.1.

Key Events in Late April 1985

Kelly Michaels left her job hastily at the end of April, about six weeks before the school year was over. The hastiness is reflected in the fact that she gave two weeks' notice and then departed before what she said would be her final day. By her description at the time, the departure was for "personal" reasons. That is the word she used in a letter to the school's director on April 15. Two days later, in a letter to parents, Michaels said she "had been experiencing serious personal difficulties which have now made it imperative for me to leave Wee Care as soon as possible."[1] Michaels did not explain what she was "experiencing" at the time that made it so "imperative" to leave Wee Care immediately. She would later claim her decision to leave Wee Care was a simple matter of leaving one job in favor of a better one. But according to Stephanie Lorman of the Community Day Care Center in East Orange, the "better" job that Kelly Michaels accepted was temporary; it would last only through September 1985, and it paid essentially the same as the job at Wee Care.[2]

Michaels never explained convincingly why a temporary job, at essentially the same pay, was so much better than her current job that it would prompt her sudden departure weeks before the end of the school year. Of course, she did not owe anyone an explanation, but the prosecution would later argue that one reason made particular sense: Michaels had been playing sexualized games with the children, she could see that various children were acting out, and she was fleeing the scene. There was strange additional evidence that also fit this theory better than any other explanations that have since been offered: Michaels told a mother on April 19 that she was leaving early because she was "bleeding from the rectum, a lot."[3] Whatever the reason for her departure, the investigation in the case was triggered days later when a four-year-old boy made a spontaneous statement at his pediatrician's office. On April 30, 1985, Dorinda Pierce took her son Mitchell[4] to the pediatrician because he had a rash. While the medical assistant was taking his temperature rectally, Mitchell said "this is what my teacher does to me at school." Laura Hadley, the medical assistant, testified that the thermometer was in his rectum for "about a half a minute" before the child made this statement.[5] Asked specifically about where her hands were, Hadley indicated she was "holding the thermometer" with one hand and "watching my watch" with the other hand.[6] (This testimony would later be overlooked completely by the witch-hunt narrative.) Hadley then asked the boy, Which teacher? He said, "Kelly." Hadley mouthed to Pierce, who was also in the room, "Who is Kelly?" Dorinda indicated she did not know any "Kelly." As it turns out, Kelly Michaels was Mitchell's "naptime" teacher, but she was not his classroom teacher, so the name did not sound familiar to his mother. Seeking to clarify, the medical assistant asked what Kelly did. The boy responded: "Her takes my temperature every day at school." There was little doubt to the nurse or the mother that the child was indicating he was anally penetrated by someone named Kelly.

Figure 5.1 Kelly Michaels Case Timeline, Initial Complaint to Conviction.

Mrs. Pierce later testified that after lunch the same day, when she asked her son what happened at naptime, he "leaned against the refrigerator, put one leg up and started rubbing his genitals." He then stated "she used the white jean stuff," adding "you have to be real careful not to get it on your pants."[7] His mother was not sure what "white jean stuff" meant, but the overall meaning of his words was clear. She called her pediatrician back to ask for advice. He told her to call the New Jersey Department of Youth and Family Services (DYFS) and report that her son had possibly been sexually abused at Wee Care. Those events all occurred within three hours of the office visit. What unfolded after the phone call spanned nine years. First there was an investigation, and then there was a lengthy pre-trial period, followed by a nine-month trial. Five years later, there were two high-profile appeals.

The Initial Phase of the Investigation

The first phase of the investigation began when Richard Mastrangelo, an investigator for the Essex County Prosecutor's Office, was notified about the matter by Lou Fonolleras from the DYFS Institutional Abuse Unit. Fonolleras had first spoken to Dorinda Pierce, whose call was on the advice of her pediatrician. Cases in the Sexual Abuse Unit of the Essex County Prosecutor's Office were assigned chronological numbers beginning with the new year. The call about Mitchell Pierce's statement was given the internal case number 402. Though it was the 402nd case of the year, it was the only one to eventually become a national news story.

Sara Sencer-McArdle, the assistant prosecutor assigned to the case, had handled hundreds of child sexual abuse cases by the time this one arrived.[8] But she had never had an "institutional abuse" case. So this was the first time she faced questions about how to coordinate an investigation with another agency. DYFS had jurisdiction to investigate claims of child maltreatment at nursery schools because they licensed such facilities. The agency could revoke a license, it could assess fines, and it could mandate changes such as removing an employee or changing procedures. This mission, though, differs considerably from that of the criminal justice system. The purpose of a DYFS investigation is to identify and rectify problems, not to assess innocence or guilt for purposes of punishment. The burden of proof before taking an official action is "a preponderance of the evidence," an evidentiary standard much less demanding than the "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard in criminal proceedings.

The Essex County Prosecutor's Office was not inclined to work with DYFS. Their inclination was to complete their own investigation without any outside interference. As Lisa Manshel reported, in one of the two books written about the case, Sencer-McArdle asked Fonolleras to hold off on his investigation.[9] He agreed at first, but the agreement lasted only three weeks. During this time, the prosecutor's office conducted its own investigation and presented the evidence for an indictment based on the testimony of three children.

The criminal case began to take shape on Thursday, May 2, when Mitchell Pierce was interviewed by detective George McGrath and assistant prosecutor Sencer-McArdle. Mitchell indicated that his teacher at school took his temperature rectally. He demonstrated with a doll and stated, as he had with his mother, that Kelly used "gasoline." The prosecutor asked if his temperature was taken in his mouth. "No. You can't put gasoline in your mouth," he replied. "Her takes it in my bum," he explained.[10] The prosecutor would later confirm that temperatures were not taken rectally at Wee Care, but instead with a plastic strip on the forehead. If Mitchell's naptime teacher was inserting something into his rectum, it was not an approved action. Mitchell also named two other boys as being "hurt" by Michaels: Eddie Nathanson and Sam Raymond. The investigation had its first two leads. These disclosures became the core of the original charges against Kelly Michaels.

One of these leads produced nothing at the time; the other provided the basis for additional charges. Eddie Nathanson was the second child interviewed, and he did not disclose anything. Sam Raymond was interviewed by Mastrangelo, of the Essex County Prosecutor's Office, on May 3. Sam's mother, Jackie, later testified that she learned there were sexual abuse allegations at Wee Care on April 30 when Arlene Spector, director of the preschool, informed her husband in person.[11] The next day, Jackie Raymond asked her son "if he had any problem with anybody in school." As she later summarized his response: "He told me that one of the teachers at school had touched him on the behind and in his penis and kicked him a couple of times." When asked to describe this exchange in more detail, she added:

> He told me in spurts of the moment, like different intervals. He ran behind the couch, hid, he started crying and then finally he just sat there when I walked behind the couch and he told me that he was hurt by a teacher at school.[12]

The five-year-old boy made similar statements at the prosecutor's office: "Kelly kicked me," he said, and she touched "on my private area." How often did this occur? "Once," he responded. He also said Kelly had once locked him in a closet. These statements would be the basis for one count of second-degree sexual assault (touching his penis) and one count of child endangerment (locking him in the closet).

An additional boy—not one of the two mentioned by Mitchell—also emerged in the first days of the investigation. At this point, there had not been any kind of announcement or press coverage concerning allegations of sexual abuse at Wee Care. The other parents of children at Wee Care who knew about the allegations in the first few days in May 1985, beyond the parents of the boys already interviewed, were those on the board of directors of the nursery school. The board oversaw Wee Care facilities in Maplewood and South Orange, New Jersey, and several board members had children at the Wee Care facility in Maplewood. One was Debbie Cook, whose five-year-old son Cody was also in Michaels's naptime group. On May 2, the Cooks opened a conversation with their son about the teachers at school. Later that evening, Cody's father wrote a three-page single-spaced description of what then happened. The handwritten statement indicates that these parents, like Dorinda Pierce, were not aware that their child even had contact with someone named Kelly at Wee Care.

> I asked who all of the teachers at school were and proceeded to name the ones I knew; Nancy, Arlene, Rosita, Barbara Crystal & Joan. Cody then said I'm forgetting someone and I said who? He said, Kelly. I asked, who's she? He said the Nap Teacher.[13]

As Cody's father described it, his son avoided his gaze and started kicking the table when asked about Kelly. He wrote further:

> I told him whatever he told me was O.K. whether anything happened or not, but I needed to know the truth. He hung his head and said "Oh, you mean about Kelly touched my private parts." I asked, "Did Kelly do that?" He said "yes, and she also told me not to tell my parents & that I had to keep it a secret."[14]

This statement was possibly the most jarring to the boy's father, but something stranger was yet to come. When the boy was asked how Kelly touched his private parts, he provided a most unlikely answer: with a spoon. His father's handwritten statement continues:

> I said, "with a spoon?" He said yes. I then asked what do you mean? He got up from his chair, and walked over to the drawers by the sink, got out a spoon, and said like this.[15]

The boy repeated those details the next day and demonstrated on a doll what happened with the spoon, which was essentially that Michaels had lifted his scrotum with the utensil. This was the first child to mention utensils as part of the sexual acts involving Michaels. Although the claim would eventually be made that investigators induced children to make allegations of this sort, there can be no question that the original allegations about utensils came from a child's statement to his parents before he was formally interviewed in the case. Cody Cook's father gave a statement to Detective Mastrangelo at the prosecutor's office that contained the same essential facts. Asked whether he had anything to add, he said:

> Yes, both last night at home, and today with Det. McGrath, Cody said that Kelly had told him to keep it a secret. And when he told me what took place in school last night, he hung his head down and looked pained. Previous to that he had been very nervous and figidy [sic]. In my mind, his body language, at these critical moments, underscore [sic] the truthfulness of his statements.[16]

One more boy was also interviewed in the first week of May. Max Rooney was a good friend of Sam Raymond's, and Max's father was co-president of the board of directors of Wee Care. Max's parents were asked if they would bring their son to the prosecutor's office on Sunday, May 5, when Sam was going to return for a second interview that was to be videotaped.

Unfortunately, there were problems with the videotape equipment. The "recorded" statement of Sam Raymond was determined to be unusable shortly after it was taken. The prosecutor had to conduct the same interview a second time if there was any hope of capturing his statements on tape. (It probably could not be used as evidence, anyway, given the rules against hearsay evidence.) The boy reportedly said much less in the second interview than he did in the first; his affect was apparently much different as well.[17] Things went even worse with Max. The "Patricia Crowley" book about the case, written under that pseudonym by the mother of Martha Landez, includes the following account, which suggests how emotional the topic of sexual abuse was for many parents:

> Next it was Max Rooney's turn. But he appeared terrified, and was reluctant to respond to even the simplest questions about school. So Sara brought Sam Raymond back into the room, hoping that Max would say that nothing bad happened to his friend when he talked about Kelly.
>
> But when Sam Raymond described for Sara how Kelly fondled the boys with spoons, Max Rooney denied it.
>
> Sam Raymond looked puzzled. "Yes, Max, it did so happen," he said.
>
> Max turned his fearful face to his friend and said softly, "Sam, I said no."
>
> At this point, Sara decided to intervene. "Okay, little boys," she said. "Just tell the truth."
>
> Michael Rooney, Max's father, standing out in the hall listening, was outraged. He had had enough. It seemed to him like Sara was bullying his child into talking when the child was obviously petrified. He smashed the baseball bat over the staircase banister, and began to scream obscenities at a startled Sara.[18]

Max Rooney did not play any further role in the case, so there is no testimony or other court documentation that would provide critical purchase in assessing this claim. It is impossible to know for sure whether Max "appeared terrified" or was "obviously petrified." It is also not possible to know why his father reacted so violently to the statement "Just tell the truth." Indeed, this incident and the addendum that Cook offered to his statement about Cody's disclosure demonstrate how significant nonverbal qualities can be in describing and interpreting children's statements. These examples also demonstrate the limits of reviewing such issues entirely on the basis of written transcripts and related documents.

The original Wee Care case, then, was based on three of the five boys interviewed in the first few days of May. See Figure 5.2 for a depiction of the interview sequence for the five boys who were first interviewed in early May. All three of them gave clear statements about sexual abuse at the hands of Kelly Michaels in their first contact with authorities. The first one originated in a spontaneous statement at the pediatrician's office, and the other two each came in response to a question from a parent. The statements of these boys would form the basis for a six-count indictment that was handed down by a grand jury on May 24. Unknown at the time, two more grand juries would be convened—one in July, the other in November—and more indictments would follow. Twenty-eight more children would be added to the case through this process. But statements by three boys—obtained long before any publicity about the case, and even before the director of the preschool sent a letter to parents—were the core of the original case against Kelly Michaels.

Figure 5.2 Kelly Michaels Interview Sequence, Children Interviewed in the Initial Investigative Phase.

The Subsequent Investigation

The prosecutor's office did not look beyond the three boys for additional victims, or even seek to reinterview either of the boys who did not make any kind of a disclosure. Investigators interviewed a few more adults in preparing the case for the grand jury, but no more children were interviewed by the Essex County Prosecutor's Office in May. The prosecutors had "stepped back" from further investigation of the case.[19] This was not a formal designation, of course; rather, it was a practical reality in an office overburdened with other cases. Two events caused the matter to reverberate in the community after the five boys were interviewed. The first was a letter about the matter sent on May 8 to all the parents with children at Wee Care in 1984–85. Second, there was a meeting for parents on May 15. The letter to parents indicated that the prosecutor's office was conducting an investigation "regarding serious allegations made by a child against a former employee of the Maplewood Center."[20] It promised communication in the future when more information was available, but the letter otherwise provided no details. It did not name the suspect; nor did it request that parents do anything.

The letter raised concerns among parents, for obvious reasons. On receiving it, many parents phoned each other, comparing notes and seeking information. Although this information was not formally released, there is evidence that many parents were aware that the alleged victims were all boys.[21] This caused some parents of girls at Wee Care to decide it was not necessary to attend the parents' meeting on May 15. Even some parents with boys at Wee Care skipped this meeting, but many of the parents were in attendance.

The board of directors wanted to have a meeting for parents, but they were painfully aware of the tension between investigating a criminal case and providing information to those affected by the investigation. The board president informed the audience on May 15 "that both the Maplewood Police Department and the Essex County Prosecutor's Office had requested that we not have any meeting at all."[22] The main speaker for the meeting was Peg Foster, a social worker whose mission was to address child sexual abuse issues in general without addressing anything about the status of the case. The minutes of this meeting indicate that "as expected, parents raised many questions that Board members could not answer for fear of endangering the investigation."[23]

Foster is reported to have emphasized that parents should not interrogate their children and that "they should be good listeners."[24] She also described various behavioral symptoms that might be of concern, emphasizing that changes in behavior are what is relevant. It was not clear to parents whether the allegations were current or not. Kelly Michaels's connection to this letter was not widely known then. The whole thing was played down by Arlene Spector, director of the preschool, who was quoted as saying: "It was very benign stuff. On a scale of one to ten, I'd say it was about a three."[25]

Fonolleras, the DYFS investigator who originally notified the prosecutor's office about the statement by Mitchell Pierce, entered the case on May 22. The prosecutors had asked him to hold back on his investigation. But after three weeks of waiting, he received approval to commence his own investigation from a DYFS supervisor who knew the prosecutors did not have the power to prevent DYFS from doing so. Fonolleras reportedly informed the Essex County Prosecutor's Office, "I'm coming in, whether you like it or not."[26] He drove to the school and started looking around. After examining the premises, he proceeded, with the assistance of Spector, to call Eddie Nathanson's mother for permission to interview the first boy who denied any involvement when interviewed earlier at the prosecutor's office.

According to Fonolleras's description, Eddie "refused to give information" at first. They played, they made drawings, and Eddie eventually "admitted seeing Kelly Michaels massage Sam Raymond and Mitchell Pierce's buttock and backs and that she inserted her index finger into their anus."[27] But he denied any personal victimization. Fonolleras then tried to interview Ralph Gans, a classmate and friend of Eddie's. Ralph was "visibly upset and angry at being questioned" about Michaels, and he ran out of the room when her name was mentioned.[28] On the basis of this one-day visit, Fonolleras submitted a report to his supervisors that described concerns about lack of adequate supervision of children at Wee Care. He made no findings concerning abuse and did not schedule any more interviews. This is important to remember, since Fonolleras is eventually cast as an interviewer with such a strong "confirmation bias" that he found sexual abuse everywhere he looked. That certainly is not what happened on May 22.

Fonolleras returned to Wee Care on June 6, prompted by a telephone call from Eddie Nathanson's mother, indicating that Eddie had made statements at home indicating Kelly Michaels had sucked his penis ("a lot, a lot") and scraped the boys' nipples "with a fork."[29] Critics of the case often mention the fact that Eddie's mother read him a book called No More Secrets for Me.[30] They do not tend to mention the reasons that it seemed possible that Eddie might, in fact, be keeping secrets. First, he was one of two children named by the first boy in the case, and the other boy confirmed the abuse when first questioned. Second, Eddie had had an unexplained, chronic rash in his anal area that spring.

Fonolleras described Eddie as "frightened and very shaken" on June 6. With the aid of dolls, however, the boy made numerous statements about sexual abuse. These included several mentions of utensils. Eddie's statements matched what had seemed to be the most unbelievable aspect of Sam Raymond's disclosure to his parents the night of May 2: sexual abuse with a spoon. (There is no evidence that Fonolleras knew the content of Raymond's statement to police.) Eddie also described rubbing a spoon on Michaels's vaginal area. Fonolleras's notes from this interview contain additional statements about abuse with utensils: Eddie indicated that Michaels had put her finger and a "knife handle" in his anus. He also reported that she had said: "Let's play nurse. I'll take your temperature. You feel warm."[31] Additionally, "Eddie told me he was naked in the music room, had been hit with a wooden spoon." Fonolleras asked the boy "to show me where it was."[32] Eddie took him to the church choir room, a third-floor room that was off-limits to the children at Wee Care.

Fonolleras interviewed two other children that day: Ralph Gans, Eddie's friend, and Julia Tilden, the first girl interviewed in the investigation. Ralph had run out of the room when Fonolleras tried to interview him on May 22. On June 6, Ralph stayed in the room and reportedly made numerous statements about sexual abuse by Michaels. These statements were noteworthy for two reasons. First, he also mentioned utensils, particularly knives. Second, he implicated "various girls," according to Fonolleras's notes. One girl, Tilden, was named several times in connection with sexual acts. She was interviewed later that day. Fonolleras's notes from this interview indicate that Julia also stated Kelly Michaels had used a knife and her finger to penetrate girls and boys. She also specified "the music room" and added a detail that became the symbol for those who criticized the case: she said that Michaels had played the piano in the nude, specifically playing the song "Jingle Bells." Perhaps even more striking, for its resonance with prior statements from several other children, is this question and answer from the statement Julia Tilden gave at the prosecutor's office six days later:

> Q: Does Kelly play nurse with you?
>
> A: Takes my temperature, with a spoon, on my front bottom.[33]

But Julia did not end up being in the case, and I have been unable to find anything in the record to explain why.

The next day, Fonolleras interviewed four girls at Wee Care. The first was Nora van Haley, who had been mentioned the day before by one or both of the boys. Nora's mother was telephoned on June 6 to request permission for her daughter to be interviewed at school. Her mother declined, insisting on meeting Fonolleras first. This happened the following morning, and Nora was the first interview of the day.

Eileen Treacy, a psychologist who later evaluated children for the prosecution, summarized the disclosures contained in Fonolleras's notes:

> Knife in vagina; fork handle in [Max Rooney's] butt & other boys; hurt her in piano room; nude pileup w/silverware.[34]

Max Rooney was, by then, the only one of the original five boys who had not disclosed abuse. His original interview was the one cut short when his father lost his temper. What is striking about the content of these early statements is the consistency of the strangest elements in other disclosures: the utensils and sexualized games in the "piano room."

Fonolleras interviewed three other girls that day: Cassie Bond-Foley, Lucy Deacon, and Jessie Shaw. Cassie had been mentioned earlier by Eddie Nathanson. Again, there are statements about utensils in his notes: "she described having a knife put into her" and being "hit on the genitals with a wooden spoon." Perhaps most strikingly, "she also saw [Kelly] nude, sitting and playing Jingle Bells." Once again, a bizarre element that is otherwise almost impossible to believe was mentioned by more than one child. There was not really a formal interview with Lucy Deacon, but an attempted interview: Fonolleras described the girl as "too scared" and ended the effort in less than five minutes. The other girl, Jessie Shaw, apparently made some kind of disclosure; this much is clear from her mother's later testimony.[35]

When the day ended on June 7, the case was destined to expand beyond the original indictments. In two days, Fonolleras had interviewed two boys and five girls. Both boys made statements about sexualized games, including abuse with utensils. The boys named several girls who also participated, and those girls were interviewed within one day. Four of the five girls interviewed then made statements, with overlapping details, that would be the basis for criminal charges. The second grand jury was not convened until July, but these children would account for the first charges presented.

It is clear from the later accounts by Martha Landez's mother that at the time the parents still had no sense that the "former employee" might be implicated in anything involving more than a few boys.[36] A local newspaper reinforced this idea when it reported, in a brief story on June 7, the filing of a six-count indictment against Kelly Michaels for sexually abusing three boys.[37] Children were still attending Wee Care in the first week of June, and the board of directors had just gone through a long argument about whether or not to proceed with an annual fundraising event in June. They decided against it, but the fact there were strong advocates of "business as usual" demonstrates that the charges against Michaels had not become an obsession among Wee Care parents.

The investigation expanded the next week. Fonolleras conducted seven interviews in the two days at the end of the first week in June; there were fourteen interviews conducted between Monday and Thursday of the second week of June. Six of those interviews were with children who had not previously been interviewed. The others were second or third rounds, but this was because the Essex County Prosecutor's Office had come back into the case that week after hearing a report from Fonolleras on June 7. The investigators from the prosecutor's office needed to take their own statements; they could not recommend criminal charges to be based on statements they never heard. Several children, then, repeated to a police investigator what they had already told the DYFS investigator. These second interviews were not prompted by the lack of disclosure in the first interview, as the witch-hunt narrative would later claim. To the contrary, they were conducted because there had been earlier disclosures.

The fact that some children made statements to police investigators after being interviewed by DYFS illustrates why it is impossible to characterize the "average" interview in the case. The interviews did not all have the same purpose; why children were interviewed varied. Sometimes a second interview followed a first one in which there was a disclosure; at least a few times, the second interview was a subsequent attempt to find out whether a child who did not originally disclose anything untoward nevertheless had relevant information.

Recognizing these differences, we can still find some patterns to the interviews. Dr. Karen Burton, who reviewed transcripts of twenty-six interviews with children for the defense, wrote a memo describing the "basic format characterized by most but not all of the interviews." First the child would be asked to draw his or her family and then be asked to draw Kelly; the interviewer would ascertain what words the child used for various body parts, and the children would be asked general questions (e.g., Did you see Kelly do anything bad?) and then more specific ones (e.g., Did you ever see Kelly doing something funny with peanut butter?).[38]

By the end of the second week in June, the original case had expanded to include two more boys as victims—Eddie Nathanson, Ralph Gans—and the several girls who they mentioned and who made independent statements corroborating details about abuse with utensils and sexualized games in the choir room. Several children (Cody Cook, Lucy Deacon, and Eddie) made incriminating statements to one or both of their parents before being interviewed by authorities. Others made statements to their parents immediately after being interviewed. It was apparent to investigators that the case was larger than a few boys, although no one knew how much larger.

The Investigation Intensifies and Then Deteriorates

The nature and intensity of the investigation eventually changed, shifting from being focused on the evidence obtained in earlier interviews to being essentially universal. Every child who attended Wee Care would be interviewed, whether or not investigators had reason to think the child had been abused. But this was a DYFS goal, not one adopted by the prosecutor's office—a distinction later to be lost in all that was written about the case.

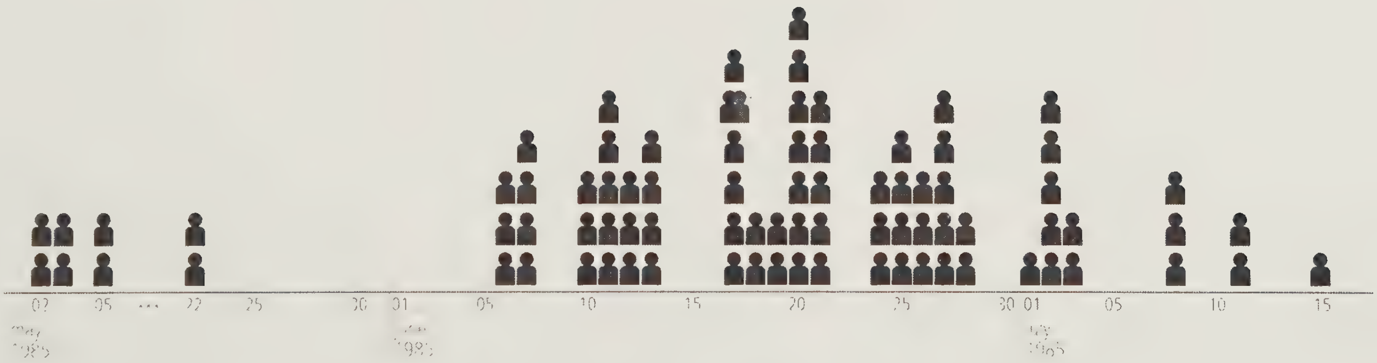
The interviewing increased the next week (see Figure 5.3). There were fourteen interviews the week of June 10 and twenty-three the week of June 17. The intensity of the matter also increased in the community. A board meeting with parents was held on June 10. Two more parents' meetings followed in June—one on Friday the 14th, the other Monday the 17th—both with Dr. Susan Esquilin, a psychologist. On June 21, the Star Ledger reported that additional charges would be filed against Michaels.[39]

As the investigation expanded to include all of the children, it reached many who did not allege any kind of abuse. This happened at the same time Fonolleras was becoming convinced that most, if not all, of the children at Wee Care had been sexually abused by Michaels. The belief led to interviews where some children were prompted and pressured inappropriately. A prime example is Fonolleras's interview with Brian Murphy,[40] an almost-five-year-old who attended Wee Care for the final two months of the 1984–85 school year. "Don't be a baby," Fonolleras scolded the boy, who was apparently running around the room during the interview. "Come here. Seriously, we are going to need your help on this," he said. This interview has been cited frequently by critics of the case because early in the interview, when Fonolleras is asking the boy to name various body parts, Brian says, pointedly, "Stop, you're teaching me stuff." Fonolleras's ham-handed reply: "You got to learn somehow."[41]

Lou Fonolleras clearly grew less open to the idea that any children were not her victims. He ultimately "substantiated" sexual abuse in connection with fifty-one children. His explanation for reaching this conclusion about children who did not disclose abuse appears, in retrospect, to yield much better evidence of his bias than of Michaels's guilt. For example, after interviewing one boy on June 19, Fonolleras wrote that he "was obviously quite shaken, and this investigator felt strongly that he wanted to relate his knowledge, but was afraid of upsetting his family."[42] In other words, the child did not make any incriminating statements but the investigator "felt strongly" that the child was withholding things. Fonolleras even opined that the boy's parents "refused to accept his possible victimization and projected those feelings onto him."[43]

Figure 5.3 Kelly Michaels Interview Sequence, All Investigative Interviews.

Each icon represents one interview. Some children appear more than once. The vertical stacks of icons indicate the number of interviews in one day. The space between 5 to 22 May is not drawn to scale.



[illegible]

Another troublesome example is the interview with Clare Williams, a girl who Kelly Michaels regularly babysat. She denied any victimization, but Fonolleras wrote in his report:

> There is a slight possibility that Kelly may have respected her relationship with the family . . . but this investigator finds it difficult to believe that she would have had the conscience to exercise discretion.[44]

There were also instances where Fonolleras told a child that Kelly was "bad." A prime example: "Everyone knows you didn't do anything wrong. Kelly did. She took advantage of you kids," Fonolleras told Tracy Hayes. None of these examples is defensible. Indeed, any one of them could be used as an argument to discredit subsequent statements from the child. But in analyzing the actual criminal case, it is vitally important to ask whether these examples involved children whose statements actually formed the basis for charges against Kelly Michaels. The answer is no. None of the examples cited above involved a child who was actually in the criminal case. The objectionable content in these interviews might be why they were not included. More likely, it is because these children had no relevant information. This does not excuse the specific tactics with individual children, but neither should it be a reason to abandon the entire case. Rightfully, none of the children mentioned above was taken to the grand jury, and none appeared in any of the indictments—although several would later be included in the witch-hunt narrative about the case. Additionally, these examples all came from the late stage of the investigative interviews: Elliot Sanders was interviewed on June 19, Clare Wolfe on June 20, Tracy Hayes on June 25, and Brian Murphy on June 26.[45] These examples are strong evidence of overzealous interviewing, but this should not be confused with evidence of an all-encompassing problem in a case that originated with three separate disclosures in early May—weeks before Fonolleras interviewed any children.

The "hearsay knowledge" that appears in some of the investigative interviews is also consistent with the idea that the investigation reached a point of worse-than-diminishing returns. "My mommy told me Kelly did bad things," Clare Williams told Fonolleras. Ruby Watson said "My daddy told me Kelly did bad things." Shayla Palimieri indicated that "Tracy Hayes told me that Kelly touched private parts." Those statements, also later cited by case critics, are reason to worry about any subsequent "disclosure" made by these children since it is apparent that the reason they associate Michaels with wrongdoing is that someone told them so. But again, none of these children was taken to the grand jury and none of their statements formed the basis for any charges in the case, even though several of these children would later figure prominently in the witch-hunt narrative about the case. Notably, all of the examples of supposed hearsay knowledge that have been identified in the case were from the late stages of the investigative interview sequence.[46] If there was a time, then, when a significant number of parents were anxious to have their children interviewed solely for the fact they attended Wee Care—and not because of statements by other children—it was the third week of June, right after consecutive parents' meetings on June 14 and 17. Between June 18 and June 28 there were thirty-two investigative interviews, which is slightly less than the total number of interviews conducted between May 2 and June 17. Twenty-two of those sessions were with children being seen for the first time. Some of the remaining ten, however, were second interviews with children who did not disclose any sexual abuse the first time. Two of those children, P. J. Isaacs and Brenda Mendes, made statements that caused them to be included in the charges and subsequent trial. The interviews with both those children would become common examples in the witch-hunt narrative and would repeatedly be described, inaccurately, as being typical of the case.

The investigation started wrapping up by the July 4 weekend. Four children who had not been previously interviewed were questioned between July 1 and 3. Six more interviews were conducted after that weekend, all with children who had previously been interviewed. With the exception of one boy, the children interviewed at that point had already made substantive statements concerning Michaels. Several of these interviews were in advance of the grand jury, which began hearing testimony on July 11. Although criticisms would later be made about multiple interviews in the case, those critics would never address how many of the children who were interviewed more than once had disclosed sexual abuse in the first interview. Nor would they confront how many children disclosed abuse early in the investigation. The final investigative interview was July 15. Fifty-one children had been interviewed; from the very first investigative interview with Mitchell Pierce, there had been eighty-three interview sessions in the case.[47]

There would ultimately be three grand juries in the Michaels case: the one that handed down the six-count indictment in May involving the three boys, the one that heard evidence throughout July, and a third that heard evidence in November. The indictments generated through the final two were unsealed in December, adding 229 counts and twenty-eight children to the original case. Twenty children ended up in the eventual trial.

One additional child merits attention, since he was never interviewed by Fonolleras but by some accounts became the most important witness in the case as a result. He was, as Lisa Manshel put it, "a major choke point in the defense's suggestibility theory"; he became "the tactical star witness"[48] but is generally not acknowledged fully in the witch-hunt narrative. David Applegate was mentioned early in May when Rebecca Flora told her mother she had seen David naked at school. Rebecca's mother telephoned David's mother, who she did not otherwise know, to alert her to this statement. Notably, Judy Applegate did not take the comment very seriously. She later testified: "I actually said to her, you know, kids go to the bathroom. I'm not going to get upset over it and she shouldn't either."[49] Accordingly, she did not attend the parents' meeting in mid-May. When another mother called her on June 13, however, she decided to speak directly to her son, who had been home sick with chickenpox since early that month and had not been interviewed by anyone. As explained through her testimony at trial:

> Q: What did you say?
> A: I said David, the other kids are telling their mothers about the bad things that happened at school.
> Q: And what was David's reaction?
> A: David's eyes opened up like saucers and he said they are?[50]

This hearsay testimony was permitted, after an objection by the defense, because it was offered to prove the sequence of events that led to the emergence of David's disclosure, not to prove the underlying claim. After allowing Applegate to consult her diary from the time, this exchange occurred:

> Q: Did you ask him at that time what Kelly did to him?
> A: Yeah.
> Q: What did he tell you?
> A: That she put things in his tushie and this was the very first thing he told me that day, and then the next few days were primarily identifying the objects, the forks, the spoons and knives, Legos. . . .[51]

This child was never interviewed by Fonolleras or anyone else at DYFS. His parents, both lawyers, worried about overinterviewing. When the family later filed a civil claim, the insurance company settled quickly, and reportedly for the largest amount of money that any family received. This may help explain why this boy's circumstances have never been fully described by proponents of the child-suggestibility defense. The basis for the defense simply does not apply to him. Nor does it explain why, on June 8 or 9, her son "would not let [his mother] near him with a thermometer."[52]

Ceci and Bruck's amicus brief, filed years later, dismisses this child without ever acknowledging, let alone responding to, any of these facts. Instead, his initial disclosure to his mother is presented, without any supporting evidence, as an example of "peer pressure." According to Ceci and Bruck:

> this child finally disclosed to his mother after she had told him that others had mentioned him as a participant. The above evidence suggests that this strategy may co-opt children into making false reports.[53]

But that misstates the evidence about David's disclosures. According to the evidence at trial, Applegate did not tell David that others had mentioned him as a participant. And she certainly did not describe the actions David later elaborated. Moreover, it is clear that Applegate's initial inclinations were all against believing allegations of sexual abuse.[54] There is no reason to believe that merely telling her son that other boys had told their mothers "about the bad things that happened" would create an allegation of sexual abuse, particularly with these kinds of specific allegations, which turned out to be entirely consistent with statements already made to authorities by other children.[55]

Eileen Treacy Evaluates the Children

Almost a year after the charges were finalized, the prosecutor's office hired Eileen Treacy, a doctoral candidate in psychology, to evaluate the children who were included in the charges. Treacy evaluated these children between November 1986 and February 1987. These interviews were not part of the investigation; the charges had been finalized in December 1985. Treacy assessed, first, whether it would be too traumatic for each child to testify; she also assessed whether the child's behavior was consistent with sexual abuse, and she evaluated the extent to which the child was susceptible to suggestion. She interviewed sixteen of the twenty children who went to trial. Her suggestibility analysis would later be ignored completely by critics of the case, who would focus entirely on her analysis of each child's behavior. She interviewed children from one to three times and submitted detailed reports to the state about the developmental capacity of every child.

Treacy followed a model widely used in sexual abuse cases in New York Family Court, referred to as "validation."[56] The label is unfortunate because it conjures up a rubber stamp, not a thorough and logical process. In fact, the validation process involves, among other things, a comprehensive analysis of "confounding" variables—that is, other possible stressors and causes apart from sexual abuse that might explain any observed behavioral changes. Treacy testified at length about the process, which is still widely accepted and employed in New York courts. There are four components.[57] First, the evaluator considers the child's statements to her, along with demeanor or affect. Second, the evaluator looks for signs of four of the five phases of child-abuse accommodation syndrome.[58] Third, the evaluator asks parents for information about changes in behavior; children must have demonstrated changes in behavior in at least five areas to be considered significant in this area. (The idea behind the checklist is consistent with something the defense psychologists in the case agreed on: sexual abuse is likely to result in changes in children's behavior.) Finally, the evaluator conducts a "confounding variable" analysis. The logic of this inquiry is also supported by a defense psychologist in the Kelly Michaels case who, in his own survey of nursery school behavior, found it necessary to ask whether the children had experienced other life traumas that might account for various behaviors.[59] If all four inquiries point in the same direction, the validation process results in a finding that the child's behavior is consistent with sexual abuse, but not dispositive. Treacy did not "vouch" for children; instead, she concluded that the behavior of fourteen children who ended up in the trial was "consistent with sexual abuse." Those children displayed enough behavioral changes that could not be explained away by other factors. Her conclusion was equivocal on one child and negative on another; that is, she could not rule out other possible causes of the child's behavior.[60] Four of the children who were in the trial were never evaluated by Treacy.

One aspect of this analysis that would be overlooked entirely later by critics of the case is that Treacy specifically considered whether suggestibility might account for each child's statements and behavior. Passages from her report about David Applegate, the child who was never interviewed by DYFS, demonstrate the point:

> In another attempt to test his suggestibility, I asked him about what happened to him in the bathroom (as he had not disclosed anything about the bathroom). David did not accept the suggestion. He clearly denied that anything happened to him in the bathroom.
>
> When I told him that Kelly was saying that the children were making a mistake and all of this did not happen, David said that she was not telling the truth.[61]

Treacy's reports on other children contain similar accounts of asking purposely leading questions containing incorrect information. In the reports located in the course of this research, there were no examples in which a child accepted the suggestion and parroted back the misinformation supplied by Treacy. Yet this is precisely the mechanism that, according to the witch-hunt narrative that later developed around the case, explains every single allegation in the case. The narrative has never explained how children could be so susceptible to suggestion when being interviewed by investigators yet never succumb to suggestion while being interviewed by Treacy.

The Charges and the Trial

Lou Fonolleras ultimately "substantiated" sexual abuse by Kelly Michaels against fifty-one children at Wee Care. He characterized the evidence as "overwhelmingly evident" in his final report. He also noted that "approximately another ten children and their parents have been interviewed and deemed not to have been involved."[62] But the DYFS findings were independent of the criminal investigation. "Substantiating" claims at DYFS did not trigger any additional proceedings.[63] The Essex County Prosecutor's Office would decide how many of those children should be included in a criminal complaint. Given the much higher standard of proof in criminal cases, prosecutors are not supposed to bring charges unless they believe a reasonable jury could find the defendant guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt."[64] It is not clear how many of the fifty-one made credible statements in the first place. My own assessment is that a handful definitely did, and possibly as many as two dozen more, but not many more than that. Certainly not all fifty-one, as Fonolleras concluded; but also not zero, as the defense urged.

The Actual Charges

Translating children's statements into specific criminal charges is particularly difficult in cases involving young children. The Michaels case unfolded during a time when prosecutors around the country were addressing those issues for the first time. Given the developmental capabilities of small children, it was clear that applying the same rules used for adult witnesses would not be appropriate. Children simply are not capable of specifying dates, for example, in the same fashion as adults. A recent appellate decision on the issue in New Jersey mirrored the rules developing in other states: courts would not require the same degree of specificity in naming the dates of alleged offenses when children were involved.[65]

Deciding what charges to bring and how many counts of each charge was far more complicated than specifying a range of dates for the alleged offenses. There were two relevant charges in the New Jersey criminal code concerning child sexual abuse: first- and second-degree sexual assault. The difference was that first-degree charges involved penetration, second-degree charges, sexual touching. The criminal code also contained a third-degree charge called child endangerment. Almost all of the charges ultimately brought in the case were under one of the three statutes.

The widespread allegations about sexual touching with utensils posed an unusual challenge. Was it necessary to specify whether the charge involved a fork or a spoon? There was a danger that charges written too broadly might be thrown out on appeal for being too vague. But narrowly drawn charges also posed dangers. If a child's original statement involved a spoon, but the child testified at trial that the abuse involved a fork, would this be considered such a different act that it should have been charged separately? The prosecutors decided it did. As Lisa Manshel explained:

> The appellate section of the Prosecutor's Office instructed Sara [Sencer-McArdle] to charge the first-degree crimes by the instrument. Instead of charging one count of vaginal penetration and one count of anal penetration for each girl, Sara was to charge up to three separate counts for vaginal penetration (fork, knife, and spoon) and up to three separate counts for anal penetration (fork, knife, and spoon). If she charged the penetrations by orifice alone, the variety of instruments that might be mentioned in testimony could confuse the jury or cause appellate problems down the road.[66]

This legal consideration multiplied the total number of charges. The large number of charges in the case has been cited to suggest that the state alleged that the abuse was, improbably, a daily occurrence. In fact, the legal demands involved in charging the case caused a multiplicity of charges for single events.[67] Ultimately, some children were connected with only a few charges, and others were named in a dozen or more. The most common charges involved sexual abuse with plastic utensils (spoons, knives, forks). A handful of the child endangerment counts contained grotesque charges involving urine or feces, and a few—the ones that received the most publicity, particularly after the conviction—involved the claim that Michaels had played the piano in the nude.

In short, the large number of counts in the case did not translate into as many corresponding sexual abuse events because the state charged alternative counts to minimize potential "appellate problems" concerning lack of specificity. Had the state actually claimed there was daily abuse of twenty children over 150 days, there could have been more than ten thousand counts in the indictment. Instead, at its height, before various children dropped out of the case, there were 235 counts. This was an average of seven or eight counts per child, which actually meant no more than a few claimed incidents for each child. The 165 counts that made it to trial clearly did not translate into "daily" or even "frequent" incidents.[68] Basically, the state charged that Michaels abused children occasionally during naptime and in after-school settings. It was, they claimed, "opportunistic" abuse.[69]

Children Dropped from the Case

Eleven of the thirty-one children named in the charges were dropped from the case before trial (see Figure 5.4). Those children accounted for sixty-seven counts. Ten of the eleven children were initially named in the second or third indictment. One child, Cody Cook, was from the first indictment. Cody's father got a promotion and the family moved away.[70] The paucity of available records about these children renders it impossible to ascertain the specific reasons each one was dropped from the case. In a few cases, the reason is documented. Two children were dropped from the case because Treacy, the psychologist who evaluated the child witnesses for the state, deemed them too emotionally distraught.

There were also other reasons children were dropped from the case. One involved the use of hearsay evidence—charges based entirely on statements that a child made to an adult, not to an investigator—for which they were ultimately dropped from the case. The law requires direct testimony from the victim. There are hearsay exceptions that allow spontaneous utterances during medical examinations to be used as evidence, but generally adults are not permitted to testify about allegations made to them by a child. That appears to explain why John Allister was dropped from the case. He denied any victimization in two interviews with Fonolleras, but in an interview on July 6 his mother provided a detailed statement about disclosures she said John had made at home.[71] When Fonolleras tried to interview John again in July, the boy was beyond resistant; he unleashed a series of obscenities and acted wildly until the interview was terminated. Five counts against Michaels were included in the second indictment on the basis of what John's mother told the grand jury. Presumably it was determined that the New Jersey case law would not sustain charges based on that evidence alone, so those counts were eventually dropped.

The parent who wrote a book about the case mentioned two other reasons children were dropped: "because the youngsters were simply too immature" and in some cases "the children themselves refused to testify."[72] The former reason apparently explains why Dana Drew was dropped from the case. She was not able to provide any kind of narrative account to the grand jury; her testimony consisted entirely of single-word answers and shakes or nods of the head.[73] In short, there are a number of reasons for these children being dropped from the case. Some of them might have strengthened the state's case; others undoubtedly would not have.

The State's Case

The case against Kelly Michaels went to trial with 165 criminal counts involving twenty children. The prosecutors were not sure, however, how many of those children would actually testify. Some parents were concerned about how testifying at trial might affect their children, and some of the children had expressed ambivalence. Most had been seeing mental health professionals, who agreed that testifying in open court might be particularly difficult for some children. The case became a battleground over the recent New Jersey statute that provided for the possibility of children testifying by closed-circuit television. The trial judge decided the issue in favor of the prosecution, allowing the children to testify this way at trial. The issue would be raised again on appeal. Meanwhile, nineteen of the twenty children testified in the judge's chambers through closed-circuit television. The other child, Martin Zeitz, did not actually testify. Charges pertaining to him went forward on the basis of other testimony that apparently averted the prohibitions against hearsay evidence.

Figure 5.4 Kelly Michaels, All Children, All Charges by Legal Status (Carried Forward versus Dropped before Trial).

Because of the number of complainants, the state's case was massive in size. There were ultimately 105 witnesses for the prosecution, 254 exhibits, and twenty weeks of testimony. The core of the case was the testimony of nineteen children, along with their parents. Five therapists, all with a doctorate in psychology, also testified, plus Eileen Treacy, a master's-level psychologist who would finish her doctorate while the case was on appeal. The only potential witnesses of importance who did not testify were Peg Foster, the social worker who spoke at the first parents' meeting, and Detective Mastrangelo. Although this leaves the historical record less complete, those individuals were not necessary for introducing the children's statements. Lou Fonolleras testified, of course, as did Detective McGrath.

The gist of the state's case, as told through the children's testimony, was that Michaels played various sexualized games with children. Most of those activities were described as happening either at naptime or in the choir room, presumably in the late afternoon. Many children testified that plastic utensils were employed during these games. The jury not only heard from the children but also heard testimony from parents about statements children made at home. Even the claims that seemed most incredible were generally voiced by more than one child. This did not necessarily mean they were true, of course; the defense would argue that any concordance was evidence of "taint" or "cross-contamination." Beyond this core of narrative evidence, the prosecution presented three kinds of additional evidence: (1) extreme behavioral evidence, (2) medical evidence, and (3) evidence concerning Michaels's "motive."

Extreme Behavioral Evidence

Most of the children at trial exhibited extreme behavior during the 1984–85 school year. Mitchell Pierce's grandfather testified that the boy's behavior changed so dramatically in early winter 1985 he "wondered if Mitchell had sustained some mental damage that we did not know about when we saw this stark change."[74] Similarly, David Applegate's parents witnessed something far beyond a nightmare: night terrors with uncontrollable shaking upon waking. Greg Guild became so aggressive in the winter of 1985 that the boy's bus driver told his mother "she had never seen a child behave like this, and she didn't know what happened to him."[75] His mother took him to a doctor. Debra Schultz's father recounted for the grand jury how his daughter refused to allow her parents to take her temperature with a rectal thermometer in either March or April 1985, even though they had always used this kind.[76] The family later dropped out of the case, so no additional information is available in the record.

Overall, parents of thirteen children at trial reported either "that their children were afraid of nap time at school or complained nearly every day about taking a nap at school."[77] The issue became so apparent that one teacher jokingly called it the "nap rebellion." Children who usually wanted to take their nap rebelled. Nobody identified it as a problem with Michaels herself, but there is no question that the unusual behaviors surrounding the naps she supervised were noted at the time. Even more significant, the naptime rebellion ended after she left Wee Care. A woman who worked there in January 1985 and then again in May 1985 testified that the difference was significant.[78]

Several children also acted frantically or in a highly sexualized manner during the investigative interviews. The most extreme behavior was exhibited by Jacob Peyton, who was almost four and hypersexually out of control. He groped two interviewers and his mother in a sexualized manner. Jacob was interviewed on June 20 by Detective Mastrangelo and social worker Foster. It was one of the longest of the transcribed interviews, with the child distracted and uncooperative. The most noteworthy event took place when the boy was left alone with Anne Felsten, a psychology graduate student. The tape recorder malfunctioned, but she was able to record her recollections of the incident shortly thereafter. "I was still shaking," she later testified. The full single-spaced page of her dictation reads, in part:

> At first he just played a little bit, he was making a drawing but then he moved over to me and he placed his hand inside my blouse and touched my breasts. At that time I asked him who he touched liked that and he said "You." And I said, "All right, did you touch anyone else like that?" And he said, "You know." And I said, "Can you tell me." And he said, "You know who." So I said, "Can I guess." And he said, "Yes." So we went through some names, "Susan." "Linda," and the answers to those names was "No." When I said, "Kelly," he said, "Yes."[79]

The boy's sexualized behavior extended beyond fondling Felsten. He repeatedly demanded, "Take off your clothes"; she reported, "His aggressiveness about wanting me to take my clothes off became greater and greater."[80] She introduced an anatomically detailed doll (the use of which is the subject of considerable disagreement). As two academic psychologists who later became critical of the case argued:

> Children insert fingers or objects into the doll's openings for the same reason they would insert a finger into the hole of a doughnut; it is there, it is something to manipulate.[81]

Their caution about interpreting such actions is well taken, but exaggerated. In the study they cite, only 18 percent of nonabused children did this.[82] The argument does not appear to explain a child who "practically ripped the clothes off" the doll and proceeded to spread the doll's legs and lick the vaginal area, which is what Jacob Peyton did. Or the child who grabbed Fonolleras's genitals. These incidents are remarkable not only for the highly sexualized behavior and subsequent disclosure. The Felsten incident is also notable because she did precisely what critics of the case later claimed never happened in the case: she asked the child about other adults. The boy singled out Kelly Michaels in that conversation. Two days after the Felsten incident, the same boy tried to insert an emery board dipped in Vaseline into his mother's vagina.[83] Several days later, at a follow-up interview, he grabbed Fonollares's genitals while showing him how Old McDonald was played by the defendant at Wee Care.[84]

This was not the only child to act in an extreme fashion during one of the interviews. Ralph Gans "ran out of the room" every time Michaels's name was mentioned on May 22. Knowing this, of course, places the fact that he was interviewed twice in a different perspective. The first interview ended abruptly; it was nothing like the "exhaustive questioning" critics would later claim all children endured before making any kind of incriminatory statement. Another boy, Justin Lang, "became frantic when Kelly's name was mentioned" in a brief interview on July 1. He returned the next day. According to the DYFS report, "when Kelly's name was mentioned, he began turning over furniture and screaming. The interview was terminated immediately."[85] He was never part of the criminal charges. Similarly, John Allister's interview is filled with extreme language and behavior. "You son of a bitch," this preschooler yelled repeatedly. He later screamed, "You fuck head." "Why are you trying to hit me?" the interviewer later asked.[86] There was no disclosure in this interview, and this child was not part of the eventual trial.

Other dramatic examples of hypersexualized behavior include Rebecca Flora's in therapy. Dr. Jeryl Rempell, a psychologist, testified that at her first session she "was bouncing all over the place" and kept putting her hands on him "as if she was fondling me." This had "a different quality to it" from a hug, he noted. In fact, in his extended experience with hundreds of children, this was the first time a child had done such a thing in therapy.[87] The parents of two other children at trial (Lucy Deacon and Brenda Mendes) testified their children tried to French-kiss family members. Lucy also attempted to lick between her mother's legs. Rebecca Flora's parents testified that she frequently tried to grab them in a sexual manner. Finally, P. J. Isaacs's mother testified that her son once asked her, "Would you like me to put this [baster toy] in your tushie so you can feel healthy too?"[88]

Of course, these behaviors are not conclusive proof of abuse. But neither should they be denied or written off as everyday behavior. Indeed, the peer-reviewed literature on this subject supports the conclusion that the kinds of behavior observed in the Michaels case were truly extreme. A survey of the frequency of sexual behaviors in 251 preschool children concluded that the most extreme found in the Michaels case were "very uncommon." Attempts to touch adults' genitals—something several children did during the interview process, and others did to their parents—were observed in fewer than 1 percent of the children.[89] None of the many child-suggestibility studies later cited by critics of the case ever mention children sexually assaulting the researchers or repeatedly kicking and hitting them, so presumably these behaviors are so rare in nonabused children that researchers virtually never see them. Knowing that this cohort of children was characterized by a significant amount of such extreme behavior does not prove the underlying charges. But it certainly makes them more plausible.

Medical Evidence

Many of the children in the case registered complaints about genital soreness in the months before Michaels left the day-care center. Eddie Nathanson, one of the original five boys interviewed in the case, had two documented pediatric visits for postural dermatitis (an itchy anus) in the winter of 1985.[90] Mitchell Pierce also complained of a "sore rectum" that winter. His mother testified about how her son "used to ask if he needed his temperature taken."[91] David Applegate's mother testified that his "anus was always sore" in the winter of 1985.[92] Sam Raymond also complained about a "sore bottom" for about six weeks in March and April of 1985. The problem was gone in May.[93]

There was also medical evidence involving three other girls who testified against Michaels. Dr. Anna Haroutunian, director of the Child Abuse Program for Children's Hospital of New Jersey, examined two girls in the case. She found the evidence on Rebecca Flora to be most compelling. The doctor testified that the child's hymenal orifice was "well over a centimeter in diameter," or "clearly wider than a child of this age would have." She concluded there were "abnormal genital physical findings, most likely secondary to child sexual abuse" and that there was no apparent physical reason for her enuresis and encotrosis.[94] The defense's own medical expert, Dr. Winston S. Price, did not deny there were significant findings indicating trauma and healing. All he could say for the defense was, "It's very difficult to make a definitive statement about when those particular abnormal findings occurred."[95] Rebecca Flora also had a series of documented visits to the pediatrician precisely during the final two months before Michaels's abrupt departure in late April. As Dr. Price acknowledged, her doctor recorded visits for "red, inflamed vulva" on March 16 and "red vaginal area" on March 30. He ordered urine culture tests on April 3 and again on follow-up.[96] The problem went away in late April.

Dr. Haroutunian testified cautiously that the findings on Cassie Bond-Foley could be "a slight developmental variation" or might "represent an area of healed trauma." Moreover, she testified:

> To me, it would raise a question of abuse even if I didn't know any history. If I saw this child on a routine exam and saw this finding I would have to raise the possibility of sexual abuse happening.[97]

Two other girls at trial had notable medical histories. Martha Landez had documented vaginal and rectal pain in the winter. Her doctor later reported she had no hymen. The other girl, Brenda Mendes, experienced "vaginal bleeding and soreness" between February and April 1985. At least two of the children who were named in the original indictments, but later dropped from the case, also had medical evidence that is worth mentioning. Debra Schultz had such "a sore tushie" in the winter that her father took her to the emergency room.[98] Another boy, Greg Guild, complained to his mother during the winter that his rectum was sore. His mother testified he asked her "to put something on it, put medication on it, which he never requested before, and he also told me his penis hurt." There are no additional details about this boy because he later dropped out of the case. Inquiring whether it was clear these signs caused concern well before the Michaels case became news, a grand juror asked his mother whether she took him to the doctor at the time. The mother replied, "Yes."[99]

Kelly Michaels's Motive

The children's statements, bolstered by adult testimony and medical evidence, would never be able to answer a critical question about Kelly Michaels herself. Perhaps the most pressing question for many observers of the case was, Why? Why would she do it? Of course, the crime of child sexual abuse is never easy to explain. It is undoubtedly harder in the case of female offenders, who make up a statistically small percentage of sex offenders against children. Those who later rallied around her often noted how "all-American" Michaels looked.[100] The prosecution undoubtedly understood they needed to provide some kind of insight into the psychological explanation for the charges. As it turned out, a psychiatric evaluation by the defense helped with some insight.

The first psychological evaluation of Michaels, conducted by a defense-paid psychiatrist, provided considerable reason for concluding that Michaels might have had a mental state conducive to playing sexualized games with children. The evaluation by Dr. Murray Bartky, conducted on December 14, 1985, and January 3, 1986, found "areas of pathology, particularly in the sexual area." Dr. Bartky described Michaels's psychosexual development as "stunted and conflicted" and called her "sexually confused." Perhaps most telling were statements Michaels made about the charges. As quoted in Dr. Bartky's report, she said:

> It was a small school. All of the children knew about their body. They had a normal and natural curiosity. These parents, they were working and don't know what is normal and natural.[101]

It is not clear what Michaels was trying to convey in these statements about "natural curiosity" and what the children "knew about their body." Moreover, what could she possibly have meant about "these parents" not knowing "what is normal and natural"? Dr. Bartky concluded: "She does not seem rational in these statements."

The testimony of Charlene Munn, a woman Michaels befriended in jail, supplied further evidence that Michaels had a belief system that could allow her to sexually abuse a child. Munn testified that Michaels told her "I didn't mean to harm those children."[102] Unlike jailhouse-informant evidence, which can often be dismissed as self-serving, this testimony could not be dismissed on that ground. Munn had already been sentenced when she testified, and she had already pleaded guilty when first interviewed by investigators. Her ten-year minimum sentence bears out her not making any deals in exchange for her testimony.[103] The defense tried arguing that Michaels did not associate with other prisoners. In fact, she did correspond with Munn after she was released on bail. She also bought cigarettes for her in prison.[104]

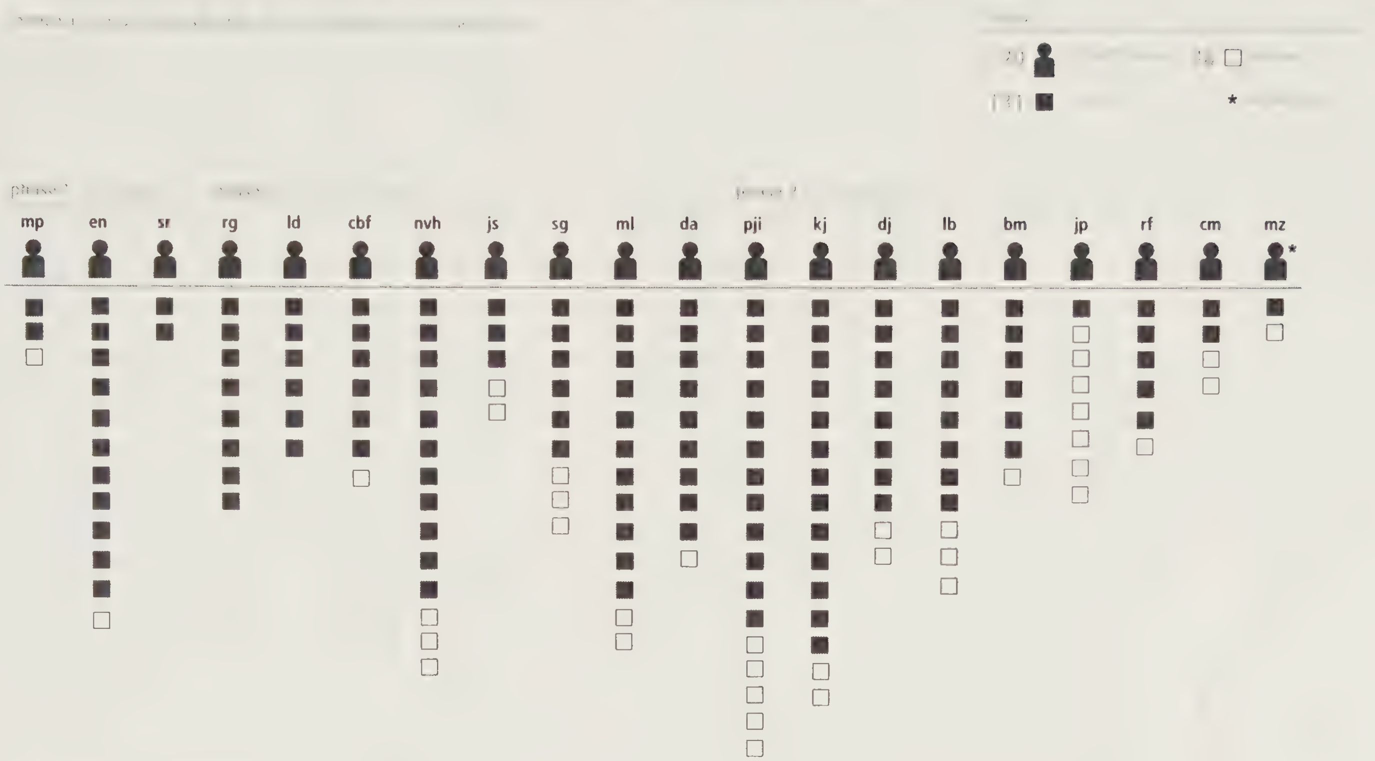
The jury did not hear additional evidence concerning disturbing sexual behavior in Michaels's family. The state offered evidence about her being groped by her father during an early jail visit. The incident was documented at the time, and the prosecution found out about it only because a correctional officer in a barber shop was overheard talking about it.[105] The evidence was offered in a hearing outside the presence of the jury. The judge deemed it too prejudicial to present to the jury, but he made it clear, in ruling to keep the evidence out, that:

> the out of the ordinary came about because of an anonymous tip to the State about matters which I've not allowed us to go into for the protection of your client. . . . But the reason it came about was because of conduct between your client and her father.[106]

But the jury did hear the unusual response Michaels gave Dr. Stanley Brodsky, when asked if she had been sexually abused as a child; she said she had "no recollection."[107] The state also presented considerable evidence that Michaels's behavior at Wee Care was strange, to say the least. One teacher vividly remembered her saying "for all they know, I could be abusing children." Michaels agreed on the stand that she made this statement but said the comment was taken "out of context."[108] Another teacher remembered her unprompted announcement one day that she was not wearing any underwear. A teacher's aide, only fifteen years old at the time, remembered Michaels trying to get her to talk about what she did sexually with her boyfriend. Michaels also wrote a "poem" in her preschool roll book that contained arguably lurid lines.[109] Her evasive answers about this "poem" strain credulity; she claimed she could not remember writing the words, even though she agreed that they were in her handwriting.[110]

When the prosecution rested its case, Judge William Harth dismissed thirty-eight counts. Some of those charges, according to Lisa Manshel, "had been substantiated only by what children said on the audiotapes, and Harth would not allow such hearsay material to be considered as proving the truth of a charge."[111] The judge also dismissed some of the "terrorist threat" charges because the children testified Michaels had threatened their parents, while the actual legal charge alleged she had directed threats at the children. There remained 131 counts, spread across the children and not resulting in any child being eliminated from the case (see Figure 5.5). One child stands out, however, at this stage: Jacob Peyton. Seven of his eight counts were dismissed, leaving a single count of third-degree child endangerment; no other child had so many counts dismissed.[112] His testimony did not back up his interview statements, and his interview statements came from a second interview where the interviewer was exasperated and the boy was acting in a difficult manner. Maybe some of his behavior was actually posttraumatic stress disorder, or maybe he was simply a hyperactive and difficult child. Whatever the explanation, he was unusual among the children in the trial for being considered least credible to the court. In the witch-hunt narrative that later developed, however, he is one of the children most frequently quoted from the case. But there are never accompanying contextual details; to the contrary, Jacob is presented in a way that suggests he is representative of the children in the case.

Figure 5.5 Kelly Michaels, All Children at Trial, by Status of Charges (Presented to Jury versus Dropped).



Kelly Michaels's Defense

There was serious disagreement within the defense team about whether to rely on a "diminished capacity" defense, or even to plead insanity. The lawyer who favored the insanity defense left the team in early June 1986, citing "differences in defense strategy."[113] The strategy they chose instead was to call the case a witch-hunt and blame the parents and investigators for the substance of the children's statements. "Throughout this country we have a witch-hunt type mentality," defense lawyer Harvey Meltzer told the jury in his opening statement.[114] He harped on selected instances of clear prodding by investigators and then argued that all of the children made their statements in order to please adults. Placing the blame squarely on the adults, Meltzer referred to the children's statements as "learned responses to specific questions." He reminded the jury that "children are very, very suggestible."[115]

The defense offered alternative arguments: first, the sexual abuse did not occur, and second, even if it did occur, Michaels did not perpetrate the acts. The bulk of the defense, however, denied the abuse entirely. One strand of the argument involved "opportunity," another "plausibility." The opportunity argument was that it would have been impossible for these acts to have occurred without detection. The plausibility argument was based on the lack of medical injuries, specifically given the allegations about abuse with utensils. But the crux of the defense was expert testimony impugning the children's statements.

Dr. Ralph Underwager

The defense relied on three experts. The first was Dr. Ralph Underwager, a psychologist who attacked the investigative interviews in the case as highly suggestive, even coercive. It was a defense that was being honed in the McMartin case in California and had already been successfully employed in the lead case (State v. Bentz) in the so-called sex ring case in Jordan, Minnesota. Underwager, who lived in Northfield, Minnesota, was the defense expert in the nearby case. He quickly developed a specialty in testifying for the defense in child sexual abuse cases, and he apparently came to see the growth of his business not as a measure of the rise in awareness and prosecution of child sexual abuse but as evidence of a national witch-hunt. He also became controversial for his willingness to use extreme rhetoric. He told a national television audience, for example, that the interviews with children he had reviewed in the Jordan cases "mirrored those of Red Chinese brainwashing."[116] In October 1993, when the Kelly Michaels case was between the Appellate Division and the New Jersey Supreme Court, Underwager became a magnet for intense criticism when an interview given in 1991 was published in the winter 1993 issue of a Dutch magazine called Paidika: The Journal of Paedophilia. In it, Underwager was quoted as saying:

> Paedophiles spend a lot of time and energy defending their choice. I don't think that a paedophile needs to do that. Paedophiles can boldly and courageously affirm what they choose. They can say that what they want is to find the best way to love. I am also a theologian and as a theologian I believe it is God's will that there be closeness and intimacy, unity of the flesh, between people.[117]

Underwager had not made these views widely known in the mid-1980s when he was one of the experts of choice for child sexual abuse defendants around the country. Nevertheless, there was a wealth of information in the late 1980s that cast doubt on his expertise. The Essex County Prosecutor's Office put an extraordinary amount of effort into preparing to cross-examine him.[118] The cross-examination of Ralph Underwager lasted eight excruciating days. Glenn Goldberg extracted a series of embarrassing admissions from Underwager. No, he had never published any studies on child suggestibility. No, he had not reviewed significant materials about the children or the parents in the case. No, he had never visited the Wee Care facility in the process of concocting a "time and motion" study that purported to prove Michaels could not have abused the children. No, he had not counted the number of times children provided answers about sexual abuse in response to open-ended questions. From these and other responses, one of the prosecutors would later refer to Underwager as a "witch doctor" in his closing argument. The appellate court ruled that this reference was not unfairly prejudicial; rather, it had a basis in Underwager's own testimony.[119]

Dr. Jonas Rappeport

The second expert witness for the defense was Dr. Jonas Rappeport, a forensic psychiatrist from Baltimore. Dr. Rappeport had a national reputation for his work as medical director of the American Academy of Psychiatry and the Law, a group that certified specialists in forensic psychiatry. He was hired to provide a "profile" of child molesters—one that, he would presumably argue, did not fit Kelly Michaels. Claiming that women do not fit the profile, his testimony would apparently provide a defense for any woman charged with a sex crime against children. Judge Harth was not persuaded; there simply was not sufficient foundation for "proposed testimony on the profile of an abuser."[120] The testimony was not allowed.

Dr. Rappeport testified anyway. Without the profile argument, he made many of the same claims that Underwager did. It was Rappeport's view that the children in the case had "been so traumatized since this whole thing started, anything they say now is invalid."[121] His evaluation of Michaels was also included in the three-part appendix to a defense brief on appeal. This document contains an extraordinary example of unfounded speculation about what happened when Mitchell Pierce was at the pediatrician on April 30, 1985. In the "Discussion" section of his report, Rappeport stated:

> My impression of what could have and probably did happen in this situation is as follows: I believe that when [Mitchell Pierce] was having his temperature taken rectally at his pediatricians', the nurse placed her hand upon his back (the usual practice when taking the rectal temperature of a restless child) he stated "that's what my teacher does to me at naptime at school." The child certainly may have believed that lying on your tummy with someone's hand on your back was "taking your temperature."[122]

For all the common sense that may appear to bolster his "impression," Rappeport's speculation is contradicted completely by testimony that was available for him to review. The statement taken on May 8, 1985, from the medical assistant Laura Hadley, made it clear she did not have a hand on the boy's back when he uttered this statement. She later testified that her routine involved one hand on the thermometer while she monitored the watch in her other hand.[123] Rappeport's willingness to reconstruct events in the light most favorable to Michaels, notwithstanding direct evidence to the contrary, calls into question the rest of his expert opinions in the case.

Dr. Elissa Benedek

The third expert witness for the defense, Dr. Elissa Benedek, was a board-certified psychiatrist in adult, child, and forensic psychiatry. She had impressive credentials. She was an officer in the American Psychiatric Association and had consulted in five other day-care abuse cases and testified in a sixth. Benedek was hired to assess the demeanor and affect of the children in the case. At least, that was the basic substance of her testimony. She did not actually evaluate the children in person; rather, she evaluated their testimony in the case. She described David Applegate's testimony in court, which she reviewed on videotape, by saying it "showed very little affect."[124] She also described his testimony as "carefully rehearsed," although, as one of the prosecutors quickly objected, she had no factual basis for the conclusion.

The impact of her conclusions was diminished significantly by her limited review of the case. While she reviewed grand jury testimony and "portions" of other testimony in the case, she reviewed the videotaped testimony of only two children in the case (David Applegate and P. J. Isaacs.). Her knowledge of the case was surprisingly limited, but her opinions were surprisingly broad—and inaccurate. At one point, she asserted that "Parents were sent a letter and told their kids had been abused." But the letter of May 8 did not tell parents their children had been abused; it said there had been unspecified allegations involving "a former employee." Judge Harth directly asked the witness whether she had read the letter. She replied she had not; she was apparently referring to some kind of article—that is, a secondary source—about day-care abuse cases. Perhaps she was thinking about the McMartin case; but even that letter did not tell parents their children had been abused.

Kelly Michaels

To court observers, the highlight of the case was when Michaels took the stand in her own defense. She offered repeated and emphatic denials of all the charges. She also denied ever discussing her case with inmates or guards at the Essex County Jail, although she acknowledged writing a letter to Charlene Munn, who earlier testified that Michaels told her "she didn't mean to hurt the kids the way she did."[125] The cross-examination was marked by several strange exchanges. Michaels testified in a deposition in August 1987 that she had seen a doctor after her conversation with Marilyn Schuster about bleeding from her rectum. But she was unable to name the doctor. Six months later, at trial, she still did not know the name. "What have you done to locate the doctor?" asked Glenn Goldberg, who wanted to subpoena any such evidence. "I didn't make any effort to find this doctor for you," she replied.[126] Asked why she had not informed her family doctor of the problem that had apparently caused bleeding, Michaels replied "it wouldn't be something that I would go to visit him for." Otherwise, the cross-examination was limited by the extent to which Michaels did not remember things. She "didn't specifically recall" if she had rubbed children's backs. She also had "no recollection" of what was written in her roll book. "It's my writing definitely," she allowed, "but I had no memory of if I copied it from something else, if it was mine." Asked whether she had children make believe they were dogs and cats, Michaels responded "I don't recall."[127] Her emphatic denials about having ever sexually abused the children may have been undercut by her extensive lapses of memory. The witch-hunt narrative overlooks these issues and argues, instead, that Michaels is credible because she "passed" a lie detector test.[128] In fact, the results of the lie detector test were determined to be "inconclusive."[129]

The Verdict and Sentence

The jury was asked to decide on 131 charges. They deliberated for thirteen days and appear to have gone through the evidence methodically. The defense actually objected to their method; an Associated Press story reported that the defense "objected yesterday to allowing the jury to alternate between deliberations and reviewing videotaped testimony of the children."[130] The story also reported that jurors had already reviewed "tapes of children interviewed by investigators from the prosecutor's office in 1985." Those include important interviews early in the sequence of events.

The verdict was an overwhelming victory for the prosecution. Its details bear examination. The jury clearly treated the children as individuals (see Figure 5.6). They also made their own judgments about the credibility of individual charges. Although it has scarcely been reported, the jury rejected what were arguably some of the most "fantastic"—or, at least, difficult to believe—charges in the case. Had the case been built entirely on such charges, it is safe to say Michaels would not have been convicted. Indeed, eleven of the seventeen not-guilty verdicts involved those kinds of charges.[131] By contrast, only two of the forty-eight counts of first-degree sexual assault resulted in a not-guilty verdict. The jury also paid close attention to the legal distinctions between first- and second-degree sexual assault, convicting Michaels of the less-included second-degree charge in nineteen counts in which she was charged with first-degree. Those variations account for about one-quarter of the charges. The jury found Michaels guilty as charged for the remaining 96 of the 131 counts.

Perhaps the most telling aspect of the jury verdict is how it varied by child. The jury clearly made decisions by child and by charge. As indicated in Figure 5.6, the jury found Michaels guilty as charged on all of the charges connected with seven children. (Two of those seven children had only one count each and were largely peripheral to the case.) There were five children, then, who accounted for multiple charges and for whom the jury convicted on every count as charged. Those children were apparently considered highly credible by the jury. That assessment also applies to several other children in the case. For example, the jury found Michaels guilty as charged on eight of nine counts involving David Applegate, with a guilty verdict on a lesser-included sexual assault charge for the other count. Similarly, the jury found Michaels guilty as charged on ten of eleven counts involving Eddie Nathanson.

Contrast those outcomes to the verdicts related to three girls, who were believable enough for the jury to agree on convictions but mostly for lesser charges than requested by the prosecution. In the case of Martha Landez, eight charges of first-degree sexual assault went to the jury. They found Michaels not guilty on one charge and guilty of the lesser-included offense on the other seven. This does not mean the jury found Martha unbelievable. If that were the case, they would have found Michaels not guilty on more than one count. Either Martha did not say enough to support first-degree charges, or perhaps she said enough but this still left too much room for reasonable doubt among jurors. The verdicts involving Johnny Shaw were similarly mixed. The jury found Michaels not guilty of a single count of third-degree child endangerment; they also found her not guilty on the two first-degree charges, but guilty of the lesser-included offense and of a separate count of the second degree. Similarly, with Cassie Bond-Foley, there were three counts involving first- or second-degree sexual assault that went to the jury. The jury did not convict as charged on any of those counts; rather, they found Michaels not guilty on one count and guilty of the lesser-included offense on the other two.

Figure 5.6 Kelly Michaels, Trial Dispositions by Charge, by Child.

Three children stand out as the only ones with multiple charges that resulted in not-guilty verdicts. For the charges involving Rebecca Flora, the jury found Michaels not guilty of three of five charges (two third-degree charges and one second-degree). They also found Michaels not guilty of a first-degree charge but guilty of the lesser included offense of second-degree sexual assault. The only count on which the jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged was a single count of third-degree child endangerment. Similarly, the jury convicted Michaels of four of the seven counts involving Dennis Jones. They found her not guilty on three charges of a grotesque nature: second-degree sexual assault (licking rectum), third-degree child endangerment (choking), and third-degree child endangerment (drinking urine). But the jury convicted Michaels as charged on one count of first-degree sexual assault and three counts of third-degree child endangerment. Similarly, the jury rejected three grotesque charges involving Dennis's sister, Kimmy, but convicted as charged on seven counts of first-degree sexual assault.

All told, Michaels was convicted of 115 charges. She was sentenced to forty-seven years in prison and would be eligible for parole in fourteen years. By all appearances, it was a successful prosecution of a difficult case.

The Witch-Hunt Narrative and the Appeal

Rewriting the Story of the Case

The first writer to apply the witch-hunt narrative to the Kelly Michaels case was Debbie Nathan, who did so immediately after Michaels was convicted. Writing in the Village Voice, where she had recently applied the same framework to a day-care abuse case in El Paso, Texas, Nathan came to the defense of Michaels in the summer of 1988.[132] The local reporters who sat through the trial came to think there was substantial evidence of guilt in the case; none editorialized against the prosecution or the verdict. Nathan characterized them as gullible. Her article about the Michaels case, written without access to the complete trial transcripts, was based largely on an interview with Michaels and on materials about the children's interviews that she obtained from the defense. Nathan argued that the Michaels case was "a cookie-cutter copy" of the one she had written about in Texas. Investigators used a "preconceived approach," she argued, that assumed the children had been abused.[133]

She also had biting criticisms of Eileen Treacy, the psychologist who assessed the children and testified for the state about children's developmental capabilities. Nathan claimed that Treacy had "exaggerated information about credentials" and that a judge in another case had criticized her questions as improperly leading.[134] The heart of Nathan's argument was that the investigative interviews were all leading and suggestive, eliciting responses that the questioners essentially provided to the children. She described the content of the interviews as:

> filled with confused children who have little to say despite being told things like Kelly is bad, Kelly hurts kids, Kelly is in jail, and the police need help trying to make sure she stays there.[135]

The article included an excerpt from an investigative interview in which a young girl, Debra Schultz, said "I think I really forgot" the accusations she had apparently made days earlier. "Why do you believe me to know things?" she asked the interviewer at one point. Nathan argued that "other children were told that after they said how Kelly hurt them, they could have toy police badges."[136] She also reported uncovering something about Lou Fonolleras that was apparently not known by his own supervisor: he had been sexually abused as a child and, remarkably, had brought up his personal experience in at least one of the interview sessions. He told Natalie Jenkins "a little secret," all about something that happened to him as a child.[137] There is no question this was inappropriate, even in an era without clear protocols for interviewing children. But Nathan did not mention that neither Schultz nor Jenkins was actually involved in the trial. This was typical of the problems with the witch-hunt narrative that built up around the case.

On its face, Nathan's article made a strong case that Michaels was the victim. Surprisingly, Nathan's article is not the one best remembered, or even most influential, in creating the witch-hunt narrative that eventually became the conventional wisdom about this case. Dorothy Rabinowitz claims this distinction for an article in Harper's almost two years later called "From the Mouths of Babes to a Jail Cell."[138] The article marked a watershed moment in the media. It also helped mobilize a group of New York intellectuals and civil libertarians, including the family that owned the Village Voice, to promote the Kelly Michaels Defense Committee.[139] This committee resulted in Morton Stavis, a famed civil liberties lawyer, taking over the appeal initiated by the Public Defender's Office.

The Rabinowitz article appeared in the wake of the denouement of the McMartin case in January 1990—an event that dramatically altered how the media viewed child sexual abuse cases. There were many articles in the wake of the McMartin verdicts that promoted the witch-hunt narrative to explain the McMartin case, and Rabinowitz's article did likewise to the Michaels case. Although Nathan had already raised doubts about the case, Rabinowitz argued forcefully that Michaels was factually innocent. She eventually won a Pulitzer Prize for a body of work at the Wall Street Journal that included similar commentaries on behalf of defendants in other high-profile child sexual-abuse cases. This article was the foundational piece in that oeuvre, and it gained immediate attention.[140]

Both of these influential articles mischaracterized how the case began. Rabinowitz wrote that it began with a "bizarre misunderstanding" about what Mitchell Pierce said while the medical assistant at his pediatrician's office took his temperature rectally.[141] Rabinowitz apparently adopted Jonas Rappeport's speculation that Mitchell was referring to having his back rubbed. (The claim was flatly contradicted by the testimony of the two adults who were in the room when Mitchell's temperature was taken.[142]) She then discredited all of the later charges in the case with the stunning claim that "the jury eventually rejected the charge" that began the whole case.[143] Given the importance of the first child in any case with multiple complainants, it would be quite significant if the original charge resulted in a "not guilty" finding. But that did not happen. The jury found Kelly Michaels guilty of second-degree, instead of first-degree, sexual assault on that charge. In other words, they concluded there was felonious sexual touching, but not penetration. Rabinowitz later claimed Michaels had been "acquitted of the original charge"—failing to note that she was guilty of a lesser included felony involving sexual touching. Labeling this verdict as a "rejection" of the original charge is beyond misleading. It was also indicative of how the rest of the case would be misrepresented.

The mass media started lining up on Michaels's side. Mike Taibbi, a New York City television reporter, did a two-part story that endorsed Rabinowitz's view in August 1990. This was the first television program to broadcast audio excerpts from the children's interviews, which were all under seal. In September 1990, the Kelly Michaels case was referred to as part of "the Salem Epidemic" in the National Review.[144] In 1991, the nationally televised program 48 Hours broadcast a story about the case that featured Rabinowitz at the beginning of the program saying "I believe that Kelly Michaels is entirely innocent."[145] The program included excerpts from two investigative interviews. The first one demonstrated what reporter Bernard Goldberg described as "investigators asking children to demonstrate how Kelly molested them." This is the entire snippet:

UNIDENTIFIED MAN #1: Now did Kelly do any bad things to you?
UNIDENTIFIED CHILD #1: No.
CHILD #1: No.
MAN #1: How come you don't want to tell me what all your friends already told me?

CHILD #1: (unintelligible)
MAN #1: You want a badge?
CHILD #1: Yeah.
MAN #1: We will get you a badge if you help us, if you help—if you be a little detective with us.[146]

The only effort Goldberg made to put this tape into context was the statement that "In many of the tapes, the children repeatedly deny they were abused." There was no indication of how often this was not true; nor did Goldberg address whether this child ever made any allegations or played any role in the case. In fact, the child did not make any accusation, and he was never part of the criminal case. But it was powerful television. Nevertheless, these stories painted an extremely misleading picture.

Five major inaccuracies in the witch-hunt narrative about this case are elaborated below:

Inaccurate Claims About the Interviews

The basic claim of the witch-hunt narrative is that the children in the Kelly Michaels case were subjected to repetitive interviews before ever disclosing sexual abuse. Virtually all popular critiques of the case make this claim. "The most startling thing," according to Nathan, "was that none [of the children] had spoken of the abuse to parents and teachers—until after investigators had interviewed them repeatedly."[147] Rabinowitz argued that the charges were the product of investigators "who convinced parents and children alike." She claimed the children were "confused, had nothing to say, or flatly denied that anything had happened to them."[148] These descriptions are patently untrue for the three boys whose statements formed the basis of the original indictment.

The witch-hunt narrative makes even stronger claims about the rest of the investigation. For example, Nat Hentoff argued in the Washington Post: "These interrogations went on for a two-year period. The questioning was intense."[149] But the witch-hunt narrative is contradicted by a simple mathematic reality. There were eighty-three investigative interviews, combining the DYFS and police interviews.[150] There were fifty-one preschoolers in full-time attendance at Wee Care in 1984–85, and every child, except David Applegate, was interviewed at least once. It would have required 102 interviews just to interview every child twice. Nearly half the children did not have a second interview. Twenty-one children had two interviews during this time period; five other children had more than two investigative interviews (see Figure 5.7). It is impossible to reconcile Figure 5.7 with the claim that "the children" in the case disclosed only after weeks or months of repetitive interviews. If investigators were so intent on "finding" abuse, why were so few of the children who did not disclose abuse brought back for a second interview? If repetitive interviews explain the disclosures in the case, how does one explain the significant number of children who made disclosures on their first interview?

Figure 5.7 Kelly Michaels Interview Sequence, All Children by Number of Interviews.

The children who were interviewed twice (or more) were divided almost evenly between those who went to trial and those who did not. If investigators were so intent on "finding" abuse, why weren't any of the children who did not disclose abuse in the second interview brought back for a third interview? For the investigative stage of the case, the "repetitive interviewing" claim simply does not fit the facts. Despite the overblown claims that all the children were subjected to repetitive interviews before making any disclosures, the fact is that only five were interviewed more than twice in the investigative phase.

Focusing directly on the children who were interviewed the most during the investigation demonstrates that none of these children were subject to as many interviews as has been claimed before they first disclosed abuse (see Figure 5.8). Four of the five children who were interviewed more than twice by investigators were part of the criminal trial. One child, John Allister, was dropped before the case went to trial.[151] The circumstances surrounding the other four children are all different. One child, Martha Landez, disclosed sexual abuse in her first interview on June 10, before the two heated parents' meetings in June. She was the thirteenth child interviewed in the case. Landez had complained of vaginal and rectal pain during the year and repeatedly asked to have her temperature taken during the winter of that year. I was unable to locate any documentation of the content of the second interview, which occurred on June 12 with Peg Foster. The next day, Martha gave a statement to police investigator Evelyn Catalano. Perhaps it would have been better to eliminate one of these interviews, or even to combine all into one. But by no stretch of the imagination did she disclose after weeks or months of repetitive interviews.

The third child, Rebecca Flora, was first interviewed on June 21 by Foster and Rich Mastrangelo and was "nonresponsive." Her mother took Rebecca to Dr. Susan Esquilin on June 30. This is the one child involved in the eventual trial who is described as having first disclosed to Dr. Susan Esquilin, a psychologist. She was interviewed again on July 3 by George McGrath. Early in the interview, McGrath asked, "Was Kelly your teacher?" Rebecca responded, "Yeah, but she did a lot of bad things to me."[152] Moments later the child said Kelly did not do any bad things to her. Much later, this exchange occurs:

Figure 5.8 Kelly Michaels Interview Sequence, Children Interviewed More than Twice.

R: Do you know what?
G: What?
R: Kelly did a lot of bad things to [another child][153]
G: Oh yeah, what did she do?
R: She hit her.
G: How?
R: With a knife.
G: Where did she put the knife?
R: On her tooshie.

On the final page of the interview transcript, Fonolleras indicates that he talked to Rebecca while McGrath was speaking with her mother. According to Fonolleras, the girl "informed me that she had been hurt with the fork in her vaginal area." Court records indicate there was a third interview on July 11, but I was unable to locate any additional documentation of this interview. Rebecca's disclosure, then, came after one interview. But the interview of July 3 was certainly problematic. She was inconsistent and unclear, and it remains questionable at various points whether she was talking about herself or someone else. Rebecca was one of the youngest children in the case, she exhibited some of the most extreme behavior, and she was probably one of the weakest witnesses. Arguably, she should not have been included as a complainant. As it turns out, she was not an effective witness; the jury rejected most of her charges.

The remaining two children who were interviewed more than twice in the investigative phase of the case were Eddie Nathanson and Ralph Gans. Eddie had the most investigative interviews in the case, having been interviewed five times. He was also one of two boys named by Mitchell Pierce on the first day of the case. (The other, Cody Cook, confirmed the abuse, and his father wrote a lengthy statement that night.) Eddie did not disclose anything untoward on May 2 but was interviewed again on May 22, when Fonolleras entered the case. In that interview, Eddie told Fonolleras that Michaels had inserted her finger into the anal area of the boys whose charges were already before the grand jury. He also said Michaels would say, "Let's play nurse—I'll take your temperature—you feel warm." But he denied personal victimization.[154] Eddie was interviewed a third time on June 6 because his mother called DYFS to say he had disclosed that Michaels had sucked his penis and abused various boys with utensils. His two subsequent interviews involved disclosures.

It should be noted that Fonolleras did not seek to have Eddie Nathanson interviewed after the second interview on May 22. Although some critics of the case have blamed Eddie's mother for his statements, the explanation cannot account for how Eddie was able to show Fonolleras the choir room on June 6. That room, hidden away on the third floor, was supposedly out of bounds for the preschool. Nathan has argued that some children who talked about the room were taken there by Fonolleras—but this did not occur until later in June.[155] Also, the witch-hunt narrative never acknowledges that Eddie had a persistent and documented anal rash in 1984–85.

Ralph Gans was the only child other than Eddie who was interviewed more than three times by investigators. He was also involved in the earliest part of the overall investigation. His chronological number in the case was six, and he was first interviewed on May 22, Fonolleras's first day of interviews. Ralph kept running out of the room when Kelly's name was mentioned, so the interview was terminated. Fonolleras did not schedule a follow-up interview. When he returned to interview Eddie Nathanson, however, he also ended up interviewing Ralph because Eddie specifically mentioned his involvement. Ralph made extensive disclosures on June 6 about abuse with utensils and about the "pile-up" game they played in the music room. His third interview was a police statement five days later, and it was consistent with his earlier disclosure. He was brought back one more time for a joint interview with Eddie; Fonolleras hoped to learn more about the games from the boys together. Neither of Eddie's third and fourth interviews was an effort to obtain a disclosure from a child who had said nothing; he had already made significant statements in his second interview.

In short, the children depicted in Figure 5.8 were interviewed more often in the investigative phase of the case than any other children in the case. These children are differently situated, both in terms of when they entered the case and when, in the sequence of interviews, they disclosed sexual abuse, if they did. Of the four children at trial, the latest disclosure was in the third interview. But this was true for only one child; the rest disclosed earlier in their respective interview sequence, rendering even these children less subject to "repetitive" interviews before disclosing than has been claimed by proponents of the witch-hunt narrative.

Beyond the inaccuracies of the claim about the "repetitive" interviews, the narrative has misrepresented the content of various interviews. The Rabinowitz article included five mini-excerpts from an interview with P. J. Isaacs, one of the nineteen children who testified at the trial. The excerpts portray a child who did not want to answer any questions, who said he wanted to go home, and who made incredible statements such as "I saw her penis" and "No, she peed on me!" P. J. eventually said Kelly Michaels put a fork "in my heinie," but Rabinowitz said this was said "in an obviously playful, make-believe tone." Perhaps most damning, she reported that the interview ended with the boy shouting "It's all lies!"[156] To be sure, these excerpts alone provided ample reason to be concerned. But the transcript of the interview with this boy (who Rabinowitz calls "Luke") contradicts several of her claims about the interview. First, by running questions together and moving the timing of the child's answer, the Rabinowitz version makes it appear the child provided meaningless answers when in fact the answers were actually quite clear.[157] Rabinowitz also misstated the flow of this interview. She quoted three questions near the very beginning of the interview and then stated, "Fonolleras at this point handed Luke an anatomically correct doll, then proceeded with this questioning" (emphasis added). In fact, by the designated Q&A numbering, more than sixty questions separated these events.

Rabinowitz also claimed that "the session ends with Luke shouting 'It's all lies.'" But neither the prepared transcript of the interview nor the annotated version of the transcript—which the defense appended to their appellate brief—bears this out. The last six lines of the interview transcript are quoted below. The two statements in brackets were added by hand to the version submitted by the defense, and the numbering appears on the document:

[208Q] LOU: Did she pinch you anywhere? No? Do you remember anything else that happened [that you're afraid to tell me about?]
[208A] CHILD: No.
[209Q] LOU: Do you want to go?
[209A] CHILD: Yeah, I want to go home.
[210Q] LOU: Let me get you up, come on. So you don't have anything else to talk to me about. [Tell your mother to come in.]
[UNNUMBERED] LOU: End of statement.[158]

The defense undoubtedly would have made a notation if the child screamed "It's all lies" and it was somehow left out of the state's transcript. But there is no evidence in the transcript that the child said any such thing in this interview. Rabinowitz has claimed that "jurors never saw the record of the interrogations. That's the key point."[159] But the trial transcript, which Rabinowitz also claims to have reviewed, proves otherwise. This interview was played to the jury on November 5, 1987, a transcription of the interview was entered as Exhibit J-9, and there were almost fifty pages of questions to Folloneras about the interview. There is not a single mention of "It's all lies." Rabinowitz's erroneous claim was also featured by Nat Hentoff in the Village Voice; the "It's all lies" statement was highlighted as a pull-out quote.[160] Although Hentoff also claims to have examined the interview transcripts, the fact remains that this statement does not appear in the interview from which he purports to quote.

The error apparently stems from conflating two events: this investigative interview and the boy's grand jury testimony, which is described in Lisa Manshel's book. According to Manshel, the boy screamed "Lies! Lies! Lies!" while testifying before the grand jury. The prosecutor then asked a neutral question: "OK.

Then what did Kelly do?" to which the boy responded, "No. It's the truth."[161] If this is the incident that Rabinowitz and Hentoff confused with the interview from which they purported to quote directly, then both writers omitted an important follow-up question and answer. One also wonders how closely these critics actually read the transcripts they purported to have researched if their confusion stemmed entirely from a secondary source.

Evidence Allegedly Kept from the Jury

Rabinowitz has also claimed "jurors never saw the record of the interrogations."[162] Evidence from the investigative interviews, she argues, would have proven the child-suggestibility defense, but the evidence was somehow kept from the jury. Mike Taibbi, a WCBS television reporter, made the same claim in August 1990, asserting that "the jury only heard the children's final version, long after the incidents took place."[163] This claim is critical to lending plausibility to the child-suggestibility defense. It is much easier to understand how a jury might fail to detect a massive case of child suggestibility if all they ever heard were the children's final statements at trial. It is also much easier to second-guess a jury verdict if it was based on incomplete information in the first place. If, however, the jury actually had all of the relevant evidence, plus the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses live, then it is difficult to understand how the jury could be so wrong—or how those who never saw the witnesses could have so much better an understanding of the evidence. Those questions disappear, however, if one can claim critical information was withheld from the jury.

The claim that the jury was kept in the dark about the investigative interviews is false. The Essex County Prosecutor's Office objected to Taibbi's error and pointed out that investigative tapes were played for the jury. In February of the following year, WCBS issued a correction on the "News at Five."[164] But the myth lives on. "I saw what the jurors did not see," Rabinowitz asserted on CNN, staking a claim to having reviewed investigative interviews that were kept from the jury.[165] But the jury listened to tape recordings of the investigative interviews and were supplied with the same transcriptions that the defense later attached to their appellate brief. The CNN interviewer, wondering why the jury would not also see such evidence, was told something vague by Rabinowitz about the hearsay evidence rule.[166] But what Rabinowitz did not explain is that the hearsay rule prevented only the state from introducing the tapes from the investigative interviews; it did not prevent the defense from presenting them. Indeed, the tapes were at the core of the defense in the case. Not only were these tapes introduced at trial but, as reported in Lisa Manshel's 1990 book, the prosecution specifically requested "that the judge instruct the jury that the state could not have introduced these tapes."[167] The prosecution did not want the jury to think what Rabinowitz later urged the public to believe: that the state had tried to keep the tapes out. It is worth noting that the defense "strenuously objected" to this instruction.[168] Apparently, they wanted to create the same phony aura which others have since perpetuated, that the state was trying to hide the same interviews they had voluntarily recorded. The defense could not provide a convincing reason for keeping the jury in the dark about this rule, so the tapes came in with the state's requested instruction that informed the jury that the state was not allowed to introduce them.

The same evidence many claim was kept from the jury was reviewed again during the process of jury deliberations. That the jury took these issues seriously is best evidenced in their requests for complete playbacks of each child's testimony and various investigative interviews during the thirteen days of deliberation. The Associated Press reported on March 31, 1988, that the defense "objected yesterday to allowing the jury to alternate between deliberations and reviewing videotaped testimony of the children."[169] The story also reported that jurors had already reviewed "tapes of children interviewed by investigators from the prosecutor's office in 1985." What the jury did not see were interviews with children who were not involved in the case; those interviews, without ever being identified as such, form the core of the witch-hunt critique of the interviews.

Inaccurate Claims About Eileen Treacy

Eileen Treacy's role in the case has been criticized as much as, if not more than, Lou Fonolleras's role. The criticisms levied at Treacy range from attacks on her credentials and professionalism to the claim that she implanted ideas in various children. Ceci and Bruck have argued Treacy did "some of the most suggestive interviews" in the Michaels case. They describe her role as extensive, claiming that "all but three of the 20 children were interviewed by Eileen Treacy at least twice before the trial."[170] The implication seems to be that as many as seventeen of the children were interviewed by Treacy more than twice. Actually, the number is four, and none was interviewed more than three times. And four children at trial—not three, as claimed—were never interviewed by Treacy. Moreover, as indicated in the case timeline (Figure 1.1), Treacy entered the case after the investgation was completed and the charges had been finalized.

None of Treacy's interviews are included in the three-volume appendix to the defense brief to the Appellate Division, which is represented as containing "all known recorded interviews of the children in the Wee Care case."[171] Since almost all of Treacy's interviews were taped and transcribed, a skeptic might wonder why none of her interviews were included. Those interviews were memorialized more systematically than the DYFS interviews, so the reason cannot be that they were unavailable. Moreover, Treacy was a major object of criticism, so the reason cannot be that her interviews were considered unimportant. The most reasonable explanation may be that those interviews do not bear out the criticisms that have been lodged.

The attacks on Treacy's credentials and professionalism have been withering. In 1988, Nathan wrote that "not until it was too late to attack her credibility did the defense discover that Treacy's curriculum vitae contained exaggerated information about credentials."[172] Jonathan Harris, who created the influential internet Witch-Hunt Information Center, called her a "fringe psychologist" and a "dangerous fruitcake."[173] More recently, Rabinowitz expressed nothing short of outrage that Treacy continues to testify in cases. According to Rabinowitz, Treacy was "so discredited as a witness" that "people wanted nothing to do with her" when the state of New York hired her in State v. Carroll, a 2000 case in which Rabinowitz concluded that the defendant was falsely convicted of sexually abusing his stepdaughter.[174]

These are remarkably unfair criticisms. When Treacy testified in the Carroll case, she had testified hundreds of times in New York and never been reversed on appeal. She had conducted training seminars on developmental psychology and sexual abuse for law-enforcement officials in twelve New York counties for almost twenty years. Further, she had taught psychology at Lehman College and had extensive clinical experience with child sexual abuse. Her dissertation was an evaluation about foster-parenting sexually abused children.[175] Not a single word of the dissertation has ever been criticized by those who have attacked Treacy's credentials and expertise. What was the "exaggerated information about credentials" that Nathan ominously alleged and Rabinowitz later repeated? Her vitae listed a "postgraduate course" at St. Joseph's College in Connecticut that Nathan claims was actually an "intensive weekend seminar."[176]

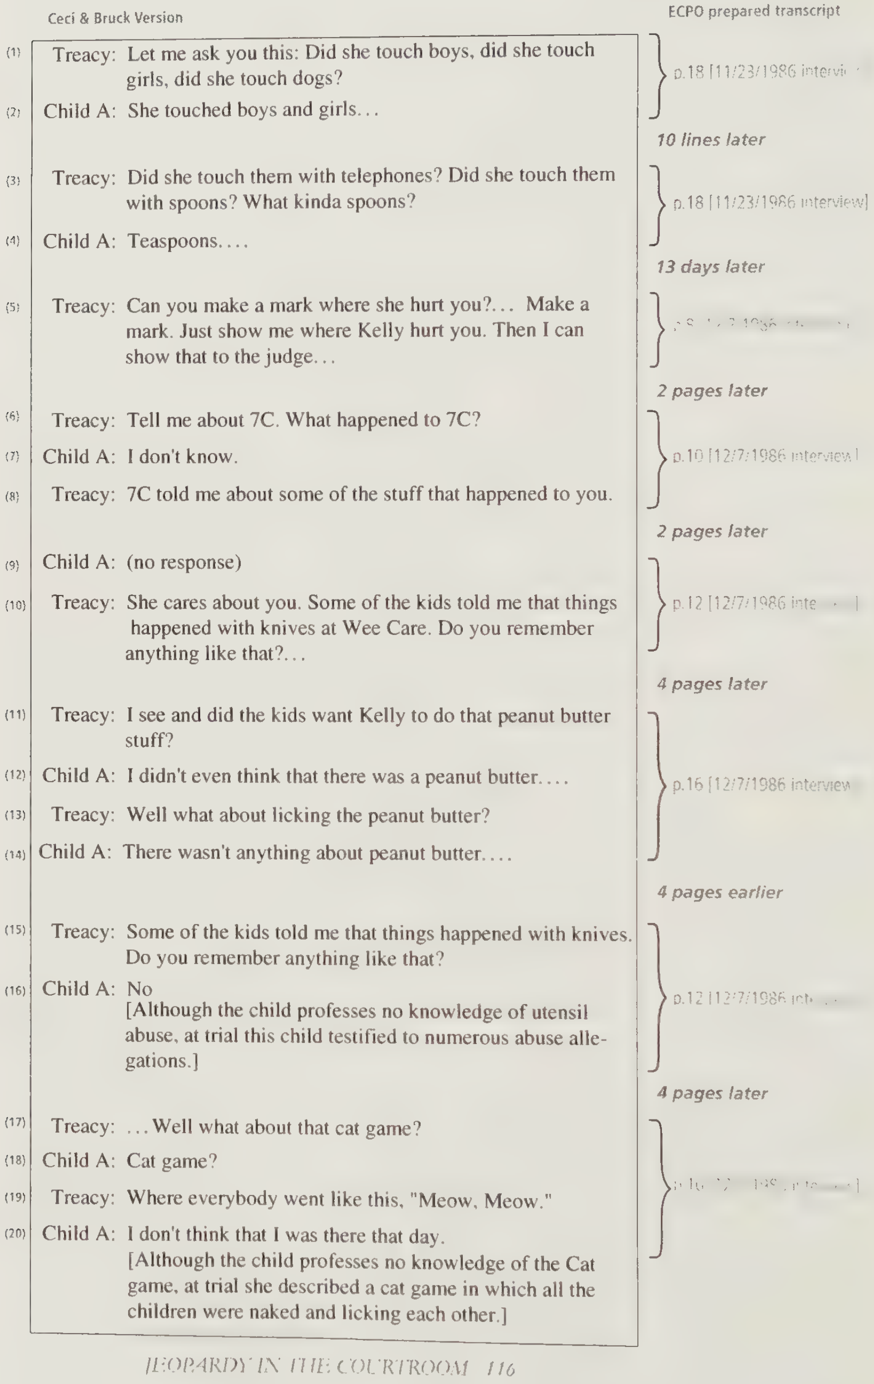
The claim that Treacy was a "true believer" and always "found" sexual abuse is similarly unfounded.[177] It is contradicted by the record of published court decisions in New York. In one case, decided around the time of the Michaels trial, Treacy's testimony was influential in the court's decision not to substantiate sexual abuse.[178] This case did not deter detractors from continuing to claim she is a "rogue therapist" who finds abuse in "everything a child does" during an evaluation, as Rich Lowry claimed in the National Review in December 1994.[179] Earlier that year, however, the New York Law Journal reported "Ms. Treacy could not validate because she believed that there was a significant probability that the child was coached and prepared for the assessment."[180] Evidence that contradicts the "true believer" claim apparently does not influence those who make this charge. In this way, the would-be "skeptics" have become true believers of their own, apparently impervious to evidence that contradicts their beliefs.

The intense hostility against Treacy reflects the larger politics surrounding law reform and sexual assault. Treacy played a central role in changing legal responses to sexual violence in New York over the last twenty-five years. While heading the New York City Advisory Task Force on Rape in 1983, she provided striking testimony to a joint legislative committee hearing in favor of eliminating the corroboration requirement in child sexual-abuse cases. Her testimony at trial in People v. Taylor helped set the New York precedent for allowing rape trauma syndrome evidence in trials. In Taylor, she testified it was common for a rape victim to appear quiet and controlled following an attack; she also explained why a rape victim might be initially unwilling to name an attacker whom she knows personally. "Rape is a crime that is permeated by misconceptions," the appellate court noted, allowing trauma syndrome evidence to counter "cultural myths that still affect common understanding of rape and rape victims."[181] One of the purposes for which the state hired her as an expert witness in the Michaels case was to counter similar myths surrounding child sexual abuse.

She was also hired specifically to assess whether suggestibility might account for the children's statements in the case. In fact, she tested for suggestibility in ways that have never been acknowledged in the witch-hunt narrative. Ceci and Bruck have argued, for example, that nobody in the case ever asked questions challenging the children's statements. Emphasizing the importance of this technique, they have said, "When an interviewer avoids confirmatory bias by posing and testing alternative hypothesies, the suggestive techniques do not seem to result in serious problems."[182] The claim that Treacy did not test alternative hypotheses is contradicted by the detailed reports she prepared on each child. Those aspects of her interviews have never been acknowledged. Instead, a picture has been painted in the witch-hunt narrative that Treacy implanted ideas and even created charges that appeared in the case.

The most detailed critique involves two interview excerpts that are said to "give a flavor of the interactions" between Treacy and the children she evaluated, and they appear to be quite damning. Both passages require detailed analysis, since a close examination of transcripts prepared for the case reveals that appearances can be quite deceiving.[183] The interaction with "Child A" comprises approximately ten questions and answers. The questions are clearly leading and the answers are generally negative or "I don't know." But a comparison of this excerpt to the written record[184] reveals that this "excerpt" is actually a composite of eight snippets taken from two different dates and various pages, and they are not always presented in chronological order (see Figure 5.9). Ceci and Bruck included ellipses for six of these discontinuities, but no reader would reasonably expect that these snippets are from different dates or are out of chronological order. Further, the necessary ellipses are missing in two places in this twenty-line excerpt, leaving even the most careful reader with the impression of an excerpt more intact than it actually is. These mistakes are particularly striking since Ceci and Bruck state they "lightly edited these transcripts for dysfluencies and redundancies, but [. . .] never altered the meaning."[185]

Figure 5.9 Treacy-Child A Excerpt, Reproduced from Ceci and Bruck (1995) with Source Annotations.



Ceci & Bruck Version

ECPO prepared transcript

(1) Treacy: Let me ask you this: Did she touch boys, did she touch girls, did she touch dogs?
(2) Child A: She touched boys and girls...

p.18 [11/23/1986 intervi

10 lines later

(3) Treacy: Did she touch them with telephones? Did she touch them with spoons? What kinda spoons?
(4) Child A: Teaspoons....

p.18 [11/23/1986 interview]

13 days later

(5) Treacy: Can you make a mark where she hurt you?... Make a mark. Just show me where Kelly hurt you. Then I can show that to the judge...

[illegible]

2 pages later

(6) Treacy: Tell me about 7C. What happened to 7C?
(7) Child A: I don't know.
(8) Treacy: 7C told me about some of the stuff that happened to you.

p.10 [12/7/1986 interview]

2 pages later

(9) Child A: (no response)
(10) Treacy: She cares about you. Some of the kids told me that things happened with knives at Wee Care. Do you remember anything like that?...

p.12 [12/7/1986 inte]

4 pages later

(11) Treacy: I see and did the kids want Kelly to do that peanut butter stuff?
(12) Child A: I didn't even think that there was a peanut butter....
(13) Treacy: Well what about licking the peanut butter?
(14) Child A: There wasn't anything about peanut butter....

p.16 [12/7/1986 interview

4 pages earlier

(15) Treacy: Some of the kids told me that things happened with knives. Do you remember anything like that?
(16) Child A: No
[Although the child professes no knowledge of utensil abuse, at trial this child testified to numerous abuse allegations.]

p.12 [12/7/1986 int

4 pages later

(17) Treacy: ...Well what about that cat game?
(18) Child A: Cat game?
(19) Treacy: Where everybody went like this, "Meow, Meow."
(20) Child A: I don't think that I was there that day.
[Although the child professes no knowledge of the Cat game, at trial she described a cat game in which all the children were naked and licking each other.]

[illegible]

JEOPARDY IN THE COURTROOM 116

This questionable editing significantly changes how one reads and understands the content of the interview. Consider the first place where material was removed by editorial choice, between lines [2] and [3] in Figure 5.9. Here is the same passage, with the material omitted by Ceci and Bruck highlighted in bold:

TREACY: Let me ask you this. Did she touch boys? Did she touch girls? Did she touch dogs?
CHILD: She touched boys and girls.
TREACY: She touched boys and girls. And where did this touching take place?
CHILD: At Wee Care.
TREACY: At Wee Care. Did it happen in like the kitchen? Where did it happen?
CHILD: In the piano room.

The editing removed an open-ended question ("And where did this touching take place?") and a leading question that purposely contained false suggestion ("Did it happen in the kitchen?"). It is noteworthy that the child did not say "yes, it happened in the kitchen." Instead, the child said "in the piano room"—an answer that Treacy did not suggest. The added significance of the piano room is that it was named by other children who stayed late in the afternoon on occasion.

As indicated in Figure 5.9, the second "question" in this excerpt is reported as three continuous, run-on questions: "Did she touch them with telephones? Did she touch them with spoons? What kind of spoons?" The child's one word answer ("teaspoons") appears to be the sole response after a sequence of questions that ended with what kind of spoon. In other words, the interview appears to have led the child to a choice of spoons. But the transcript reveals otherwise:

TREACY: Did she touch their butts with her body or other stuff?
CHILD: Other stuff.
TREACY: Like what? Like blocks?
CHILD: No.
TREACY: How about things I have over there?
CHILD: No I forgot. I think I forgot, I'm not sure.
TREACY: You're not sure. Are you getting uncomfortable?
CHILD: No.
TREACY: OK, did she touch them with toys?
CHILD: No.
TREACY: Did she touch them with telephones?
CHILD: No.

TREACY: No. Did she touch them with spoons?
CHILD: Yes.
TREACY: What kind of spoons?
CHILD: Teaspoons.[186]

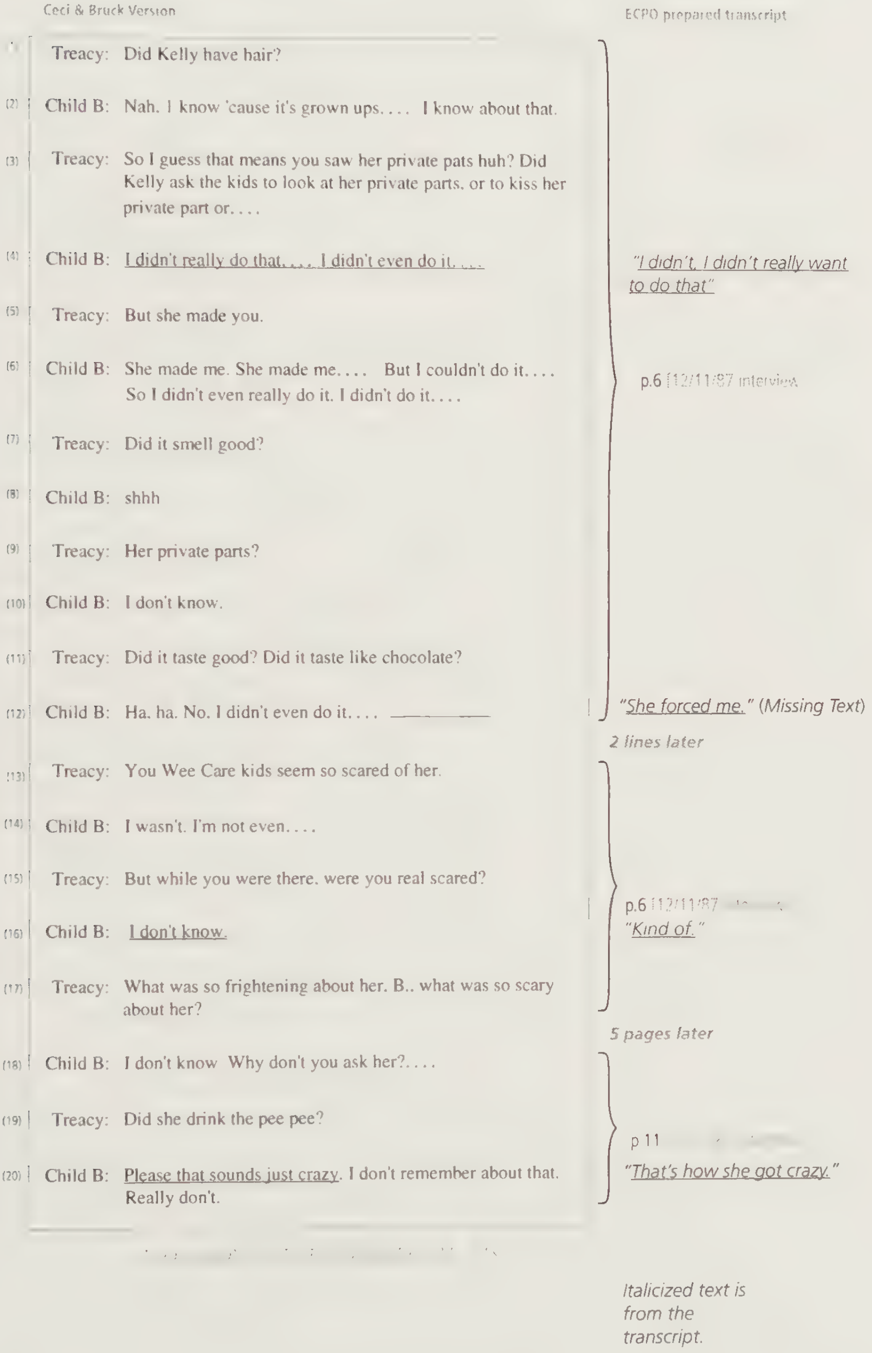
Editing this exchange to compress several separate questions into one uninterrupted bunch changes the appearance of the interaction from unobjectionable to highly objectionable. Academic psychologists Deborah Poole and Michael Lamb, who have written extensively about interviewing children, clearly counsel against the kind of multiple questioning created in the edited version.[187] But Treacy did the opposite of what is conveyed in Ceci and Bruck's edited excerpt; she allowed time for the child to respond to each question, as Poole and Lamb counsel. Moreover, she asked about three objects, two of which would presumably have caused affirmative answers (toys, telephones) if the child thought affirmative answers should be given in order to please the interviewer. Instead, the child said "no," there was no touching with toys or telephones.

There are also two bracketed statements by Ceci and Bruck in this excerpt, both of which insinuate that Treacy implanted ideas into this girl because, in both instances, she "professes no knowledge" about things she later testified to at trial. The first involves abuse with utensils. But a year and a half before the session with Treacy, Cassie told Detective Mastrangelo about abuse with utensils.[188] The second involves a "cat game." Again, Ceci and Bruck suggest that because the girl testified at trial about a game in which children licked each other, she must have learned that from Treacy. But Treacy does not mention licking in this excerpt, just the words cat and meow. Moreover, seventeen months before this session, Cassie's mother, when asked about unusual behavior in her daughter that year, replied "she licks me all the time."[189] The implication that Treacy implanted these ideas in the girl does not fit the chronology of the case.

Worse problems plague a second excerpt that Ceci and Bruck offer as evidence of how Treacy "gets the child to say that Kelly's private parts were the same as a little girl's." Curiously, the excerpt does not actually do that (see Figure 5.10). The passage contains ten questions or statements by Treacy, each followed by a response from the child. The passage appears disjointed, the questions are often leading, and the child's responses are vague and practically without substance ("I didn't really do that," "I don't know," "I don't remember about that").

The passage appears disjointed because it was edited that way. The excerpt is largely from pages 6 and 7 of the interview with Treacy, but the final two lines are from page 10. Moreover, critical phrases and lines are omitted without explanation. Consider the first six lines as presented by Ceci and Bruck in Figure 5.10. Here is the same passage directly from the transcript, with the significant material that was omitted or altered highlighted in boldface:

Figure 5.10 Treacy-Child B Excerpt, Reproduced from Ceci and Bruck (1995) with Source Annotations.



Ceci & Bruck Version

ECPO prepared transcript

(1) Treacy: Did Kelly have hair?

(2) Child B: Nah. I know 'cause it's grown ups. . . . I know about that.

(3) Treacy: So I guess that means you saw her private pats huh? Did Kelly ask the kids to look at her private parts, or to kiss her private part or. . . .

(4) Child B: I didn't really do that. . . . I didn't even do it. . . .

(5) Treacy: But she made you.

(6) Child B: She made me. She made me. . . . But I couldn't do it. . . . So I didn't even really do it. I didn't do it. . . .

(7) Treacy: Did it smell good?

(8) Child B: shhh

(9) Treacy: Her private parts?

(10) Child B: I don't know.

(11) Treacy: Did it taste good? Did it taste like chocolate?

(12) Child B: Ha, ha. No. I didn't even do it. . . . ______

(13) Treacy: You Wee Care kids seem so scared of her.

(14) Child B: I wasn't. I'm not even. . . .

(15) Treacy: But while you were there, were you real scared?

(16) Child B: I don't know.

(17) Treacy: What was so frightening about her, B., what was so scary about her?

(18) Child B: I don't know Why don't you ask her?. . . .

(19) Treacy: Did she drink the pee pee?

(20) Child B: Please that sounds just crazy. I don't remember about that. Really don't.

[illegible]

"I didn't, I didn't really want to do that"

p.6 [12/11/87 interview

"She forced me." (Missing Text)

2 lines later

p.6 [12/11/87 [illegible]

"Kind of."

5 pages later

p 11 [illegible]

"That's how she got crazy."

Italicized text is from the transcript.

[1] Treacy: Did Kelly have hair?
[2] Child: Ahh, I know because they're grownups. . . . I know about them.
[3] Treacy: So I guess that means you saw her private parts huh? Did Kelly ask the kids to look at her private parts, or to kiss her private part or . . .
[4] Child: I didn't, I didn't really want to do that—
[4.1] Treacy: Do what?
[4.2] Child: You know, kiss her private parts. I didn't even do it, I didn't feel like doing it.
[5] Treacy: But she made you?
[6] Child: She made me. She made me but I couldn't do it so I didn't, cause you know I didn't feel like doing it. I didn't even do it.

Note, first, that the child's statement from line 4 actually reads "I didn't, I didn't really want to do that." Ceci and Bruck quote this line as "I didn't really do that. . . . I didn't even do it. . . ." Next, they omit the subsequent two lines in the exchange, labeled 4.1 and 4.2 in the text above. One line involves a simple, open-ended question by Treacy: "Do what?" The child replied: "You know, kiss her private parts. I didn't even do it, I didn't feel like doing it." Ceci and Bruck removed the open-ended question and the child's statement about kissing her private parts.

Later in the same excerpt, the boy's responses reported by Ceci and Bruck vary further from what is contained in the transcript. Ceci and Bruck report that the child answered "I don't know," when asked if he was scared at the time. The transcript indicates the child said "kind of." In other words, the transcript contains a partial affirmation, while Ceci and Bruck's version does not. The transcript also demonstrates that part of the boy's next answer was "She forced me," a phrase that was then repeated by Treacy in the unedited version. But Ceci and Bruck omit this material. Here is the excerpt directly from the transcript, with important material that was omitted or altered highlighted in boldface:

TREACY: Did it taste good? Did it taste like chocolate?
CHILD B: No I didn't even (inaudible). She forced me.[190]
TREACY: She forced you. Let me ask you this, this is one thing I don't understand, why don't you bring Darth Vader over here and help me with this thing. You kids from Wee Care really, really, when I talk to you guys about this. . . .
CHILD B: Yeah
TREACY: You guys seem so scared of her
CHILD B: (inaudible) I'm not even scared.
TREACY: But while you were there, were you scared
CHILD B: Kind of.[191]

Finally, according to Ceci and Bruck, this excerpt ends with Treacy asking, apparently out of the blue, "Did she [Kelly Michaels] drink the pee pee?" Ceci and Bruck report that the child responded, "Please that sounds just crazy." The authors quote this statement twice in their book, citing it as primary evidence of "a child's horror at the content of the interviewers' questions."[192] But this two-line exchange is actually several pages later than the lines before it. The material in between helps explain the source of Treacy's question. But most remarkably, the transcript indicates the child said "That's how she got crazy," not "Please that sounds just crazy"—a phrase that sounds suspiciously adultlike.[193] The same line that appears in the transcript—"That's how she got crazy"—also appears verbatim in the report that Treacy wrote shortly after this session in December 1986.[194] (The transcript was prepared more than a year later by a stenographer who never spoke with Treacy.) The childlike explanation that appears in both places does not evince "horror." Moreover, placing this response in context of the entire interview—that is, considering the material Ceci and Bruck omitted between pages 7 and 10—dispels the notion that the interviewer horrified the child. Seven lines before the question supposedly causing horror, the child volunteered this: "And then Kelly even tried to make us drink it."[195] The "horrifying" idea, then, came first from the child, not from the interviewer.

Exaggerating the Fantastic

For many, the most persuasive, and certainly the most memorable, argument in the witch-hunt narrative of the Michaels case revolves around the "fantastic" claims made by children in the case. The allegations involving abuse with utensils have been placed in this category. But there were other so-called bizarre claims as well. As Rabinowitz explained it:

> Unnoticed, and on a daily basis, Michaels had also, according to prosecutors, licked peanut butter off the children's genitals, played the piano in the nude, and made them drink her urine and eat a 'cake' of her feces.[196]

Rabinowitz was wrong in several ways. First, prosecutors did not allege that any criminal acts happened daily. Second, only a few of "the children" were implicated in the most grotesque charges. Of the 131 counts that went to the jury, there was one lone count about the consumption of feces. To read the witch-hunt narrative, one would think the case was built on these charges. Finally, Rabinowitz was wrong to suggest that Michaels was convicted of the most fantastic claims. The charge just mentioned, possibly the most difficult to believe in the case, was one of the fifteen counts the jury rejected at trial. In short, even though there were "fantastic" charges in the case, their role has been inflated and misrepresented. The significance of these charges can be ascertained only by analyzing specific details, something the witch-hunt narrative consistently avoids.

The most widespread claims in the case that have been labeled "fantastic" involve allegations concerning plastic utensils. The word bizarre is also used to describe the allegations of sexual abuse with spoons, knives, and forks. The idea that allegations of abuse with utensils emanated from the interviewers has an obvious plausibility, given the ominous claim in Ceci and Bruck's brief that in "17 of the 39 sessions silverware was given to the children with dolls."[197] This is a large enough number to account for all the allegations about sexual abuse with utensils. But some important questions are left unexplored by proponents of the witch-hunt narrative: (1) In how many interviews were utensils introduced by the child? (2) What were the circumstances and content of the first disclosure of each child at trial who alleged abuse with utensils? (3) How many allegations involving utensils came outside the context of the seventeen interviews where they were "introduced by the interviewer"?

The witch-hunt narrative seems to imply that the answer to the first question is zero. At least, it never acknowledges that any child made such statements without prompting. Yet there is compelling evidence from several such children. A careful analysis of when these claims first emerged eliminates "suggestibility" as the original source. The first time utensils were mentioned in the case was May 2, three weeks before Fonolleras entered the investigation. They were mentioned the second day of the investigation, when Cody Cook, a boy named by Mitchell Pierce, told his father that Kelly Michaels had touched his private parts with a spoon. The boy's father wrote a three-page statement by hand that includes this detail, on the night of May 2, 1985.

Rather than embracing the idea of abuse with a utensil, the authorities responded with skepticism, immediately sensing that these details would probably render the children less credible.[198] The prosecutors would have left those charges out of the case if they could have. The witch-hunt narrative has never explained why, if the interviewers were implanting the whole case, they would choose to include an element likely to make the case less credible. But the fact is that utensils were a consistent feature across children who disclosed earliest and under different circumstances. The idea that all of the statements about abuse with utensils came from leading questions is contradicted elsewhere in the trial transcript. In the initial disclosure to his mother, David Applegate—the child who was never interviewed by DYFS—talked about being penetrated with a "spoon" and with a "stick," which could well be a knife or the handle end of any utensil.

Proponents of the witch-hunt narrative have ignored the most convincing child testimony, but they have simultaneously exaggerated the nature of the claims involving utensils. Those exaggerations transform the allegations from plausible to physically impossible. Rabinowitz has claimed the allegations involved "serrated knives" and "terrible sharp instruments."[199] But she is the one who introduced the language "serrated" knives and "terrible sharp instruments."

Four- to six-year-olds tend not to use words like "serrated." But even if they did, this is not what they said in this case. It was apparent through exhibits used at trial that the utensils at issue were plastic, the kind one finds at a preschool.

In the few places in the investigative interviews where children elaborated on the nature of the utensils, they said things that directly contradicted the descriptors chosen by Rabinowitz. One child, asked to describe what kind of knife, said "like a butter knife."[200] This comes as close as a child possibly could to indicating the knife was not serrated or sharp. Another child's mother described her son revealing that "the other end of the knife, not the pointed end, was inserted into his rectum."[201] Most memorably, one child, in an early interview in June, added the phrase "the end you don't eat eggs with," after describing abuse with a fork.[202] In short, what the children actually described were uses of utensils that would not cause serious injuries. Even Dr. Watson S. Price, a physician who testified for the defense, agreed with this assessment. Inserting the handle of a spoon in the anus would "basically cause redness," he testified. Even a dull knife, he continued, would result in "probably nothing, but a little bit of erythema [redness]."[203] The trial record in this case is replete with documented cases of erythema and irritated anuses. This evidence is all missing, however, from the witch-hunt narrative. Moreover, the initial disclosures about "white jean stuff" and "gasoline"—also consistently omitted from the narrative—apparently support the theory that Michaels minimized any acute injuries by using Vaseline.

Another allegation that has become central to the witch-hunt narrative is the claim that Michaels played the piano in the nude. A few children specifically said she had played the song "Jingle Bells." Those claims were nowhere near as pervasive as claims about abuse with utensils. Only a small number of children made such statements. They emerged from multiple sources on June 6 and 7, in claims that were consistent and almost simultaneous. The assertions about eating feces are undoubtedly the most difficult to believe. But the case was not characterized by such claims. Two of the children at trial made statements of that kind during the investigation; both emerged late in the investigation, and neither charge resulted in a conviction. One of the charges was dropped; the other resulted in a not-guilty finding by the jury. It is extremely misleading, then, to suggest that such claims were widespread in the case, or that such charges are what resulted in her conviction.

In short, the supposedly fantastic claims in the Kelly Michaels case varied significantly, from being widespread (abuse with utensils) to isolated examples in a few children (allegations involving feces); they also ranged from highly plausible (also the utensil claims), given how they emerged, to much less likely (nude piano playing).[204] Dr. Mark Everson, director of the Program on Childhood Trauma and Maltreatment at the University of North Carolina, reminds us that improbable or fantastic accounts "should not result in an automatic dismissal of the child's report."[205] Everson has proposed twenty-four possible explanations for such statements, urging a balanced approach that includes "multiple dimensions of assessment and investigation" rather than overreliance on the child's statements alone. Critics of the Michaels case have eschewed the idea. Rabinowitz condemned as Orwellian the notion that jurors were told "they didn't need to believe everything the children said."[206] Yet adult witnesses have never been held to the standard that all of their testimony must be rejected if any single statement is not considered credible.

Manufacturing Social Hysteria

An integral part of the witch-hunt narrative is the argument that "social hysteria" inflated and even created an untold number of charges in the Michaels case. This argument postulates social dynamics whereby parents caught up in a frenzy are, at best, less skeptical of children's statements than they would otherwise be, and at worst they actually foment allegations in their own children. On the surface, this claim has an obvious plausibility in the Michaels case because it grew from a 6-count indictment in May to a 235-count indictment in November. Of course, a case involving multiple victims would have to begin somewhere—and no matter how it unfolded, it would apparently be susceptible to a claim that the expansion was enabled or enhanced by social hysteria if the mere fact of expansion is considered enough to prove the claim.

Regardless of the actual evidence in the Michaels case, this claim has been widely accepted. Rabinowitz labeled the case "a condition of national hysteria not unlike the hysteria that seized the Massachusetts Bay Colony" during the Salem witch trials. The state of New Jersey was allegedly in the grips of "a national hysteria" that was "as virulent and contagious as the Asian flu," she continued.[207] Dr. Richard Gardner, who coined the term sex abuse hysteria and was hired to worked for the defense in the civil cases against Kelly Michaels, proclaimed that the case had "many of the classic hallmarks" of such "hysteria."[208]

The social hysteria claim plays a critical role in the witch-hunt narrative. First, it provides a kind of catch-all explanation. Any child whose interviews cannot be impugned—or, in the case of David Applegate, who was never interviewed by DYFS—can always be said to have succumbed to vague social forces. The same approach can also be used to explain away the twelve jurors who found Michaels guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The social hysteria claim is also what makes this case of broader interest. It is a link that arguably ties this case to others across the country. Indeed, critics generally discuss these cases as if they are interchangeable. Debbie Nathan claimed that the Michaels case was "a cookie-cutter copy" of the one she wrote about in Texas.[209] Curiously, she made that pronouncement before the brief trip to New Jersey that constituted the research for her first article about the Michaels case in the Village Voice.[210] Unfortunately, critics of the case have not supplied a careful, chronological accounting of how the case evolved. Instead, there has been almost indiscriminate use of the word hysteria. Law professor Jean Montoya claimed that "the hysteria began" as soon as the letter was sent to parents about unspecified allegations concerning a former employee.[211] But a close examination of the facts reveals that the social hysteria claim is contradicted by the case chronology.

The social hysteria claim is often made such that the initial investigation collapses into the investigation-at-large, making it appear as if Mitchell Pierce's utterance resulted in the decision to interview fifty-one children. "That is how the accusation began," Nathan stated after inaccurately claiming his famous utterance was caused by the nurse rubbing the boy's back. "Detectives and social workers from New Jersey's Division of Youth and Family Services then embarked on a two-month interview process," she continued, without any recognition of the difference between the initial charges and the later investigation. The same mistake was repeated almost verbatim by Justice Clarence Thomas, dissenting from the decision not to hear the case dismissing Michael's civil claims against the state after her conviction was overturned:

> Based solely on [Mitchell Pierce's] statements, a prosecutor and several investigators, respondents here, began an extensive investigation. Respondents interviewed virtually all of the children with whom petitioner could have had any contact.[212]

But this is not how the case evolved. Mitchell's statements resulted in interviewing the two boys he named. One immediately confirmed the claim. Another boy, whose mother was on the Wee Care board of directors, soon emerged to confirm the same. The first phase of the investigation was narrowly focused and quickly brought to an end. The social hysteria arguments simply cannot apply to this stage of the case, and they cannot explain the charges that formed the basis for the original six-count indictment.

The letter to parents of children at Wee Care was sent on May 7. Had the letter named Kelly Michaels, as Nathan erroneously reported in the Village Voice,[213] there would have been special reason for concern. But the letter said the investigation was about "a former employee," and it gave no particular reason for parents to assume their children were affected. The first parents' meeting, held on May 15, was more restrained than was often described. There were, of course, some concerned parents, which would happen in any case involving allegations of abuse. There were also many parents who were not concerned because the letter specified the investigation concerned "a former employee." Some parents did not even bother to attend the May 15 parents' meeting, and several were on record at the time as being quite restrained about the issue.[214] Moreover, the DYFS investigator did not start interviewing anyone until two weeks after the prosecutor's office had completed the investigation that resulted in the first indictment.

The social dynamics surrounding the case clearly changed during the month of June. Roughly speaking, they went from a targeted investigation based on the content of previously interviewed children to a broad-based investigation, at least by DYFS, seemingly intent on interviewing every child who attended the school. There was also a shift in thinking about the scope and likelihood of the charges against Kelly Michaels. There was clearly a hardening of views about her. Lou Fonolleras displayed this tendency the most. It is fair to say he eventually embodied the kind of "confirmation bias" that taints an investigation. After all, he ultimately "substantiated" abuse claims on virtually every child he interviewed, including ones who denied abuse.[215] But none of the children who were then "substantiated" without regard to the content of their statements was actually in the criminal case. Moreover, there is no reason to conclude that Fonolleras brought this view to the investigation on May 22. Had this been the case, he would have "found" abuse on that day and immediately continued interviewing. Instead, he interviewed two children on May 22 and did not return until June 6—only when specifically requested by a parent.

Taking these facts into account, we could say there were three phases to the investigation: the earliest investigative phase, the first part of the DYFS investigation (which soon included the Essex County Prosecutor's Office), and the later part of the DYFS/ECPO investigation. There is not a simple obvious marker for the shift in the DYFS investigation in June. I have selected June 13 for several reasons but acknowledge that it could be drawn somewhat differently.[216] Whatever the boundaries between phases two and three, the social hysteria argument has the greatest plausibility in phase three. Unequivocal denials were prevalent in late June (and early July) but not earlier in the investigation.

The role of the media also changed significantly over this time, and the pattern was completely different from the McMartin case, where intense national publicity preceded the first grand jury by more than a month. In the Michaels case, the initial press coverage was quite restrained, and there was no coverage at all during the first phase of the investigation or through the initial grand jury proceedings. There was a two-hundred-word story in the Star-Ledger on June 7 that reported the six-count indictment. They ran a slightly longer story on June 21, reporting that Michaels faced an additional thirty-one charges. This was the first indication in the press that the case extended beyond the original three boys. A longer story, reporting that Michaels was being held at the county jail, appeared in the News-Record of Maplewood and South Orange on June 26. There were no statewide stories and no television coverage at the time. Indeed it was more than six weeks before the story was reported elsewhere in New Jersey.

There were few stories before late June and the unsealing of the additional charges in December. Daily stories in the local press did not occur until the case came to trial in 1987. By then, of course, all of the charges had also long since been finalized. These facts illustrate an obvious point that has been overlooked by proponents of the social hysteria claim: the investigation and the surrounding social forces evolved over time. Media coverage went from nonexistent to minimal and, long after the charges were finalized, to intensive. Parental involvement evolved likewise. Many of the charges in the case came long before any arguable signs of so-called hysteria. The evolution of the case must be considered carefully, then, in order to assess when, if ever, broader social forces might have affected it.

But how much of the case was built around children who emerged during the final stages of the investigation? How much was built around children's statements in the earliest stages of the investigation? Those questions have not been addressed by proponents of the witch-hunt narrative, who seem intent on blurring such distinctions. Viewing the investigation in stages, one concludes the likely reason for avoiding such analysis is apparent: the actual patterns in this case contradict what the social hysteria claim would predict. If the case is divided into three phases—May 1 to May 7, May 22 to June 13, June 17 onward—the twenty children at trial were about evenly divided between the first two stages and the third.

Aggregate analysis of the three stages reveals that the interview intensity increased over time while the percentage of children identified as victims dropped significantly in the third phase of the investigation (see Table 5.1). Three of the five children interviewed in phase one (60 percent) ended up at trial. It would likely have been 80 percent if Cody Cook's family had not moved away. Seven of the

Table 5.1 Kelly Michaels Interview and Charge Information, by Investigative Phase

	Initial investigation 5/1–5/7	DYFS/ECPO Phase one 5/22–6/13	DYFS/ECPO Phase two 6/17–7/15
No. children interviewed for the first time	5	13*	33
No. of these children w/ charges resulting	4	9	18
No. of these children at trial (n=19)	3	7	9

* David Applegate emerged in this phase but was not interviewed by DYFS.

thirteen children interviewed during phase two (54 percent) ended up at trial. But only nine of the thirty-three interviews conducted with children interviewed in phase three (27 percent) resulted in charges that went to trial. This pattern runs counter to the social hysteria claim. It is opposite to what happened in the McMartin case. When the social pressures were most apparent, when parents began to organize, when there were stories in the local newspaper about expanding charges, and when interviewer bias apparently became a serious problem and interview frequency intensified, the percentage of children who actually disclosed abuse and were included in the case was less than half the rate of earlier stages.

A handful of children who did disclose during the final period later became the basis for some of the most intensive criticism in the witch-hunt narrative. So did other children who were interviewed late in the process—children who were never in the case beyond their initial interview. Given the rising intensity in the prevailing social environment, the charges that emerged during the third phase of the investigation deserve close attention and an extra degree of skepticism. But the fact that ten of the nineteen children at trial were from earlier phases in the investigation is a direct challenge to the social hysteria claim.

The actual verdict in the case also contradicts the claim that the jury succumbed to social hysteria. Had an automatic "believe the children" view captured the jury, they would have found Michaels guilty on all counts. But the verdict clearly reflected child-by-child decisions, not group judgments. The jury found some children's testimony persuasive in relation to all counts charged; this describes the outcome for seven of the twenty children at trial. For two other children, the jury returned guilty verdicts that were, in part, based on "lesser included charges." But for eleven of the twenty children, the jury verdicts were more mixed. In some cases, almost all of the charges were accepted by the jury; in others, either most of the charges were rejected or a guilty verdict was returned on a lesser included charge. This individualized decision making belies assertions of the kind of groupthink that characterizes the hysteria claim.

The Appellate Division Follows Suit

Public opinion about the Kelly Michaels case shifted before the case reached the Appellate Division. As Debbie Nathan has since described it, the Rabinowitz article in May 1990 brought national attention to the case. After that, Nathan "was deluged with calls from filmmakers, journalists, and television reporters. Public opinion began shifting in Michaels's favor."[217] By the time the case was actually heard by the Appellate Division in early 1993, Kelly Michaels had become a cause célèbre. There were several stories on national television and in national magazines casting the case as a witch-hunt. There was little or no voice in response, especially since prosecutors are not supposed to argue their cases in the press. The appellate judges in New Jersey, who lived and worked in the greater New York City media market, would already have heard the witch-hunt narrative about the Kelly Michaels case long before it arrived at their court. It appears that the long delay in arrival time was strategic.

If there has ever been an appellate case where it was clear that the decision was made before the oral argument, this was it. Rabinowitz reported, "No one sitting at the February appellate hearing could miss the controlled scorn evidenced by the three judges."[218] "Michaels Case Headed for Remand," the New Jersey Law Journal announced with confidence immediately after the oral argument. As they put it:

> Sometimes an appeals court can so telegraph its views on a case that reading its intentions becomes not a question of whether they will, say, overturn a criminal conviction, but rather what new guidelines it will issue in ordering a new trial.[219]

They were correct about the outcome.

Oral arguments in the case were on February 1, 1993. The court issued its 118-page decision in March; it was a resounding victory for the defense. The Appellate Division accepted the arguments about repetitive interviews and child suggestibility; it also held that the expert testimony of Eileen Treacy should not have been allowed. The court ruled that the defendant could not be retried without a "taint hearing"—something not previously recognized in New Jersey law—to assess the reliability of the children's statements. In short, the defense prevailed on every issue except those pertaining to Ralph Underwager; even an Appellate Division that was highly receptive to the defense could not rehabilitate him.

The New Jersey Appellate Division repeated the false claim that "it was patently obvious that the [first] child's comment was misunderstood and that the child was referring to the rubbing of his back and not the anal penetration."[220] The court did not confront the actual content of this child's initial statements or the details of the adult testimony surrounding it. The Appellate Division would have had in its possession the testimony of Laura Hadley, the medical assistant who flatly contradicted this claim. Instead, the judges apparently relied on the pure speculation of Jonas Rappeport, who did not actually review the evidence on this point.[221]

How the case actually evolved was also considered irrelevant by the court, which stated early in the opinion that a "child-specific recitation of the alleged abusive acts would serve no useful purpose at this juncture."[222] This would be true if the only issue before the court was a question of law—the usual function of an appellate court. In fact, the appellate court was substituting its own judgment for that of the trial court on the issue of how the children were interviewed. Indeed, there is significant irony in the fact that the Michaels case is known for the requirement, established by Appellate Division, of a "taint hearing" because there was a full airing of the suggestibility issue in a pre-trial hearing in 1987. The proceeding was not labeled a taint hearing, but the pretrial motion by the defense to dismiss the charges contained all of the same arguments.[223] The defense argued that the investigative interviews were unduly suggestive and rendered the children's statements too unreliable to be admitted at trial.

Superior Court Judge William F. Harth, who tried the case, took this issue seriously. He heard days of testimony from two defense psychologists, and he scrutinized the interviews himself, making notes on twenty taped interviews. "Judge Rules Testimony of Children in Day-care Case Wasn't Tainted," the Star Ledger reported on May 1, 1987. As explained below, the Star Ledger's description is apparently the remaining archival record of this hearing. According to Donna Leusner, who covered the hearing:

> [Judge] Harth read from portions of the preschoolers' grand jury testimony and individually critiqued more than 20 taped interviews conducted by state investigators before the grand jury session. . . . Harth cited numerous examples when questions that could be construed as leading drew negative responses. . . . During some interviews, children corrected or disagreed with investigators.[224]

Such findings of fact are normally accorded substantial deference on appeal because trial judges are closer to the evidence and are better positioned to evaluate the credibility of witnesses. But there was a highly unusual development in this case, one that has escaped notice in the witch-hunt narrative: all of the court records of that important pre-trial hearing disappeared or were mislaid. They were never located during the appeals process. When it became clear on appeal that the official record of this crucial fact-finding hearing was missing, the state moved "for a limited remand before that court to have the record reconstructed."[225] Remarkably, the Appellate Division denied the request. This freed the appellate court to make its own factual findings, unconstrained by what the judge who actually heard the tapes had concluded. Were it not for these highly unusual developments—both the loss of the transcript and the refusal of the Appellate Division to remand the issue to the fact-finding tribunal for the creation of a full record on appeal—this case could not have been overturned on the appellate court's own decision that the interviews were overly suggestive.

The appeal was argued in February 1993; the court issued its decision in March. The court made sweeping factual claims about the interviews after stating that a child-specific analysis "would serve no useful purpose." Sara Sencer-McArdle prepared a long memorandum documenting factual errors in the opinion of the Appellate Division.[226] But history, in this instance, was written by the court. Their factual mistakes are now enshrined in this landmark opinion.[227]

Fearing that this precedent would make it unduly difficult to prosecute child sexual abuse cases, the state appealed to the New Jersey Supreme Court. The court initially declined to hear the case, apparently reasoning that the issues were moot since the state was unlikely to retry Michaels. The court indicated the state could refile its petition for Supreme Court review only if the prosecution declared its intention to retry Michaels. Demonstrating how strong they considered the evidence in the case, the prosecutor's office indicted that it would retry Michaels if they won the appeal. The New Jersey Supreme Court agreed to hear the case, and the battleground then shifted to the academic field of psychology.

Academics Enter the Fray

The academic subfield of child psychology was rocked by McMartin. When the case began in 1983, the law was slanted against children as witnesses. Children younger than seven or eight were rarely allowed to testify, juries were often instructed that children were not as trustworthy as adults, and in many states child molestation cases could go forward only if there was some form of corroboration beyond the word of a child. This state of affairs was based more on perception and prejudice than on a proven body of facts, and a few psychologists started doing research that challenged those conceptions. During the mid-1980s, Professor Gail Goodman was considered a leader in the field; her research was featured in a New York Times article in November, 1984 captioned "Studies of Children as Witnesses Find Surprising Accuracy."[228] The article summarized studies of children as witnesses from a special issue of the Journal of Social Issues. One study found that five- and six-year-olds were as accurate as college students in recounting a staged event in which someone burst into a room and gave a fifteen-second harangue. These studies contributed to legal reforms that allowed younger children to testify, eliminated jury instructions that discounted children as witnesses, and eliminated the requirement that their testimony be corroborated. Those reforms opened the door to the cases that later became the core of the witch-hunt narrative.

In the wake of the McMartin case, it seemed inevitable that the positive view of children as witnesses would be tempered. There was no question that some children had come to believe in things that had not actually happened. There was also no question that adults had misunderstood children in various ways, reading into their responses much more than what the children actually said. How the field of child psychology would respond to those problems was an issue of grave concern, particularly to those who feared an overreaction. Writing in the Los Angeles Times on the day after the McMartin verdicts, psychologist Carol Tavris referred to Gail Goodman's research with approval and worried that "legitimate concerns about falsely accusing an innocent adult . . . not cause us to falsely disbelieve an innocent child."[229] This caution did not take hold among child psychologists in the academy. Instead, there was a concerted effort to discredit Goodman's research and promote a new line of studies to emphasize that children were highly suggestible.[230] This included efforts to paint Goodman as an extremist and portray a paradigm shift in the field through a process that, at times, looked more like a political campaign than a scientific endeavor. These developments came to a head in the appellate phase of the Michaels case. Before then, the arguments made on behalf of Michaels and others were largely advanced by the likes of Ralph Underwager, who lacked an academic affiliation and had considerable baggage as an expert witness.[231] All of this changed dramatically in 1993 with publications and related research by a pair of high-stature academic psychologists: Stephen Ceci of Cornell University and Maggie Bruck, then from McGill University, currently at Johns Hopkins University. Ceci and Bruck published two academic articles—one in Psychological Bulletin, the other in the Report of the Society for Research in Child Development—both of which specifically criticized the Michaels case. They also received significant publicity that year for the "Mousetrap Study," which was linked to the Kelly Michaels case in a front-page story in the New York Times. Finally, Ceci and Bruck coauthored a "friend of the court" brief, known to lawyers as an amicus brief, directly in support of Michaels. Though not an academic publication per se, this amicus brief, which came to be known as the "Concerned Scientists" brief, was later published in its entirety in a special issue of Psychology, Public Policy and Law, a journal of the American Psychological Association. It has since become a prominent document among academic child psychologists. The brief gave newfound credentials to the witch-hunt narrative about the Kelly Michaels case.

The "Synthesis" in Psychological Bulletin

The first important publication by Ceci and Bruck, "Suggestibility of the Child Witness: A Historical Review and Synthesis," surveyed the literature concerning children as witnesses and concluded that "the field of children's testimony is in turmoil, but a resolution to seemingly intractable debates now seemed attainable."[232] The review began with descriptions of "two recent court cases in which child witnesses provided critical eyewitness testimony"; the first was Kelly Michaels, and the second was Country Walk (the subject of the next chapter). Ceci and Bruck reviewed the literature over seventy years and described examples of five recent studies that supported the idea of children being more suggestible than adults. They also described five studies supporting the view that children are no more suggestible than adults, crediting Goodman with "doing more [than other researchers] to redress the historical imbalance" caused by decades of "research criticizing and belittling the accuracy and suggestibility of child witnesses." Recognizing this accomplishment, Ceci and Bruck nevertheless took a different view of Goodman's work. They also took Gary Melton, a past president of the American Psychological Association's Division on Psychology and Law, to task for criticizing statements, in a dissenting opinion in Maryland v. Craig, that children are substantially more suggestible than adults. Acknowledging that there are studies supportive of differing positions on this issue, Ceci and Bruck argued that these schools of thought cannot be resolved by "a point-by-point criticism of the methodological weaknesses of each study.[233] Instead, they proposed examining "the causal mechanisms that may underlie suggestibility effects."

The end of the discussion was also inconclusive, but Ceci and Bruck took the position that "it seems likely" future studies of interviewing techniques will lead to the conclusion that children are more suggestible than previously thought. Somewhat surprisingly, then, the authors go on to say:

> Clearly, more research is needed on this important topic before these conclusions can be accepted, even though many examples consistent with the claim that interview bias has large effects on children's reports can be found in legal case files.[234]

They proceeded to say that "this can be seen explicitly in the Kelly Michaels case," quoting about twenty lines from a single interview in the case. It is the same interview that Rabinowitz excerpted in Harper's, where the child was uncooperative and told the interviewer he hated him (and allegedly ended the interview by saying it was all lies). Ceci and Bruck then claimed that this interview was "characteristic of many of the state's interviews."[235] A systematic analysis of the case demonstrates this child's statements were not characteristic of many interviews; indeed, his interview was unusual in several ways.[236] But the misapplication of laboratory results to specific cases had begun.

The Mousetrap Study in the New York Times

Soon thereafter, Ceci and Bruck were featured on the front page of the New York Times in a story headlined "Studies Reveal Suggestibility of Very Young Witnesses."[237] The article described the findings of research by Ceci and Bruck that had not yet been published but would quickly become a staple in the witch-hunt narrative and in defense briefs in child molestation cases. The study is known popularly as "the Mousetrap Study."[238] Children in this study were interviewed about numerous events, after verifying in advance with their parents whether or not these events had ever happened to their child. One of the fictitious events was getting one's hand caught in a mousetrap and having to go to the hospital to have it removed. Faced with children who had never had their hand caught in a mousetrap, the experiment was designed to see whether repetitive questioning over ten weeks would cause children to falsely claim that they had had their hand caught in a mousetrap. When the children were interviewed in this experiment, they were told:

> I am going to read some things that may have happened to you, and I want you to think real hard about each one of them that I am going to read. Try to remember if it really happened.[239]

The children were interviewed seven to ten times over a ten-week period. They were, as it turns out, highly accurate in reporting true, salient events. Approximately one-third of the children, however, falsely assented to questions about an event that had not occurred. Much to the surprise of the authors, the number of false assents did not increase over time. The results did not demonstrate the kind of suggestibility they had hypothesized. But there was one particularly dramatic result: a child who originally said he had never been to the hospital spun a detailed story about getting his finger caught in a mousetrap and going to the hospital. The New York Times featured a sidebar with excerpts from the weekly progression of that child's answers, titled "How the Questions Become the Answers." It featured the boy's response when asked, in the final interview, "how did it happen?"

> I was looking and then I didn't see what I was doing and it [finger] got in there somehow. . . . The mousetrap was in our house because there's a mouse in our house. . . . The mousetrap is down in the basement, next to the firewood. . . . I was playing a game called "Operation" and then I went downstairs and said to Dad, "I want to eat lunch," and then it got stuck in the mousetrap. . . .[240]

This detailed account seems to provide strong evidence of how children could be led into producing complete narratives of fictitious events through the process of suggestive interviewing. Several months later, the same boy was interviewed on national television by John Stossel, who featured Ceci and Bruck's research in a segment on 20/20 that linked these results specifically to the Kelly Michaels case. Ceci told Stossel:

> What we do [in our experiments] is a pale version of what happens in real cases. It doesn't come close, for example, to what was done in the Kelly Michaels case.[241]

It was a convincing argument. It was also a serious misrepresentation of what happened in the Michaels case. Children were not told by interviewers that

Kelly Michaels had committed specific acts of sexual abuse, let alone week after week. Moreover, no child in the case was interviewed anywhere close to ten times in the investigation.[242] Surprisingly, the "Discussion" section of the article that reported these results did not focus on the study that, in overall terms, did not confirm their hypothesis. There was a single sentence about the study, followed by a lengthy discussion of something the authors called a "replication study" containing a "modification" in protocol. But the modification made it a significantly different study; the modification was that "each week the interviewer informed the child that they had actually experienced the fictitious event and then asked them if they remembered having done so."[243] The results from this study were also published separately.[244]

The "modified" version of the experiment produced much more dramatic results, including "a reliable increase in children's claims of having remembered fictitious events" over a twelve-week period.[245] In the modified experiment, there was also an eleventh interview, conducted by someone different from the earlier interviewer. The authors reported that after ten weeks, "56 percent of children reported at least one false event as true."[246] But the difference between the first study—which did not create the hypothesized results—and the "modified" version, which did, was lost on the media. New York Times health columnist Jane Brody made this same mistake, claiming that asking children to "think real hard" about events could cause them to believe fictitious events.[247] The media myth had far outgrown the results of the study. Indeed, in an article that received virtually no attention in the mass media, the child who spun the elaborate tale about getting his finger caught in a mousetrap revealed in a follow-up interview that it was "just a story." Ceci and his coauthors allowed that "the results of this follow-up study show clearly that the source misattributions did not create long-lasting memories."[248] But the study did impart a long-lasting sense to the contrary in public discourse about child suggestibility. Long after this child recanted, defense attorneys were still attaching the videotape of his appearance on 20/20 as "evidence" of child suggestibility.

"Translating Research into Policy"

Another important publication that year, also by Ceci and Bruck, came from the Society for Research in Child Development (SRCD). The article, "Child Witnesses: Translating Research into Policy," appeared in the Fall 1993 issue of SRCD's Social Policy Report. In this publication, Ceci and Bruck focused largely on "stereotypical knowledge," which they described as "the tendency to extrapolate from stereotypical knowledge to provide erroneous but plausible accounts of non-witnessed events."[249] Could being told that someone is "bad," for example, lead a child to create a whole narrative about sexual abuse? Some children were told that Kelly Michaels was "bad" during their interviews in the case. The authors described the "Sam Stone" experiment, not yet published but already in press, which was designed to test the effects of such "stereotype induction." Children were told over a one-month period about Sam Stone, a clumsy clown who often broke things. Sam later visited the nursery school for two minutes, "amiably interacting" but not breaking anything or acting clumsy. The next day, children were shown a torn book and a soiled teddy bear and asked about how it happened. In this phase of the experiment, "few children claimed to have seen Sam Stone do these things."[250]

In the second phase of the experiment, children were interviewed five times over ten weeks. They were asked leading questions such as "I wonder whether Sam Stone was wearing long pants or short pants when he ripped the book." At the end of this ten-week period, a different interviewer asked each child what happened when Sam visited their school. As Ceci and Bruck reported:

> When asked, 72% of the 3- and 4-year-olds said Sam Stone had ruined at least one of the items in question (the book or bear). When they were explicitly asked, 45% of the 3- and 4-year-olds replied that they actually had seen him do these things, as opposed to merely being told that he did.[251]

The study was also conducted with an older age group. Only 11 percent of the five- and six-year-olds claimed to have observed Sam damage any items. Ceci and Bruck concluded that "stereotype formation interacts with suggestive questioning to a greater extent for younger than older children." They did not highlight the related result that even among the youngest children almost half of those who appear to have adopted a stereotype from external sources readily identified the source when asked. If half of the young children who will adopt a stereotype based on external factors will also make it clear that they learned the information secondhand, then this phenomenon would be apparent in a criminal case through simple cross-examination. But none of the children in the Kelly Michaels trial indicated under cross-examination that what they knew about Michaels came from being told by someone else. There were children who said this in the interview process, but they were not included in the case, although some of their interviews have been cited as if they were. Nor were any of the children subjected to five to ten weeks of such questioning before disclosing abuse.

Ceci and Bruck's conclusion about this study is reasonable, but their description of the questions in the study was misleading. The questions were not merely "suggestive"; they actually contained declarative statements. The children were told repeatedly over time that Sam Stone had done specific acts. This is important in considering the application of these findings to actual cases. No child in the Michaels case was subjected to such questioning by investigators.

Ceci and Bruck's Brief for the Defense

Why did both of these articles and the New York Times story about the Mousetrap Study refer specifically to the Michaels case? Did Ceci and Bruck have a particular interest in the case? The answer became clearer several months later when the two authored a "friend of the court" brief that supported Kelly Michaels. But even then, the full extent of their involvement with the defense was not disclosed. The brief, which was presented as an independent voice from the scientific community, was filed by Amy Gershenfeld Donella, a former public defender in New Jersey. But it had been requested by Robert Rosenthal, one of Michaels's defense lawyers, who played an active, but undisclosed, role in actually writing the brief. In their 1995 book, Ceci and Bruck state that "transcripts of the children's interviews and of lower court of appeals documents became available to us when we co-authored an amicus brief."[252] But filing an amicus brief does not provide parties with access to a sealed transcript. And even if it did, this brief was written more than two months before the order that permitted the "concerned scientists" to enter the cases as friends of the court.[253]

The email that Bruck sent to solicit signatures for this brief said she "spent a tremendous amount of time" going through the interviews and "in fact every interview is a goldmine of horrifying examples of bad interviewing techniques."[254] However, a draft version of the brief that circulated among defense lawyers before it was filed in the Michaels case contained bracketed comments, in all caps, such as "Robert put in examples, " "Robert is this correct?" and "Robert can you put in a section for [this child]."[255] Robert Rosenthal, the defense lawyer, clearly played a pivotal role in linking Ceci and Bruck's research to the facts of the Michaels case. In their 1995 book, Ceci and Bruck would credit Rosenthal for "verifying information against the trial transcripts."[256] More recently, Ceci's vita was changed to credit Rosenthal as a co-author of the Concerned Scientists brief. The designation bears out that Rosenthal played a significant and undisclosed role in crafting the Concerned Scientists brief.

These facts undercut the claim that Ceci and Bruck made to being centrists who were not affiliated with the prosecution or the defense side of the issue. While working with the defense in the Michaels case, Ceci and Bruck sought to paint Gail Goodman as a "pro-prosecution extremist."[257] Goodman was not an extremist, and she was not aligned with the prosecution. But she was opposed to the idea of special taint hearings for children, and she viewed the new wave in child suggestibility research as having a defense slant. She had not testified in several years; before that, she testified three times for the prosecution and three times for the defense.[258] Moreover, she was described as one of the "leading scholars" in the field in a 1991 publication of papers from an APA-sponsored conference on child suggestibility at Cornell University.[259] During this same time period, Ceci, on the other hand, has claimed that he was hired "by both sides" in the Finje case in Florida, when in fact he was hired by the defense.[260] He never disclosed his affiliation with the defense in the Country Walk case (discussed in the next chapter), and, although John Stossel reported that Ceci never testified for the defense, he did so again in the Foeller case in Michigan a month after the program was aired.[261] In a pre-trial deposition, Ceci allowed that his research has a "pro-defense orientation."[262]

The reason these affiliations are important to the Michaels case is that the Ceci and Bruck brief claimed there had been a "paradigm shift" in the field of child psychology. They were essentially claiming there was now a scientific consensus that they were right. But their approach to making the argument looked a lot more like politics than science: they engaged in a signature drive for their amicus brief, and they engaged in negative tactics against the opposition. Forty-three people signed the brief, although many were not actually researchers in the areas covered by it. Indeed, fewer than a third of the signators had published research that was cited in the brief. Moreover, it is not clear who was asked to sign. Ceci boasted that only three people declined to sign the brief, but there are more than three people who had published relevant studies challenging Ceci and Bruck's view whose names do not appear on the brief. The state filed a rare motion opposing the filing of this amicus brief, arguing in part that the excerpts from the child interviews:

> fail to adequately inform the Court of the contexts in which certain questions were asked, and most importantly, fail to inform the Court whether it was the interviewer or the child victim who initiated a discussion of certain allegations.[263]

Courts routinely permit the filing of such amicus briefs, and the New Jersey Supreme Court granted permission for this one to be filed. When prosecutors realized that Goodman, a leading academic in the field, did not sign the brief, they asked the court to reconsider its decision because there was a much larger disagreement in the field than was represented in the brief. The significance of Goodman's work is evident in the fact that her publications accounted for more citations in the reference section of the eventual brief than any other scholar, including Ceci and Bruck. The court, which one would not expect to get involved in an academic dispute, declined the request.

What became known as the Concerned Scientists brief summarized studies that supported Ceci and Bruck's view about the suggestibility of young children, and it weighed in on requiring taint hearings—a mechanism for keeping children's testimony away from the jury in certain cases. The brief described recent experiments, mostly conducted by Ceci and Bruck, about "the conditions under which preschool children are most suggestible."[264] The brief also contained various excerpts from the investigative interviews in the Michaels case and a four-page appendix with information about the interviews and the emergence of allegations made by all twenty children at trial. (The appendix is riddled with errors and misleading statements.[265]) The brief argued that the interviews in the Michaels case were "so faulty that they may have substantially increased the risk that the children's subsequent reports were mere reflections of interviewers' suggestions."[266] It is unclear whether the brief influenced the court, although that has certainly been a central claim in the witch-hunt narrative. But, as law and psychology professor Tom Lyon has pointed out, the New Jersey Supreme Court cited Goodman's work more than it cited Ceci and Bruck's.[267] Its effect on the judiciary remains unclear, but there is no question that the Concerned Scientists brief became highly influential in the field of psychology.

The New Jersey Supreme Court Decides

The New Jersey Supreme Court heard the case on January 31, 1994. Michaels changed lawyers on the eve of the oral argument, discharging Robert Rosenthal and hiring Alan Zegas, who was well known from the Glen Ridge sexual assault case. "The celebrated Margaret Kelly Michaels child sex-abuse case" is how the New Jersey Law Journal described it at the time.[268] Four months later, a unanimous court sustained the appellate court's decision.

The immediate significance of the New Jersey Supreme Court opinion was that Michaels could be retried only if the state first conducted a taint hearing to assess whether pre-trial interviews were so suggestive as to render the children's testimony inadmissible.[269] The Essex County prosecutors could still proceed against Kelly Michaels—but they would have to have a hearing to determine child by child whether any had been unduly tainted by the interview process. The prosecutors assessed how many of the children in the case were likely to sustain such a hearing. In their view, a solid case could be built around the original grand jury counts, which came well before any of the contested actions in the child-suggestibility defense, and the counts pertaining to David Applegate, the child who was never interviewed by DYFS. In July 1993, months after the original appellate decision overturning the convictions, Essex County Prosecutor Clifford Minor released a statement, after he consulted the families involved in the matter, explaining that the case would be retried.[270] A year and a half later, after the State Supreme Court had upheld the decision of the Appellate Division, the state decided to drop the charges. Minor said that deciding whether or not to try the case at this point "was the most difficult decision he has faced since taking office." John S. Redden, first deputy assistant prosecutor, elaborated:

> While the issue is not one which is free from doubt, and while strong arguments can be made on either side of the issues, the state has decided after careful consideration and reflection that this case, which is nearly 10 years old, should be brought to a conclusion at this time.[271]

Charges against Kelly Michaels were dropped the first week of December 1995. With that, the criminal case was over and New Jersey had become the most prominent state to establish a precedent for so-called taint hearings. Michaels, freed from the possibility of retrial, then filed multiple claims for wrongful prosecution. Some were later dismissed on legal grounds; others were quietly dropped after the state withdrew its demand that Michaels pay the state's attorneys fees for what the state considered a meritless claim. But the victory in the criminal case meant much more than releasing Michaels from jail; it solidified the witch-hunt narrative with the stamp of academic approval.

Conclusion

The Kelly Michaels case represents a turning point in the contemporary history of child sexual abuse in the United States. It was the first well-known case in which a hard-fought conviction was later overturned on appeal. The witch-hunt narrative that has been built around the case claims that the reversal represents a return to reason, a collective coming back to our senses after an era marked by a "believe the children" attitude that accepted sexual abuse allegations without an appropriate degree of skepticism. The result has been portrayed as a triumph of justice, leaving no room for the possibility that any of the children in the case had actually been sexually abused.

This chapter has argued that the conventional wisdom is wrong; it is built on misrepresentations about the earliest children in the case and about the investigative interviews that followed. Moreover, it is built on complete denial of the well-documented history of extreme behavioral symptoms and pediatric visits during 1984–85. It is also built on gross overgeneralizations from a few children and, worse, on "excerpts" of interviews that have been edited so as to alter their meaning.

Why was this revisionist history possible? Several factors help supply an answer. First, the case was not handled in an ideal fashion. That would have been practically impossible, of course, since multi-victim cases with young children were new and prosecutors were learning how to handle them. Nevertheless, the Essex County Prosecutor's Office did a good job of investigating and presenting the original charges to a grand jury. But when DYFS began its own investigation, there were enormous consequences for the criminal case that were not fully understood at the time. Without a plan for coordinating the investigation, some children were interviewed twice simply because the original DYFS interviews were conducted without anyone from the prosecutor's office being present. This opened the door to erroneous portrayals of these disclosures as coming after "repetitive" interviews. Key children in early June who made statements to Lou Fonolleras and, days later, to an investigator from the prosecutor's office have been inaccurately portrayed as disclosing after multiple interviews.

Second, the case was enormous in scope. Given that there were more than eighty investigative interviews, all it took was a small number of inappropriate interviews to provide enough fodder for a snippet-based argument that such evidence was "typical" or "characteristic" of the entire case. Those possibilities would expand significantly if, as happened on appeal, such arguments relied largely on children who were never in the case. This was made possible, of course, by the worst interviews conducted by Fonolleras, late in the investigation. Had the entire case been based only on the earliest children interviewed, it might well have resulted in a conviction upheld on appeal, on the basis of the cross-corroborating evidence of three or four "untainted" boys. Instead, those children have practically been forgotten; ironically, the legacy of the case is now based largely on the most suspect children, only some of whom were actually in the case.

Those factors alone, however, do not explain the rise of the witch-hunt narrative. After all, even with a flawed case, the prosecution prevailed with the jury. The most important factors in assessing the rise of the witch-hunt narrative were external to the case. Changes in public opinion and changes in the world of academic psychology were both critical. The role of the media in promoting the narrative cannot be overestimated. Neither can the role of the McMartin case, which left the public wondering how such a large case could result in no convictions, and left academic psychologists wondering how their own profession had apparently become complicit in promoting a "believe the children" attitude that was unduly credulous. The significance of the McMartin case is clear in the reactions to the Nathan and Rabinowitz articles about Kelly Michaels. In the environment that prevailed before the McMartin case ended, Nathan's argument did not capture the public imagination, but in the immediate aftermath of the McMartin case the Rabinowitz article did. Both authors, and others, quickly drew direct analogies between the cases. Michaels, we were told, was "another McMartin." The common belief was that there was no evidence in the McMartin case, and so, by analogy, there must not have been any in the Michaels case either. It was a kind of innocence-by-association argument that proved to be extraordinarily persuasive, regardless of the actual facts.

The role of academic psychologists was also crucial. They ultimately provided "scientific proof" that convinced many people of children being so suggestible that virtually every allegation in the Michaels case could be chalked up to "child suggestibility." The defense in the Michaels case had to rely on Ralph Underwager—the discredited psychologist—to make this argument at trial. But Underwager had not actually conducted a single study on child suggestibility. By the time the Michaels case reached the New Jersey Appellate Division, there were television and newspaper reports of a new line of research "proving" that children are highly suggestible.[272] The research even made specific references to the Kelly Michaels case. But those references were based on gross exaggerations of the nature of the interviews in Michaels.

Finally, the witch-hunt narrative was almost literally made for TV. Kelly Michaels won her appeal in the media, and then she won in court. Why the media would so willingly endorse a one-sided view of the case can best be understood in connection with the McMartin case. David Shaw of the Los Angeles Times won a Pulitzer Prize for criticizing his own newspaper for credulous acceptance of the initial claims in the McMartin case. The witch-hunt narrative had become an award-winning story. Ceci and Bruck did something similar in the field of psychology: they received awards for arguing that their own field had gotten it wrong about child suggestibility. But like Shaw, they did so by going overboard in the opposite direction. Shaw was alert to coverage that did not challenge the prosecution, but he relied on a perspective that never challenged the defense. Ceci and Bruck's view was that Gail Goodman and others were too quick to accept the testimony of children. Their solution was to brand all of the children in the Michaels case as unreliable, without a careful or fair accounting of the underlying facts.

Everyone agrees that the Kelly Michaels case was a turning point. But the claim that it was a movement toward rationality and common sense is contradicted by the facts of the case. The witch-hunt narrative demonstrates the rise of what I call "disconfirmation bias," an approach to these cases that ignores evidence of guilt and exaggerates anything that might be construed as evidence of innocence. The approach brings biases that are precisely opposite of those brought to the McMartin case by Believe the Children. Instead of a rush to convict despite the lack of evidence, there was now apparently a rush to acquit despite evidence of guilt.

6

Going to Extremes

State v. Fuster

The Kelly Michaels case marked the triumph of the witch-hunt narrative in the media and then among academic psychologists. The concern of psychology professor Gail Goodman and others who declined to sign the famous amicus brief in the Michaels case was that it represented a position that unduly discredited children as witnesses. The argument had almost no traction in the context of the Michaels case, however, because the witch-hunt narrative had prevailed so powerfully in the media that it was inconceivable to anyone familiar with various prominent stories about the case that there actually could be substantial evidence of guilt. The "new wave" of research about child suggestibility, as psychology and law professor Tom Lyon dubbed it a few years later, was focused entirely on the possibility of wrongful allegations; it did not acknowledge, let alone consider, how often children do not disclose real abuse when asked.[1]

Were the arguments made on Michaels's behalf so malleable they could be offered in defense of almost any defendant, no matter how powerful the evidence of guilt? Did the "new wave" of research on child suggestibility mean a broader and unjustified attack on the credibility of children would follow? An initial answer was revealed when the same arguments that had been made on behalf of Kelly Michaels were made on behalf of Frank Fuster.

Fuster was the lead defendant in the Country Walk case, which began in Dade County, Florida, in the summer of 1984. See Figure 6.1 for a timeline. The Country Walk case later appeared on Charlier and Downing's famous list of thirty-six cases because it had several "fantastic" features, particularly allegations that involved feces, masks, and killing a bird to scare the children. Debbie Nathan mentioned the case even earlier, so it is fair to say that it was part of the witch-hunt narrative since shortly after Fuster was convicted in 1985. But Ceci and Bruck presented the Country Walk and Kelly Michaels cases as a contrast in their famous review of the literature in 1993. Under this view, the Country Walk case demonstrated clear limits to the suggestibility arguments. Even if the interviews with the children could be criticized in various ways, it was clear that those arguments should not be taken too far. At least this is what Ceci and Bruck said in 1993.

Figure 6.1 Comprehensive Case Timelines, Initial Complaint to Jury Verdict.

Their position changed between the publication of that article and the publication of Jeopardy in the Courtroom two years later. In the book, the Country Walk case is presented as another Kelly Michaels case. Indeed, Maggie Bruck filed an affidavit on behalf of Fuster in 1999, arguing that the results of her laboratory research with Ceci supported the conclusion that the children's statements in the Country Walk case were unreliable. Nathan and others took an even stronger view, painting the Country Walk case as an outrageous miscarriage of justice.

This chapter argues that the Country Walk case demonstrates quite the opposite. There was overwhelming evidence of guilt against Frank Fuster. The case originated in a spontaneous disclosure, and it was built on detailed statements made by children who were not subjected to repetitive interviews. Fuster's seven-year-old son tested positive for gonorrhea of the throat, and Fuster had a prior record that included a recent conviction for lewd and lascivious sexual assault on a nine-year-old girl. This evidence and much more is detailed in the first part of this chapter. It takes a significant distortion of the evidence to suggest this case was anything but a solid conviction.

One of Ceci and Bruck's primary concerns about the kinds of cases discussed in this book is "confirmation bias," the tendency of investigators and interviewers to seek and recognize only things that confirm their existing inclination toward finding abuse. How the Country Walk case has been portrayed in the witch-hunt narrative demonstrates the opposite problem: disconfirmation bias. Those who claim this case was a false conviction have looked only for evidence that might support that claim, and they have distorted or overlooked the vast evidence to the contrary. This chapter demonstrates the problem; the final chapter in this book considers the larger implications of this kind of bias on the problem of child sexual abuse.

Part One: The Original Case (1984–85)

Origins of the Country Walk Babysitting Service

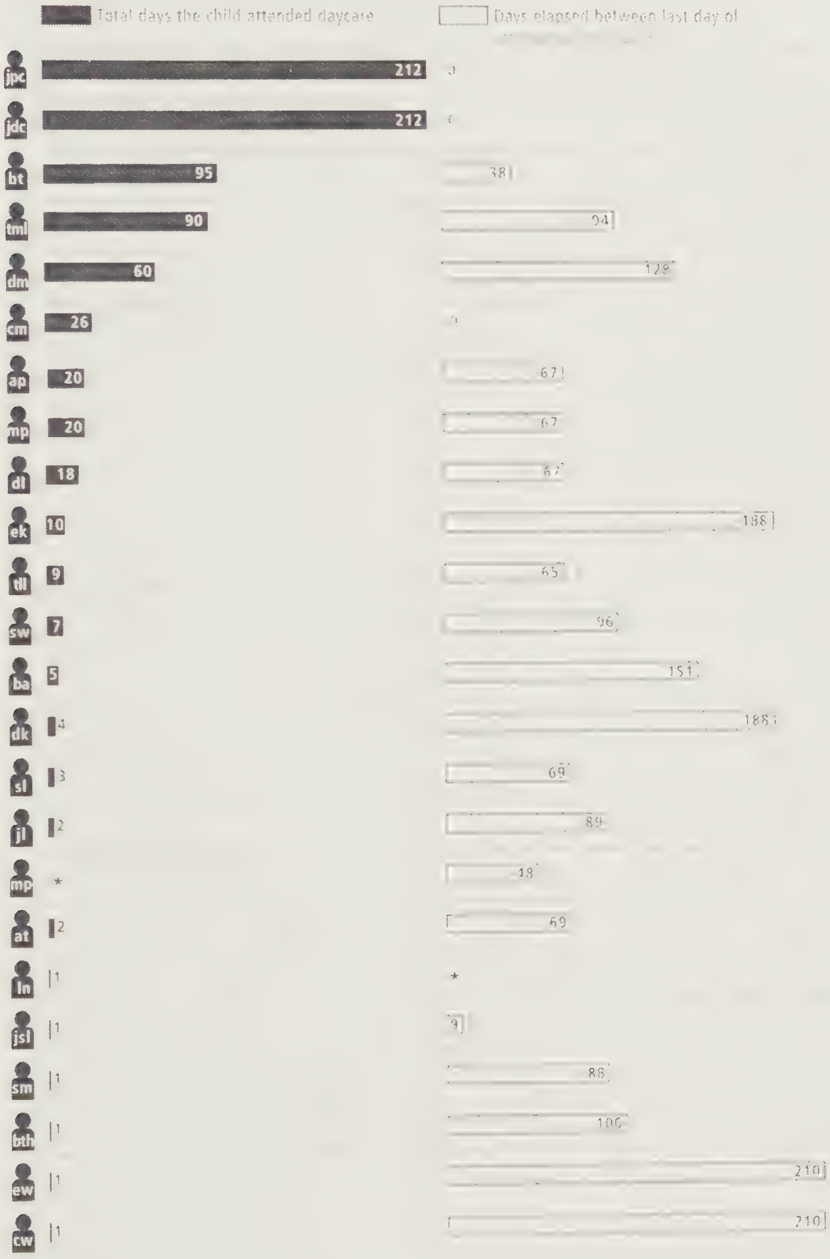
The Country Walk housing development was built in Dade County, Florida, during the late 1970s by the Arvida Corporation in association with the Disney Corporation. The development had upscale suburban homes with large yards and picket fences. The logo for the development was a Tom Sawyerish boy, flopped back in a straw hat with a fishing pole. The development was designed to evoke a kind of country ideal.

Frank Fuster bought a house in the development with his second wife, Martha. They had been married since 1976 and had a son, Noel, who was born in October 1977. Frank and Martha were divorced in 1982, after he was convicted of a sex crime against a child, but the three of them continued to live in the same house. In the summer of 1983, while Martha was in New York City visiting family, Frank met Ileana Flores. Frank and Ileana were married several weeks later at the Country Center, the recreational center at County Walk. Frank was thirty-four, Ileana was sixteen. Martha moved out of the house and Frank retained custody of Noel, then six years old.

Frank Fuster had a small home-remodeling business in the early 1980s called Kendall Decorators. He closed this business and started another one, called Mobile Showroom, in 1983. He operated the business out of a warehouse space where he also had an office. In 1984, however, he gave up the warehouse office and converted a playroom in their house into an office. The business barely brought in any income, according to documents that became part of the later legal proceedings; it was unclear how the Fusters could afford to live in Country Walk in 1983–84. In fact, Frank Fuster said in a civil deposition that he had serious financial problems and was "always trying to borrow money."[2] This undoubtedly helps explain why Ileana Fuster started a babysitting service in December 1983. The Fusters took out advertisements in the Country Times, a newsletter for the development. And even though commercial businesses were not officially allowed in the development, the director of the Country Walk Center, Joanne Menoher, gave the Fusters' name out to interested parents. Frank had business cards printed up that said "Country Walk Babysitting Service: We don't say we're the best, but people do talk."

The children who attended the babysitting service between December 1983 and August 1984 ranged significantly in age and duration of attendance. Some attended only in the winter or spring. Others were still attending at the Fusters right up to August 8, the last day that any children were there for babysitting. The frequency of attendance at the Fusters varied significantly, with a handful of children attending daily (that is, five days a week) for at least ten weeks. Others went only occasionally. A striking number of children, it was established after the Fusters were arrested, had attended once or twice and never returned (see Figure 6.2). The ages ranged from infants to five years old. Many were preverbal. There were also a few older children at the Fuster house on occasion. The Fusters' son, Noel, was generally home. A neighborhood friend of his, Ned Unger, a nine-year-old, spent time at the Fuster house in the spring of 1984.

Figure 6.2 Overall Attendance Patterns at Country Walk Babysitting Service.



* [illegible]

Four or five months after the babysitting service began, young Donald Menninger made a spontaneous statement that shook his mother. The boy had been attending the Fusters regularly for two months. After spending the day at their house, he casually asked his mother to "kiss my body." His mother, whose family used the term body to refer to genitals, asked her son why he would ask such a thing. "Ileana kisses my body," he replied. "Ileana kisses all the babies' bodies." Menninger, who later said she tried hard to maintain her composure, inquired whether Ileana did this to Tom Leventhal, the son of a good friend of hers. Donald said she did. Menninger later testified that Donald awkwardly denied his disclosure hours later. Nevertheless, she pulled her son from the babysitting service immediately and told her friend Betsy Leventhal about the matter, swearing her to secrecy.[3] The information bothered Leventhal so much that she later called the child protective service agency to make an anonymous complaint. An inspector made a cursory visit while Frank Fuster was not home, and the unlicensed babysitting service remained in business.[4] Meanwhile, the operators of the Country Walk development suddenly became quite uncomfortable with the babysitting service. Two letters were sent to the Fusters in July from the managers of the development, informing them that the business was not permitted and must be closed. But it remained open.

At the end of July, a mother whose child had just spent his first day at the Fusters became extremely concerned that something bad had happened to her son there. On July 31, after Emma St. Lorenzo picked up her eighteen-month-old son, John, from the Fusters' she noted to a friend that her son "looked funny."[5] The presence of a rash around John's anus, which she later noticed, raised more concern. At home, St. Lorenzo observed her son hitting himself on the head repeatedly with a wooden block. She had never seen him behave like this. She examined him more closely and concluded that his eyes looked "very glazed."[6] After taking the wooden block away and moving him to another room, she observed the boy banging his head into a sliding glass door. At this point she "became convinced . . . he had been drugged."[7] She contacted her husband and their son's pediatrician, who told her that too much time had passed to make a blood test reliable. Though this may have been true, it seems more likely that the pediatrician's goal was to calm down a seemingly overprotective mother.

St. Lorenzo started asking around about the Fusters. It did not take long before she spoke to Joanne Menoher at the Country Center and learned of a rumor that children had been sexually molested at the Fusters. St. Lorenzo proceeded to call a friend who worked in television news and who had a contact at the state attorney's office.[8] That woman, Jan Hollingsworth, later wrote a book about the case. The police investigation into the Country Walk Babysitting Service began several days later.

The Early Investigation (August 3–8)

On Friday, August 3, 1984, Detective Donna Meznarich was assigned to investigate the possible sexual assault of young children at the Fuster home. Meznarich was an eleven-year veteran of the Miami Dade Police Department; her last seven years had been in the Sexual Battery Unit. But this case would pose investigative challenges she had not previously faced. The children who attended the Fusters' babysitting service were as young as three and a half months. The oldest children using the babysitting service were four or five; most were younger. The police department was not used to interviewing children this young, even in this unit; seven was about the youngest that they tended to see. Older children were much more common, even for child molestation charges. Further complicating the investigation, the children who attended the Fusters' babysitting service ranged widely in attendance patterns. From reports from parents, it was thought that the Fusters had between four and six children in their house on an "average" day; about half would be infants, the other half toddlers. Whether the authorities could even locate all of the children who attended the Fusters was unclear. And whether the children would talk to someone not trained to think about the developmental capabilities of young children was also unknown.

Before leaving the office that day, Detective Meznarich spoke with Allison and Victor Lucas, both of whom were police officers. Their daughter Tammy, who was four years old, had attended the Fusters' nine times in May. The Lucases informed Meznarich that their daughter had an inflamed vaginal itch after going there, but they did not attribute it to the Fusters at the time. While attending the babysitting service, their daughter had also said something about a "big boy" who had a mask and scared her. She even said that she had slept in "big boy's" room. At the time, the Lucases thought those comments referred to Noel. They later learned that Frank Fuster was the "big boy."[9]

The first interview outside the office, later that day, was with Menoher, the recreational coordinator for the Country Center. Detective Meznarich was told about Donald Menninger startling his mother in late April by asking her to kiss his penis one day after attending the Fusters'. Joanne Menoher had heard this story from Betsy Leventhal. Menoher testified that she "told me, as she said, in confidence, that she wanted to get something off her chest."[10] After hearing the story, Menoher made an anonymous report to HRS.[11] Menoher supplied Meznarich with the names of numerous families who had used the babysitting service. She also told the detective that Allison Lucas had said that "the children had secret games that parents don't know about."[12]

In the coming days, the detective visited the homes of several families whose children had attended the Fusters' for a considerable period of time. The Liptons had sent two children to the Fusters; their two-year-old son, Daniel, had attended regularly for months and their four-year-old daughter, Jessie, had attended twice in May. The girl said there had not been any "bad touch" when she was there, and the boy proved nearly impossible to interview. As indicated in the police report:

> Due to his age and the fact that he has a speech impediment, his mother was present. This investigator attempted to ask Daniel Lipton questions; however, he ran around the room ignoring them.[13]

His mother conveyed that the boy was saying "Frank" hurt his "pee-pee" and "toosh," but it is clear the detective could not understand the boy on her own.

She then tried to interview Becky Taylor, a four-year-old girl who attended the Fusters' almost daily for five months. Her name had already come up in several conversations, but she also proved nearly impossible to interview. Meznarich noted: "This investigator attempted to interview Becky Taylor; however, she first hid behind the sofa, then behind her mother."[14] Before the interview was over, Allison Lucas, a friend and neighbor of the Taylors, arrived with her daughter Tammy. Tammy indicated that the Fusters had scared her with a white mask. Becky piped up that it was a green mask. Though Tammy did not disclose anything else, Becky said something about kissing Frank and Ileana Fuster on the lips. What Meznarich had begun to piece together was suspicious but elusive. It was also somewhat bizarre, given the statements about being scared with masks.

Three of the children whom Meznarich had identified and tried to interview were referred to the Rape Treatment Center at Jackson Memorial Hospital. They were seen by Dominique McGinnis, a psychiatric nurse, on August 8. Daniel Lipton, the two-year-old with the speech impediment, was again "interpreted" through his mother. He apparently said that Frank "hit" his "pee pee" and that Ileana had hurt his "toosh."[15] Tammy Lucas, who had earlier disavowed that she experienced anything abusive at the Fusters', also made several incriminating statements. She indicated that "two people at school" had seen her private parts: "Frank and Ileana." According to the nurse's report, the girl also indicated that Frank Fuster had touched her on the "boob" and "climbed" on top of her and kissed her:

> Tammy laid the doll she identified as herself down and placed the large male doll she indicated was Frank on top of her and rubbed the boy doll's penis on the girl doll's vaginal area.[16]

Becky Taylor was also seen that day. Given her age and attendance pattern, she was the child most likely to be able to explain what happened at the Fusters'. But she was extremely avoidant with the detective. The Taylors then brought their daughter to the Sexual Battery Office of the State Attorney's Office, but the girl still had nothing to say. Meznarich described her as "very withdrawn." The interview ended after approximately five minutes. This was not the only failed interview of the day; Meznarich and Assistant State Attorney Christopher Rundle also tried to interview three-year-old Tom Leventhal, the child implicated by Donald Menninger's statements to his mother. The police report indicates simply that the detective "attempted to interview [the boy] but was unable to do so because of his age."[17]

Although there had not yet been any mention of the investigation in the media, word of the investigation was spreading around Country Walk. Fanning the flames of outrage was the discovery that Frank Fuster was on probation for a 1982 conviction for child molestation. Passions were running high among those who had heard about the prior case. A neighbor of the Fusters was arrested outside his house brandishing a gun. Meznarich learned of this unfortunate development while traveling to interview the Cramer family and their two boys. The Cramers did not know the Mennigners or the Leventhals, so they were unaware of the rumors that had been floating around since May. They also did not know about the behind-the-scenes effort by the Arvida Corporation to close the Fusters' illegal babysitting business. They had not even heard about the police investigation in early August. To the contrary, the Cramer children had been at the Fusters' on August 8, the last day the babysitting service was in operation. Sandra Cramer informed the detective that Frank Fuster had told her a day earlier he was discontinuing the babysitting service but that they would continue to babysit her boys anyway.[18]

Meznarich talked with Jason Cramer in his bedroom for fifteen to twenty minutes that night. It was the most substantive statement she had received from any child to date. He was one of the oldest children interviewed and had been there the most recently, literally attending the Fusters' earlier that day. As the detective later reported, Jason disclosed that Ileana had sucked his little brother's penis. He indicated further that she had done the same thing to Donald Menninger and Tom Leventhal. The boy also said that Frank Fuster had taken pictures of children naked.[19] The Cramers were asked to bring their child to the State Attorney's Office the next day for a more formal interview. One might think that the boy's statement would be enough to justify a search warrant. But two days passed before the house was searched. Meanwhile, Meznarich went to the Fuster residence to question the key suspects. The detective did not have a search warrant, so the visit effectively provided the Fusters with an advance warning. Frank denied any wrongdoing and told the detective that "He was never home when the children were there."[20] The detective had already talked to numerous adults and children who said otherwise.

The state attorney for Dade County was Janet Reno, who was appointed U.S. attorney general in 1993. Reno learned in the summer of 1984—primarily from her experience with the inability to prosecute anyone in connection with the Lehrman Day School case[21]—that her office, like most in the country, was ill equipped to handle complaints involving the sexual abuse of young children. Soon thereafter, Reno asked Joseph and Laurie Braga to assist the State Attorney's Office, on an unpaid basis, in interviewing children. The Bragas were adjunct professors at the University of Miami School of Medicine, with training and experience in child development; they had authored a series of books on child development in the 1970s. Jan Hollingsworth later described them as experts in "speaking children." Their philosophy was simple: put the child at ease, assess the developmental level, and engage the child on his or her own level.

The Bragas insisted that all of their interactions with children be videotaped. The primary reason was to reduce the total number of interviews for any given child. They also did not want to leave room for a claim that the children had been coached by the interviewers (an argument that quickly became common in child sexual abuse cases). The idea of videotaping investigative interviews was a first for the office. Hollingsworth later reported that Assistant State Attorney Rundle considered the idea "risky business." He was worried that "any perceived inconsistencies in a child's testimony" could be used against them at trial.[22] This concern seems prescient given the evolution of the witch-hunt narrative, analyzed in the second half of this chapter .

The Initial Braga Interviews (August 9 and 10)

The Bragas interviewed five children on August 9. They had no advance information about the case other than that children had attended the Fusters' for babysitting and may have experienced some form of maltreatment. The children who came to the state attorney's office that day had emerged from Meznarich's investigation. There was a reason for each of these children to be considered worth interviewing formally; what unfolded that first day was enough to sustain the filing of charges against Frank and Ileana Fuster for sexual battery against more than one child. Those charges would take at least two weeks to be considered and crafted. But the first day remains the most important one in the case. It is also the day that would later be overlooked entirely in the witch-hunt narrative about the case.

Four of the five of the children interviewed the first day made statements concerning sexual activities in the Fuster household. The oldest child (Jason Cramer) was by far the most detailed and articulate. The next oldest (Tammy Lucas) also made numerous statements of a sexualized nature. The three youngest children (Joshua Cramer, Tom Leventhal, and Daniel Lipton) were more limited in speaking skills, but at least two of them made statements that appeared to support charges against Frank and/or Ileana Fuster.

Jason Cramer

The first child interviewed by the Bragas was Jason Cramer, an articulate five-year-old. He made detailed and incriminating statements in the first session. Hollingsworth, who later wrote the book Unspeakable Acts, described the interview in enough detail to fill thirteen pages.[23] When asked to "show me" what happened at Frank and Ileana's, Jason described something involving his brother: "Iliana's changing his diaper and, uh, playing with his, uh, penis."[24] Unfortunately, this interview was not transcribed into the court record when the tape was played at trial. There were audio difficulties that inhibited the stenographer. Those difficulties have been cited in recent years as a reason the interview cannot be reviewed. But the difficulties were specific to the court reporter, not the videotape. Otherwise it would not have been possible for Hollingsworth to describe this interview in such detail.[25]

Jason Cramer was interviewed again later that day, after the Bragas had interviewed his younger brother, Joshua. The second interview with Jason is arguably the single most important investigative interview in the case. The boy made a remarkably detailed statement about himself and others. This was the primary interview highlighted in the local media when videotapes were made available more than three months later. "The videotapes show low-key conversations between children and Drs. Laurie and Joseph Braga," reported the Miami Herald, describing Jason's second session on August 9 as follows:

> The oldest child depicted in the tapes, a pudgy redheaded boy whose name was not released, used anatomically correct dolls in telling the doctors that the Fusters induced the children to play nude games. Those games allegedly led to various sexual assaults on children as young as two years old.
>
> "They were playing ring-around-the-rosy," the child said in the taped interview with the Bragas. "They would dress up naked, all the girls and boys. Frank and Ileana would take their clothes off."
>
> Asked what happened during the game, the child said, "Touch each other." He used the dolls to illustrate the alleged digital penetration of a younger boy's anus. "Frank would stick his finger inside (name deleted) . . . Frank kissed (name deleted) penis."
>
> The boy describes the Fusters engaging in sexual intercourse and other sexual acts with each other in front of the children. He also talks of them sexually assaulting some of the children.[26]

The interview also included disclosures about games involving feces and urine. These statements came after Joseph Braga (JB below; Laurie Braga is LB) asked if Frank Fuster ever just babysat the children or watched movies. This was Jason's reply (JC below), and the questions and answers that followed:

> JC: No he would always play games and stuff. He always played games like pee pee games and ka ka games and butt games. That's what they—
> JB: What is the ka ka game?
> JC: It's a game where they throw poop at each other. Yes.
> JB: You are kidding me?
> JC: No
> JB: What?
> LB: Can you tell us more about that?
> JC: They first went to the bathroom and then they started—they took it out of the toilet with some toilet paper and threw it at each other.
> JB: Who would do that?
> JC: Noel.

The boy's disturbing statements came in response to a simple question of whether Frank Fuster ever babysat the children. And the interviewers did not automatically believe this statement; rather, they sought to assess the statement through the follow-up question, "You are kidding me?" The boy's statements about these grotesque "games" would later be written off as "fantasy" by Dr. Lee Coleman, the defense psychiatrist at trial. But, as documented in the pages to come, these statements were ultimately substantiated in several ways.

The Three Youngest Children

The three youngest children interviewed that day were all too young to testify in court. Joshua Cramer, Jason's one-and-a-half-year-old brother, was interviewed for twenty minutes. He appears to indicate that Ileana took off his clothes and did something with her mouth.[27] The content of his interview is designated as "possible" in Figure 6.5, and he was not interviewed again and played no further role in the case. Tom Leventhal, who had been identified by Donald Menninger months earlier as a victim of Ileana's "body kissing," was three years old, and he provided many one-word responses in his forty-five-minute interview. Tom appears to have conveyed that Frank Fuster touched his penis and had Tom sit on his lap while Frank had no clothes on.[28] Daniel Lipton, the other child interviewed that day, was only two years old and had a speech impediment. Many of Daniel's responses involved taking off clothing. "Take her clothes off," he says at one point after Joseph Braga said: "Show me, Daniel. I want to know. You tell me." There are many references to "pee-pee," enough to infer that there was some kind of pee-pee game. Daniel also clearly said at one point that Becky "took clothes off."[29] But the most seemingly significant statements in this interview were fragmentary. It was clear that this child was never going to play an important role in the case; he was simply too young and too difficult to understand.

Tammy Lucas

The final interview on August 9 was with Tammy Lucas, the daughter of the Miami-Dade police officers. Tammy's fourth birthday was the next day. She had gone to the Fusters' for nine days in May. The interview began with a discussion of Dr. Seuss books and then moved to Peanuts characters and Disney. When the conversation turned to Frank Fuster, Tammy acknowledged knowing him and said "I don't want to go there today." When asked who else went to the same place, Tammy responded with the names Becky and Daniel; but she did not remember Jason or Joshua.

When asked to show "what Iliana would do to Daniel" the girl said "Hit him." Then she added, "Iliana takes her clothes off." It is important to note that there had been no question that contained any kind of reference to nudity or taking off clothing prior to this utterance by the young girl. A few pages later, the girl made a similar statement about Frank Fuster:

> LB: So, show me what they would do to Tammy?
> TL: Something, they did—
> LB: Like that?
> TL: Tickle me.
> LB: Tickle you like that?
> TL: And Frank takes his clothes off.

Soon thereafter, when one of the dolls has been designated as Daniel—one of the children she remembered from the Fusters—Laurie Braga asked simply "Tell me some more, okay?" Tammy's reply: "I will have to take his off, Daniel's clothes off."[30] The girl then got distracted when she has difficulty removing the doll's clothing.

Eventually, once Tammy had acknowledged that the Frank doll should have chest hair (but not a mustache), Laurie Braga asked another open-ended question: "Okay, now show me, would Frank do something to Tammy?" Here is what follows in the transcript:

> [1] TL: (Nodding in the affirmative.)
> [2] LB: Okay, would you show me?
> [3] TL: Oh oh (indicating).

[4] LB: The bird is biting his hand, huh the bird is mad at his hand?
[5] TL: (Indicating.)
[6] LB: Bad hand. What did that hand do? Can you show me?
[7] TL: Wait a second. (Inaudible.)
[8] LB: Yes?
[9] TL: Yuck.
[10] LB: Show me what the hand would do, okay?
[11] TL: Okay.
[12] LB: So you put—would he put his fingers inside?
[13] TL: (Indicating) [Inside of here, Frank did.]

There are three "indicating" notations in this brief and important exchange. A review of the videotape reveals there should be a fourth one, after the "Okay" in line 11. Suffice it to say, the visual content of this videotape is of critical importance. There are pixilated versions of some parts of this interview in circulation because this was one of the portions that the media chose to broadcast when they eventually gained access through a court-mediated agreement. Even without seeing what Tammy was "indicating," it is clear that her memory of the Fuster household was focused on the nudity of children and adults. There is a further deficiency in the official transcription. On line 13 above, where the transcript reads "indicating," the videotape captures the words "Inside of here, Frank did." The girl was interviewed two more times. The second of those interviews was the last investigative interview in the case, conducted on January 28, 1985.[31]

While the initial interviews were being conducted, legal papers were being drawn up to hold Frank Fuster for violating the terms of his probation. He was on probation for a lewd and lascivious assault against a nine-year-old girl in 1981. He had been found guilty by jury in 1982 and was given a suspended sentence. Running a babysitting service out of his home was a serious violation of his probation. So was the fact that he had stopped attending his weekly court-mandated therapy. A prosecutor from the State Attorney's Office telephoned Jeffrey Samek, who was handling Fuster's appeal from the 1982 case, and it was agreed that Fuster would surrender to authorities at 10:00 a.m. on Friday, August 10. With Fuster in custody, Judge Newman had to decide what, if anything, to do with his son, Noel.

Becky Taylor

Shortly after noon on Friday, the Taylors brought their daughter Becky to the State Attorney's Office to be interviewed by the Bragas. Becky was four and a half years old and had gone to the Fusters' five or six days a week from February through June. She even had gone to the beach with the Fusters once. Given her age and her regular attendance, she was one of the most likely children, besides

Jason Cramer, to have relevant information. But she was also the most avoidant child encountered in the investigation. When Meznarich tried to interview her two days earlier, she made no progress. As indicated in the police report: "She hid behind the sofa, then behind her mother." "Refused to sit down." "Ran to the kitchen."[32]

She was interviewed by the Bragas on Friday, August 10, shortly after Frank Fuster surrendered into custody. The interview covers eighty-eight pages of the trial transcript. It is agonizing to read. Becky was avoidant, distracted, and anxious to change the subject. "I hate the question," she says at one point. "Mommy, I am tired of doing this," she adds soon thereafter. Later she says, "I have a hard time talking."[33]

There are isolated moments when a response seems to indicate something untoward. At one point, she talks about Frank and Ileana kissing each other while naked, but when asked on the next page to confirm whether their clothes were on or off, the child says on.[34] She reiterates earlier statements about masks (a white one, and a green one). There are also some frustrating lapses in the stenographic record.[35] Finally, there are statements that clearly suggest the child is holding back; "I don't want you to know" she said at one point, in response to a question about the secret games.[36] And the interview finally ended with the Bragas knowing little more from this child than that she was anxious and not interested in talking about the Fusters.

After this interview concluded, the Bragas interviewed Jason Cramer again with the specific purpose of asking questions that might help support a search warrant. The interview lasted ten minutes. Jason indicated that the children had been videotaped by Frank Fuster. Where do they keep the tapes? he was asked. "They hide them in books . . . under the couch," he replied.[37] Also noteworthy in this brief interview is Jason's palpable concern about what would happen to Noel. He seemed particularly worried about Noel getting in trouble for the things that happened at the Fusters'.

Meznarich then joined two state prosecutors and the Bragas to view the videotapes of Jason's interviews on August 9 and 10. The prosecutors concluded that Jason's statements provided probable cause to issue a search warrant for photographs, films, or videotapes. A warrant was prepared to be brought before a judge; it was signed by Judge David M. Gersten at 6:00 p.m. on Friday. The Fusters' house was searched soon thereafter, but the police did not find any evidence of child pornography. This is not surprising since Frank had been given two days of advance notice.

The police took fifty-eight pictures in and around the house, and they seized assorted personal property. Though there was no evidence of child pornography, there were several telling pieces of evidence. First, there were various masks in the house that corroborated the seemingly bizarre statements made about monsters and masks. There was also a crucifix between the mattresses of the Fuster's bed, and some deeply disturbing "family photos." The significance of the crucifix would only be revealed almost a year later, after Ileana pleaded guilty and started talking to prosecutors. The "family photos" contain images that lend support to the idea that Frank might engage in "ca-ca" games. The most unsettling picture recovered was of Noel Fuster perched above a toilet seat, looking scared and confused, in a room with feces smeared on the floor.[38]

The Remaining August Interviews

The first full week of the investigation through the State Attorney's Office was by far the most active interviewing in any week of the entire investigation. There were fourteen videotaped sessions in five days. Eight of the children were being interviewed by the Bragas for the first time. One of those was Noel Fuster, Frank's son. He was seen three times that week by the Bragas, but not as part of the police investigation. Judge Ferguson asked the Bragas to provide an evaluation of where Noel should live. These sessions contained little in the way of incriminating statements beyond a matter-of-fact answer that Frank hit Noel "some days." The boy also said some unlikely things, such as blurting out: "I know how to handle myself. I know how to defend myself." He expressed concern about his father, who he had visited in jail that weekend. He also said things about how he "could save my dad." The Bragas recommended to Judge Ferguson that Noel live with his mother.

The day after the Bragas completed their evaluation, Noel's test results came back. The boy who said his father "never did anything" had gonorrhea of the throat. This was confirmed through a second test. The accuracy, or positive accuracy value, of the test that was employed—called RapID/NH—was 99.76 percent.[39]

Seven other children were seen for the first time by the Bragas that week. Only two were later named in individual charges against Frank or Ileana Fuster: Donald Menninger and Jessie Lipton. Three of the interviews that week were one-time-only. Two children who had been interviewed the week before—Jason and Becky—were interviewed again. Jason provided some additional details; Becky remained elusive and uncooperative.

The two children who were later named in individual charges merit further description.

Donald Menninger

Donald Menninger could be considered the index child for the case. His statement to his mother in late April 1984 was the first significant disclosure in the case. That statement caused his mother to remove Donald from the Fusters' care and to warn her friend Betsy Leventhal, whose son Tom was also implicated by Donald as a victim of Ileana Fuster's sexual abuse. The Menningers were on vacation when Meznarich began the formal investigation on August 3. They were contacted—not by authorities, but apparently by a friend or business associate—during their vacation because of media coverage of the case. It quickly became known as the Country Walk case. Donald Menninger's father (who was named Donald Menninger, Jr.) was the director of property management for the Arvida Corporation, owners and developers of Country Walk. If Mr. Menninger had not been in that position, the case might have become public in April, and the St. Lorenzos might never have had a problem. This proposition, and the various facts supporting it, later gave rise to the civil claims for damages against Arvida. In the initial stages of the case, however, the Menningers were cooperative with authorities. They brought their son to be interviewed on August 14, and they brought him back on August 31.

Donald was four years old and on the borderline for being too young to testify. His first interview with the Bragas is difficult to assess on the basis of the transcript alone. There is a moment, for example, when the boy says "She did it to babies." But whether "did it" was meant to carry the kind of meaning that it does for adults is impossible to ascertain from the transcript. The interviewer, who wanted a clearer response, asked an open-ended follow-up: "Will you show me what Ileana would do to the babies." The boy's response in the transcript is reduced to a parenthetic "(Indicating)." The transcript leaves the impression of some kind of wrongdoing by Ileana, but the details are unclear. Meznarich later testified that probable cause to charge Ileana Fuster existed on the basis of Donald Menninger's "statement and demonstrations with dolls."[40]

The boy came in again two weeks later. He apparently came at his mother's insistence. This time, he was far more responsive, and at times quite sexually specific. The boy described Frank Fuster taking off his clothing. "All of them," he said at one point; "Even his underwear."[41] After a description of the children and the Fusters without their clothes, the following exchange occurred:

LB: What are they doing, playing a game? What game would they play?
DM: Pee-pee game.
LB: Show me how to play the pee pee game? You can tell me, it's okay. You won't get in trouble.
DM: Do one at a time.
LB: Okay, do one at a time. This is Frank, right?
DM: (Inaudible.)
LB: What did Frank do?
DM: Here, his penis.

LB: Here's his penis, what did you do with his penis?
DM: (Indicating.) To me.
LB: To you, he would rub his penis against your penis?
DM: I would do this. (Indicating.)
LB: You would?
DM: He made me do that.
LB: He made you do that? What else did he make you do?
DM: Nothing.

It would be useful to see the gestures and "indications" in this exchange, but it is clear this boy played a "pee pee game" with Frank Fuster that had sexualized content. This tape was played at Frank Fuster's parole violation hearing, two weeks before his criminal trial began. It was the only child interview tape played in the proceeding. The judge sentenced Fuster to fifteen years.

Jessie Lipton

One of the final interviews of the week was with Jessie Lipton. The girl was four years old at the time. The Bragas had already interviewed her brother, a two-year-old with a speech impediment. Daniel Lipton attended the Fusters regularly for several months; Jessie went only twice in May. This fact is critical to placing her interview in context. Much has been made of the fact that Jessie described the Fusters as "strangers" in this interview.[42] That would potentially be a discrediting statement if made by, say, Jason Cramer (who had attended regularly for months). But Jessie had not seen the Fusters for four months; and she had only been at their house for babysitting twice. Under the circumstances, "strangers" is actually quite accurate. The interview did not result in any significant disclosures. Early in the interview, Jessie made an unsettling and unprompted statement about Ileana Fuster: "She gave me a donut once without any poison on it."[43] It is not clear what motivated the statement, and the follow-up questions do not shed additional light. Jessie indicated she liked going to the Fusters' and she flatly denied any abuse: "They did nothing bad to me."[44] One might read this interview as containing a little too much denial by Jessie. "We didn't play any games at all," she said at one point.

Later she allowed that there was a duck, duck, goose game. She did not indicate that there was anything untoward about the game, but she did make an unusual and unclear statement about another game: "sometimes they say that the person is (inaudible). But I am not dead."[45] Presumably, the word that was inaudible to the stenographer was "dead." If so, this comment would corroborate statements about a threatening game that Jason Cramer called "who's gonna lose their head." On the basis of this interview alone, Jessie Lipton would not have been included in any charges. But she came back in January, at the request of her parents, and made a detailed and incriminating statement. It would become the main focus of case critics, so it is important to keep in mind that the January interview occurred five months after most of the charges against the Fusters had been filed. Jessie Lipton was a late addition to the case, and she did not account for many of the charges against the Fusters.

Five children were interviewed the following week. None of these children disclosed abuse, and none was interviewed a second time. They had no further involvement in the case. That week a thirteen-count indictment was prepared against Frank and Ileana Fuster. It contained almost all of the charges that were ultimately brought against them. The investigation was winding down; there were only four interviews the last week in August. One was the first interview with Brian Arrigan, and next was the final interview with Jason Cramer. There was also another interview with Becky Taylor; it was her third interview alone and she remained extremely avoidant, denying that any games were played at the Fusters' and refusing to answer many questions. Finally, Donald Menninger came back, at his mother's request, for his second and final interview, already mentioned.

Brian Arrigan was interviewed on Tuesday, August 27. He was a three-year-old boy who had attended the Fusters' from December through April. In this interview, Brian indicated he had been hit at the Fusters', but he made no statements of a sexualized nature. It likely would have ended with that interview, but the parents asked to come back in late October for a second (and final) interview. The boy eventually made several statements that were far more explicit than anything said in his first interview. "They [Frank and Ileana] took off Tom's clothes," the boy said at one point. Though this interview seems to indicate that the boy witnessed naked games, it is also apparent he was too young to testify. This interview contained several statements that were later used to discredit the children. Brian said something about the Fusters' thinking that he was a mouse. He also said something about how, when they gave him a drink, he "would be dead."[46] One could certainly read this exchange as supportive of the idea that children were drugged in some fashion. But this child was seen as too young to testify, and there were no individual charges related to him.

Detective Meznarich continued to investigate the case throughout the month of August. She sought to interview any families with children who attended the Country Walk Babysitting Service. Given that it was August, some families were on vacation. Others had such young children they could not possibly be interviewed; the children were preverbal. A few parents did not want to get involved. That is specifically what Vera Unger told Meznarich; she said she had been caused "great embarrassment" by co-workers at the bank where she worked because they were asking about her connection with Fuster.[47] Though Unger was reluctant to talk, she informed the detective she had taken her youngest child for babysitting at the Fusters' twice. Both times, he had a high fever afterward. It was so bad the second time that she took him straight to the hospital; his fever was 104. Ileana Fuster had not mentioned anything to Unger either time. Her oldest son, Ned, used to play with Noel. But something happened and he stopped going to Noel's house. When interviewed later, Ned provided no information.

By the week of August 20, the State Attorney's Office was prepared to charge Frank and Ileana Fuster with the capital offense of sexual battery on a child. It had been exactly two weeks since the first children were interviewed by the Bragas. Arrest forms were prepared that week, charging each of them with a single count of sexual battery.[48] The charge against Ileana pertained to Donald Menninger, based on his mother's statement and Donald's "demonstration" in the original August 14 interview. The charge against Frank pertained to Noel Fuster and was based on Jason Cramer's statement and the positive STD finding.

"Fusters Charged with Sexual Battery of Children," declared a front-page headline in the Miami Herald on Friday, August 24. The story indicated that Jeffrey Samek, Frank Fuster's lawyer, had been informed that the charges involved eight children. The State Attorney's Office filed the first full indictment against Frank and Ileana Fuster on September 5. The document, prepared the third week in August, contained thirteen counts in total: nine were against Frank, three were against Ileana, and one was against both. The indictment named six children. (It seems likely that when Jeffrey Samek said eight children were involved, the count included Joshua Cramer and Daniel Lipton, but both were considered too young to testify.) Ten of the thirteen charges in this indictment stemmed from three children: Donald Menninger (four counts), Jason Cramer (three counts), and Becky Taylor (three counts). Becky's counts were based on statements by Jason. See Figure 6.3 for an elaboration of the general content and sequence of interviews with the four children who were interviewed the most in August. Jason and Donald were ultimately the most significant in the case; Becky and Noel, however, became most significant in the witch-hunt narrative about the case. There were individual counts involving Tom Leventhal, Tammy Lucas, and Noel Fuster. Notably, all of these children were among the first nine interviewed in the case. In short, these charges emerged directly from the earliest stages of the investigation; they did not emerge, as critics would later claim, after extensive, repeated interviews. Unlike cases like McMartin where the interviewing expanded significantly over time, the interviews in the Country Walk case were almost all in August. While two interviews in January became a major focus of the witch-hunt narrative, Figure 6.4 indicates that the interviews in January 1985 were unusual. The most important interviews in developing the evidence against the Fusters were in the first few days of the investigation (see Figure 6.5). None of the disclosures depicted in this figure came after repeated interviews

Figure 6.3 Country Walk, Braga Interview Sequence, Children Interviewed Two or More Times in August.

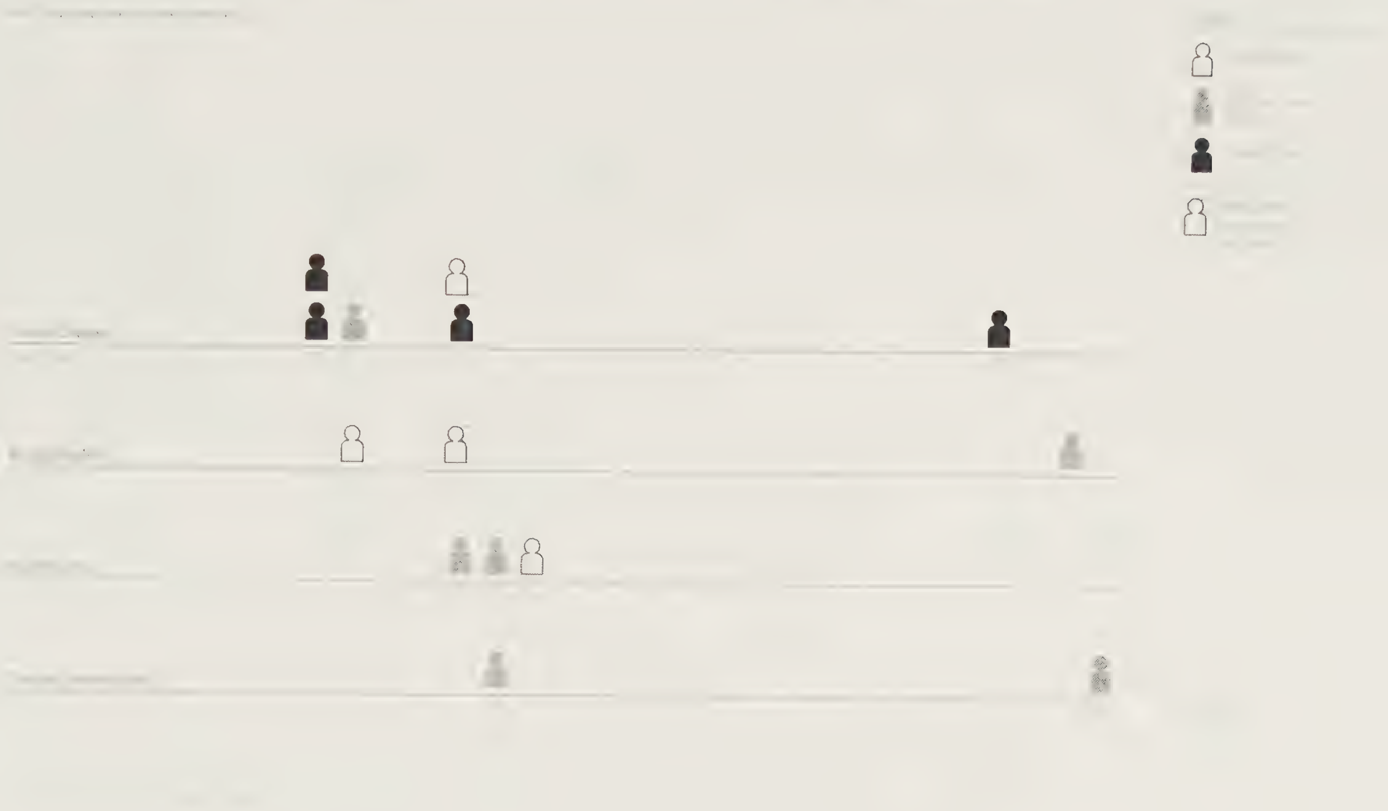


Figure 6.4 Country Walk, Full Braga Interview Sequence.

Each icon represents one interview

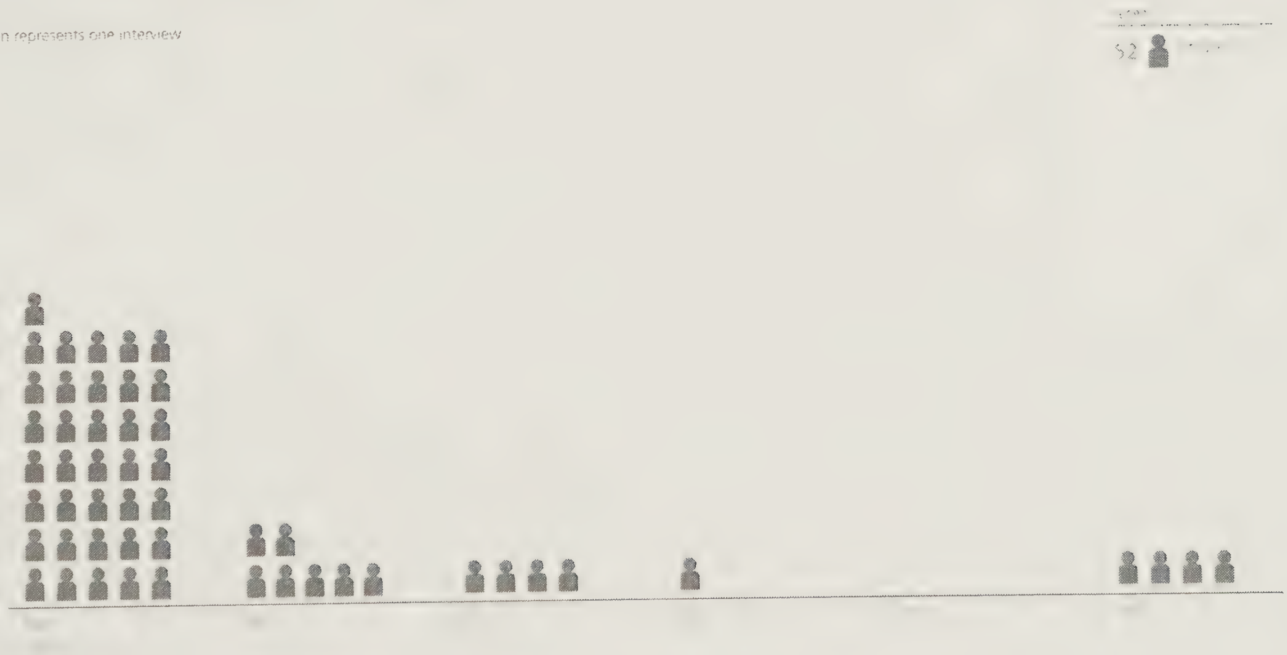

Figure 6.5 Country Walk, Braga Interview Sequence, August Detail.

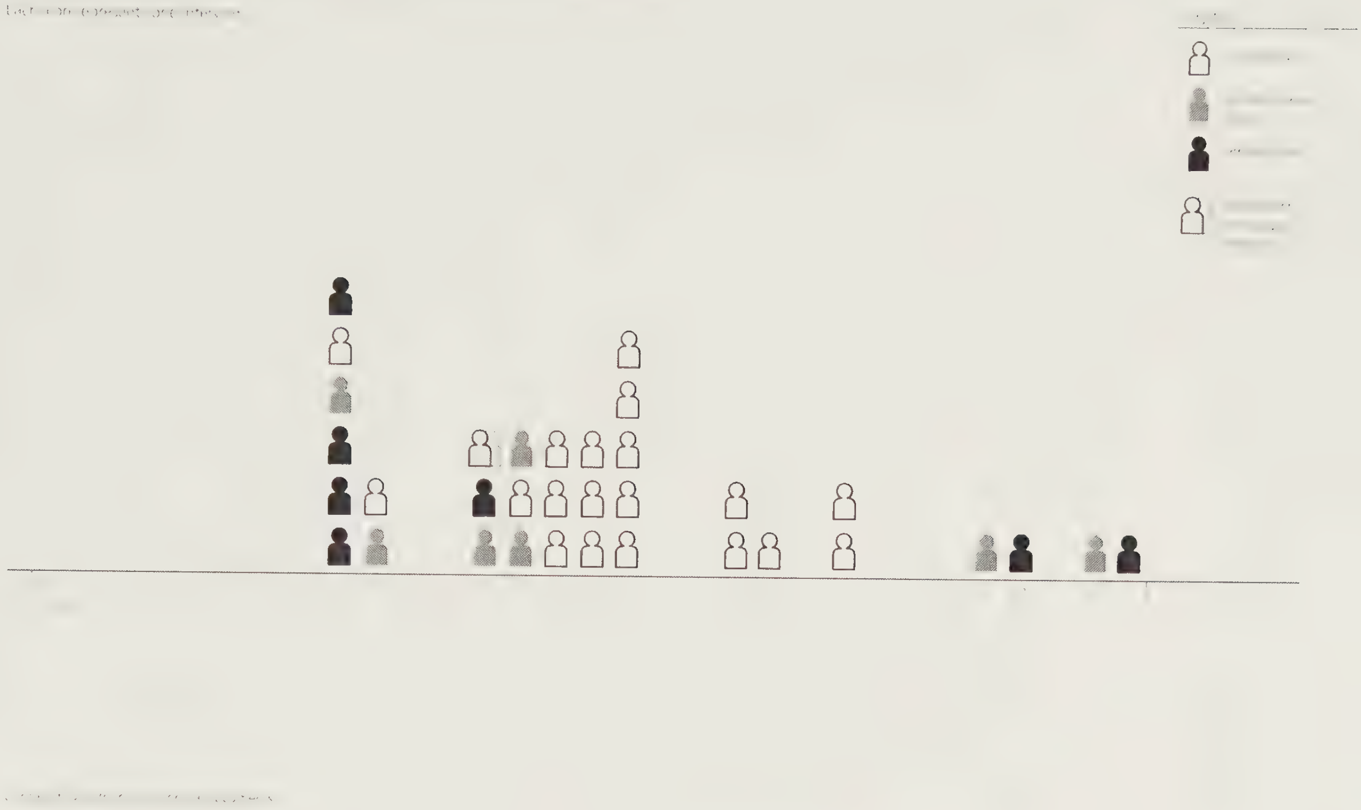


The Constellation of Other Evidence

While the Bragas were interviewing children in the case, the State Attorney's Office sought additional evidence beyond the children. The primary focus of those investigative efforts was the parents, neighbors, and business associates of the Fusters. Those efforts uncovered a variety of evidence that supported the children's statements.

Medical Conditions: Rashes and Antibiotics

Frank Fuster's son tested positive for gonorrhea of the throat. This was undoubtedly the strongest piece of medical evidence in the case. But it was not the only such evidence. Many of the children had had either vaginal or anal rashes of a nature they had never experienced previously. Tom Leventhal's mother observed what she deemed to be a worrisome rash around the boy's penis; it was unlike anything she had seen in her other boys.[49] Darlene Taylor noted that her daughter Becky was on "ampicillin practically the entire time" she was at the Fusters', and she frequently complained of sore throats and suffered from frequent rashes around her vagina.[50] Carrie Monk developed a rash on her vulva. In the nine days she attended the Fusters', Tammy Lucas had "an inflamed vaginal area."[51] But few of the parents whose children attended the Fusters' actually knew each other, so it was not until investigators documented these disparate incidents that their cumulative weight could be appreciated.

A number of children also had unexplained infections or raging fevers when they left the Fusters' house. Betsy Leventhal testified that, in the five months that her son went there, he had respiratory infections that would clear up with penicillin and subsequently reappear. Vera Unger reported that her son attended the Fusters' for babysitting twice, once in April and once in July 1984. Both times, she said, Charles developed a fever of approximately 104 degrees and stomach and throat infections.[52] Indeed, the children's medical records provide a chilling answer to the question of why none of the other children tested positive for a sexually transmitted disease in August 1984. The answer is that "virtually every child alleged to have been the victim of Frank Fuster putting his penis in their mouth was on antibiotics the entire time."[53] All of these children were tested for strep throat during the year and the tests were all negative, but they were all prescribed antibiotics anyway. Apparently, nobody ever thought to test them for sexually transmitted diseases.

Suspicious Incidents and Unclothed Children

In many child sexual abuse cases, the defense argues that if something untoward had been occurring, surely someone would have noticed something suspicious.

As investigators quickly learned, in the seven months that the Fusters' babysitting service was in operation, there were numerous instances that raised suspicions among parents. Indeed, there were a host of families who independently decided to remove their children from the Fusters' care before the case broke.

Nearly all of the parents described waiting a long time at the front door. Some parents reported there were also times when they called the Fuster household during the daytime and got no answer. Ileana told one parent they had disconnected the door bell because they did not want to disturb the children. She told another parent she had unplugged the phone one day for the same reason. Some parents took to calling before they came in order to avoid a long wait at the door. Emma St. Lorenzo called in the middle of the first day that she had taken her son to the Fusters'. There was no answer. She later testified that she was concerned about being an overly protective mother, so she did not rush right over to the house. What happened after she picked up her son, though, caused her to report the Fusters.

Parents did not come in and out of the house freely or unannounced. On the rare occasions when that did happen, however, there were various strange circumstances, all involving children in states of undress. For example, Kimberly Porter described twice walking into the home unannounced. Frank Fuster had apparently left the door unlocked, and she let herself in after waiting for five minutes for someone to answer the door. Ileana emerged from the master bedroom and shut the door behind her, locking a whining Tom Leventhal inside.[54] The second time this happened, Ileana did the same thing but failed to properly lock the bedroom door, allowing Tom to open the door and run out totally naked. Porter said that Ileana's hair was "a mess" and she seemed "nervous."[55]

Similarly, Betsy Leventhal—who removed her child in early May—described seeing Becky Taylor naked from the waist down one day when she arrived to pick up her son. This seemed odd enough to Leventhal that she questioned Ileana as to why the girl was not fully clothed. Ileana Fuster explained that Becky's mother had forgotten to pack diapers for her daughter.[56] Only later, after the case broke, did Leventhal find out that Becky did not wear diapers and had not for quite a while.[57] Vivian Pelton also saw a disturbing scene once when she came to pick up her daughter Lacy. Jessie Lipton was standing in a corner of the living room and Frank Fuster was coming out of his bedroom, pulling up his shorts. Pelton thought Jessie was "embarrassed or upset." She was later described as "cowering."[58] She did not make a lot of the incident at the time. But it is worth mentioning since it helps demonstrate how many parents were disturbed at one point or another about something that seemed amiss.

Paula Walker, who took her two-year-old daughter, Sara, to the Fusters' once a week between March and May, had such an incident in early May. Even though she had been told, as other parents were, that Frank Fuster worked outside the home, it was her experience that he "delivered Sara to me at least half the times." She used the word "deliver" because her daughter was routinely so tired that she had to be carried. One time, Walker found Sara in shorts, but without her overalls. She asked Fuster why her daughter was not fully clothed. "Frank told me it was just because it was so hot in the house," she later testified. Walker, who did not consider the temperature in the house to be hot, decided not to bring her daughter back.[59]

Another suspicion that was arrived at independently by several families was that their children had been drugged at the Fusters'. That suspicion was later borne out by Frank Fuster's own lawyer, who argued that Ileana's testimony should not be trusted because she had been drugged by Frank.[60] Many parents commented on how tired their children were after leaving the Fusters', and how they sometimes had to carry their children out of the house.[61]

Sexually Precocious Behavior

Donald Menninger's "kiss my body" comment to his mother was only one example of highly sexualized behavior on the part of Country Walk children. A number of parents reported being puzzled as to how their young children learned to French-kiss and why they were acting this way. Betsy Leventhal noticed that Tom began to mimic masturbating "quite a bit" while at the Fusters' for babysitting, though he had not done this before.[62] Roberta Lipton noticed a number of sexualized behaviors in her two-year-old son, Daniel. After he began attending the Fusters', he repeatedly tried to French-kiss his mother, he would "constantly pull on his penis," and once he put her hand on his penis, saying "mommy, rub my pee pee."[63] Kimberly Porter testified that her two-year-old son Malcolm "would do sexual things" to his four-year-old sister.[64] Allison Lucas testified that her daughter asked whether it "was OK to eat shit."[65] Tammy also masturbated in public, French-kissed her parents, and tried on numerous occasions to stick toys into her rectum.[66] Betsy Leventhal testified that her two-year-old, Tom, "would kiss me and then try to stick his tongue in my mouth."[67] Sandra Cramer described her sons, Jason and Joshua, French-kissing, engaging in penile and anal stimulation of each other, and attempting anal stimulation of her. Joshua frequently asked his mother to play with his penis when she changed his diapers.[68] Even the psychiatrist who later testified for the defense allowed that "it would be significant" if numerous children that age started French-kissing.[69] The children who went to the Fusters' exhibited much more overly sexualized behavior than that.

The Final Fifteen Interviews with Children

By the end of August, twenty-four children had been interviewed at the State Attorney's Office. Many were interviewed only once; only two were interviewed more than twice. Two-thirds of all the investigative interviews that would be conducted in the case were complete, and detailed charges had already been drawn up against Frank and Ileana Fuster (see Figure 6.6). There were fifteen more investigative interviews after the last day in August 1984: seven in September, three in October, one in November, and four in January. All charges were finalized thereafter with a second indictment, so those were the last of the investigative interviews.[70] Altogether, then, there were forty-six videotaped sessions of children and the Bragas between August 9 and the end of January 1985. Those sessions involved thirty-one children. Eight of those children ended up with individual, named charges against Frank and/or Ileana Fuster. As Figure 6.6 demonstrates, the earliest children in the investigation were by far the most important children in the case; they accounted for most of the group and individual charges.

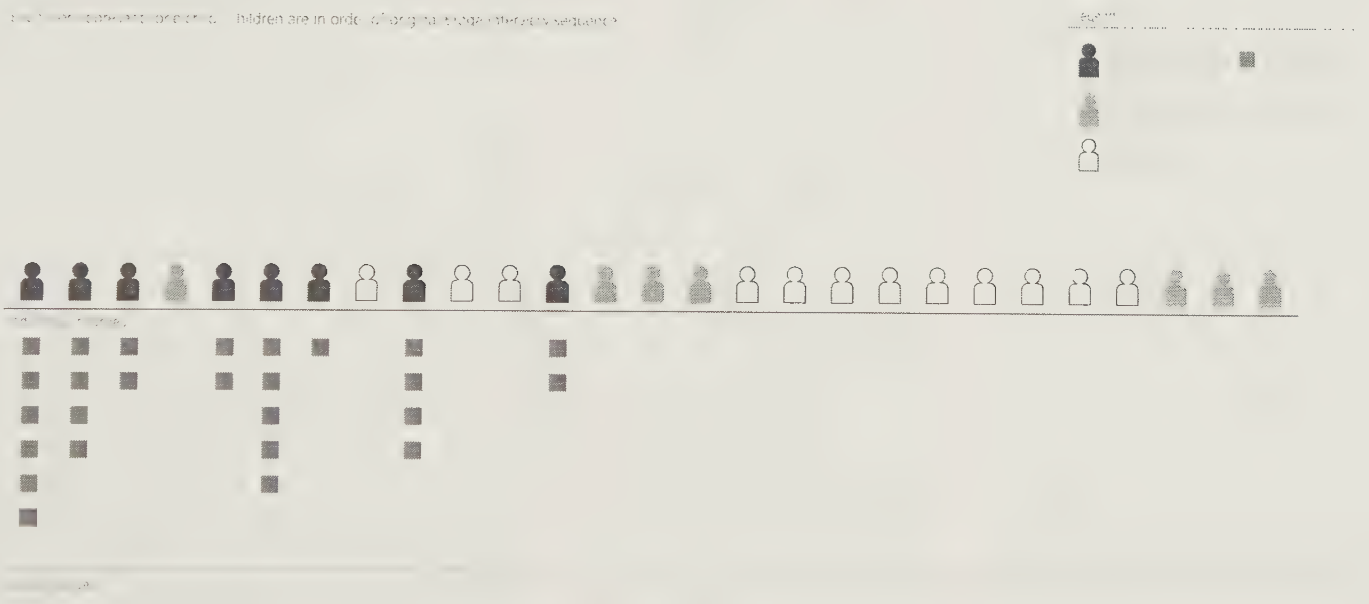
Three of the final five investigative interviews in the case later became the focus of substantial criticism. One was with Noel Fuster in late November, and the other two were in late January—one with Jessie Lipton, the other with Tammy Lucas. Two of those interviews are described in detail below. The third contested interview, with Tammy Lucas, is less important to the case. She was a named complainant in the first indictment, on the basis of statements she made then; her third interview did not change things. The charges involving Jessie Lipton, by contrast, were filed on the basis of the January interview. And the November interview with Noel was unlike any other interview in the case.

Confronting Noel

When the charges were filed against Frank and Ileana Fuster in early September, there was a single count naming Noel as a victim of his father. It was based on Jason Cramer's eyewitness account and Noel's positive STD test. There are differing views on how much the prosecution wanted Noel's testimony at trial, though it would be hard to resist calling the oldest possible witness to the allegations. Then again, the boy was clearly conflicted. He had seen his father crying in prison and had told the Bragas something about how he could "save [his] dad."

In late November, Noel's mother, Martha, brought the boy back to the State Attorney's Office for another interview. The session had apparently been requested by Assistant State Attorney Chris Rundle. According to Hollingsworth, Rundle apparently thought he might not be able to proceed with the case "unless he got a statement from Frank Fuster's son as to the source of his gonorrhea." An additional interview could not happen, however, without the support of the boy's mother. Hollingsworth reported that Martha Fuster desperately wanted Noel to be confronted by the psychologists: "Please, I want you to ask him the 'hard' questions," she pleaded with the Bragas before they joined him in the interview room.[71]

Figure 6.6 Country Walk, Full Counts, Frank and Ileana, Individual and Group Charges.



The interview reflected in the court transcript began with Joseph Braga asking Noel about what, if anything, Frank told him not to talk about. Noel insisted the only thing he said not to talk about was the fact that Frank was in jail. Since this was widely known, it is unlikely his response reflected the full substance of what Frank Fuster told his son. As the interview progressed, Noel offered some implausible denials; for example, he said he didn't remember anything about when he was six, and he denied knowing the word "pee pee."[72] Joseph Braga eventually confronted the boy with the medical evidence:

> The doctors tell me that there's only one way that you can get gonorrhea, and that's if someone puts their penis in your mouth. Do you remember someone ever doing that?[73]

Noel provided a series of evasive answers: "I don't remember, maybe they did, I don't remember . . . ," "Maybe it happened when I was six," "Maybe I was fast asleep. I don't remember. . . . "[74] Perhaps his most revealing statement was: "I do remember. I don't want to remember. . . . "[75]

The boy slowly proceeded to acknowledge a number of facts that did not directly involve him. He had already told the Bragas in August that Becky sometimes had no clothes on. This time, when pressed again on the issue, he said she was "running around naked" and "every time she took a shower, she was running around naked." The Bragas expressed obvious surprise at the idea of a four-year-old girl who was left for babysitting taking showers at the Fusters'. "My mom helped her," he added. While continuing to deny any personal involvement in sexualized play, Noel described the actions of other children. He acknowledged that some children went to the bathroom on the floor. In Noel's words, that was a "[g]ame, some people do it as a game or they—some people think it's funny." He also said that "Jason said a lot of things about sexy when Becky was naked." Eventually, at the end of the passage below, Noel made his most incriminating statement yet:

LB: What do you think is going to happen to you father?
NF: He might stay there forever.
LB: How do you feel about that?
NF: Sad.
LB: I bet you do. Do you think what your father did, that he should be in jail?
NF: Huh? (Inaudible.) Well, what was that? Why did he go to jail?
LB: Well, what we talked about?
JB: What do you think?
LB: Why do you think he went to jail?

NF: Only thing I remember, maybe he did something wrong about the government.
JB: What about with the children?
NF: Children?
JB: Children?
NF: Oh, he (inaudible) that he put his penis in the mouth.
JB: Uh-huh, into the children?
NF: I think he does need to go to jail.
JB: Do you think they can help him there?
NF: (Nodding affirmatively.)
JB: So he will be better and won't do things like this anymore?
NF: I think they would help him.
JB: If you were going to try to help him, what would be some of the things you could say to him?
NF: To tell the truth and don't lie. Like that.
JB: Supposing he could get out of jail, now what were the things he shouldn't do anymore so he wouldn't go back to jail? What are some of the things?
NF: Not to stick his penis in my mouth and not to stick it into little kids, his peeing in their mouth and not to stick any kind of penis (inaudible).[76]

Critics of the case have claimed that the interview up to this point contained nothing of note. The final response just quoted demonstrates this is not true. It is true that the "hard questions" had yet to come. Before taking a break for lunch, Joseph Braga told Noel:

JB: While you are at lunch, I think you ought to think about me asking you questions because I have to tell you this: if the test didn't say you have gonorrhea, then I could believe you. If the other children hadn't told me things that you are a part of, then I would believe you, but all of the children—
NF: I—I (inaudible).
JB: The doctor's tests say that you've got gonorrhea (inaudible).
NF: I think I forgot. Maybe they did.
JB: Maybe you can remember after lunch. Maybe you can remember after lunch. That's what I want you to think about.

After a lunch break, Joseph Braga confronted the boy directly with the implausibility of his denials. Noel then made more detailed statements about his mother kissing Joshua Cramer and his father kissing Becky Taylor on the vagina.[77] He was also more somewhat specific about his father's actions. Noel confirmed that his parents wore masks and scared the children, he said his father "scared me half to death" with a knife, and eventually he said his father put his penis in Noel's mouth "twice."

It still was not clear whether Noel would be a witness at trial. His mother's desire to "ask the hard questions" would not necessarily translate into the willingness to let the boy testify against his father. But Noel had made a vast number of incriminating statements, many of which matched things other children had said.

Jessie Lipton, Again

The most significant interview in January was with Jessie Lipton. She had been interviewed early in the investigation; her interview contained some strange statements that gave pause for concern, but it did not contain disclosures of any sort. Jessie was not named in the original thirteen-count indictment. She had gone to the Fusters' only twice in May, so it was possible that when she was there Frank Fuster was not even home. The state did not ask to interview her a second time. In January, however, her parents contacted the State Attorney's Office to request a second interview. They reported their daughter had "started talking about what happened" at Frank and Ileana's house. There was apparently disagreement among the prosecutors about whether it was advisable to go forward with this interview. The substance of this disagreement was never made public, but it stands to reason that those opposed would be worried that statements in the girl's second interview might somehow be attributed to prosecutors, interviewers, or parents.

The girl comes across in the transcript of this interview as observant and articulate. "In March I'm going to be five and a half," she adds after responding "yes" to the question, "You were just five in September?" She also remembers the State Attorney's Office well enough to know that they were conducting this interview in a different room from the one five months earlier. What Jessie had apparently been saying at home came after Laurie Braga asked what the children did with their clothes off:

JL: They played cut off your head.
JB: Cut off your head? Can you show me how they did that?
JL: Frank would ask them, do you want a cupcake and if they said yes, then he would cut your head off .
LB: Did he really cut off heads or pretend?
JL: He was—he put the knife to your neck.
LB: The knife to the neck (inaudible).
JL: Yes.

LB: Did he do that to you?
JL: Yes.
LB: What other children did he do that to?
JL: To Daniel, to Joshua.
LB: Uh-huh?
JL: To—to Jason. That's about all I know.[78]

This description was quite similar to one provided by Jason months earlier. Later, Laurie Braga asked Jessie to describe any other games, and Jessie responded, "Duck Duck Goose Goose with their clothes off."[79] She proceeded to indicate that Frank Fuster touched her vagina, although the transcript has some ambiguities that seem to stem from gestures unaccompanied by words.[80] Toward the end of the interview, Laurie Braga raised the question that added something that would later form the basis for a major defense argument: Why didn't she speak earlier?

LB: Okay, do you think—is there anything that you still are a little scared to talk about?
JL: (Shaking head no.)
LB: Uh-uh? Can you tell me what anybody would do to make you scared?
JL: They would put the knife up to your neck.
LB: Up to your neck and what else?
JL: (Inaudible.)
LB: Pull on your pee pee?
JL: That's all.
LB: What did they say would happen if you told?
JL: They would say—they would tell me not to tell but I still tell.
LB: But you didn't tell for a long time, how come, were you scared?
JL: (Shaking head no.)
LB: Do you know why?
JL: Uh-uh, I think I was too young.[81]

Although Jessie described several sexualized or abusive games (Duck Duck Goose Goose; Cut Off Your Head), she also resisted some leading questions at the end of the interview about other games the Bragas had heard about from many children. "What about the pee pee game?" Laurie Braga asks explicitly. "There was no pee pee game," Jessie responded. Similarly, she said that she never saw Frank or Iliana play with ca-ca. Presumably, if the girl was simply trying to please the interviewers, she would have responded affirmatively to those questions. Then Jessie added one more detail:

JL: I will tell you what else happened with my brother. They were dancing around with my brother, then he was laughing.
LB: Uh-huh?
JL: With his clothes off. He thought that was funny.
LB: He did? Did you think it was funny?
JL: No.

As a result of this interview, Jessie Lipton was added to the second indictment. She later testified at the trial.

"Preparing the Charts"

The Country Walk case was originally investigated and charged by Chris Rundle, under the supervision of Abe Laeser. Janet Reno eventually assigned two more senior prosecutors to the case: John Hogan and Dan Casey. This often happens in high-profile criminal cases; as demonstrated through the McMartin case, however, it is not always a move that improves the chances of prosecutorial success, particularly when sex-abuse prosecutors are replaced with prosecutors who are not experienced with such cases. In the Country Walk case, however, what the new prosecutors brought was a systematic approach that may be what has ensured that the subsequent convictions have not been reversed.

As John Hogan explained in a civil deposition, "When I took over the case I saw as my first priority revamping the charging document."[82] He immediately did something the McMartin prosecutors did not do until long after they filed charges: he actually watched the videotapes of the children's interviews. After reviewing the videotapes, Hogan assigned Rundle and Casey "the task of what we called preparing the charts, and we took each tape and we outlined each and every allegation of sexual misconduct."[83]

There were apparently upward of 450 potential charges. The indictment that the prosecutors produced after their detailed analysis had twenty-eight charges. Eleven of those were against Ileana Fuster alone, fourteen were against Frank Fuster alone, and three were "group charges" that named both defendants and multiple children. "Our goal was to only charge those crimes we thought we had a very good chance of winning," Hogan later testified in a civil deposition.[84] Accordingly, virtually every charge had cross-corroborating evidence from multiple sources. This included statements from other children and statements from adults. This charging strategy also meant the prosecution thoroughly checked its own case for inconsistencies. It was during this process that the State Attorney's Office went to great lengths to establish, as accurately as possible, the precise dates of attendance for every child. The prosecutors were cognizant of the attendance patterns, then, when considering any statement a child made about other children. Only when attendance patterns were kept in mind, for example, did it make sense that certain children did not know other children. The resulting charges were carefully drawn and multiply supported.

Charges were finalized in the Country Walk case with the filing of the second indictment in March 1985. In other day-care sexual abuse cases, particularly McMartin and Michaels, the second indictment vastly expanded the scope of the case. The second indictment in the Country Walk case added two children connected to individual counts and thirteen total counts (including group counts, explained below). The individual charges added by the second indictment stemmed almost entirely from children already named in connection with individual charges in the first indictment. There were three additional counts involving Jason Cramer, two additional counts involving Becky Taylor, one additional count involving Tom Leventhal, and one additional count involving Tammy Lucas. There were two more children with individual counts in the second indictment, neither of whom was named in the first indictment. Joshua Cramer was one. Although it was clear he would never testify at trial, an additional charge was added because several children, including Noel Fuster, indicated they witnessed Joshua being sexually abused by Frank Fuster. The other child added to the second indictment was Jessie Lipton. She would later become the most criticized of the children; critics would claim she was typical or representative of the children in the case. Actually, her place in the case was unique.

The prosecutors also filed three group charges, a creative strategy to deal with the fact that many statements involved games or other group activities. Those charges listed as many as fifteen children in one charge—but the children were listed in the alternative, connecting every child with an "and/or." This meant that each of these charges could be proven with evidence about one child alone; but it also allowed for a range of possible testimony. The group charges ultimately added seven children to the case. All of the group charges included children named in the individual counts.

The first group charge was sexual acts between Frank and Ileana in front of children. Thirteen children were listed in the alternate, including all of the children named in individual charges. The second group charge was for aggravated assault stemming from the wearing of masks, displaying weapons, and/or making threats. Fourteen children were listed in the alternate in this count, including all of the named-charge children except Noel Fuster. The third group charge was for lewd and lascivious acts, involving naked dancing and the games with feces and urine.

The case was originally scheduled for trial in January 1985. Several delays were requested by the defense and granted by the judge. Those motions were opposed, with increasing vigor, by the state. The trial ultimately began in September 1985, almost exactly a year after the original thirteen-count indictment. Two pre-trial developments merit discussion.

"Breaking" Jason Cramer

The day-care sexual abuse cases of the 1980s became famous partly because they highlighted questions about how the criminal justice system would accommodate children as witnesses. The issue had scarcely been engaged before the emerging social recognition of child abuse in the 1970s and 1980s. In Florida, there was a legislative effort to allow children to testify via closed-circuit television, an innovation intended to reduce the anxiety of testifying in front of the defendant. There was even hope among some of the parents in the Country Walk case that the videotaped interviews by the Bragas could be introduced into evidence in lieu of actual testimony. The law was unclear, but it seemed likely that the Confrontation Clause in the Constitution would be interpreted to require something more than videotaped statements.

How children would be treated in this process also remained unclear. As the trial date approached, Jeffrey Samek, Frank Fuster's lawyer, obtained an order allowing him to depose children in the case. The judge did not allow Fuster to be in the room for these depositions; instead, he viewed these depositions from an adjacent room where he could watch on closed-circuit television and convey any questions or comments to his attorney. The defense proceeded to take the deposition of Jason Cramer, the most important witness in the case. What unfolded became perhaps the most controversial moment of the case: Samek confronted Jason in an extremely aggressive way. Using a tone that Hollingsworth later described as "sharp, accusatory," Samek said directly to the boy: "I think you're lying." "I don't think Frank ever did anything to you, Frank didn't do anything to you, did he?" However disturbed Jason may have been by the adult's harsh tone, he did not budge. "Yes, he did," Jason replied. As Hollingsworth reports the ensuing exchange:

> "Frank never put his mouth on your penis, did he?"
> "Yes, he did," Jason whispered.
> "When did he do it?"
> "Partially." The word barely came out.
> "Huh?"
> "Partially." Jason was on the verge of tears.
> "Jason, look at me when you answer—"[85]

An excerpt from a videotape of this interview, later played on television, bears out the Hollingsworth description. Obviously, Samek was confronting the boy in a most unusual way (Look at me when you answer); it is unimaginable that a judge would allow an adult witness to be bullied like that. The prosecutors went directly to Judge Newman for a ruling that would prohibit this kind of questioning. Hogan called Samek's tactics "outrageous" and a "travesty." "I have never in my life heard an attorney order a witness that they had to look at him," he told the judge. Samek argued that these tactics were "the only way to have possibility of breaking the spell that has been cast on this child."[86]

Judge Newman declined to stop the deposition entirely, but he agreed to suspend it for a day. The Cramers were unwilling to subject their son to any more of this treatment. They insisted that the matter be appealed. Hollingsworth reported that the Cramers would withdraw from the case if the court did not agree, and it seemed likely that other families might well follow. The viability of the entire case hung in the balance.

The videotape of the confrontation of Jason Cramer was played in an emergency proceeding before the Third District Court of Appeals. Samek claimed that trying to break the child was the only way to get at the truth. Chief Judge Schwartz was unmoved. He called Samek's argument "disingenuous" and said "I am personally going to supply a transcript of this deposition to the Florida bar."[87] The next day, the local section of the Miami Herald contained the headline "Judge Seeks Bar Probe of Fuster Lawyer." Samek, who had been appointed by the court to represent Ileana, then tried, without success, to withdraw from the case.

Frank "Freaks Out," Ileana Pleads Guilty

As the September trial date approached, speculation about a possible guilty plea focused on Ileana Fuster. Would she plead guilty and testify against her husband? There was no speculation about whether Frank Fuster would plead guilty; there was nothing the state could offer him. He was a convicted sex offender in a case with STD evidence. The state would seek to imprison him for the rest of his life. His was the kind of case that would go to trial. Matters were much less clear for Ileana, since she had no prior record, she was actually a minor when she was arrested, and it appeared she was also a victim of Frank Fuster. It was likely she would plead guilty.

Yet Ileana Fuster remained an enigma. For months, she protested her innocence and wrote letters to Frank almost daily. But those closest to her in the detention facility later reported that Ileana's marriage to Frank had been precipitated by a rape.[88] Indeed, she began to speak about physical abuse by Frank, but she still denied sexually abusing any children. This left little room for any kind of guilty plea. It also left her lawyer, Michael Von Zamft, wondering whether Ileana was competent to stand trial. There was a competency hearing in early August, where she was found to be competent. It was clear that her own lawyer thought she had no other defense. He then hired two psychologists to start meeting with Ileana in order to get her to face the facts. She had stopped communicating with Frank, and it was apparent that his grip over her was weakening.

Those psychologists would, years later, be accused of "brainwashing" Ileana Fuster. Wild claims—contradicted by all available facts—would be made about how she was treated in prison. And Reno would be blamed for all of it. Those arguments are taken up in Part Two of this chapter, but for now it is important to keep in mind that Ileana Fuster's own lawyer hired the psychologists who would later be described as if they were agents of the prosecution.

Reality started to set in for Frank Fuster. Ileana had stopped communicating with him, and he faced a probation violation hearing stemming from his 1982 conviction for child molestation. Frank then "freaked out." That is how the media described an apparent catatonic trance that Frank Fuster went into, in court in early August. But acting out in court was not going to stop the proceedings. The probation violation hearing was held in mid-August 1985. The three-day proceeding was aimed at deciding whether to revoke the conditions of his probation. During the proceedings, the prosecution played one videotape to the judge, a thirty-four-minute interview with Donald Menninger. Fuster took the stand in his own defense. His testimony was incredible, as he denied that there was a babysitting service in his house. He claimed he was never in the house when children—who were there, of course, for babysitting—were there. All the parents who had seen him when they came or went were, according to Fuster, lying.

The judge sentenced Fuster to fifteen years. A few days later, Ileana pleaded guilty. It was a guilty plea, not a plea agreement, which means she admitted to every fact in the charging documents. She then threw herself on the mercy of the court. Some observers concluded that she was willing to incriminate her husband only once she already knew he was going to prison for many years.

The Trial

Opening arguments in Frank Fuster's trial began on September 3, 1985. Remarkably, the trial lasted less than a month. The case was complicated, but unlike other highly publicized day-care sex abuse cases around the country, it had been charged in a way that was designed to be lean and effective.

The State's Case

The state called thirty-four witnesses in six days. The largest group of witnesses was from among the parents. Fifteen testified about their children's medical and behavior problems that year. A few told stories about occurrences at the Fusters', particularly incidents involving partially clothed or naked children in strange circumstances. Several parents described incidents that resulted in their pulling children from the Fusters' care.

The next largest group of witnesses for the prosecution included medical doctors, and psychologists with doctoral degrees. Two medical doctors provided the details concerning Noel Fuster's STD test, four psychologists testified as mental health practitioners who had seen one or more of the children, and both of the Bragas testified about the interview process. The final prosecution witness was Dr. Roland Summit, a psychiatrist who helped pioneer the study and treatment of child sexual abuse. Dr. Summit was affiliated with Harbor UCLA Medical Center in Torrance, California, where he held the unusual title "community psychiatrist." Two years before the County Walk trial, Summit published an article that coined the term child abuse accommodation syndrome.[89] That article and his testimony would become focal points for criticisms of the case years later. Notably, Summit's testimony addressed sexually abused children in general. He explained to the jury the various reasons children might delay the disclosure of sexual abuse, and why their disclosures might be equivocal.

The third significant group of witnesses was made up of children who had attended the Fusters' babysitting service.[90] The potential witness list was conceivably as long as the number of children named in all of the counts, including the group counts. But some of those children were clearly too young to testify. The parents of other children were concerned about what it would mean for their children to testify in open court. Some said they would allow their children to testify only if the court permitted testimony by closed-circuit television. Several parents helped lobby the Florida legislature for the change that permitted such testimony in 1985. And two children who could add significantly to the prosecution's case were in doubt for different reasons. Donald Menninger, the first child to make a spontaneous disclosure in the case, was unlikely to testify because his father, an Arvida employee, had divided loyalties in the matter. Noel Fuster was also unlikely to testify because his mother, Martha, was scared of Frank Fuster. He had threatened her life over child custody[91] and she could not risk the consequences of allowing Noel to testify in a case where a conviction was not assured. Neither of those two boys testified in the case.

Eight children ended up testifying. But three of them were "name witnesses" only, taking the stand for identification purposes but not providing substantive testimony. The other five children testified in substance and were subject to cross-examination: Jessie Lipton, Tammy Lucas, Becky Taylor, Jason Cramer, and Annie Porter. The children testified about things that happened to them, and things they witnessed. Annie Porter was named only in group charges; the other four were named in individual and group charges.[92] They were the core of the case.

The Defense

Frank Fuster maintained that he was innocent from the time of his arrest. Beyond protesting his innocence, his defense was that the children had been brainwashed. The defense put on a few minor witnesses, but there were basically two important witnesses for the defense: Fuster himself and Dr. Lee Coleman, the psychiatrist from California who described the children as "brainwashed." To lay the foundation for Coleman's testimony, the defense spent more than a week playing almost all of the videotapes of the interviews conducted by the Bragas. Notably, the state did not object to this move. Indeed, according to Jan Hollingsworth, they welcomed it—so long as the defense did not show snippets without any context. The tapes were shown in chronological order. The jury saw thirty-three interviews—virtually every investigative interview with a child connected to any of the charges in the case. By mutual agreement, the defense and prosecution agreed not to show a number of tapes.

The most notable "minor" witness for the defense was Vicki Menninger, mother of the first child to make a disclosure in the case. Attorney Samek asked the court to treat her as a hostile witness. The judge declined the request but indicated he would give the defense considerable latitude in questioning her. Menninger's position had become extremely uncomfortable, since her husband was one of the named defendants in civil suits that had been filed against Arvida and Disney for failing to act on the information that came through his wife. A number of parents were angry that she warned only her friend, Betsy Leventhal, about her son's statement concerning Ileana Fuster "kissing all the babies' bodies." Menninger was in a terrible position. Her husband's job security might be at stake if Arvida lost a huge civil lawsuit because the Menningers—perhaps even thinking they were protecting the company—originally kept this information to themselves (and a close friend). Her statements about the whole matter changed over time. In a deposition in the civil case that occurred after the criminal case was over, her husband denied he or she ever swore anyone to secrecy.[93]

Her description of the original disclosure was unchanged. She allowed, on cross-examination, that there was no doubt her son's statements were sexual, that he had never said anything like this in the past, and that she never sent her son back to the Fusters' house. She claimed, however, his statements were only one factor in the decision. "I really wasn't happy with the babysitting," she testified, claiming that her son spent too much time watching television at the Fusters'.[94] On cross-examination, however, Menninger allowed that her son's refusal to go to the Fusters' had escalated in April and become "really bad." And when asked point blank—by the prosecution, not the defense—if she thought her son had been sexually abused at the Fusters, she replied that she did.[95] She may have ultimately been one of the most effective witnesses for the prosecution. Her statements were reluctant; nobody would accuse her of "hysteria" or jumping to conclusions. Indeed, she had financial reasons to side with the defense. But her testimony supported the state's case.

The primary defense expert was Dr. Coleman. The defense had been planning to use Ralph Underwager, who also appeared in the Kelly Michaels case, but he was abruptly dropped by the defense after his deposition was taken.[96] Coleman is a psychiatrist who has made a specialty out of attacking psychiatric diagnoses. For years he appeared as a prosecution witness in cases where the defendant relied on the insanity defense. When changes in California law restricted the use of the insanity defense, Coleman found a new specialty: criticizing the interviews in child sexual abuse cases. Working with the advocacy group VOCAL, he established a new client base. Despite lacking any significant experience with child sexual abuse, Coleman quickly found himself hired by the defense in cases across the country.[97] He qualified as an expert witness in the Country Walk case, even though his credentials for this specific work were limited at best. He agreed, for example, that knowledge of child development would be important in assessing child interviews, yet he could not name any leading figures in the field.[98] The few articles he mentioned about memory issues at trial were all things he had read since his deposition a few months earlier.[99]

Coleman testified that he reviewed sixty hours of videotaped interviews with the Bragas. This would appear to include all of the relevant investigative interviews in the case and some that were not so relevant. There is some uncertainty about whether he reviewed the initial interviews with Jason Cramer on August 9. Coleman testified that he reviewed those interviews and that they contained nothing but "playing."[100] But the key session with Jason Cramer, described at length in Hollingsworth's book, contained the most important disclosures in the case because it was so detailed and it occurred so early.

Coleman testified that all of the investigative interviews were deeply flawed. He argued there was little or no difference between any of the interviews. He reached the conclusion that "in every interview I saw the methods used on the children would render the information unreliable."[101] His basic objection was that the questions were "manipulative" and "leading." He was also dismissive of any interview in which the child referred to an anatomically detailed doll. Dolls are "something you make up stories about," he argued, rejecting the idea that dolls might profitably be used by a child to demonstrate what happened.[102] He also had an extreme view of leading questions. According to Dr. Coleman: "'Show me what Frank and Ileana would do.' That's an example of a leading question."[103] Although that question "leads" the child to speak about Frank and Ileana, it is, of course, otherwise open-ended.

On cross-examination, the limits of Dr. Coleman's analysis were laid bare. Did he have any knowledge whether any of the items he labeled as "fantasy" were reflected in the charging documents? No. Did he ever go through the interviews to determine how often children said no to leading questions? No. Did he go through the tapes and determine how many times a child gave information about sexual acts that was not contained in a leading question? No.[104] It was difficult to conclude that Coleman was anything but an underprepared hired gun. His testimony did not accommodate any of the obvious differences between children or among individual interviews. But then, allowing that any of the interviews were acceptable would lead to the conclusion that the entire case was not a result of "brainwashing" by the Bragas.

The problems with his testimony, as prosecutors pointed out in the state's summation, were much more basic. First, Coleman entirely ignored the most detailed disclosures in the case—those made by Jason Cramer on August 9. Coleman said he skipped that tape because in it the boy was "simply playing."[105] Second, Coleman did not take any other evidence into account. He agreed on cross-examination that there would be cause for concern if a group of three- and four-year-olds started French-kissing their parents and acting in the highly sexualized ways described in the case.[106] But since Coleman never analyzed that kind of evidence in the Country Walk case, he did not know that such evidence pervaded the case. Finally, he wrote off many children because they made statements about feces that he considered inherently unbelievable. Again, he was apparently unaware that there was a significant amount of testimony, including a photograph, that substantiated Frank Fuster's strange fascination with the feces. One of the many aspects of this case that has been lost in the witch-hunt narrative is how many claims originally labeled as fantastic—masks, a dead bird, playing with feces—were proven in this case.

The final defense witness was Frank Fuster. His lawyer, Jeffrey Samek, made it clear that the decision whether or not to testify was entirely up to the defendant.[107] It was also apparent from Samek's remarks to the judge that he did not think it was advisable for Fuster to testify. Indeed, there were open arguments between Samek and Fuster during the trial about impromptu press conferences that Fuster held against the advice of counsel. Much of Fuster's testimony was an extended series of negative responses—no, never, absolutely not—to questions from his own lawyer. Samek also tried to defuse a few pieces of physical evidence in the case, including the grotesque picture of Noel in a bathroom covered in feces. This is Fuster's reply to the question, "Why did you take a picture like this?"

> When my wife called me and told me what my son had done, I thought it was funny. I happened to have the camera ready. I took a picture of my son to show it to him when he gets older. I thought it was funny.[108]

On cross-examination, Frank Fuster basically called every other adult in the case a liar. The parents who saw him during the daytime were liars, the parents who saw video equipment in the house were liars, and the business associates of Fuster's who had seen the scary masks that he wore were liars. And the children were all, in Fuster's words, "brainwashed." There were also many exchanges that seemed to involve semantic hair splitting by Fuster. He refused to agree that what Ileana did was a babysitting service, even though the business cards and advertisements for their service used those precise words.[109] The most significant of these verbal contortions involved a visit to his doctor shortly before his arrest. This is when Fuster claimed that he had visited his doctor about diabetes, but the doctor also checked him for venereal disease "since [he] already had the blood." Fuster allowed that he had "a big pain" on his penis at the time as well, but he maintained that this was caused by his zipper and had nothing to do with his visit to the doctor.[110] Neither side ever called Fuster's doctor. Apparently neither side was sure he would be useful as a witness.[111] The defense also chose not to call Noel. They apparently concluded they could not rely on him to present Frank's version of events.

Ileana Fuster, Rebuttal Witness

The prosecution called a few rebuttal witnesses, of which Ileana Fuster was by far the most notable. Even though she had pleaded guilty in August, it was not clear whether she would testify against her husband. This critical point has been lost in a blur of revisionist history addressed later in this chapter. But the simple fact is that Ileana Fuster's plea was "straight up"—she did not agree to testify in exchange for her plea, and the state promised her nothing. It remained unclear through September 1985 whether she would testify. While the trial proceeded in September, Ileana went through several days of deposition. Those depositions apparently convinced prosecutors she would be a good rebuttal witness. But they did not call her as a witness for their case-in-chief. Had Frank not testified, Ileana would not have either. It was Frank Fuster's claims that she rebutted.

When Ileana took the stand, she portrayed her marriage as filled with physical violence, and she testified that the babysitting service was Frank's idea. He was often alone with the children, she testified, recalling Becky Taylor complaining, "She asked me why do I have to leave her with Frank, that she didn't like it, that she was scared of him, things like that."[112] She said that Tammy Lucas had told her much the same thing. Ileana also testified further that Frank would frequently hide in the bedroom when parents came to get their children. This is one of the reasons it took so long to answer the front door.

The moment when Ileana began to implicate Frank in sexual abuse, by saying she had seen Frank in the bedroom with a naked Tom Leventhal, Frank screamed across the courtroom: "You are a liar. You are a liar. God is going to punish you for this."[113] Ileana let out a pained cry in response. The transcript does not contain such information, but this is how a Miami Herald reporter described her response: "Ileana Fuster, who was testifying as a prosecution witness, screamed. Her mouth dropped open and she fell back, raising her hands to protect her face."[114] It was one of the defining moments of the trial. Frank displayed his violent temper and Ileana demonstrated an instinctual, cowering response. All three network affiliates in Miami led with the same dramatic footage: Ileana Fuster recoiling under the piercing screams of her fiercely angry husband. The jury was quickly dismissed, the court took a recess, and there was a sidebar about whether to gag the defendant. The judge declined. When proceedings continued, Ileana made it clear that Frank had sucked Tom Leventhal's penis.[115]

The remainder of her direct testimony included many specific, incriminating statements against Frank. She testified that Noel had asked her once "if it was okay for his father to touch his penis."[116] She said that Frank "wanted to see [her] kiss Joshua's penis," so she did it "twice."[117] She described being cut with a knife by Frank and being anally raped with a cross that Frank kept between their bedroom mattresses. (Police found the cross between the mattresses when they searched the house.) And she described finding Frank in the bathroom once, putting his penis in Noel's mouth. Noel subsequently vomited.[118]

Finally, she addressed some of the features of the case that were described as bizarre. She testified about a mask that Frank used to scare the children: "The mask had hair, white hair and front, the front was white and green a little bit and—."[119] (The description bears out the apparent confusion when Tammy Lucas said the mask was white and Becky Taylor said it was green.) She described a bird and a snake, both of which were in the house and both of which died while being handled by Frank.[120]

Ileana Fuster's testimony was damning, to be sure. It was also less than satisfactory. She did not verify all of the things one might think she would have seen. Many of the parents thought she drastically understated her own culpability. In sum, Ileana remained somewhat inscrutable to the end. Asked afterward in a civil deposition whether he thought Ileana was a "willing" participant with her husband, Dan Casey, one of the prosecutors, replied, "I guess it depends on how you define willing."[121]

The Verdict

The jury deliberated for eleven hours over two days. They asked to review tapes or notes six times. Parents of the children in the case were concerned that the jury did not return more quickly. Then again, it seems clear the jury did not rush to judgment. They ultimately found Frank Fuster guilty in some form on all charges. Three charges were dropped before jury deliberations and the jury found Fuster guilty of a lesser included charge in two instances (see Figure 6.7). Fuster was sentenced to 165 years in prison. He appealed his conviction through the Florida courts, ending with the state supreme court declining to review the case. Fuster later pursued it in the federal courts, filing a habeas corpus claim in 1995 that included a supporting affidavit by Maggie Bruck. His federal appeals were unsuccessful. Eventually, the U.S. Supreme Court declined to hear the case, effectively ending the case more than twenty years after the original conviction.[122]

Figure 6.7 Country Walk, Full Counts, Individual and Group, Frank only, by First Braga Interview, and by Disposition.

Each icon represents one child. Children are in order of original Braga interview sequence.

Part Two: Revisionist History (1993–Present)

Just one year after the conviction in Country Walk, there was a story in the San Francisco Examiner arguing that "a presumption of guilt" had marked a series of dubious child sexual abuse cases across the country. The emphasis of the series was on "bizarre" features that allegedly tied all of these cases together, and the authors included the Country Walk case. They summarized it as follows: "Allegations included pornography, the drinking of urine, eating of feces and sexual acts during such common preschool games as duck, duck goose and Simon Says."[123] Neither of these lengthy newspaper stories delved into the case in any detail. Two years later, Charlier and Downing included the case in their list of thirty-six.

The first author to cast doubt on the case in the 1990s was Debbie Nathan, who had written an article in the Village Voice in 1987 questioning a day-care sex abuse case from El Paso. Nathan used the term "junior McMartins" to describe that case and many others, and the Country Walk case was one of a half-dozen she mentioned by name.[124] Her first writing to mention the Country Walk case in any detail was a chapter on the "Ritual Abuse Scare" in an academic book. She argued that despite widespread claims about ritual abuse, "investigators have uniformly failed to turn up the adult witnesses or physical evidence" one might expect to find in such cases. She allowed in a footnote, however, that in the Country Walk case it "appears that the husband perpetrated sadomasochistic assaults against the wife (who was legally a minor) and possibly against the younger children, including abuse involving urine and excrement."[125]

She abandoned this view in 1993, when Janet Reno was nominated to be attorney general of the United States. That year, Nathan published a detailed critique of the Country Walk case in a journal called Issues in Child Abuse Accusations. Although the journal has an impressive sounding title and is sometimes even referred to as "peer-reviewed," it was actually self-published by Ralph Underwager, the psychologist who made his living appearing for the defense in child sexual abuse cases and who Fuster's defense replaced with Lee Coleman after a disastrous deposition in the summer of 1985. In the article that Nathan published in Underwager's journal, she omitted the substance of the footnote quoted above in favor of a blanket critique of the case. Nathan also coauthored a related article about the case with Steven Almond in New Times, an alternative weekly newspaper in Miami.[126] A host of writers then relied on Nathan's work to charge Reno with presiding over a gross miscarriage of justice. In 1998 and 2002, the PBS program Frontline aired programs assailing the Country Walk case. The case had become a central part of the witch-hunt narrative.

The witch-hunt narrative about the Country Walk case is built on a series of claims, none of which has been closely examined except in the Fuster's federal habeas corpus appeal, where a federal magistrate wrote a 124-page decision in 2002 that rejected all of these arguments.[127] The focus of the revisionist view has been on "child suggestibility." Those arguments are implausible on their face, given that Fuster's son tested positive for gonorrhea of the throat and Ileana Fuster corroborated claims made by the children. In the revisionist view, however, all of this evidence has been dismissed and Frank Fuster has been portrayed as the victim of a "witch-hunt." They make this claim partly because Fuster was an ex-con and partly because of overzealousness by the State Attorney's Office. These arguments, which have been made in condensed form by many writers, require detailed treatment to analyze in full. The six sections that follow each analyze an important element of the witch-hunt narrative about the case.

The "Inaccurate Test" Myth

The single most incriminating piece of evidence against Frank Fuster was that his six-year-old son tested positive for gonorrhea of the throat. Fuster himself did not test positive for gonorrhea at the time of arrest, but it turns out he had recently received a short course of penicillin treatments after seeing his doctor about "a big pain" in his penis.[128] Fuster's account of the treatment would be laughable if the subject matter were not so serious. According to him, the sore on his penis was caused by his zipper, and the doctor prescribed penicillin "just in case." He also claims his visit to the doctor was originally "for diabetic [problems]." Fuster's explanation for how he ended up receiving penicillin is as follows: "My doctor said 'I'm going to check you for syphilis, just in case, since I already have the blood.'"[129]

The positive lab results on Fuster's son were fully documented at trial. The precise test that was used by the laboratory—the RapID/NH System—was evaluated in the Journal of Clinical Microbiology in March 1983. In 162 cases of known N. gonorrhoeae, the RapID/NH system correctly identified 100 percent of the cases; the alternative, and more time-consuming, carbohydrate-based method identified 98 percent of the cases.[130] The RapID/NH System was called rapid because the required incubation period was four hours, compared to twenty-four hours for older tests. The positive accuracy value of the RapID NH test was found to be 99.76 percent. But this number should not be applied directly to the results on Fuster's son without information on prevalence rates of gonorrhea in children. The article concluded: "the accuracy of [the RapID/NH system] is impressive, and the system has been proven to be superior to conventional carbohydrate degradation tests."[131]

Years after the jury verdict, Debbie Nathan claimed that the test used in the Country Walk case "could not distinguish bacteria that cause gonorrhea from other harmless ones that normally live in children's throats."[132] To support this claim she cited an impressive-sounding article from the Centers for Disease Control called "Incorrect Identification of Neisseria Gonorrhoeae from Infants and Children."[133] The article described fourteen cases (out of forty) in which the CDC ascertained that an initial positive test result for gonorrhea was in error. But the article has nothing to do with the Country Walk case. None of the children with false-positive results were reported as having been tested with the RapID/NH system. This is not surprising since RapID/NH is used when sexually transmitted diseases are suspected, not when a child has conjunctivitis or in a routine exam, as was the case for most of the children described in the article.

To read Nathan and other critics, one would think there was only one STD test used nationwide at the time of the Country Walk case. In fact, there were numerous tests used for different populations according to the circumstances. The CDC article is about a number of tests that may suggest STDs but are generally given for other purposes. Indeed, the authors of the article concluded that "unless there is other evidence of sexual abuse, initiation of formal child abuse investigations should await the confirmed identification of the isolate."[134] Notably, this is apparently what happened in the Country Walk case: the isolates were confirmed. Lab technician Freda Burstyn testified that after the Martin Lewis agar results were observed to be positive there was "a biochemical test to confirm it."[135] Moreover, the confirmatory test was processed at a reference laboratory, as recommended by the CDC. In sum, the RapID/NH test was shown to be highly accurate. More recent studies raise serious concerns about false negatives, meaning that children who tested negative might actually have been positive.[136]

Noel's "Retraction"

Some writers have touted Noel's "retraction" of statements admitting that his father gave him gonorrhea of the throat. Since the underlying claim about the alleged inaccuracy of the test is false, it would appear that any retraction by Noel would fit well into the model of child abuse accommodation syndrome. Instead, his alleged retraction has been offered as evidence of Fuster's innocence. On close examination, however, the retraction itself is not what has been claimed.

The most detailed statement of the claim that Noel Fuster retracted his admissions about abuse by his father was made by Alexander Cockburn in The Nation.[137] Quoting selectively from a civil deposition taken years later, Cockburn claims that Noel "unequivocally" retracted any and all claims that he was ever abused by Frank Fuster. The deposition, Cockburn neglected to mentioned, was taken in a civil lawsuit filed on Noel's behalf against the Arvida Corporation, the developers and operators of the Country Walk development. The portions that Cockburn cites are entirely from questions asked by the lawyer who was trying to protect Arvida's assets. Apparently abandoning any concern about blatantly leading questions, Cockburn relies on this exchange, reproduced in his article, to support the argument that Noel Fuster had recanted:

> Q: It's my understanding and impression from reviewing many documents including lots of reports by psychologists that from the very beginning when you were asked if your father sexually abused you in any way that you were steadfast in saying that he did not; is that correct?
>
> A: Yes, sir.
>
> Q: It's my further understanding that you only said that he did when you felt you essentially had no alternative and if you didn't tell someone what they wanted to hear they would just go on endlessly; is that also true?
>
> A: Yes.
>
> Q: Is it, in fact, true that he did not ever abuse you?
>
> A: Yes, sir.

Cockburn then omits, without the appropriate editorial markings, almost four pages of questions and answers that lead up to this exchange:

> Q: Now you initially saw, I think doctor either Miranda or Drs. Braga; is that correct? Do you remember which one was first? I know they were the early ones, Dr. Simon, Marcie Cramer and the two doctors named Braga. Do you have any recollection of that?
>
> A: Are they the ones with the ponytails?
>
> Q: That's right.
>
> A. Yes.
>
> Q: Your memory is pretty good. That's right, they have ponytails. Did they try to change your original statement, that your father had not harmed you?
>
> A: Yes, sir.

Before analyzing the significance of these two snippets, it should be noted that Noel Fuster's "original statement" was not that he had never been harmed by his father. To the contrary, the very first day Noel spoke with the Bragas in August 1984, his reply to the question "Does your dad ever hit you?" was "Some days."[138]

Contrary to the self-serving statement that the Arvida lawyer included as a preface to the final question quoted above ("Your memory is pretty good"), the quality of Noel Fuster's memory in this deposition was demonstrably deficient. In the pages Cockburn omitted without editorial indication, Noel said he did not remember any of the children who attended the babysitting service over those nine months. The boy who supposedly had a "pretty good" memory could not remember a single person who attended the babysitting service.

Later in the deposition it was revealed that Noel had been hypnotized since the events at issue in the case.[139] This fact alone would disqualify him from testifying in court. Indeed, critics of the Country Walk case claim that Ileana Fuster's confession should be disregarded entirely because the defense psychologists who visited her in prison essentially hypnotized her. Though that characterization is contested, there is no question that Noel Fuster actually went to a hypnotist.[140] There is a strong argument—generally endorsed by the same people who criticize the Country Walk conviction—that no weight should be given his post-hypnotic statements.

Even accepting the boy's deposition testimony on its face, it is apparent that at age fifteen Noel Fuster was deeply conflicted and extremely confused about what happened eight years earlier. It is also clear that he experienced bizarre treatment at the hands of Frank Fuster. Among the many statements Cockburn does not acknowledge in this deposition are ones confirming several elements of the case Cockburn has ridiculed. For instance, Noel says:

> I was a little traumatized about the gorilla mask he used to put on. He used to put on a gorilla mask and scare the kids and I never really got that out of my head.[141]

Later he recalls that "the kids would scream" when his father scared them with the mask. It should be kept in mind that features like masks are precisely the kinds of "elements" that Charlier and Downing labeled as fantastic and then discounted. Cockburn's summary of this deposition also omits the myriad ways in which Noel expressed uncertainty and ambivalence about what had happened years earlier. At one point Noel refers to "this confusion that I've always had about whether I was sexually abused." He also says "it would be a relief to know" whether he was sexually abused. Later he says that "Everything is so vague" from back then, but he allows, "I sometimes remember things that are extreme."[142] The assertion that Noel has provided an unequivocal retraction simply is not supported by the evidence.[143]

Ileana Fuster's "Coerced Confession"

The revisionist view of the Country Walk case also dismisses Ileana Fuster's guilty plea and subsequent testimony as coerced. These critiques make four related arguments: (1) the state desperately needed Ileana Fuster's testimony, (2) Ileana Fuster was seriously mistreated in prison, (3) she was then brainwashed into pleading guilty, and (4) she has since given a convincing retraction of her guilty plea and related testimony. All four of these claims fail under close scrutiny.

The revisionist view of Ileana's testimony begins with the claim that it was so vital to the state's case that they were willing to obtain it at any cost. According to Nathan, "Reno decided that to get a conviction she would need a confession from Ileana Fuster."[144] The notion that the prosecution had to "break Ileana down" in order to win their case is contradicted directly by the chronology of the case. The case was originally scheduled for trial on January 7, 1985. The defense sought several delays. Every time, the state objected and lost. Reno made what was described as "a rare court appearance" in June to argue strongly against any further delay. She lost the motion, and the trial date was set for September 1985.[145] Ileana Fuster did not decide to plead guilty until the third week in August. Indeed, the psychologists who allegedly brainwashed her into that position had been hired by the defense only two weeks earlier. But the state was anxious to go ahead with its case months before that. Their repeated objections to defense motions for continuances clearly contradict the position they would take if Ileana's testimony was considered vital to their case. Nathan's claim is also contradicted by the role that Ileana's testimony actually played in the trial. The state did not include Fuster in the case-in-chief; she was used only on rebuttal. It is not clear that she would have testified at all had Frank Fuster not done likewise; her testimony rebutted his.

Whatever the importance of Ileana Fuster's testimony in proving Frank Fuster's guilt, those who reject the substance of her testimony also argue that she was coerced into making incriminating statements. They maintain that the coercion began with sustained and extreme mistreatment in prison, followed by a series of questionable visits by two psychologists. Her confinement has been described in horrifying terms, including the claim that she was "often kept nude" and was "drugged most of the time."[146] These claims rest entirely on a sworn statement by Stephen Dinerstein, who was hired in 1984 as a private investigator for the defense. Eight years after the conviction, Dinerstein made graphic claims about Ileana's mistreatment in jail that he did not make at the time of the trial.[147] Remarkably, Dinerstein has been accepted as the primary source in the revisionist history, even though there are serious reasons to doubt his credibility.[148]

Dinerstein's claims are contradicted by several credible sources from the time of the alleged mistreatment. First and foremost, the Fusters' own motion about their prison conditions, heard on April 12, 1985, does not support these claims. The claims made by the Fusters under the banner of "cruel and unusual punishment" were actually quite tame. Ileana wanted to be moved out of her "safety cell" into the general population—a request that the judge granted. But her complaints about solitary confinement were ordinary. She complained that she had "only limited access to shower facilities," "only limited access to hot water for coffee," "no access to a day room," and "no access to television."[149] But notably, there was nothing in her motion in 1985 about drugs, sleep deprivation, or lack of clothing. Frank Fuster's complaints about his prison conditions were patently absurd and have not been repeated since. He wanted, among other things, two showers a day and cable television. Ileana's letters from prison also contradict the claim made by Frank's lawyer years later.[150]

Evidence from three adults who interacted with Ileana Fuster in 1984–85 contradicts Dinerstein's claims as well. These adults all had more contact with Ileana during this time period than Dinerstein did. First, Shirley Blando, a chaplain in the facility who befriended Ileana, said nothing about her being nude or any of the other wild claims that have been made about her incarceration. To the contrary, Blando recounted frequently sitting outside on a patio with Ileana, including in the months prior to the motion where she complained about lack of access to a "day room."[151] Blando also remarked specifically about how well Fuster did while in solitary confinement. A Sergeant Spears, a shift commander at the Detention Center, testified that Fuster "had more recreational time than any other inmate within her cell block, and she spent most of her time with Shirley Blando [assistant chaplain]." She also verified that Fuster made "frequent visits to the sun deck."[152] The Rev. Tommy Watson, who visited Ileana weekly and later assisted in her education, also took strong issue with Dinerstein's years-after-the-fact claims. Watson wrote that during Fuster's period of solitary confinement, "I saw her in the chapel service and in Chaplain Blando's office many times. Ileana asked me to thank the Captain of the detention center for her kind care given while she was in jail."[153]

Ileana pleaded guilty on August 22, 1985. She was not offered anything in exchange for this plea. Judge Newman specifically asked if she understood that she could be sentenced to life in prison. She replied that she did.[154] She later provided detailed testimony against her husband, both in depositions and on the stand for the final day of his criminal trial. When she appeared for sentencing in November, Ileana "repeatedly told [Judge] Newman 'I am sorry . . . I am very sorry."[155] In 1993, Debbie Nathan argued that the substance of Ileana's testimony was created by two psychologists hired by Michael Von Zamft, her own lawyer. The psychologists did not testify in the criminal trial, but one of them reportedly told Nathan years later that what he did was “a lot like reverse brainwashing.”[156] There is apparently no tape recording of that statement; nor have any written notes ever been referenced by Nathan.

The reason the defense hired these psychologists has been lost in the rush to condemn them. Ileana had been subject to physical threats and psychological control from Frank Fuster. Indeed, Dr. Charles B. Mutter, the psychiatrist who examined Ileana for the court several times between July and November 1985, provided a cogent explanation: “although she played a role in [the abuse], this was not a role of volition, but the role of a terrorized human being.”[157]

It also been argued that her guilty plea was “hardly a definitive admission” because of something she said in court the day of her guilty plea.[158] This claim is based on an inaccurate and misleading “quote.” Here is a precise quotation from the court proceedings; the words in bold were left out of the “excerpt” that has been reproduced by Nathan, Nathan and Snedeker, and Robert Rosenthal.[159]

> THE DEFENDANT: Judge, I would like you to know that I am pleading guilty, not because I feel guilty, but because I think—I think it’s in the best interest. It’s the best for my own interest and for the children and for the Court and all the people that are working on the case, but I am not pleading guilty because I feel guilty or because I think I have a criminal mind.
>
> THE COURT: All right.
>
> THE DEFENDANT: There were circumstances and that—I was raped at sixteen. I was taken away from my home and my school. My attorney said that I am an unlucky person but I just want you to know that I am pleading guilty not because I feel guilty or that I know I am, that I am guilty. I am inn ocent of all those charges. I wouldn’t have done anything to harm those children. I have never done anything in my life. I have never seen such a case in my life before. I wasn’t raised in any environment like it. I am innocent. I am just doing it—I am pleading guilty you get all of this over and I think it’s best for the parents and everyone.[160]

What Ileana Fuster said was offered as a reason for a lenient sentence. Not only have Nathan and others omitted the gist of her statement (“there were circumstances,” “I was raped”), they have also omitted any reference to what came before and after it. The complete transcript of the proceedings on that day demonstrates that Ileana Fuster first affirmed she was satisfied with her legal representation, she understood the charges, she knew the constitutional rights she was giving up by pleading guilty, she had not been coerced or promised anything, she understood exactly what she was doing, she knew she could be sentenced to as much as life in prison, and she was entering the plea because she felt it was in her best interest.[161]

In 1994, years after Ileana had finished her sentence, returned to Honduras, and changed her last name back to Flores, Frank Fuster's lawyers announced she had retracted her trial testimony. The retraction was recorded in Honduras by a defense lawyer named Arthur Cohen, who was working for Frank. It is unclear what Cohen told Ileana Flores that convinced her to attend this meeting. There was no representative for the prosecution present; nor did Flores have her own legal counsel. Nevertheless, Fuster's defense team convinced a federal judge to schedule an evidentiary hearing on the basis of the statement produced by Cohen. On close reading, the statement does not support the claims that have been made about it. First, it is replete with equivocal answers, even though Peter Boyer would later call it an "unequivocal" retraction. Second, Ileana contradicted some of the most vivid claims made about her pre-trial incarceration. For example, she specifically says that she was not held naked, contradicting a key assertion made by Nathan, Cockburn, and others who insist that her original confession was coerced. Third, Cohen appears throughout the interview to be looking for evidence to support a preexisting conclusion, and he actively resists answers that incriminate Frank Fuster.[162]

The hearing at which this "new evidence" would have been subject to cross-examination never took place, even though the judge allowed testimony to be taken by satellite from Honduras. As the defense euphemistically put it, Ileana Flores was "unavailable to provide testimony to the court."[163] This is not true. She was available, but she was apparently not planning to say what the defense wanted to hear. She had retracted her so-called retraction. Rev. Watson, who visited Ileana Fuster regularly in prison in Florida, went to see her in Honduras after the stories of her "retraction" surfaced in the Miami media. He returned with a letter signed by Ileana Flores stating she was pressured by Cohen.[164] Watson later testified that Ileana Fuster told him "she was pressured to give statements and that she realized that what she had done was wrong."[165]

Years later, Ileana Flores provided another would-be retraction; this time it was for the television program Frontline. As before, the statement was made without any adversarial cross-examination. Ileana had apparently returned to the United States without proper documentation, and as Frontline acknowledged, the only way she could ever stay in the country legally would be if somehow her own conviction were overturned.[166] The statement she provided was a last-ditch effort to obtain legal permission to stay in the country. It did not work.

Whitewashing Frank Fuster

Frank Fuster's prior record—which included a recent conviction for child molestation—was undoubtedly one of the most damning pieces of evidence in the court of public opinion. Although for most people it is nearly impossible to imagine an adult having the inclination to sexually abuse a child, it is much easier to imagine someone previously convicted of child molestation having such inclinations. This is probably why even critics of the conviction have allowed that some kind of abuse "probably happened" to some of the children at Country Walk.[167] But the jury was never told about the prior conviction, since such information would be considered too prejudicial.

Those endorsing the witch-hunt narrative, however, have gone to considerable lengths to minimize the relevance and the substance of Fuster's prior record. One approach is to claim that his record actually made him a target. "He thought that all was behind him," Frontline intoned in their program called Did Daddy Do It? "But once word of Frank's record flashed through the neighborhood it was only a matter of time," their narrative continued. "The crusade had the perfect defendant—an ex-con, a convicted child molester."[168] The idea that his status as an ex-con left him targeted for arrest is contradicted by the basic chronology of the case. The two separate incidents that formed the origins of the case—Donald Menninger's spontaneous utterance in April and John St. Lorenzo's appearance of being drugged in late July—both happened before anyone was aware of Fuster's criminal record. Emma St. Lorenzo triggered the investigation without the slightest idea about Fuster's record.

Another approach to minimizing Fuster's criminal record has been to minimize or deny the underlying facts of his prior convictions. Frontline did that when it reported, without any skepticism, that Fuster's first-degree murder conviction years earlier stemmed from "an accident."[169] His child molestation conviction has also been minimized in the witch-hunt narrative. Author Mark Pendergrast virtually exonerated Fuster of those charges, declaring him to be innocent on the basis of a single interview—with Frank Fuster.[170] Neither of those claims squares with reality. There would be little or no reason to elaborate on these points if the effort to rehabilitate Fuster were not so persistent, and the willingness to accept his dubious denials without any apparent skepticism were not so widespread.

First, the manslaughter charge. Fuster was arrested on January 16, 1969, when a police officer witnessed him shoot a man to death with a rifle after a minor motor-vehicle accident in the Bronx. Fuster was charged with two felonies: manslaughter and reckless endangerment for the "depraved indifference to life" that he demonstrated when pointing his loaded rifle at the off-duty officer who arrested him. He eventually pleaded guilty to first-degree manslaughter and served four years of a ten-year sentence. Since then, Fuster has provided differing accounts of the incident—none consistent with official records. In all of his accounts, he bears no responsibility for his actions, even though he pleaded guilty to first-degree manslaughter.[171] When Frontline interviewed Fuster in prison in 2001, he described the shooting as "an accident." Frontline correspondents Michael Kirk and Peter Boyer accepted and repeated his version without a hint of skepticism, or, apparently, any original research.[172]

The revisionist history of the Country Walk case also includes a whitewashed version of Fuster's prior conviction for child molestation. The case began with the allegations of a nine-year-old girl who told her mother, immediately after the fact, that he had fondled her breasts and genitals through her clothing while he was driving her to her home. Fuster was arrested on September 21, 1981, for lewd and lascivious assault on a minor. At his jury trial in 1982, the girl testified in detail, and she sustained a lengthy cross-examination. Fuster did not take the stand. The jury found the girl credible and convicted Fuster of lewd and lascivious conduct.

The facts of the case have since been distorted beyond recognition by Fuster and his supporters. But a careful examination of his statements to the police officer who arrested him in 1981 reveals the behavior of someone seeking to rationalize sexual contact with a child. Fuster confirmed, but never explained, that he entered the van through the passenger side. That is how, according to Fuster, "he may have brushed up against" the nine-year-old girl.[173] Fuster also admitted "that he asked her to sit with him because he was sleepy and wanted someone to talk to and possibly have someone to grab the wheel if he fell asleep." Fuster even acknowledged putting his arms around the girl who he had made sit on his lap. Fuster said this was to "keep her from falling off the seat."[174]

As for Fuster's "vehement denial" and the lie detector test he supposedly passed, one can only observe that he did not avail himself of the opportunity to take the stand and try to explain the statements he made to the arresting officer.[175] And there is no evidence in the court file of a lie detector test. But Fuster's MMPI tests (personality tests) were revealed through the court proceedings, and they found him to be "compulsive and paranoid" with a "strong need to see himself as extremely virtuous."[176] Remarkably, Fuster has since admitted even more clearly that he committed the basic acts charged in the 1981 case. At one point in his rambling statement at the end of his parole violation hearing in 1985, he demonstrated: "This is how I touch her chest area. I don't see any sexual movement here. I also touch her in her vagina area. That's it. That was the whole case."[177] One wonders whether Mark Pendergrast and others, who have accepted Fuster's subsequent protestations of innocence, are aware that he admitted in court that in the course of driving a nine-year-old girl home he touched both her "chest area" and her "vagina area."[178]

This is not the full extent of Fuster's criminal record. Police records also indicate that during the investigation of the 1981 child molestation case, Fuster indicated that he had been a suspect in an alleged rape with a girl he had picked up from Central Shopping Center. He confessed to having had intercourse with her.[179] She was a "very beautiful but demented young woman," according to Fuster.[180] The case was not prosecuted. During her pre-trial detention, Ileana Fuster told three separate adults about the violence and abuse she endured at Frank's hands. There is evidence she was beaten and that she was scared to death of him, as was his previous wife.[181] Frank was observed striking Ileana in the face at a Halloween party, and he once pulled a gun on Ileana's stepfather. There was also evidence that it was his rape of Ileana that led to their marriage. That disclosure predated, by at least two months, the involvement of the psychologists who the witch-hunt narrative blames for all of the incriminatory statements Ileana later made in court.[182]

In short, what Frontline described as a "fairy tale love story" was much closer to a horror story from the first day they met. Their marriage was, according to numerous accounts, precipitated by a rape when Ileana was barely sixteen years old, and it was punctuated by documented violence and the sexual assault of at least one minor. None of those things prove that Frank Fuster was guilty of the Country Walk charges, of course. But the minimization and denial of his criminal record in the witch-hunt narrative is noteworthy. Given Fuster's violent and dishonest history, one wonders how anyone could cite his denials in the County Walk case with utter credulity and without any acknowledgment of the considerable evidence to the contrary.

Manufacturing "Fantastic" Taint

There has been a curious evolution in the argument that "fantastic claims" characterized the Country Walk case. The case was tagged as having several fantastic elements by Charlier and Downing and others. They included allegations about feces, masks, and a dead bird. But a close examination of the trial transcript and related exhibits makes it clear that Fuster actually had a perverse interest in excrement, that he owned scary masks and used them to scare children (and adults), and that he had shown the children a dead bird. Those claims quietly disappeared from the witch-hunt narrative without any acknowledgment of their basis in fact.

Proponents of the narrative did not admit that the fantastic elements used to discredit the case in the 1980s had been proven to be true—and, by implication, that such things might be true in other cases discredited on the same basis. Instead, the argument shifted and new claims about fantastic elements appeared—ones that, curiously, were never raised by the defense in the original trial. Ceci and Bruck claimed in 1993 that "interweaved among the credible allegations" in the Country Walk case "were ones that seemed fabulous, such as riding on sharks and eating the head of another person."[183] The authors did not provide specific citations for either of these claims, let alone excerpts from any relevant interviews. Indeed, the only source that directly related to the Country Walk case in their 1993 article was Jan Hollingsworth's book, which does not support this claim. Ceci and Bruck made essentially the same claim in their 1995 book, Jeopardy in the Courtroom. Immediately after a discussion of satanic and ritualistic abuse—defined in the most extreme terms as cult activities that include witchcraft or animal sacrifice—the authors asserted that the Country Walk case was "characterized by these types of allegations."[184] The authors' only elaboration of this claim, however, makes no reference to witchcraft or animal sacrifice. Rather, the language is almost precisely the same as their 1993 article: "Interleaved among the children's plausible allegations were fabulous ones, such as riding on sharks and eating the head of another person."[185] But the transcripts of the interviews in the Country Walk case do not bear out these claims; there are very few such references to these items and those instances are explainable, not "fabulous."

"Riding on Sharks"

There are approximately eighty hours of interview tapes in the Country Walk case, involving upwards of twenty-seven children. From reading Ceci and Bruck's claim, one would think that these interviews would be filled with references to riding sharks and eating heads. But a full-text search of the interviews that have been transcribed and digitized by Professor James Wood finds only one reference to sharks. It is from Jason Cramer on August 28. The word appears in a statement where the boy was discussing Jacques Cousteau and television programs about whales and sharks. A manual examination of the entire trial transcript, which includes transcriptions of thirty-three videotapes, contains only one other reference to a shark, in an interview with Brian Arrigan, a three-year-old who was not involved in any of the individual named charges. The exchange is nothing more than a simple conversation with a child who is interested in a stuffed- animal shark in the interview room.[186] There is nothing fabulous about these statements; nor are they distributed throughout the children's statements.

"Eating the Head of Another Person"

Ceci and Bruck's other claim about fabulous statements in the Country Walk case involves "eating the head of another person." Again, a full-text search of the interviews compiled by Wood finds no reference to "eating the head" of anything, including a person. There are a few references to either the "cut off your head game" or the "who's gonna lose their head" game. Here is how Jessie Lipton described the game in her January interview:

A: They played cut your head off.
Q: Cut your head off. Can you show me how they did that.
A: They would ask us, "Do you want a cupcake?" and if you said yes, then he would cut your head off.
Q: Did he really cut, cut off heads, or pretend?
A: He would (inaudible) put the knife to your neck.

Laurie Braga then asked further questions to ascertain precisely what the child was saying:

Q: Well, now this a little hard for me to understand. Help me understand, cuz remember I wasn't there so I don't know anything other than what you tell me, okay. You said, they would say, "do you want a cup cake," okay. And if you said yes, then he would hold a knife to your throat? Is that, is that what you said?
A: Yes.
Q: Okay. But if you said yes, and then you wouldn't eat it, that's what I . . .
A: No.
Q: No. Why would he hold a knife to your throat if you said yes you want a cup cake?
A: Cuz is part of the game he was playing.
Q: Is part of the game. Do you think he was trying to scare you?
A: Yes.
Q: Yeah. Did he ever say that he hurt you if you told?
A: Yes.
Q: Can you tell me about that?
A: I said I was going to tell my mom.
Q: Um hum.
A: And, then he said "I'm going to cut your head off."[187]

She never said anything about eating the head of another person; rather, she was describing a game that Fuster played apparently to scare the children. Jason Cramer made similar statements in his first interview on August 9.

It remains unclear how Ceci and Bruck came to make the claim about "eating the head of another person." What still requires explanation is why Ceci and Bruck inflated a few small, inaccurate references—one to the cut off your head game, and the other to riding a shark—into the claim that implausible and so-called fabulous claims were interwoven into the statements of "the children" in the Country Walk case.

Suggesting Child Suggestibility

The Country Walk case is one of six "case studies" in Ceci and Bruck's book Jeopardy in the Courtroom: A Scientific Analysis of Children's Testimony. Only the Michaels case is cited more often throughout the book. In short, the case became a central part of the argument that children are more suggestible than previously recognized and that adults charged with such crimes are in jeopardy. This is surprising since Ceci and Bruck's review article in Psychological Bulletin in 1993 suggested that the Country Walk case was different from the Michaels case. Relying on an excerpt from Hollingsworth's book, they interpreted Jason's consistent replies in response to Jeffrey Samek's "angry and accusatory" questions as evidence that "young children are apparently capable of accurately reporting what they witness at least some of the time." There was a strong hint in the article, however, that Ceci and Bruck were reevaluating their position before the article was published. A footnote indicates that since writing the section about Jason's veracity, "we have learned of arguments" that cast doubt on Ileana Fuster's confession. They put the word confession in quotes—and cited Debbie Nathan's article, which had not yet appeared in Ralph Underwager's journal.[188] But by the time Jeopardy in the Courtroom was published, Ceci and Bruck were citing the Country Walk case as evidence of many arguments in their book. The case plays such an important role in the book that these arguments merit close attention.

The claim that the children should not be believed was the core of the defense at the original trial. Lee Coleman, the expert for the defense, argued that the children had all been "brainwashed." His testimony was discredited on a number of grounds, among them that it lacked a solid foundation in the scientific literature. Coleman had never done any original research on the issue. More problematic, he appeared unfamiliar with the relevant scientific literature of the day. In Coleman's defense, there was not much literature in 1985 on the suggestibility of children. Maggie Bruck argued years later that Coleman had "provided insightful testimony" that was hampered only by the lack of scientific studies to support it.[189] But the lack of scientific literature was only one of his problems. When the case is analyzed systematically, it is clear that the charges stemmed almost completely from the children who were interviewed at the State Attorney's Office in the first two days of the investigation. More than seventy-five percent of the individual charges in the case were filed in connection with children interviewed the first four days of the investigation. And Coleman had virtually nothing to say about those interviews.

Years later, Maggie Bruck filed a written declaration in support of Frank Fuster's federal appeal. She claimed that Coleman "had the intellectual tools—i.e., intuition—to detect that certain suggestive questioning could shape the child's response" but that no one could provide "scientific data on the actual impact of suggestive questioning techniques."[190] The phrase "actual impact" refers to the findings of laboratory experiments, not the particular circumstances of individual children and interviews in the Country Walk case. Indeed, Ceci and Bruck's work has the same flaws that Lee Coleman's did at trial. They never conducted a systematic analysis of the interviews in the Country Walk case, notwithstanding the subtitle of their book (a scientific analysis of children's testimony).[191] Even more surprising, Bruck did not conduct a complete analysis of the interviews and related evidence in preparing her detailed affidavit for Frank Fuster's federal court appeal. Her declaration in federal court listed the items she reviewed, and the list did not include some of the earliest and most important interviews. Bruck did not review the very first interview with Jason Cramer, even though Ceci and Bruck relied heavily on a single sentence from this very interview for their claim that fantastic statements were interleaved among the children's statements. (This is one of the interviews that includes a statement about the "cut off your head" game.) Bruck also neglected to review either of the interviews with Donald Menninger, whose statement in the spring of 1984 caused his mother to remove him from babysitting service and warn her friend. Instead, she took the same approach contained in Jeopardy in the Courtroom: citing passages from interviews that she found objectionable without any apparent attention to who was being interviewed, when the interview occurred in the course of the investigation, and what relationship, if any, the interview had on the actual charges in the case. What is lost as a result is any sense of the actual impact or representativeness of these disembodied snippets.

Picking and choosing brief snippets of disparate interviews overlooks how and when the claims emerged. The approach also overlooks the corroborating behavioral and medical evidence. It ignores all of the evidence from parents about strange observations at the Fusters, including the numerous independent decisions of various families to take children out of the Fusters' care before August 1984. It also paints a misleading picture of the interview sequence, relying on words like "repetitive," instead of doing actual analysis. A few simple calculations prove the point. The Bragas conducted a total of forty-six interviews with twenty-seven children, or fewer than two per child.[192] Focusing only on the children whose statements formed the basis for individual charges, there were twenty-four total interviews involving eight children. The most important children in the case, in other words, were interviewed an average of three times. A few were interviewed more, and others were interviewed less. These numbers alone belie the claims about highly repetitive interviewing. But the arguments in Jeopardy in the Courtroom have been endorsed in so many academic publications that it is worth considering the snippets they cite, and the children they overlook, in more detail.

Irrelevant and Unrepresentative Snippets

One problem with Ceci and Bruck's analysis is that it relies on children who were peripheral to the case to make arguments about children who were central to the case. Four children beyond Noel Fuster account for the seven unidentified snippets from the Country Walk cases that appear in Jeopardy in the Courtroom.[193] Because the children are never identified in any way, it is not clear to the reader that one child, Jessie Lipton, is the same child quoted four times.[194] It is also not clear that two of the four children had little or nothing to do with the charges in the case. For example, an interview with Ariel Thomas is cited as evidence of the investigators "trying to get the children to disclose by telling them what other children allegedly reported."[195] The authors cite a brief exchange where the interviewer does, in fact, mention things that the girl's sister said. But was this interview actually relevant to the case, and more to the point, was it representative of interviews with "the children"? The answer to both questions is no. No charges were brought in connection with this girl; she was not even named in a group charge. One might assume that if there had been examples of this problem among the children with named charges, Ceci and Bruck would have cited them.

Similarly, Ceci and Bruck use a fairly long excerpt from an interview with Brian Arrigan to demonstrate what they interpret as "the interviewers' pursuit of a single hypothesis that abuse had occurred that involved feeding children poison or drugs and playing games in the nude."[196] In this example, the interviewers ask, "When they gave you the stuff to drink, did you feel dizzy?" Ceci and Bruck note that "drinks were not mentioned previously in the interview." They are correct. And in a perfect interview one would never include a question like that without some prior statement from the child. But they are incorrect that this example is representative of the interviews or that it had any actual impact on the charges in the case. Brian Arrigan, three years old at the time, was clearly too young to be a witness in the case. He was never named in any of the individual charges, and no charges were ever brought in connection with allegedly drugged drinks. Although Frank Fuster was never charged with drugging the children—that is impossible to prove after the fact without forensic evidence—there was considerable evidence to suggest he had done so.

The Most Frequently Criticized Children

One child in the Country Walk case has been the focus of most of the criticisms of the case. This girl, Jessie Lipton, was the only child cited at length in Nathan's long article about the case, she was focus of the snippets in Rosenthal's article, and she is the primary child cited in Ceci and Bruck's book. The reason she is the focus of case critics is that she denied any abuse in her first interview with the Bragas, and then months later indicated she had been sexually abused by the Fusters. Bruck stated in her federal court affidavit that this "pattern has raised the most concerns regarding allegations of abuse." She went on to make the unequivocal claim that "this pattern of disclosure characterizes the child witnesses in Fuster."[197] In fact, Jessie Lipton is the only child whose statements fit this pattern.

One fact that has been lost in the use of out-of-context snippets is that Jessie Lipton attended the Fusters' only twice. When she was interviewed in August, then, it had been three months since she last attended. This explains a statement that Bruck found odd: that the girl referred to the Fusters as "strangers."[198] Given her brief attendance at Country Walk, what would have been truly odd is if she had claimed to know them well. The interview has also been criticized for references made to statements by other children. "Some of the children said that they were acting like they were monsters and they wore these masks and scared them," Laurie Braga said at one point. "Is that true? Do you know?" the girl replied. Laurie Braga then said: "I'm not sure, but some of the children said so, and I believe the children because I don't think children make up stories like that. Do you?" The stories about the masks were not "made up" and the interviewer began her answer with "I'm not sure"; nevertheless this interview contained too many references to what other children had said. Portions of this interview became the most significant arguments against the interviews in general. But the interview did not result in any disclosures, and the portions that have been cited repeatedly were not representative of the earlier interviews that were the basis for almost all of the charges in the case. Also, the evidence from Noel Fuster and several adults establishes that the masks were real; they were not something conjured up by the interviewers.

It is also important to note that the state would have gone ahead without any charges connected to Jessie Lipton had her parents not requested that she be interviewed in January. The reason for the request, according to her parents, was that Jessie had "started talking." There was some debate in the State Attorney's Office about whether to conduct the interview. This indicates that, contrary to various claims, the interviewers did not set out to extract incriminating statements through multiple interviews. They did not initiate this interview and were reluctant to conduct it for reasons that seem prescient given the evolution of the witch-hunt narrative.

What the girl said in January corroborated statements made by Jason Cramer months earlier, particularly with regard to the "cut off your head" game. Those statements came in response to open-ended questions. Critics of the case have argued that the girl's parents pressured her into making these statements. It is impossible to assess the parental pressure claim without at least interviewing the parents. But even allowing for the possibility that one might reach a different conclusion than the jury did, it is clear that Jessie Lipton's circumstances are different from those of all of the other important children in the case. Yet she is frequently cited in various critiques of the case, and the claim is often made that her interview was typical or representative of all of the others.

Becky Taylor is the only other child in the case with named charges who denied any abuse in the first investigative interview.[199] But she had already told Cathleen McGinnis at Jackson Memorial Hospital, when asked if she had ever seen a grown man's penis, that she had seen "her daddy's and Frank's." Her denials in the first interview with Bragas were filled with answers such as "I don't want you to know," "I hate the question," and "I have a hard time telling." Even so, she made references in her first interview to masks and snakes. She also made an ambiguous statement about the "pee pee game."[200]

There is no doubt Becky Taylor was the most avoidant and anxious child in the case. Her mother testified that when Detective Meznarich tried to interview Becky in early August "she started running around the room" as soon as Frank Fuster's name was mentioned. She was "extremely hostile, anxious" and then hit her mother. Dr. Hicks reported that at Jackson Memorial Hospital the girl was "totally uncooperative" and yelled "give me my panties" when the doctor tried to examine her.

Among the many relevant contextual facts that are never mentioned in the witch-hunt narrative about this child are these: no other child in the case had such strong reactions to being interviewed in the case. No other child spent as much time at the Fusters' as she did, either. (She was there weekdays, one weekday evening, and some Saturdays.) She even went on a beach trip with the Fusters. Both Jason Cramer and Tom Leventhal had already said things about her with her clothes off at the Fusters'; and Betsy Leventhal had already told Meznarich about observing Becky once at the Fusters' wearing only a shirt. Ileana "quickly grabbed a towel, wrapped it around her," and told a story, which turned out not to be true, about the girl's mother having forgotten to bring an extra diaper. As the girl's mother later testified, Becky was no longer wearing diapers.[201] There were, in short, myriad reasons to think Becky Taylor might have been abused.

Her August 30 interview was more substantive, but it was also confusing in places and she was still quite avoidant at times. The girl made more statements about the "real snake" and the masks. She also said that Joshua and Tom—the two boys who had mentioned seeing her naked at the Fusters'—had small penises. Critics have emphasized the admittedly leading questions that appear in her interviews, but they have never mentioned the fact that before this girl ever met the Bragas she told a nurse she had seen Frank Fuster's penis and she described the penis of boys who attended the babysitting service. Ileana Fuster later said two words that speak volumes about Becky's behavior: she said that Becky was "Frank's favorite."[202]

Key Children, Overlooked or Downplayed

What is most striking about the critiques by Ceci and Bruck in 1995 is that they overlook the most important statements in the case. Bruck told the federal court that "it is of primary importance to understand the evolution of the child's reports." But her analysis of the case does not follow this advice. The two most important children in the case were Jason Cramer, who made extensive statements on the first day he was interviewed, and Donald Menninger, whose spontaneous utterance in April became the basis for the eventual civil suits against the Arvida Corporation, which employed the boy's father as a property manager at Country Walk. An interview tape of Donald Menninger was the only one played in the parole violation hearing that assured Frank Fuster of a fifteen-year prison term before his criminal trial began. Yet, none of the snippets in Jeopardy in the Courtroom are from Donald Menninger or Jason Cramer.

Bruck, who reviewed dozens of interviews and depositions in preparation for her affidavit for the defense, did not review either one of Donald's interviews, both of which were conducted in August 1984.[203] In a systematic analysis of the case—from first disclosure onward in chronological order—Donald is clearly one of the most important children in the case. In the McMartin case, for example, where the mother of the first child in the case became mentally unstable, the index child was the focus of most critiques. In the Country Walk case, however, the index child's mother was the opposite. She was not only lucid but had a clear motive to deny that there was abuse. Such a denial would help her husband's defense in the multimillion-dollar civil suits against Arvida and Disney. This is presumably why she was called as a witness for the defense. But Menninger indicated in her testimony that she thought her son had been sexually abused by the Fusters. It was perhaps the most powerful evidence for the state. Ignoring this boy's statements, along with his mother's actions in April and her testimony at trial, is an oversight that is difficult to understand.

The most important witness at trial was Jason Cramer. The boy was extremely articulate, and he had made extensive disclosures on August 9, the first day of interviews by the Bragas. The defense clearly saw this boy as the linchpin of the state's case. This is presumably why Samek set out to "break him" in deposition. But the boy withstood a remarkable onslaught by the defense lawyer, who directly accused him of lying. Jason also resisted a clever attempt to trip him up at trial. After Jason testified about the dead bird, Samek asked him, "What about the time they killed the cat?" "They didn't kill the cat," he replied, resisting the temptation to embellish his testimony or to incorporate a false suggestion.[204]

Bruck indicated she reviewed Jason Cramer's most substantive interview on August 9. She claimed she was unable to review his earlier interview that day because of "technical difficulties." But the original tape of the interview was not defective; a technical problem was mentioned in the trial transcript, but it had to do with the ability of the court reporter to hear the tape. This issue was discussed on the record, and it is clear that the jury could hear the tape. This is confirmed by the fact that Jan Hollingsworth, who heard the tape in court, quoted from the interview at length in her book. In order to remove all doubt about the integrity of the audio track of this tape, I arranged to have the original played under the supervision of the State Attorney's Office while a stenographer, from the same court reporting firm that transcribed the original trial, transcribed the tape. This transcript bears out the Hollingsworth description. In short, Bruck could have reviewed this tape; instead, she dropped the matter—involving possibly the most important interview in the case—because the tape was not transcribed into the court record. Bruck's lengthy affidavit, with 180 numbered paragraphs, does not contain a single specific criticism of the August 9 interview that she did review. She offered one major criticism pertaining to Jason Cramer: she claimed he was induced to talk by "a bag of toys" that the Bragas gave him on August 10.[205]

The interaction that she cites does not support this claim. First, there are no statements to the effect of "we'll give you this if you say something." To the contrary, Jason had already made extensive statements in two sessions on August 9. He came back on Friday the tenth for a brief interview that helped provide the basis for the search warrant of the Fuster house. At the end of the interview, Joseph Braga was talking about some toys. The Bragas had brought a bag of toys to help put the children at ease and to use in rapport building. Jason then said, referring to the bag of toys, "Could I have this?" Joseph Braga responded:

> I need that to show to other kids but what I can give you is let me find it here. You hold the bag. There is a whole bunch of games in there. Here (inaudible).[206]

It is not clear from the transcript what "it"—as in, "let me find it"—means. But from the transcript alone, it is clear that it is not the bag of toys. Joseph Braga made this clear when he said "I need that to show to other kids." A review of the videotape indicates the toy was more like the prize in a Cracker Jack box. It was not a "bag of toys." Bruck relied on the "bag of toys" argument to impugn Jason's additional interview on August 13. But the trinket he took with him could not possibly have affected Jason's testimony on the tenth (or the ninth, of course) because it occurred at the very end of the interview. The idea that this trinket alone taints the entire statement of August 13 is both exaggerated and unimportant. In the interviews that Bruck did not review from August 9, the boy gave extensive details that were later corroborated in a variety of ways.

Maligning the Bragas

The Bragas have been the source of relentless criticism in the witch-hunt narrative. The PBS program Frontline called them "the Pied Pipers of child abuse in Miami." The attacks on their credibility actually began in 1985 when Stephen Dinerstein, the private investigator employed by Frank Fuster's lawyer, swore that Joseph Braga was a "fraud" and an "impostor."[207] Dinerstein claimed that "the real Joseph Braga" had died years earlier. This provided Dr. Braga with a Mark Twain moment, where he appeared in court and assured the judge that the rumors of his demise were greatly exaggerated. The criticisms of the Bragas intensified when the revisionist view of the case emerged in 1993. There are two related criticisms in the narrative: first, that the Bragas misstated their credentials and were not actually qualified to interview children, and second, that they were inherently biased toward finding sexual abuse.

The criticisms of the Bragas' credentials that have been lodged since 1993 are relentless. Rael Jean Isaac, writing in the National Review, called them "self-styled" experts.[208] Robert Rosenthal, writing in Penthouse magazine, said "their real expertise" was in "coercing youngsters to talk about sex."[209] Much has also been made of the fact that they were not licensed psychologists, although licensing is only necessary to open a private practice (something the Bragas did not do). There were even several ethics complaints filed with the American Psychological Association—almost ten years after the case was over—claiming that the Bragas had misrepresented their credentials. On close examination, none of these claims stood up to scrutiny.

The Bragas both have doctorates relevant to child development. They are among the most highly educated people to interview children in any of the infamous day-care abuse cases of the 1980s. Joseph Braga's doctorate is from the School of Education at Boston University, where his major field was called foundations/educational psychology. His dissertation, an evaluation of an early admissions program in the Lexington, Massachusetts, public schools, is cataloged under the subject heading "Educational Psychology." After completing his doctorate, he was hired as an assistant professor at Boston University, where he taught graduate courses in educational psychology. Laurie Braga's doctorate is from the Graduate School at Northwestern University, where her major field was learning disabilities. Her dissertation involved the development and assessment of a test analysis system for "describing intra-child variables in learning disabled preschool children."[210] Before moving to Miami, the Bragas coauthored four books related to child development: Child Development and Early Childhood Education (1973), Growing with Children: The Early Childhood Years (1974), Learning and Growing: A Guide to Child Development (1975), and Children and Adults: Activities for Growing Together (1976). They were also the editors of two series of books for Prentice-Hall, one on human development and the other on the psychology of living.

None of the writers who have challenged the Bragas' credentials has ever engaged the substance of these books. If the Bragas were truly unqualified in the field of child development, these books would presumably be filled with passages demonstrating their incompetence. But not a single passage from any of these books has ever been quoted in support of the claim that the Bragas are unqualified in the areas about which they have written so much.

Instead, there has been a behind-the-scenes effort to damage their reputation through the filing of baseless ethics complaints with the American Psychological Association. Debbie Nathan, the primary writer who has attacked the Country Walk conviction in 1993, initiated this process with a letter to the Ethics Office of the American Psychological Association (APA) exactly one month after Janet Reno was nominated for U.S. attorney general. Nathan stated that her "fact checking" of the Bragas' credentials had revealed that Laurie Braga's Ph.D. was actually in the field of "speech," not learning disabilities. The title page of Laurie Braga's dissertation, which is widely available through interlibrary loan, clearly states that her field of study was, in fact, learning disabilities. An investigator for the APA contacted Northwestern University and received a letter confirming that Laurie Braga's doctorate was in learning disabilities. The APA notified Nathan that it was closing the matter in a letter noting that "this was never a formal ethics case."[211] This is because Nathan did not file a formal complaint. Perhaps she was reticent to take a formal action that would reveal her to be an activist in a story that she claimed to be covering journalistically.[212]

Any presumption of Nathan's impartiality is contradicted by what she then proceeded to do. Working with Frank Fuster's defense lawyer, Robert Rosenthal, Nathan helped orchestrate a behind-the-scenes effort to have a formal ethics complaint filed against Laurie Braga. The effort was timed to coincide with the filing of Frank Fuster's federal habeas corpus appeal. The formal complaint was filed by James Wood, a psychology professor at the University of Texas–El Paso.[213] Wood acknowledged in his complaint that he had never met the Bragas or even tried to contact them, although the APA Ethics Code anticipates such action before filing an ethics complaint.[214] Wood's complaint against Laurie Braga was filed on February 20, 1995 (almost ten years after the Country Walk case had ended). Wood made precisely the same claim Nathan had made earlier: that Laurie Braga had misrepresented her credentials because her doctorate "was in speech" and not in learning disabilities.[215] Wood filed some supplemental materials three months later. Some of those documents were faxed from Rosenthal to Nathan, as indicated by the phone numbers on the faxes.[216]

The supplemental materials filed by Wood included a new and rather stunning claim: that Laurie Braga had been publicly criticized for possible unethical behavior "by the parents of children whom she interviewed in a famous sexual abuse case." To support this charge, Wood attached a 1985 article from the Miami Herald that was published three weeks before Frank Fuster's trial began. Curiously, the fifth paragraph in that story directly contradicts Wood's claim:

> People tend to either love them or hate them. Among those in the pro-Braga camp are the child witnesses and parents in the case. Detractors include defense attorneys, a few local psychologists and a former fund-raiser for their nonprofit National Children's Foundation.[217]

Later, under the subheading "Parents' Praise," the article continues: "For their part, the parents of the alleged victims in the Country Walk case are unanimous in their praise of the Bragas." Since Wood submitted nothing else in support of his charge about the parents of the children interviewed by Laurie Braga, it is difficult to imagine on what basis he decided to level this meritless charge.

The APA dismissed his complaint. On August 4, 1995, Professor Wood filed another complaint—this time against Joseph Braga. That complaint revived the old charge that Braga had somehow misrepresented the nature of his doctorate. This complaint was also ultimately dismissed as baseless. The story of these complaints has never before been made public. The story is noteworthy because it demonstrates the lengths to which some people were willing to go in order to try to discredit the Bragas, regardless of the facts.

The Bragas were also assailed as having a strong predisposition for "finding" sexual abuse in children. "Crucial to the Bragas' technique was their refusal to accept a child's denial of abuse," Rosenthal claimed.[218] It is difficult to square those claims with a systematic view of the Country Walk case. The pattern of interviews and charges in the case demonstrates that almost all of the charges emanated from the children interviewed earliest in the case, when the Bragas knew the least about the allegations. In later interviews, when there is no question the Bragas had concluded that some children had been sexually abused at the Fusters, there were few children added to the case. This is hardly what one would expect if there were a powerful "interviewer bias" at work. Indeed, in the Kelly Michaels case, Lou Fonolleras ultimately exhibited a bias toward finding abuse when he "substantiated" findings of abuse on all fifty-one children interviewed, even those who specifically denied any kind of abuse. The Bragas did no such thing in the Country Walk case.

Beyond the Country Walk case, the Bragas further demonstrated a complex view of accusations involving child sexual abuse. They did not always support prosecution; nor did they always find a child's statements about sexual abuse to be trustworthy. Not only did they distinguish carefully among children in the Country Walk case, they also recommended against prosecution in other cases during the same time period. Although Peter Boyer claimed on Frontline that a pro-prosecution "fever gripped Miami" at the time, the fact is that the Bragas recommended against prosecution in a day-care case that arose at virtually the same time as Country Walk. In the Hazel Crawford Day Care, their recommendation against prosecution came over the strong objection of parents.[219] Moreover, the Bragas did not appear exclusively for the prosecution in these cases. Laurie Braga testified for the defense in a child sexual-abuse case in August 1985. An article about her testimony appeared in the Miami Herald the same week as the article that James Wood appended to his ethics complaint.[220] These facts contradict the claims of extreme pro-prosecution bias that have been lodged against the Bragas.

Conclusion

Critics of the Country Walk case invoke the concept of "confirmation bias" to explain the allegations in the case. Peter Boyer quoted Professor Ceci saying that confirmation bias is "often exhibited by child advocates whose willingness to believe in child abuse hinders objective analysis."[221] This argument seems to carry a disturbing implication: that what Ceci calls "objective analysis" can only be done by people who are not "hindered" by the "willingness to believe in child abuse." Whether or not this is the intended implication of Ceci's statement, it is clear that those who are not willing to believe in child abuse are also hindered in their ability to analyze abuse allegations. They are unlikely to recognize child abuse even in cases where the evidence is overwhelming. When this occurs, "disconfirmation bias" is at work.

The evolution of the Country Walk case—from model prosecution to the revisionist view expressed by Nathan, Ceci and Bruck, and others—demonstrates the problem of disconfirmation bias. Disconfirmation bias involves the systematic discounting of evidence of sexual abuse and the predisposition to find that child interviews are "tainted." If one seeks evidence only for that position, it is likely that any case with as many interviews as Country Walk will contain some snippets that appear to support the preordained conclusion. This is how Lee Coleman approached the case; he admitted having no idea how many statements came as a result of open-ended questions, and he was unaware of the physical evidence that supported the children's statements.[222]

Professor Everson's observation that "fantastic" statements can have a host of origins, with different implications, counsels a close examination of the circumstances and content of children's statements.[223] In the Country Walk case, such an approach would inevitably lead to the conclusion that however unbelievable at first, the children's statements about masks, dead animals, and feces were actually based on reality. In fact, those elements, emphasized as fantastic in early critiques of the case, are not mentioned in the revisionist history of the case. Instead, they have been quietly dropped from the critique without any acknowledgment that they were borne out by extensive evidence.

The first step in the kind of analysis Everson proposed would be a systematic investigation of the children's statements to assess the prevalence and context of fantastic statements. Ceci and Bruck, armed with laboratory studies of child suggestibility and a claim to the scientific method, did not do this. Instead, they made the blanket statement that fabulous statements were "interweaved among the children's statements." But the two examples they cited were dubious at best. No child ever said that she or he had "eaten the head of another person." A number of children described a "cut off your head" game, but it did not seem fabulous in light of Frank Fuster's violent and threatening nature. One child uttered a single sentence about riding a shark, but the context of the statement included a discussion of Jacques Cousteau. The possibility that the child was referring to a kiddie ride at the nearby Country Walk Shopping Center provides another reality-based explanation for the statement. But Ceci and Bruck did not consider these explanations; nor did they analyze the interviews systematically in order to assess the frequency of the statements they claimed were widespread. They simply branded the case as being filled with fabulous statements.

The one-sided application of evidentiary standards in the Country Walk case is another indication of disconfirmation bias. People who object strenuously to any kind of post-hypnotic testimony have accepted Noel Fuster's post-hypnotic "retraction" without criticism. People who find bias in almost every question asked by the Bragas have overlooked the clear bias in the interview that Arthur Cohen conducted with Ileana Flores in Honduras. People who claim to embrace science have accepted, without skepticism, an argument about flawed tests that turns out to have nothing to do with the STD test in the Country Walk case. And people who have raised credibility questions about virtually every witness for the prosecution in the Country Walk case have accepted Frank Fuster's protestations of innocence at face value, even though he has a well-documented record of lying about his crimes.

Beyond these biases, there have been dubious tactics employed to discredit the Country Walk case. The Ethics Office of the American Psychological Association received ethics complaints against Laurie and Joseph Braga that were instigated behind the scenes by Debbie Nathan—the primary writer who attacked the Country Walk conviction—and found the complaints to be baseless.[224] There have also been serious misstatements of the facts of the case. Amy Gershenfeld Donnella, Frank Fuster's lawyer in the federal habeas corpus, misstated the origins of the case, telling the court:

> It is not clear what triggered the investigation of the Country Walk Babysitting Service. However, at some point in June 1984, a Dade County investigator began interviewing parents who used the service about the possibility that their children had been victims of sexual abuse. Most parents initially turned investigators away. They had no such concerns.[225]

But there is no doubt about what started the investigation: Emma St. Lorenzo's disturbing experience on July 31, 1984, when her son, who had just spent his first day at the Fusters', came home looking "glassy eyed" and with a rash on his anus. There is also no doubt that in the first few days of the investigation, as documented in Detective Meznarich's sixty-page police report, she interviewed numerous parents who had very serious concerns. Several families had independently taken their children out of the Fusters' care, and in one instance it was specifically because of a spontaneous utterance that Ileana Fuster had sexual contact with children. The account provided by Donnella was so disconnected from the record in the case that the judge took the unusual step of highlighting this problem. Magistrate Judge Charlene Sorrentino, who authored a 124-page decision rejecting those claims, noted that Donnella's "purported factual overview is almost entirely devoid of citations to the record, and puts forth numerous sweeping, and sometimes outlandish statements. . . ."[226] The magistrate judge concluded that without any documentation these "hyperbolic statements are unworthy of credence."[227] She noted the same problem in connection with claims about former private investigator Dinerstein, who has been cited for the proposition that Ileana Fuster was drugged and held naked in solitary confinement. After comparing Dinerstein's affidavit from 1985 to the claims made about it by Fuster's lawyer, the magistrate judge conclude that Donnella had "significantly distorted and revised Dinerstein's actual assertions."[228] The PBS program Frontline and a host of writers have done the same thing, apparently without checking the original document.

The Country Walk case once stood as an example of how to prosecute cases with young children as witnesses. This conclusion has been challenged by a revisionist view that has been widely accepted in the media and among many academic psychologists. These developments should be seen as a cautionary tale about the dangers of disconfirmation bias. If the overwhelming evidence against Frank Fuster can be spun into a witch-hunt story, then it is unlikely that any case based largely on the word of a child will ever be considered sufficient to avoid this kind of treatment. If so, then our society will have come full circle from the early 1980s, when the unwillingness to believe that children were sexually abused in significant numbers resulted in few prosecutions and little recognition of a serious social problem. Those who have promoted the witch-hunt narrative in the Country Walk case offer something quite similar: a world in which a positive STD test, a child's spontaneous utterance, and a web of cross-corroborating evidence are considered insufficient to support a finding of guilt.

Frank Fuster's lawyer argued in 2005, "had this case been tried in 1995 instead of 1985, Fuster would never have been convicted."[229] Unfortunately, given the widespread acceptance of the witch-hunt narrative, that may well be true. The next chapter considers the broader and more current implications of the conclusion.

CONCLUSION II

The significance of the witch-hunt narrative in the academic field of psychology came to a head in the Kelly Michaels case. Not surprisingly, there were divergent views in the field about child suggestibility. Gail Goodman's research in the 1980s had demonstrated that children were, in many ways, as accurate and reliable as adults were as witnesses. But the McMartin case and others challenged this view. Did what happened in the McMartin case have implications for cases all over the country, or was the McMartin case so unique in character and circumstance that its lessons could not be applied to other cases?

Those questions were becoming the focus of academic psychologists in the same year that Charlier and Downing were publishing the claim that at least one hundred cases around the country involving ritual abuse allegations had little or no basis in fact. At the American Psychology-Law Society in Miami in 1988, the "contradictory findings" about child suggestibility were so significant that Stephen Ceci later wrote that he "found the whole ordeal troubling."[1] There was significant disagreement in the field about whether children were highly suggestible and about the applicability, or "ecological validity," of various laboratory experiments demonstrating children's suggestibility. Prompted in part by this experience, the American Psychological Association (APA) sponsored a conference at Cornell University in June 1989 on the suggestibility of children's recollections. Popular interest in this issue was so significant that there was a story in the Washington Post, under the headline "Psychologists Divided on Children Testifying," when the volume of papers from that conference was published in 1991. A panel of psychologists at a press conference at APA headquarters conveyed that "the profession is deeply divided" on issues concerning the reliability of young children.[2]

In light of this background, it is surprising, to say the least, that Ceci and Bruck were informing the New Jersey Supreme Court a little more than two years later that there was a consensus in the field around their research on child suggestibility. It was either one of the fastest resolutions among deeply divided professionals in academic history or something else was going on. The evidence for a political explanation is elaborated in Chapter Five. In fact, the claim of a "paradigm shift" simply masked the continuing deep divisions in the profession. But the brief (which became known as the "Concerned Scientists" brief) had its desired effect. The court upheld the reversal of Kelly Michaels's conviction and the Michaels case became a turning point in the contested day-care cases from the 1980s.

Ceci and Bruck were successful in convincing many people, both in academia and in the public, that their research demonstrated that the children's statements in the Michaels case were unreliable and that New Jersey should institute a special procedure for "taint hearings" in the future. The argument that their research had direct application to the Michaels case had two simple components: (1) the videotape of the boy spinning a fictitious story, which he apparently believed, about getting his finger caught in a mousetrap; and (2) the statement that what they did in the lab "paled in comparison" to what happened in the Michaels case. The argument succeeded because the videotape was so compelling and the statement about the Michaels case had the appearance of being true, based in part on selected snippets from Lou Fonolleras's interviews. Fonolleras, it should be kept in mind, did not even enter the case until after the six-count indictment in May that was based on an investigation lasting less than one week.

The claims about "paling in comparison" to Michaels were almost impossible to verify. There was no way to check whether the Fonolleras interviews were representative of children in the case. There was no way to check whether those interviews even involved children in the case. There was no way to check whether the claim that disclosures came after "weeks and months" of such interviews was true. And there was no way to check whether there were children in the case who were entirely different in fact and context. At least there was no way to do so without spending years of effort.[3]

The two arguments that were, understandably, so persuasive to academics and others are also deeply flawed. The boy in the Mousetrap Study later told researchers he never got his hand caught in a mousetrap; it was all a story. Moreover, the methods used in the study were misportrayed in the media. Indeed, the article in which they were first published described a much tamer version of the study in the methods section and then discussed the results of a significantly "modified" version in the discussion section. Naturally, this caused some people to think the tamer version of the experiment led to the dramatic results obtained through the modified approach.

The appendix to the "Concerned Scientists" brief did not distinguish between interviews after a child had made a disclosure and interviews before that. Once a child has made a disclosure, subsequent interviews cannot be said to have been the cause of the earlier disclosure, but this is the kind of logic one must employ to claim that children in the Michaels case were interviewed for weeks and months. Most of those "interviews" involved testifying at the grand jury, being evaluated by Eileen Treacy, and preparing for trial. From a systematic analysis of the interviews in the investigative phase of the Michaels case, elaborated in Chapter Five, the inescapable fact is that none of the disclosures came after "weeks or months" of highly suggestive interviews. Many came in the first interview, and most others came in the second. Accordingly, even the modified experiment that produced the dramatic results in the Mousetrap Study did not pale in comparison to the Michaels case. The children in Michaels were not told repeatedly that something happened and then asked about it. In actuality, what happened in the Michaels case paled in comparison to the Mousetrap Study.

But it is obvious why the potential signators of the "Concerned Scientists" brief—and the appellate court judges in the case—thought they knew otherwise: they had already been told so by the media. Beginning with the highly publicized Rabinowitz article in 1990 and carrying over to television programs repeating these claims, the witch-hunt narrative about the Michaels case had been adopted and rebroadcast for several years leading up to 1993.

It is clear from their writings that Ceci and Bruck had also adopted this narrative. They described the Rabinowitz article about the case as "seminal," and they relied on Rabinowitz as a source for statements about McMartin. Demonstrating their endorsement of the witch-hunt narrative, Ceci and Bruck argued in their 1993 article for the Society on Research in Child Development (SRCD) that the McMartin case was "not a singular happening." Rather, they said there were hundreds of other cases like it. They argued that those cases generally share six elements:

> First, the witnesses were preschoolers at the time of the alleged abuse. Second, the disclosures were not made immediately following the alleged event, but after a long delay. Third, the disclosures were preceded by intensive interviewing of the children by professionals and nonprofessionals. Fourth, the children were the only witnesses to the events, and corroborative physical evidence was lacking. Fifth, none of the defendants ever made a confession. Finally, the major issue before the jury in all of these cases was whether to believe the children.[4]

Applying those elements to the three major cases evaluated in this book yields unexpected conclusions (see Table II-1). First, the paradigmatic case, McMartin, does not itself fit all of the elements. In fact, it fits only three elements without qualification: preschoolers, no confession, and child believability being

Table II-1 Application of Ceci & Bruck's "Six Elements" to Three Major Cases

	McMartin	Michaels	Country Walk
Preschoolers	Yes	Yes	Yes
Disclosures after "long" delay	No for a few; yes for a lot	No	No
Disclosures preceded by intensive interviewing	No for a few; presumably yes for many others	No for several; arguably yes for others	No
Physical evidence lacking	Yes for most; no for a few	Largely yes	No
No confession	Yes	Yes	Yes
Major issue to jury, child believability	Yes	Yes	Yes

a major issue. But those elements do not help distinguish the McMartin case from most of those that goes to trial with young children and sexual abuse allegations. Second, the remaining elements cannot accurately be applied to the McMartin case universally. There are too many differences between children to apply one simple conclusion. For example, "disclosures after 'long' delay" clearly applies to many children in McMartin; it might apply to every child who can be counted as having made a disclosure in February 1984 and later. That is potentially hundreds of children, although there are no available records for most of them and only about a dozen were actually involved in the trial. But even this element is not true of a handful of children in the case, among them Matthew Johnson, some of the September responders, and the Chapman girl in January 1984.

The next element, disclosures preceded by intensive interviewing, is similarly complicated. The description does not fit a small number of children in the McMartin case, which was characterized by children who probably do fit it, although this conclusion is complicated by the lack of information about the nature and frequency of interviewing by "nonprofessionals" (i.e., parents).[5] The same kind of mixed result applies to the element involving physical evidence. There was medical evidence concerning a small number of children in the case that would still be considered meaningful evidence today. This was not true of most children in the case, although many of their parents were told otherwise. Overall, this analysis leads to the self-contradictory conclusion that the McMartin case itself was not "just like McMartin." Or at least not like the McMartin case that was the basis for the witch-hunt narrative. The case was far more complicated than has been portrayed. If individual differences are not taken into account and, instead, one general designation is required for classifying every element, then the McMartin case "fits" the witch-hunt narrative. But this is not the full story of the case.

The application of these six elements is even more striking for the Kelly Michaels case. The same three elements that clearly fit McMartin also fit Michaels, but those are the elements that do not help distinguish McMartin-like cases from most other sexual abuse trials involving young children. The remaining three elements point out differences between McMartin and Michaels. The Michaels case did not involve disclosures of events that allegedly occurred years earlier, like the McMartin case. The alleged events occurred in the months prior to the investigation, and the only children in the case were those who had encountered Kelly Michaels during the school year. The children whose statements formed the basis for the original indictment were not subject to intensive interviewing in advance of their disclosures. The original charges were based on an investigation that lasted only a few days and began with a spontaneous disclosure. The situation for the rest of the children in the case is less clear. The defense argued that those children disclosed only after intensive interviewing. The facts of the case, as demonstrated in Chapter Five, are more complicated, although the characterization is arguably true for some children. Finally, physical evidence was largely lacking in the case—as it is in most sexual abuse cases—although there was some medical evidence that should not be dismissed out of hand.

Ignoring differences between children makes it easy to characterize Michaels—or almost any case, for that matter—as "just like McMartin." Indeed, the innocence-by-association argument convinced academic psychologists and appellate judges alike. But the story does not do justice to the underlying facts. Accordingly, the Michaels case bears out the concern of those who worried that the "lessons" of the McMartin case would be applied too broadly.

The application of the same elements to the Country Walk case demonstrates how the witch-hunt narrative has gone to extremes to paint cases as "just like McMartin." Although it shares the same three elements that do not help distinguish McMartin from most cases with young children, all three remaining elements point out significant differences. There was a confirmed STD in the Country Walk case, and the disclosures did not generally involve long delays; nor were they preceded by intensive interviewing. The core of the original charges came on the first day of interviewing by the Bragas and involved allegations that had occurred recently. Fuster's defenders have quibbled about whether those descriptions fit the two children who disclosed in January 1985, but the case as a whole does not fit any of the three important elements.

A scientific analysis of the child-suggestibility hypothesis would look for evidence that might disprove the hypothesis that a case is "just like McMartin." It is a strong indication of disconfirmation bias that not a single proponent of the child-suggestibility view has approached these cases in this fashion. The spontaneous disclosure that began the Michaels case has been distorted such that it completely overlooks the two adults who witnessed the circumstances under which Mitchell Pierce first implicated his naptime teacher, Kelly. Why have those embracing Kelly Michaels favored uninformed speculations over the clear testimony of Laura Hadley, the medical assistant? Similarly, Noel Fuster's positive test for gonorrhea of the throat has been dismissed on the basis of a freelance writer who cited a scientific article that had no application to the actual test used in the Country Walk case. Why haven't any of the academics who embraced Frank Fuster checked the veracity of this claim? Similarly, recognizing the validity of Jason Cramer's testimony alone would result in a rejection of the hypothesis that "child suggestibility" accounts for all of the allegations in the Country Walk case. Although it is predictable that forensic psychologists who generally testify for the defense would avoid this kind of analysis, it is troublesome, to say the least, that academic psychologists have adopted the same position.

The ability of the witch-hunt narrative to paint a persuasive picture that dozens, if not hundreds, of cases are McMartin "clones" is alarming. This narrative has not persuaded any appellate judges in the Country Walk case, but it has persuaded many writers, intellectuals, and academics. This is powerful evidence that concerns about the "lessons" of the McMartin case have been applied too broadly. The literature in psychology is filled with cautions about the need to treat children as individuals and to take individual circumstances into account. Unfortunately, those cautions have not been followed in the extensive writing about the Michaels case or the Country Walk case.

There is a corollary to the importance of treating children as individuals; it is also important to take contextual variables into account. Such variables help account for important differences in how cases are investigated, how they are charged, and what kind of environment surrounds the case. Was there considerable time between the initial complaint and actual charges? If so, there is all the more time for social forces to intensify and affect the case. Was there intense publicity before charges were brought? If so, there is all the more reason that prosecutors might rush to judgment. Did the case spread to other defendants and other locations? If so, those are almost sure signs of some kind of social contagion. These points and several others are elaborated in Table II-2.

This table demonstrates that the Michaels case and the Country Walk case were different from McMartin on virtually every dimension. McMartin is the only one of those cases that (1) had an extended period of time between the first

Table II-2 Comparison of Key Features of the McMartin, Kelly Michaels, and Country Walk Case

	McMartin	Michaels	Country Walk
Length of time from first official complaint to initial criminal charges	28 weeks	3 weeks	2 weeks
Expansion of charges to other defendants?	Yes	No[1]	No[2]
Intense publicity before charges were brought?	Yes	No	No
Number of nearby schools closed, even temporarily, in connection with the case	7	0	0
Parents as investigators?	Yes	No	No
Activist parents without children in the case?	Yes	No	No
Extensive "fantastic" claims?	Yes	No[3]	No[4]
Charges brought without DA reviewing child interviews?	Yes	No	No

[1] Others were considered, but nobody else was charged with sexual abuse.

[2] Frank and Ileana Fuster were both named from the start.

[3] The statements labeled as fantastic were not "extensive."

[4] The statements that were originally labeled as "fantastic" (masks, dead bird, feces play) were all proven at trial. The more recent assertions about "fabulous" statements (riding on a shark, eating the head of another person) were not actually claimed, let alone "extensively."

complaint and the first charges, (2) expanded to multiple defendants not named early in the investigation, (3) had intense publicity before any charges were brought, (4) spread to other preschools, (5) saw parents enlisted by authorities as investigators, (6) had "fantastic" claims that were extensive and never proven, and (7) involved charges brought without an analysis of the children's interviews in the case. Those features are all critical to understanding how the McMartin case evolved and why it resulted in charges that should never have been brought.

Charlier and Downing's series purported to do this kind of analysis, but they lost sight of the fact that almost none of their cases actually fit the "pattern" of charges expanding to other defendants. The case that comes closest is the Georgian Hills case in their backyard, which shares many features with McMartin. Charlier and Downing seem to have viewed the world through the lens of the Ballard case. The same tactic was widely used in many others evaluated in Chapter Three. Other proponents of the witch-hunt narrative have made the same error with the McMartin case. Ceci and Bruck anchored their discussion of Michaels in McMartin. The first nine paragraphs of their SRCD article are about McMartin.[6] This approach makes it easy to claim that even the County Walk case is "just like McMartin." But a host of key features make it clear that McMartin was unique. Beyond the fact that all three cases involved young children, Michaels and County Walk, as demonstrated in these last two chapters, were nothing like McMartin.

If academic psychologists could impugn these cases, they could potentially impugn any child sexual abuse case, regardless of the evidence. The extent to which this has come true is explored in the second half of Chapter Seven.

PART III

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

7

The Legacy of the Witch-Hunt Narrative

The triumph of the witch-hunt narrative rested on arguments that have implications well beyond those specific cases. The point of Jeopardy in Courtroom was to convey a view of child suggestibility, not to get to the bottom of the cases studies used as illustrations. What those cases purported to illustrate were general arguments about child suggestibility and children as witnesses. To others, the witch-hunt narrative was compelling because it encompassed a political argument about the overbearing role of government in child protective services, or it expressed a political view about the abuse of power by police and prosecutors. Together, those arguments helped convince people that the witch-hunt narrative was fitting, even when the facts did not support it. The implications, I argue below, extend far beyond those cases and that era. This worrisome legacy of the witch-hunt narrative is elaborated in the second part of this chapter.

But first, there are other recent developments to consider. Even if one agrees with the argument of the previous chapters—that the witch-hunt narrative about the 1980s and early 1990s was misplaced in its time—several recent developments arguably contradict the claim that those arguments have continuing impact today. The highly publicized scandals in the Catholic Church and, more recently, at Penn State seem to demonstrate the ability of our society to recognize and confront sexual abuse without crying witch-hunt. Moreover, there is evidence in how we treat sex offenders after they are released from prison that seems to demonstrate an overreaction to sex offenders. Developments since the enactment of Megan's Law in 1996 and the rise of civil commitment laws appear to be overly punitive, bearing out a kind of hysteria or overreaction. Finally, a prominent group of academics and activists argue that witch-hunt-like cases continue to this day. The significance of these three arguments is analyzed in the first part of this chapter.

The second part of this chapter elaborates the worrisome legacy of the witch-hunt narrative: three lingering effects that are underappreciated, understudied, and potentially quite adverse to the protection of children. This legacy stems from the same arguments that helped convince people that the day-care abuse cases were baseless, regardless of the merits. These arguments are alive and well in the contemporary era. They have resulted in a discounting of the reality of continuing day-care sexual abuse. More significantly, they have promoted a general but unwarranted view that children are highly suggestible, that delayed disclosures of sexual abuse are suspect, and that child-abuse professionals constitute a dubious "child abuse industry." In this way, the witch-hunt narrative continues to undermine the credibility of children as witnesses and the institutions that are supposed to respond to the sexual abuse of children.

Recent Developments

Several recent developments contradict the general story of underreaction, minimization, and denial that comprises much of the argument in the last six chapters. A lot has changed since 1995. There have been high-profile cases involving the Catholic Church and, more recently, Penn State. There have also been crusades of a sort against sex offenders who have completed their prison sentences, suggesting what might be called moral panic. Some also claim that the witch-hunts continued into the contemporary era. This section examines all three of these developments. The Catholic Church cases and the one involving Penn State are both important, but the lessons are much more limited than is widely acknowledged. The crusade against sex offenders is real, and it is worrisome. It focuses too much attention on this population, most of it ultimately counterproductive—but these measures attract strong political support, particularly from conservatives. Finally, the claim that the witch-hunts have continued is not supported by available evidence.

Cases Against the Catholic Church and Penn State

Child sexual abuse is no longer associated with day-care cases. Since those cases faded from public view, there were years when the media coverage of child sexual abuse was minimal. Then a new focus emerged: sexual abuse by Catholic priests. The criminal trial of Michael Jackson generated significant publicity in 2005, but that coverage was fleeting and it did not have nearly the magnitude of the stories in 2002 about sexual abuse by priests.

Those stories were driven largely by civil lawsuits against the church, although there were also criminal cases and grand jury investigations in some jurisdictions. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been paid to victims and more than one thousand priests were removed from their positions as a result of these cases. Documents unsealed in civil cases in Boston in 2002 contained evidence that "Church officials knew about [Father John] Geoghan's pedophilia," which was responsible for more than one hundred victims.[1] There were almost daily stories about these cases in the Boston Globe that year. The uproar over these stories created news of its own. Pope John Paul II summoned all of the American cardinals to the Vatican in the spring of 2002 for an emergency meeting on the matter, in no small part because of this publicity. The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops met in Dallas in June 2002, under enormous media scrutiny and with the stated intention of approving, for the first time, mandatory rules for how all 194 dioceses in the United States should respond to allegations of sexual abuse. The policy included provisions for mandatory removal of priests who sexually abuse children, reporting to prosecutors, and reaching out to victims. The adoption of this policy must be recognized as a significant event. Through civil litigation, some enterprising lawyers in Boston managed to obtain a surprising measure of accountability from an institution that was historically afforded significant latitude by public officials, including law enforcement. As the Globe reported it, "a culture of deference that had taken more than a century to evolve seemed to erode in a matter of weeks."[2]

That does not mean the story was an unmitigated success. The institutional changes adopted in Dallas were not as strong as some thought necessary, and there are forces within the Church hierarchy that remain resistant to these reforms. Indeed, the Vatican expressed the view that the policy adopted in Dallas did not do enough to protect accused priests. By November, the bishops agreed to a narrower definition of sexual abuse, a less burdensome reporting requirement, and a 10-year statute of limitations.[3] It is unclear how well these guidelines have actually been implemented. Moreover, there are several reasons to think these developments say little or nothing about social and legal responses to child sexual abuse in general.

There are three reasons to temper the application of any conclusions about these cases to the broader context of child sexual abuse. First, priests represent a kind of other. They wear robes and they take celibacy vows. As disturbing as it is to think that a priest could sexually abuse a child, their otherness also makes this thought less threatening and more believable. Add to this the celibacy vows, which many think contribute to priests finding a sexual outlet with children. The issue of celibacy vows has become so mixed up in the discussion of sexual abuse by priests that one might lose sight of the fact that far more child molesters are married men than are unmarried priests. A second distinguishing feature of these cases is that the victims were largely male, both in numbers and in voice. And in many cases it is an adult voice, not a child; the leading voices in 1992 (Frank Fitzpatrick) and 2002 (Greg Ford) were adults. They were far less likely than anyone else to be cast as untrustworthy. Nobody argues that a man would fantasize such a thing, or that he might be acting hysterically. Accordingly, most people took the view that these allegations were credible.

Finally, there was a very particular reason these cases exploded in the media in 2002: documents produced through civil litigation proved the extent to which bishops and cardinals transferred priests from one place to another with sufficient knowledge of their abuse histories to know they would be placing children in danger. There was a cover-up. The story of institutional betrayal drove the widespread media coverage in 2002. There had been limited coverage of lawsuits about priests molesting children as early as the Gauthe case in 1984.[4] But the cases from Louisiana were considered "anomalies being blown out of proportion by anti-Catholic elements."[5] They generated only brief coverage. The McMartin case was, at that time, fast defining child sexual abuse in America. There was a much larger cluster of these church-related abuse stories in 1992. The Church viewed this publicity as so unfair that Cardinal Bernard Law famously called down God's power "on the media, particularly the Globe."[6] The Cardinal got his wish, for a time. There was a significant lull in stories about this topic for almost ten years, mostly because documents from the civil cases were sealed. When nearly ten thousand pages of documents became public in January 2002, it was clear that the Church had sought to protect its reputation by covering up sexual abuse for decades. That made this a major story. Since the Watergate scandal in the 1970s, it is clear that any cover-up as broad and well-documented as this one will generate significant media attention. The recent events at Penn State bear this out.

What has come to be known as the "Penn State scandal" received massive media coverage in 2011 and 2012. It has largely been a story about justice and accountability. But it was also a story about a cover-up. Jerry Sandusky was convicted in a criminal trial that most observers considered fair and convincing. Efforts by the defense to impugn the testimony of various victims by questioning their motives were unsuccessful. Nobody was distracted by the defense critique of some interviews in the case. Sandusky received a long sentence, and Penn State will apparently pay more than $40 million to settle civil suits by victims. Beyond this, the Freeh Report, commissioned by the university, laid out stark conclusions about the failure of university officials to take appropriate action. The report would have its detractors, but many people welcomed the frank tone and strong conclusions. The report inspired the NCAA to craft its own wide-ranging penalties, agreed to by the university, including a $60 million fund for child abuse prevention programs. As important and generally uplifting as the developments in this case are, it is important to recognize several features that help explain why the case attracted so much attention but was not highly controversial in outcome. These are all factors that limit the applicability of the recent developments to anything beyond the case itself. First, the case did not involve child witnesses. It was adults testifying about what happened to them as children. The case might have been quite different if it had hinged entirely on the testimony of boys age eight to thirteen. Second, the criminal case included an adult witness, the graduate assistant who reported the matter to Coach Paterno. Although there was disagreement about what precise words he used in warning the coach, the point remains that one does not report inconsequential events in this manner. There was also a janitor mentioned in the Freeh Report who declined to report what he saw, for fear of retribution. So the case did not stand entirely on the word of children. Moreover, there was a cover-up. In this way, this story is much like those that drove coverage about the Catholic Church in 2002. It is unclear whether all the attention even led to significantly better procedures or whether it decreased the degree to which this kind of abuse was tolerated in the Church. After ten years, the jury is divided, to say the least. Some think there has been significant slippage in the commitment of the Catholic Church in recent years. And as welcome as many of the developments at Penn State are, the Penn State case was also unusual in many ways.

More broadly, we know that the newfound vigilance against child sexual abuse in the Catholic Church and at Penn State did not permeate the culture. Anyone familiar with the Catholic Church and Penn State stories has to wonder, What institution will next be shown to have covered up the sexual abuse of children? Two recent cases in the Los Angeles School District demonstrate the continued vitality of institutional dynamics that minimize and deny sexual abuse. Both involved sexual abuse by elementary school teachers that went undetected for years. The first case involved Mark Berndt, who had been teaching for thirty-two years and was first apprehended as a result of dozens of photos of blindfolded children that he had commercially developed. Criminal charges are still pending at this writing, but the school district has already agree to pay $27.2 million to settle dozens of civil claims. What is most chilling about Berndt's case is that children reported some his bizarre activities and were reportedly told by a school counselor that "it's not very good to make up stories." Also worrisome is the fact that Berndt was the subject of a criminal investigation in 1993, when a female student reported he tried to fondle her. Prosecutors dropped the matter, stating that "the evidence was insufficient to prove a crime occurred."[7] The second case involved Paul Chapel III, a third grade teacher, who later pleaded guilty to thirteen counts of a lewd act on a child, one for each victim.[8] A civil complaint against the school district claims it had sufficient knowledge to have known that Chapel should not be in a classroom. He lost a civil case in 1987 involving the showing of a sexually explicit video to students. Moreover, he was prosecuted in 1997 for molesting an eight-year-old girl and was placed on administrative duty during those proceedings. But the criminal trial ended in a hung jury, the prosecutor decided not to retry the case, and Chapel was allowed back into the classroom, where, as he later admitted, he went on to molest thirteen students between 2006 and 2010. Both of these cases demonstrate the extent to which child sexual abuse lives on in institutions that one might think had long since confronted and addressed the problem. It has, after all, been a matter of public discussion since 1983, when the McMartin Preschool case began nearby.

Megan's Law and Sex-Offender Politics

A second major development related to child sexual abuse in the contemporary era is the nationwide increase in laws and policies targeting sex offenders. The 1990s were marked by the adoption of sex-offender registration, community notification systems, residency restrictions, and the use of civil commitment. Sex-offender registration provisions were incorporated into federal law in 1994 through the Jacob Wetterling Crimes Against Children and Sexually Violent Offenders Act. Federal law was amended two years later with the adoption of community notification provisions modeled after Megan's Law from New Jersey. Those provisions were "enhanced" ten years later by the Adam Walsh Protection and Safety Act of 2006, which provides for wider dissemination of information about sex offenders. Although states have differing version of these systems, the use of registries and community notification became nationwide in the 1990s. Residency restrictions and civil commitment are also important developments in the post-Michaels era, but neither has been nationwide. Some residency restrictions are adopted at the local level; others are statewide, such as the provision in many states that registered sex offenders cannot live within in a specified proximity of schools or parks. Nineteen states have adopted systems for civil commitment.

All of these policies have been criticized extensively in law review articles and other academic literature. Psychiatrist Richard Krueger, in an editorial in the Los Angeles Times, called these developments "the new American witch hunt."[9] They are widely seen among scholars from various disciplines as an overreaction that is based on social vilification of sex offenders rather than evidence-based arguments about the efficacy of the policies. This is hardly surprising given how so many of these "tribute" laws originated. Megan's Law is probably the best-known example. It was signed into law less than three months after Megan Kanka was murdered by a neighbor who had prior sexual abuse convictions. The defendant had not yet been tried when the law was passed. There are a host of similar laws, such as Jessica's Law in Florida and Ashley's Law in Texas, that were enacted quickly and without serious debate in order to demonstrate some kind of government response to a tragedy.

The evaluation research on community notification systems is mixed at best. An early study in the state of Washington concluded that notification did not have an effect on recidivism but offenders subject to community notification were arrested more quickly than those in the comparison group.[10] A more recent study found evidence that might demonstrate a strong effect in recidivism rates, but the study had enough qualifications that more research is necessary.[11] There have also been several studies finding these policies have no effect on recidivism rates.[12] Critics of these policies often display little or no sensitivity to the dynamics of child sexual abuse by placing great significance on the fact that sex offenders tend to have a low recidivism rate. This simple comparison to the recidivism rates for other crimes would make sense if all crimes had an equal chance of detection. But child sexual abuse is secretive by its nature, and disclosure often does not occur during childhood. There are no serious felonies as underreported as is child sexual abuse. This fact should affect how one interprets recidivism rates across crimes. Indeed, "correcting" for this dynamic significantly changes any analysis of sex offender registration laws.

Although the benefits of these policies remain unclear, the monetary and administrative costs in keeping a large database accurate and accessible are significant. (There are sixty-three thousand offenders in the database for California.[13]) Some have raised concerns about vigilantism.[14] Even if the concerns have been exaggerated, the benefits of sex-offender registries are mixed, at best. The evidence concerning the efficacy of residency restrictions is even weaker. The benefits seem to be nonexistent, but the (indirect) costs can be significant. These policies find little or no support in the community of professionals who treat sex offenders. A recent collection of scholarship by criminologists concludes that "the misguided and deleterious consequences of residential residency restrictions" call for elimination or dramatic change of these policies.[15] Public support for these policies, however, is strong. This support bears out the idea that the policies are driven by extreme attitudes of sex offenders as "monsters."

This argument fits community-notification laws and a related development in the 1990s: the rise in civil commitment statutes for those labeled as "sexually violent predators." These statutes provide for varied processes, by state, for deciding whether a sex offender is considered sufficiently dangerous to be held after completion of their prison sentence. Typically, the determination must be renewed every two or three years. Civil commitment is extremely expensive, costing three or four times the already high cost of incarceration. Given the costs and the procedural hurdles, only a small percentage of incarcerated sex offenders are ever subject to civil commitment. Sociologist Chrysanthi Leon documents that "just over 2% of the initial referrals were civilly committed" in California, which has the largest program in the country. Between 1998 and 2002, an average of about sixty people per year were admitted to civil commitment in California. A New York Times investigation in 2006 concluded that a total of 3,493 men had been confined nationwide under these laws.[16] (Approximately two hundred times that number are subject to sex offender registration.)

The strongest objections to these civil confinement laws are ideological. This makes sense since the number of people actually subject to civil commitment is small. To the disbelief of many civil libertarians, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld these laws in 1996 (by a 5-4 decision) against a constitutional challenge in Kansas v. Hendricks. The topic is so ideologically charged that there has been little attention paid to how civil commitment is actually being used.[17] Are offenders being held without strong evidence of dangerousness? Or are offenders with strong evidence of dangerousness failing to be held? Both could be true, of course. Neither is easy to study given the small number of total cases. The number of people subjected to civil commitment nationwide every year is probably smaller than the number of people who sexually abuse children in day-care settings. Either way, it is fair to say both of these groups have, in their own time, received a disproportionate amount of attention in public discourse.

The rise of civil commitment programs and the increased use of community-notification laws are both products of the pernicious politics of sex-offender policies in modern America. The rigid "law and order" positions that largely defined the public discourse over crime policy in the 1970s and 1980s have faded as crime rates have dropped. But the area of sex offenses, particularly against children, is one of the last bastions of these politics. Elected officials want to portray themselves as "tough on sex offenders." Conversely, there are cynical efforts to paint one's opponent as weak on sex offenders. Republicans maneuvered a vote during the recent health care debate that was portrayed as "Viagra for child molesters."[18] Beyond posturing, there is the problem that ratcheting up laws to demonstrate "toughness" can be counterproductive. The most recent efforts to "improve" community notification provisions under the Adam Walsh Act include notifying employers and the public where sex offenders work. These provisions seem likely to make it harder for those released from prison to find and maintain jobs, which is counter-productive to the goal of a safe transition back to society. But political forces make it unlikely that any elected official will voice those concerns for fear of being portrayed as "weak" on sex offenders. In short, the critique of overly punitive policies concerning sex offenders is well taken. The laws are dubious in many respects and often the product of shameless politicking.

While many people express dislike, even hatred, of sex offenders when asked about the subject in the abstract, it is important to remember that such attitudes can coexist with the embrace of perpetrators in specific cases. Leon reveals how the "moral panic" over sex offenders that is reflected in media stories between the 1930s and the mid-1950s did not translate into increased arrests and convictions in criminal court, which seems to be assumed in so many academic writings.[19] The "desire to protect reputable citizens" in specific cases, Leon explains, often trumps the general desire to treat child molesters severely. In the contemporary era, though, punishment is seen as the overriding quality of the criminal justice system. It defines much of the scholarship about the era.

Actual punishments in the post-McMartin era have not been as strict as is often claimed. Though commenters continue to emphasize the "punitive" treatment of sex offenders, these perceptions seem to be driven by highly publicized cases rather than aggregate data. Harsh sentences are publicized; lenient ones prevail. This is what I discovered after testing Richard Gardner's claim that our country has become so hysterical over the sexual abuse of children that child molesters receive longer sentences on average than murders. Admittedly, this claim, if true, would constitute strong evidence of an unreasonably punitive approach toward sex offenders. But Dr. Gardner was off by a factor of hundreds.[20] Professor Theodore Cross and colleagues, in their meta-analysis of child abuse prosecutions, found that the incarceration rate for child abuse cases was "lower than all three comparison categories and significantly lower than violent crimes and rape and sexual assault."[21]

There is little reason to think that the overreaction to sex offenders being released from prison translates into greater willingness to report or act on suspicions of sexual abuse. An eight-month investigation by two reporters at the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette examined allegations of sexual misconduct against school teachers. They concluded, "When teachers are accused of sexual misconduct, some school officials and school boards quietly sidestep legal and ethical issues to protect their schools from scandal."[22] The study was published in 1996, four years after Gardner flatly asserted it is "no longer the case" that those revealing sexual abuse will be met with a disbelieving community. Gardner claimed the opposite was true, that police and child protective services were more likely to "accept as valid even frivolous and absurd accusations."[23] But Hargrove and Roth found that "sexual allegations by students have been greeted with shrugs, although a teacher's files indicated previous sex-related complaints."

There is no reason to think this phenomenon was peculiar to Arkansas. Indeed, in a more recent case from California, an appellate court declined to hold the Anaheim School District liable in a case where there was, as the court agreed, "evidence of obliviousness—perhaps the better word would be cluelessness—on the part of several of the district's teachers" who might have surmised sexual abuse had they "put two and two together."[24] The case has been described as encouraging a see-no-evil ethic.[25] That ethic stands alongside the punitive attitudes toward convicted sex offenders.

Overreaction at the back end of the criminal justice system—when sex offenders complete their prison term—is politically easy. We have been doing it with sex offenders since the 1990s through sex offender registries and related policies such as residency restrictions. These policies accomplish little in the way of public safety. But there is an enormous difference between being tough on incarcerated sex offenders upon release and confronting sexual abuse at the moment a child discloses it. Confronting the problem as a whole would require acknowledging the fact that most child molesters remain unapprehended and that most child sexual abuse is not reported. But proponents of the witch-hunt narrative would apparently rather challenge the evidence than agree that Roland Summit was correct when he wrote that child sexual abuse has two important preconditions: secrecy and helplessness.

The paradox of the contemporary sex offender in America is that we treat the group with leniency in many ways—failing to report suspicions, rallying around "upstanding" defendants, and meting out lenient punishments on many occasions—but we overreact about their release from prison. This gives an appearance of severity. Politicians have managed to exploit this in various ways. The appearance is also useful as a social salve since we are so willing to ignore child sexual abuse in the specific. The witch-hunt narrative glosses over the issue, just as scholars who characterize the modern era as a "punishment boom" miss the myriad ways in which the criminal justice system continues to be surprisingly lenient in child sexual abuse cases.

Persistent "Witch Hunt" Claims

The witch-hunt narrative described in this book revolved around cases from the McMartin era. But there have also been persistent witch-hunt claims in the years since then. Those claims have not received the publicity of the cases from the McMartin era; nor have they been grouped together by a common feature such as the day-care setting. Nevertheless, the cases have been offered as evidence of continued overreaction to child sexual abuse. Indeed, some of the same activists from the Day of Contrition—an event held in Massachusetts in 1997 that sought to link many of the cases discussed in this book directly to the Salem witch trials of the 1690s—formed a non-profit organization with the Orwellian name the National Center for Reason and Justice (NCRJ). The NCRJ provides legal assistance and other support to defendants in child sexual abuse cases that they claim were injustices. Their current president is Michael Snedeker, the defense lawyer who coauthored Satan's Silence with Debbie Nathan. Nathan and two other writers are on the board of directors. So is Professor Elizabeth Loftus, the highly acclaimed memory researcher. One of the first cases that the NCRJ sponsored (which apparently means providing support with legal fees) was that of Frank Fuster, the subject of Chapter Six. The NCRJ sponsors a number of lesser-known cases discussed in Chapter Three, including Robert Halsey, Lynn Malcom, Francis and Daniel Keller, and Nancy Smith and Joseph Allen. The NCRJ also sponsors a host of defendants from more recent cases. There is no question that defendants in child sexual abuse cases continue to claim they are victims of a witch-hunt.

What kind of evidence is there to support the witch-hunt claims that have emerged since the Michaels case? Eight examples are discussed here. This assortment of cases comes from a variety of sources, including writers Debbie Nathan, Mark Pendergrast, Thomas Sowell, activist Carol Hopkins, and the NCRJ. Some of Robert Rosenthal's recent appellate cases are examined as well, since he has claimed that his own practice is made up of defendants who experienced grave injustices in child sexual abuse cases. (Rosenthal represented Kelly Michaels and Frank Fuster at the appellate level.) These sources should yield the best possible evidence of modern witch-hunts. But in all eight of these examples, it appears that the witch-hunt claim is overblown and distorts or entirely overlooks significant evidence of guilt. Accordingly, these cases are most notable for what they demonstrate about the continuing political interest in rallying around defendants, regardless of the facts, in child sexual abuse cases.

Neil Shumate

Neil Shumate was a popular kindergarten teacher in Pleasanton, California, which makes the origins of his case all the more surprising. A first-grader at Fairlands Elementary School, named Kimberly, told a yard-duty teacher, in a conversation about which teachers they did and did not like, that she did not like Shumate because he "puts his hands down my pants."[26] There was no doubt in the teacher's mind as to what the girl said or meant. Indeed, the teacher knew she was duty-bound to report suspected abuse to the principal. The principal spoke to Kimberly and her older sister, Cathleen. Cathleen apparently reported that Shumate had touched her bottom on many occasions. On the basis of those statements, the principal made reports to the police and child protective services. Through the investigation that followed, it emerged that this was not the first time such complaints had come to the principal. But it was the first time she called law enforcement.

The police investigation began with the original two sisters and expanded to other kindergarten, first-, and second-grade students. In additional to the original girls, four other children reported sexual touching by Shumate inside their outer clothing. A complaint was filed soon thereafter charging him with seven counts of child molestation during 1991–92 and 1992–93. A few weeks later, charges were added in connection with a boy who was in Shumate's class in 1988–89. Further investigation identified three additional male victims, all of whom who been molested at Shumate's home while living there as foster children. Two of those boys were added to the criminal charges.

The portrait that emerged of Neil Shumate was of a teacher everyone agreed was "affectionate." Children often sat on his lap, and he regularly hugged and patted children. He was known for administering spankings on children's birthdays, one spank for every year. He was also known for giving "slobbery kisses." A room mother raised concerns with Shumate and others that he was "too affectionate."[27] But he also had a following of admiring parents and teachers. Even so, a mother who weighed in against Shumate's being imprisoned told authorities she was uncomfortable when helping in his class because of how he physically handled children. She hoped that he "got help."[28]

Shumate would argue on appeal that "touching [was] an inextricable part of teaching kindergarten" and that five-year-olds "need help with zippers and belts and shirttails on a daily basis."[29] But those kinds of innocuous actions were not the nature of the claims against Shumate; he was charged with rubbing penises and buttocks, over the clothing or over the underwear, and sticking his fingers inside children's pants and underwear.

The children testified at trial and were subject to cross-examination. The defense presented Lee Coleman, who testified for Frank Fuster, to criticize the investigation and opine that the children were not reliable. A brief exchange in cross-examination revealed the extreme implications of Coleman's position. When asked if he had ever conducted an interview of a child for the purposes of determining whether or not the child had been molested, Coleman said "absolutely not" because doing so "would be a contradiction of everything" he believes.[30] He holds it is impossible to "get at the truth of whether a child was molested by a psychiatric examination." In short, he does not believe in interviewing children. It is no wonder he always has something to say for the defense in cases where, inevitably, children have been interviewed.

The biggest surprise at trial was Daniel Bromberg, who had been an aide in Shumate's class in 1981 and testified about a conversation that opened with Shumate saying "You like boys, don't you?" and included Shumate describing how he tries "to be as affectionate with the girls as with the boys" in case the parents of any boys complain.[31] Bromberg's testimony was particularly compelling because he had pleaded guilty to child molestation elsewhere two years later. Shumate's defenders have claimed that this case amounts to making it a crime to be an affectionate teacher. But an examination of the charges and testimony demonstrates that this case is about much more specific touching than is normal, and that Shumate's history was filled with red flags, minimization, and denial. The case began with a spontaneous disclosure, and a quick investigation turned up multiple other charges.

Shumate was convicted by a jury of all the charges. Immediately after his conviction, he tried the innocence-by-association approach, filing these items with the court: Nathan's Redbook article about the Kelly Michaels case, several of Rabinowitz's Wall Street Journal articles about the Amirault case, and some printed copy from Jonathan Harris's internet Witch-Hunt Information Center. The site contained a list, prepared by Nathan, of cases with allegedly "compelling evidence" of false convictions. Shumate's name was on the list, although he was not included on the dedication page of her book with Snedeker. Shumate also received a surprising level of support from the community. Before sentencing, the court received more than four hundred letters from parents and teachers "stating emphatically that [Shumate] is incapable of such crimes."[32] (An almost equal number of people signed a petition urging a strict sentence.) Shumate's conviction was upheld on appeal.

Christopher Ferrara

Christopher Ferrara was introduced sympathetically by Carol Hopkins at the "Day of Contrition" in Salem, Massachusetts. Ferrara had recently been released from the New York prison system, where he served four years for attempted first-degree sexual abuse. He had been a special deputy in the "Officer Bill" program of the Wyoming County Sheriff's Department, visiting schools and, according to one news story, warning children about "the dangers of talking to strangers."[33] Ferrara was indicted on seven felony counts of first-degree sexual abuse involving boys between nine and fourteen. Ferrara brought boys to his apartment and sometimes "bathed them" and gave them presents. His defenders classify these acts as befriending underprivileged boys. But nobody has explained why a twenty-five-year-old police officer would be "bathing" a fourteen-year-old boy—underprivileged or not—in his apartment. Ferrara served his full sentence because he was unwilling to admit to the parole board that he committed any crime. He was introduced at the event in Salem as a witch-hunt victim who "had not yet had his conviction overturned."[34]

This is not surprising, since his conviction was the result of a guilty plea.[35] What is surprising is the unquestioning acceptance of Ferrara by those at the Day of Contrition. Child molesters often emphasize how they never intended any harm. They view their sexual activities as love or education. This may well be true for Christopher Ferrara, and that would undoubtedly be useful information for the purposes of sex-offender treatment. But treatment is meaningless for those who deny their crimes. And the misguided thinking that may help explain how or why Ferrara talked himself into giving young adolescents baths in his apartment is irrelevant to the question of innocence or guilt. Those promoting the witch-hunt narrative at the event in Salem, however, were apparently too intent on their political cause to exercise skepticism or seek to verify claims.

Robert Lawton

Another one of the lesser-known people introduced as a witch-hunt victim at the so-called Day of Contrition is Robert Lawton. Carol Hopkins did not explain why Lawton deserved to be honored, but Mark Pendergrast had earlier associated Lawton's case, in his book Victims of Memory, with the idea that "little children can be led into stating and believing the most outrageous falsehoods."[36] Pendergrast did not provide any details beyond the fact that Lawton had been convicted of sodomizing his three sons.

Lawton's case did not involve young children or repetitive, coercive interviews. The oldest boy was nine years old when he testified, and the case had strong physical evidence. There were deeply disturbing anal findings in all three sons.[37] Dr. Paul Young, a former Burlington area pediatrician who had trained medical students and residents in the areas of physical and sexual abuse of children, testified that the oldest boy, Greg, did not have normal anal findings. There was unusual venous engorgement, physical findings that that were "abnormal and consistent with a history of rectal penetration."[38] His observations on David were similar, but the engorgement was elevated, suggesting that the injury had occurred numerous times. Dr. Young described this "as a strikingly abnormal finding," most likely to have been caused by penetration.[39]

Pendergrast implies that Ceci and Bruck's arguments were responsible for overturning Lawton's conviction in Vermont. Actually, the court did not rule on those issues; instead, it overturned Lawton's conviction because the prosecutor went overboard while cross-examining Lawton. But the decision highlights the range of evidence against him: direct testimony, hearsay, and medical evidence. There was also evidence about an event years earlier in California, when the defendant's brother-in-law walked into a room in his sister's house and allegedly observed Lawton sitting in the middle of a circle of children with an exposed erection.[40] The prosecutor made three references to that matter during the trial. The Vermont Supreme Court thought the three references were inflammatory. The court agreed that the incident was "probative," so mentioning it once might have been acceptable. There was also an extended analysis of the motion for acquittal on the charge involving Lawton's youngest son. The court concluded that the child's statements were trustworthy and that there was sufficient evidence to support a conviction, but for the overzealous conduct of the prosecutor.[41]

Was Lawton the victim of a witch-hunt, or did a group of academics and activists embrace a man whose three sons all had strong physical evidence of anal rape, whose brother-in-law reported suspected child sexual abuse years earlier in California, and whose wife took out a restraining order against him in order to protect the children? There is no evidence in the appellate record of anything other than overzealousness on the part of a prosecutor who was apparently outraged at Lawton's misleading testimony on the witness stand.[42] But Lawton was not retried, and the charges were ultimately dismissed, providing an argument for those who would label the case a witch-hunt.

Charles Bighead

Charles Bighead was convicted in 1994 of sexually abusing his daughter, Rita Bighead Eison. She testified that the abuse began when she was seven years old, and that by age eleven she was forced to have sexual intercourse with her father regularly. He would often pay her small sums of money afterward. Bighead was a tribal police officer and was described as "a strict disciplinarian" who punished his children physically and apparently once injured Rita's eye in the process.[43] When Rita was seventeen years old, she insisted that her father stop his sexual assaults. Later that year, she confided in a tribal police officer about the abuse. This set the wheels in motion for Bighead's prosecution. The officer was the first adult Rita had ever told about the abuse.

A federal jury eventually heard from Rita, two of her childhood friends, and Tasha Boychuk, the director of forensic services at the Child Advocacy Center in Phoenix. The childhood friends both testified to statements that Rita made at the time about sexual abuse by her father. Boychuk, who testified as a rebuttal witness, spoke only about the general characteristics of sexually abused children, not about Rita in particular. Boychuk told the jury that, on the basis of her experience interviewing more than a thousand children, it is not unusual to delay disclosure of sexual abuse. She was rebutting the defense argument that Rita's credibility was dubious because she delayed reporting the abuse. Bighead denied any wrongdoing. He was convicted, and his conviction was subsequently upheld 2-1 on appeal.

The dissenting opinion in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals was written by Judge John T. Noonan, who was apparently incensed that Boychuk was allowed to testify. Noonan invoked the Salem witch trials and expressed his broad dissatisfaction with various "cultural changes" that have nothing to do with the evidence against Bighead.[44] He also railed against those who would claim or believe in satanic ritual abuse but then allowed that such claims were not actually part of this case. He further relied on Richard Gardner's Sex Abuse Hysteria to criticize "the kind of persons engaged in the kind of work that Tasha Boychuk is engaged in."[45] In other words, Judge Noonan took the position that Boychuk, whose psychology doctorate involved a field-based validation study of children's statements about sexual abuse, had "remarkable bias" because she had professional training and experience with child sexual abuse. The power of crying witch-hunt did not go unnoticed. Thomas Sowell quickly followed suit, editorializing in Forbes about the "legal lynching" of Charles Bighead. Sowell bemoaned how "in some cases, even a daughter's own denial that anything happened is not enough to override the suspicion and presumptions of social workers."[46] But this description has nothing to do with the case against Bighead. His daughter was clear and consistent from the moment she disclosed as a seventeen-year-old. What she delayed reporting to any adult she had told to two separate friends during childhood, and both of them verified that fact. Bighead's case had nothing to do with lynching or witch-hunts, but it nevertheless demonstrates how effective those images can be in mobilizing people with a larger agenda against social workers and "survivors" of sexual abuse.[47]

Elsie Oscarson

Elsie Oscarson was convicted of sexually abusing her two sons in Vermont in 2003. Her case is one of the recent "sponsored cases" of the NCRJ, which places her squarely in the contemporary witch-hunt narrative. Her case was located by Pendergrast, who also lives in Vermont. His limited account of the case—based largely on attending a sentencing hearing and talking to the defendant—provides no evidence on which to conclude that her conviction was an injustice. To the contrary, he allows that it was "a messy case" and that "it may be a good thing that [Oscarson's] children were taken from her in Tennessee," years before the case in Vermont.[48] It is not clear why Pendergrast says this since he also apparently thinks that Oscarson was falsely accused in the case. His overall theory is that she has been falsely convicted twice—and that proving the first conviction was wrong might have affected the second case, even though they were far apart in miles, years, and facts.

Is there anything beyond conjecture to support this theory? Pendergrast says there is a memorandum describing the first case as involving "horrendous abuse." He transforms this phrase into the supposition that this earlier case was a "classic satanic ritual abuse" case, but he does not provide a single quote to back up this charge, and the mystery memo is never actually cited. But this conjecture alone is apparently enough for adherents to the witch-hunt narrative. Oscarson passed muster with the "criteria" that the NCRJ claims to employ before deciding whether to sponsor a case. Daniel Patrick Moynihan worried years ago about "defining deviancy down."[49] In the contemporary era, it seems that "witch hunts" are being defined down. Little more than a protestation of innocence by the defendant and some assorted innuendo is necessary for many activists, writers, and academics to cry "witch hunt."

Robert Rosenthal's cases

Robert Rosenthal, who most famously represented Kelly Michaels and worked with Ceci and Bruck on the "Concerned Scientists" amicus brief, has claimed that cases he and others were recently litigating across the country are "testament" to continuation of "witch hunts" involving child sexual abuse. In a letter to the Wall Street Journal in 2003, Rosenthal claimed that those like Frank Fuster—who is, in his view, wrongfully imprisoned—"continue to be joined by others like them all too often."[50] He did not mention any of these recent cases by name. But looking at his appellate practice, one finds little evidence to support his claim.

One of Rosenthal's clients was Jose Serrano, convicted by a New York jury of eighteen child sexual-abuse counts in connection with male foster children placed in his home. Serrano had requested that only male foster children be placed in his house. In 1997, a fourteen-year-old identified as Cody O. reported that Serrano had forced him to engage in oral sex. According to Magistrate Judge Victor Bianchini's report years later, "the authorities told Cody O. he was a liar, and ruining a 'good man's life,' and he recanted his allegations." Another fourteen-year-old, Daniel, reported much the same thing two years later, followed by a third report, by a twelve-year-old named Glen. A police investigation was commenced after a fourth report, in 2000, by a twelve-year-old named Edward. The police interviewed other children who had resided in Serrano's home, and two other boys reported sexual abuse. They then interviewed Serrano, and he confessed to the abuse of four boys who had been identified by the police, and one who had not. That boy, who was twelve years old at the time, later confirmed he had been sexually abused by Serrano. Beyond the lack of any reason to think it was a wrongful conviction—one of Serrano's main appellate arguments was to object to his own confession—what is striking about this case is how many children were sexually abused and did not disclose anything at the time.[51] And that some did and were ignored.

Rosenthal also represented Frederick Weber, who had been indicted on thirty-seven counts involving sexual contact with thirteen young girls at his home in Nassau, New York, between 1996 and 2000. Some counts were dismissed for overlapping with each other, others were severed (meaning they would have to be tried separately), and Weber was tried on thirteen counts related to three girls. He was convicted of all counts on one girl, and acquitted on the charges connected to her sister and her friend. Rosenthal argued that the time frame specified in the counts was insufficiently specified and that the trial court should have had a "taint" hearing. The appellate court ruled that the claim of the victims having been subjected to undue suggestion was "speculative" and upheld the conviction, noting that the children and the police investigators had all been subject to cross-examination.[52] Another of Rosenthal's appellate clients was Tyler Lupoli, who was convicted of sexual abuse charges in connection with four girls outside Portland, Oregon. After an appellate court reversed the decision, Lupoli offered to plead guilty to three counts of attempted first-degree sex abuse and two counts of harassment for intimate touching in order to avoid going through another trial. There isn't the slightest hint that the gist of the charges against Lupoli was wrongful. He admitted he touched three young girls inappropriately.[53] These are not witch-hunts, and Rosenthal's arguments are not about factual innocence.

The only possible exception is State v. Carol M.D., the strange case from Wenatchee, Washington.[54] It is strange because one of the children in the case, Susan "Sam" Doggett, ended up in the custody of Carol Hopkins, who had formed an organization devoted to alleged injustices to defendants in child sexual abuse cases. Hopkins, who lived more than a thousand miles from Wenatchee, offered to take custody of the girl, and later she told CBS News she wanted the girl to become "the poster child for the cause."[55] "Sam" apparently recanted claims against her parents while living with Hopkins. Rosenthal's successful appeal, filed before the recantation, included arguments that appear to undercut the claim that there was no abuse in the family. His first argument on appeal was against the use of testimony from a counselor to Doggett's youngest daughter concerning incriminating statements the girl apparently made about her parents.[56] Although excluding such evidence might be appropriate in all fairness to a criminal defendant, it is not the kind of defense that suggests Rosenthal's client was being subjected to a witch-hunt. Charges were eventually dropped and the Doggetts filed suit in federal court claiming their constitutional rights had been violated by the investigation. U.S. District Judge Alan MacDonald ruled the lawsuit "frivolous" and ordered their lawyer to pay the City of Wenatchee's legal fees.[57]

The Wenatchee cases at large are similarly complicated. Much like what came to be known as the Jordan, Minnesota, cases, the Wenatchee cases are actually a series of loosely connected cases that should not all be grouped under one heading. It would take years of research to examine the cases thoroughly, but there is readily available evidence to suggest that labeling the entire matter a witch-hunt is inappropriate. A local television station broadcast a prison interview with an adult woman who had pleaded guilty and, even after all the criticism of the case, maintained she and other adults had engaged in sexual contact with numerous children.[58] Moreover, a jury in a highly publicized civil trial related to the Wenatchee cases ruled that various public officials did not violate the civil rights of eight plaintiffs. The judge had instructed the jurors that if there were "facts that would cause a reasonably cautious official to believe that the person had committed the crime for which they were arrested," they should rule for the defendants—the public officials.[59] But it is also clear that there were false convictions in Wenatchee, spurred by an overzealous sheriff, Robert Perez, who would later be discredited for his behavior, including the fact that two key witnesses in several cases were foster children in his home. Perez was also accused of trying to coerce children's testimony and destroying evidence.[60] The false conviction problem has been expounded on in the media and in a book by a defense lawyer, Kathyrn Lyon, called Witch Hunt.[61] What has been lost in those accounts is any sense that some of the cases were well founded, some were rightly not overturned, and some were never even challenged. The witch-hunt narrative about these cases paints with such a broad brush that it cloaks the guilty with the veneer of innocence. David Horsey of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer drew a cartoon about Wenatchee that featured judges, police, and social workers in bed together. It was titled "The Real Incest," as if the far more widespread type of incest, including Wenatchee defendants who never challenged their convictions, was not real. In this regard, the current discourse has the same imbalance that the witch-hunt narrative brought to cases like those in Jordan, Minnesota, where the tragedies connected to actual abuse were quickly lost to history.

The period of infamous day-care sexual abuse cases ended almost twenty years ago. Yet there are still respected academics, judges, and other professionals carrying the mantle of the witch-hunt narrative. The power of claiming innocence-by-association while employing the rhetoric and imagery of the Salem witch trials is undeniable. Those claims have not met with much success in court, but they have nevertheless helped to mobilize a divergent coalition of interest groups, from father's rights advocates and the False Memory Syndrome Foundation to defense lawyers and assorted academics. These diverse groups share a strong interest in continuing to promote the witch-hunt narrative.

There is also a significant and unexpected convergence of the left and the right around these issues that helps explain why there have been so few skeptical voices about the witch-hunt narrative. Those on the right rally against witch-hunts on the part of child protective services agencies because they do not think that government involvement in the family is legitimate, even to protect children. Those on the left find the witch-hunt narrative compelling because they are already well versed in the abuse of power by police and prosecutors. Accordingly, there is no skepticism of the witch-hunt claim. Both of these political viewpoints are prone to believe the cry of witch-hunt, even if the evidence is as strong as in the cases against Robert Lawton, Christopher Ferrara, Jose Serrano, and others.

The Legacy of the Witch-hunt Narrative

Discounting the Reality of Day-care Sexual Abuse

The infamous day-care sexual abuse cases occurred in the 1980s and early 1990s. There has not been a highly publicized day-care sexual abuse trial in twenty years. The witch-hunt narrative employs this fact as proof that the original cases must have been baseless, creatures of a particular time and place. As one commenter put it, the "sudden absence of new cases" is evidence that "the tumult has subsided."[62] But, just as there were day-care sexual abuse cases before the McMartin case (see Chapter Four), there have been day-care sexual abuse cases ever since. It is impossible to ascertain how the overall number of such cases has changed over time. What is clear is that the cases ending up in court are different in two ways. First, prosecutors do not bring massive indictments involving large numbers of children; instead, they are more likely to pare cases down to the strongest counts. Second, if the case goes to trial, it is likely to receive only local publicity; none of the sexual abuse cases in day-care centers since the end of the Michaels case has received significant national coverage. In this way, the perception that these cases have disappeared is actually evidence of a change in our primary window into understanding the issue: media coverage. (Hence the attention earlier in this chapter on the Catholic Church cases and Megan's Law, major topics of media interest in the post-McMartin era.)

A few examples illustrate the reality of day-care sexual abuse in the post-McMartin era. The Oak Tree Day Care Center case in Yucaipa, Arizona, began in 1997 when Nathan Martindale, who was working in his parents' day-care center, was arrested after the parents of three children reported possible abuse. Martindale eventually admitted to some of the allegations, including performing oral copulation on the children (a feature deemed fantastic by Charlier and Downing). In a reflection of how prosecutors tend to handle these cases now, the charges were reduced to apply to one child who was considered the strongest witness. The local newspaper—there was no significant media coverage—reported "investigators were having trouble obtaining clear-cut testimony from other young victims."[63] A decade earlier, many prosecutors would have put those children on the stand. The case would likely have been the kind of perplexing mixture that characterized many in the 1980s, and it might well have been labeled a "hoax." Instead, it is a little-known case that ended in a noncontroversial guilty plea.

A similar result occurred in the Children City Learning Center case in Reno, Nevada, where Gary Hanneman, thirty-three, was arrested and charged in February 2001 with, among other things, ten counts of sexual assault on a child and one count of using a child to produce pornography. Hanneman had been working since 1999 at the center, across the street from the University of Nevada, Reno, campus. Hanneman was well liked, he had no criminal record, and many adults who worked there apparently never saw anything abnormal. He allegedly molested dozens of children over three years without any complaints until the very end of that time. And when the children were finally interviewed, some said "fantastic" things about games with feces. If this had happened in the late 1980s, it would probably be on Charlier and Downing's list of dubious ritual abuse cases from around the country. But the Hanneman case happened ten years later, at a time when video equipment had gone from expensive and novel to affordable and extremely portable. And Hanneman had videotaped some of his crimes. This is probably why he also quickly confessed to molesting twenty-eight children at the day-care center. When explaining why a plea agreement would spare the families involved, the prosecutor made note of Hanneman's form of pedophilia, which "involves a fetish with human excrement." Presumably the videotapes document this supposedly fantastic element. In short, everything about this case that could have been cast as dubious was actually true. Hanneman entered a guilty plea in November 2001. None of the sensational evidence was aired in court, and there was almost no publicity beyond Nevada.

Other recent cases also emphasize the number of victims that can be involved in day-care abuse cases and the number of years such abuse can go still unapprehended in the post-McMartin era. Larry Akins was apprehended in August 2007 for abusing children ranging in age from three to eight over a period of years at the Gingerbread Day Care in Van Buren, Arkansas. He had been operating the center with his wife since 2000. Akins pleaded guilty to charges involving eight children; his lawyer read a statement saying he "took full responsibility."[64] A similar case, but with a much longer history of untold abuse, unfolded in Ste. Genevieve, Missouri, where William E. Huck, Sr., was apprehended in March 2007 for sexually abusing a four-year-old boy at an in-home day care run by his wife. Huck confessed to the crime and provided "a detailed account of how he engaged in sexual contact with the boy twelve different times."[65] He had apparently been doing the same thing for almost thirty years without detection. Officials estimated that approximately forty children had been molested. Neither case received significant media coverage.

A final case is noteworthy because it emanates from Wenatchee, Washington, the location of probably the worst excesses in a sexual abuse investigation in the mid-1990s and possibly since. The day-care case had nothing to do with those earlier ones. The defendant, Agustin O. Barragan, pleaded guilty in 2010 to two counts of third-degree assault of a child in an Alford plea that acknowledged that the state had sufficient evidence to convict him. The abuse occurred at the Barragan's in-home day care in Wenatchee. According to a local newspaper account, Child Protective Services records entered in this case indicate there had been complaints against Barragan in 1994, 1995, and 2003.[66] None of those investigations resulted in any charges or loss of license. Given his eventual admission in the 2010 case, one wonders whether the earlier investigations were dropped in error, the kind of thing that never gets mentioned in the witch-hunt narrative, where "unsubstantiated" is frequently conflated with "untrue."[67]

These anecdotes illustrate the continued existence of sexual abuse in day-care centers. They also demonstrate something about the power of the secrecy and related forces against children disclosing such abuse even in the post-McMartin era. They all involved multiple victims, and yet none were quickly exposed. The fact that prosecutors are savvier and the media is less obsessed with these cases is beneficial. What is unclear is whether those improvements occurred alongside a decrease in the likelihood of investigating and prosecuting sexual abuse in day-care settings. The question is impossible to answer with existing data sources. There is no national archive of data on state prosecutions of this crime, and the state-level data from Child Protective Services agencies are scattered and tend to lump day-care abuse into the broader category of "institutional abuse." Nevertheless, there are a variety of reasons to postulate that the official number of cases involving day-care centers has gone down more than the actual incidence of such abuse.

First, original data obtained from DYFS in New Jersey suggest a worrisome trend. There were twenty-five cases of substantiated sexual abuse in day-care centers in New Jersey in 1986. One of those involved Wee Care in Maplewood, New Jersey (the Kelly Michaels case), and that year was the high water mark. There were ten substantiated cases in 1992 and nine in 1993, the year the Michaels case was overturned on appeal. The following year, there was only one substantiated case statewide. There were none in the three years after that. From those data, it would appear that either sexual abuse in day-care centers stopped occurring in New Jersey after 1993 or it stopped being investigated and recognized. There is no reason to think it is the former and there are very specific reasons to think that DYFS might try to avoid such cases in the years after Michaels. These data from a single state over ten years need to be supplemented by studies of multiple states in more recent years.

Second, empirical studies of case flows in criminal courts bear out the hypothesis that cases with younger children are more likely to be dismissed by prosecutors. Stroud and her co-authors in New Mexico conducted one of the only studies to compare cases referred to prosecutors against those that were not.[68] They found that 32 percent of the dropped cases involved children age four and under, while only 9 percent of the criminal cases involved children that age. In another study, prosecutors accepted 35 percent of the sexual abuse referrals in cases involving children four to six and 69 percent for ages seven to twelve.[69] Ellen Gray's study of eight jurisdictions across the country described cases involving victims five years old or younger as "notoriously difficult to prosecute effectively."[70] Not all studies find such a clear result. William Tucker obtained strikingly different results in comparing information from child advocacy centers in Minnesota and Wisconsin in order to analyze the possible effect of age and other variables on the likelihood of a case moving forward in the criminal justice system.[71] But the consensus of existing literature is that cases involving young children are much less likely to move forward in the criminal justice system.

Finally, there is survey evidence that prosecutors have internalized these values. In one survey, 62 percent of prosecutors said "too young" was sometimes or very often a reason for rejecting a child sexual abuse case.[72] Tucker's survey of prosecutors in eleven states found that, with controlled vignettes, younger age was clearly associated with decrease in likelihood to prosecute.[73] Since vignettes hold facts constant and vary only designated variables, these findings reflect a general attitude about the age of child witnesses.

The concern that screening mechanisms might screen out good cases is rarely discussed in the existing literature in law and psychology, where the implication of the witch-hunt narrative is that day-care sexual abuse charges are "bizarre" and to be discredited. In 2004, Ceci and Bruck wrote that a "disproportionate number of studies of preschool children at the end of the 20th century" was "directly motivated by forensic concerns of the day."[74] Those concerns were exclusively about defendants, and this book argues they were misplaced. Moreover, an imbalance still exists in the psychology literature. As Professors Tom Lyon and Kathy Pezdek have pointed out, there is much more attention paid to what is wrong with interviews than there is to how to make them better.[75] In the meantime, there are several reasons to be concerned about whether sexual abuse cases involving young children, in and out of day care, are less likely to be acted on now than they were in the 1980s.

Undermining the Credibility of Children

The witch-hunt narrative came out of cases from the 1980s and prevailed in the court of public opinion, in many criminal courts, and in the field of psychology in the 1990s. But what started as a contest over highly publicized day-care cases in the 1980s has turned out to have ramifications far beyond those cases. One lasting effect is in the field of psychology, where the idea that children are "highly suggestible" has taken hold largely because of the persuasive, but inaccurate, portrayal of the Michaels case. A group of activists and academics have mobilized around this narrative to promote various agendas and support cases that seek to discredit children.

The first sign of this political mobilization came when the television program Nightline set out in 1996, a year after the Michaels case was over, to examine whether children's testimony was being unduly discredited. They wondered whether one effect of the witch-hunt narrative was that it was harder to bring and win cases that were based on the word of a child. This concern had been expressed during the years when Ceci and Bruck's position started dominating the field. The decision by Gail Goodman and others not to sign the "Concerned Scientists" brief in the Michaels case was based on similar concerns. A single-minded and exaggerated view of child suggestibility was bound to have negative consequences on children as witnesses.

The ABC network quickly discovered there were writers and academics so devoted to the witch-hunt narrative that they mobilized to object to a program about whether children's testimony was being unduly discounted before the program was aired. There was an organized campaign to discredit Civia Tamarkin, a journalist who contributed to the program and had once been an advisory board member of Believe the Children. Tamarkin had also said, in a speech about ritual abuse cases that was later published in article form, that she was "unequivocally . . . convinced that these crimes do occur."[76] Peter Freyd, a mathematics professor at the University of Pennsylvania who helped form the False Memory Syndrome Foundation (FMSF), sent an email labeled "Nightline Alert" through the FMSF-News distribution list. The message claimed that Tamarkin was the producer of the upcoming program and the message contained "background information assembled by Debbie Nathan," along with copies of two separate letters from Nathan to Nightline. In those letters, Nathan painted Tamarkin as espousing "discredited and downright bizarre child abuse theories."[77] This effort did not succeed in keeping the program off the air, but it demonstrated surprisingly strong resistance to asking questions about whether the witch-hunt narrative has had negative effects.

When the program aired, Ted Koppel began with an unusual preface that gently scolded those who so strongly protested against a program they had not yet seen. Correcting the misimpression that Tamarkin produced or reported the story—she had acted only as a consultant—Koppel expressed the view that the story is "important" and "had been compiled as fairly and cleanly as possible."[78] The program opened with television footage from a highly publicized case from Broward County, Florida, where two girls had been raped and murdered by a man whose long record of sex crimes against children had been met by lenient, even lackadaisical, responses by the state. On New Year's Eve 1995, an eleven-year-old girl was assaulted by a man who took off his clothes, carried her into his bedroom, and tried to rape her. They struggled and she managed to kick him hard enough that he stopped. As she left the room, the man said to her: "Tell somebody about this. It was a bad thing that I did; I shouldn't have done it."[79] The girl told her father, who filed a police report within two hours, identifying Howard Steven Ault as the assailant. A detective took a taped statement from the girl and her father, and then the case languished for more than ten months.

It was later revealed that Ault was on probation at the time for sexual assault on a six-year-old girl in 1994.[80] He had also been convicted of attempted sexual battery of a twelve-year-old girl in Lauderdale Lakes in 1988. But Ault was not arrested on the New Year's Eve charges. No action was taken until ten months later, when he was in custody at the Oakland Park Police station in connection with the kidnapping, rape, and murder of two homeless sisters, age eleven and seven. Only then did Broward County detectives—embarrassed by their failure to take the other eleven-year-old girl seriously—rush to try to cover themselves for all those months of inaction. "A Child's Word" used the case to point out the potential costs of discounting or failing to act on the word of a child. They also quoted prosecutors who argued that it had become more difficult to bring sexual abuse cases because people were unduly dismissive of children as witnesses.

"Distorted Journalism," Nat Hentoff titled his Village Voice column the following week—the first of two columns he devoted entirely to an attack on "A Child's Word." "Why was not a single abandoned case mentioned?" Hentoff protested, labeling the program "propaganda" for asserting that lives had been lost because of the discrediting of child witnesses.[81] Hentoff was apparently unaware that the videotape at the beginning of the program was from the Ault case—a highly publicized case that illustrates in gruesome detail how discounting the word of a child ultimately cost the lives of two children.[82] But their story, which generated considerable publicity when the girls were found murdered, was quickly lost in the popular discourse about child sexual abuse. There has not been a serious engagement of the questions raised in "A Child's Word," in print or broadcast, since. There have been flashes of media attention to more recent Ault-like stories, such as the Avila case in California in which Samantha Runnion's life would have been spared had the word of two eleven-year-old girls been taken more seriously a year earlier.[83] But these grim cases have not generated much commentary or attention to the general question of child credibility and whether the word of a child is too quickly doubted or dismissed.

The same people who objected to "A Child's Word" gathered the following year in Salem, Massachusetts, for an event they called the Day of Contrition. Held on the three hundredth anniversary of a day of remorse for the Salem witch trials, they could not have been more direct in trying to associate their own causes with the righteousness of being against the witch trials. The event was ostensibly organized by Carol Hopkins, an activist from San Diego who had formed something she called the "Justice Committee."[84] Her organization generated the most exaggerated estimate of wrongful convictions in the 1980s, claiming there were "thousands" of such cases. Hopkins described the purpose of the Day of Contrition as addressing "the reasons and remedies for the nationwide epidemic of spurious accusations and prosecutions."[85] The event featured writers, academics, and former defendants connected to all of the major cases in this book: McMartin, Michaels, and Country Walk. Ralph Underwager led a prayer at the event and Richard Gardner, a frequent defense expert in these cases, gave a fiery speech that argued "a whole industry has been spawned" as a result of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) and that "hysteria is being fueled by the money." The audience applauded when he said, "Children are liars!"[86]

Gardner is perhaps best known for coining the phrase "parental alienation syndrome," which attributes a child's statements about sexual abuse, most often in the context of a divorce case, to the "alienation" of the hostile parent, almost always the mother. PAS, as it has come to be known, does not have a scientific basis in the literature, but it had an enthusiastic following in Salem.[87] Supporters of "false memory syndrome," which suffers from the same problem, were also active participants in the conference.[88] These groups sought to gain credibility and acceptance by associating themselves with the imagery of Salem. That much was public. What was not publicized is that Herman Ohme—an activist with the False Memory Syndrome Foundation, and one of the behind-the-scenes organizers of the event—with assistance from Carol Hopkins and Richard Gardner had been working closely with a staff member of Illinois Senator Dan Coats, a conservative Republican, to water down the Child Abuse Treatment and Prevention Act.[89] They did not succeed in eliminating the statutory mandate to report suspected child abuse, but the larger agenda of these activists endured.

Eileen McNamara wrote a column for the Boston Globe about the Day of Contrition titled "Hardly a Case of Persecution." Arguing that there is no evidence we are preoccupied with protecting children, she criticized those at the event for seeing "rampant hysteria" where it does not exist.[90] She did not use the strident language of the witch-hunt narrative, but she did experience the same kind of wrath that came down on Koppel when ABC asked whether a child's word has become unduly discredited because of the efforts of people to associate more and more cases with the imagery of Salem.[91] It was becoming apparent that there was intense opposition to anyone who questioned the exaggerated claims advanced by these groups.

The Marzolf Case: Expansive Efforts to Label Children as "Tainted"

One of the worries of those who opposed the idea of "taint hearings" in the Michaels case was that a process arguably justified by the most extreme cases would be imposed on cases where it did not belong. Taint hearings are a special procedure that allows defendants to argue a child has been so "tainted" by the interview process that the child is not reliable enough to testify at trial; these hearings came about in New Jersey as a result of the Michaels case. The Marzolf case, the first taint hearing held in New Jersey after Michaels, provided the first test of those concerns. The case arose under circumstances that would seem to eliminate the need for a taint hearing, to wit, it began when James Marzolf, twenty-nine, had his hands down the pants of his young nephew when the boy's stepfather, Mark Glazer, walked into the room. Marzolf thought he was alone with the seven-year-old Tyler, on the third floor of an empty house. Glazer testified that after registering what he was seeing, he backed up and announced his presence from the hallway, whereupon Marzolf came out of the room looking startled and saying something about "wrestling" with Tyler.[92] Glazer told his wife about the incident an hour later; they called DYFS the next day and asked advice about what to do. DYFS referred them to the police, who arranged to interview the boy and both parents a few days later.

Tyler was shy and reticent to talk. Most of his answers in the twenty-seven-page interview transcript are single words or phrases. Even so, occasional answers included details that speak volumes. "What did he do with his hand when he touched you?" the boy was asked after he had said he was touched and pointed to his "pee-pee." Tyler did not respond by saying tickle, or pinch, or something vague; he answered, "He went up and down."[93] Near the end of the interview, Tyler indicated that Uncle Jimmy bought "special" underwear for him, he got the underwear "from a closet," the underwear were "too small" for Tyler, and Uncle Jimmy made him wear them when he was "at his house." When police executed a search, the colorful, "too small" bikini underwear was located in the closet where Tyler said it would be. The boy gave a second statement on September 14 that had much more detail and included additional allegations against Marzolf. Criminal charges were ultimately based on these two statements and the stepfather's statement about observing the original event.

It seems strange that this case would even be subject to a taint hearing given a level of corroboration that would have allowed it to go to trial even back when the word of a child alone could not sustain charges. Yet the defendant was able to convince a judge to have a taint hearing, referred to as a Michaels hearing by the court.[94] What could possibly be said in a case where the child made a statement promptly and there was an adult witness? As it turns out, Maggie Bruck appeared for the defendant and offered the opinion that "there is a high degree of possibility" that the evidence from the boy is "unreliable."[95] He was so unreliable, she argued, that the judge should prohibit him from testifying at trial.

Bruck had criticisms of every step of the investigation. She viewed the five days between the initial report and the first police interview as "problematic." Ideally, she said, the interview should have been done "immediately."[96] She criticized the first interview as having too many directed questions. She allowed, in cross-examination, that the interviewer was sensitive in this interview, he did not pressure Tyler, and she would not likely have been able to conduct a better interview. Still, she considered it "biased." As for the much more detailed statements in the boy's second interview, Bruck opined that "one should really be concerned about the accuracy" of the second interview—because it was the second interview.[97]

The most striking part of Bruck's position is the contention that disclosing sexual abuse is a simple process normally done in one fell swoop. Referring to cases she "had been involved with" in which she thought there was sexual abuse—but without providing any actual case names—Bruck described the process of disclosure as follows: "It is sort of like the story just comes out and it is there."[98] Under that view, any child who does not disclose everything in the first interview is apparently suspect. Bruck's involvement in cases, it should be noted, was not as a clinician. She is not in the practice of evaluating children for suspected abuse or treating children who have been sexually abused.

Bruck also made several critical judgments about the boy's mother and stepfather. She discredited the account of the stepfather, who said he witnessed Marzolf with his hands down the boy's pants, on the grounds that he had allegedly changed his story. "I think their reporting two years later just sounded very different to what it was in the police reports five days later," she asserted. "And I think that the way they present the situation now it looks more—it looks cleaner," she continued, "than what was in their original statements."[99] But a direct comparison of the police report on August 25, 1995, and the stepfather's testimony on May 5, 1997, reveals that the two are extremely consistent.[100] Bruck focused her critique on the mother, who had the most interactions with her son about these events between his first and second interviews with the police. Bruck's position was predicated on the argument that the boy was "primed" by his first interview because, as she put it, Tyler was "asked to in fact engage in, you know, circling things and showing things on the doll."[101] There wasn't actually a doll. Sargent Hassim had a diagram, and he asked the boy to circle anywhere he had been touched. The boy circled the place he called his "wiener." Bruck cited recent work by Jane Rawls for the proposition, "when children are interviewed with line drawings, that can increase suggestiveness."[102] But the Rawls study actually differentiated between open-ended questions and directed questions and found the former to be much more accurate. Those were the kinds of questions Tyler was asked when he was given the line drawing.[103] After this "priming," Bruck's argument continued, a certain amount of suggestive questioning from the mother could account for Tyler's statements in the second interview. How did Bruck justify the conclusion that the mother was likely to have questioned her son in a way that tainted his testimony forever? The passage in which she justified her conclusion reads exactly as follows:

> I just—I mean, I can't be sure exactly what she said, but I think my—my feeling was that there were just enough hints in this record that she had certain fears and certain premises she was asking Tyler about.[104]

Elsewhere, Bruck is adamant that she represents the voice of science, and that clinicians, who do not conduct controlled laboratory experiments, do not. Yet in rendering her professional opinion that a mother's questions had likely tainted her son forever, Bruck relied on a feeling. That feeling did not strike Judge Coleman as plausible, particularly in light of the mother's actual testimony.[105] He ruled that the state had presented "clear and convincing evidence that the statement is reliable," which meant the case could proceed to trial. He based the decision in part on two common-sense ideas that were voiced by the psychologist who testified for the state. First, children are not disposed to believe bad things about someone they love; and by all accounts, Tyler loved "Uncle Jim." Second, people "aren't always willing to come forward with all of the information [about sexual abuse] on the first instance."[106] Disclosures often occur over time; this fact alone should not be taken as suspect. The outcome in this case was sensible enough, but one wonders whether it also means any defendant in New Jersey with the resources and the inclination can subject any child, and the adults with whom have the child has had contact, to a taint hearing. It would appear so.

The taint hearing took a toll on the boy's family. It constituted only a handful of court days but ended up being spread out over almost two years. By the time it was over, the parents did not want to go through an actual trial, having already endured a trial-like hearing that treated them as if they were the defendants.[107] The Glazers moved away and declined to cooperate any further with the prosecution.[108] Accordingly, charges against Marzolf were dropped in December 1997. The taint hearing was a success, at least in terms of the outcome. But the prosecution had won the battle and lost the case. One of the worries among those who argued against taint hearings at the time of the Michaels case was that they would impose needless and discouraging costs on children and their families. The Marzolf case bears out the concern.

The eventual consequences in the Marzolf case were worse. Marzolf moved to Pennsylvania and opened a karate school. In 2002, he was arrested and charged with possession of child pornography and nine counts of sexual abuse of children.[109] He eventually pleaded guilty to single felony counts of child pornography and child molestation.[110] This case demonstrates the real cost of failing to hold someone like Marzolf accountable for the events in New Jersey; the price was paid by children in Pennsylvania.

It is surprisingly difficult to ascertain how often taint hearings have been held in New Jersey and to what end. Cases that are dropped as a result of taint hearings would be most difficult to find, since they do not reach trial and would never produce any appellate documents. There would be an appellate opinion only in cases where children's testimony was admitted after a taint hearing and the defendant was subsequently convicted and then appealed. One case that fits this description involved former school psychologist James Krivacska, who published an article in Underwager's journal in 1991 about the "dangers" of informing children about sexual abuse.[111] Although he did not mention this in his article, Krivacska had been arrested for child sexual abuse in 1986 and was acquitted in a trial that pitted his word against a single child's. His conviction in 1998, stemming from allegations at another school, was based on the testimony of two children, who were subjected to a taint hearing that concluded with the decision that both boys could testify at trial. Krivacska was then convicted by a jury and sentenced to twenty-six years in prison. One might think Ceci and Bruck would be satisfied with this outcome, since there was a taint hearing. But Ceci, Bruck, and eight other psychologists filed a brief at the U.S. Supreme Court in April 2002 in an effort to overturn Krivacska's conviction.[112] They described their research as "uncontroverted within the scientific community" and branded Kathyrn Hall, who testified for the state, as a "self-styled 'expert'" who "propounded junk science."[113] Hall, who has a doctorate in psychology, acknowledged Ceci and Bruck's work, but she did not agree on how it applied to this case. The U.S. Supreme Court declined to hear the case, ending Krivacska's appeals. After a hearing in 2008, the Special Classification Review Board in New Jersey found that Krivacska, who they declined to release on parole, had acknowledged he "created victims and admits to some guilt."[114] Krivacska is still listed as one of the "sponsored cases" by the NCRJ, the organization headed by Michael Snedeker.

Although the controversy over whether to have special procedures for vetting children's testimony remains alive, the danger for children lies as much in the taint rhetoric as it does in court holdings about taint hearings.[115] By framing the issue about children's testimony in terms of taint, the concepts of gradations and degrees are glossed over with a rhetorical sleight of hand. Children are either tainted, or they are not. And given that defense experts seem to have enough targets in virtually any interview to support a conclusion that a child is tainted, the taint rhetoric often predestines the result. Children do not live in laboratory experiments; they populate the real world, where interviews and other human interactions are always subject to criticism. The important question is whether legitimate concerns about suggestibility are so strong that children should be prohibited from testifying. Though it would seem wise to reserve this argument for the most extreme cases, it has increasingly been applied to everyday child sexual abuse cases, including those with strong corroborative evidence. In no other area of law do we require a test like this before allowing a member of a class to testify. The taint arguments are distinctively anti-child.

The Rouse Case: Contesting Child Abuse Accommodation Syndrome

Another post-Michaels development is the widening attack on child abuse accommodation syndrome (CAAS), a theory put forth by Roland Summit in 1983 about how children disclose abuse and why it often remains secret. The theory was developed through clinical observation and was presented along with some empirical support from published studies.[116] Summit never claimed the theory was diagnostic. Though it is best known for what it predicts about disclosure, the foundation of the theory is that there are preconditions to the occurrence of sexual abuse. In other words, there are reasons inherent to the commission of the act itself that suggest disclosure would be difficult and slow. This was a large point of Summit's conceptualization. Two of the five components in CAAS are preconditions: secrecy and helplessness. They help explain how sexual abuse occurs in the first place and why eventual disclosure does not come quickly and easily. The final three components of the syndrome are (3) entrapment and accommodation, (4) delayed disclosure, and (5) retraction.

Child abuse accommodation syndrome is dismissed wholesale in the witch-hunt narrative. The concept and its author are both seen as contributing causes to the worst injustices of those years. According to the narrative, Summit's conceptualization, which considers retraction as a normal part of the disclosure process, results in a kind of catch-22, where if a child says he was abused, then he should be seen as abused, but if a child denies he was abused, then he is probably in denial and was actually abused. But Summit never made this claim, which conflates denials with retraction. Nevertheless, Lawrence Wright blamed Summit for precisely this kind of catch-22 logic in a blistering editorial in the New Yorker. (Wright had to issue a rare retraction later.[117]) The apparent desire to discredit child abuse accommodation syndrome at all costs lives on.

Ceci and Bruck have joined this campaign. In an article called "Unveiling Four Common Misconceptions," they argue that "recent developments in forensic psychology" challenge four misconceptions about children's disclosures. The first is, in their words, that "sexually abused children do not disclose their abuse."[118] After labeling child abuse accommodation syndrome as "the most popular embodiment of this idea," Ceci and Bruck argue that the theory is not well supported by empirical studies. They criticize various studies because participants who reported delayed disclosure were never asked whether they had specifically been asked about abuse earlier. In other words, even though many respondents did not disclose their abuse, this does not mean they would deny it if asked directly. Possibly so. But it hardly provides sufficient evidence to claim it is a misconception to say that "sexually abused children do not disclose their abuse." The authors' own meta-study concluded that "only 33% of adults remembered disclosing the abuse in a timely fashion."[119] In other words, more than two-thirds of sexually abused children delay the disclosure of sexual abuse. What Ceci and Bruck label as "Misconception #1" is actually true. A significant majority of sexual abuse victims do not disclose their abuse, and for most others there is a delay between the abuse and telling someone about it.[120]

Nothing in Summit's elaboration of child abuse accommodation syndrome says that denials should be taken as evidence of abuse, although he and his theory are both frequently accused of proposing this kind of circular logic. But Summit's view is more problematic on the matter of recantations. Recantations involve children who have already disclosed something to someone. If considered a normal part of the disclosure process, then almost any child who recants could be seen as doing something that sexually abused children are likely to do. As a result, recantations might not be taken seriously enough. That is, they could automatically be disbelieved because there is an expectation that children who have disclosed abuse will also recant at some point in the process. Summit never said it this strongly, and his discussion was specifically about sexual abuse within a family context and in situations where two other conditions were met. But those subtleties are consistently glossed over in the witch-hunt narrative

Ceci and Bruck argue that the studies with the highest reported recantation rates among abused children are methodologically the weakest. One of those studies involve children from the McMartin case, and another involved a substantial subset of children from the practice of Barbara Snow, a therapist in Utah. Their critique, along with London and Shuman, of these studies is well taken.[121] But those are not the only studies on the matter. Ceci and Bruck conclude that studies with stronger methodologies report recantation in less than 10 percent of cases, while there are widespread claims that it happens at least 25 percent of the time.

If recantation is not a normal part of disclosure, does that make it more likely to be accurate? Is it more likely a child who recants an allegation was not actually abused? It would seem so. But it appears some have taken the position that recantations almost always mean the initial disclosure was false, evincing a willingness to disregard corroborative evidence of abuse as well as evidence concerning pressures brought upon the child who recanted. This may seem like a particularly surprising position for Ceci and Bruck, who seem attuned to every possible way in which children's statements about abuse might have been tainted. But in cases where recantations seem to have been produced by family pressure and other forms of coercion, Bruck, acting as an expert witness, has been willing to overlook corroborative evidence of abuse rather than recognize the existence of coercion on behalf of those who become defendants.

These issues are highlighted in the Rouse case, as it is known in legal filings, an interfamilial sexual abuse case involving four defendants (Desmond and Jessie Rouse, and Garfield Feather and Russell Hubbeling) from the Yankton Sioux Reservation in South Dakota. The four were convicted in 1994 of sexually abusing Rebecca, Tiffany, Lacey, and Joanie Rouse, who were all between four and seven at the time.[122] The complainants were all grandchildren of Rosemary Rouse, whose house they were living in along with two of the defendants. The other two defendants—Feather and Hubbeling, their uncles—came to the house to drink beer, and occasionally they stayed over.

The case began when Rebecca Rouse, five, was removed from her grandmother's home in November 1993, after a teacher at her school filed a report of suspected neglect.[123] The girl made statements to her foster mother two months later about sexual abuse by her uncles. The foster mother called child protective services, and arrangements were made for Rebecca to be interviewed the next day by therapist Ellen Kelson. On the basis of Rebecca's statements on January 10, 1993, the other children in the house were quickly removed. Some adamantly denied that there had been any sexual abuse; they were returned. Others made incriminating statements that constituted the basis for the criminal case. The children were all examined by pediatricians, and the results were so striking that they bear recounting in some detail. Moreover, they include statements by the girls themselves that are closest to the events in time and possibly most damning in terms of content.[124]

Dr. Kaplan found signs of recent trauma including a bruise or contusion on the left labia, inside the majora, of 4½-year-old, Joanie Rouse. Pointing to her labia, the girl told Dr. Kaplan, "Uncle Jessie hurt me."[125] Dr. Kaplan found a large bruise on the right labia of 6-year-old, Lacey Rouse.[126] It was an acute injury sustained within the last week. Dr. Kaplan noted a readily open hymen and a midline scar on the anus at the 6:00 o'clock position on Rebecca Rouse, the 5-year-old who made the first accusations in the case. Pointing to her vagina, the girl told Dr. Kaplan that she had a bruise "where my uncle put his private spot."[127] Dr. Kaplan also found contusions on the right inner labia majora and considerable tenderness in 7-year-old Tiffany Rouse. The contusions were evidence of recent trauma. Dr. Randall Alexander, board certified in pediatrics, reviewed the files and confirmed how strongly they indicated sexual abuse. Responding to the defense claims that these injuries might have happened accidentally, Dr. Alexander testified that "it's a pretty rare event" to see a girl with a labial injury from an accidental source.[128] There were three girls with such injuries in this case. None presented any kind of history that included some kind of freak accident.

The prosecution's case was based on the testimony of these children—three of whom were allowed to testify by closed-circuit television after the court found they were afraid of the defendants—and on related medical testimony. The defense focused on events that happened after the initial disclosures. They engaged Ralph Underwager to offer his opinion that:

> children in this case have been subjected to massive and coercive social influence by adults . . . such as to make it highly likely that any statements are so contaminated by adult behaviors as to be unreliable.[129]

It was a clever way of acting as if claims about reliability were not really claims about credibility. Expert witnesses are not supposed to offer judgments on whether to believe a particular witness. This was the criticism of Eileen Treacy's testimony in the Michaels case—that her testimony "essentially" did so. In the Rouse case, the judge limited the scope of Underwager's testimony to avoid statements that would specifically impugn the child witnesses. The limits on his testimony became a major issue on appeal.

A divided three-judge panel in the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals overturned the verdicts in November 1996. Judge Myron Bright's majority opinion adopted the witch-hunt narrative in literal terms. "With respect to conditions that can influence children's memories," the judge notes, "we are mindful of a historical event of some three hundred years ago," the Salem witch trials. After stating that nineteen adults were put to death as alleged witches, the judge noted: "This case, of course, is not a Salem Witch Trial, but that history must remind us that memory, particularly children's memory, may be falsely induced."[130] Returning to the matter at hand, the judge ruled it was prejudicial error to prohibit Underwager from relating his general testimony about suggestibility to the specific facts of this case. The witch-hunt digression is notable primarily because it flies in the face of the evidence in the case, including spontaneous statements to pediatricians and overwhelming medical evidence of sexual abuse. Chief Judge James B. Loken's dissent points out, bluntly and with detailed documentation, that "the majority takes liberties with the record in attempting to cast doubt on the jury."[131]

The decision would be cited in the APA Monitor as evidence of Ceci and Bruck's effect on the field.[132] But the decision was short-lived. Less than three months later, the decision was vacated by the grant of a motion for rehearing[133]. On rehearing, the three-judge panel issued a new opinion affirming the original convictions. Judge Loken was now writing for the majority and Judge Bright was the dissenter. As Loken put it, "It is clear from the record that [Underwager] was intent upon expressing his ultimate opinion that the victims' accusations of sexual abuse were not credible."[134] Loken considered this to be the domain of the jury. While allowing that Underwager might have been given wider latitude to testify about suggestibility issues, the judge concluded it would not have altered the result of a trial with such strong medical evidence and contemporaneous statements.

Two years later, the defendants made a motion for a new trial, arguing that there was new evidence in the form of recantations from all the original child witnesses. The recantations were captured on a videotaped interview conducted by none other than Ralph Underwager, on January 30, 1999. The court held an evidentiary hearing on the matter, and Maggie Bruck appeared for the defense. She summarized the literature on recantations and criticized, for sound and well-taken reasons, two of the studies often relied on by clinicians. Bruck's position, based on a meta-study she coauthored, was that recantation rates are quite low and could not be said to be "a natural part of the process," as Summit postulated in child abuse accommodation syndrome.

Bruck went one bold step further. She "did the math" and—relying on the assumption that the five recantations were independent events—testified there was a "one in nine hundred" chance of this many witnesses recanting.[135] The prosecutor called it "mysterious math." Chief Judge Lawrence L. Peirsol, who was generally complimentary to Bruck, told her he was "troubled" with these calculations. "These are not independent events," he said; they are "in a family situation." Bruck eventually backed down and called the math "a logical exercise."[136] She settled for the idea that the odds of at least one child recanting in this case are, given the literature, as big as one in four, or more likely about one in ten.

But even if there is only a 10 percent chance that a sexually abused child will recant a true accusation, isn't there every reason to conclude under the facts of this case that the recantations were likely to be in this group? As Judge Piersol noted:

> The children did not recant until they were sent home and were being cared for by the mothers and grandmothers who did not believe the abuse occurred and who made it known to the children that they missed their sons and brothers.[137]

Moreover, there was a telling incident on December 6, 1999, after the motion for a new trial was filed, between Joanie Rouse and a school counselor who knew nothing about the case.[138] The counselor testified that Joanie told her she was afraid for the upcoming Christmas break because her uncles were coming home. When the counselor asked why this was worrisome, Joanie reportedly said because they touched her private parts and would be mad at her for her telling.[139] These "recantations" are also suspect thanks to the earlier involvement of Underwager, who "interviewed" two of these girls in 1996. The tape is under seal, but according to Judge Peirsol, Underwager told the children "he was there to help the children get the defendants out of prison and he talked at length of the prison sentences imposed."[140] Having a stated purpose and actively enlisting the assistance of the children in meeting the purpose is presumably just as inappropriate when it is done by the defense as when it is done by the prosecution. But even though the Rouse defendants have been embraced as the "Yankton Four," nobody writing about this case has criticized Underwager's heavy-handed efforts. Instead, Maggie Bruck and Hollida Wakefield, Underwager's wife, have continued to champion the case, with the support of Michael Snedeker's organization.[141]

This case evokes the grand conflict between different ways of knowing in psychology. If Bruck's way is the only true claim to knowledge, then until there are laboratory experiments about family dynamics and sexual abuse—something that will never occur, given ethical and practical limitations—we will not be able to recognize that pressures exist within a family to recant abuse allegations. Requiring a deliberate blindness to such things because they have not been measured in a controlled experiment seems eerily like adopting the mindset that existed before we "recognized" the sexual abuse of children. The consequences would certainly be quite similar.

More generally, popular writing and academic studies that played a foundational role in the witch-hunt narrative have since been used to discredit children as a class. In Kennedy v. Louisiana, the U.S. Supreme Court cited "serious systematic concerns" in child rape cases, particularly the "problem of unreliable, induced, and even imagined child testimony."[142] The court cited Ceci and Freidman's Cornell Law Review article stating that "there is strong evidence that children, especially young children, are suggestible to a significant degree."[143] Law professor Samuel Gross and his coauthors wrote about this issue in 2005, appropriately holding the claim of exoneration to cases involving "an official act declaring a defendant not guilty of a crime for which he or she had previously been convicted." Employing this definition, the authors allowed that almost none of the famous child abuse cases from the 1980s and early 1990s qualify as "exonerations." Neverthelesss, relying on Nathan and Snedeker's book, they opined that "there is no doubt that most were falsely convicted" (emphasis added).[144] The shortcomings of that assertion have been elaborated elsewhere in this book. But the witch-hunt narrative nevertheless provides the basis for the majority's opinion in Kennedy concerning a "special risk of wrongful execution." Yet, there have not been any studies that actually document a significant difference between the accuracy of criminal court outcomes in cases involving children and those involving adults. Instead, this widespread belief, cited by the Supreme Court as if it were fact, apparently stems from the saliency of the witch-hunt narrative in "explaining" the day-care sexual abuse cases from the 1980s and early 1990s. What the opinion expresses is a kind of return to the disfavored jury instruction that used to tell jurors to discount children as a class. In its place, the U.S. Supreme Court relied on the stereotype of children as significantly less reliable. There are plenty of arguments for opposing the death penalty in general. But the claim there is a "serious systemic concern" for child rape convictions that does not exist for murder is without a solid factual basis.

Moreover, this argument takes a one-dimensional view of "reliability," focusing on false positives without apparent regard for the problem of false denials. A "gold standard" study on the failure to disclose known abuse involved a population of young children with sexually transmitted diseases that were considered diagnostic of sexual abuse. Only 43 percent disclosed abuse in the first interview.[145] This finding contradicts the claim that children generally disclose in one fell swoop. It also suggests a reason to worry that concerns about "repetitive" interviews may have gone too far, especially in those instances impugning a second interview with a child who did not disclose in the first interview. That is what a majority of the children with sexually transmitted diseases did. The "systemic" error that has been left unrecognized, then, is how the "pro-defense orientation" in the field of psychology results in the failure to inquire about false denials of abuse, about false determination that a case is unsubstantiated, or about acquitting defendants by unduly discounting the word of a child.

The Backlash Against Institutions and Professionals

Beyond the arguments about child suggestibility, the witch-hunt narrative also contained an antigovernment message that attracted a variety of interests, right and left wing. One strand of this argument, expressed by the Eberles as early as 1987, claimed that the child-abuse "industry" was a scheme, created by Congress, that enriched state agencies and related nonprofit institutions, who had a financial interest in "finding" abuse. Accordingly, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) became the scapegoat for various complaints about false accusations. Critics routinely refer to the law as the Mondale Act, named for the liberal Minnesota Democrat who introduced the legislation (which was signed into law by President Nixon). Blaming CATPA is far-fetched, to say the least, but this argument nevertheless galvanized conservative interests. It has since engaged father's rights groups that challenge the legitimacy of government regulation of the family. Liberals have also been attracted to aspects of this antigovernment critique, particularly when it focuses on police and prosecutorial abuses. Although this kind of rhetoric was a staple of the witch-hunt narrative, the critique was always much broader than the day-care sexual abuse cases. The agenda, which has not gained sufficient political support to prevail, involves the elimination of mandatory child-abuse reporting and a massive defunding of federal support for child protective services and foster care. One of the three major organizers of the Salem Day of Contrition in 1997 worked closely with conservative Republican Senator Coats from Indiana in an unsuccessful attempt to achieve those goals.

Those institutional goals remain out of reach, but there has also been a powerful attack on child abuse professionals in court. The witch-hunt narrative focused on child interviewers and social workers, who did not necessarily have advanced degrees or specialized training. But those arguments have expanded in recent years to cover child-abuse pediatricians and forensic child interviewers with advanced degrees. One of the first high-profile cases to illustrate this assault on child abuse professionals was the so-called British Nanny case, involving Louise Woodward. Woodward was convicted of murder, but Judge Hiller B. Zobel sentenced her only to time served, apparently moved by the defense claims that rejected the collected wisdom and understanding of child-abuse pediatricians.[146] More recently, some of the same academic psychologists who focused on child suggestibility in the 1990s have also challenged the expertise of child-abuse doctors.[147] A horrific child-murder case from Harrington, Maine, demonstrates the lengths to which advocates of the child-suggestibility framework have gone to reject clinical judgments, even involving battered child syndrome.

Robert Ardolino was charged with beating his nine-year-old son, Matthew, to death in late June 1993. Ardolino was divorced and living with his sons Matthew and David; the latter was about to turn twelve. Matthew Ardolino died of peritonitis, an inflammation of the lining of the bowel. Peritonitis is caused when digestive juices and bacteria from the intestine leak into the abdominal cavity; the result is a massive inflammatory reaction. The cause of his condition was blunt force trauma to the stomach. The blow had to be so hard that it squeezed the jejunum (lower intestine) between the back of the abdominal wall and the spine with enough force to puncture it. A child's heart would then start to race, he might vomit—as Matthew did several times that day—and he would be in severe pain. The treatment, as Dr. Lawrence Ricci testified, is "very simple and straightforward and almost uniformly successful."[148] But left untreated for twenty-four hours, it is inevitably fatal. This is what happened to Matthew. As Dr. Ricci later testified, Matthew would have looked "seriously ill" during much of those twenty-four hours.[149] He vomited bile that evening, yet his father did not seek any medical attention. Matthew died before daybreak.

When David was interviewed, he told the police the same thing his father said: Matthew had fallen out of the tree house. David denied that his father had harmed Matthew in any way. Given the surrounding circumstances, David's statements were not credible. First, there were witnesses who heard Robert Ardolino berating Matthew from a distance when they went out clamming that Saturday morning. This indicates there was more to the story than David was saying. Second, Matthew's body was covered in bruises of different ages—bruises in places where children are rarely injured once, let alone multiple times. This made the blanket denial of any physical abuse highly suspect. Third, the internal injury to Matthew's bowel was not consistent with falling out of a tree.[150] It also turns out the clothes he wore that day were not consistent with this story.[151]

Dr. Ricci, a pediatric child-abuse specialist, eventually reviewed the medical records and concurred that this was a classic case of battered-child syndrome. One reason for the conclusion was that there were "multiple injuries that are unexplained by the history, on multiple planes of the body in assaultive, rather than accident location, of multiple ages." Specifically, there were truncal injuries "in a particular location consistent with punches along the flank, lower lateral back, and abdomen region" and "multiple punctuate bruises on the chest and abdomen such as from poking." Matthew also had bruises about the arms "in possible self-defense location." Another reason factoring into Dr. Ricci's equation was a "history of delay in seeking treatment" and then providing a history that is inconsistent with the extent and severity of the injuries.[152]

But the medical evidence alone would not support charges against Ardolino. Accordingly, the police requested another interview with David in January 1994. They interviewed him for more than three hours, making it clear they did not consider his answers about Matthew falling out of the tree to be credible. David stuck by the story and insisted that his father never did anything abusive to Matthew or to him. It should be kept in mind that Ardolino was still free at this point, although David had been removed from his custody. Six months later, the state police were contacted by David's foster mother and told that David wanted to tell the real story.

David then gave a detailed statement on July 14, 1994, about what happened on the fateful Saturday. He reported that in the morning, Robert Ardolino was unhappy with how Matthew had made a milkshake, so he kicked him in the stomach. When they went clamming after breakfast, his father was upset at Matthew and threw him against a boat, injuring the boy's back. Matthew threw up that afternoon while hanging up laundry. He kept reverting to the fetal position—a natural response to the pain of peritonitis—and his father got angry about that as well. Robert Ardolino then went out to sell some clams, and while he was gone there was a phone call in which someone asked for Matthew and hung up when David asked who was calling. David said his father was enraged when he was told about this because he thought Matthew had called child protective services. He ordered David to get his baseball bat from the shed. When asked to describe what his father did with the bat, this is what David said:

DAVID: It was like a poking motion at his stomach.
QUESTION: Did he hit him?
DAVID: Yes.
QUESTION: Can you give us an estimate of how many times?
DAVID: No. It was a lot.[153]

David testified that "it went on for a while." Then his brother "threw up green throw-up and dad got mad at him for throwing up."[154] Within about six hours, Matthew was dead.

The criminal trial included David's testimony, but the emphasis was on the medical evidence. There were lengthy arguments about whether photos of the bruises would be so inflammatory they would prejudice the jury. Some photos were kept out on that basis. But the jury received detailed descriptions of the range and types of bruises on Matthew's body. And they heard from several medical experts. Ardolino was convicted of "depraved indifference" murder.

As with the Marzolf case in New Jersey, where there was an adult eyewitness, there would seem to be no place for child-suggestibility claims in the Ardolino case, with its extensive medical evidence of physical abuse. If anything, the case seems to speak volumes about the power of fear, secrecy, and denial. Those influences were strong enough that David was steadfast in his denials, even in the face of authority figures who cajoled him and expressed outright disbelief during the interview of January 7, 1994.

Robert Rosenthal represented Ardolino in federal court, where he challenged his state conviction. Rosenthal engaged Maggie Bruck as an expert, and she provided the opinion that the first interview with David, immediately after his brother died, was the most reliable one.[155] He should never have been interviewed again, she concluded—certainly not, according to Bruck, after having "contact only with adults who believed that his statements that Mr. Ardolino had not beaten Matthew were false."[156] Bruck saved her outrage for the police interviewers who pushed David in January. This was apparently the only possible abuse she detected in the case. One might be particularly skeptical of Bruck's position since it was raised on behalf of Robert Ardolino, the one person who stood to lose the most if David's story aligned with the physical evidence. In this sense, the case also threatened to provide a powerful example of how a child might falsely deny there was any abuse even in the face of extremely aggressive questioning.

The remarkable blind spot in Bruck's position is how it failed to apply her vast knowledge and concern about coercion to the most likely and powerful source in the case: the man who used a baseball bat to make his points. In Bruck's view, the interview of July 14, 1994, was completely tainted because in the preceding months David had had contact only with adults who believed Ardolino was guilty. Bruck never explains why this is so objectionable, while an interview conducted immediately after years under the control of the defendant doesn't rate any similar concern—even when the allegation, backed up with medical evidence, is that the defendant slowly beat his brother to death. Apparently, even a witness to such horror is suspect in Bruck's view if he does not disclose the abuse immediately, on the first interview, and all in one piece.

There is, of course, a hidden value choice in the position—one that deems the coercive effects of the police interview as a far greater concern than the coercive effects of living with Robert Ardolino for years. In that respect, Bruck's position is de facto pro-defense. This is the only explanation that makes this position consistent with the Rouse case, where Bruck readily accepted recantations that occurred only after the children moved back into a residence where the adults did not believe their original claims—the mirror image of the reason she used to reject David Ardolino's testimony. So Bruck does not see the Rouse adults as tainting the recantations in that case, yet she sees David's foster mother as tainting his testimony, which was, in effect, a recantation of his earlier denials. These positions are logically incompatible, except to the extent they both favor defendants. This "pro-defense orientation" is precisely how Ceci described the design of his research studies when testifying in the Foeller case in Michigan.[157] Why so many psychologists have aligned themselves with the defense, to the point of demonstrating and even admitting bias in that direction, is a puzzle for another time. What matters for this book is that these politics exist and work to diminish the credibility, and ultimately the safety, of children.

The more radical aspect of Bruck's position is the assault on battered child syndrome. Rosenthal argued in post-conviction proceedings that Ardolino's original lawyer should have challenged the admissibility of the syndrome itself. Bruck's affidavit actually criticized the medical examiner for not adequately considering "fights with neighbors," "bicycle accidents," and the "active life of a 9-year-old boy" before reaching the conclusion that Matthew had been beaten to death.[158] Bruck, a developmental psychologist without medical training, suggested the medical examiner jumped to the conclusion that it was battered child syndrome. But Dr. Ricci, the pediatric child-abuse expert who later reviewed all of the medical evidence, testified that he knew about all of the information Bruck mentioned, that he took it all into account in reviewing the case, and that it did not change his conclusion of a clear-cut case of battered child syndrome.[159]

Bruck's dispute is not so much about pediatrics as it is about forms of knowledge in psychology. Even though battered child syndrome is much more concrete than syndromes based on psychological factors alone, it involves a clinical judgment about patterns of injuries. Bruck is among a group of academic psychologists who minimize the value of clinical judgments. Indeed, she and a few others have gone to great lengths to attack such clinical judgments. Bruck filed an affidavit in support of a motion to disqualify Constance Dalenberg in a case in California, even though Dalenberg has a doctorate in clinical psychology and heads a research institute that specializes in child abuse research. Dalenberg also teaches courses in the treatment of child abuse victims and perpetrators, she spends one day a week in a child abuse clinic, and she teaches graduate-level statistics. But in a case where she declined to view a child's statements as the product of suggestion, Bruck and five others, among them the writer Carol Tavris, opined that Dalenberg's views were "unfounded, unscientific, unreliable, and unprofessional."[160]

Bruck's position in these cases is not based on science alone. The position that challenges the ability of child-abuse specialists to diagnose battered-child syndrome is part of a broader attack on child-abuse professionals. Arguments against them are a foundational element of the witch-hunt narrative. When the Eberles first wrote The Politics of Child Abuse in 1986, they claimed that the underlying problem was CAPTA, the Child Abuse Prevention and Training Act. Eleven years later, Richard Gardner, a frequent defense expert in these cases, gave a fiery speech at the Salem Day of Contrition, where he argued "a whole industry has been spawned" and that "hysteria is being fueled primarily by funding from the federal government under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act."[161] This position is now a mainstay of father's rights groups and right-wing activists who lobby against child protective service agencies as a violation of family privacy. Painting in broad pejorative strokes, the witch-hunt narrative refers to those who investigate, treat, or prosecute child abuse as "the child-abuse industry." Curiously, the professionals who consistently appear on the other side are rarely, if ever, called an industry, and their financial rewards are never scrutinized. In the witch-hunt narrative there is a "child abuse industry" but not a "child-abuse defense industry."

Conclusion

The witch-hunt narrative continues to have a significant impact on social and legal responses to child sexual abuse in America. Activists with varied agendas continue to use the imagery of Salem to promote their causes. The media generally view these claims with utter credulity. This has resulted in a surprising amount of positive press for child molesters, from Frank Fuster to Charles Bighead. The judiciary has not fallen for these stories as readily as the media, but judges like John T. Noonan in the Bighead case and Myron Bright in the Rouse case demonstrate that the judiciary is not immune to this rhetoric.

There have also been developments to the contrary. The cases against the Catholic Church demonstrate a willingness to confront sexual abuse in places where it would have been unimaginable in the not-too-distant past. Those developments are admirable, but their application is limited. They do not necessarily suggest anything about allegations made by children; moreover, the impetus for recognizing and addressing those cases was a proven cover-up. There is also evidence of overreaction to child sexual abuse since the end of the McMartin case. The widespread implementation of Megan's Law demonstrates how our society has overreacted to sex offenders after their release from prison. But the "lesson" from that phenomenon has been applied too broadly, leading some to characterize our social response to sex offenders in general by the way we treat the very small percentage of offenders who get imprisoned. Leon suggests that the movie The Woodsman is indicative of a dominant discourse that now sees sex offenders as monsters. But there was a more popular movie during the same era, Capturing the Friedmans, which retold a child molestation case from the 1980s through the lens of the witch-hunt narrative, notwithstanding all the facts to the contrary. Just as supporters of Megan's Law take too much comfort in symbolic acts that do little to address sex offenders at large, those who focus on Megan's Law to characterize social response to child molesters as "highly punitive" similarly miss the point. The witch-hunt narrative directs our attention away from the reality of child sexual abuse, which remains widespread, underreported, and generally punished quite leniently. But that is an uncomfortable reality. It is easier just to favor—or disdain—policies like Megan's law.

In the field of psychology, Ceci and Bruck continue to be viewed by many as the leading experts on "child suggestibility." Their work is now a primary source on child suggestibility in psychology textbooks. But there have also been some prominent critics of the general direction of the field, among them Professor Tom Lyon, who has pointed out the biases of the "new wave" in child-suggestibility research.[162] These disagreements among academics are not generally reflected in media stories about the subject, but they are more apparent in scholarly journals. Less apparent, except to the closest observers, are three developments discussed in this chapter. First, there has been an expansive effort to employ child-suggestibility concepts to keep children from testifying in court in a broad range of cases. Those who originally argued that suggestibility claims belonged only in cases with extremely coercive interviewing were now applying the same arguments to cases with strong corroborative evidence of abuse and far less in the way of coercive or repetitive interviews than anything that was claimed in the Michaels case.

Second, there has also been a surprising attack on the conventional wisdom—conventional, at least, to those in the clinical world—that sexual abuse disclosures are often delayed and then disclosed in bits and pieces. Those attacks threaten to undermine the vast majority of victims of sexual abuse, who delay disclosure and are therefore considered suspect. Ceci and Bruck's own meta-study found that two-thirds of sexual abuse victims delay reporting the fact, but Bruck and others have demonstrated a willingness to impugn children who do not report fully and immediately.

Finally, there has been a surprising effort to undermine the professionals who conduct the front-line work in this area, such as pediatricians who operate child-abuse clinics and psychologists who direct forensic interviewing programs at child advocacy centers. The disdain that Judge Noonan registered for Tasha Boychuk in the Bighead case reflects this disturbing trend. So does Maggie Bruck's willingness to second-guess the medical examiner who concluded that Matthew Ardolino had been beaten to death. These developments are a function of a witch-hunt narrative that sees these professionals as an "industry" and that threatens to undermine the front-line workers and institutions responding to the sexual abuse of children in the United States.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The effort that I expended on this book pales in comparison to the debts that I incurred along the way. So many people helped on this project in so many ways that a brief acknowledgment cannot possibly convey the full extent of their contribution or my gratitude. First and foremost are the extraordinary undergraduate students at Brown University. This book could not have been researched so extensively without the incredible work of students from almost a generation of the university. More than eighty of them worked on this project in one way or another. Some worked on a single case for as long as two years. Others took on the challenge of obtaining information from court clerks while in hometowns across the country. They came back to campus with docket sheets, transcripts, and stories about the surprising challenges of this kind of original trial court research. Or they came back with nothing but determination to crack the puzzle next time they were home.

With enduring gratitude to all of the Brown undergraduates who helped give "extreme research" its name, in simple alphabetical order: Brian Agboh, Tamiz Ahmed, Dena Aufseer, Evelyn Avila, Zoe Billinkoff, Sarah Blum-Smith, Nicole Boucher, Caroline Burnett, Sarah Coburn, Dara Cohen, Dave Cooker, Stephanie Czech, Julia Dahlin, Brandi Davis, Brittany Davis, Joe Davis, Marta DiSilva, Javier Dominguez, Jessica Dubin, Brett Eggleston, Cara Farber, Shae Fitzpatrick, Amanda Freedman, Emily Geldwert, Erica Goldschmidt, Debra Greenspan, Hillary Gross, Chris Hartman, Elia Herman, Kate Herts, Beth Hollander, Morriah Horani, Jennifer Hutchinson, Ivalya Ivanova, Nicole Janisiewicz, Carey Jaros, Darren Jorgenson, Katherine Kosub, Lauren Kupersmith, Damian Lara, Liz Leidel, Vanessa Lipschitz, Jesse Maniff, Andrea Matthews, Chelsea McCarron, David Mervis, Jocabel Michel, Alec O'Neill, Sarah Olverson, Ben Petrosky, Katya Potkin, Felisa Preskill, Adam Reich, Zachary Reiss-Davis, Margaret Rose, Elizabeth Root, Sarah Rubin, Jacquelyn Rudis, Dan Sack, Rebecca Santoro, Catherine Schaper, Aaron Scherzer, Katie Schlicter, Danny Schneider, Mark Scott, Amy Senia, Felica Sexsmith, Jesse Shapiro, Reece Smith, Savannah Smith, Claudia Solari, Veena Srinivasa, Katherine Stewart, Nicole Stock, Jen Swearingen, Ilana Streit, Eric Tucker, Will Tucker, Emily Walsh, and Stacy Yen.

Ten Brown undergraduates did senior theses that contributed in various ways to this book. Thank you to each of you for your hard work and your insights: Karen Tumlin, Sasha Grief, Rebecca Santoro, Miranda Galindo, Margaret Merrifield, Sarah Squire, Margaret Rose, Dara Cohen, Julie Gottlieb, and Will Tucker.

There are several other Brown students who inspired me and supported me along this journey. Special thanks to Allison Smith-Estelle, Jennifer Sigall, Meg McGrath, Jake Gersen, Karen Tumlin, Beatriz Lorenzo, and Rebecca Bradburd.

One Brown undergraduate has become a long-time collaborator. Arthi Krishnaswami, who is credited on the cover for the illustrations: thank you for helping me think and see more clearly. You are an ideal colleague and it made a world of difference to this book.

The Taubman Center for Public Policy and American Institutions and the Political Science Department at Brown have long supported my work and the spirit of interdisciplinary studies. I am particularly indebted to Jim Morone for his interest and encouragement of this book, whether or not he necessarily agreed with all of the arguments. Mark Blyth, Roger Cobb, Beverly Haviland, Sharon Krause, and Rose McDermott have also gone out of their way to be encouraging along the way. I am always thankful for the efforts of Patti Gardner at the Department of Political Science and Isabel Costa and Jack Combs at the Taubman Center for assisting in so many of the details of this project.

Significant costs were incurred in this project, particularly to acquire documents, some of which had to be transcribed by court reporters. I am grateful to a host of sources for providing financial assistance for this work: the Taubamn Center at Brown University, the John and Happy White Internship program, the Undergraduate Teaching and Research Assistants (UTRA) program, the Dean of the Faculty, the Office of the Provost, the Department of Political Science, the Goldschmidt Book Fund, and a stipend from the Carnegie Foundation. The most significant single source of financial support for this research was Earl and June Cheit, my parents, without whom this book would not have been possible. Thanks, Mom and Dad, for believing in this project.

The Brown Library has helped me in countless ways over the years, handling requests for obscure small-town newspapers on microfiche, for assistance with state court libraries, and other unusual requests with aplomb. Thank you to Beth Beretta, Beth Coogan, Michael Jackson, and Anne Nolan.

Thank you to everyone who talked with me off the record. Those conversations were most useful in helping to locate documents. There were also two formal interviews that are cited directly in the text. One was with Joseph Braga, who helped clear up a mystery about a videotape aired on a San Francisco television station and provided information about various (unfounded) ethics complaints. The other was with Maggie Bruck, who generously agreed to answer a variety of questions about issues in this book. Thank you to both of you for agreeing to be interviewed. (These interviews were conducted with an approved protocol from the IRB at Brown University.)

I had the good fortune to present pieces of this research at various venues, including Harvard Medical School, the University of Oregon, Duke University, the University of Auckland, the Roger Williams University School of Law, the New England School of Law, University of Nevada Las Vegas William S. Boyd School of Law, the University of New Hampshire, and various meetings of the Law and Society Association. I also presented versions of this work at several venues at Brown University, including the Warren Alpert Medical School and the Lipsitt-Duchin Lectures. Thank you to the audiences at those venues. Thanks also to the students in my Children and Public Policy class and in a graduate seminar on the Politics of Child Abuse with Kate Murphy, Miranda Turner, Darren Jorgensen, and Eric Tucker.

Thanks to Dave McBride at Oxford University Press for accepting this book and for working tirelessly through its endless challenges and complexities. Thanks also to Liz Hasse and Mark Fowler for their sage counsel. I am also extremely grateful to Thomas Finnegan for his expert copy editing.

I owe an enormous debt to those who read the entire manuscript, sometimes more than once, with great care. Heartfelt thanks to Elizabeth Mertz, Jennifer Freyd, Jim Morone, Wendy Murphy, Ken Pope, Jennifer Hoult, Andrea Matthews, Nancy Feinstein, Hayley Goldbach, Jeffrey Masson, Morriah Horani, Will Tucker, Eric Tucker, Peter Loss, Dave Cheit, and Kathleen Odean. I greatly appreciate all of your efforts, even if I did not always take your suggestions. Any remaining errors, of course, are mine. Thank you also to the reviewers at Oxford University Press who made useful suggestions for improving the book.

This book is also a product of Rhode Island, a wonderful and quirky state that serendipitously provided me with some remarkable resources. The earliest ideas in this book were formed at the Trauma Breakfasts led by Paul Block. Two of the most important contributors to this book were professionals in Rhode Island. First, I am forever grateful to Dr. Carole Jenny, a nationally recognized expert in pediatric child abuse, who graced our presence in Providence for almost the entire duration of this book. Carole answered questions, reviewed testimony, and answered more questions with patience and good humor. She also advised an undergraduate thesis that examined medical testimony in several cases in this book, and then read and reread key sections of this manuscript. Dr. Tom Roesler, who I met through Carole, has also provided valuable insight and assistance to this project. Thanks very much to both of you.

Peter Loss, director of the Sex Offender Treatment Program at the Rhode Island Department of Corrections, also saw this book through from start to finish. He answered endless questions and provided me with an extraordinary opportunity for a kind of continuing weekly education about sex offenders for the last fourteen years. Thanks, Pete, for your friendship and your careful read of countless drafts. The book is much better with the benefit of your lens. Thanks also to Professor Carl Bogus of the Roger Williams University School of Law for supporting this project and organizing a fabulous conference on children as witnesses. You are another Rhode Island treasure.

Finally, I express my lasting gratitude to Kathleen Odean, who continued to believe in this project long after it had consumed an unreasonable number of years. Thanks for your support, dear, and for providing such an astute reading of the almost-final version. I promise not to do another project like this one. Dave Cheit also helped at every stage of this project. Dave, thank you for your level-headed advice and your willingness to engage this project more times than I should have asked. You are a great lawyer and a wonderful brother. Finally, I am extremely grateful to W.F.G. for your boundless support and assistance. You strengthened this book in so many important ways. I hope that it lives up to your high standards and ideals.

BIBLIOGRAPHIC NOTES

Most of the research for this book was case-based, and most of the sources cited in the book are primary documents from criminal cases. The challenges of this research are described in detail in an article that is mentioned in the Preface. The notes below elaborate on the primary source materials for the three chapter-length case studies.

State v. Buckey (Chapter Two)

The transcript of the preliminary hearing and the transcript of both criminal trials in State v. Buckey are housed at the Los Angeles County Hall of Records under docket number A750900. There is no official index to the thirty-two boxes that I identified and inventoried. The Preliminary Hearing covered 489 (thin) volumes of testimony. Some of those volumes are either misplaced or missing entirely; specifically, vols. 74–146, 181–253, and 323–445 are not located in the boxes that are filed together with this case. The trial covered 456 volumes. Volumes 90–146, much of the testimony between July and September 1987, are either misplaced or missing entirely. Fortunately, I was able to locate some of these volumes elsewhere. The retrial of Ray Buckey covered forty-nine volumes; and all are included in the boxes at the Hall of Records. There was a Protective Order in the case to protect the children's names and to protect the CII videotapes, but the trial transcript uses children's initials throughout and can be reproduced without breaching confidentiality of identities. No videotapes are included in the materials at the Hall of Records. The Superior Court may still be in possession of videotapes of the trial testimony, but I was not able to obtain a definitive answer to that question.

The most significant sources for the analysis in Chapter Two were documents generated before any charges were filed in the case. Through independent research I located multiple sources of documents from the investigation. I amassed seventeen boxes of materials, including several devoted to media coverage. The most significant documents I obtained were the Manhattan Beach Police Department Call Log in response to the letter sent to the community, the Information Form and Medical Report for children referred to CII and various internal CII memos, the District Attorney's Investigator Notebooks, and the grand jury transcripts. I also obtained copies of the Manns-Stevens tapes, along with competing transcriptions of the tapes. I also located medical records for numerous children, including photographic slides for one of the girls involved in both trials. Finally, I obtained copies of videotaped interviews with fifteen assorted children at CII. I believe I am the first researcher to locate and view any of these tapes. I did not get to select the specific interviews, but they included a range of dates, among them five from November and early December 1983. (These tapes are low-quality and would need to be enhanced in order to be analyzed in greater detail. They also need to be pixilated to mask the children's faces.) Further, I obtained transcriptions of fifty-three CII interviews from Professor Maggie Bruck, who sent them in response to requests to view the archives described in Nathan and Snedeker's Satan's Silence.

State v. Michaels (Chapter Five)

The trial transcript in the Michaels case is sealed by order of the trial judge. The Village Voice challenged the seal in a case that was decided by the New Jersey Supreme Court two years after Debbie Nathan wrote about the case in the Village Voice. See In re VV Publishing Corp., 120 N.J. 508; 577 A.2d 412; 1990 N.J. LEXIS 82 (1990). The court agreed that the petitioners were entitled to a redacted version of the transcript, so long as they paid for the cost of redacting. Relying on the reasoning in that case, I obtained access to the trial transcript and many related documents by negotiating an agreement with the state to provide unfettered access to the prosecutor's files in exchange for assurances that the children's identities would never be revealed. (This assurance was guaranteed by a research protocol approved by the Institutional Review Board at Brown University.) The trial transcript was complete, but there was no record of the pre-trial taint hearing discussed in the text. The prosecutor's files contained all of the motions and correspondence concerning the amicus brief, including the letter to peer-reviewed journals that was dismissive of Professor Gail Goodman's work. It also contained extensive documentation used to cross-examine Ralph Underwager. Tape recordings of interviews with children were also contained in these files. The audio quality is very poor, and I relied largely on transcriptions. Transcriptions of some DFYS interviews are contained in a three-volume appendix to the defendant's appeal; many have handwritten corrections and other notations presumably written by the defense. Transcriptions of Eileen Treacy's evaluative interviews, prepared at the Essex County District Attorney's Office, were also in these files. I was unable to locate the early videotape in the case that is discussed in the text. I did obtain various useful documents from the discovery phase of Michaels v. New Jersey, an unsuccessful attempt by Michaels to obtain damages from various parties.

State v. Fuster (Chapter Six)

The trial transcript in the Fuster case is available for public inspection through the Dade County Archive. Files from Fuster's earlier criminal case can be viewed at the Dade County Superior Court. I obtained a copy of the complete transcript and, through independent research, located a host of ancillary court documents, including affidavits and depositions from the criminal case. I also obtained records from Frank Fuster's parole violation hearing in August 1985 and from his aggravated manslaughter case in New York. Finally, I viewed (but was unable to obtain copies of) the videotapes of all of the interviews in the case. As described in the text, I had one of the original videotapes (still in state storage) transcribed by a court reporter to verify its contents. There is a Protective Order in the case aimed at protecting the children's names and the videotapes of their interviews (although several families identified themselves to the media and, surprisingly, a federal magistrate used virtually all of the names in a decision upholding the verdict). I also obtained depositions and related documents from several civil cases, including [Mayor] v. Fuster-Escalano (Case No. 84–42560, Dade County) and N.G v. Arvida Corp. (Case No. 91–35636, Dade County).

NOTES

Preface

1. Freeh Sporkin & Sullivan, Report of the Special Investigative Counsel Regarding Actions of The Pennsylvania State University Related to the Child Sexual Abuse Committed by Gerald A. Sandusky (July 12, 2012). Commonly known as the Freeh Report. Available at http://progress.psu.edu/the-freeh-report
2. Suzanne Sgroi, "A National Needs Assessment for Protecting Child Victims of Sexual Assault," Introduction to Anne Wolbert Burgess, et. al., Sexual Assault of Children and Adolescents (Lexington Books, 1978).
3. State v. Dunn, 726 A.2d 1142 (R.I. 1999).
4. Many of the cases listed on the dedication page were not contained in the index of the book. Many of those that were listed in the index were mentioned in the text in a single sentence. Only a few cases were discussed in any detail with footnotes from original sources.
5. Ross E. Cheit, "The Legend of Robert Halsey," Journal of Child Sexual Abuse (2001), 9(3/4): 37–52.
6. Stephen J. Gould [Letter to the editor], New Yorker (December 26, 1994).
7. Mike Stanton, "Bearing Witness," Providence Journal (May 4–6, 1995).
8. Ross E. Cheit, "The Elusive Record: On the Difficulties in Researching High-Profile Child Sexual Abuse Cases from the 1980s," Justice System Journal (2007), 28(1): 79–97.
9. William Blackstone, Commentaries, Volume 4, On Public Wrongs, 358. ("Better that ten guilty persons escape than that one innocent suffer"). Quoted in Alexander Volokh, "n Guilty Men," University of Pennsylvania Law Review (1997) 146, 173.
10. Professor Fred Schauer's brilliant article explains the logic of this and other outcomes that turn on the standard of proof. "Slightly Guilty," University of Chicago Legal Forum, 1993, 83–100.

Chapter One

1. An example of the KABC coverage in February 1984 can be viewed at http://youtu.be/e4d2cIoZwBs.
2. Michelle Green, "The McMartins: The 'Model Family' Down the Block That Ran California's Nightmare Nursery," People (May 21, 1984).
3. Stan Katz, "Stop the Witch Hunts for Child Molesters,"New York Times (June 20, 1984).
4. David Shaw, "Where Was Media Skepticism?"Los Angeles Times (January 19, 1990).
5. A. S. Ross, "Satanism or Mass Hysteria?"San Francisco Examiner (September 28, 1986) A8.
6. The rest of the thirteen cases on the map of "sensational cases across the county" involved child sexual-abuse charges, but not in a day-care setting.
7. Her most significant article that year was about the Kelly Michaels case, the subject of Chapter Five.

8. Mary A. Fischer, "Flip-Flop," Los Angeles Magazine (December 1988), 33(12): 85–94.
9. Mary Pride, The Child Abuse Industry (Crossway Books, 1986), 31.
10. Pride is editor of Practical Homeschooling Magazine and the website Homeschool World http://www.home-school.com.
11. The witch-hunt narrative has generally overlooked questions about the Eberles' background; or it has been claimed that the Eberles' previous publications were the kind of "soft porn" often associated with the advertising section in free weekly newspapers. That may be true of the L.A. Star, a more recent publication of the Eberles, but it is decidedly not true of their earlier publication, called Finger. In her book about the Michaels trial, Lisa Manshel described how prosecutor Glenn Goldberg confronted Dr. Jonas Rappeport with this evidence after Rappeport recommended The Politics of Child Abuse (Lyle Stuart, 1986), another book by the Eberles (Manshel, 284–285). This is Manshel's description of the publication, as illustrated at trial: "On the inside pages were photographs of children being raped, a child standing over an adult and urinating into the adult's mouth, written pieces detailing sexual experiences with young children . . ." (285). I have confirmed this information independently, obtaining an inventory of slides from Finger magazine that begins with a two-page spread called "Baby Fucking." See also Maria Laurina, "Paul and Shirley Eberle: A Strange Pair of Experts," Ms. (December 1988). Confronted with this issue on Larry King Live in 1988, Paul Eberle did not distance himself from the content of his former publication; rather he scolded lawyer Gregory Mooney for bringing it up, as if this was an unfair attack on their character. But the issue—whether the Eberles had a demonstrated acceptance of the idea of sexual contact between adults and children—goes directly to their credibility as reporters of these cases. The Eberles were never convicted of any crime in connection with publication of Finger magazine, although it should be noted that there was not a specific prohibition against child pornography in the United States until passage of the Protection of Children Against Sexual Exploitation Act of 1977 (Public Law 95–225, codified in Title 18, Chapter 110, Section 2251 of the U.S. Code). Before then, prosecution was possible only through general obscenity laws, which were notoriously vague and difficult to enforce. After passage of the 1977 law, "commercially produced magazines such as Lollitots, Baby Love and Nudist Moppets—in which children as young as 3 years old were shown performing sex acts with adults—have virtually vanished from adult bookstore shelves." Carol McGraw, "Child Smut Business Going Underground," Los Angeles Times (September 16, 1985), 3.
12. There is a second relevant book, published in 2001 by the University Press of America, called The Anatomy of the McMartin Child Molestation Case. But the book focuses on jury issues, not on issues of fact. The authors are quite clear about their allegiance; the book is dedicated to Virginia McMartin. The coauthors, including high-profile jury consultant Jo-Ellan Dimitrius, worked for the defense in the McMartin case.
13. David Shaw, "Where Was Media Skepticism?" Los Angeles Times (January 19, 1990).
14. Debbie Nathan and Michael Snedeker, Satan's Silence: Ritual Abuse and the Making of a Modern American Witch Hunt (Basic Books, 1995).
15. Steven Mintz, Huck's Raft: A History of American Childhood (Harvard University Press, 2004), ch. 5, "Parental Panics and the Reshaping of Childhood." He relies entirely on Nathan and Snedeker's chapter and the Eberles' book for his account of McMartin.
16. Rabinowitz was not the first to write about Kelly Michaels through the witch-hunt frame. Nathan did so in August 1988, long before Rabinowitz. But the Rabinowitz article was longer, it had more materials from the case, and it was better-timed.
17. Amy Driscoll, "State Won't Retry Officer in Abuse Case," Miami Herald (November 21, 1998).
18. The first program, "The Child Terror" (1998), focused on three cases from Dade County: Frank Fuster, Grant Snowden, and Bobby Finje. The second program, "Did Daddy Do It?" (2002), was devoted entirely to the Fuster case. That case is the subject of Chapter Six in this book.
19. Lawrence Wright, "Remembering Satan, Part II," New Yorker (May 24, 1993).
20. Ceci and Bruck, "Suggestibility of the Child Witness: A Historical Review and Syntheses," Psychological Bulletin (1993), 113(3): 403–439.

21. The movie opens with the statement "This story happened in America in our time." The producer and director presented the work as fully documented at a press conference promoting the movie. A statement at the end of movie read "Court transcripts and actual videotapes were among the sources used in telling the story."
22. A review of the movie in their newsletter, which had a circulation of approximately five hundred, attracted the attention of the Manns' "litigation counsel," as they identified themselves in a letter threatening the organization and its directors with litigation for libel and other claims. The organization issued a correction of several statements. A second letter rejected these corrections as insufficient and again threatened litigation if more changes were not forthcoming. I could find no record of any additional charges or any actual litigation over this matter. Correspondence from Lavely & Singer to Executive Director, Children's Civil Rights Fund, April 21, 1995. A follow-up letter on May 2, also from Lavely & Singer to multiple parties (seven board directors and fifteen advisory board members of Believe the Children). More significantly, this was an obscure fight. By 1995, there was no serious credence given to those who might defend even some aspect of the prosecution in the McMartin case.
23. Ellen Willis, "The Media and McMartin," Village Voice (May 30, 1995) 40(22): 8.
24. Jim Okerblom and Mark Sauer, "Was Akiki Inquiry Rush to Judgment?" Union-Tribune (November 2, 1993).
25. Martin Gardner, "The Tragedies of False Memories," Skeptical Inquirer (Fall 1994).
26. Thomas Sowell, "Legal Lynchings," Forbes (January 26, 1998).
27. Trevor Armbrister, "Justice Gone Crazy,"Reader's Digest (January 1994).
28. Andrew Schneider and Mike Barber, "The Power to Harm," five-part series in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer (February 23–27, 1998). Defense lawyer Kathyrn Lyon also wrote a book about these cases, called Witchhunt: A True Story of Social Hysteria and Abused Justice (Avon, 1998).
29. Home page, Witch-Hunt Information Center. Old MIT URL, circa 1993–2000.
30. I have a copy of the list, but the various sites that used to reprint it are all apparently gone right now. Nathan's list is a major source for the list compiled at this site: http://www.solresearch.org/~SOLR/rprt/bkgrd/FalsAcCases.htm#Sct_1_explain. The list is divided into two pieces, both are linked, but both of the links are dead (as of August 24, 2012).
31. Frederick Crews, Response to Letters to Editor, New York Review of Books (January 12, 1995), 42–48.
32. All messages came addressed "Sender: Is there a child sex abuse witchhunt?" <WITCHHNT@MITVMA.MIT.EDU>.
33. Local coverage painted a more favorable view of the prosecution. See e.g., UNC-TV, North Carolina Now (November 23, 1997, critiquing the PBS program "Innocence Lost").
34. Post to witch-hunt list: "Re: day care cases" from Ralph Underwager (April 23, 1995). The message is signed by his wife, Hollida Wakefield.
35. Stephen Maher, "The Bizarre World of 'WITCHHUNT'," Wenatchee World (October 17, 1999).
36. www.religioustolerance.org/ra_case.htm (accessed March 25, 2012).
37. Philip Jenkins, Moral Panic: Changing Conceptions of the Child Molester in Modern America (Yale University Press, 1998), 278, 21.

Chapter Two

1. The first book about the case, Abuse of Innocence: The McMartin Preschool Trial (Prometheus Books, 1993), was written by Paul and Shirley Eberle, who reportedly attended much more of the trial than any of the reporters. The book is impressive for its lengthy quotations directly from their courtroom observation. But the book has no footnotes, and it contains some clearly dubious claims. For example, the Eberles suggested that the cause of Judy Johnson's death was more nefarious than alcohol poisoning and that network executives manipulated the airing of a movie to affect the McMartin verdict. See also text accompanying footnotes 180–181. A second book about the case, Anatomy of the McMartin Child Molestation Case, was published more than ten years after the case ended. There are four coauthors, including Jo-Ellan Dimitrius, the jury consultant for the defense in the McMartin case. The book is dedicated to Virginia McMartin. The text includes only one reference to the underlying transcript. Instead, the authors offer the defense view of the case as fact without any critical inquiry into areas in which there was conflicting evidence. There is a third book that is at least half about the McMartin case, but it has been relegated to obscurity because it takes a credulous view of the McMartin case as a large-scale ritual abuse case. By way of comparison, the book analyzes children from the Papoose Palace Academy case in Nevada, a case discussed in Chapter Four of this book. Waterman, Kelly, Oliveri, and McCord, Behind the Playground Walls: Sexual Abuse in Preschools (Guilford Press, 1993). The movie about the case is Indictment, a 1995 HBO movie by Abby and Myra Mann. (The Manns announced they were writing a book in 1986, when they also announced plans for the movie. They announced a book deal with Random House in 1993, but the book was never published.)

2. Pseudonyms have been given for first and last names of almost all of the children mentioned in this book. In this chapter, the only exception is Judy Johnson's son—only his first name is a pseudonym. (So, too, with Frank Fuster's son Noel in Chapter Six.) The same pseudonyms used by Nathan and Snedeker for the McMartin case have been employed for children in this chapter; the remaining pseudonyms, for the children not mentioned in Satan's Silence, are new. Throughout the book, the pseudonyms that I have assigned preserve the initial letters in the real first and last name.
3. The case is often described as having forty-four children at its height. Bob Williams, a Los Angeles Times reporter, prepared a list of forty-four that includes three children who testified before the grand jury but were not later listed as one of the forty-one complainants.
4. See footnote 207 and accompanying text in this chapter.
5. Paul Bynum, a police officer turned private investigator, committed suicide the night after Judge Pounders ruled his testimony could be presented to the jury the next day. Michael D. Harris, "McMartin Witness Commits Suicide," UPI (December 11, 1987, PM cycle.) Robert Hamill Winkler, charged with two other defendants of molesting seven children at the Coco Palms Hotel, died of a drug overdose the day he was to stand trial. David Hall, "Molestation Suspect Dead of Apparent Drug Overdose; Had Been Linked to McMartin Preschool Case," Daily Breeze (November 13, 1985), A3. Neither suicide was ever shown to be linked to the McMartin case, although the implication has repeatedly been made about Bynum.
6. Norma Meyer, "McMartin Case Renews Interest in 1976 Slaying," Daily Breeze (March 31, 1984), A1 (discussing the unsolved rape and murder of Karen Sue Klaas; the crime occurred after she dropped a child off at the McMartin preschool).
7. That result was upheld on appeal. McMartin v. County of Los Angeles, Court of Appeal of California, Second Appellate District, Division One, July 6, 1988. 202 Cal. App. 3d 848; review denied, Supreme Court of California, 1988 Cal. LEXIS 1280 (October 12, 1988).
8. Spitler v. Children's Institute International, 11 Cal. App. 3d 432, (Court of Appeal of California, Second Appellate District, Division One) (December 1, 1992).
9. McMartin v. Currie, Superior Court for Los Angeles Court, Case No. C751559. (Complaint concerning accusations made by Robert Currie on the following programs, which occurred immediately after the verdicts were announced in the McMartin case: Geraldo, Sally Jesse Raphael, The Jane Wallace Show, and L.A. in the Morning).
10. Carol McGraw, "McMartin Figures Win $1 in Civil Trial," Los Angeles Times (May 8, 1991), B1.
11. Robert Safian, "McMartin Madness: Ten Days in the Life of the Longest, Most Gruesomely Difficult Criminal Trial Ever." American Lawyer (October, 1989) 9:46.
12. Cynthia Gorney, "The Terrible Puzzle of McMartin Preschool," Washington Post (May 17–18, 1988).
13. Cynthia Gorney, "We All Wanted the Truth, But Must Settle for Justice," Los Angeles Times (January 19, 1990), 7.
14. Douglas Besharov, "The McMartin Case: Protecting the Innocent," National Review (February 19, 1990), 44.
15. Debbie Nathan. "What McMartin Started: The Ritual Abuse Hoax," Village Voice (June 20, 1990).
16. Carol Tavris, "A Day-Care Witch Hunt Tests Justice in Massachusetts," Los Angeles Times (April 11, 1997), B9.

17. Carol Tavris, "Beware the Incest-Survivor Machine," New York Times Book Review (January 3, 1993), 1, 9.
18. Carol Tavris, "A Day-Care Witch Hunt Tests Justice in Massachusetts."
19. Stephen Ceci and Maggie Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom: A Scientific Analysis of Children's Testimony (American Psychological Association, 1995), 8–9.
20. Willis, "The Media and McMartin," Village Voice, 8.
21. Rabinowitz, Wall Street Journal (May 15, 1995).
22. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 69.
23. Memorandum by Dr. Richard Segal, Kaiser Permanente, MR# 664-20-82; August 12, 1983.
24. Summarized in State v. Buckey at tr. 61584 ("band of redness, erythema encircling his rectum") and tr. 61587 ("appeared to be some friction like trauma").
25. Quoted in State v. Buckey at tr. 61587, lines 21–24.
26. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 70.
27. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 70. Nathan and Snedeker refer to the clinic as the "Marion Davies Clinic," omitting one word from its actual title, the word that describes the clinic's specialization: the Marion Davies Children's Clinic.
28. State v. Buckey, Grand Jury tr. 9, lines 1–8 (bruising); trial tr. 61602 (discoloration).
29. MBPD D.R. No. 83-04288, 16, line 23.
30. State v. Buckey, tr. 62,146.
31. A study by McCann et. al. (1988) is widely known for providing the first reliable comparisons of abused and non-abused children. McCann et. al., "Perianal Findings in Children Selected for Nonabuse: A Descriptive Study," Child Abuse & Neglect (1988) 13(2): 179–193. The study provides evidence that some "signs" thought to be associated only with sexual abuse also appear in non-abused children. For example, almost 30 percent of the non-abused sample exhibited intermittent dilation and relaxation of the anal sphincter, something that Hobbs and Wynne (among others) considered a sign of sexual abuse. Similarly, 30 percent of the non-abused sample had increased pigmentation, another sign often connected to sexual abuse. But the witch-hunt narrative has dismissed medical evidence that is not challenged by McCann's findings. As the authors make clear, they did not find any abrasions, hematomas, or fissures in the non-abused sample. This strengthens the significance of such findings, although it is never acknowledged in the witch-hunt narrative. Butler and his coauthors also claim that McCann's findings were "not admitted at the trial." Actually, Judge Pounders declined to let the defense subpoena Dr. McCann. That decision was eminently reasonable since Dr. McCann had no specific knowledge about the McMartin case. But the content of his studies of "normals" was included in the cross-examination of Dr. Heger in the second McMartin trial. The questions did not catch her off-guard. She was most familiar with the work—having served as one of the peer reviewers for the journal that published it.
32. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 227.
33. Mann-Stevens Tapes, Defense No. 25, August 4, 1986, 36.
34. Willis, "The Media and McMartin," Village Voice, 8.
35. D.A. Investigator Notebooks, 8–30 [1985] notation.
36. Shawn Hubler, "Driven to Her Death," Los Angeles Herald-Examiner (March 8, 1987), A1.
37. People v. Buckey, Preliminary Hearing, tr. 3139.
38. Mann-Stevens Tapes, Defense No. 6 (April 30, 1986), 64.
39. Mann-Stevens Tapes, Defense No. 17 (July 28, 1986), 20.
40. Nancy Hill-Holztman, "'Poison' of the McMartin Case," Los Angeles Herald-Examiner (October 14, 1988), 1; Times Wire Services, "McMartin Judge Says Case 'Has Poisoned Everyone'," Los Angeles Times (October 14, 1988).
41. Letter to Parents from MBPD, September 7, 1983.
42. The MBPD Police Report on Matthew Johnson indicates that on August 24 and 25, 1983, "Det. Dye in R/O's absence" contacted several families. Although all of these adults were reportedly sworn to secrecy, someone informed Virginia McMartin, who called the station to inquire about the matter on August 28. Det. Hoag's entry of August 30, 1983, states: "R/O thinks that [named parent] told Peggy." Ray Buckey was on vacation in South Dakota at the time; he was arrested (and released) on September 7.

43. For example: “This letter, combined with a local television report about possible links between the preschool and a pornography ring in nearby Los Angeles, touched off a panic.” Steven Mintz, Huck's Raft: A History of American Childhood (Harvard University Press, 2004), 335. But the first media stories were five months after the letter was sent. If the combination of the two touched off the panic, then there were five months of “pre-panic” developments to examine.
44. [Anonymous], “McMartin: Anatomy of a Witch-Hunt,” Playboy (June 1990), 45, 49.
45. Mary A. Fischer, “A Case of Dominoes?”Los Angeles Magazine (October 1989), 131. James Rainey, “L.A. Magazine Meets, Beats Economic Challenges,” Los Angeles Times (June 25, 2011).
46. See e.g., Wakefield and Underwager, “Assessing the Credibility of Children's Testimony in Ritual Sexual Abuse Allegations” (“The McMartin case was made at CII”). http://www.tc.umn.edu/~under006/Library/Assessing_Crediblity.html
47. “Students of Virginia McMartin Pre-School,” DR#83-04288, 288 PC Investigation; Manhattan Beach Police Department.
48. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 72.
49. MBPD, D.R. No. 83-04929, 3.
50. The Mergilis had not informed anyone at the preschool of their decision to withdraw. Quite to their surprise, then, Peggy Buckey called Mrs. Mergili on Tuesday, September 13, to find out if the reason Tanya had not been in attendance “had to do with that letter.” Without going into any details, Mrs. Mergili told her it did. What happened next became a major issue in the case, with the defense trying to keep these facts from the jury: according to Mrs. Mergili, Peggy Buckey said she “would hate to have Tanya put through” what would happen if this became a legal case. Mrs. Mergili testified that she considered the remark to be a threat. The defense argued vigorously, but unsuccessfully, that any description of the conversation should be kept out of the case.
51. The latter version contains comments and descriptions by someone on the defense team. Unfortunately, neither document meets professional standards of transcription; each version has missing dialogue and appears more like contemporaneous notes than an actual transcription. These are apparently the only available records of this vital September interview. The videotape was never introduced as evidence because Tanya eventually dropped out of the case.
52. Court reporters do not tend to record such information, beyond a parenthetic with the words indicating or child indicating.
53. Transcript of the Audio Portion of a Videotaped Interview of Tanya Mergili by [Dr.] Mary Wilson, UCLA Hospital, September 20, 1983, 15.
54. Transcript of the Audio Portion of a Videotaped Interview of Tanya Mergili by [Dr.] Mary Wilson, September 20, 1983, 15.
55. Transcript of the Audio Portion of a Videotaped Interview of Tanya Mergili by [Dr.] Mary Wilson, Septembers 20, 1983, 17.
56. Medical Report—Suspected Child Abuse. UCLA Hospital, September 20, 1983. Hospital ID No. 136-07-50, 2.
57. Mergili family Information from Parents or Caretakers, Children's Institute International, 4. Handwritten, undated. Likely completed the same day as Tanya's CII interview (December 8, 1983).
58. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 85.
59. California v. Buckey, Grand Jury, tr. 339.
60. Diary of Gloria Barton, 3. The diaries of several mothers were obtained through discovery and over strenuous objection of mothers who never considered their own diaries possibly subject to “discovery” in a criminal case.
61. “Information Form,” [J and D] Gregg. Contained in “Parent Lists and Responses to Letter,” Manhattan Beach Police Department, 1983.
62. MBPD report 83-06235 (1-24-84) Det. Hoag unnumbered.
63. Police Report D.R. 83-05464, Manhattan Beach Police Department (9-23-1983), 3.
64. Police Report D.R. 83-05464, 3.
65. Police Report D.R. 83-05464, 4.

66. Police Report D.R. 83-05464, 5.
67. C.I.I. November. Four-page document with paragraph-length summaries of twelve November CII interviews. The author has clearly viewed the videotapes, and the summaries contain a significant amount of editorializing. This would seem to be a document created by the defense, as that is the substantive orientation of the editorial remarks.
68. "Mary Gordon Interview 11/16/83," 2–3. Note: this twelve-page typed transcript is a truncated transcription of the full interview, which I have seen on videotape. This transcript is not in the same format as other CII transcripts, and it is not clear who prepared it.
69. "Mary Gordon Interview 11/16/83," 3.
70. "Mary Gordon Interview 11/16/83," 5.
71. "Mary Gordon Interview 11/16/83," 7.
72. "Mary Gordon Interview 11/16/83," 7.
73. Information Form, [G.] Ingram. Contained in "Parent Lists and Responses to Letter," Manhattan Beach Police Department, 1983.
74. Police affidavit, unnumbered. S/Judge Schulte 5/5/84.
75. State v. Buckey, Grand Jury, tr. 129–140. There is also evidence that Dr. Mary Wilson examined Amy Goldman on September 20 and was told by Amy that she kissed Ray's penis. However strong the evidence in September, it was mitigated by a series of reports from this family as early as mid-January 1984 when one of their children identified "Fireman Pete" from Nautilus Club and two others. By February 4, one of the parents was reporting something about lions and about being "married" at church.
76. Police Report D.R. 83-04932, Manhattan Beach Police Department, 3.
77. Letter from Jean Matusinka, Deputy in Charge, Los Angeles District Attorney's Office to Kee MacFarlane, Child Sexual Abuse Diagnostic Center, Children's Institute (October 17, 1983).
78. Mann-Stevens Tapes, Defense No. 16 (July 28, 1986), 7.
79. "McMartin: Trial and Errors," a 1990 program on public television in Los Angeles, included an interview with a mother who had moved to Hawaii before the McMartin case broke in the news. According to the program, her son corroborated some of the allegations in the case. There was also a family that was in the Far East and one that moved to Oregon before the case broke. There would be numerous other leads to follow if one is looking for evidence that might contradict the claim that the case was created at CII. In one early list of 153 McMartin parents, four families were listed with "no address available," one was listed in Paradise Valley, and another in Bend, Oregon. This kind of inquiry went beyond the scope of my research paradigm and expertise.
80. "Believe the TV Movie," Village Voice (May 23, 1995) 40(21), 46. The title is a snide rejoinder to the organization called Believe the Children.
81. Nathan and Snedeker, 80.
82. Nathan and Snedeker, 79–80.
83. After saying that she still likes Ray, Tanya volunteers "He did some bad things, so I don't like it" (34, lines 16–17). MacFarlane's first mention of "bad secrets" comes after that (34, lines 27–28).
84. Nathan and Snedeker, 80.
85. Nathan and Snedeker also say that "The girl was mute. She only nodded" (80). There is no explanation why nodding, a universally recognized sign of affirmation, should not be considered affirmation in this instance, other than an unexplained observation about her open mouth.
86. P. 76, lines 5–7.
87. P. 76, lines 16–19.
88. Trisha Walters interview transcript, 82, 85.
89. Police Report D.R. 83-06218, Manhattan Beach Police Department (12–29–83), 1.
90. State v. Buckey, Grand Jury, tr. 61 (lines 12–16).
91. Dr. Paul on Trisha Walters. State v. Buckey, Retrial, tr. 6679.
92. CII interview (November 7, 1983), 29, 31.
93. CII interview (November 1, 1983), 71.
94. CII interview (November 29, 1983) [Defense description], 3, 4.
95. CII interview (November 30, 1983), 11.

96. CII interview (December 1, 1983).
97. CII interview (December 7, 1983), 61 (won't help) and 62 (scaredy cat).
98. Tanya Mergili was identified in September and videotaped being interviewed by a pediatrician at UCLA Medical Center.
99. "First Implication of Female Teacher Perpetrators." Prepared by Kee MacFarlane (April 5, 1984). Handwritten.
100. Videotape of CII interview (December 5, 1983) (swimming, at 39 min.; saw a movie, at 40 min.; Did Miss Peggy? at 45 min.).
101. Transcription of the Audio Portion of a Videotaped Interview of Tanya Mergili by Kee MacFarlane, Children's Institute International (December 7, 1983), tr. 50–51.
102. "First Implication of Female Teacher Perpetrators." Prepared by Kee MacFarlane (April 5, 1984). Handwritten.
103. Videotape of Charles Sanders interview at CII (January 7, 1984; Peggy naked horsey rider at 33 min).
104. The grand jury notebooks are included with other pre-trial materials at the Los Angeles County Archives. The Mike Wallace reference is apparent in a full transcript of the interview that Wallace did with Lael Rubin. The reference to this incident was not included in the program, which was extremely defense-oriented. Although not disclosed in the program, the interview was staged at the house of Myra and Abby Mann. Glenn Stevens confirmed this information at the 401 hearing. Trial transcript: vol. 25, tr. 3884 (January 28, 1987).
105. Transcript of interview with Terrence and Ellen Chapman, by Bill Brunetti and Detective Augusta Bell, 12.
106. Ellen Chapman later testified that Peggy Buckey told her "she would always continually watch Ray when the children were sitting on his lap or hanging on his neck, um, that if he ever had a hard-on, that she would have noticed it." State v. Buckey, vol. 168, tr. 24545–6 (December 16, 1987).
107. Testimony of Ellen Chapman, Grand Jury proceedings, tr. 528 (lines 10–14).
108. Testimony of Ellen Chapman. Grand Jury proceedings, tr. 528 (lines 18–20).
109. Transcript of interview with Terrence and Ellen Chapman, by Bill Brunetti and Detective Augusta Bell, 17.
110. Transcript of interview with Terrence and Ellen Chapman, by Bill Brunetti and Detective Augusta Bell, 21–22; see also Testimony of Ellen Champan at Grand Jury proceedings, tr. 529–530. Chapman wasn't the only witness to these statements; they were made in the presence of her friend, Mary Walker. Interview tr. 19–20.
111. Testimony of Dr. Heger at Grand Jury proceedings, tr. 533–534.
112. State v. Buckey, Grand Jury, tr. 524–535.
113. Transcript of interview with Terrence and Ellen Chapman., by Bill Brunetti and Detective Augusta Bell, 42–3.
114. The soundtrack of a videotape of a CII interview with Charlie Marks on February 4, 1984.
115. CII interview with Miranda Chase (April 3, 1984). Quotes in text from notes of videotape.
116. The medical evidence in the McCuan case, which is analyzed in Chapter Three, is much stronger than has been portrayed in the witch-hunt narrative.
117. Bruce Woodling and Astrid Heger, "The Use of the Colposcope in the Diagnosis of Sexual Abuse in the Pediatric Age Group,"Child Abuse & Neglect (1986), 10(1), 111–114.
118. John McCann, Robert Wells, Mary Simon, and Joan Voris, "Genital Findings in Prepubertal Girls Selected for Nonabuse: A Descriptive Study," Pediatrics (1990) 86: 428–439; John McCann, Joan Voris, Mary Simon, and Robert Wells, "Perianal Findings in Prepubertal Children Selected for Nonabuse: A Descriptive Study," Child Abuse & Neglect (1989) 13(2): 179–193.
119. Ross E. Cheit, "The Elusive Record: On the Difficulties in Researching High-Profile Child Sexual Abuse Cases from the 1980s," Justice System Journal (2007), 28(1) 79–97.
120. Sources official and otherwise: grand jury transcripts, trial transcripts, investigator's notebooks, MBPD reports, CII documents, and internal documents from both the prosecution and the defense, including the Mann-Stevens tapes and transcriptions made by the defense.

121. Nathan and Snedeker cite the 80 percent figure in their book; their footnote is to Mary Fischer's article in Los Angeles Magazine. The article does not provide a source or footnote. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 293 (fn. 42).
122. Statement of Kee MacFarlane, Child Abuse and Day Care, Joint Hearing before Subcommittee on Oversight of Committee on Ways and Means and Select Committee on Child, Youth, and Families. Ninety-Eighth Congress, Second Session (September 17, 1984), 43.
123. Bruce Woodling and Astrid Heger, "The Use of the Colposcope in the Diagnosis of Sexual Abuse in the Pediatric Age Group," Child Abuse & Neglect (1986), 10(1), 111–114.
124. McCauley, J., R. L. Gorman, and G. Guzinski. "Toluidine Blue in the Detection of Perineal Lacerations in Pediatric and Adolescent Sexual Abuse Victims," Pediatrics (December 1986), 78(6), 1030–1043.
125. McCauley, Gorman, and Guzinski, 1042. (The control group consisted of "girls 0 to 10 years of age, who presented to the pediatric emergency room or the well-child clinic with a non-acute complaint and no history or suspicion of child abuse"; 1040.)
126. Astrid Heger, Lynne Ticson, Oralia Velasquez, and Raphael Bernier, "Children Referred for Possible Sexual Abuse: Medical Findings in 2384 Children," Child Abuse & Neglect (2002), 26(6–7), 645–659.
127. Hendrika Cantwell, "Vaginal Inspection As it Relates to Child Sexual Abuse in Girls Under Thirteen," Child Abuse & Neglect (1983), 7, 171–176.
128. John McCann, Robert Wells, and Joan Voris. "Genital Findings in Prepubertal Girls Selected for Nonabuse: A Descriptive Study," Pediatrics (1990), 86, 428–439. See also Heger et. al., "Appearance of the Genitals in Girls Selected for Nonabuse: Review of Hymenal Morphology and Nonspecific Finings," Journal of Pediatric and Adolescent Gynecology (February 2002) 15(1), 27–35.
129. Shireen Atabaki and Jan Paradise, "The Medical Evaluation of the Sexually Abuse Child: Lessons from a Decade of Research," Pediatrics (1999).
130. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 70.
131. W. D. Erickson, N. H. Walbek, and R. K. Seely, "Behavior Patterns of Child Molesters," Archive of Sexual Behavior (February 1988) 17(1), 77–86.
132. One study concluded that 45.5 percent of male sex-abuse victims do not sustain such injuries. Another study found that "two-thirds of children under 6 years of age [in Rimza and Neggerman's report] had normal physical exams" despite having been sexually abused. Rimza and Neggerman also found that genital trauma was "more common in assaults by strangers, occurring in 25% of the cases with stranger assailants and in only 12% of the cases involving known assailants." Cited in W. D. Erickson, N. H. Walbek, and R. K. Seely, "Behavior Patterns of Child Molesters," 79–80. In other words, the kind of abuse that Judy Johnson suspected would likely not leave the child seriously wounded. The claim that such abuse "often maims or kills" is utterly fantastic. An epidemiologic study of child sexual abuse in Minneapolis found two deaths in a period with approximately twenty-four hundred reported cases of child sexual abuse. Both were due to strangulation during attempted rape. Arthur C. Jaffe, Lucille Dynneson, and Robert ten Bensel, "Sexual Abuse of Children: An Epidemiological Study," American Journal of Diseases of Child, (June 1975), 690.
133. Dr. Paul was asked whether "in cases of acute sodomy which might result in fissures" the gait of the child might be affected. His answer was: "No. Funny enough, it isn't." Vol. 406 at 55574 (August 7, 1989).
134. Mary Gordon, one of the September responders discussed earlier in this chapter, also had significant medical findings. Dr. Heger reported "a large scar measuring between a 1½ and 2cm at 6 o'clock extending through the posterior forchette and crossing the hymen and extending into the vagina." This kind of scar has never been reported in any study of "normal" (non-abused) children.
135. The CII process was not a directed investigation; rather, they responded to referrals. Presumably, the Gregg family did not obtain a referral to CII until after sometime in late November, or possibly even December.
136. State v. Buckey, Grand Jury, 74, lines 23–28; 75, lines 1–2.
137. State v. Buckey, tr. 61629 (as described in summation).
138. State v. Buckey, tr. 61632 (as described in summation).
139. State v. Buckey, tr. 61632 (as described in summation).

140. Dr. Paul amended his view in the second trial. He testified that the white marks on pictures of Sally were not scars but tiny drops of mucous reflecting light. He also blamed any "irregularity" of the posterior fourchette on Dr. Heger pulling on the area. This was pure speculation on the part of Dr. Paul, who provided no basis for reaching this new conclusion about slides he previously testified were "perfectly normal."
141. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3432, lines 6–14.
142. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3634.
143. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3635.
144. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3636.
145. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3432, lines 15–21.
146. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3633, lines 7–25.
147. State v. Buckey, Grand Jury, tr. 61, lines 12–16.
148. State v. Buckey, Grand Jury, tr. 61, lines 19–28; 62, lines 7–9.
149. State v. Buckey, Grand Jury, tr. 62, lines 1–5.
150. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3420, lines 1–3.
151. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3420, lines 10–11.
152. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3421, lines 16–19.
153. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3421
154. State v. Buckey, tr. 61555, lines 23–28; 61556, lines 1–2.
155. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 6418.
156. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 6649.
157. The medical report on Allison contains two relevant findings: (1) a 1.0–2.0 cm scar crossing the posterior fourchette totally and entering and crossing the hymen into the vagina (98, line 27 to 99, line 3); and (2) a small anal scar (0.5 cm) at 12 o'clock.
158. Heger testimony described at tr. 61489-90.
159. Cited in Lois Timnick, "Doctor Testifies for Defense in McMartin Trial," Los Angeles Times (August 9, 1989).
160. Astrid Heger, S. Jean Emans and David Muram, Evaluation of the Sexually Abused Child (Oxford University Press, 2000), 7.
161. Satan's Silence, 187. As chief medical examiner in Sao Paulo, Brazil, Dr. Teixeira wrote an article that Nathan and Snedeker described as "instructing colleagues how to do virginity checks on girls and women" with a colposcope. The authors claimed that Teixeira had done hundreds of these dubious examinations. "If an accused wife denied indiscretions before marriage," Nathan and Snedeker explained, "[Dr. Teixeira] attempted to distinguish the fresh irritations inflicted by her husband's penis from other infinitesimal wounding that might have been wrought by a former boyfriend." But the article that Dr. Teixeira wrote is called "Hymenal Colposcopic Examination in Sexual Offenses" and is based on the examination of 500 patients during a six-month period, all of them "actual or supposed victims of sexual offenses." There is a single mention of the civil law that allows a husband to request annulment up to ten days after the wedding "under the special circumstance of his wife not being virgin without his previous knowledge." Notably, Teixeira describes this as "a very uncommon situation" and makes no statement to indicate he has ever had a single case like that. He certainly does not describe one. Wilmes Teixeira, "Hymenal Colposcopic Examination in Sexual Offenses," American Journal of Forensic Medicine and Pathology (September 1981), 213.
162. Woodling and Heger, "The Use of the Colpscope in the Diagnosis of Sexual Abuse in Pediatric Age Girls," Child Abuse & Neglect (1986), 10(1), 112.
163. This case, like McMartin, is far more complicated than has been portrayed in the witch-hunt narrative. See Ross E. Cheit and Andrea Matthews, "Revisiting the Jordan, Minnesota Cases," Roger Williams University Law Review (forthcoming, 2014).
164. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 6334 ("a liar will avoid your eye contact at some time or another").
165. Astrid Heger, S. Jean Emans, and David Muram, Evaluation of the Sexually Abused Child: A Medical Textbook and Photographic Atlas, 2nd ed. (Oxford University Press, 2000); see also John Wilkens and Jim Okerblom, "Wrong Photos Utilized in Child-Abuse Trial," San Diego Union-Tribune (January 21, 1992), B1 (describing how Heger's evaluation identified the error in the Poway case).

166. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3620.

167. A brief synopsis of five other children in the preliminary hearing or trial whose medical evidence merits further consideration:

Cindy Ennis. Among the remaining children, the medical evidence was strongest in the case of Cindy Ennis. Cindy was nine years old when she was interviewed at CII on March 14, 1984. Four doctors eventually testified she had an extremely enlarged hymenal opening (2.0 cm). Although studies on the range of "normal" hymenal openings in girls with no suspected history of sexual abuse later challenged the earlier notions of what constituted possible signs of abuse, even those studies agreed that a 2 cm. opening is not normal. (At the time of the trial, many pediatricians considered a hymenal opening of more than 0.5 cm. to be enlarged. McCann's subsequent studies indicate that openings up to 1 cm. could well be normal. But the evidence on Cindy E. was twice that number.) There was also extensive scarring evidence noted through colpscopic pictures. Of the eight colposcopic findings, six would still be considered highly significant under current standards. All of those involved scarring. Defense lawyer Danny Davis, who rarely gave any points to the prosecution, described the medical evidence on Cindy Ennis as "serious and convincing." In his closing argument, he offered only the technical defense that 62 percent of the time Cindy attended the preschool was outside the scope of the statute of limitations. In other words, Ray Buckey could not be convicted for those acts if the jury concluded they occurred during those times. State v. Buckey, tr. 62094.

Bill Sandel. Probably the most notable remaining child, from the point of view of medical evidence, was Bill Sandel. He was the second child to testify at the preliminary hearing, so his testimony received extensive media coverage. The medical evidence, which was presented separately, received much less attention. According to Bill's mother, who was then a nurse, the boy complained of rectal bleeding while he attended the McMartin Preschool. She testified this was a recurring problem and she observed "excoriated areas around the anus." She entertained the possibility of pinworms, never even considering sexual abuse as a possible cause. Three doctors testified Bill had significant anal scarring in a most suspicious location (between 6 and 7 o'clock). Dr. Heger originally examined the boy, and Dr. Gordon testified that he agreed with her findings. The boy was also seen separately by Dr. Berkowitz, who took her own photographs with a colposcope and verified the scarring.

Dr. Paul concurred that there were anal injuries but he argued they likely occurred more recently than when Bill attended the preschool. At one point he argued that the injuries were acute; nobody else took the claim seriously. Indeed, Dr. Paul's assertion does not explain the source of the problems Bill experienced in his anal area while attending the McMartin Preschool. Nor does it indicate how Bill sustained the injuries Dr. Paul acknowledges, especially given that Bill's only explanation to the pediatrician involved Ray Buckey.

Kristy Walters. There was strong disagreement over the medical evidence concerning Kristy Walters, Trisha's older sister. Trisha is the one child at trial who emerged from the initial CII interviews in November. She was attending the school at the time, which indicates how strongly her family supported the McMartins before Trisha made her statements on November 22, 1983. Dr. Heger examined Kristy when she was seven and a half years old. The girl had last been in attendance at the McMartin Preschool two and a half years earlier. Dr. Heger testified at the grand jury that Kristy had a very relaxed hymenal opening, which she said was one and a half times the normal size. She testified further that there was general rounding of the hymen and skin tags (McMartin Grand Jury, tr. 64, lines 18–28). These findings would not be considered important today; they can all be found in "normals."

There were other findings, however, that would be considered significant indicators of abuse by today's standards. Most significantly, Dr. Heger observed a long scar at 6 o'clock that was greater than 2 cm. It extended through the antichamber, across the hymen, and into the vagina (McMartin Grand Jury: 65, lines 1–4). Six o'clock is the most common place for injury to occur in a penetrative assault; a large scar in that location is practically diagnostic of sexual abuse. Dr. Heger also testified that Kristy had other scars perpendicular to the opening of the vagina. She described them as typical of "a blunt object pushing against delicate tissue" (McMartin Grand Jury: 65, lines 22–28).

Dr. Heger further testified that there was a depression near the anal verge. Dr. Gordon, who examined the photographs, testified he also saw scars that were consistent with sexual abuse (McMartin First Trial: summarized at 61521, lines 9–12). Dr. Paul testified he could not see any of the supposed scars (tr. 56385–56387); nor could he draw any conclusions from the depression on the anal verge. It is impossible to assess whether this was an abnormal finding that was due to trauma or merely a congenital defect, without having an independent medical expert examine the photographs. The jury never heard about the "well-healed anal scars"—scars consistent with the penetration of a blunt object—because Kristy never disclosed anal abuse in her testimony; the defense won its fight to keep this evidence from the jury. There is no medical doubt that Kristy Walters sustained serious anal injuries. But because she never disclosed them, the jury never heard the medical evidence.

Ariel Marks. Ariel accounted for twenty-one of the fifty-two counts against Ray Buckey at trial. The ten other children accounted for between one and six counts each against him. She was the child with the longest period of attendance at McMartin, which helps account for the large number of criminal counts. Curiously, Ariel has not played prominently in the witch-hunt narrative; nor was she one of the three girls who convinced enough jurors to result in a mistrial on those charges. The documents I was able to review provide sufficient details to understand what Dr. Heger originally reported. They do not provide details about Dr. Paul's responses.

Dr. Heger testified before the grand jury that Ariel had recurrent vaginitis and bladder infections while enrolled at the McMartin Pre-School. This is relevant but not particularly strong evidence since sexual abuse is one of many possible explanations. The significance of Dr. Heger's testimony about "rounded tissue remnants around the hymen" and about a "very relaxed hymenal opening" has been contradicted by research conducted since 1984. Similarly, the findings concerning "neovascularization" would not have been considered notable under current knowledge. Had these questionable findings been the only signs of abuse, then Ariel's medical evaluation would have been seriously impugned under today's state of knowledge. But the evaluation also found signs of trauma that remain solid signs of abuse today. Dr. Heger testified further that there was scar tissue at various locations surrounding the opening of the vagina; there was a "remarkable scar which streams from 3:30 across the hymenal orifice into vagina." The significance of this kind of evidence of physical trauma has not been diminished by subsequent research. That is, vaginal scars have not been found in non-abused populations in controlled studies unless the child had a well-defined episode of previous vaginal trauma. Ariel Marks did not have a previous record of vaginal injury.

Daniel Acorn. Daniel was first interviewed at CII on March 1, 1984. He was nine years old and had not been at the McMartin preschool for almost three years. His medical evaluation by Drs. Woodling and Heger was conducted on May 26. Testimony much later in the case suggests that Dr. Woodling's employment for the prosecution was discontinued after this date, although it is not at all clear why. Dr. Woodling's report describes the medical examination as follows: "A general physical examination is performed by Astrid Heger, M.D. Careful inspection of the perianal area reveals a small, old well-healed fissure at 12 o'clock. Multiple photographs are taken using a colposcope. No other genital injury or scarring is present. Internal examination is not performed at the request of both the patient and his mother." The colposcopic findings described "a six o'clock scar with loss of tissue integrity," "loss of rugal patterns with hypertrophy, palor and underlying erythema" at 4 o'clock, and "scarring with rugal interruption" at 12 o'clock. There is still a debate in the field about the significance of "rugal patterns"; therefore much of what he described might be irrelevant to proving sexual abuse. Scarring, however, is always suspicious, especially at the 6 or 12 o'clock position. Dr. Paul admitted there could be "a scar or scars" on one slide, but he said it had "little significance either way." Dr. Heger ultimately presented these findings merely as "consistent with" sexual abuse, which is not any kind of diagnostic claim. It is difficult to ascertain more without being able to submit the slides at issue to an outside expert, but it is safe to say the significance of the findings on this child was probably overblown.

168. Sara Barton, one of the very first positive responders in September 1983, demonstrated several notable medical signs of sexual abuse. Dr. Heger noted one finding—"rounding" of the tissue—that has since been considered an unreliable indicator of sexual abuse. She also noted scarring, which is still considered strong evidence of sexual abuse. Mary Gordon, another September responder, was examined by Drs. Heger and Woodling on January 7, 1984. Dr. Heger reported scarring in the area outside the hymen at 4 o'clock, 5 o'clock, 7 o'clock, and 8 o'clock. She also observed a large scar measuring 1.5–2 cm at 6 o'clock, extending through the posterior fourchette and into the vagina. These findings, if confirmed today, would be considered strong evidence of sexual abuse.

169. The mother who testified at Congress as "Mrs. Deborah Smith" had taken her child to the pediatrician, who observed "considerable redness and swelling in her genital area." At the next visit, a routine visit for her younger brother, the pediatrician noted vaginal discharge. The girl's stepfather, a general practitioner, diagnosed vaginitis.
170. Grand Jury, tr. 46–47. Also at 50, lines 12–16: "And so with Kathy, she definitely had the scarring, she definitely had a large scar at the point of 6 o'clock that crossed all the way across and went right into the vagina. You could see the scar very, very noticeably."
171. This was described by Debra Mergili in the Preliminary Hearing, vol. 139, October 1, 1984.
172. Jeffrey Victor, "Satanic Cult Rumors as Contemporary Legend," Western Folklore, Contemporary Legends in Emergence (January 1990), 49(1): 51–81, 69.
173. Investigator Worksheets, V. Harper (replaced January 19, 1984, by A. W. Brunnetti).
174. Investigator Worksheets, A. W. Brunnetti (February 16, 1984).
175. The most vocal of the parents involved in the dubious tunnel dig after the first trial was Jackie McGaulie, whose daughter was never part of the criminal case. One of the most vocal of the parents during the trial was Tim Wheeler, who appeared on the 60 Minutes program about the case; he too did not have children in the case. Neither did Bob Currie, who became famous both for the reward he posted without success for evidence of commercial pornography at the McMartin Preschool and for being featured as a rabid parent in the movie Indictment.
176. Richard Beck, "Willis and Happiness," n + 1 (November 18, 2011). The statement of purpose is from the organization's Fall 1993 newsletter. I reviewed twenty-three newsletters from 1986 to 1997 and did not find any references that bear out the claim they were "right wing." In the only year an actual budget was published in the newsletter, the organization had an annual income of $15,917 and it expended of $19,816. (Believe the Children newsletter, Winter 1996, 7.) Although various cultural theorists have claimed, retroactively, that this organization was an important influence on American society, the claim is difficult to square with their small membership and the content of their newsletter, which largely reproduced articles published elsewhere and did not take credit for any actual legislation or other outcomes. Moreover, Nancy Whittier's detailed account of the social movements around child sexual abuse in the United States provides no support for the claim that these organizations were right-wing. Rather, they represented feminists and victims, whose politics were, if anything, left-leaning. Nancy Whittier, The Politics of Child Sexual Abuse (Oxford University Press, 2009).
177. A handmade typed spreadsheet of all the children at trial, apparently prepared by the LADA, lists the therapist for each child. Nine went to C. Kent; two others went to J. Kent. The three remaining children were seen by Jane McCord, Noel Plourde, and Michelle Dugan. See Eberle and Eberle, Abuse of Innocence, 18, 20, 49, 59, 72, 75, 139.
178. Mann-Stevens Tapes, No. 17, 8 (July 28) and No. 18 (July 30), 3. Stevens uses the plural more than once in this conversation, making it clear he was implicating both therapists, even though Kent saw far more children. Kent and Dugan contributed to a chapter in Waterman et. al.'s Behind the Playground Walls, wherein they provide a clinical view of children in the McMartin case. Two clinical examples involved children who reportedly were forced to kill animals (248–249). Though duly noting that nobody in the case was convicted in criminal court, the chapter in Waterman does not entertain the possibility that stated reports about killing animals might have been factually incorrect.
179. In 2008, the Santa Cruz Ritual Abuse Task Force posted a credulous summary of the claim that there had been tunnels under the McMartin Preschool. It was contained on a Word Press blog about the McMartin Preschool trial that no longer exists. The Task Force is credited with writing the introduction to a section called "Archaeological Investigations of the McMartin Preschool Site" on a Ritual Abuse website. http://ritualabuse.us/ritualabuse/articles/mcmartin-preschool-case-what-really-happened-and-the-coverup/.

For a sense of the conspiracy theories that can be associated with such task forces, see Aaron Curtis, "Some on Ritual Abuse Task Force Say Satanists Are Poisoning Them," Los Angeles Times (December 1, 1992).

180. Eberle and Eberle, Abuse of Innocence, 19–20.
181. He was a previously convicted arsonist who was apprehended after setting another fire, on May 17, at the home of a former companion who provided the police with evidence linking him to the McMartin fire. See David Hall, "McMartin Fire Suspect 'Full of Violence,'" Daily Breeze (May 26, 1984), A3.
182. Documents from the arson investigation reveal that Mann claimed the U.S. attorney was "biased" against them and the investigation when they concluded there was no connection to the McMartin case. Report of Investigation, Dept. of Treasury, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Investigation No. 93110-95-0011-D (December 12, 1995), 5.
183. Lisa Belkin, Show Me a Hero: A Tale of Murder, Suicide, Race, and Redemption (Little Brown, 1999), 69.
184. See e.g., KABC arraignment story from March 1984 that ends with anchorwoman saying "this is your story [Wayne], it's all your story" and endorsing the need for contributions to CII. Available at: http://youtu.be/MD5aT6kZ5MQ.
185. The relationship between Kee MacFarlane and Wayne Satz became a major part of the witch-hunt narrative largely because it was eventually revealed that the two were linked romantically. Although much has been made about the relationship, by all indications their romantic involvement began long after the initial stories on KABC and after the first few months of CII interviews. One full day of cross-examination of MacFarlane was devoted to her relationship with Satz (State v. Buckey, reporter's daily transcript, Tuesday August 9, 1988). Judge Pounders ruled that their romantic relationship was off-limits because it did not bear sufficient relevancy to issues about the CII interviews. As to MacFarlane's role in the original stories, she denied leaking information to Satz, but she acknowledged that she spoke with him several times during the development of the story, that she knew the story was coming out in advance of February 2, and that she participated in a live TV interview with Satz after one of the stories in March (tr. 38534). In short, she worked closely with him. None of which excuses the obvious impropriety of discussing a confidential investigation with Satz, but the reasons for doing so were apparently not related to the relationship that later formed between the two.
186. Notation, Investigator's Notebooks, February 2, 1984.
187. Philip Jenkins, Moral Panic, 276, fn. 5.
188. Since Judy Johnson was not the only one with a fanciful version of the case by then, this issue is far less important than has been represented in the witch-hunt narrative. Johnson's behavior in February 1984 does not prove anything about what three separate doctors saw in August 1983. Instead, it helps prove that social forces surrounding the case were taking hold shortly after the media coverage began.
189. The cut-off date for the second round of charges was early May 1984. There had been 178 children evaluated at that point. This was about half the number of children who would ultimately be evaluated. The children who were interviewed later played no role in the legal proceedings, and none of the multiple sources of documents located for this research included any information about them, beyond transcripts of some CII interviews.
190. Ilyce Meckler's rarely cited investigative report for PBS ("McMartin Trial and Errors") in January 1990 demonstrated that the DA's office viewed very few of the children's interviews before taking the case to the grand jury. Instead, they relied on the videotape log notations.
191. Mann-Stevens Tapes, Defense No. 22 (August 16, 1986), 22 ("it was just awesome").
192. Carol McGraw, "McMartin Pupil, 10, Tells of Bizarre Rite; Forced to Drink Blood, Witness Claims," Los Angeles Times (February 21, 1985), 6.
193. Mann-Stevens Tapes, Defense No.4 (March 22, 1986), 17.
194. John A. Jackson, "Trial by Ordeal: The McMartin Court Has Its Way with One Small Girl," Daily Breeze (May 16, 1985), 1, 18 +.

195. William Plummer and Joshua Hammer, "The Young Witnesses in the McMartin Sex Abuse Case Undergo a Legal Battering in Court," People (July 8, 1985), 26.
196. Mann-Stevens Tapes, Defense No. 29 (June 11, 1986), 25.
197. Mann-Stevens Tapes, Defense No. 4 (March 22, 1986), 10.
198. Lois Timnick, "McMartin Defense Investigator Coerced Witness, Judge Finds," Los Angeles Times (September 13, 1989), Metro, Part 2, 3.
199. See testimony of Wesley Sorenson, September 22 and 25, 1989. Volumes 431 and 432 of the trial transcript, State v. Buckey. The incident, which Virginia McMartin reported in her dairy, involved the Sorenson's daughter touching Ray's genitals in the spring of 1983. Virginia described the incident as inadvertent, and in a conversation with Mrs. Sorenson Virginia learned that the girl had apparently tried to touch her father's genitals in the shower on one or two occasions. Those incidents, which the father considered both private and irrelevant to the charges in the McMartin case, were eventually the focus of many questions in court. Welsey Sorenson testified that the defense investigator who approached him about these issues made him "uneasy" and gave him the "feeling" that the defense was warning him that if he testified it would be very embarrassing for him (tr. 59953). The detailed and repeated questioning about his occasional showers with his small daughter bears this out.
200. Marcia Chambers, "Questions Arise About Investigation of Coast Molestation Case," New York Times (October 22, 1985).
201. Transcripts of the Mann-Stevens tapes, covering conversations over several months in the late spring and summer of 1986, indicate Stevens told the Manns on several early occasions that he thought there was sufficient evidence of guilt against Ray Buckey. Mann eventually says that the success of the movie depends on all the defendants being acquitted. Stevens famously drank a toast with the Manns to the acquittal of both defendants, even though Stevens later allowed under oath that he still believed Ray Buckey was guilty at the time. Stevens eventually adopted the witch-hunt narrative wholesale, arguing that Ray Buckey was also factually innocent.
202. Michael Reese, "A Child-Abuse Case Implodes," Newsweek (January 27, 1986), 26. This view had been building in the press coverage for more than six months. See John Crewdson, "California Abuse Case May Be Unraveling," Chicago Tribune (May 17, 1985).
203. The Manns announced their intention to make a movie and write a book in a press release on November 3, 1986. "Abby Mann Plans Book, Feature Film on 'McMartin Preschool Case,'" Solters, Roskin, Freidman, Inc. (November 3, 1986). The agreement they signed with Stevens, which became an exhibit in the hearing on the motion to dismiss, was dated April 1, 1986. The conversations took place largely in June and July of 1986.
204. The Manns said they "agonized" about the decision, particularly since they promised Stevens the tapes would be confidential, but decided they could not withhold evidence—evidence that they created. Richard Layco, "Hollywood Tapes and Testimony," Time (December 15, 1986).
205. Mann-Stevens Tapes, No. 29, 37.
206. State v. Buckey, Pre-trial hearing, tr. 3876 (January 28, 1987).
207. Memorandum to: Gilbert Garcetti. From: Glenn E. Stevens. Subject: Analysis, Recommendation and Revised Summaries People v. Raymond Buckey et al., January 10, 1986. 3. He recommended "a simple case against Raymond Buckey with six victims all supported by medical evidence" and concluded that the evidence "should lead any jury or court to conclude that he is guilty as charged" (8).
208. Mann-Stevens Tapes, No. 20, 29.
209. Fischer, "A Case of Dominoes," [Figure] "Where Was Ray?" 130.
210. James Rainey, "L. A. Magazine Finds Its Way Back," Los Angeles Times (June 25, 2011), D1 (naming the McMartin "debunking" article as one of the most important articles in the magazine in its fifty years).
211. A mother whose two children attended McMartin between 1975 and 1980 said "Ray came to the school right as they were leaving" (Response of. L. B.). Another mother specifically placed Ray at the school in the fall of 1980 (Response of D. E.). A mother whose daughter attended only in 1980–81 told the police a specific story about how Ray was "real mean" to the kids (Response of J. P.). A man whose son attended from 1978 to 1981 also verified that his son had contact with Ray Buckey (Response of D. S.). Tara Duncan, who had come to McMartin for observation from El Camino College, testified Ray was there in the fall of 1980. Trial testimony, vol. 259 (July 27, 1988).

212. State v. Buckey, tr. 36701–36702.
213. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 71.
214. The footnote to Nathan's claim references an entire article and not a particular passage. The article is an "exclusive" interview with the Buckeys by a writer clearly sympathetic to the defense. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 268, fn. 16.
215. Scott Moniak told the MBPD he "used to hang around with Ray," and that Ray "drank in the daytimes" and was "out of control" and "into magic mushrooms." MBPD interview, November 22, 1983.
216. Virginia McMartin testified she put things about the preschool in her diary "if they were important." State v. Buckey, tr. 60271. On April 8, 1981 she wrote: "Ray had troubles. Several calls from Peg. Steve came from work and helped P. A. with him. Poor dear." When asked to explain the notation years later, Virginia McMartin testified she "hasn't the slightest idea" what the entry meant, remarking that "all young people have troubles." Tr. 60, 374–60375.
217. Major Jon L. Lightner, JA, "The McMartin Pre-School Case," JAG School (March 1993), 13.
218. Statement of Cindy and Jacob Dale, November 9, 1983, MBPD.
219. "It came across to me in that moment of time as if the exposure was intentional," she testified. She thought about calling the police but did not do because she "care[d] about the family." State v. Buckey, tr. 58474 (September 12, 1989).
220. State v. Buckey, tr. 58444, lines 18–19 are the quote. Her testimony begins 58440 and includes Buckey's response: "I never wear underwear."
221. State v. Buckey, tr. 40338; State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 3348.
222. Sorenson took great issue with Virginia McMartin's account. See tr. 60084–60085.
223. Sorenson testified that this was the only time he saw Ray "exposed" in this fashion, that he said something to Ray, and that Ray responded he didn't have any clean underwear that day. Sorenson testified he "thought it might just have been a simple mistake." Tr. 60018–60019, 60021. In other words, he gave Ray the benefit of the doubt—at the time. Sorenson later came to a different position and testified for the prosecution.
224. State v. Buckey, Trial tr. 24545–46.
225. State v. Buckey, Second trial, tr. 5008, 5010.
226. Specific details about the divided votes were not announced. The jury foreman reported that the jury was divided eight to four but did not indicate which direction or specify whether the vote was consistent for each of the twelve charges.
227. The jurors spoke at a press conference shortly after announcing their verdicts. Seth Mydans, "For Jurors, Facts Could Not Be Sifted from Fantasies," New York Times (January 19, 1990), A18. This simple, verifiable fact is important in assessing one of the strangest claims in the witch-hunt narrative to be made about this press conference: that jurors' statements should be discounted because they might have been "self-serving" responses to the public criticism they felt after the verdicts had been announced. Ceci and Bruck made this argument, attributing it to an unnamed "close observer" of the trial. Stephen J. Ceci and Maggie Bruck, "Child Witnesses: Translating Research into Policy," Social Policy Reports (Society for Research in Child Development, Fall 1993), 25, fn. 1. This unnamed source did not reconcile this speculation against the fact that the press conference occurred before there were any headlines about the case or even any television programs with outspoken parents as guests. There was actually very little public outcry over the verdict as a whole; but more importantly, the various developments after the verdicts were announced, however they are characterized, are irrelevant to explaining any behavior at the press conference because it came immediately after Judge Pounders dismissed the jury.
228. "McMartin Jury: Prosecution Never Proved Case," United Press International (January 19, 1990), Domestic News Section.
229. Transcript, MacNeil Lehrer News/Hour (January 18, 1990), 8.
230. "The McMartin Jury's Trial," Washington Post (January 20, 1990), A18.

231. Paul Pringlee and Dolores Wood, "Jurors' Quest for Agreement Ends in Futility," Daily Breeze (July 28, 1990), 1.

232. Her license was reinstated by Administrative Law Judge Ronald M. Gruen. In re Peggy Ann B., California Commission on Teacher Credentials (No. L-42932), November 24, 1988.

233. Peggy Buckey was charged with conspiracy as well as child molestation. As reflected in the jury's verdict in the first trial, the evidence for the conspiracy charge was stronger than the evidence of child molestation.

Chapter Three

1. Debbie Nathan, "The Making of a Modern Witch Trial," Village Voice (September 29, 1987), 20.
2. Mark Sauer, "Decade of Accusations: The McMartin Preschool Child Abuse Case Launched 100 Others," San Diego Union-Tribune (August 29, 1993), Part 1, D1.
3. Mary De Young, The Day Care Ritual Abuse Moral Panic, 3.
4. Ceci and Bruck, "Child Witnesses" (emphasis added), 3.
5. Carol Hopkins Press Release. Repeated credulously in Humes, Mean Justice, 572, fn. 76.
6. Paul Craig Roberts, "False Memories, False Prosecutions," Washington Times (January 20, 1998), A12. Roberts asserts that the "Justice Committee has files on some 2,000 innocents whose lives were ruined and families destroyed by the accusation." According to Philip Kaushall, a forensic psychologist in San Diego who took possession of those files after the "Justice Committee" was disbanded, the files represent a survey of prisoners whose claims of innocence have not been independently examined (Kaushall, private communication).
7. There were fifty-one names in the hardcover edition, fifty-four names in the paperback edition. This page was removed from later editions.
8. The San Francisco Examiner published a similar article in 1986, but the focus was not national. A. S. Ross, "Ritualistic Child Abuse? A Presumption of Guilt," San Francisco Examiner (September 29, 1986). Almost all of the cases contained in the article were included in Charlier and Downing's list of thirty-six. Curiously, Charlier and Downing chose to exclude the case in which five members of a Wicca coven "were convicted or pleaded guilty to several hundred counts of sexual abuse involving teen-age boys going back to 1979."
9. See e.g., Jason Fine, "Seeking Evil: The Hell of Prosecuting Satanic Ritual Abuse," California Lawyer (July 1994), 90; Interview, Michael Phillips, Whole Earth Review (December 22, 1998), 104. Alexander Cockburn also relied extensively on the series with utter credulity in "Abused Imaginings," New Statesman & Society (January 1990).
10. Ellen Willis, "As Child-molestation Cases Fall Apart, Who's Watching Now?" (Minneapolis) Star Tribune (June 5, 1995), 5A.
11. See footnote 20, John Earl, "The Dark Truth About the 'Dark Tunnels of McMartin,"Issues in Child Abuse Accusations, Vol. 7 (1995).
12. Denis Brion, "The Hidden Persistence of Witchcraft," Law and Critique (1993); Mary de Young, "Another Look at Moral Panics: The Case of Satanic Day Care Centers," Deviant Behavior (1998).
13. Jeffrey Victor, Satanic Panic: The Creation of a Contemporary Legend (Open Court, 1993): Appendix V, 355–361.
14. Barbara Fister, "The Devil in the Details: Media Representations of 'Ritual Abuse' and Evaluation of Sources," Studies in Media & Information Literacy Education (May 2003), 1–14.
15. Three of the "cases" are presented without a single proper name or related feature that would facilitate any kind of fact checking. The defendant is not named in the Bouse, Arizona, case; nor are the names given of anyone else involved. None of the accused are named in the Atherton, California, case either, or the woman who allegedly accused them. Similarly, there are no identifying features in the Richmond, Virginia, case.
16. Two prominent examples are explained in detail in later chapters: the Kelly Michaels case (Maplewood, New Jersey) in Chapter Five and the Country Walk case (Miami) in Chapter Six.

17. Charlier and Downing, "Patterns Emerge Across Nation," Commercial Appeal (January 1988), A3.
18. Charlier and Downing, "Patterns," A3.
19. Some newspaper articles at the time said the house had been abandoned by LeRoy Freeman. Other reports said a neighbor, who apparently did not know Freeman, resembled him. Chris Evan and Ted Wendling, "Bedeviled Searchers Call It Off," Plain Dealer, June 22, 1985, A1, 14. A 1986 article, however, said Freeman had lived in the house before this person moved in; and it apparently was abandoned by Freeman and later purchased from the bank. See "Fruitless Dig for Victims of Cult Leaves Family Angry," Plain Dealer (July 22, 1986), B2.
20. Jim Sielicki, "General News," UPI (Toledo, Ohio, June 21, 1985, PM cycle).
21. Deputies watched and tape-recorded an outdoor ritual service near the areas searched on April 30, 1985. It was attended by about one hundred people. "The two-hour ceremony featured chanting, but no sacrifices," deputy sheriff Trilby Cashin was quoted as saying. Chris Evan and Ted Wendling, "Hunt Near Toledo Fails to Find Human Sacrifices," Plain Dealer (June 21, 1985), 1, 16A.
22. Arthur Lyons, Satan Wants You: The Cult of Devil Worship in America (Mysterious Press, 1988). These items were also mentioned in newspaper articles at the time. See e.g., Chris Evan and Ted Wendling, "Bedeviled Searchers Call It Off," Plain Dealer (June 22, 1985), A1.
23. "Grandfather, LeRoy Freeman, Is Sentenced for Kidnapping," Plain Dealer (January 31, 1987), B4.
24. Charlier and Downing, "Similar Tales" Commercial Appeal (January1988), A8.
25. Denis Brion, "The Hidden Persistence of Witchcraft,"Law and Critique (1993).
26. Seven cases account for two-thirds of the entries in this table: McMartin, Kern County, Memphis, Niles, Chicago, and two cases never actually discussed in the article; Torrance and Rolling Hills (discussed in Chapter Four of this book), which were near the McMartin Preschool.
27. Interview, Michael Phillips, Whole Earth Review (December 22, 1998), 104.
28. See e.g., J. Frazier Smith, "Child Admits Testimony Lie at Abuse Trial," Cincinnati Enquirer (August 10, 1985), C1; J. Frazier Smith, "Mother Didn't Think Child Was Abused," Cincinnati Enquirer (August 15, 1985), D3; J. Frazier Smith, "Lawyer Saw Mom's Journal as Key," Cincinnati Enquirer (July 24, 1985), C1.
29. Faizah Alim, "'Snuff' Case Thrown Out," Sacramento Bee (October 26, 1985), A1.
30. The licensing proceedings were against Barbara Orr, owner and operator of the Jubilation Day Care Center in Ft. Bragg. I obtained 537 pages of documents on the case from the California Department of Social Services (DSS). Those records indicate that Administrative Law Judge Michael C. Cohn initially issued findings of fact that Orr's niece had "engaged in sexual acts with K.B. a six year old boy being cared for at the facility." (Para V, p. 2.) Decision, In the Matter of the Accusation Against Barbara Orr DBA Jubilation Day Care Center, No. LC 1269-0584, California Department of Social Services, July 30, 1984. Those findings were not contested, the niece was placed in some kind of therapy, and an order was issued prohibiting the niece from having any contact with children at the day care. Orr's license was placed on two-year probation. During this time, the allegations surrounding the case grew and Barbara Orr and her sister were named as potential suspects. Tom Hine, "Ex-Coast Day Care Center Hit by Abuse Charges," (Mendocino) Grapevine (July11, 1985), 3. The DSS files document that therapist Pamela Hudson was a key actor in the case. The earliest investigative document in the file is a letter from Hudson recommending an investigation into possible abuse by the young niece. Letter to Child Protective Services (March 23, 1984, Bates No. 000033). There also typed summaries labeled "Taped Statements by Pamela Hudson" covering three days in January 1985 (Bates No. 000041-42). As her role in the case continued, the claims she reported became stranger. A Mendocino County Sheriff's Report in April 1985 includes details, provided to the Sheriff's Office by Hudson, about a child allegedly hung by a cross and adults allegedly killing animals to scare children (Bates No. 000470). Hudson published a credulous "Survey of Ritual Abuse Cases" in 1988 that counted the Fort Bragg "case" as a ritual abuse case with ten or eleven child victims. But Barbara Orr was never charged with any acts of physical or sexual abuse, only with violating the conditions of her probation.

A hearing that would have presented the evidence for revocation was canceled when Orr voluntarily agreed to a permanent license revocation. Decision and Order, In the Matter of the Accusation Against Barbara Orr, California Department of Social Services, No. LC1269-0584 (December 16, 1985). Her sister was never formally charged with any kind of wrongdoing.

31. Correspondence from Cheryl Hays (Criminal Investigator, Shelby County DA) and W. L. Callicott (Shelby County Sheriff's Office) to Ken Lanning FBI. February 5, 1985; Part I, 4.
32. State v. Ballard, Criminal Court of Tennessee, Thirtieth Judicial District (Case No. 84-04893). Tr. F11: 1357–1374, 1413, 1421, 1436, and 1485.
33. Ballard testified she said "Satan in the name of Jesus and by His shed blood I rebuke you, you have no place in my life." She denied accounts that she told Satan to get out of her body. State v. Ballard, tr. F11:1473.
34. State v. Ballard, tr. A6I: 23. (Chris Brown).
35. Correspondence from Cheryl Hays: Part II, 2.
36. Gail Goodman, et. al., "Children's Religious Knowledge: Implications for Understanding Satanic Ritual Abuse," Child Abuse & Neglect, (1997); 21(11):1111–30.
37. One of the members of a task force that investigated this case testified she and other task force members were instructed by an assistant district attorney to prepare narratives to tape-recorded interviews with the child victims and then reuse the tapes of the interviews of these children so that the tapes would not be available for discovery by the defense. State v. Ballard, 714 S.W.2d 284 (Tenn.Cr.App.1986). The decision to overturn the verdict and remand the case for a possible retrial was upheld by the Tennessee Supreme Court. State v. Ballard, 855 S.W.2d 557 (1993). The case was not retried, charges were dropped and Ballard eventually had her conviction expunged.
38. Interview with Wayne Hargrove: June 16, 1984, by Jackie Allen Hammer.
39. State v. Ballard, tr. C5: 772–775.
40. State v. Ballard, tr. C5: 833, 837; C6: 930.
41. State v. Ballard, tr. C5: 802–803 ("rectum showed a large scar between eleven and twelve and some dilation").
42. State v. Ballard, tr. C6: 784–787, 874, 948.
43. State v. Ballard, tr. A10: 45. (Wayne Hargrove).
44. State v. Ballard, 855 S.W.2d 557 (Tennessee Supreme Court, 1993).
45. David Peterson, "Child Abuse Cases Remain Tricky Terrain," Star-Tribune (October 16, 1994), 14A; "Ten Reasons Why It Happened" [Sidebar], Star-Tribune (October16, 1994), 14A.
46. Minnesota Attorney General, "Report on Scott County Investigations" (February 12, 1985). Popularly known as the Humphrey Report.
47. Philip Jenkins and Daniel Maier-Katkin, "From Salem to Jordan," Augustus, (1986), 9(6): 22.
48. Commission Established by Executive Order No. 85–10 Concerning Kathleen Morris, Scott County Attorney, "Report to Governor Rudy Perpich" (October, 1985). Popularly known as the Olson Commission after the chair, Judge Lynn Olson.
49. Myers v. Morris, 810 F.2d 1437 (8th cir. 1987).
50. Humphrey Report, 9.
51. Ross E. Cheit and Andrea Matthews, "Revisiting the Jordan Minnesota Cases," Roger Williams University Law Review (forthcoming, 2014).
52. Josephine Marcotty, "Bentzes Join Donahue to Talk About Abuse," Minneapolis Star & Tribune (January 16, 1985), 1.
53. Charlier and Downing, "Patterns Emerge," A3.
54. Debra Cassens Moss, "Are the Children Lying?" ABA Journal, (May 1, 1987), vol. 73.
55. Marianne Taylor, "State Calls Sex Abuse Charges Unfounded," Chicago Tribune (October 4, 1984).
56. Lynn Emmerman and Marianne Taylor, "'Expert' in Day-care Probe Can't Back up His Resume," Chicago Tribune (April 19, 1985); Lynn Emmerman and Marianne Taylor, "Day-care Probe Rife with Errors," Chicago Tribune (April 21, 1985).
57. There was no transcript made for appeal because the case ended in an acquittal. Under Illinois procedures, the original stenographic record stays with the court reporter, even when the person retires. We were able to locate only one of the two court reporters from this case and accordingly could have only portions of the proceedings converted to hard copy.

58. Report of Proceedings, State v. Parks, Cook County Circuit Court, Second Division, Case No. 84C5544, September 23, 1985. Tr. 20–21.
59. As reported in Robert Enstad, "Doctors Saw 'Possible Abuse' of Pupil," Chicago Tribune (September 24, 1985).
60. Medical Report on Sophie Voigt. Jeffrey Grabenstein, M.D. (May 8, 1984).
61. Medical Report on Sophie Voigt, 2.
62. Supplemental Report, Polygraph Tech. Walsh, Chicago Police Department, RD#F 133–047 (April 15, 1984).
63. Quoted in Gary Wisby, "Janitor Not Guilty in Rape of Girl, 7; Parents Bitter," Chicago Sun-Times (October 3, 1984), 16.
64. Robert Enstad, "Janitor Cleared of 1 Sex Charge; 'I Have No Choice,' Judge Says." Chicago Tribune (October 3, 1985).
65. Lisa Leff, "Howard County Sex Abuse Trial Starts Today," Washington Post (March 16, 1987), 1. Charges in the original case were dropped "after the teenager was placed in a psychiatric hospital and ordered to stay away from the school." The county settled financially with families for failing to handle the complaint adequately.
66. Theresa E. Grace (children taken upstairs to Craig's office "three or four times a week") tr. 3–162; Theresa Louise Weyer ("we would send [disciplinary cases] up to Mrs. Craig's office" about five times a week) tr. 3–177–78; Shannon Kelly ("if the kids did something wrong we were to send them up to her office") tr. 3–189.
67. Karen Almonte, tr. 4–114. Cynthia Miller testified that the "usually gentle" Craig was "cold and angry" with children who were disruptive, and that she "did not understand" why Craig insisted on taking children upstairs. Tr. 4–141, 143.
68. Lisa Leff, "Child, Experts Cited in Craig Conviction," Washington Post (April 3, 1987), C1.
69. Maryland v. Craig, Dr. Shubin, tr. 2–170, 2–173.
70. There was considerable testimony about Craig obsessing over a "dowel stick" that was missing from a toy. The stick would be consistent with the injuries described by Dr. Shubin, who testified there was "remarkable consistency in patterns to these four injuries and each of them the genital tissue had an object rammed into it with enough force to cause an injury that we can see healed scars from." State v. Craig, Trial transcript, vol. VI (March 23, 1987), tr. 21.
71. Maryland v. Craig, Exhibit 5–15.
72. Maryland v. Craig, tr. VI-56 to 58.
73. Maryland v. Craig, 497 U.S. 836 (1990).
74. China Myers, "Jamal Craig Innocent in Child Abuse Case," Baltimore Afro-American (August 1, 1987): 1,2. The headline of this article conflates having charges dismissed with a finding of innocence.
75. Complaint, Washington Department of Social and Health Services, 1978. The doctor is described on the complaint as "Dr. Burham," without any designation of his first name. In none of the voluminous materials I located about this case was this doctor's name listed in full.
76. Cora Priest deposition, T.R. v. Cora Priest's Day Care, 1994.
77. Call for Service Report, Sequim Police Department, 1985.
78. Psychological/Psychiatric Evaluation of Ralph Priest, Washington State Department of Social and Health Services, 1985.
79. Issues in Child Abuse Accusations, 4(1), 32–44. 1992. Underwager and Wakefield use a pseudonym for Ralph Priest, but the facts match this case, and Hollida Wakefield confirmed by email correspondence that the case was Cora's Day Care and they were employed by the insurance company.
80. Charlier and Downing, "Legal Soundings Hit Same Depths from Case to Case," Commercial Appeal (January 1988), A15.
81. "Abuse Charges Against Day-Care Center Dropped," Seattle-Post Intelligencer (April 22, 1987).
82. Deborah Bybee and Carol T. Mowbray, "An Analysis of Allegations of Sexual Abuse in a Multi-Victim Day-Care Center Case," Child Abuse & Neglect (1993), 17: 774.

83. Unpublished opinion, State v. Barkman, Michigan Court of Appeals (September 13, 1988). The trial judge had applied a standard interpretation of the "rape shield" law to prevent inquiry into a complainant's sexual history. The defense wanted to inquire about an allegation the boy allegedly made about abuse by Rebecca Barkman.
84. "Probation Term Ends Smallworld Molestation Case," UPI (June 11, 1990, BC cycle). In announcing this deal, chief county prosecutor Dennis Wiley acknowledged that some parents were "not happy with the outcome." At the same time, he emphasized "the inherent problems in trying to resurrect a case that is now six years old."
85. There were also children who were never involved in the civil or criminal processes who apparently made disclosures concerning sexual abuse. The MDMH Report indicates that 62 children made explicit disclosures, meaning there were 24 such children who were not involved in civil or criminal proceedings. Their absence in any proceedings is impossible to interpret without further information. The MDMH report is based on "case records" documenting 1,393 official contacts with 106 children and their families. Bybee and Mowbray, "Analysis," 772.
86. MDMH report, viii.
87. A nine-page "Summary of DSS Records on Small World Victims," presumably prepared as part of the civil litigation, describes each child in brief. One child (H.C.) said, among other innocuous things, that "during lunch they took chickens to the farm" (2). This child did not say anything that indicated she had been sexually abused. Another child (M.P.) said "Richard hurt chickens and would cut their wings off." This boy also said that Richard went "potty" on his face behind the baseball diamond and there was "white stuff" on his face. There may have been more fantastic claims about chickens, but they did not characterize the case enough for there to be any reflection in a summary of each child.
88. Bybee and Mowbray, "Analysis," 774.
89. Subject Report, State of Michigan Department of State Police, Complaint No. 53-3736-84 (December 6, 1984), 4.
90. Mediation Summary, Risenhoover v. Small World Pre-School, Berrien County Circuit Court, Case No. 84-3573-NO-2 (September 2, 1986), 21.
91. Mediation Summary, Risenhoover v. Small World Pre-School, 21–23.
92. Newsweek (July 8, 1985). See also January 1986 Redbook; and David Hechler, The Battle and the Backlash: The Child Sexual Abuse War (Macmillan, 1989). None of these secondary sources are the primary source for any claims in this section. I obtained 490 pages of documents from the FBI investigation through the Freedom of Information Act, along with original documents saved by several sources at the time, including documents connected to the civil litigation.
93. Charlier and Downing, "Patterns Emerge," A3.
94. Emergency Care and Treatment (Medical Report) by Dr. David Suttle, July 27, 1984.
95. That is what the administration appears to have done in 1983 when an army employee, convicted in a court martial of killing a child, was given a dishonorable discharge but did not serve any time in jail. See Memorandum from Col. Richard E. Eckert, M.D., Chairman, Child Protection Case Management team to the Superintendent, West Point Military Academic, Subject: Appeal for Command Support on Child Abuse (8/1/83).
96. Memorandum from FBI NY to Director of FBI, November 23, 1984, 2.
97. Quoted in Redbook, 142.
98. The perpetrator was apparently Jeanette Martin's fourteen-year-old son. Newspaper stories indicate the boy was adjudicated in confidential proceedings in Family Court. He testified in the criminal trial that he raped the three-year-old at his mother's direction.
99. Dr. Jeffrey Gilbert's testimony about these findings is on transcript pages 11773–11789.
100. "Victims' Testimony Key to Child-Abuse Cases," New York Times (February 15, 1987).
101. Andrew Blum, Regional News, UPI (March 12, 1987).
102. People v. Watt, 84 N.Y.2d 948; 644 N.E.2d 1373 (Court of Appeals of the State of New York, 1994).
103. Members.shaw.ca/imaginarycrimes/jameswatt.htm. Quotation from "Victims' Testimony Key to Child Abuse Cases," New York Times (February 15, 1987).

104. New York Times (July 21, 1985) and New York Times (October 31, 1985). The fact that six children contracted venereal diseases was also mentioned in an Associated Press story that appeared in newspapers across the country in the end of March 1986. See e.g., "Testimony of Children Key in Trial," Charlotte Observer (March 31, 1986), 6A.
105. Quote from "Imaginary Crimes" website, which mentions that Watt tested negative for venereal disease but omits the fact that the test was ordered so long after the events that Watt's own lawyer argued, before the court order, that the "test was not relevant." UPI, August 2, 1985 (AM cycle).
106. Judith Levine, "Abuse of Justice," Women's Review of Books (June 1996), 8.
107. The twelve cases are (alphabetically) Figured/Hill, Friedman, Halsey, Malcom, Parkers, Perkins, Runyan, Schildmeyer, Smith, Souzas. Toward, and Watt.
108. One simply does not appear on the page claimed (Wilcox); the other (the Kellers) appears in a single phrase (where they are called the Kellners) not containing any facts about the case.
109. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 246.
110. The list includes Nancy Smith but not her co-defendant, Joseph Allen, who was implicated in the same case. Similarly, it includes Jenny Wilcox, but not her co-defendant Robert Aldridge. Since these cases are never discussed in the book, it is impossible to ascertain whether those distinctions were intentional or accidental. The convictions for both Smith and Allen have withstood post-conviction judicial challenges; as this book was being completed both were initiating petitions to the state clemency board. The convictions of Aldridge and Wilcox were set aside by a presiding judge in a proceeding where that remedy had not even been requested. The state chose not to appeal this unusual ruling. Although Aldridge and Wilcox claimed vindication from the outcome, this claim is contradicted by the outcome of their civil claim for damages. That case, which involved witnesses who were not present when the criminal charges were dismissed, resulted in a judicial decision specifically citing evidence of guilt. Before concluding that "the evidence fails to support their claims" for wrongful imprisonment, Judge Gregory J. Frost made a point of stating, quite bluntly, "the court is convinced that the plaintiffs engaged in criminal conduct, at least in relation with V. P. and C. B., for which the plaintiffs were initially charged." Accordingly, he concluded that "the evidence fails to support their claims" for wrongful imprisonment and he assessed costs against the petitioners, Aldridge and Wilcox. Judgment Entry, Aldridge v. Ohio, Case No. 98-0774, Court of Common Pleas, Montgomery County, Ohio.
111. Two of the four were major day-care cases: Amirault and Edenton. Both require extensive research. I have done much of that research for Amirault and some of the necessary research for Edenton. I plan to write about one or both in the future. The other two cases (Perkins and Souzas) were not day-care cases and they did not involve ritual abuse. I plan to write about one or both of those in the future as well.
112. My view is tentative because I have been unable to arrange for transcription of the four-day hearing that resulted in the decision described in footnote 110. The decision relies on the assessment of two witnesses whose testimony is critical to analyzing the case. The court reporter no longer has the stenographic tapes. The hearing was more than ten years ago, and state law requires stenographers to keep such records for only ten years. Nor have I been able to obtain the trial transcript from the case discussed in footnote 115.
113. The Wright articles were published in the New Yorker on May 17 and 24, 1993. Wright expanded those articles into a book called Remembering Satan (Knopf, 1994). This view of the case has been called into serious question in Karen A. Olio and William F. Cornell, "The Façade of Scientific Documentation: A Case Study of Richard Ofshe's Analysis of the Paul Ingram Case," Psychology, Public Policy, and Law (1998), 4: 1182.
114. Gardner relied entirely on newspaper accounts to support his conclusion that the jury was "gullible." But his summary of those accounts omitted these two sentences from one story: "A Rutherford County doctor who examined the boy said it was the worst case of sexual abuse he had seen in 25 years. Another Rutherford County doctor who examined the girls said they also showed signs of sexual abuse." Times-News on February 3, 1994. Testimony cited in the state's appellate brief indicates that one boy's "anus muscles were so stretched that he had severe problems with bowel control."

115. This case is particularly unusual because the court's copy of the transcript either is missing or is the one the defense lawyer has in his possession; moreover, the original court reporter (who is duty-bound to save the underlying materials) says she threw them away. The reluctance of the defense lawyer to provide me with access to the transcript, while working on an appeal, is understandable; his duties are to his client. But this speaks volumes about what assurances Snedeker had that his clients would be protected by Nathan's writing.
116. The local broadcast can be viewed here: http://youtu.be/Y2cSpKPY1XM.
117. Detective Perez was criticized for being a foster parent to the initial children who made charges in the case, which could give rise to a conflict of interest. Perez was also criticized for pressuring and coercing other children. Mike Barber and Andrew Schneider, "Detective a Man Who Charmed, Harmed; Trouble Follows on and off Job," Seattle Post-Intelligencer (February 23, 1998), A7; "With Every Step, Rights Were Trampled," Seattle Post-Intelligencer (February 25, 1998). In the Everett case, the first in the cluster of Wenatchee cases, the Court of Appeals of Washington eventually ordered the Chelan County Superior Court to conduct a hearing to determine whether the state's investigative techniques improperly influenced the statements and testimony of M.E. and her sister D.E. After six days of testimony, the court "found it likely that M.E.'s and the other children's statements were obtained by the State's use of improper interrogation techniques." The Court of Appeals concurred with this decision, citing evidence that Detective Perez had "refused to believe the children when they denied abuse," and Idella Everett's testimony that she was "bullied by Detective Perez" and that Perez "implied that he would harm" her child. The Court of Appeals concluded that "the evidence of Detective Perez's tactics is sufficient on its face to support a finding of impropriety." In the Matter of the Application from Relief from Personal Restraint of Harold E., Court of Appeals of Washington, Division Three, Panel Seven (September 15, 1998). 1998 Wash. App. LEXIS 1351.
118. [Sidebar] "Kern's Long List," in "Stolen Innocence, Part II," Bakersfield Californian (January 28, 1985).
119. Edward Humes, Mean Justice: A Town's Terror, a Prosecutor's Power, a Betrayal of Innocence (Simon & Schuster, 1999).
120. Maggie Jones, "Who Was Abused?" New York Times Magazine (September 19, 2004).
121. Humes, Mean Justice, 265. Nathan and Snedeker's chapter on the Bakersfield cases is called "Beginnings: Mary Ann Barbour."
122. Dr. Squyres testified that when she informed Deborah McCuan that her daughter had been sexually abused, McCuan responded "I don't believe that" and said she felt the injuries could have been caused by falling on a fence. State v. Kniffen, tr. 2666.
123. In the Matter of Darla and Bobbie McCuan. Report of Social Service Worker, 10.
124. The April 4, 1979, Medical Report by Dr. Fred Miller, Valley Medical Clinic, People's Exhibit No. 47, is discussed by Dr. Carol Squyres at tr. 2654–2663. The 1979 report indicated: "large ecchymosis with no hematoma. Edema of the labial area. No cuts or abrasions seen." Tr. 2657–2658. In lay terms, Bobbie was black and blue in the labia area of the vagina. The lack of cuts or abrasions is why Dr. Squyres concluded those injuries were "not consistent" with falling on a fence. Tr. 2662. The four hundred pages of testimony by Dr. Squyres is not cited or acknowledged by Humes or Nathan and Snedeker, who wrote about the case in some detail. (Nathan and Snedeker obliquely mention "early findings in the case" without any citation or details. Satan's Silence, 188.)
125. Dr. Squyres testified that when she informed Deborah McCuan that "a fall" could not have caused the injuries she observed in 1980, McCuan "was not happy with what I said and had nothing more to say and hung up." Tr. 2666. Nevertheless, in a version of the Kniffen-McCuan case that she prepared for a class at McGill University, Bruck characterized Deborah McCuan as "concerned enough to follow-up by getting counseling for her daughter." She provided no documentation for this characterization. Bruck, "Kern County Assignment," Psychology 204-438A (The Child Witness) McGill University (1997).
126. Crime or Incident Report, Kern County Sheriff's Office, KC 81–41195 (October 20, 1980), 3.
127. Ruling on Evidentiary Hearing in Habeas Corpus Matter, In re the Matter of Scott and Brenda Kniffen, Kern County Superior Court, No. HC 5528 A (August 12, 1996).

128. Decision and Findings of Fact, Ruling on Evidentiary Hearing in Habeas Corpus Matter, In re the Matter of Scott and Brenda Kniffen, Kern County Superior Court, No. HC-5528-A (August 12, 1996) 4.
129. Humes, Mean Justice, 271.
130. State v. Kniffen, Dr. Woodling testimony (September 15, 1983), tr. 623–625.
131. Joyce Adams, et. al.: "Guidelines for Medical Care of Children Who May Have Been Sexually Abused." Journal of Pediatric & Adolescent Gynecology (2002) 20:163–172 See also text and accompanying footnote 135.
132. There are no references in the medical literature to Dr. Paul's "lateral traction test," described at tr. 10410–10411. Nor do any accepted medical protocols call for inserting fingers to test anal tone, described at tr. 10326. The results of such a "test" would be too subjective. Dr. Paul's testimony contains many other dubious statements. He employed several terms that do not appear anywhere in the medical literature, including "frenulum" and "vaginal bulge."
133. Judge Stuebbe also noted "there is disagreement over whether Woodling observed dilatation of over 12 mm" (9). One would need to obtain the slides to allow an independent medical assessment of this disagreement. Those slides were created by a colposcope—the device that Nathan condemns.
134. Humes claims that Barbour had engaged in "two years of amateur gynecological examinations," noting the defense asserted on appeal that Barbour may have caused the injuries. Humes, Mean Justice, 266–267. There is no evidence in the trial transcripts to support these assertions, also made by Nathan and Snedeker, which likely explains why the only citation is to a defense brief. Humes, 555, 48. Briefs are not findings of fact; to the contrary, they tend to involve assertions about the facts, sometimes linked by citations to actual evidence in the case. The assertions about Barbour do not include this kind of support.
135. Adams et. al., "Guidelines," 166.
136. Squyres, tr. 2643. She also observed Gardnerella and interpreted it as evidence of sexual activity. Though that is possible, Gardnerella can also be caused by poor hygiene or be an unexplained finding in a non-abused child.
137. The slides were entered as exhibits at trial, but they are not part of the permanent record. I was unable to obtain them and therefore could not arrange for an independent medical assessment of this testimony. Such an assessment could have shed light on the testimony about anal fissures. It is not clear from the testimony whether Dr. Squyres saw fissures, which would be an indication of abuse, or normal folds.
138. Squyres, tr. 2860.
139. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 189.
140. Judge Stuebbe said: "It is clear that the families of the petitioners have used their own techniques to 'adjust' the stories told by the Kniffen boys over the years." He went on to find: "The Kniffen boys themselves have changed their stories so many times, both before and after adulthood, both orally and in writing, that present testimony is found to be an indecipherable mix of memory, wish, remorse and guilty." Ruling on Evidentiary Hearing, 3.
141. Ruling on Evidentiary Hearing, 6.
142. People v. Stoll, 49 Cal. 3d 1136 (1989, reversing the convictions against defendants Grafton and Palomo, upheld by the Court of Appeal).
143. "The Myth of the Sex Offender Profile," Center for Sex Offender Management, http://www.csom.org/train/etiology/3/3_1.htm#backtrack2.
144. People v. Stoll, 49 Cal. 3d 1136 (1989) at 1163. (Lucas, C.J. dissent).
145. Self v. State, Petition for Writ of Habeas Corpus, Case No. HC-10529A, Kern County Superior Court, Metropolitan Division. March 10, 2008.
146. Gretchen Wenner and James Burger, "County Settles Overturned Molestation Suit for $5.5 Million," Bakersfield Californian (September 15, 2009). "It doesn't come out of anyone's budget," the county's chief deputy counsel is quoted as saying. The settlement was paid entirely by insurance money. The article also indicates that Stoll's lawyers acknowledged that Stoll's son has never recanted his claim.
147. Justice Committee Press Release posted by Carol Hopkins, circulated to "Fellow Witchhunters" on the Witchhunt List on September 12, 1995. Subject: Help on Kern County Cases.

148. De Young cites an internet-based account called "Frame Up Through Fantasy" as her source for concluding that Grant Self's conviction should have been overturned. She labels this source "an exposé," without providing any independent analysis. This is another example of the witch-hunt narrative growing and expanding through easily available, but unreliable, "information" on the web. De Young, The Day Care Ritual Abuse Moral Panic, 232, fn. 2.
149. Maggie Jones, "Who Was Abused?" New York Times Magazine (September 19, 2004).
150. State v. Self, Supplemental Clerk's Transcript on Appeal, DCA No. F037537, California Court of Appeal, Fifth Appellate District. July 18, 2000.
151. People v. Manners, 180 Cal. App. 3d 826, 225 Cal. Rptr. 798 (1986).
152. People v. Manners (1986).
153. In an account of the case circulated on the WITCHHUNT-List, Nicholas Peters states that Self "continued to rent the pool house" after he moved to live with his girlfriend and her children, in order "to comply in form with the terms of his parole." Peters asserts that Stoll was not aware of his parole status, or presumably of the fact that Self was not actually living in the pool house. Nicholas Peters, "Frame Up Through Fantasy." Revised version posted to Witchunt-L on April 15, 1997.
154. OCRT cite http://www.religioustolerance.org/ra_baker.htm.
155. There were apparently photographs in more than just the 1979 case. An evaluation report prepared in 2000 states: "He denied ever taking picture of children, other than those in 1979. He said since they had pictures showing him engaging in sexual activities, he can't deny he did it, although he said he doesn't recall doing it." WIC 6600 Evaluation Report on Grant Self, June 5, 2000, 53. The report constitutes 32–68 of the Supplemental Clerk's Transcript on Appeal, People v. Self, Fifth Appellate District of California (DCA No. F037537).
156. WIC 6600 Evaluation Report on Grant Self, June 5, 2000, 54.
157. Lois Henry, "Kern County Settles Last of Molestations Conviction Suits," Bakersfield Californian (March 26, 2013).
158. Judgment, State v. Self, Case No. 125187FE (Oregon Circuit Court, Jackson County) (July 17, 2013), 1–3.
159. For details about his case see, Kathy Freeman, "Photos of Sex Acts Freeze the 'Moment' for Child Molester," Bakersfield Californian (January 30, 1985). See also testimony of Dr. Robert Halon, who was called by the defense in a 1999 hearing but testified that Bishop told him "there wasn't anything wrong with" adults having sex with children. Reporter's Transcript, State v. Bishop, California Fifth Appellate District (March 2, 1999), tr. 104.
160. Humes, Mean Justice, 286. See also People v. Pitts, 223 Cal. App. 3d. 606 (1990). By 1994, all six of the children connected to this case had reportedly recanted. Pitts v. County of Kern, 17 Cal. 4th 340; 949 Cal. Rptr. 2d 823; 1998 Cal. LEXIS 21 (1998), 345–346. The Pitts and the McCuans are the only ones named in a March 2013 story in the Bakersfield Californian who did not succeed in collecting any money from the county through civil suits. I have not examined the case against George and Anthony Cox but Humes, who criticized many of the child sexual abuse prosecutions in Kern Conty from that time, described the evidence against them as "compelling." Humes, Mean Justice, 486. The Coxes succeeded in having their convictions overturned, however, and were part of a multi-million dollars settlement with the county. Lois Henry, " Kern County Settles Last of Molestations Conviction Suits," Bakersfield Californian (March 25, 2013).
161. Jay Matthews, "In California, a Question of Abuse," Washington Post (May 31, 1989), D1.
162. Commonwealth v. Baran, 74 Mass. App. Ct. 256, 265, fn. 11 (2009).
163. One-page document, stamped "Patient Allergic to Penicllin," without date or heading, containing Baran's name, birthdate, and notations for visits as an adolescent.
164. In the competency hearing on January 18, Angela B. gave incorrect answers to many questions about the difference between truth and a lie. Her direct testimony on January 25 was even less responsive. In a five-page exchange in the transcript, she refuses to "promise to tell what really happened" or answer questions, saying only that "she doesn't like it." Commmonwealth v. Baran, 85–827, tr. 175–80.
165. Competency Hearing, Commonwealth v. Baran (January 18, 1985), tr. 25.
166. Mehegan, "Firm Convictions," Boston Globe (October 1, 2000).

167. Commonwealth v. Baran, 2006 Mass. Super. LEXIS 393 (June 16, 2006, granting a new trial) affirmed by Commonwealth v. Baran 2009 Mass. App. LEXIS 652 (May 15, 2009). Charges were subsequently dismissed. See also, Ross E. Cheit, "The Blight of the Baran Case," Berkshire-Eagle (July 16, 2004).
168. JoAnne Marez, "BI Mother Testifies 4-year-old Was Abused," The Sun (October 1, 1986), 6.
169. State v. Runyan, Kitsap County Superior Court, Washington (No. 85-1-00463-7).
170. Mark Pendergrast, Victims of Memory: Sex Abuse Accusations and Shattered Lives (Upper Access Book, 1996), 387.
171. JoAnne Marez, "Day Care Operator Convicted of Rape, Sexual Abuse." The Sun (January 18, 1986), 1. See specifically State v. Runyan, tr. 1668–9, 1681–2, 1709.
172. "Woman Gets 13-year Term for Sex Abuse," Spokesman Review (March 13, 1986), A13.
173. JoAnne Marez, "Day Care Operator's Attorney Suddenly Withdraws," The Sun (March 5, 1986), 1.
174. Unpublished Opinion, State v. Runyan, Washington Court of Appeals (Division Two) (No. 9719-2-II) (July 8, 1998), 8.
175. Unpublished Opinion, State v. Runyan, 5.
176. The decision requiring the Superior Court hearing is In the Matter of Personal Restraint of Debbie Runyan, 121 Wash. 2d 432, 853 P.2d 424 (Washington Supreme Court, 1993).
177. Quotes in both sentences from JoAnne Marez, "Girls Says She Saw Children Tied Up," The Sun (January 16, 1986), 2.
178. Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, Judge Rosanne Buckner (signed October 13, 1995), State v. Runyan (No. 85-1-00463-7), 3. See also Order Denying Defendant's Motion to Vacate the Conviction on Count Three (October 18, 1995).
179. Transcription, "Frame by Frame: 'Capturing the Friedmans' Workshop," October 18, 2003 (New York City), 11, 20. Jarecki has always said he stumbled into the sexual abuse story after approaching David Friedman—Arnold's son and Jesse's brother—to make a film about birthday clowns. If Jarecki's story is true, it would be interesting to know how Nathan became "an intermediary," why it was even necessary, what she did in that role, and why it was never fully disclosed.
180. Jarecki told an audience in New York: "I generally don't mention his name just because, I don't know. I just don't. He's not in the film because he didn't want to be in the film." Transcription, "Frame by Frame," 32. Note: when the movie was later released on DVD there was an "extra feature" that included Goldstein.
181. Friedman post-conviction motion, 25.
182. Sharon Waxman, "Victims Say Film on Molesters Distorts Facts," New York Times (February 24, 2004; "Asked repeatedly by The Times whether he knew of a lie-detector test that Jesse Friedman took and failed while he protested his innocence in the 1980's, Mr. Jarecki said he did not. But in an interview on a Web site, Mr. Jarecki spoke in detail about the lie-detector test, saying he considered it inconclusive.").
183. "What Was Left Out? A Critique of 'Capturing the Friedmans'" http://youtu.be/qjYWOZgMbHQ.
184. Nathan, "Ritual Child Cases Need Investigation." Witchhunt post (May 28, 1994).
185. Jesse Friedman later claimed he gave this interview because he thought it would help improve his treatment in prison. I have never heard of anyone, before or after this assertion, claim that admitting one is a child molester would somehow be useful in prison.
186. The Conviction Integrity Review covered this issue in detail, including a full-page reproduction of a hand-written statement by Jesse Friedman on February 6, 1989 admitting that "against the advice of my attorney, Peter Panaro, Esq." that "I will voluntarily appear on the Gerlado Rivera show." "Conviction Integrity Review," 44–46.
187. As described in Paul Vitello, "Interesting, But Not Quite Accurate," Newsday (July 23, 2003), A8.
188. Jesse Friedman protested on his own website, created after the film, that the computers in the classroom "were not loaded with pornographic video games. They were on five inch floppy disks in a file box." http://www.freejesse.net/component/content/article/2-regular-page/23-faqs (In answer to "What about the pornographic computer games?").
189. Corey Kilgannon, "Hypnosis Rigged Sex Case Against Him, Man Says," New York Times, October 20, 2007.

190. Affidavit of Joyce W. Parks, Ph.D., People v. Friedman, April 14, 2004.
191. Transcript of Motion, Friedman v. Rehal (October 3, 2007), tr. 12.
192. Waxman, "Victims Say Film on Molesters Distorts Facts."
193. Affidavit of Andrew Jarecki, People v. Friedman, paragraph 4.
194. Friedman v. Rehal, 618 F.3d 142 (2d Cir. 2010) (stating there was a "reasonable likelihood" that Friedman was wrongfully convicted).
195. Nassau County District Attorney, "Conviction Integrity Review: People v. Jesse Friedman," June 2013. The full report and a 917-page appendix are available at www.nassauda.org.
196. Conviction Integrity Review, 37–39 (discussing the evaluation by Dr. David Pogge, a psychiatrist and a specialist in the psychopathology of teenage sex offender diagnosis); 116–118 (discussing the statements of Howard Friedman). It should be noted that whether or not one finds Howard Friedman's hearsay statement persuasive, it would not be admissible in a criminal case.
197. Conviction Integrity Review, 83–86. The Review Team indicated that the filmmakers "were not forthcoming with evidence under their control" and that although Jarecki promised to provide access to information he claimed "would greatly impact the re-investigation," that he never shared key interviews, including those with Jesse Friedman and Ross Goldstein. (153).
198. One of the reasons the review team found the recantation unreliable is that it was contradicted by notes from a conversation between Goldstein and Marc Smerling, a producer of Capturing the Friedmans, who was trying to convince Goldstein to appear in the movie. Smerling told Goldstein "we have found quite a bit of exonerating stuff" and Goldstein characterized such evidence as "completely untrue" and said that he could not help Jesse. Goldstein was "unable to explain" these statements when he later recanted. Conviction Integrity Review, 137. (Notably, the filmmakers did not provide the notes of that conversation to the review team.) The report also details how Goldstein's recent recantation is contradicted by statements from Witness 29, a close friend of his from sixth grade through high school. See 140–143.
199. "Statement of the Friedman Advisory Panel," iii. This statement is included as a preface to the report.
200. "Subject of Oscar-nominated 'Capturing the Friedmans' vows fight for exoneration will go on," Associated Press (June 25, 2013).
201. Presentence and Intake Report, Washington Department of Correction. January 5, 1988, 2. Exhibits 23 and 25 in Clark County Prosecuting Attorney's Office Opposition to the Petition for Clemency by Marilynn Rose Malcom (August 15, 1997).
202. Interview and Contact Summary, Office of the Clark County Sheriff, MC #593, 3. Exhibit D in Petition for Clemency by Marilynn Malcom (August 15, 1997).
203. Interview and Contact Summary, Office of the Clark County Sheriff, MC #593, 3. Exhibit D in Petition for Clemency by Marilynn Malcom (August 15, 1997).
204. Testimony of Dr. Brigitte Mengelberg, Exhibit H in Petition for Clemency by Marilynn Malcom (August 15, 1997).
205. Utility Report, Clark County Sheriff's Office, MC #593 (April 20, 1987), 2. Contained within Exhibit D in Petition for Clemency by Marilynn Malcom (August 15, 1997).
206. Brief of Appellant, Malcom v. State, No. 11735-5-II (Washington Court of Appeals; September 19, 1988), 3.
207. Psychological/Psychosexual Evaluation of Marilynn Malcom (December 7, 1987), 8. Exhibit 25 in Clark County Prosecuting Attorney's Office Opposition to the Petition for Clemency by Marilynn Rose Malcom (August 15, 1997). There was additional evidence of Malcom's dishonesty in court records. Her bail was revoked after she violated the stipulation that she live at the residence of Cheryl Ducett, a professional counselor. Ducett called the court after Malcom went missing for a week. She then told prosecutors: "Now I believe she (Lynn, the defendant) has a sociopathic personality disorder." She stated further that "based upon the things she has learned about Lynn Malcom since she took responsibility for her, that she no longer wants to take responsibility for her care." Motion and Affidavit for Bench Warrant, State v. Malcom (August 18, 1987), 2.

208. Marilynn Malcom, "Clemency Denied," The Columbian (September 26, 1997), B8. ("The report by Dr. Steve Jensen was not accepted by Judge Dean Morgan.")
209. Paragraph 4, page 2, specifically states, "This finding is based upon the combined factors of two psychological reports corroborated by the facts presented at trial." Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, State v. Malcom (No. 87-1-00339-6).
210. Unpublished opinion, State v. Malcom, Washington Court of Appeals (February 13, 1991).
211. Clark County Prosecuting Attorney's Office Opposition to the Petition for Clemency by Marilyn Rose Malcom, August 15, 1997, 19.
212. Affidavit of Scott Campbell Re: Attempt to Interview Jane Malcom. State v. Malcom. August 8, 1997. 2. Exhibit 28 in Clark County Prosecuting Attorney's Office Opposition to the Petition for Clemency by Marilynn Rose Malcom (August 15, 1997).
213. Minutes of Meeting of September 5, 1997. Clemency and Pardon Board, Office of the Governor, State of Washington, 11.
214. Affidavit of Kevin Malcom, Exhibit 9 in Clark County Prosecuting Attorney's Office Opposition to the Petition for Clemency by Marilynn Rose Malcom (August 15, 1997), 2 (lines 16–20).
215. Affidavit of Rebecca Neville, Exhibit 8 in Clark County Prosecuting Attorney's Office Opposition to the Petition for Clemency by Marilynn Rose Malcom (August 15, 1997), 1, 3.
216. Minutes of Meeting of September 5, 1997. Clemency and Pardon Board, Office of the Governor, State of Washington, 16.
217. Jill Taylor, "Shocking Actions Raised Suspicions About Glendale, Parents Testify," Palm Beach Post (June 13, 1989), 1B. See also Complaint Affidavit, Stuart Police Department (February 29, 1988), attachment, 1.
218. Complaint Affidavit, Stuart Police Department (February 29, 1988), attachment, 2.
219. Complaint Affidavit, Stuart Police Department (February 29, 1988), 3.
220. Jill Taylor, "Downfall of an 'English Gentleman,'" Palm Beach Post (January 15, 1989), 1A.
221. Jill Taylor, "Prospective Toward Juror to Be Witness, Clerk Says Child-Sex Suspect Bought Polaroid Camera," Palm Beach Post (June 1, 1989), 1B.
222. Taylor, "Prospective Toward Juror," 1B.
223. Jill Taylor, "Police Search for Videos in Child-Sex Case," Palm Beach Post (January 5, 1989), 1B.
224. Taylor, "Police Search for Videos," 1B.
225. Jill Taylor, "Glendale Case Settled Before Trial,"Palm Beach Post (June 5, 1996), 1B.
226. In "Another Look at Moral Panics," De Young states that she included only cases where "there are sufficient archival data in the form of court transcripts, legal briefs, investigative reports, interview transcript, and local and national news articles to assess the case" (259). The bibliography for this article does not cite any court transcripts, legal briefs, investigative reports, or interview transcripts from the Toward case. Since the newspaper coverage alone is insufficient for concluding that this was a false conviction, it is unclear on what basis De Young assessed the case and reached this conclusion.
227. "Glendale Montessori School Case Resurfaces," False Memory Syndrome Foundation Newsletter (Spring 2008) 17(2), 3–8. These snippets constitute the vast majority of an article that has fourteen footnotes, but there is not a single footnote for the interview. This interview is not part of the public record. Without additional information it is impossible to check its accuracy or context.
228. Transcript of Proceedings for Change of Plea and Sentencing, State v. Toward, Martin County Circuit Court, Florida (Case Nos. 88-927-CF, 88-926-CF, 88-285-CF, June 14, 1989).
229. Meredith Maran, My Lie: A True Story of False Memory (Jossey-Bass, 2010), 214–216. There is no indication in the book that Maran posed any questions about the safety deposit box, the cowboy hats, the character evidence, or the reports to the child abuse registry before the case broke. Demonstrating her nonjournalistic approach, Maran later told an interviewer how much she admired Toward's "courage" and hoped her "meetings with Mrs. Toward over the past year" had lent her "a bit of strength." Interview by Margaret Renki (www.chapter16.org).
230. Exhibits D and E, In re: The Commitment of James Toward, Martin County Circuit Court (Petition No. 99-0517-CAR) July 19, 1999.
231. http://ra-info.org/faqs/ra-convictions/.

232. Hubert, C. (1989). "Day-care Abuse Stuns Iowa Town."Daily Herald, December 4.
233. State v. Schildmeyer, tr. 327–337.
234. Unpublished opinion, State v. Schildmeyer (Court of Appeals of Iowa). December 27, 1990, 2.
235. Unpublished opinion, State v. Schildmeyer, 5–7.
236. Correspondence from Virginia Barchman, Assistant Attorney General, Iowa Dept. of Justice, to James Nussle, Delaware County Attorney, August 13, 1990, 1.
237. Unpublished opinion, State v. Schildmeyer, 8.
238. Allison Hall, "DCI Joins Child-abuse Investigation," Des Moines Register (October 12, 1989), 1M.
239. Correspondence from Virginia Barchman, 2.
240. Correspondence from Virginia Barchman, 4.
241. Front page, Witch-Hunt Information Center. Hosted while Jonathan Harris was affiliated with MIT at web.mit.edu/afs/athena.mit.edu/user/h/a/harris/.../witchhunt.html.
242. State v. Figured, 116 N.C. App. 1; 446 S.E.2d 838 (Court of Appeals of North Carolina, 1994). This opinion was upheld by the North Carolina Supreme Court. 339 N.C. 617, 454 S.E.2d 261 (1995). The court recently upheld, without a published opinion, the dismissal of Figured's effort to appeal his conviction post-conviction. 718 S.E.2d 404 (November 9, 2011).
243. State v. Figured, Trial tr. 511–520.
244. State v. Figured, Trial tr. 524.
245. State v. Figured, Trial tr. 585–608.
246. Gary Cartwright, "The Innocent and the Damned,"Texas Monthly (April 1994), 22(2): 100.
247. Keller v. State, No. 3-92-603-CR and No. 3-92-604-CR, Court of Appeals, Third District of Texas (October 26, 1994), slip opinion, 2.
248. State v. Keller, November 17, 1992, Trial tr. 167.
249. State v. Keller, November 17, 1992, Trial tr. 184, lines 16–17.
250. The substance of this paragraph comes from that story. See Denise Gamino and Pamela Ward, "Speaking the Unspeakable: Nightmares of Fran's Day Care Stalk Families," Austin American-Statesman, December 13, 1992, 1.
251. The case was included on a "Conviction List" of "Ritual Abuse cases" compiled by Believe the Children. The single citation provided to support the claim is the lengthy newspaper article after the criminal case was over. The list is still on the Web at http://ra-info.org/faqs/ra-convictions/.
252. Denise Gamino, "5-year-old Testifies in Day-care Abuse Case," Austin American-Statesman (November 19, 1992), 1.
253. Pamela Ward, "Charges Dropped in Child Abuse Case," Austin American Statesmen, B1 (quoting Assistant D.A. Byran Case that "it was not a prosecutable case").
254. Keller v. State, Court of Appeals, Third District of Texas, 2.
255. Nash v. Keller, Fourth Amended Original Complaint (September 29, 1995), 53rd Judicial District, Travis County Texas, No. 93-10045, 2.
256. "Difficult Child Abuse Line," editorial, Austin American-Statesman (January 12, 1988), A6.
257. Cartwright, "The Innocent and the Damned," Texas Monthly (April 1994).
258. Cartwright, "The Innocent and the Damned."
259. Jordan Smith, "Believing the Children,"Austin Chronicle (March 27, 2009).
260. Jonathan Harris, "Ritual Abuse Is Alive and Well in Western Massachusetts," posting to Witch-hunt list on June 10, 1994.
261. More information about this and many other details of the case are elaborated in Cheit, "Legend of Robert Halsey."
262. Commonwealth v. Halsey, Trial tr. 4:626.
263. The National Center for Reason and Justice, http://ncrj.org/robert-halsey/.
264. State v. Smith, 1996 Ohio App. LEXIS 241 (Court of Appeals of Ohio, January 24, 1996); State v. Allen, 1996 Ohio App. LEXIS 385 (Court of Appeals of Ohio, February 7, 1996). The testimony about the 1985 child rape was allowed because there were striking similarities to the allegations in the Head Start case. Allen had "parties" for the girl, and he tied her up before sexually assaulting her.
265. They were entered as State Exhibits 3 and 9, respectively, at trial.

266. The proceeding was based on the defense claim that the judgment of conviction had never been made final because it did not contain an explicit statement of the "manner of conviction"—that the defendants had been found guilty by jury. Judge Carr, in a dissent that agreed with the outcome of the appellate court, reasoned that this claim "elevates form over substance to a new level" and that since it was apparent to the defendants "and to anybody who glanced at the record" that the conviction was by jury, the resentencing hearing itself was improper. The majority of the court simply found that the resentencing judge had no authority to vacate the sentences. State v. Allen, 2010 Ohio 2990 (Court of Appeals of Ohio, Ninth Judicial District, June 30, 2010).
267. State v. Allen, 128 Ohio St. 3d 442; 2011 Ohio 1838 (2011).
268. Smith served approximately fifteen years in prison. Visiting Judge Virgil Sinclair resentenced her to twelve years, meaning that Smith would not return to prison. Smith agreed, as part of this deal, not to sue for wrongful imprisonment. Brad Dicken, "Deal Means Nancy Smith Will Remain Free," Chronicle-Telegram (June 4, 2013).
269. Kaylee Remington, "Parole Board Votes Against Pardon for Nancy Smith," Morning Journal (August 9, 2013). That recommendation was passed on to Governor John Kasich who had not made a final decision when this book was being copy edited.
270. Brad Dicken, "Joseph Allen Cuts Deal for Reduced Prison Sentence," Chronicle-Telegram (October 2, 2013); Kaylee Remington, "Head Start case: Joseph Allen Sent Back to Prison," Morning Journal (October 1, 2013). The recommendation against Allen's clemency petition was passed on to Governor John Kasich who had not made a final decision when this book was being copy edited.

Chapter Four

1. See, e.g., Pamela Freyd, "Problem Is with Priorities, Not Denial," Letter to the editor, Toronto Star (September 28, 1996), C3.
2. De Young, "Another Look at Moral Panics," 260.
3. Debbie Nathan, "Sex, the Devil, and Day Care," Village Voice (September 29, 1987), 23.
4. Richard Beck, "Willis and Happiness,"n + 1 (November 18, 2011).
5. Debbie Nathan, "What McMartin Started," Village Voice (June 12, 1990).
6. The Kniffen and McCuan cases in Kern County definitely predated McMartin. The charges were brought in 1982. But Charlier and Downing tagged the Kern County cases with a June 1984 date, corresponding to the charges in a much later case, and placed McMartin first.
7. Mitchell Landsberg, "Daycare Teacher Charged with Sex Abuse," Philadelphia Inquirer (May 11, 1983), A2.
8. "Convicted Child Abuser Waives Hearing on Similar Felony Charges," UPI (September 25, 1981, BC cycle).
9. "Ex-School Operator Gets Term in Facility for Sex Offenders," Philadelphia Inquirer (April 27, 1984).
10. "Charges Filed in Niles Twp. Day-Care Case," Detroit Free Press (October 2m 1984), 8C. Guilty plea indicated in Berrien County Justice System Public Access Defendant History Report, Person ID: 40001533. Accessed June 15, 2000.
11. Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Judgment, Iowa v. Warnock, Iowa District Court for Polk County Criminal (November 5, 1982). Warnock was charged again in 1991 with sexually abusing young children in her care. State investigators found "as many as 10 cases of possible abuse" but most of the children were too young to testify. There were evidence problems in the case, including a defective search warrant, and charges were dropped in exchange for her "agreement to follow a judge's order and stop caring for children without their parents present." Lane Beauchamp, "Child Abuse Charges Dismissed Against Day-care Operator," Kansas City Star (February 4, 1992), A10. Associated Press, "Parents Ask for Help of Officials to Reopen Miller County case," Kansas City Star (February 5, 1992), C6.
12. Gregory Byrnes, "N.J. Man Charged in Child Abuse," Philadelphia Inquirer (October 17, 1981), B3. See also "Sex Crime Children Abuse Sentence," Philadelphia Inquirer (April 27, 1984), B2.

13. UPI, Domestic News; San Diego, California (November 4, 1982, BC cycle). Hetherington's parole eleven years later received more widespread publicity. See e.g., Judi Villa, "Arizona Rejects Child Molester; California Con's Request Refused," Arizona Republic (February 10, 1994), B1.
14. Regional News: New Mexico, UPI (June 23, 1982, BC cycle); Regional News: New Mexico, UPI (February 18, 1983, AM cycle).
15. Lorraine Bennett, "Child Abuse Probe Reveals Litany of Injury, Deprivation,"Los Angeles Times (December 8, 1981), 3, 18–19.
16. Nathan and Snedeker, 279, fn. 70. (Criticizing Waterman et. al. because their study "lumps children and parents in its Manhattan Beach sample to those from a verified sexual-abuse case from another state.")
17. "Sex and Satan." [Interview with Debbie Nathan.] The Guide (May 1996).
18. Finkelhor and Williams, Nursery Crimes: Sexual Abuse in Day Care (Sage, 1988).
19. Finkelhor and Williams, Nursery Crimes, 17–20.
20. Finkelhor and Williams, Nursery Crimes, 61–63.
21. In Jeopardy in the Courtroom, Ceci and Bruck are dismissive of the study of 270 cases because, in their words, it includes "many" cases where there was no "hard evidence" (27). The authors then point to the McMartin and Michaels cases as their proof.
22. All quotes from Seering v. Department of Social Services, 194 Cal. App. 3d 298; 239 Cal. Rptr. 422 (Court of Appeal of California, First Appellate District, 1987).
23. State v. Walter, Change of Plea (San Diego Municipal Court, Department No. 18, Case No. F91843).
24. Frederick Crews letter, New York Review of Books (January 12, 1995).
25. Fischer v. Walter, Verified Petition of Guardian Ad Litem for Compromise of Disputed Claim of Minor (Case No. 585495), 4–5.
26. "Day Care Operators Face Abuse Charges," Miami Herald (April 6, 1985), 2D. See also State v. Mitchell, Judgment of Guilt Placing Defendant in Community Control, filed March 26, 1986. (Case No. CRC85-03645CFANO-D).
27. Proposed Decision, In the Matter of Bo Peep Day Care Nursery, Maryland Department of Health and Mental Hygiene (Docket No. 88-M-028) (August 23, 1988), 3.
28. Proposed Decision, In the Matter of Bo Peep Day Care Nursery, 7.
29. Proposed Decision, In the Matter of Bo Peep Day Care Nursery, 38.
30. Maryland Department of Human Resources v. Bo Peep Day Nursery, 565 A.2d 1015, 1021 (1989).
31. UPI, Regional News (June 9, 1988).
32. The decision was not about the underlying merits; indeed, the court of appeals assessed costs against the state for devoting so much time to the substantiality of the evidence "despite the fact that neither the circuit court nor Bo Peep has questioned the revocation order on that ground" (1032).
33. Lisa Perlman, "Boy Tells Court How He Molested Preschoolers, Then Threatened Them," Associated Press (March 29, 1990, a.m. cycle).
34. National Center for the Analysis of Violent Crime, Investigator's Guide to Allegations of "Ritual" Child Abuse (FBI Academy, Quantico, Va., January 1992).
35. Daniel Goleman, "Proof Lacking for Ritual Abuse by Satanists," New York Times (October 31, 1994). The headline is explained by the fact that the report found no evidence of such abuse being perpetrated by organized groups.
36. Goleman, "Proof Lacking."
37. Goleman, "Proof Lacking."
38. Utah Attorney General's Office, Ritual Crime in the State of Utah: Investigation, Analysis & A Look Forward, (Prepared for the Utah State Legislature, 1995), 3.
39. Utah Attorney General's Office, Ritual Crime."
40. FBI, Investigator's Guide, 18.
41. A. S. Ross, "Satanism or Mass Hysteria?" San Francisco Examiner (September 28, 1986).

42. Post to Witchhunt list, HFJustice (July 30, 1999). Fishman, whose email address matches the witchhunt post, is listed as a "national forensic consultant in the areas of child custody, abuse and neglect" in Missouri on a website called Child Abuse Defense Kit. http://cadkit.tripod.com
43. The "Similar Tales" sidebar in their series includes tattooed man or woman; activities in basement; assaults during naptime or trips to bathroom; children choked, pinched, or physically abused; foreign objects inserted in rectum or vagina; Barbie dolls; nude games.
44. "Man Convicted of Torturing 14-year-old Boy," Associated Press (August 19, 1998, AM cycle). An appellate court upheld the conviction, finding specifically that there was sufficient evidence to constitute "cruel abuse or torture" as required by statute. Ohio v. Dillard, 1999 Ohio App. LEXIS 2546 (July 23, 1999).
45. "Parents Charged with Torturing Their Children," Associated Press (November 25, 1991).
46. Commonwealth v. Gaddis, 432 Pa. Super. 523; 639 A.2d 462 (Superior Court of Pennsylvania, March 22, 1994).
47. Sue Carlton, "Sextons Face Another Charge," St. Petersburg Times (June 23, 1994).
48. Unpublished opinion, People v. Wilkins (Division One, Fourth Appellate District Court of Appeal) No. D007162 (Super Ct. No. CR85004) Lori Elizabeth Bartz was co-defendant.
49. Bill Callahan, "El Cajon Woman Sentenced to 48 Years; Used Satanism in Sex Abuse of Children," San Diego Union-Tribune (March 26, 1988), B1.
50. Unpublished opinion, People v. Wilkins, 14.
51. Trial Brief, State v. Ball, Case No. 14750-C (Sonoma County Superior Court), 1.
52. Trial Brief, State v. Ball, 5 (describes a five-year-old boy who "was unable to testify beyond direct so the People requested that he be dismissed and his testimony was then stricken from the record.")
53. Nurse Practitioner Gail Jackson testified to evidence of chronic anal penetration, penetration of hymen consistent with sexual abuse, anal scarring, and other marks consistent with repeated penetration by a foreign object. Preliminary hearing transcript summarized in Trial Brief, 5.
54. Change of Plea, State v. Ball and Thrailkill (Reporter's Transcript of Proceedings of Monday June 6, 1988), Court No. 14750-C (Sonoma County Superior Court).
55. Clark Mason, "Thrailkill a Sexual Predator," Press Democrat (September 9, 1998).
56. One verified case of cult activity involving the sexual abuse of children emerged in October 1983, when police raided the headquarters of the Neo-American Church in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. Material seized in the raid demonstrated that the cult, run by George Feigley, believed that "you were closest to God at the point of sexual climax." A four-year-old boy and three girls (ages four, five, and sixteen) were placed in foster care after "hundreds of pictures were found showing the sexual abuse of children." William Heineke, "Authorities Say Cult May Have Used Children in Sex Rituals," Associated Press (November 23, 1983). Feigley was convicted of raping three girls and served twenty-five years in prison. He was released without restrictions in 2008 because his crimes predated sex-offender registration requirements. Robin Acton, "'70s Child Rapist Freed Without Restrictions," Pittsburgh Tribune Review (August 16, 2008). Another verified case of sexual abuse in an organized context involved the "Zion Society" in Utah, a self-proclaimed "secret society" governed by Arvin Shreeve, who convinced his followers that children in the group should be involved in the sexual practices that he preached. Twelve adults in this polygamous cult were charged with felonies involving child sexual abuse. Shreeve pleaded guilty to sodomy and child sex abuse charges in 1991. "Alleged Cult Leader Pleads Guilty to 4 Sex-Abuse Counts," Salt Lake Tribune (November 7, 1991), B3. At least ten other cult members later pleaded guilty. More recently, an investigation of a break-in at an animal shelter in Murray, Kentucky—where two puppies were mutilated and their body parts taken—led police to a group known as the "Vampire Clan," which committed a series of crimes with satanic overtones. Sondra Gibson, thirty-five, pleaded guilty to enticing a fourteen-year-old boy into having sex during a blood-sucking initiation rite known as "crossing over." Rod Ferrell pleaded guilty to two counts of murder. Mike Schneider, "Vampire Cult Leader Pleads Guilty," Associated Press (February 5, 1998). See also for example, Judgment on Jury Verdict of Guilty, State v. Rogers, Cause No. 18,738 (91st District, Eastland County, Texas), December 14, 1992 (Indecency with a Child Younger than 17 Years, Committed During the Court of a Ritual); Lisa Roose Church, "Man Gets 24 Years for Satanic-ritual Rape of 10-year-old Girl," Tennessean (September 30, 2000).

57. See Lawrence A. Stanley, "The Child Pornography Myth," Playboy (September 1988). Cited with approval in Jenkins, Moral Panic, 272; Levine, Harmful to Minors, 37–38; Kincaid, Erotic Innocence, 326; Best, Threatened Children, 224.
58. Debbie Nathan, "Justice in Wenatchee," New York Times (December 19, 1995), A25.
59. This case is discussed in Chapter Three, 126.
60. This case is discussed in Chapter Three, 123–26.
61. People v. Meacham (California Court of Appeals; Second Appellate Division, Division Three) 152 Cal. App. 3d. 142, 199 Cal. Rptr. 586 (1984).
62. "Teacher Sentenced for Abuse," Washington Post (February 16, 1984), C2; Rosa Michnya, "Ex-Daycare Teacher Held on New Charges," Washington Post (May 10, 1983), C5.
63. Curtis Morgan, "Afraid for the Children Parents May Have Trouble Responding to Abuse," Miami Herald (March 11, 199), 11.
64. Steve Rothaus, "Legal Mix-Up Aided Child-Porn Suspect; Preschool Owner Paid $200 and Left Hawaii," Miami Herald (February 5, 1990), 1B. See also Order of Probation, State v. Shaver, Circuit Court, 17th Judicial Circuit, Broward County, Florida (Case No. 90-2105) August 21, 1991.
65. Order of Probation, State v. Shaver, Circuit Court of the 17th Circuit in and for Broward County, Florida. Case No. 90-2105. Filed August 21, 1991. (Guilty plea to one count of sexual performance by a child.)
66. Renee Graham, "Parents Used Day Care Knowing It Was Illegal,"Boston Globe (December 23, 199).
67. Patricia Nealon, "Arlington Man Is Sentenced for Sexual Assault of Two Girls," Boston Globe (September 16, 1992), 20.
68. "Coast Inquiry Is Pressed into Child Sexual Abuse," New York Times (April 1, 1984).
69. Carol McGraw, "Child Smut Business Going Underground; Grows Uglier as Customers Trade Children, Not Just Pictures, Police Say," Los Angeles Times (September 16, 1985), Part I, 3.
70. Stanley's article won an award from the Free Press Association in 1989. Debbie Nathan presented him with the award. See David Hechler, "Awkward Award," Columbia Journalism Review (September/October 1990).
71. Stanley is described as "publisher of Uncommon Desires" in a story describing a warrant for his arrest in Canada for allegedly sexually abusing a girl under the age of fourteen. Gene Mustain, "Man-Boy Love Lawyer Wanted in Girl Abuse," Daily News (September 21, 1995), 34. For additional information see the WCBS news report, digitized at http://youtu.be/kcVTCfkCAXk. Stanley was later convicted in absentia in a Dutch court for sexual abuse of three girls, ages seven to ten. In 2002, he was arrested on child pornography charges in Brazil. Robert Stacy McCain, "Porn Lawyer Charged in Brazil Girls Case," Washington Times (July 24, 2002). The popular Brazilian magazine Epoca reported, after a four-month investigation, how Stanley "produces, publishes and markets" photos of nude girls age six to thirteen, "controlling an international network of child pornography." http://blog.newtonpaiva.br/pos/wp-content/uploads/2013/02/E3-SI-20.pdf.
72. For a recent example of this tactic, see http://blogs.brown.edu/recoveredmemory/2013/02/09/ncrj-reveals-itself/.
73. See e.g., Transcript, (n.d.) [Likely summer 1995] Francis interview with Stephen Ceci about the Christchurch case in New Zealand (for "Assignment" David McLoughlin, a television program), 11 ("this case has the same constellation of ingredients that ninety-plus percent of mass allegation crèches cases have . . . there is this air of accusation").
74. "Children Were Swapped for Sexual Abuse, State Alleges," Los Angeles Times (August 4, 1984).
75. Richard Wexler, Wounded Innocents, 147.
76. Child number four's mother indicated the daughter of a neighbor had recently "become hysterical about going to the Peninsula Montessori School." This child was not on the list supplied by Krikorian. See Decision, In the Matter of the Application Against Claudia Krikorian, Department of Social Services, State of California, September 30, 1985, para. 23 (informing the man that he was a suspect "was an irresponsible act on the part of the respondent" and "may have resulted in the destruction of incriminating evidence"), para. 25 (refusing to provide names and class schedule was "irresponsible" and constituted a failure to cooperate with the sheriff).

77. Declaration of Susan McGirt, State v. Krikorian (November 14, 1984), 3.
78. Decision, In the Matter of the Application Against Claudia Krikorian, 4.
79. Decision, In the Matter of the Application Against Claudia Krikorian, 7.
80. Declaration of Susan McGirt, State v. Krikorian (November 14, 1984), 9.
81. Medical Report—Suspected Child Abuse, Re: Montessori, Harbor UCLA Medical Center (June 22, 1984), 1, 2.
82. Decision, In the Matter of the Application Against Claudia Krikorian, 4.
83. "Molestation Suits Settled," Los Angeles Times (October 20, 1987).
84. Tim Waters, "Judge Drops Molestations Charges," Los Angeles Times (December 7, 1985), A1, 8.
85. One child in the preliminary hearing in the McMartin case testified about witnessing satanic rituals at the church including black robes and drinking blood.
86. Faye Fiore, "Men Confess Molestations—Too Late to Prosecute," Daily Breeze (October 18, 1985).
87. Lois Timnick, "Police Appeal for Help in Pre-School Case," Los Angeles Times (November 1, 1984), D3.
88. Decision, In the Matter of the Accusation Against Claudia Krikorian, No. LD-1539-0215. Department of Social Services, State of California (December 12, 1985).
89. Announcement of Intended Decision, Krikorian v. Department of Social Services, No. SW-C-82343, Los Angeles Superior Court (June 30, 1986).
90. Bob Williams, "Abuse Cases Ebb," Los Angeles Times (May 12, 1988), V20.
91. Bob Williams, "McMartin Fallout Eases,"Los Angeles Times (May 1, 1988), R4.
92. Greenup's first trial ended in a mistrial with nine jurors voting for conviction and three for acquittal. Jurors were at odds over Greenup's "intent in placing [girls] on his lap and caressing them." "Mistrial Declared in Molestation Case," Los Angeles Times (May 15, 1986). Jurors in the second trial heard expert testimony about how Greenup had altered a key piece of evidence in the case, a large green chair. Paul Feldman, "Jury Convicts Ex-Teacher in Molestations," Los Angeles Times (April 3, 1987). The "political witch-hunt" claim stemmed from the media appearances that District Attorney Robert Philibosian made when the case was originally filed. At sentencing, Greenup's lawyer argued for lenience in part because his client had "shown remorse." Terry Pristin, "Teacher Gets 36 Years for Molesting Girls," Los Angeles Times (May 5, 1987).
93. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes to a Jail Cell: Child Abuse and the Abuse of Justice," Harper's (May 1990), 56.
94. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes," 56.
95. "Name Confusion Causes Woes for Clifton Daycare Center," The Record (August 25, 1985), C3.
96. The Country Walk case is the subject of Chapter Six. The Snowden case involved two separate criminal trials and cannot easily be summarized. From research to date, I think there are many reasons to doubt the witch-hunt narrative about this case, but those arguments require detailed elaboration and documentation. This case will be the subject of a future publication.
97. Jane Daugherty, "Boy, 2, Believed Attacked at Temple,"Miami Herald (August 7, 1984), 1B.
98. Miami Beach Police Department Report Supplement, Complaint No. 84-25307, May 6, 1984 (indicating that one suspect was deceptive in his polygraph exam); Polygraph Report, Miami Beach Police Department Report Supplement, Complaint No. 84-25307, May 25, 1984 (indicating that the second suspect scored "conclusive of deception" on his polygraph exam); Miami Beach Police Department Report Supplement, Complaint No. 84-25307, May 16, 1984 (describing victim identifying the primary suspect).
99. Nery Ynclan, "Care Center Shut in Spanking Probe,"Miami Herald (August 24, 1984), 1D.
100. Nery Ynclan, "Judge Says Child Care Center Can Reopen Despite New Claim of Child Sexual Abuse," Miami Herald (September 15, 1984), 2B.
101. Jane Daughterty, "HRS Seeks Psychiatric Tests for 2 Daycare Operators," Miami Herald (October 25, 1984), 2B.

102. Jane Daugherty and Christopher Wellisz, "Daycare Operator Is Charged with Molesting Girl, 4," Miami Herald (July 17, 1985) 1B.
103. Jay Ducassi, "State Is Dropping Child Abuse Case,"Miami Herald (August 20, 1985) 1B.
104. "Former Day Care Operator Cleared in Civil Suit over Alleged Abuse," Miami Herald (April 1, 1989) 2B.
105. Dorothy Rabinowitz, "Kelly Michaels Orwellian Ordeal," Wall Street Journal (April 15, 1993) A15.
106. Martie Barnes, "Mass. Continues to Get Reports of Day Care Abuse," Boston Globe (January 20, 1985).
107. Recommended Decision, Office for Children v. Wingard, Division of Administrative Law Appeals (Docket N. OFC-8640), Commonwealth of Massachusetts, July 31, 1985, 13.
108. John J. O'Connor, "'Amelia' on ABC, A Movie About Incest," New York Times (January 9, 1984).
109. Ralph Blumenthal, "Freud: Secret Documents Reveal Years of Strife," New York Times (January 29, 1984), C1.
110. Jenkins, Pedophile Priests, 91.
111. Masson, Assault on Truth, 35.
112. John Caffey, "Multiple Fractures in the Long Bones of Infants Suffering from Chronic Subdural Hematoma," American Journal of Roentgenology (August 1946) 56: 163–173.
113. "Subtle inferences to that effect could be drawn by experienced clinicians." John Rust, "No Easy Answers: Why the Word of Children Aren't Convicting their Abusers," Los Angeles Daily Journal (April 28, 1986).
114. C. Henry Kempe et. al., "Battered-Child Syndrome," Journal of the American Medical Association (July 1962) 181(1):17–24.
115. Lynn Sacco, "Sanitized for Your Protection: Medical Discourse and the Denial of Incest in the United States, 1890–1940," Journal of Women's History (Autumn, 2002), 14(3).
116. Judith Herman, Father-Daughter Incest (Harvard University Press, 1982).
117. Dianna Russell's book Secret Trauma: Incest in the Lives of Girls and Women concluded that the true incidence rate of incestuous abuse was about one in six women. If that is true, then the one-in-a-million claim would be off by a factor of 166,000. Nathan has criticized Russell's survey for having "extravagantly broad definitions" because it includes "even distant relatives" and did not exclude "botched attempts." Nathan, "The Ritual Sexual Abuse Hoax"; Nathan, "Cry Incest." It is not clear how many cases Nathan thinks would be eliminated by excluding "distant relatives" or why she would think those should not count as incest. But her quibbles about definitions distract from the magnitude of the original error. Even if we assume her objections would eliminate half of the reported cases, then the old estimate of incest prevalence would still be off by a factor of 83,000.
118. Linda Gordon, Heroes of Their Own Lives: The Politics and History of Family Violence, Boston 1880–1960 (Viking Press, 1988).
119. Estelle Freedman, "'Uncontrolled Desires': The Response to the Sexual Psychopath, 1920–1960," Journal of American History (June 1987), 102.
120. Roland C. Summit, "The Child Abuse Accommodation Syndrome," Child Abuse & Neglect (1983), 7: 177–193.
121. Coleman's remarks are summarized in detail on pp. 150–169 of Paul and Shirley Eberle's book The Politics of Child Abuse (1986).
122. Charles Krauthammer, "Defining Deviancy Up," New Republic (November 22, 1993): 20–25.
123. Patrick Boyle, Scout's Honor (Prima Publishing, 1994).
124. Barry Siegel, A Death in White Bear Lake (Bantam, 1990).
125. Richard Firstman and Jamie Talan, The Death of Innocents (Random House, 1997).
126. Marjie Lundstrom and Rochelle Sharpe, "Getting Away with Murder: Easy to Kill a Child—and Bury the Secret," Gannett News Service (December 12, 1990). This story won the 1991 Pulitzer Prize for National Reporting.
127. Jenkins, Moral Panic, 10.
128. Carla Van Dam, How Child Sexual Molesters Groom Adults to Gain Access to Children (doctoral dissertation, Union Theological Institute, 1996). See also "Techniques of Deception," chap. 3 in Anna Salter, Predators: Pedophiles, Rapists, and Other Sex Offenders (Basic Books, 2003).

129. William Nack and Don Yaeger, "Who's Coaching Your Kid?" Sports Illustrated (September 13, 1999).
130. Richard Hoffman, Half the House (Mariner Books, 1996). See also "Ex-coach, 68, Gets Jail Time for Molesting Four Boys," Philadelphia Inquirer (August 23, 1996).
131. Nathan, "Making of a Modern Witch Trial," 20.
132. Prosecutor cited in Charlier and Downing. Van Dam, How Child Sexual Molesters Groom Adults.
133. State v. Kelly, Superior Court Division, Pitt County, North Carolina (July 21, 1991). File Nos. 91-CRS-4250-4363, Vol. LXVII, tr. 15185.
134. One study documented the average wait between cessation of abuse and disclosure to be fourteen years. Roesler and Wind, "Telling the Secret: Adult Women Describe Their Disclosure of Incest," Journal of Interpersonal Violence (1994) 9, 327.
135. Stephen Fried, "Boy Crazy," Philadelphia (October 1987).
136. Fried, "Boy Crazy."
137. Charles Walston and Ralph Ellis, "Broken Trust," Atlanta Journal-Constitution (August 20, 1995): H5. Remarkably, West's name has appeared on at least one "false conviction" list—without any explanation. C. Ronald Huff, Martin Killias, Wrongful Conviction: International Perspectives on Miscarriages of Justice (Temple University Press, 2008), 25, fn. 5.
138. Calvin Trillin, "Outdoor Life," New Yorker (August 11, 1986).
139. Trillin, "Outdoor Life," 66.
140. Susan Duerksen, "Health Professionals Reluctant to Report Abuse, Study Finds," San Diego-Union Tribune (January 19, 1990), A–16.
141. Joe Dirck, "Another Abuse Tale: Author Loses Gamble on Boys Scouts and Pedophilia," Plain Dealer (July 17, 1994), 10J.
142. Christopher Wellisz and Gelareh Asayesh, "Cops Assail School in Abuse Probe," Miami Herald (April 23, 1988), 1A.
143. Carolyn Pesce, "Town Grapples with Dirty Little Secret; Male Teacher Abused Boys, Parents' Trust," USA Today (November 19, 1990) 3A.
144. "Sex Case Teacher Gets 20 Years' Jail," Herald Sun (November 16, 1990).
145. "Montana Teacher Molested Generations of Students," Associated Press (November 25, 1990, BC cycle.)
146. Mary Hargrove and Susan Roth, "Preying on Pupils," Arkansas Democrat-Gazette (September 8, 1996).
147. [The Gardner contribution] Amicus Curiae Brief for the New Jersey Council of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry [in State v. J.Q.], n.d. [circa summer 1992], 12. Dr. Gardner sent me this document; the words "The Gardner contribution" are handwritten on the first page.
148. Allison Klein, "Family's Ordeal Nearly Over," Miami Herald (November 17, 1997), 1B.
149. Bittenbender is the central character in Patrick Boyle's 1994 book Scout's Honor, which provided the first public account of the Boy Scouts' "confidential files." Files on 231 leaders banned from scouting for sexual misconduct were obtained in connection with a civil suit involving a Reston, Virginia, youth who was molested by Bittenbender in the early 1970s. Infant C. v. Boy Scouts of America, 239 Va. 572, 391 S.E. 2d 322 (1990). Bittenbender was convicted of charges involving sexual conduct with three members of that scout troop. The book details later abuse by Bittenbender in Wilmington, Delaware, and in Rhode Island. Boyle, who interviewed Bittenbender many times in prison, writes that "Carl is candid about many acts of abuse, most of which are not on the public record" (329). Boyle, Scout's Honor, 81–95, 113–123.
150. Charlier, "Prosecutors Honing Edge in Duel of Reforms, Right," Commercial Appeal (January 1988), A12.
151. Nathan, "Making of a Modern Witch Trial."
152. Dove v. Texas, 768 S.W. 2d 465 (March 31, 1989). The trial judge ruled that charges involving other children had to be tried separately, but evidence concerning some of those children was admitted in the case. There was never a trial involving any of the charges concerning other children. Those charges were eventually dropped.
153. Susan Krohn, "Parents: Presidio Day Care Probe Inadequate," UPI (April 19, 1988); see also, "Third Presidio Tot Has Venereal Disease," UPI (August 14, 1987).

154. Cheryl McCall, "The Cruelest Crime," Life (December 1984): 35.
155. Affidavit in Support of Probable Cause, Palm Beach County, November 23, 1988 (88-15245CF).
156. Affidavit in Support of Probable Cause, Palm Beach County, December 12, 1988 (88-217661); Affidavit in Support of Probable Cause, Palm Beach County, December 12, 1988 (88-217663). (Affidavit 88-217662 was not in the materials that I obtained on this case.)
157. The Investigative Decision Summary states that "medical evidence corroborates molestation" and "credible statements" were given to a pediatrician, two psychologists, law enforcement, "and this investigator." Abuse Report (Report No. 88-086445), Florida Protective Services System, 6.
158. Presentment, In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Circuit Court, Fifteenth Judicial Circuit; Palm Beach County) March 17, 1989.
159. Glenn Collins, "The Child's Word Isn't Enough," New York Times (July 11, 1983), B4.
160. California Jury Instructions—Criminal 10.37 (as it existed in 1984). This specific section has a different meaning now, although the section is still about sex offenses.
161. The California Supreme Court ruled that this instruction was inappropriate, in People v. Rincon-Pineda, 14 Cal. 3d 864 (1975).
162. People v. Algarin, 166 A.D.2d 287; 560 N.Y.S.2d 771 (Supreme Court of New York, Appellate Division; 1990).
163. Maryland v. Craig, 497 U.S. 836 (1990). The Confrontation Clause also became a significant argument in the Amirault cases. In 1995, Judge Robert A. Barton granted a motion for a new trial based on the argument that the seating arrangements in the original trial violated the Confrontation Clause. Commonwealth v. Amirault, 4 Mass. Legal. L. Rep. 245; 1995 Mass. Super LEXIS 434 (August 25, 1995). The Massachuetts Supreme Judicial Court vacated that order. Commonwealth v. Amirault, 424 Mass. 618, 677 N.E.2d 652 (1997).
164. Maryland v. Craig, 497 U.S. 836, 110 S. Ct. 3157 (1990).
165. Harry Stein, "Presumed Guilty; the Charge of Sexual Abuse of Children Is the Dirtiest, Deadliest Trick in Divorce Court,"Playboy (June 1992), 74.
166. William Tucker, "The Effect of Victim Age and Gender on Prosecutor's Willingness to Prosecute Cases of Child Sexual Abuse." Unpublished undergraduate thesis, Brown University, 2004.
167. Matthew Brelis, "Lynn Officer Charged with Abusing Girl," Boston Globe (March 17, 1989) 1.
168. State v. Curlew, 459 A.2d 160; 1983 Me. LEXIS 644 (1983).
169. Michael deCourcy Hinds, "Delaware Case Shows Difficulty in Proving Child Sex-abuse," Chicago Tribune (November 22, 1992), 11.
170. Mary Hargrove, "The Courtroom Ordeal," Miami Herald (November 7, 1993), 28A (Part of Stolen Innocence series).
171. Paul Wilkes, "Unholy Acts," New Yorker (June 7, 1993), 77.
172. The conviction was upheld on appeal. Commonwealth v. Provost, 418 Mss. 416, 636 N.E.2d 1312 (1994).
173. "Details Given in Prosecutor Sex Abuse Case," Detroit Free Press (January 13, 1983), 3A.
174. John F. Harris, "Va. Girl Who Leaped in Train's Path Wrote of Sex Abuse Fear,"Washington Post (July 31, 1986), C1.
175. Suzanne M. Sgroi, "A National Needs Assessment for Protecting Child Victims of Sexual Assault," Introduction to Anne Wolbert Burgess, et. al., Sexual Assault of Children and Adolescents (Lexington Books, 1978).
176. Martin John Costello, Hating the Sin, Loving the Sinner: The Minneapolis Children's Theatre Company Adolescent Sexual Abuse Prosecutions (University of Minnesota, 1987).
177. "Children's Theatre Founder Accused of Molesting 3 Boys," New York Times (April 19, 1984).
178. Hating the Sin, 90.
179. Hating the Sin, 103.
180. Hating the Sin, 146.
181. Brawley and Smist, "Convicted Child Molester Reaping Strong Support from Norman Church," The Oklahoman (June 30, 1985).

182. Grant, "Support for Child Molester Angers Family," Citrus Times (July 3, 1994), 1.
183. Personal correspondence from Richard A. Gardner, M.D., to Professor Ross Cheit (August 21, 1995).
184. Ross E. Cheit and Erica Goldschmidt, "Child Molesters in the Criminal Justice System: A Comprehensive Case-Flow Analysis of the Rhode Island Docket (1985–1993)," New England Journal on Criminal and Confinement (1997), 23(2): 267–301.
185. "Probation for Child Molester," Philadelphia Inquirer (October 30, 1983), A4.
186. "Gold Gets Probation in Fondling of Child," New York Times (October 21, 1983).
187. Kathleen O'Steen, "Sex Offender Gets Probation as Mom of Victim Protests," Los Angeles Daily News (June 15, 1984).
188. John Corry, "4-part Series on Child Sexual Abuse,"New York Times (September 17, 1984), C18.
189. Barbara E. Smith and Sharon Goretsky Elstein, ABA Center on Children and the Law, The Prosecution of Child Sexual and Physical Abuse Cases: Final Report (American Bar Association 1993). This report was submitted to the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect.
190. Smith and Goretsky Elstein, The Prosecution of Child Sexual and Physical Abuse Cases, 118.
191. Those were equally divided between sentences in excess of twenty years (4 percent) and life sentences (4 percent). Smith and Goretsky Elstein, The Prosecution of Child Sexual and Physical Abuse Cases, 118.
192. "Child Abuse: The Crimes of the 80s," Boston Globe (November 8–11, 1987).
193. Neil Roland, "Daycare Workers Detailed Concerns," Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel (May 15, 1990).
194. David Rhode, "Probation for Teacher Guilty of Abuse at Stuyvesant," New York Times (August 18, 1999).
195. "Molester Sentenced to Psychiatric Treatment," UPI (April 3, 1984).

Conclusion I

1. See footnote 210 and accompanying text in Chapter Five.

Chapter Five

1. Open letter to parents from Kelly Michaels dated May 17, 1985. I obtained a copy of this letter in the course of my research but never found any information about who actually received the letter.
2. Stephanie Lorman, Reinterview (October 7, 1987) by Investigator Noreen Catarino, Office of Public Defender.
3. Testimony of Madeline Sullivan, August 11, 1987, tr. 118.
4. The first and last names of all of the children involved in this case have been changed to pseudonyms that maintain the original initials of their actual first and last names.
5. State v. Michaels, June 25, 1987, tr. 198, line 25. (The trial transcript, which is approximately fifty thousand pages long, was prepared daily. Every day begins with page 1, and sometimes the afternoon session begins with page 1. The date is included with every transcript cite. There is a fully stamped transcript on appeal, but I could gain access only to the dailies.)
6. State v. Michaels, June 25, 1987, tr. 199, lines 1–4.
7. State v. Michaels, June 25, 1987, tr. 36.
8. She was married during the many years that this case lasted; her name became Sara Sencer-McArdle. She is referred to as Sencer-McArdle throughout.
9. Lisa Manshel, Naptime: The True Story of Sexual Abuse at a Suburban Day Care Center (William Morrow 1989). Some critics of the case are also extremely critical of the book. I found it accurate on every fact that I was able to check, but I relied on original documents for almost every claim in this chapter. Ceci and Bruck also cited Naptime as a source in Jeopardy in the Courtroom.
10. McGrath notes from Mitchell Pierce interview.
11. State v. Michaels, June 29, 1987, tr. 86.
12. Statement to Detective R. Mastrangelo, May 3, 1985, 1.

13. Andrew Cook, handwritten statement, May 2, 1985, 1.
14. Cook, handwritten statement, 2.
15. Cook, handwritten statement, 2.
16. Cook statement to Det. Richard Mastrangelo, May 3, 1985.
17. Patricia Crowley, Not My Child (Doubleday, 1989), 49. This book has been criticized for lack of objectivity. I have not relied on it for any significant factual statements in this chapter, but this is the longest available account concerning the Rooneys. I located only a few documents about this child.
18. Crowley, Not My Child, 49–50.
19. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury, July 10, 1985, tr. 16.
20. Letter to Wee Care Parents, May 8, 1985.
21. Manshel, Naptime, 24.
22. Minutes, Wee Care All-Parent Meeting, May 15, 1985, 1.
23. Minutes, Wee Care All-Parent Meeting, May 15, 1985, 1.
24. Mitchell Pierce's mother testified: "I was instructed by a social worker from United Hospital that I was not to try to elicit any kind of information from Mitchell. I was just to, if he talked, listen to him and not pry at all, and just be a supportive listener." State v. Michaels, June 24, 1987, tr. 143.
25. Crowley, Not My Child, 44.
26. Manshel, Naptime, 36.
27. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury, November 4, 1985, tr. 27.
28. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury, November 4, 1985, tr. 27.
29. Manshel, Naptime, 37.
30. Oralee Wachter and Jane Aaron, No More Secrets for Me (Little Brown, 1983). Annotation: four short stories about situations that children may find themselves in regarding abuse and how these children find a way out of harm's way.
31. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury, November 4, 1985, tr. 27.
32. Testimony of Lou Fonolleras in State v. Michaels (November 16, 1987; afternoon), tr. 35.
33. Julia Tilden police statement, June 12, 1985.
34. Eileen Treacy, Report on Nora van Haley, November 16, 1986.
35. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury, July 10, 1985, tr. 63.
36. Crowley, Not My Child, 51.
37. Donna Leusner, "Nursery Ex-teacher Indicted in Sex Abuse of 3 Children," Star Ledger (June 7, 1985).
38. Memorandum from Karen Burton to Jonas Rappeport (September 11, 1986), 1.
39. Donna Leusner, "Ex-nursery School Teacher Faces 31 Sex Abuse Charges," Star Ledger (June 21, 1985).
40. There are three children in the overall case with the initials B.M. Two are boys. The one referred to here was not included in any charges.
41. Brian's father did not object to this interview. Indeed, he testified about two mysterious oval-shaped bruises that he saw on his son's back in the spring. They were consistent with an injury by a wooden spoon. State v. Michaels (August 25, 1987), tr. 110–114.
42. Fonolleras Summary DYFS Report. It should be noted that no charges were ever brought in connection with this child.
43. Fonolleras notes on Elliot Shandley interview (June 19, 1985). This is one of a handful of children who were not part of the fifty-one children included in Ceci and Bruck's numbering of children in the case. None of these children were involved in any charges and none had multiple interviews. Most likely, these children were interviewed once by DYFS and never by law enforcement.
44. Fonolleras report on Clare Williams (June 20, 1985). It should be noted that no charges were ever brought in connection with this child either.
45. This child's name appears in DYFS notes but not on the list of fifty-one.
46. Clare Williams (June 20), Andrea Towne (June 20), Michelle Marshall (June 24), Shayla Palimieri (June 24), Ruby Watson (June 26), and Margaret Selby (June 27).
47. Original sources conflict on whether the number of interviews was eighty-two, eighty-three, or eighty-nine. I have located original documents to support all of those aggregate totals. The difference between eighty-two and eighty-three depends on how one counts an interview in which two children were interviewed together. The difference between eighty-three and eighty-nine involves children who were most marginal to the case.

48. Manshel, Naptime, 111.
49. State v. Michaels (August 18, 1985), a.m. session, tr. 82.
50. State v. Michaels (August 18, 1985), a.m. session, tr. 85.
51. State v. Michaels (August 18, 1985), a.m. session, tr. 100.
52. State v. Michaels (August 18, 1985), a.m. session, tr. 85.
53. Concerned Scientists brief, published in Psychology, Public Policy, and Law (1995) 1(2): 272-322, 285.
54. She told Rebecca Flora's mother, who called her in May when Rebecca said she had seen David naked at school, not to jump to conclusions. Judy Applegate assumed there was an innocuous explanation and did not follow up with her son or attend the first parent's meeting a week later.
55. Debbie Nathan addressed this child in an article written in 1998, long after the case was over and it was clear David Applegate would not testify again. Nathan claimed to have discovered evidence that Michaels's "inexperienced and overworked public defenders" never considered, to wit: . . . on the tape of an interview of another Wee Care student, Lindsay, I heard her father say that she and [David] played together. The point: [David] could have picked up the details of the alleged abuse from his playmate." This assertion is contradicted by various testimonies at trial. First, the extent to which David had contact with children outside of school was not something that escaped the notice of Kelly Michael's defense team. The boy's mother was specifically questioned about the subject at trial. Judy Applegate would no doubt be surprised by Nathan's unsubstantiated claim that her son "regularly played" with any other child from Wee Care. Her testimony at trial was that "once, maybe twice he played with Debra Schultz, and I think there was once a day when Diane Plunkett had him over after school a little bit." Second, David contracted chickenpox and was out of school in early June, when word of the case might conceivably have become a topic of discussion among children. It is curious that proponents of the child-suggestibility defense, normally acutely attuned to whether events are literally possible, apparently missed the fact that there were few or no opportunities for the conversations that Nathan hypothesizes. There is no evidence that the details of the allegations against Michaels were a topic of conversation between children before David Applegate got chickenpox. One child told interviewers she learned from her friend that Kelly "had been bad." Several others allowed that they learned this from their parents—but all of those were in late June. David Applegate had been out of school for weeks by then and had been isolated from all possible playmates.
56. Matter of Nicole V., 71 N.Y.2d 112 (1987). The decision of the Court of Appeals, New York's highest court, supported the approach Treacy used. The case stemmed from a Family Court proceeding held in early 1985.
57. State v. Michaels (June 25, 1987), tr. 15, 31–33, 64–65.
58. Summit, "The Child Sexual Abuse Accommodation Syndrome."
59. The defense relied on David M. Brodzinsky, a Rutgers psychology professor who argued that a behavioral checklist used in the case was subject to measurement error. On the basis of a small survey that he conducted at the Rutgers University Day Care Center, Brodzinsky argued that mechanical use of this checklist would cause 28 percent of so-called normal preschoolers to be suspected of having been sexually abused or at least of having experienced some similar trauma. He did not comment on how much more prevalent the symptoms were in the Kelly Michaels children than in his "normal" survey. Nor was this informal survey—conducted for the defense, although this was not disclosed to those surveyed—apparently subjected to peer-review or apparently published in any academic journal.
60. She could not rule out other possible causes of the child's behavior.
61. Eileen Treacy, [Report] "Interview #2 2–17–87," David Applegate, 1, 2.
62. Institutional Abuse Report, n.d. Exhibit S-233 in State v. Michaels.
63. The agency could have taken some kind of licensing action. But Kelly Michaels left before the allegations surfaced, and the school ended up closing.

64. This is my own position concerning the ethical duty of prosecutors. Many, possibly most, legal ethicists maintain an even stricter position: that charges should be brought only if the prosecutor personally believes the defendant is guilty. In a fascinating essay, law professor Alafair Burke reviews those arguments and argues instead for prosecutorial agnosticism. Alafair S. Burke, "Prosecutorial Agnosticism," Ohio State Journal of Criminal Law (2010), 8: 79–100. All commenters agree that prosecutors are obligated to "do justice," not simply win cases. And whatever the ethical standard, criminal cases require a higher level of proof than civil or administrative cases.
65. In the Interest of K.A.W., 104 N.J. 112, 515 A.2d 1217 (Supreme Court of New Jersey, 1986).
66. Manshel, Naptime, 98.
67. Manshel explained that the appellate section instructed prosecutors to charge by the instrument. "Instead of charging one count of vaginal penetration and one count of anal penetration for each girl, Sara was to charge up to three separate counts for vaginal penetration (fork, knife, and spoon) and up to three separate counts for anal penetration (fork, knife, and spoon)." Naptime, 98.
68. Fifty-four of the counts that went to the jury were for aggravated sexual assault. Keep in mind that, given the multiple ways of charging the details of sexual abuse, a single incident could account for up to six counts. Again, spread across nineteen children, these fifty-four counts translate into a handful of incidents.
69. Typologies of sex offenders distinguish between kinds of abusers. "Opportunistic" abusers are "impulsive, unplanned, and driven by opportunity as a means of seeking immediate gratification." CSOM Etiology. http://www.csom.org/train/etiology/4/4_1.htm.
70. Manshel, Naptime, 133.
71. The second interview was requested by John's mother, not by authorities. She said John wanted to come back and talk to "the man with the dolls." But he did not disclose anything in his second interview.
72. Crowley, Not My Child, 204.
73. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury (November 6, 1985), tr. 26–29.
74. State v. Michaels (June 29, 1987), tr. 47.
75. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury (July 10, 1985), tr. 73.
76. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury (July 10, 1985), tr. 101.
77. Julie Gottlieb, From the Courtroom to the Newsroom: An Analysis of the Print Media Coverage of State of New Jersey v. Margaret Kelly Michaels. Unpublished undergraduate thesis, Brown University 2000, 53.
78. She testified: "The first day [that she came back to work in early May] I remember it very clearly because Brenda was there with me and I said to her, I said this is strange, these kids are all asleep and in the winter they didn't sleep."
79. This document can be found on p. 347 of the three-volume exhibit attached to the defense brief on appeal.
80. Jacob Peyton interview, June 20, 1985, 26.
81. State v. Michaels, Concerned Scientists brief, 31.
82. State v. Michaels, Concerned Scientists brief, 31. Citing Ceci and Bruck (1993), "Child Witnesses: Translating Research into Policy," SRCD Social Policy Reports, (Fall 1993) VII(3): 1–12.
83. State v. Michaels (October 21, 1987), tr. 17.
84. State v. Michaels (November 3, 1987), tr. 58.
85. Typed synopsis of interview on July 2, 1985. Institutional Abuse Report. Exhibit S-233 in State v. Michaels.
86. John Allister interview (July 15, 1985), tr. 7.
87. State v. Michaels (November 16, 1987), tr. 70–71.
88. State v. Michaels (September 9, 1987), tr. 32.
89. Frank Lindblad et. al., "Preschoolers' Sexual Behavior at Daycare Centers: An Epidemiological Study,"Child Abuse & Neglect (1995) 19(5):569–577. Cite at 575.
90. State v. Michaels (October 13, 1987), tr. 39.
91. State v. Michaels (June 24, 1987), tr. 142–43.
92. State v. Michaels (August 18, 1987), tr. 75.
93. State v. Michaels (July 28, 1987), tr. 144, 157.

94. State v. Michaels (November 19, 1987), tr. 18–21.
95. State v. Michaels (February 23, 1988), tr. 13.
96. State v. Michaels (February 23, 1988), tr. 35–53.
97. State v. Michaels (November 19, 1987), tr. 23–24.
98. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury (July 10, 1985), tr. 98.
99. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury (July 10, 1985), tr. 70.
100. Rabinowitz described Michaels as "pretty in a traditional, American girl sort of way." Harper's, 54. The 60 Minutes program about the Michaels case was called "The Girl Next Door." The view that Michaels could not possibly have abused children because of her appearance conveyed the same stereotype that Nathan betrayed when, in her first contribution to the witch-hunt narrative, she referred to "sleazy trench coats"—as if child molesters were actually identifiable by their outerwear.
101. Murray Bartky, Ph.D., Psychological Evaluation (n.d.), 3. Exhibit D5 in State v. Michaels. This three-page document was also included in an appendix to the first defense brief on appeal and is numbered A-79 to A-81.
102. State v. Michaels, December 1, 1987, tr. 11, lines 9–13.
103. Although the witch-hunt narrative dismisses the testimony of Charlene Munn out of hand, no evidence has ever been offered to support the insinuation that her ten-year sentence for aggravated manslaughter was a "deal." Sentencing agreements that are contingent on cooperation generally hold sentencing in abeyance until after the person testifies. Munn testified after she had been sentenced and she received a substantial sentence.
104. In one of many claims of memory lapse while testifying under oath, Michaels, a nonsmoker, would assert she "could not remember" whether she had bought sixteen separate packages of cigarettes for Munn that she had charged to her prison account.
105. M.A.R.C.I.S. Incident Report Supplement, December 19, 1985, submitted by Det. Sgt. John J. Noonan.
106. State v. Michaels (November 30, 1987), tr. 85.
107. State v. Michaels, Transcript of Proceedings (February 15, 1991), tr. 111. Note: Dr. Brodsky examined Michaels for three and a half hours on August 7, 1990. He made no audio or video record of the interview.
108. State v. Michaels (March 7, 1988), tr. 64.
109. It is thirty-seven words long, not altogether coherent, but possibly copyright-protected by Kelly Michaels. Accordingly, I will simply describe it as strange. The final phrases are about "the smell of your flesh" and "your body will leave me." The poem is included in Manshel, Naptime, 319.
110. State v. Michaels, March 2, 1988, tr. 49–50.
111. Manshel, Naptime, 259.
112. The only other child to have only a single count presented to the jury was Martin Zeitz, who did not actually testify. Jacob Peyton and Martin were first interviewed quite late in the investigative sequence.
113. "Lawyer Quitting Sex Abuse Case," Star Ledger (June 3, 1986).
114. State v. Michaels (June 22, 1988), tr. 187.
115. State v. Michaels (June 22, 1988), tr. 234, 237.
116. Phil Donahue Show on the Jordan, Minnesota cases, January 15, 1985.
117. "Interview: Hollida Wakefield and Ralph Underwager," Paidika (1993), (3)2: 3–4. This now-defunct magazine had a line drawing of a naked prepubescent boy on the cover. Underwager would later argue that this was a "primary prevention effort" somehow aimed at preventing pedophilia. The claim is difficult to square with the purpose of the magazine; moreover, his wife distanced herself from the remarks and Underwager was forced to resign from the advisory board of the False Memory Syndrome Foundation when this interview became known in the United States.
118. See generally Diane Curcio, "Lawman Hammers at Nursery Sex Case," Star Ledger (February 7, 1988), 62. Among the materials still in storage in this case is testimony from other cases around the country and investigative documents concerning his marriage (to a former marriage counseling client) and business (which include a farm implement business just a year before he became an "expert" in the Jordan case). There was also documentation of the close relationship between Underwager and the activist group VOCAL (Victims of Child Abuse Laws), which had office space in Underwager's house.

119. Underwager said "a scientist who bases an opinion upon unchecked subjective experience has regressed to the level of the witch doctor." The prosecutor pointed out how some of Underwager's claims in the case were entirely subjective.
120. Angela Stewart, "Judge Prohibits Psychiatric 'Profile' in Sex Abuse Trial of Day-care Teacher,"Star Ledger (May 15, 1987), 35.
121. Manshel, Naptime, 283.
122. Jonas Rappeport, "Psychiatric Evaluation of Margaret Kelly Michaels," State v. Michaels (February 2, 1987), 15, Exhibit D-3.
123. State v. Michaels (June 25, 1987), tr. 198–199.
124. Quoted in Manshel, Naptime, 287.
125. All of these details were contained in Alfonso A. Narvaez, "Former Day-Care Teacher Denies Sexually Abusing Schoolchildren," New York Times (February 28, 1988), 37.
126. State v. Michaels (March 7, 1988, afternoon session), tr. 22.
127. State v. Michaels (March 7, 1988, afternoon session), tr. 43, 49, 73.
128. Mary de Young, The Day Care Ritual Abuse Moral Panic.
129. The inconclusive result is acknowledged in Michaels v. New Jersey, 50 F. Supp 2d 353, 354 (May 29, 1999).
130. Associated Press, "Jury Method Fought," News Tribune (March 31, 1988), A7.
131. Those counts were charged as third-degree "child endangerment," since they did not actually involve sexual contact.
132. Debbie Nathan, "Victimizer or Victim?" Village Voice (August 2, 1988).
133. Debbie Nathan, "Day-Care Witch Trials," Village Voice (April 26, 1988), 17.
134. Nathan, "Victimizer," 38.
135. Nathan, "Victimizer", 34.
136. Nathan did not reveal that those were some of the same interviews already criticized; nor did she mention that none of those interviews resulted in charges at the trial.
137. This is what he said, in a portion of the transcript that was underlined in the annotated version of the interviews filed by the defense on appeal: "So I just want you to know that I lived through it when I was a kid and I remember how hard it was to talk about it and how scary it was to talk about it." But the story that Fonolleras actually proceeded to tell did not involve his disclosing sexual abuse. Actually, he said that "somebody hurt me [sic] brother real bad" and he adds that "they threatened me." Natalie Jenkins interview (6/24/85), 11. Fonolleras told at least one other child something about his own abuse history. Defense counsel insinuated at one point, on the basis of Fonolleras having "told [Natalie Jenkins] and at least one other" child, that he had a preconceived determination in sexual abuse cases. State v. Michaels (October 28, 1987), tr. 66. Fonolleras denied the charge, and the prosecution argued that anything about interviews with those children should be kept out of the case because they were not children named in the actual indictment. The judge let the evidence in, so the jury was fully aware of this issue.
138. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes to a Jail Cell," Harper's, May 1990.
139. Nathan has written that this group first met in January 1990, four months before the Rabinowitz article was published. But since Rabinowitz apparently had difficulty placing the article, an early draft could well have been central to the mobilization of other people in New York City. The collapse of the McMartin case might also explain why this group coalesced in January 1990.
140. For example, Deirdre Donahue said that "Rabinowitz persuasively argues that a new McCarthyism has taken hold of our national psyche," in the "Magazines" column in USA Today (May 11, 1990), 4D.
141. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes," 56.
142. See the text and accompanying footnotes in this chapter describing testimony of Mrs. Pierce (fn. 7) and Laura Hadley (fn. 5, 6).
143. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes," 56.
144. Rich Lowry, "Creating Victims," National Review (December 5, 1994).

145. "The Case of Kelly Michaels, Accused of Sex Abuse," 48 Hours (June 19, 1991), CBS News Transcripts, 1.
146. "The Case of Kelly Michaels," 3.
147. Debbie Nathan, "Sweet Justice: My Fight to Free Kelly Michaels," Redbook (June 1995), 85 (original emphasis).
148. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes," 60.
149. Nat Hentoff, "Once More the Witch Hunt," Washington Post (May 23, 1992), A31.
150. Sources vary slightly on the total number. I have been able to account for eighty-three interviews using multiple sources. Many children were later interviewed by Eileen Treacy and by the prosecutor's office, but the investigative phase accounts for the initial disclosures and charges.
151. He did not disclose anything in his first interview on June 10; he was interviewed again on June 17, after his mother called to report that John had asked to come back and talk to the man with the dolls; but John did not disclose anything in his second interview. His mother provided an extensive statement on July 3 about statements John had been making at home. There was a final interview with John on July 15; he did not disclose anything and he was not part of the trial.
152. Interview with Rebecca Flora (July 3, 1985), 6.
153. Interview with Rebecca Flora (July 3, 1985), 11. Note: the name of the child she mentions has been blacked out and "1C" has been put in its place. But 1C is a boy, so it is unclear whether the defense misidentified this child or whether the gender confusion was Rebecca's.
154. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury (November 4, 1985), tr. 27.
155. Nathan, "Victimizer."
156. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes," 58.
157. The Rabinowitz version makes it appear that the child provided a meaningless answer in the following exchange:

     FONOLLERAS: What color did Kelly have down there? Brown like her head? Did she have hair under her arm?
     LUKE: My daddy do.

     The transcript of this interview, however, which is appended to the defense briefs on appeal, describes the exchange differently. It reveals that the child's answer came to an earlier question, changing the meaning significantly:

     [67Q] LOU: That is hair because she is a grown up, right and what color did Kelly have down there?
     [67A] CHILD: Brown.
     [68Q] LOU: Brown? Like her hair on her head. Did she have hair under her arms?
     [68A] CHILD: Ooh, my daddy got those.

158. Interview with P. J. Isaacs, 15; stamped as 58. June 27, 1985.
159. Vincent Caroll, "The Tragedy of a Modern-Day Witch Hunt," Rocky Mountain News (June 19, 2003), 40A. This editorial includes a lengthy interview with Rabinowitz.
160. Nat Hentoff, "Anna Quindlen Doesn't Get It," Village Voice (June 23, 1992).
161. Manshel, 1990, 99. Manshel's account includes descriptions of the child's demeanor that I could not verify—that "he answered softly in an uncontorted voice." But the grand jury transcript, which I obtained, verifies Manshel's description. State v Michaels, Essex County Grand Jury (July 11, 1985), tr. 92, lines 1–2.
162. Caroll, "Tragedy of a Modern-Day Witch Hunt," 40A.
163. This story was reported by Lisa Manshel in "Reporters for the Defense," Washington Journalism Review (July/August 1991), 20.
164. Manshel, Washington Journalism Review, 20.
165. Transcript of Booknotes, CNN (May 4, 2003), 5.
166. Transcript of Booknotes, CNN (May 4, 2003), 6.
167. Manshel, Naptime, 238.
168. Manshel, Naptime, 238.

169. Associated Press, "Jury Method Fought," A7.
170. State v. Michaels, Brief on Behalf of Amicus Developmental, Social and Psychological Researchers, Social Scientists and Scholars, 48. [Hereinafter "Concerned Scientists brief"]
171. State v. Michaels, Concerned Scientists brief, 1, fn 2.
172. Nathan, "Victimizer," 38.
173. Posting by Jonathan Harris, Friday, February 25, 1994, on the electronic "witchhunt" list that he created while at MIT. Subject: "Another fruitcake (a dangerous one at that)."
174. Transcript of Booknotes, CNN (May 4, 2003), 4.
175. Eileen C. Treacy, "Foster Parenting the Sexually Abused Child: The Evaluation of Two Specialized Parent Education Programs," doctoral dissertation, Fordham University (filed February 8, 1995).
176. Nathan also complained: "While Treacy says she received 'ongoing training' from two Columbia professors in the field of child sex abuse, this instruction did not involve her enrolling in a single accredited Columbia course." Note the clever construction: Nathan does not deny that Treacy received ongoing training from two Columbia professors; her quibble is that the training "did not involve her enrolling in a single credited course"—something Treacy never claimed.
177. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes," 61.
178. "Abuse Petition Is Dismissed for Insufficient Corroboration; Matter of Maria B. (Juan T.), Supreme Court, Judge Lefkowitz," New York Law Journal (September 1, 1989), 21.
179. Rich Lowry, "Creating Victims," National Review (December 5, 1994), 66.
180. Matter of Evelyn C., reported in New York Law Journal (January 11, 1994), 21.
181. People v. Taylor, 75 N.Y.2d 277, 552 N.E.2d 131 (1990).
182. Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, 296.
183. These page-long excerpts involve children labeled "A" and "B." The children are not otherwise identified by Ceci and Bruck even with initials or interview date; but through painstaking checking of interview transcripts, the passages were identified as coming from Cassie Bond-Foley and Ralph Gans, respectively.
184. The Essex County Prosecutor's Office arranged to have these tapes transcribed and provided to the defense. These transcriptions were not entered into evidence.
185. Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, xiv–xv.
186. Cassie Bond-Foley, November 23, 1986 Transcript of interview by Eileen Treacy prepared by the Essex County Prosecutor's Office, 20.
187. Debra A. Poole and Michael E. Lamb, Investigative Interviews of Children: A Guide for Helping Professionals (American Psychological Association, 1998), 170.
188. Cassie Bond-Foley, Statement, June 13, 1985. This statement was entered at trial as Exhibit D-36 and is contained in the defense brief that Ceci and Bruck cite in their Psychological Bulletin article. See Supplementary Appendix Volume I, 10.
189. State v. Michaels, Grand Jury (July 19, 1985), tr. 50.
190. Ralph Gans Statement #2, December 11, 1987. Transcript of interview with Eileen Treacy prepared by the Essex County Prosecutor's Office. Hand-numbered p. 7, line 10. (The typed page numbers are one page off after the first p. 4.)
191. Ralph Gans Statement #2, hand-numbered p. 7.
192. Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, 73 and 118. This quote is also highlighted in the Concerned Scientists brief and has become a staple of the witch-hunt narrative about the case. See, e.g., Robyn N. Dawes, Everyday Irrationality (2001), 165.
193. I asked Professor Bruck, in a personal interview on October 12, 2009, if she could explain the difference between the transcript and the account in their book. She had no explanation and expressed the view that the differences were not significant. She did not respond to repeated requests for a more detailed explanation of why their account varies from the transcript that was prepared by the state.
194. Treacy, Report on Ralph Gans, 1.
195. The boy said "And then Kelly tried even to make us drink it" on p. 10 (as indicated by hand numbering), line 23. The response that contains the word crazy is on p. 11, line 5.
196. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes," 52.
197. State v. Michaels, Concerned Scientists brief, 32.

198. See Manshel, Naptime, 17.
199. Dorothy Rabinowitz, "Kelly Michaels's Orwellian Ordeal," Wall Street Journal (April 15, 1993).
200. Shayla Palmieri interview, June 24, 1985, 17.
201. State v. Michaels (June 29, 1987, A.M. session), tr. 114.
202. Sadie Gaffney interview, June 11, 1985, 1. This interview is hardly a secret. It appears on p. 43 in the defendant's three-volume appendix on appeal, but it is not otherwise mentioned in the witch-hunt narrative.
203. State v. Michaels (September 23, 1987, P.M. session), tr. 19, 21.
204. The FBI tested the piano bench for traces of feces, which had been alleged by at least one child. The results came back negative.
205. Mark Everson, "Understanding Bizarre, Improbable, and Fantastic Elements in Children's Accounts of Abuse," Child Maltreatment (May 1997), 2(2): 134.
206. Rabinowitz, "Kelly Michael's Orwellian Ordeal."
207. Rabinowitz, "From the Mouths of Babes," 56.
208. Richard Gardner, "Apparatchiks Turn 'Child Abuse' into 'Witch Hunt,'" New Jersey Law Journal (March 1, 1993), 17. It turns out Gardner exaggerated when he said, "After examining the alleged victims, the accusing parents, and Ms. Michaels, I was convinced that she did not engage in the variety of abominable acts attributed to her." Aware that few children and no parents were examined in the civil cases, I wrote Dr. Gardner and inquired about how many children and parents he interviewed. His response indicates he "only evaluated two children" and that he did not evaluate any parents. Correspondence from Richard Gardner to Ross Cheit, September 6, 2001.
209. Nathan, "Day-Care Witch Trials," Village Voice (April 26, 1988), 17.
210. Nathan made the "cookie-cutter copy" claim on April 26, 1988, two months before the "12 days" of research she apparently did in the Michaels case. Nathan, "Sweet Justice: My Fight to Free Kelly Michaels," Redbook (June 1995), 86 ("the 12 days I needed to do the reporting").
211. Jean Montoya, "Something Not So Funny Happened on the Way to Conviction: The Pretrial Interrogation of Child Witnesses," Arizona Law Review (Winter 1993) 35, 927, 928. Even if her description were accurate, it would not account for the four disclosures before that.
212. Michaels v. McGrath, 531 U.S. 1118 (2001, Justice Thomas dissent from denial of certiorari).
213. Nathan, "Victimizer," 34 ("sent a letter to parents, telling them Michaels was being investigated for sexual abuse").
214. For example, David Applegate's mother did not attend the first parent's meeting because she had no reason, on the basis of the letter to parents, to think her son was somehow involved. Indeed, this is the response Mrs. Applegate provided when Rebecca Flora's mother called to inform her that Rebecca had seen David's penis: "I actually said to her, you know kids go to the bathroom. . . . I'm not going to get upset over it and she shouldn't either." State v. Michaels, August 18, 1987 (A.M. Session), tr. 80, 82.
215. DYFS Institutional Abuse Report, 40. ("Evaluation: The investigation has substantiated the following: (1) Sexual Abuse on the part of Margaret Kelly Michaels against 51 children, (2) Physical Abuse against those same 51 children by the same perpetrator, (3) Emotional Abuse against those some 51 children by the perpetrator, and Institutional Neglect on the part of the Wee Care Administration . . ."). (N.D., but likely November 1985 as the final page (42) mentions the November 8 Grand Jury and indicates "we are awaiting [additional] indictment.") Exhibit S-233 in State v. Michaels.
216. There is a three-day break in the interviewing after June 13. Moreover, there were two significant parents meetings after June 13 that increased the social awareness and pressures around the case.
217. Nathan, "Sweet Justice," 122.
218. Rabinowitz, "Kelly Michael's Orwellian Ordeal."
219. Richard Pilskin and Jeffrey Kanige, "Michaels Case Headed for Remand," New Jersey Law Journal (February 8, 1993), 6.
220. State v. Michaels, Superior Court of New Jersey, Appellate Division, 264 N.J. Super. 579, 625 A.2.d. 489 (1993).

221. Rappeport allowed on cross-examination that he had not reviewed any of the testimony or other documentation related to this incident, although it was potentially available to him.
222. State v. Michaels, Superior Court of New Jersey, Appellate Division, 264 N.J. Super. 579, 625 A.2.d. 489 (1993).
223. Donna Leusner, "Judge to Decide if Interviews by Probers in Day-care Sex Case Were "Tainted," Star Ledger (April 30, 1987), 36.
224. Donna Leusner, "Judge Rules," Star Ledger (May 1, 1987), 24.
225. Supplemental Brief on Petition for Certification to Review a Final Judgment of the Superior Court, Appellate Division, State v. Michaels (Docket No. 36, 633) (October 12, 1993), 2.
226. Memorandum from Sara Sencer-McArdle to John S. Redden (Deputy First Assistant Prosecutor) re: Inaccuracies in the Appellate Division Opinion in State v. Michaels, March 30, 1993.
227. When Michaels's civil claim was dismissed in 1999, Judge Barry began her opinion with the statement "The facts of this case are, by now, well known." Citing the two New Jersey appellate court decisions in the case, she went on to say, "This court will not attempt to recap every nuance of the case's history, and that history is well documented in the various opinions which have preceded this opinion." Michaels v. State of New Jersey, 50 F. Supp. 2d 353, 356 (1999).
228. Daniel Goleman, "Studies of Children as Witnesses Find Surprising Accuracy," New York Times (November 6, 1984).
229. Carol Tavris, "Do Children Lie? Not About This," Los Angeles Times (January 19, 1990), 7.
230. The initial effort took the form of the APA sponsored conference on child suggestibility at Cornell in 1989. The unusual nature of the conference is captured in a subsequent article in the APA Monitor. Tori DeAngelis, "Controversy Marks Child Witness Meeting," APA Monitor (August 1989), 1: 8–9. Before the conference proceedings were published, Time magazine reported that "a psychologist involved in the project says the book shows 'there are definite limits to knowledge about whether children are telling the truth.'" Jerome Cramer, "Why Children Lie in Court," Time (March 4, 1991).
231. Years later, in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Services, Judge H. F. Gierke concluded there was a "reasonable basis" for a defense lawyer's decision not to use Ralph Underwager as a witness because "the credibility of the defense might be undermined if the defense was perceived as using a 'quack' as a witness." U.S. v. Grigoruk, 52 M.J. 312 (C.A.A.F. 2000)
232. Ceci and Bruck, "Suggestibility of the Child Witness: A Historical Review and Syntheses," Psychological Bulletin (1993), 113(3): 403–439.
233. Ceci and Bruck, "Suggestibility of the Child Witness," 411.
234. Ceci and Bruck, "Suggestibility of the Child Witness," 422.
235. Ceci and Bruck, "Suggestibility of the Child Witness," 423.
236. Lou Fonolleras described it as the "most disturbing [interview] of his professional life." Manshel, Naptime, 86. The length, content, and tone are different from all of the earlier interviews in the case.
237. Goleman, "Studies Reveal Suggestibility of Very Young Witnesses," New York Times (June 11, 1993). It is not clear how the New York Times became aware of this article so far in advance of publication.
238. Stephen Ceci, Mary Crotteau-Huffman, Elliott Smith, and Elizabeth Loftus. "Repeatedly Thinking About Non-events." Consciousness & Cognition (1994), 3, 388–407.
239. Ceci, Crotteau-Huffman, Smith, and Loftus, 394.
240. "How the Questions Become the Answers," Chart, New York Times (June 11, 1993), A23. Description of study: "In weekly sessions, the researchers reviewed the list with the child, asking for each event: "Has this ever happened to you?" Reported result: "56 percent of children reported at least one false event as true." This is 20 percentage points higher than the results reported for the first study, where children were simply told to "think real hard" about whether the fictitious event had occurred.
241. "From the Mouths of Babes," ABC News 20/20 (October 22, 1993), 3.
242. Defending themselves against criticisms by law professor John E. B. Myers about the applicability of these studies, Ceci, Bruck, and Rosenthal referred to an estimate that "the typical child witness was interviewed between 4 and 11 times prior to offering in-court testimony."

Ceci, Bruck, and Rosenthal, "Children's Allegations of Sexual Abuse: Forsensic and Scientific Issues: A Reply to Commentators," Psychology, Public Policy, and Law (June 1995), at 500. But the claim glosses over the question of when they first disclosed abuse. It has nothing to do with the emergence of a claim. If the first disclosure is in the first few interviews, as it often was in the Michaels case, then later interviews cannot be considered the cause of the disclosures.

243. Ceci, Crotteau-Huffman, Smith, and Loftus, 397.
244. Stephen Ceci, Elizabeth Loftus, Michelle Leichtman, and Maggie Bruck. "The Role of Source Misattribution in the Creation of False Beliefs Among Preschoolers." International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis (1994), 62, 304–320.
245. Ceci, Loftus, Leichtman, and Bruck, 304–320.
246. Ceci and Bruck, "Child Witnesses."
247. Jane Brody, "Memories of Things That Never Were," New York Times (April 25, 2000), F8.
248. Mary L. Huffman, Angela M. Crossman, and Stephen J. Ceci, "'Are False Memories Permanent?': An Investigation of the Long-Term Effects of Source Misattributions," Consciousness and Cognition (1997) 6, 482–490, 488.
249. Ceci and Bruck, "Child Witnesses" Translating Research into Policy," SRCD Social Policy Reports (1993) 7(3).
250. Ceci and Bruck, "Suggestibility of the Child Witness: A Historical Review and Syntheses," Psychological Bulletin (1993) 113(3): 423.
251. Ceci and Bruck, "Child Witnesses."
252. Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, xiv.
253. It appears that Ceci and Bruck had some connection with the defense years earlier than was disclosed. The excerpt from the Michaels case that they included in their Psychological Bulletin article ends with what appears to a citation in parentheses, reading "(6/27/85 Appellate Court Brief)." That was not the date of the brief, however; it was the date of the interview. The brief does not appear in the references section of the article, but the order allowing the defense to attach copies of interview transcripts to their appellate brief was issued on December 15, 1992, seven months after Ceci and Bruck submitted the final version of this article.
254. Maggie Bruck, "Here it is," email to assorted academic psychologists, October 21, 1993, posted to the APLS B-Board.
255. For example, the draft of this brief appeared on the website of Barbara Johnson, a "father's rights" advocate in Massachusetts. http://falseallegations.com/amicus.htm, confirmed January 5, 2012. This draft has also been filed in court. See e.g., Appendix, Appellee's Merit Brief, State v. Silverman, Supreme Court of Ohio (Case No. 2008-0582).
256. Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, preface.
257. Correspondence from Maggie Bruck to Professor Susan Somerville, editor, Child Development, January 27, 1993. It should be noted that Goodman was unaware of this letter before I asked her about it.
258. Interview with Gail Goodman (October 9, 2004).
259. The Suggestibility of Children's Recollections, ed. John Doris (American Psychological Association, 1991), Foreword.
260. Ceci quote from PBS, "The Child Terror."
261. Deposition of Stephen Ceci, November 22, 1993. State v. Foeller, File No. 93-64975-FC (Fourth Judicial Circuit Court for Jackson County, Michigan).
262. Deposition of Stephen Ceci, State v. Foeller, 133.
263. State v. Michaels, Motion for Reconsideration and to File Such Motion Nunc Pro Tunc, Supreme Court of New Jersey, Docket No. 36,633. January 27, 1994.
264. State v. Michaels, Concerned Scientists brief, 1.
265. The appendix is labeled "Attempts to Reconstruct Interviews and Emergence of Disclosure." The appendix obscures the issues involving the emergence of disclosures by listing children in a numerical order that is not related to how the case evolved. Conventionally, the first child to make a statement—the index child—would be numbered one. For the purposes of this appendix, the first child to make a disclosure in the Michaels case is numbered sixteen because the numbering turns out to be alphabetical, rather than numerical, although this is never explained in the appendix. The appendix also misstated important facts surrounding several children. For example, the appendix states that child 4C's initial disclosure was "a few days" after being interviewed by Lou Fonolleras. In fact, she made an initial disclosure after her mother received the letter from Wee Care about "serious allegations concerning a former employee." The statement was well documented because it was made in front of her mother and a neighbor, Dale Skolnick, who both testified about it at trial. The girl said she had "played doctor" with Kelly Michaels; she also said there was a "secret room" at Wee Care. By the time she was interviewed in early June, she had also told her mother about children being hit with spoons and forks. None of those details had been made public by then. Lucy Deacon also "had a documented history of vaginal soreness" during the year. Her mother was concerned enough to have raised it with her pediatrician three or four times that school year.

There are two material misstatements in the brief description of Mitchell Pierce's (16C) outcry at the pediatrician. The appendix claims his statement occurred before the pediatrician's assistant inserted the thermometer. In fact, her testimony is that it was after the thermometer had been inserted for thirty seconds. This is relevant to the meaning of Mitchell's statement that Kelly did the same thing to him at school. The appendix also states, erroneously, that "no further notice was taken at that visit," when in fact there was conversation between Laura Hadley and Mrs. Pierce. There are similar errors in the description of child 11C. The appendix states "first disclosure after Lou interview," when in fact the interview came to pass because of a statement she made spontaneously to her mother.

The appendix repeatedly claims that transcripts and records of interviews do not exist when, in fact, those records do exist. The appendix even claims there are "no documents" pertaining to Treacy's interviews with five children (2C, 6C, 8C, 14C, 15C) whose interviews with Treacy are excerpted and cited in a defense brief on appeal!

All of the errors that I have identified in the appendix are in the same direction: they all promote the witch-hunt narrative.

266. State v. Michaels, Concerned Scientists brief, 1.
267. Tom Lyon, "The New Wave in Children's Suggestibility Research: A Critique," Cornell Law Review (May 1999), 1086 ("By repeatedly quoting Goodman . . . the court clearly hoped to render its conclusions uncontroversial").
268. Tim O'Brien, "Defense Team Dumped in Wee Care Case; Counsel Switch on Eve of Argument Fuels Feud over Fees and Egos," New Jersey Law Journal (January 31, 1994), 3.
269. State v. Michaels, 136 N.J. 299, 642 A.2d 1372 (1994).
270. Diane C. Walsh, "Essex to Retry Michaels on Abuse Charges," Star-Ledger (July 16, 1993).
271. Diane C. Walsh, "Judge's Dismissal of Charges Ends 10-year Ordeal for Accused," Star-Ledger (December 3, 1994).
272. Tom Lyon identified and critiqued this line of research in "The New Wave in Children's Suggestibility Research."

Chapter Six

1. Lyon, "The New Wave of Suggestibility Research," 1004–1087.
2. [Lucas] v. Fuster, Case No. 84032827 (11th Judicial Circuit for Dade County, Florida). Deposition of Frank Fuster (October 31, 1985), tr. 279. Frank Fuster's last name is sometimes referred to Fuster Escalona (or Fuster-Escalona) in court documents. In case captions in this book, I will generally use Fuster.
3. State v. Fuster, Trial tr. 4144–4179.
4. Margaret Butler did the inspection. She had worked at the department for seven years; this was her first sexual abuse complaint. She did not interview any children, and the children who were there that day were not identified in her report. The visit was so cursory that she did not even realize the license tacked on the wall was for Frank Fuster's decorating business, not for the day care. Butler apparently later told Meznarich, "Due to the fact that the house was neat and clean, and everything seemed to be in order, the complaint had been unfounded." State v. Fuster, Meznarich deposition (Part I, January 25, 1985), tr. 148.
5. State v. Fuster, St. Lorenzo deposition (July 11, 1985), tr. 13.

6. St. Lorenzo deposition, tr. 13–16.
7. St. Lorenzo deposition, tr. 17.
8. St. Lorenzo deposition (July 11, 1985), tr. 19–22.
9. State v. Fuster, Deposition of Donna Meznarich (Part I, January 22, 1985), tr. 90.
10. Menoher deposition, State v. Fuster (July 18, 1985), 39.
11. Incident Report, Subject: Frank Fuster, Case No. 287537-E, Metro-Dade Police Dept., September 7, 1984, 4 (hereinafter Fuster Police Report).
12. Menoher's cooperation also waned over time. As it became clear that her behavior helped implicate the Arvida Corporation—because she had recommended the (illegal) babysitting service to Country Walk residents—Joanne Menoher denied referring parents to the babysitting service. When asked about Menoher in a civil deposition after the criminal case was over, prosecutor John Hogan said he could not answer the questions because there was an ongoing investigation of Menoher "in connection with a potential claim of perjury." Deposition of John Hogan, Marks v. Fuster, June 24, 1986, tr. 50–51. (No perjury charges were ever brought.)
13. Fuster Police Report, 20.
14. Fuster Police Report, 21.
15. Fuster Police Report, 20.
16. Miami Dade Police Department, Incident Report, October 1, 1984, No. 312747-E, 5.
17. Miami Dade Police Department, Incident Report, 5.
18. Meznarich deposition (Part I, January 22, 1985), tr. 165.
19. Fuster Police Report, 29–30; Meznarich deposition (Part I), tr. 168–170.
20. Meznarich deposition (Part I), tr. 174.
21. This case is discussed in Chapter Four, 174.
22. Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 52.
23. Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 54–66.
24. This is cited in Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 56. I arranged to have this videotape transcribed by a court reporter under the supervision of the court. This precise line appears at the top of page 28. Transcription of a Videotape Interview [with JPC], State v. Fuster, Case No. 84-19728 (Transcribed by Elaine Crandall, November 17, 2006).
25. Moreover, Dr. Roland Summit reviewed a copy of the same tape and testified about specific details in his testimony. Trial tr. 4746, lines 8–11.
26. Jane Daugherty, "Day Care Videotapes Released; Kids Describe Sex at Country Walk," Miami Herald (December 21, 1984), 1A.
27. The trial transcript contains an "inaudible" marking where the actual videotape seems to say "takes off clothes"; Trial tr. 2265 (line 7). That response fits what the interviewer then said: Takes off clothes?
28. Trial tr. 2249–2250, 2255–2260.
29. Trial tr. 2312.
30. Trial tr. 2944.
31. The other interview with Tammy was on September 10. She was extremely avoidant in that session, telling the interview directly "I don't want to talk about that." Later, when asked if she was scared to talk, the girl nodded affirmatively. But the conversation meanders many times, and when this interview was shown in court, the judge instructed that the tape be fast-forwarded four times.
32. Fuster Police report, 25. When her parents brought her in the next day to be interviewed by Assistant State Attorney Chris Rundle, Becky was "very withdrawn." They gave up trying to interview her in less than five minutes. The following week, on August 14, when Becky was seen at Jackson Memorial Hospital, she was so uncooperative that she refused to be examined.
33. Trial tr. 2447, 2449, 2475.
34. Trial tr. 2437, 2438.
35. "There's no pee-pee game," the girl says at one point. "I call it (inaudible) game," the transcript continues. Trial tr. 2440. It is impossible to know what to do with this answer without decoding the inaudible portion.
36. Trial tr. 2439.

37. Trial tr. 2369.
38. As Jan Hollingsworth described some other photos: "Posteriors, in fact, comprised a large portion of the Fusters' collection, many of them tightly framed by telephoto lens." One picture was a rear view of a woman at the Fusters' kitchen sink, alongside Fuster's son; "He had been posed lifting the back of the skirt to reveal her panties, which were heavily soiled with what appeared to be either menstruum or feces." Hollinsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 443.
39. Mary Jo Robinson and Thomas R. Oberhofer, "Identification of Pathogenic Neisseria Species with the RapID NH System." Journal of Clinical Microbiology (1983), 3, 400–404.
40. Meznarich deposition (Part II, January 23, 1985), 95.
41. Trial tr. 3468.
42. Fuster v. Singletary, Case no. 97-1369-Civ-LENARD. Affidavit of Maggie Bruck (February 2, 1999), para. 96.
43. Trial tr. 2902.
44. Trial tr. 2905.
45. Trial tr. 2910.
46. Trial tr. 3223.
47. Fuster Police report, 26.
48. The charge against Frank Fuster was supported by Jason's statement. MDPD Case No. 312759-E. The charge against Ileana was supported by Donald's mother's statement and by Donald's demonstration in 8/14 tape. Case No. 312752-E.
49. Trial tr. 989–90.
50. Trial tr. 1806.
51. Meznarich deposition (Part I, January 22, 1985), tr. 90.
52. Trial tr. 1374; Lee Coleman deposition, tr. 12–14.
53. Trial tr. 5061–62.
54. Trial tr. 1034.
55. Trial tr. 1035.
56. Trial tr. 994.
57. Trial tr. 1815.
58. Trial tr. 1656.
59. Trial tr. 1522–1524.
60. "She was dizzy. She had been drugged," Fuster's lawyer allowed, while arguing against her recollection of seeing Frank sexually abuse various children. Trial tr. 4993.
61. For example, Becky Taylor's mother described picking her up after her first day at the Fster and Becky was napping, which was unusual, because Becky hadn't napped since she was two and half. Darlene Taylor asked Ileana about the fact that Becky was napping. "She [Ileana] said Frank had played with her [Becky]". She tried to wake Becky up to leave, but couldn't wake her so Darlene carried her out. Deposition of Darlene Taylor, State v. Fuster, (February 7, 1985), 34–35.
62. Trial tr. 992–993.
63. Trial tr. 1102–1103.
64. Trial tr. 1403. She described two differing, equally disturbing, actions: "He would try to spread her legs apart and put his mouth on her vagina" and "He would try to pull her head towards his penis."
65. Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 444.
66. Trial tr. 1565–1566.
67. Trial tr. 991.
68. Trial tr. 2017.
69. Coleman deposition, tr. 78.
70. There were several other sessions videotaped in later months, well after the charges had been finalized; one was with Elmo Slade on March 12, 1985. His name does not appear anywhere else in the case; nor are the contents of this interview described in the trial record. The second was with Jason Cramer on April 9, 1985, after he had had a problem at school involving inappropriate sexualized play. His parents wanted "Joe" to talk with Jason about the incident and about sex education in general. This Cramer tape was later misrepresented on television by Lee Coleman, the defense psychiatrist in the case. Coleman claimed the tape was "typical" of the investigative interviews in the case, and he shocked the daytime television audience of "People Are Talking" with the excerpt where Joseph Braga is explaining the concept of sexual response to the child. The content of this excerpt does not appear in the trial transcript because it was not one of the investigative interviews. Joseph Braga confirmed from contemporaneous notes that this brief meeting occurred on April 9, 1985, was at the request of Jason's parents, and had nothing to do with the investigation of the case (Braga interview, July 4, 2012.)

71. Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 491.
72. There had been an incident in the spring of 1984 where Noel called Becky "sexy." He also told Sally Leventhal in the spring of 1984 that she had "a nice pussy."
73. Trial tr. 3769.
74. Trial tr. 3770.
75. Trial tr. 3772, lines 19–24 (emphasis added).
76. Trial tr. 3805, line 4 to 3807, line 2.
77. Trial tr. 3851–2.
78. Trial tr. 4642, line 17 to 4643, line 11. The third, fourth, and fifth lines in this excerpt have been edited slightly to reflect what is apparent on the videotape of this interview. In the third line, the child said "cut your head off" not "cut off your head" as indicated in the transcription. In the fourth line, the interviewer said "Did he really cut off heads or pretend?" The transcription omits the word "really." In the fifth line, the child starts an answer "He was" and then seems to start the word "pointing" before saying "he put the knife to your neck." The court reporter, who transcribed while the tape was playing in court, (inaccurately) wrote "He was—he put some ice on a knife to your neck." That is what appears in the trial transcript. The corrcted version in the text connected to this footnote reflects the words heard on the videotape. This excerpt is described in a newspaper article and it was broadcast on the local news. Nery Ynclan, "Fusters Face New Charges," Miami Herald (March 29, 1985). The new broadcast proves that the transcribed version is inaccurate; the child did not make a confusing reference to ice. See, http://youtube/nAwE3jjmR58.
79. Trial tr. 4648.
80. See especially Trial tr. 4650.
81. Trial tr. 4655, lines 3–25.
82. Hogan civil deposition, 29.
83. Marks v. Fuster, Case No. 84-42560 (11th Judicial Circuit for Dade County, Florida). Deposition of John Hogan (June 24, 1986), 30 (Hogan civil deposition).
84. Hogan civil deposition, 31.
85. Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 349–350.
86. All the quotes about this incident are from Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 350.
87. Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 365.
88. See text accompanying footnote 182.
89. Summit, "The Child Sexual Abuse Accommodation Syndrome."
90. The other three witnesses for the state were a social worker and two police officers.
91. State v. Fuster, Martha Gonzales Fuster deposition (August 8, 1985), tr. 57.
92. The other children who were named in individual charges were Noel Fuster, Joshua Cramer, and Tom Leventhal. The charges related to Leventhal were dropped at the conclusion of the state's case because Jason Cramer, who had described Tom's abuse in earlier interviews, did not mention those statements in his testimony at trial. Donald Menninger was the other child who most clearly substantiated the charges involving Leventhal, but his parents were no longer willing to assist the prosecution. Jason Cramer provided extensive evidence, however, concerning the abuse of his younger brother, Joshua. And the charges involving Noel were substantiated through the testimony of several children and through the positive STD test.
93. Donald Menninger, Jr. (the father) denied he told his wife not to say anything about it, and says "she did not" give anyone such instructions either. [Lucas] v. Fuster deposition, February 12, 1985, tr. 118. But his wife testified six months earlier, "I felt really bad that it would end up being very slanderous statement about someone, so, I said [to Betsy Leventhal], 'I just don't want it spread around.'" State v. Fuster, deposition. July 23, 1985, tr. 20. Betsy Leventhal's testimony at the time matches this description.

> Q: Did they ask you not to pass this information along?
> A: Yes, they did.
> Q: Did you promise that you wouldn't?
> A: Yes, I did.
> Q: But you did?
> A: Yes, I did.

State v. Fuster, Betsy Leventhal deposition. July 10, 1985. tr. 29.

94. Trial tr. 4157.
95. Trial tr. 4165 ("really bad); tr. 4174 ("yes, I do").
96. Hollingsworth provides a long excerpt from the deposition, in which Underwager allowed that he did not know the average number of words a three-year-old child might be expected to understand, he did not know any studies on the matter, and he could not say anything "right now" about the cognitive development that takes place between and three and four years of age. Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 393–395.
97. Coleman testified he could remember "two or three patients" in the course of his twenty-year professional career who were victims of child sexual abuse. None of those cases involved children under the age of eight. He could not remember if he had treated any victims of child sexual abuse in the last five years (tr. 4207, lines 3–16). Coleman also testified that he had developed "a special interest" in how children were interviewed in sexual abuse cases "about 9 or 10 months ago" (tr. 4208).
98. State v. Fuster, Coleman deposition (August 12, 1985), tr. 38.
99. Trial tr. 4381.
100. State v. Fuster, September 24, 1985, tr. 75.
101. Trial tr. 4256.
102. Trial tr. 4243, line 15.
103. Trial tr. 4284.
104. Trial tr. 4410.
105. Trail tr. 4270.
106. Trial tr. 4424.
107. Trial tr. 4667 ("I advised him yesterday that the only witness he could compel me to call is him and that's what I did").
108. Trial tr. 4465, lines 16–18.
109. See e.g., 4577 ("That was not a business." "You keep calling it a babysitting service. You want to make it sound like a daycare center, which it wasn't.").
110. Trial tr. 4596–4599. ("since I have the blood already," tr. 4596, line 5; "suffered a big pain" on my penis, tr. 4597, lines 21–23; "I did not go there for that reason" tr. 4598, line 4).
111. The doctor was apparently a family friend of Fuster's and accordingly the state was worried he might slant his testimony accordingly. There are indications that Fuster's STD test came back "borderline," and the defense was apparently worried this information would be incriminating.
112. Trial tr. 4812, lines 7–9 (Becky), and line 13 (Tammy).
113. Trial tr. 4817.
114. Messerschmidt, A., and M. Ducassi. "Wife: Fuster Beat Me Soon After We Met," Miami Herald (September 13, 1985), 1B.
115. Trial tr. 4820, line 12.
116. Trial tr. 4822, lines 15–17.
117. Trial tr. 4835, lines 1–4.
118. Trial tr. 4852, lines 12–20.
119. Trial tr. 4853, lines 19–20.
120. Trial tr. 4864 (snake).
121. [Mayor] v. Fuster, Case No. 84-42560, 11th Judicial Circuit, Dade County, Florida, Deposition of Dan Casey (June 24, 1986), tr. 95.

122. Fuster-Escalona v. McDonough, No. 06-6916, U.S. Supreme Court. Cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1213, 127 S. Ct. 1251 (February 20, 2007).
123. Charlier and Downing, "Patterns Emerge," 43.
124. Nathan, "The Making of a Modern Witch Trial," 20.
125. Debbie Nathan, "Satanism and Child Molestation: Construction the Ritual Abuse Scare," in James Richardson, Joel Best, and David G. Bromley, eds. The Satanism Scare (New York: Aldine de Gruyer, 1991), 88–89, fn. 1.
126. Debbie Nathan and Steve Almond, "Reno Reconsidered," Miami New Times (March 3–9, 1993).
127. Fuster-Escalona v. Singletary, Report of Magistrate Judge Charlene H. Sorrentino (March 8, 2002, hereinafter Magistrate Report).
128. Trial tr. 4597.
129. Trial tr. 4595.
130. Robinson and Oberhofer, "Identification of Pathogenic Neisseria Species," Table 1.
131. Robinson and Oberhofer, "Identification of Pathogenic Neisseria Species," 404.
132. Nathan and Almond, "Reno Reconsidered"; Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 195.
133. Whittington, W. L. H., Rice, R. J., Biddle, J. M., and Knapp, J. S., "Incorrect Identification of Neisseria Gonorrhoeae from Infants and Children," Pediatric Infectious Disease Journal, 7(1): 3–10.
134. Whittington et al., "Incorrect Identification," 8.
135. State v. Fuster, Deposition of Freda Burstyn (July 24, 1985), tr. 11.
136. The "unreliable test myth" has mysteriously been given a boost by Wil Whittington, the lead author of the CDC article (who has since left the CDC). But Whittington's declaration is misleading, at best. It relies on, and does not take issue with, the same 1983 article that concluded the RapID/NH test was 99.76 percent accurate.
137. Cockburn, "Reno's Victim," Nation (September 20, 1993), 272.
138. The first session with Noel was largely rapport building. There were pages and pages of discussion of Star Wars and Cat in the Hat. Noel then drew a spaceship. Later he drew a Super-Noel. Super-Noel, as Hollingsworth described it, "could do things that little Noel could not. Like protect himself." The drawing activities continued for a long time without any pointed interviewing. One of the few revealing passages in this interview occurred, ironically, immediately after Noel said, "Nothing concerns me." Then the following exchange ensues:

    LB: Do you know what has been happening?
    NF: Happening?
    LB: Yes, since, you know, where your dad is.
    NF: In jail.
    LB: Do you know why?
    NF: (Inaudible.)
    LB: Do you know why?
    NF: Somebody put a lie on him.
    LB: (Inaudible.)
    JB: Who told you that, that somebody put a lie on your dad?
    NF: My mom. The whole car's apart.
    JB: Now, the hard part is putting the car back together (inaudible).
    NF: It's easy. See this?
    JB: Yes.
    NF: That little hole?
    JB: Yes?
    NF: This has to go over those two holes, okay, and go inside. You're right it's hard.
    JB: Has your mom ever (inaudible).
    NF: No.
    JB: Has your dad ever hit you?
    NF: Some days.

139. N. G. v. Arvida Corp., Case No. 91-35656 (11th Circuit for Dade County, Florida), Deposition of N.F.G. (October 29, 1992), tr. 48.
140. Deposition of N.F.G, tr. 48–49.
141. Deposition of N.F.G, tr. 59.
142. Deposition of N.F.G., tr. 47, 60, 73, 125.
143. Some political activists who have embraced Noel Fuster's "retraction" decided to include him as a speaker at the so-called Day of Contrition, an event designed to link cases like Country Walk to the Salem witch trials. Given the opportunity to provide a clear retraction to an audience that wanted to hear one, Noel Fuster did not deliver. Here is a complete, verbatim transcription of Noel Fuster's rambling, equivocating statement:

> Hello. My name is Noel Fuster. I don't have the knowledge or the know-how to opt really for any good solutions or anything like that, but I can offer one thing, and that's experience. My experience has shown me that a lot of times doctors do have the way of knowing what's wrong. One example, me, they found a virus or some type of sickness, and it could have been any number of things. I could have had a cold, a sore throat, or anything, but within really human error, or I don't know exactly what happened, I was suddenly diagnosed with gonorrhea. I got a multitude of shots. I could go all into that explanation, but it's just I feel if you have a solution, scientists, let's have an answer, but people will end up finding a way to kind of mess that up somehow, you know, and the way, I guess, our emotions carry us or what-not, I think it's really important to try to get the message out to people, and we can find a way, but even if we had the way of finding out, would we still get the answer out there and would the right things be done? People most of the time do the right things that need to be done, but I'm glad there's so much care and so much, you know, want to do something, and something needs to be done, something needs to be done. Noel Fuster, Salem Day of Contrition (January 13, 1997, Forum B), [transcription], tr. 77.

144. Debbie Nathan, "Janet Reno has a Child Care Skeleton,"Capital Times (February 17, 1993), 9A.
145. Jane Daugherty, "Baby Sitters' Sexual Abuse Trial Is Delayed," Miami Herald (June 3, 1985), 3B.
146. Rael Jean Isaac, "Abusive Justice: Janet Reno's Dirty Secret," National Review (June 30, 1997), 31–35, 32; Debbie Nathan, "Revisiting Country Walk," Issues in Child Abuse Accusations (Winter 1993) 5(1): 1–11, 5 (kept nude); Robert Rosenthal, "Janet Reno's Child Abuse" (May 1996), 27–37 35 (drugged).
147. State v. Fuster, Dinerstein statement, 4–5.
148. First, Dinerstein lost his private investigator's license years before making his claims about Ileana Fuster. See Complaint (Information Report), Bureau of Regulation and Enforcement. Report of Investigator Tom Murray (stamped March 17, 1989, indicating that "Mr. Dinerstein has been uncooperative in the past with both the Miami Regional Office and the West Palm Beach Office"). See also Final Order, Department of State v. Stephen M. Dinerstein, Linda Dinerstein, Classic Detective Agency (Case No. C89-264). It is unclear from these public records why his license was revoked. Dinerstein's credibility was also damaged early in the Country Walk case when his "sworn statement" that Dr. Joseph Braga was an impostor proved to be completely false.
149. Motion to Prohibit Cruel and Unusual Pre-trial Detention, State v. Fuster, (April 10, 1985).
150. On March 17, 1985, for example, she wrote: Well baby, I'm fine. I got up at 11:30 this morning, late lunch, then you wouldn't believe it but we had to wash our clothes in the shower . . . the laundry was broken." The reflects the strongest objections she lodged at the time about conditions at the prison.
151. State v. Fuster, Shirley Blando deposition, (August 1, 1985), tr. 21, 38, 55.
152. Blando deposition, tr. 6, 11.
153. Rev. Tommy Watson, Correspondence to State Attorney's Office, Miami Dade County (August 28, 1985), 3.
154. State v. Fuster, Proceedings of August 22, 1985, tr. 7.

155. Messerschmidt and Ducassi, "Wife," 1B.
156. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 174. The quote is attributed to "telephone interview with author, August 1991." Ibid., 291, 68.
157. C. B. Mutter, Correspondence to the State Attorney's Office, Miami Dade County, about Ileana Fuster (November 7, 1985), 3.
158. Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 175.
159. Nathan, "Revisiting Country Walk," 6; Nathan and Snedeker, Satan's Silence, 175, Rosenthal, "Janet Reno's Child Abuse," 36.
160. State v. Fuster, Proceedings, August 22, 1985, tr. 10.
161. State v. Fuster, Proceedings of August 22, 1985, tr. 5–8.
162. One of Ileana Flores's answers, for example, twice included the phrase "those things probably happened"—but Cohen's follow-up question changed the subject away from "those things." There are also numerous instances in which in which Cohen interrupted an answer that did not appear to support Frank Fuster's cause. For example, at one point, Ileana Fuster said: "No, they just told me if I recognize him. And because I 'was so afraid of him I would break down. You know, even today I . . . ." This "statement"—it cannot be called a deposition because there was no cross-examination—was reproduced in Issues in Child Abuse Accusations, vol. 6, no. 4 (1994), 192–206. The interruption is on 204, "those things probably happened" is on 195.
163. State v. Fuster, Prehearing Proffer, 5.
164. Rev. Tommy Watson's characterization was "they badgered her and badgered her." Manny Garcia, "Molester's Ex-wife Tells New Story," Miami Herald (March 21, 1995), 2B. Flores's letter says "I told the lawyers to stop bothering me." It also says she was "in a state of total confusion" when Arthur Cohen arrived "unannounced into my life." The letter ends with this paragraph: "I am sorry for the embarrassment that I may have cause to anyone that try to help me in time past. I do not wish to give any other deposition that could be different than the one given 10 years ago. Again, Frank Fuster did horrible things to me and I know he did the same to the children, he deserves to be where he is now. I don't want to be a victim anymore and I wish his attorneys to leave me alone please." Letter of March 18, 1995 "To whom it may concern," signed by Ileana Flores.
165. State v. Fuster, Watson deposition (May 9, 1995), tr. 32–33. This deposition is described in foonote 19 of the Report of the Magistrate Judge, Fuster v. Singletary (2002), 93.
166. "Did Daddy Do It?" transcript, 30.
167. Debbie Nathan, "Satanism and Child Molestation: Construction the Ritual Abuse Scare," in James Richardson, Joel Best, and David G. Bromley, eds. The Satanism Scare (New York: Aldine de Gruyer, 1991); Consultants on Religious Tolerance, "'Country Walk' case in Maimi [sic], FL." Written November 2000. Available at: http://www.religioustolerance.org/ra_fuste.htm# ("In our opinion, fondling did occur at Country Walk.") But they assert it was because of a cultural misunderstanding involving Ileana. The author is apparently unaware that the cultural practice that would supposedly excuse sexual fondling would not be acceptable with girls. See, Elena Padilla, Up from Puerto Rico (Columbia Univerity Press, 1958), 186.
168. "Did Daddy Do It?" 10.
169. "Did Daddy Do It?" 10.
170. Pendergrast, Victims of Memory, 372.
171. In all of Fuster's accounts, he bears no responsibility for his actions, even though he pleaded guilty to First Degree Manslaughter. In 1982, Fuster told Dr. Seth Krieger that:

> The other man pulled a gun, threatened him, and then started to leave the scene. Mr. Escalona [Fuster] grabbed a rifle he had within reach, and pointed it at the other man, trying to "make an arrest." The other man yanked on the barrel of the gun, it went off, and he died of the resulting wound.

Note how Fuster could not bring himself to say that he shot his own rifle. Yet witnesses, including the off-duty police officer, all agree that Fuster shot an unarmed man in cold blood. Dr. Krieger concluded that Mr. Fuster "developed a lifestyle and world view characterized by compulsive and paranoid features." Those features were borne out in the Country Walk case, where Fuster argued that all of the parents had conspired against him, even including those who did not bring civil suits or have children in the criminal case.

When Fuster testified in the Country Walk case, his misstatements about the manslaughter case became more fantastic. Fuster claimed under oath "when I was twenty years old, couple of months before becoming a New York City police officer, I'm accused of being a murderer." But Fuster was not in training to become a New York police officer. Instead, he was working at the time as a salesman for the Minx Fur Company. Fuster also blamed his conviction on the District Attorney. "The office of the district attorney induced perjury," Fuster asserted, professing that he was "free of guilt." Fuster made the absurd claim that the off-duty policeman in the case "set him up." He also claimed that the man he killed was "armed" and shot first, neither of which were borne out by the evidence at the scene. Fuster's refusal to accept any blame for this death is consistent with the conclusion of his parole assessment upon release from New York:

> Fuster is a tall, well-built man who is almost a compulsive talker. He goes into great details about everything that he discusses and much of the information that he provides differs from that available in the Probation Report. It does not appear that he accepts full responsibility for killing the victim of the instant crime, indicating that the individual threatened him with a weapon and the rifle that the subject had discharged it when it was grabbed by the victim. It does not appear that he has a great deal of remorse over the fact that he killed a man." [New York] Institutional Record–Parole. (HS. No. 1056-627) D: 6/10/70; T: 7/15/70, 5.

When Frank Fuster was standing before the judge in his probation violation hearing in August 1985, he referred to Mr. Isenbek's death by rifle shots as "a crime that did not take place." When Frontline interviewed Frank Fuster in prison in 2001, he described the shooting as "an accident."

172. Michael Kirk also erroneously claimed that the conviction was for "involuntary manslaughter." Michael Kirk and Peter J. Boyer, "Did Daddy Do It," Frontline (April 2002).
173. Deposition of Detective Bradley Marshall, State v. Fuster, No. 81-21904 (December 17, 1981), 35.
174. Deposition of Detective Marshall, 35.
175. He later blamed his lawyer for "not letting him take the stand." But Fuster could have done so if he desired, as he acknowledged in a statement at his probation violation hearing. Fuster's exact words were that his lawyer told him "If you want to testify you got to sign documents for me, release, blah, blah." The release was to indicate that his lawyer advised against such an action. Fuster chose not to sign the release. He apparently decided he would rather claim later he had wanted to testify than actually testify at the time.
176. Hollingsworth, Unspeakable Acts, 208.
177. State v. Fuster, Parole Violation Hearing, August 13, 1984, tr., 140, 19–21.
178. Pendergrast asserts in his book, Victims of Memory, that Fuster was wrongfully convicted of the charge—apparently on the basis of a telephone interview he had with Fuster. 372.
179. Deposition of Detective Bradley Marshall, December 17, 1981, 38–39.
180. The young woman's mother reported the alleged rape, but the prosecution did not go forward. The police suspected that a similar kind of incident might have precipitated the gunshot wound Frank Fuster received in a confrontation at his workplace.
181. Deposition of Martha Gonzales Fuster, State v. Fuster, (August 8, 1985), tr. 58–60 ("he told me that he would kill me," "if I ever took Noel away," "he would kill me if I took Noel," "afraid of him.")
182. Shirley Blando, the assistant chaplain who spent the most time with Ileana, verifies that in June—two months before her lawyer called in the psychologists—"she said that he had forced sex on her." Deposition of Shirley Blando, August 1, 1985, tr. 76. "The first time she talked about it with me and Reverend Watson, it was an unbelievable struggle," Blando continued (tr. 78). Jo Anne Berg, a psychiatric nurse, visited Ileana four times during this period.

She indicated in a pre-trial deposition that "Ileana shared with her mother—for the first time—her initial contact with Frank, when she was raped." The transcript continues:

> Question: Was that her word, "raped"?
> Answer: Yes. (Deposition of Jo Ann Berg, August 1, 1985, 25.)

183. Ceci and Bruck, "Suggestibility of the Child Witness," 113, 3.
184. Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, 27.
185. Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, 15. (They used the word interweaved in 1993 and interleaved in 1995.)
186. The only shark reference in the interviews later transcribed by Professor Wood comes from an interview with a child who was not involved in the trial and who was clearly referring to a stuffed animal in the interview room (Interview [Wood's transcription] 082784C1, 27-8). The exchange begins when the boy says to the interviewer "you know what?" The following ensues:

> Q: What?
> A: I'm scared of that shark.
> Q: Are you really?
> A: Yeah.
> Q: Yeah? You wanna go and look at it closely 'cuz its not scary? Not really. Its kinda friendlly. Come here, let me show you from this angle. Give me your hand.
> A: No.
> Q: Okay. Well, look, let me show you. See? Its not really a shark. See its kinda friendly. Its got a nice eye, see, and its got a fin here.
> A: Yeah., but it looks like a . . .
> Q: Its just kinda nice. Here. You can touch it, it won't hurt. Yeah.
> A: Ooo, like a real fish!
> Q: Is it like a real fish?
> A: Yes, but its not.

What is obvious from this exchange is that the child is referring to a stuffed animal in the interview room, not to a real shark. Moreover, he clearly knows the difference between the two (it's like a real fish, "but its not").

187. Interview 01785C1 [Wood's transcription], 5–7. This videotape was transcribed into the trial record on pages 4642–4643. The transcription at trial contains several errors which are detailed in fn. 78 of this chapter.
188. Ceci and Bruck, "Suggestibility of the Child Witness," 423, fn. 5. The article refers to the Fusters as the "Fursters" throughout.
189. Bruck affidavit, para. 150, p. 52.
190. Bruck affidavit, para. 9, p. 4.
191. They refer to their case studies as "brief summaries" and "sketches." Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, 7, 18. They allow that their analysis is "not based on a quantitative analysis of all of the interviews" (82).
192. There were a handful of additional interviews after the second indictment was filed; the defense agreed they were irrelevant to the child suggestibility defense.
193. The excerpts were identified through the painstaking process of looking through the trial transcripts of the interviews for passages that match the excerpts in the book.
194. (1) excerpt on 112, identified as J.L., can be found at testimony of J.L., tr. 2905; (2) excerpt on 122–123, identified as "child," can be found at testimony of J.L., tr. 4653–4654; (3) excerpt on 136 identified as "child," can be found at testimony of J.L., tr. 2942; and (4) excerpt on 147, identified as "child," can be found at testimony of J.L., tr. 4663–4664.
195. Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, 148.
196. Ceci and Bruck, Jeopardy in the Courtroom, 98.
197. Bruck affidavit, para. 18.
198. Bruck affidavit, para. 96.

199. Noel denied sexual abuse in his initial interview, but he acknowledged serious physical abuse in the same interview.
200. "There's no pee pee game," she told the interviewer. "I call it (inaudible) game." This seems to be an acknowledgment of some sort, but obviously it is impossible to know without ascertaining what the court reporter found inaudible.
201. Trial tr. 1815.
202. Deposition of Dan Casey, tr. 59–60.
203. Neither of the Menninger interviews is mentioned in para. 5 of Bruck's 1999 affidavit in Fuster's federal habeas petition, which details, in Bruck's words, the materials "sent for my review" by counsel, Robert Rosenthal.
204. Trial tr. 1981–1982.
205. Bruck affidavit, 83: "At the end of JC's interview on August 10, 1984, the Bragas gave JC a bag of toys and told him there were a whole bunch of games in the bag. (9/12/85, 198–199). JC returned to the Bragas three days later, having done a lot more talking in the meantime. (9/13/85, 182)."
206. Trial tr. 2375, lines 11–15.
207. State v. Fuster, Affidavit of Stephen M. Dinerstein, filed February 6, 1985 ("confirming" that "the real" Joseph Braga is dead).
208. Rael Jean Isaac, "Abusive Justice," National Review (June 30, 1997).
209. Robert Rosenthal, "Janet Reno's Child Abuse," Penthouse (May 1996).
210. Laurie Davis Braga, "Development and Evaluation of a Test Analysis System for Describing Intra-Child Variables in Learning Disabled Preschool Children," unpublished dissertation, Northwestern University, August 1972.
211. Correspondence from Patricia Green, investigator, Office of Ethics, American Psychological Association to Laurie Davis Braga, Ph.D., October 13, 1993.
212. Nathan informed the APA that she had "no personal interest in filing a complaint" and she specifically declined to do so, while noting that she assumed the APA "would have its own interest" in taking any appropriate disciplinary action. Correspondence from Debbie Nathan to Stanley E. Jones, director, Office of Ethics, American Psychological Association. The letter is dated "March 29, 1992" by Nathan, but the year is in error. The letter states it is in response to correspondence from Jones on March 23, 1993, and the Nathan response was stamped as received by APA on April 1, 1993.
213. Nathan, who lived in El Paso at the time, has since acknowledged that she regularly met with James Wood during this time.
214. Section 8.04 of the code [in 1992] provided: "When a psychologist believes that there may have been an ethical violation by another psychologist, they attempt to resolve the issue by bringing it to the attention of that individual. . . ."
215. Ethics Complaint Form [against Laurie Braga], American Psychological Association. Signed by James Wood on February 15, 1995.
216. The telephone number matched the 1995 El Paso telephone book listing for Deborah Nathan. The address in the phone book matches the return address Nathan listed in the letter she sent to the APA in 1993.
217. Jane Daugherty, "County Walk Case Spotlights Psychologist Couple," Miami Herald (August 12, 1985), B1.
218. Rosenthal, "Janet Reno's Child Abuse," Penthouse, 30.
219. Jay Ducassi, "State Is Dropping Child Abuse Case," Miami Herald (August 20, 1985), B1. 220. Patrick May, "Specialist Switches in Rape Case," Miami Herald (August 15, 1985), 2BR.
221. Boyer, Children of Waco, New Yorker (May 15, 1995), 44.
222. Coleman testimony, Trial tr. 4410.
223. Mark D. Everson, "Understanding Bizarre, Improbable, and Fantastic Elements in Children's Accounts of Abuse," Child Maltreatment (May 1997): 134–150.
224. See text accompanying footnotes 212–217.
225. Fuster Escalona v. Singletary, Petitioner's Reply Brief and Amended Petition for Habeas Corpus, 3.
226. Report of Magistrate Judge, Fuster v. Singletary, Case No. 97-1369-Civ-LENARD (March 8, 2002), slip opinion, 93.

227. Report of Magistrate Judge, 93.
228. Report of Magistrate Judge, 70.
229. Initial Brief for Petitioner Appellant, 4.

Conclusion II

1. Stephen J. Ceci, "Some Overarching Issues in the Children's Suggestibility Debate," ch. 1 in John Doris, ed., The Suggestibility of Children's Recollections: Implications for Eyewitness Testimony (American Psychological Association 1991), 1. See also, Tori DeAngelsi, "Controversy Marks Child Witness Meeting,"APA Monitor (August 1989): 1, 8–9.
2. Liz Hunt, "Psychologists Divided on Children's Testimony," Washington Post (July 26, 1991), A3.
3. I obtained unfettered access to the transcript and related materials after signing an agreement, verified by the Institutional Review Board at my university, that I would never disclose the names of the children in the case. The agreement honored the spirit of the protective order and of the decision in In the Matter of Application of VV Publishing Co., 120 N.J. 508; 577 A.2d 412 (1990).
4. Ceci and Bruck, "Child Witnesses," 2.
5. The term is Ceci and Bruck's. It is not clear whether they consider any inquiry by a parent to qualify as an "interview," but there is no doubt that parents exercised considerable influence in how the McMartin case evolved.
6. There are no citations or footnotes in those paragraphs save a final footnote attributed to a "close observer of the trial." I asked Professor Bruck to clarify the nature of this source. She replied that she could not remember., and promised to follow up on this question and several others; she did not respond to repeated efforts for a substantive response after the interview in October 2009.

Chapter Seven

1. Investigative Staff of the Boston Globe, Betrayal: The Crisis in the Catholic Church (Back Bay Books, 2002), 23; Walter V. Robinson, "$20m Accord Seen in Geoghan Cases," Boston Globe (March 5, 2002), A1.
2. Investigative Staff of the Boston Globe, Betrayal: The Crisis in the Catholic Church (Back Bay Books, 2002), 120.
3. Frank Bruni and Laurie Goodstein, "Rome Withholding Endorsement of U.S. Abuse Plan," New York Times (October 18, 2002); Joan Rivera, Bishops to Revisit Policy on Sex Abuse," Baltimore Sun (November 11, 2002).
4. See generally Jason Berry, Lead Us Not Into Temptation: Catholic Priests and the Sexual Abuse of Children (Doubleday, 1992).
5. Investigative Staff of the Boston Globe, Betrayal, 6.
6. Investigative Staff of the Boston Globe, Betrayal, 7.
7. Howard Bloom, Richard Winton, and Alan Zarembo, "Accused Teacher Drew Sheriff's Scrutiny in '94," Los Angeles Times (February 2, 10212), AA1.
8. Jason Kandel, "Telfair Elementary Teacher Sentenced in Sex Abuse Case," NBCLA.com (Thursday, September 20, 2012).
9. Richard Krueger, "The New American Witch Hunt,"Los Angeles Times (March 11, 2007), M1.
10. Donna Schram and Cheryl Milloy, "Sexually Violent Predators and Civil Commitment," Washington State Institute for Public Policy (February 1998).
11. Robert Barnoski, "Sex Offender Sentencing in Washington State: Measuring Recidivism," Washington State Institute for Public Policy (August 2005).
12. "Sex Offender Sentencing in Washington State."
13. http://www.meganslaw.ca.gov/ (visited September 30, 2011).
14. A 1996 study into the success of Washington's notification laws revealed that 3.5 percent of sex offenders, subject to notification laws, had been harassed by the public (Scott Matson and Roxanne Lieb, "Community Notification in Washington State: 1996 Survey of Law Enforcement," Washington State Institute for Public Policy, November 1996). But there have been a few terrible cases of vigilantism, including a double murder.

15. Richard Tewksbury, "Policy Implications of Sex Offender Residence Restrictions," Criminology & Public Policy (May 2011) 10(2).
16. Monica Davey and Abby Goodnough, "Doubts Rise as States Hold Sex Offenders After Prison," New York Times (March 4, 2007), 1.
17. A very recent exception is Rachel Aviv's article in the New Yorker, which highlights someone whose main offenses involved child pornography and has been subject to civil confinement in Minnesota. Rachel Aviv, "The Science of Sex Abuse," The New Yorker (January 14, 2013). But Aviv plays down the defendant's guilty plea for enticing a child, focusing instead on the child pornography charges. Court records indicate that the defendant —whose identity Aviv chose to shield—"talked specifically with 'Sarah,' the fourteen-year-old, about engaging in sexual acts together" before driving to an agreed meeting place. He had "lingerie and sex toys" with him when he was arrested approaching two undercover officers. Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law, and Order for Judgment, U.S. v. Volungus, Civil Action No. 07-12060-GAO (U.S. District Court, District of Massachusetts) March 8, 2012, 4. In his ruling, Judge George A. O'Toole noted that it was "uncontested" that Volungus had attempted "to meet what he thought was a fourteen-year-old girl for the purposes of having sex with her." 12.
18. Senator Tom Coburn introduced an amendment: "To reduce the cost of providing federally funded prescription drugs by eliminating fraudulent payments and prohibiting coverage of Viagra for child molesters and rapists and for drugs intended to induce abortion." This was intended to force supporters of the Obama Administration, whose plan would treat all Americans the same, to have to cast a vote that would be portrayed as "Viagra for child molesters." Supporters of the president's bill were later subjected to that charge, which was rated as false by Politifact.com (October 26, 2010). For another example of these misleading tactics, see Politifact column, "Cicilline 'argued against Megan's Law and voted against mandatory registration of sex offenders'" Providence Journal (October 27, 2010) (Ruled "mostly false").
19. Chrysanthi S. Leon, Sex Fiends, Perverts, and Pedophiles: Understanding Sex Crime Policy in America (NYU Press, 2011).
20. Ross E. Cheit and Erica Goldschmidt, "Child Molesters in the Criminal Justice System: A Comprehensive Case-Flow Analysis of the Rhode Island Docket (1985–1993)," New England Journal on Criminal and Confinement (1997) 23(2), 267–301.
21. Theodore Cross et. al., "Prosecution of Child Abuse: A Meta-Analysis of Rates and Criminal Justice Decisions," Trauma, Violence & Abuse (October 2003), 323, 333.
22. Mary Hargrove and Susan Roth, "Preying on Pupils,"Arkansas Democrat-Gazette (September 8, 1996).
23. Amicus Curiae Brief for the New Jersey Council of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry in State v. J.Q., 130 N.J. 554; 617 A.2d 1196 (New Jersey Supreme Court, 1993).
24. Steven F. v. Anaheim Union High School District, 112 Cal. App. 4th 904; 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 105 (2003).
25. "More Guidance for Teachers," Editorial, Los Angeles Times (November 11, 2003), B12.
26. People v. Shumate, Reporter's Transcript on Appeal, Vol. II, tr. 564 (line 28)–565 (line 1); testimony of Jill Paddack, first-grade teacher on yard duty on February 2, 1994.
27. People v. Shumate, Probation Officer's Report and Recommendation, Alameda County Superior Court (August 17, 1995), 11.
28. Handwritten letter to Lesley Pankopf (Deputy Probation Officer) dated March 28, 1995. Name redacted. Attached to People v. Shumate Probation Officer's Report and Recommendation.
29. People v. Shumate, Appellant's Opening Brief, Court of Appeals of the State of California, First Appellate District, Division Two (November 4, 1996); Michael Snedeker co-counsel for the defendant.
30. People v. Shumate, Reporter's Transcript on Appeal, Vol. IX, tr. 2298.
31. People v. Shumate, Reporter's Transcript on Appeal, Vol. VI, tr. 1390 (lines 24–26). He also testified that Shumate told him "he got involved with one of his foster kids, and his wife found out. And they sent the foster kid away" (tr. 1391).

32. Elaine Herscher, "Molest Sentence May Be Delayed,"San Francisco Chronicle (August 17, 1995), A21.
33. Matt Gryta, "Man Pleads Guilty to Molestation; Ex-Officer Gets Jail for Abusing Boys," Buffalo News (January 9, 1993): 4.
34. Carol Hopkins, Salem Day of Contrition (January 14, 1997) [transcription], tr. 52.
35. There is no appellate decision in this case because Ferrara pleaded guilty.
36. Mark Pendergrast, Victims of Memory, 496.
37. Dr. Young testified "that B.L.'s physical condition was consistent with a history of rectal penetration, and that the best explanation for the physical condition of all three boys was that they had been victims of sexual abuse." State v. Lawton, 164 Vt. 179; 667 A.2d 50; 1995 LEXIS 88 (1995), 182, 54.
38. State v. Lawton, Trial tr. 139.
39. State v. Lawton, Trial tr. 142.
40. This evidence came in through the testimony of Mark Williams, the mother's counselor. Williams testified that when the mother told him this story (and one other) he became convinced she had an obligation to report the matter to child protective services (State v. Lawton, Trial transcript, tr. 222–223). This is how the case in Vermont began. Since the defendant's theory of the case blamed the therapist in part, there is considerable irony in the fact that the defendant objected to this testimony. As the state pointed out in its brief, the defense opened the door to this testimony through the theory of the case it advanced at trial. Brief of Appellee, State v. Lawton, Vermont Supreme Court, Docket No. 93-098, 18–37.
41. State v. Lawton, 164 Vt. 179; 667 A.2d 50 (1995; "B.L.'s statement was not the product of repeated interviewing, nor was any evidence of coercion or manipulation present. Given the circumstances, the statement was trustworthy").
42. Asked when he first became aware of the abuse allegations, Lawton gave a misleading answer about "three mild accusations" contained in divorce papers. There were actually four allegations and, as the prosecutor apparently emphasized too much, they were not "mild"; they involved anal sex, and Lawton knew that.
43. U.S. v. Bighead, 128 F.3d 1329, 1332 (9th cir. 1997).
44. U.S. v. Bighead, 1338.
45. U.S. v. Bighead, 1336.
46. Thomas Sowell, "Legal Lynchings," Forbes (January 26, 1998).
47. Noonan noted that "being a victim has become a popular calling" and "those who have complained of such abuse are identified by their therapists as 'victims,' or, more dramatically, as 'survivors.'" U.S. v. Bighead, 1338.
48. Pendergrast, "The Case of Elsie Oscarson," http://ncrj.org/Oscarson/Oscarson.html.
49. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, "Defining Deviancy Down," American Scholar (Winter 1993).
50. Letter to the editor from Robert Rosenthal, Wall Street Journal (November 7, 2003), A11.
51. Report and recommendation, Serrano v. Kirkpatrick, Federal District Court for the Southern District of New York (06-CV-990), 2.
52. State v. Weber, 807 N.Y.S.2d 222, 25 A.D.3d 919 (2006).
53. Emily E. Smith, "Hillsboro Man, Convicted of Sex Abuse in 2006, Shortens Sentence with Plea Deal," Oregonian (September 2, 2010).
54. State v. Carol M.D., 983 P.2d 1165 (Court of Appeals of Washington, Division Three, Panel Five, September 14, 1999). Robert Rosenthal was of counsel.
55. CBS 48 Hours transcript (April 3, 1997), 18. Hopkins also told CBS News that she coached the girl for speeches before Congress and for a press conference by the Justice Committee, the organization Hopkins founded (19, 20). It is not clear why this unusual foster placement was approved, but the placement is particularly ironic in light of Hopkins's editorial favoring "the all too obvious recommendation that foster children should not be placed with a person who has a conflict of interest and is in a dual role." Carol Hopkins, "Wenatchee Case Demands Reform of Child-Protection System," Seattle Post-Intelligencer (March 4, 1998), A13. CBS News reported that Sam Doggett eventually ran away from Hopkins's home "with an unknown man in an unknown car" (21).

56. State v. Carol M. D., 89 Wn. App. 77; 948 P.2d 837; 1997 Wash. App. LEXIS 2012 (December 9, 1997), 841–842. The court also concluded that the defendants should have been authorized funds to hire an expert on false memory. In discussing that claim, however, the court noted "there is evidence that M.D. [the youngest child] stated from the beginning that her parents had abused her" (844). The court also quoted from the Kelly Michaels case in New Jersey with approval and ordered a so-called taint hearing (845). The Supreme Court of Washington granted review and remanded the case in light of the In Re the Dependency of A.E.P., 135 Wash.2d 208, 956 P.2d 297 (1998), a case in which the court declined to adopt taint hearings. State v. Doggett, 136 Wn. 2d 1019; 967 P.2d 548; 1998 Wash. LEXIS 782 (1998). The court of appeals subsequently withdrew the portion of its earlier opinion concerning taint hearings, and adhered to the decision to reverse the convictions on other grounds and remand the case for retrial. State v. Carol M.D., 97 Wn.App. 355; 983 P.2d 1165; 1999 Wash. App. LEXIS 1840 (1999).
57. AP, "Judge Denies Family's Claim in Child Sex-Abuse Investigation," The Columbian (November 21, 2004): C4.
58. The interview in which this woman makes the admission from prison is contained in a local TV news story that can be viewed at http://youtu.be/Y2cSpKPY1XM.
59. Andrew Schneider, "Jury Rejects Wenatchee Suit; Verdict Jolts the Accused in Child Sex Cases; City and Police Are Absolved," Seattle Post-Intelligencer (June 30, 1998), A1.
60. Barber and Schneider, "Detective a Man Who Charmed," A7; "With Every Step, Rights Were Trampled."
61. Kathyrn Lyon, Witch Hunt: A True Story of Social Hysteria and Abused Justice (Avon, 1998).
62. Philip Terzian, "The Witchcraft Trials of the '80s," Providence Journal (May 31, 1995), A11.
63. Joe Strupp, "Molester Sentenced to 6 Years in Prison," Press-Enterprise (Riverside, California, November 21, 1998), B2.
64. Dave Hughes, "Man, 61, Admits Molesting Kids," Arkansas Democrat-Gazette (May 19, 2007).
65. Todd C. Frankel, "Town in 'Shocked Silence,' Ste. Genevieve Struggle with Report from Authorities That Trusted Man Molested 40 Children over 30 Years," St. Louis Post-Dispatch (April 6, 2007), A1.
66. Michele Mihalovich, "Man Accused of Molestations at Day Care Pleads Guilty to Lesser Charges," Wenatchee World (September 18, 2010). The lesser charge was third-degree assault of a child. The information about previous complaints was contained in an affidavit filed by a Child Protective Services investigator.
67. There are some states with a three-tier system that allows a middle category between substantiated and unsubstantiated, where there is evidence of abuse but not enough to "substantiate" the case—these are designated "indicated." Without the distinction, the "unsubstantiated" category lumps together everything from cases determined to be untrue to those where there was definite evidence, but not enough to "substantiate." A study of "unsubstantiated" cases reveals that many unsubstantiated reports involve either some form of maltreatment or preventive service needs appropriate to CPS intervention, and that using substantiation as a means of gauging the validity of a CPS referral is therefore intrinsically fallacious. Brett Drake, "Unraveling 'Unsubstantiated'," Child Maltreatment (August 1996) (1), 3, 261–271.
68. Delores D. Stroud, Sonja L. Martens, and Julia Barker, "Criminal Investigation of Child Sexual Abuse: A Comparison of Cases Referred to the Prosecutor to Those Not Referred," Child Abuse & Neglect, (2000), 24(5): 689–700.
69. Theodore P. Cross, Debra Whitcomb, and Edward DeVos, "Criminal Justice Outcomes of Prosecutions of Child Sexual Abuse: A Case-flow Analysis," Child Abuse & Neglect (1995), 19(12), 1431.
70. Ellen Gray, Unequal Justice: The Prosecution of Child Sexual Abuse (Free Press, 1993).
71. In Minnesota, there were no statistical indications that the age of the victim affected the likelihood of prosecution. In Wisconsin, cases involving very young children were approximately four times less likely to be referred for prosecution than cases in the middle age group (six to twelve). Tucker, "The Effect of Victim Age and Gender," 109.
72. Barbara Smith and Sharon Goretsky-Elstein, "The Prosecution of Child Sexual and Physical Abuse Cases: Final Report" (American Bar Association, 1993).

73. Tucker, "The Effect of Victim Age and Gender."
74. Bruck and Ceci, "Unveiling Four Common Misconceptions," Current Directions in Psychological Science (2004), 13(6), 229, 231.
75. Lyon and Pezdek, "From Post-Mortem to Preventive Medicine: Next Steps for Research on Child Witnesses," Journal of Social Issues (2006), 62(4), 833.
76. She proceeded to discuss the McMartin case and the Jordan, Minnesota, cases in some detail, blaming investigators for the lack of criminal convictions. Civia Tamarkin, "Investigative Issues in Ritual Abuse Cases, Part I," Treating Abuse Today, 4(4): 15. The two-part article was an edited and abridged version of an address to the Fifth Regional Conference on Abuse and Multiple Personality, June 1993, Alexandria, Virginia.
77. Correspondence from Debbie Nathan to Richard Harris, Nightline. October 2, 1996. Reproduced in FMSF-News email from Peter Freyd (October 12, 1996).
78. "A Child's Word," Nightline, ABC News (November 14, 1996). Transcript #4039-1, Koppel quote.
79. Complaint Affidavit, Broward County Police Department, Offense Report LL95-12-2769 November 5, 1996, 2.
80. Offense Incident Report, Sunrise Police Department, Report No. 94-17243 (includes physical evidence conveyed by Sandra Gibson, Nurse Practitioner).
81. Nat Hentoff, "Distorted Journalism," Village Voice (December 17, 1996), 22.
82. There were more than fifty stories in the Lexis/Nexis newspaper database about the case on December 1, 1996—two weeks before Hentoff's column was published—including one in his local newspaper. See Mireya Navarro, "Roses and Outrage at Funeral for 2 Young Girls," New York Times (November 13, 1996), A14.
83. Larry Welborn et. al., "Verdict in the Samanatha Runnion Killing: Guilty," Orange County Register (April 29, 2005), 1. See also Arlene Getz, Jennifer Barrett, and Geoffrey Gagnon, "The Top Stories of 2002," Newsweek (December 26, 2002).
84. Hopkins had served on a special grand jury in San Diego that criticized prosecutors, pediatricians, and child protective service workers for how they handled child sexual abuse cases. Although seldom noted when this report is mentioned, a grand jury the following year issued a report that criticized this report as exaggerated and inaccurate.
85. "Protesting Modern Witch Hunts," Press Release, January 14, 1997. Justice Committee, Carol Lamb Hopkins, executive director.
86. Richard Gardner, Salem Day of Contrition, Afternoon session (January 14, 1997) [transcription], 332, 361.
87. Jennifer Hoult, "The Evidentiary Admissibility of Parental Alienation Syndrome," Children's Legal Rights Journal (Spring 2006) 26(1).
88. "False memory syndrome" dismisses reports of sexual abuse by adults, generally blaming them on the therapist of the person making the accusation. Strangely, this syndrome is often claimed to exist solely on the basis of the denial of the person accused.
89. Ohme described himself as "the silent man behind the scenes who was going to change the CAPTA law." He said Dorothy Rabinowitz was going to write an article about him, but "I told her that I could not do it because it would blow our cover." Email correspondence from Herman W. Ohme to Earl Rogers, Subject: "Confidential, Please" (November 19, 1999). On a now-defunct website from an organization that called itself the Ohio Association of Responsible Mental Health Practices, Ohme described his involvement with this issue: "When the Republican Party took control of the U.S. House of Representatives in 1994, after 40 years as the Minority political party, I saw the opportunity to change the CAPTA laws (Mondale Act of 1974) which had been the root cause of the child sex abuse hysteria and false accusations. I had been an active member of the RNC (Republican National Committee) for years and had some voice with the new party in control. I enlisted the help of nationally known CAPTA experts, Richard Gardner, M.D., Carol Hopkins, San Diego Grand Jury Foreman, to testify before the U.S. House and Senate Committee's to overhaul the Mondale Act of 1974. Our team was successful in correcting some of the worst features of the old CAPTA law but were blocked from deleting the 'mandatory reporting' feature." WWW.LTECH.NET/OHIOARMHP (accessed April 5, 2002).

90. Eileen McNamara, "Hardly a Case of Persecution,"Boston Globe (January 15, 1997), B1.
91. See e.g., "Complaint to Boston Globe for McCarthyite Smear," http://mysite.verizon.net/vzex11z4/globsmer.html; Alexander Cockburn, "Our Little Secret," Counter-Punch (May 1–15, 1997).
92. Voluntary Statement of Mark Glazer, Somerset County Prosecutor's Office, August 25, 1995, 7.
93. Voluntary Statement of Tyler Glazer, Somerset County Prosecutor's Office, August 25, 1995, 8(19).
94. Under the Michaels decision, the defendant must make a showing of "some evidence" that the victim's statements were the product of "suggestive or coercive interview techniques." Then the burden shifts to the state to prove the reliability of the statements by "clear and convincing evidence."
95. New Jersey v. Marzolf, Michaels Hearing, Somerset County Superior Court, Indictment No. 96-01-0055 (August 12, 1997), tr. 12, 18, 109.
96. New Jersey v. Marzolf, Michaels Hearing (August 12, 1997), tr. 14, 93.
97. New Jersey v. Marzolf, Michaels Hearing (August 12, 1997), tr. 37–38.
98. New Jersey v. Marzolf, Michaels Hearing (August 12, 1997), tr. 88.
99. New Jersey v. Marzolf, Michaels Hearing (August 12, 1997), tr .54.
100. Here is a side-by-side comparison.

Statement to police, August 25, 1995 (p.4)	Testimony in court, May 5, 1997 (p.6)
I went in the house to get my shoes on, and come to realize that Travis and Jimmy, my wife's brother, were still in the house, but nowhere to be found. It was very quiet and I had made my progress to go up to the second story of the house into the living room, where Travis and Jimmy were last seen. Were not there. Got to the third landing, and to my left is Jimmy's room and I had noticed that it was very quiet as I got to the bedroom, I noticed Jimmy hovered over Travis from behind Travis with his hands in his pants.	I basically went into the house and to go get shoes on to go look at a shed that was in the backyard with his father. Knowing Travis and James were in the house still, as I approached, I proceeded into the house, I did acknowledge that it was very quiet. And when I went up to the third landing of the house, I had viewed that Travis was standing in front of James. As I saw that James was hovered over with his hands in his pants.

101. New Jersey v. Marzolf, Michaels Hearing (August 12, 1997), tr. 35.
102. New Jersey v. Marzolf, Michaels Hearing, (August 12, 1997), tr. 95,4–6.
103. Jane Mary Rawls, "How Questions and Body-parts Diagrams Could Affect the Content of Young Children's Disclosures," Lawtalk New Zealand (April 1996), 28–29. She concludes: "open-ended questions only is by far the safest option when interviewing children as it results in greater accuracy of reports." (It is not clear whether this study was ever published in a peer-reviewed journal.) Quote from interview with Tyler: "Now I want you to take my pen and circle anywhere on these, this diagram that anybody touched you."
104. New Jersey v. Marzolf, Michaels Hearing, (August 12, 1997), tr. 36, lines 20–24.
105. The judge took note of the fact that Professor Bruck had not actually heard the mother's testimony, although it was apparently available to her on tape.
106. New Jersey v. Marzolf, Decision on Michaels Hearing, (August 14, 1997), tr. 9.
107. The father was asked why he waited an hour to call his wife. The defense tried to get into the boy's school records and counseling records—all under the rubric of examining the "totality of the circumstances." Professor Bruck made derogatory comments about the parents when I interviewed her on October 12, 2009. "They were calling the police all the time," she asserted. No evidence of that was presented in court.

108. Affidavit of Probable Cause, Lower Pottsgrove Police Department, October 29, 2002, (Comp/Inc. #D-685/10290257), 1.
109. Police Criminal Complaint, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, Incident No. 02-17153 January 17, 2003.
110. Criminal Docket, Court of Common Pleas of Montgomery County, Docket No. CP-46-CR-0000587-2003.
111. James J. Krivacska, "Sexual Abuse Prevention Programs: Can They Cause False Allegations?" Issues in Child Abuse Allegations, (1991), 3. He published another article in this journal written while an inmate at the Adult Diagnostic and Treatment Center at Avenel, New Jersey. James Krivacska, "Societal Myths About Sex Offending," Issues in Child Abuse Accusations (2001), vol. 11. The article warned, among other things, that "after-the-fact association of 'trauma' of sexual abuse with the pleasant genital stimulation [a child] may have experienced (in, for example, a case on fondling) may ultimately interfere with their later experience of sexual pleasure as an adult."
112. The other eight signatories were Charles Brainerd, Kathleen Clarke-Stewart, Melvin Guyer, Timothy Moore, Peter Ornstein, Debra Poole, Amye Warren, and James Wood.
113. Motion of the Scientists Concerned for Reliability of Children's Reports, Accusations and Testimony for Leave to File Amicus Curiae, State v. Krivacska, U.S. Supreme Court, Docket No. 01-1326, April 2, 2002, paras. 5, 7.
114. Unpublished Decision, Krivacska v. Special Classification Review Board, Superior Court of New Jersey Appellate Division, Docket No. A-1217-08T3, August 24, 2011.
115. Many states have declined to institute taint hearings. The largest state that has followed New Jersey's lead is Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania v. Delbridge, 855 A.2d 27 (Penn. 2003).
116. Summit, "The Child Abuse Accommodation Syndrome," 171–193.
117. Lawrence Wright, "Child-Care Demons," New Yorker (October 3, 1994). In a letter to the editor published on November 28, 1994, Wright acknowledged his claims were "wrong in every particular." He admitted that Summit "did not in fact testify at the Michaels case" and that Summit's original article "does not claim that denial is evidence of abuse." Lawrence Wright, "Mistaken Identity," Letter to Editor, New Yorker (November 28, 1994), 15–16.
118. Maggie Bruck and Stephen Ceci, "Forensic Developmental Psychology: Unveiling Four Common Misconceptions," Current Directions in Psychological Science (2004) 13(3): 229.
119. Bruck and Ceci, Current Directions in Psychological Science (2004), 13(3): 230.
120. Thomas A. Roesler and Tiffany Wind, "Telling the Secret: Adult Women Describe Their Disclosure of Incest," Journal of Interpersonal Violence, (1994), 9: 327–338.
121. Kamala London et. al., "Disclosure of Child Sexual Abuse: What Does the Research Tell Us About the Ways That Children Tell?" Psychology, Public Policy, and Law (2005) 11(1): 211–213. The extended criticism of the Sorenson and Snow study appears to be well-taken, although original research into the Hadfield and Bullock cases would be necessary to justify a firm conclusion. Snow was censured for unprofessional conduct in 2008 and her license was suspended subject to a term of four years probation. Stipulation and Order, In the Matter of the License of Barbara W. Snow, Case No. DOPL 2007-7 (Division of Occupational and Professional Licensing, Utah Department of Commerce) February 15, 2008. Snow's defense against these charges makes it clear that additional research would be required to justify a firm conclusion about what this license proceeding proves about Snow's judgment and practice. Response to Notice of Agency Action and Answer to Petition, In the Matter of the License of Dr. Babara Snow (February 12, 2007).
122. There were five defendants at trial. Duane Rouse was acquitted. The case name is the last name of two of the defendants. The first names of all the children in this case have been changed.
123. She had previously been removed from her mother's home. The record in this case does not indicate the reasons for removal.
124. U.S. v. Rouse, 329 F. Supp. 2d 1077 (South Dakota, 2004). Judge Piersol concluded that "the trial testimony of Dr. Kagan and Dr. Farrell established that the children had been sexually abused. The children described the abuse to Dr. Kaplan shortly after they were removed from their home." The judge quoted six paragraphs from the state's brief summarizing the testimony from both doctors as to what they found and were told while examining the children.

125. U.S. v. Rouse, Jury Trial, U.S. District Court for South Dakota, (CR 94-40015, July 27, 1994), tr. 205.
126. When first interviewed about this case by the FBI, Desmond Rouse reportedly told Special Agent Pritchard that he "probably" touched Lacey's "groin area." He also reportedly said that if he abused the children he "must have been pretty drunk." He later denied making the first statement; he said the second statement was taken out of context. U.S. v. Rouse, Jury Trial (August 8–9, 1994), tr. 1597.
127. U.S. v. Rouse, Jury Trial (July 27, 1994), tr. 219.
128. U.S. v. Rouse, Jury Trial (August 10, 1994), tr. 1908.
129. U.S. v. Rouse, Jury Trial (August 9, 1994), tr. 1768–69.
130. U.S. v. Rouse (8th. cir. November 12, 1996), slip opinion, text accompanying fn. 2. This opinion was reported at 100 F.3d 560. It was depublished less than three months later when the court granted a motion to rehear the case, so that only the orders and subsequent history now appear in the Federal Reporter. The "depublished" opinion still resides on the web at this address: https://law.resource.org/pub/us/case/reporter/F3/100/100.F3d.560.95-1559.95-1558.95-1556.95-1554.htm.
131. U.S. v. Rouse, (8th cir. November 12, 1996; Loken, dissent). The majority does not attempt to respond to the factual details provided in this dissent. Instead, they allow, glibly, that "We do not quarrel with the sufficiency of the evidence" (fn. 20 in the [depublished] slip opinion).
132. Judicial Notebook, APA Monitor (June 1997). The article emphasized how the court "relied heavily" on Ceci and Bruck's 1993 article in Psychological Bulletin; it did not mention that the decision as vacated in early February 1997. The same claim was repeated in 1998, again without any mention that the decision was quickly vacated and then overturned. Metta Winter, "Children as Witnesses," Human Ecology Forum (Winter 1998) 26(1): 8–12.
133. The 2-1 decision issued November 16, 1996 was vacated on February 6, 1997 by an unusual grant of rehearing. 107 F.3d 557; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 2190. The case was set for oral argument on April 14. On March 3, the court issued a second order, stating "upon further consideration, the petition for rehearing is granted" but the order to schedule oral arguments was rendered moot and the hearing was cancelled. The same three-judge panel that overturned the convictions in November decided, again in a 2-1 split, to uphold the convictions. Judge McMillian switched positions by concurring with the majority decision written by Judge Loken. U.S. v. Rouse, 111 F. 3d 561; 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 6659 (8th cir. 1997).
134. U.S. v. Rouse, 111 F. 3d 561, 571.
135. U.S. v. Rouse, Hearing on Motion for a New Trial, U.S. District for South Dakota, CR. 94-40015 (September 5, 2001), tr. 27.
136. U.S. v. Rouse, Hearing on Motion for a New Trial, tr. 96.
137. U.S. v. Rouse, 329 F. Supp. 2d 1077 (South Dakota, 2004), 1088.
138. U.S. v. Rouse, 329 F. Supp. 2d 1077, 1080.
139. U.S. v. Rouse, 329 F. Supp. 2d 1077, 1081. When the counselor met with J.R. to inform her that her uncles would not be coming home, J.R. told the counselor "that both her mother and R.R. had told J.R. to lie to the social worker in the summer of 1999." This direct evidence of pressure to recant has gone unacknowledged in the witch-hunt narrative.
140. U.S. v. Rouse, 329 F. Supp. 2d 1077, 1081. The court also noted that "R.R. did not recant her testimony during her interview with Underwager." Indeed, "R.R. responded affirmatively when Dr. Underwager asked if Jesse did things to her that were not right."
141. Stephanie Woodward, "Yankton Sioux Seek Justice for 17-year Old Case at the White House Tribal Nations Conference," Indian Country Today (December 6, 2011). See also, http://ncrj.org/the-ncrj-is-sponosring-the-yankton-four/.
142. Kennedy v. Louisiana, 554 U.S. 407 (2008), 411 ("systemic concerns in prosecuting child rape").
143. Stephen J. Ceci and Richard D. Friedman, "The Suggestibility of Children: Scientific Research and Legal Implications," Cornell Law Review (2000), 86: 33–108.

144. Samuel R. Gross et. al., "Exonerations in the United States 1989 Through 2003." Journal of Criminal Law & Criminology 95, no. 2 (2005): 523–553, 524. Gross now edits a project called The National Registry of Exonerations, which employs a much looser definition of exoneration, one that arguably negates the meaning of the word itself. Cases dismissed without any official finding of innocence are included, even when the dismissal was not based on evidence of innocence. https://www.law.umich.edu/special/exoneration/Pages/glossary.aspx.

Using that definition, the Registry (as of September 28, 2013) included Kelly Michaels as "exonerated" despite: (1) the evidence of guilt elaborated in Chapter Five, (2) the lack of any recantations, (3) the fact that Michaels lost her civil suit, and (4) the lack of any official finding of innocence. Under the same dubious approach, the Registry also lists Sandra Craig (discussed in Chapter Three) as exonerated, despite the medical evidence and the lack of any official finding of innocence, and it lists Deborah and Alvin McCuan (also discussed in Chapter Three), despite the fact the neither of their daughters has ever recanted and the McCuan's lost their civil suit. It appears that the desire to fit cases into the witch-hunt narrative continues to be much stronger than the facts that support such claims, even twenty years after the narrative first took hold.

145. Louanne Lawson and Mark Chaffin, "False Negatives in Sexual Abuse Interviews," Journal of Interpersonal Violence (1992) 7, 532–542. Bruck and her co-authors minimized the significance of this result, arguing that because very few children contract STDs "this sample again is not representative of the CSA population." The authors offered no reason why children contracting STDs would be different from all other sexually abused children in some meaningful way that affects the pattern or likelihood of disclosure. The children in this study stand out for the strength of our certainty that most of the significant number of nondisclosures in the first interview were false denials, a problem never acknowledged in the witch-hunt narrative.

146. Carey Goldberg, "Pediatric Experts Express Doubt on Au Pair's Defense," New York Times (November 12, 1997). Forty-seven pediatric experts signed the letter to the editor, published in Pediatrics (February 1, 1998) 101(2): 321–323.

147. Battered-child syndrome is probably the oldest and most widely recognized syndrome involving child abuse. It was first described by this name in 1962 in a landmark article. C. Henry Kempe et. al., " Battered-Child Syndrome," Journal of the American Medical Association (July 1962) 181(1):17–24.

148. State v. Ardolino, Docket No. CR-95-478, Penobscot [Maine] County Superior Court, (March 8, 1996), vol. IV, tr. 132.

149. State v. Ardolino, vol. IV, tr. 131.

150. Dr. Kristin Sweeney, deputy chief medical examiner for the state, went to the house and examined the root structure below the tree house to see if the roots protruded enough to cause a localized deceleration impact injury. She concluded they could not. The roots are "fairly broad and flat" and "they're not protruding." Tr. 55–56; Vol. VII, March 13, 1996.

151. William Harwood, forensic chemist at the Maine State Police Crime Lab, examined eight containers and one envelope of leaves, twigs, bark, and fiber taken from the area under the tree. None of those items were found to be consistent with anything on the clothing Matthew was wearing that day. Where there should be extensive physical evidence, if Mathew had fallen, not a single fiber was found that linked the clothes he was wearing to the scene Tr. 119–124; Vol. VII, March 13, 1996.

152. All quotes in this paragraph from letter from Dr. Ricci to William R. Stokes re State v. Ardolino (January 19, 1995), 2–4.

153. State v. Ardolino, Excerpt: Testimony of David Ardolino (March 7, 1996), tr. 53.

154. State v. Ardolino, Excerpt: Testimony of David Ardolino, tr. 54.

155. Ardolino v. Maine, Affidavit of Maggie Bruck (on Motion for Post-Conviction Review), Penobscot County Superior Court, Docket No. CR-98-430, 32 ("we can have more confidence in a child's spontaneous statements made prior to any attempt by an adult to elicit what they suspect may be the truth—such as David's initial statement in this case").

156. Ardolino v. Maine, Affidavit of Maggie Bruck, 32.

157. Deposition of Stephen Ceci, November 22, 1993. State v. Foeller, File No. 93-64975-FC (Fourth Judicial Circuit Court for Jackson County, Michigan), 133.
158. Ardolino v. Maine, Affidavit of Maggie Bruck, 15.
159. Ricci testified that he knew Matthew was "an active nine-year-old child" when he examined the records (tr. 149). He also spoke directly to the injuries that could have been accidental. Ricci identified such injuries (bruises and abrasions round the ankle, knees, elbows, and forehead; tr. 134).
160. Declaration of Maggie Bruck, In the Matter of Riley B., Case No. CK40772/CK40775 (Los Angeles County Superior Court, July 25, 2001).
161. Richard Gardner, Salem Day of Contrition, Afternoon session (January 14, 1997) [transcription], tr. 340. The witch-hunt narrative is filled with claims that CAPTA created financial incentives for "finding" abuse. In fact, the funding for CAPTA has always been miniscule compared to the massive changes it supposedly caused. Moreover, the largest portion of CAPTA money went to demonstration projects, which usually meant programs to prevent child abuse. Little CAPTA money has ever gone to state programs or services. There was a deliberate decision when the bill was crafted to provide only token funding of state programs. By statute, there was a mandate to spend 5 percent of the CAPTA budget on existing programs. The allocation of that money has never been based on the number of abuse cases, although that claim is often made by proponents of the witch-hunt narrative. To the contrary, there was a provision "to establish criteria designed to achieve equitable distribution of assistance under this section among the States." HHS determined that "equitable funding" would be provided through a per child funding formula. The funding formula, in other words, is a function of "the number of children under 18 residing in the state."
162. Thomas Lyon, "The New Wave of Suggestibility Research: A Critique," Cornell Law Review (1999) 84, 1004–1087.

INDEX

ABC Scholar Day Care Center, 164
ABC television on Believe the Children, 387–88
  on child's word, 390
  McMartin Preschool case, 6, 19, 72–73
Abuse of Innocence (Eberle and Eberle), 7, 418n1
Accommodations for children as witnesses, 187–88
Acorn, David, 428n167
Activist therapists, 69–72
Adam Walsh Protection and Safety Act of 2006, 370, 372
Aldridge and Wilcox case, 117
Alexander, Randall, 397
Allen, Joseph, 149–50, 374, 438n110. See also Head Start Program case Allister, John dropped from case, 226, 247
  extreme behavioral evidence, 230
Almond, Steve, 328
American Academy of Pediatrics, 148–49
American Bar Association
  Center on Children and the Law, 194
American Lawyer, 21
American Psychological Association (APA), 349–50
  APA Monitor, 398
  Cornell conference, 355
  Division on Psychology and Law, 273
  Ethics Office, 352
  Nathan, Debbie and, 475n212
American Psychology Law Society, 355
Amirault case, 438n111
  championing of, 8
  "hysteria," Boston allegedly in grip of, 176–77
  information on, 11–12
  Satan's Silence, dedication page, 115
  "sex abuse hysteria" and minimal punishment, 194
  Wall Street Journal article, 376
"Anal wink," 62
Anatomy of the McMartin Child Molestation Case, 418–19n1
APA. See American Psychological Association (APA)
Applegate, David contested actions and, 279
  extreme behavioral evidence, 229
  Fonolleras, Lou, interview with, 220–21
  interview of, 245
  medical evidence, 231
  testimony of, 238, 456n55
  Treacy, Eileen on, 223 verdict and, 240
  witch-hunt narrative and
    medical evidence, 262
    sex-abuse hysteria, use of term, 264
Applegate, Judy, 221, 231, 462n214
Ardolino, David, 402–4
Ardolino, Matthew, 401–5, 407
Ardolino, Robert case, 401–5
Arkansas Democrat-Gazette
  school teachers, sexual misconduct of, 373 on sexual misconduct allegations, 184
Arlington, Massachusetts, child pornography case, 165
Armbrister, Trevor, 11
Arrigan, Brian, 339, 343
Arvida Corporation, 285, 291, 330, 346
Ashley's Law, 370
The Assault on Truth: Freud's Suppression of the Seduction Theory (Masson), 177
Associated Press
  Michaels, Kelly case, 239, 253
Atherton, California case, 92
Atkins, Larry, 385
Atlanta Constitution
  West, Walter P., 182
Ault, Howard Steven, 388

Austin American Statesmen
  Fran's Day Care case, 146
Austin Chronicle
  Fran's Day Care case, 146
Austin, Texas. See Fran's Day Care case
Aviv, Rachel, 477n17

Bach, Richard, 185
Bailey, Penny, CII evaluation, 46
Bakersfield, California case, 100
Bakersfield Witch Hunt, 119. See also Mean Justice (Hume)
Baldwin, Ella, CII evaluation, 45
Ballard, Frances, 96–100. See also Georgian Hills Early Childhood Center case Ball, Daryl, Jr., 162–63
Baran, Bernard, 11, 126–28, 155. See also Early Childhood Development Center
Barber, Mike, 439n114, 440n134
Barbour, Gene and Linda, 119
Barbour, Mary Ann, 119–22, 440n134. See also Mean Justice (Hume)
Barkman, Rebecca, 108–9
Barkman, Richard. See Small World Preschool case
Barragan, Agustin O., 385
Barry, Helena, 169
Barry, Judge, 463n227
Bartky, Murray, 233
Barton, Gloria, 32–33
Barton, Sara
  CII interview with, 47–50
  early investigation, 32–33, 428–49n168
Bartz, Lori, 162
The Battle and the Backlash (Hechler), 111
Baughan, William, 126–27
Beck, Richard, 71, 152, 429n176
Behind the Playground Walls: Sexual Abuse in Preschools, 419n1
Believe the Children
  ABC network and, 387–88
  McMartin Preschool case, 4, 10–11, 71, 85–86
  ritual abuse case, 163
  Rogers Park case, 71
Belkin, Lisa, 72
Benedek, Elissa, 238–39
Bennett, Cameron, 99
Bentz, Robert and Lois, 100–103, 236. See also Jordan, Minnesota cases
Berent, A. Andrew, 175
Bergman, Stephen, 175
Berkowitz, Carol, 169
Berndt, Mark, 369–70
Berry, Jason, 183
Besharov, Douglas, 22
Bianchini, Victor, 381
Bighead, Charles case, 379–80, 406
Bikel, Ofra, 8–10, 12
Bishard, Beryl, 153
Bishop, Richard Charles, 126, 164
Bittenbender, Carlton, 185, 452n149
Blando, Shirley, 473–74n182
Boatwright, Stephen, 153
Bobb, Judge Aviva, 19, 79
Bond-Foley, Cassie
  medical evidence, 232
  subsequent investigation, 215
  verdict and, 242
Bo Peep Day Nursery, 158–59
Boston, Amirault case, 176–77
Boston Globe
  Amirault case, 176, 194
  Day of Contrition, 390
  Lanesborough Elementary School case, 147
  Law, Cardinal Bernard and, 368
Boulder, Colorado. See Marks, Douglas
Boychuk, Tasha, 379–80, 407
Boyer, Peter, 9, 174, 183, 337, 351
Boy Scout Troop 26, 182–83, 452n149
Brackenridge Hospital, 144
Braga, Joseph and Laurie
  early investigation, 292 ethics complaints against, 352 interviews by criticisms of, 344
    final interviews, 308–15
    initial interviews (August 8 and 10, 1984), 292–98 later August 1984 interviews, 298–305
    sequences of, 303–5
  later interviews (August 1984), 298–305
  maligning of, 348–51
Braintree, Massachusetts. See Caring for Kids, Inc.
Brainwashed, use of term, 41
Breto, Albert, 193
Bright, Judge Myron, 397–98, 406
British Nanny Case, 401
Brodsky, Stanley, 234
Bromberg, Daniel, 376
Broward County, Florida rape and murder, 388–89
Brown, Allison, 66–68
Brown, Jenny, 46
Brown University, Institutional Review Board, 413
Bruck, Maggie. See also Ceci and Bruck implication regarding Lawton, Robert case; Ceci and Bruck on child abuse acccommodation syndrome; Ceci and Bruck on Country Walk case; Ceci and Bruck on Kelly Michaels case; Ceci and Bruck on "Six Elements to Three Major Cases; Jeopardy in the Courtroom: A Scientific Analysis of Children's Testimony (Ceci and Bruck)
  Ardolino, Robert case, 404–5
  Coleman, Lee, 341–42
  on forensic concerns, 387
  Fuster, Frank, affidavit on behalf of, 285, 327

  on Goodman, Gail, 22–23
  Marzolf case and, 391–92 on McMartin case, 87 on personality of sex offenders, 181 on Rainbow Christian Daycare case, 136–37 on recantation rates, 396
  Rouse case, 398–99
Bruneau, David, 108
Buckey, Peggy. See also McMartin Preschool case
  acquittal of, 83
  CII interviews with victims and, 48–51, 56
  indictment of, 19, 76
  libel suit against, 21
  Manhattan Beach Police Department (MBPD) letter, response to, 82
  Mergili, Mrs., call to, 422n50 paranoia of, 27 statements of, 20
Buckey, Peggy Ann. See also McMartin Preschool case
  indictment of, 19, 76
  libel suit against, 21
  results of case, 84
Buckey, Raymond. See also McMartin Preschool case acquittal of, 83
  arrest of, 27
  character and behavior, evidence regarding, 81–82 evidence against, 23, 42
  indictment of, 19, 76
  initial claims against, 4 interviews with victims and, 35, 44–45, 55–59 retrial of, 413 strength of evidence, 20 trial of, 5, 80–84
Burstyn, Freda, 329
Burton, Karen, 215
Butler, Margaret, 466n12
Bynum, Paul, 27, 420n5

CAAS. See Child abuse accommodation syndrome (CAAS)
California
  Arkansas Democrat-Gazette, 373
  civil commitment, 371
California Penal Code, 28
California Supreme Court, 187
Canada, Ontario Consultants for Religious Tolerance, 13
Cantwell, Hendrika, 61–62
CAPTA. See Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA)
Capturing the Friedmans (Jarecki), 11, 130–33, 443n198
Caring for Kids, Inc., 176
Carl Sandburg Junior High School, 192
Carroll case, 254
Cartright, Gary, 145–46
Cases, listings of. See 36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing Casey, Dan, 315, 327
Catholic Church cases denial, 177–78 exposé of, 183
  scandals, 365–68, 384, 406
  U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, 367
CBS
  48 Homes, 478n55
  Michaels, Kelly case, 252
  News, 382
CDC. See Centers for Disease Control (CDC)
Ceci and Bruck implication regarding Lawton, Robert case, 378
Ceci and Bruck on child abuse acccommodation syndrome, 395–400
  "Unveiling Four Misconceptions," 395
Ceci and Bruck on Country Walk case as contrast to Michaels, Kelly case, 283, 285
  "fantastic" elements, 338–40
  "objective analysis," 351 suggestibility claims, 252, 341–46
  "Suggestibility of the Child Witness: A Historical Review and Synthesis, 272–73
Ceci and Bruck on Kelly Michaels case on affiliations, 278 brief for the defense by, 277–79
  "Child Witnesses: Translating Research into Policy," 275–76 dismissal of children's testimonies, 221–22
  "Mousetrap Study," 273–75, 356
  policy implications, 275–76
  "Suggestibility of the Child Witness: A Historical Review and Synthesis," 272–73
  Treacy, Eileen, inaccurate claims about, 253, 255, 257–69
    "fantastic" elements, claiming, 262
    Treacy-Child A excerpt, 256
    Treacy-Child B excerpt, 258
Ceci and Bruck on "Six Elements to Three Major Cases, 337–59, 358
Ceci, Stephen. See also Ceci and Bruck implication regarding Lawton, Robert case; Ceci and Bruck on child abuse acccommodation syndrome; Ceci and Bruck on Country Walk case; Ceci and Bruck on Kelly Michaels case; Ceci and Bruck on "Six Elements to Three Major Cases; Jeopardy in the Courtroom: A Scientific Analysis of Children's Testimony (Ceci and Bruck) on "air of accusation," 167 on child suggestibility claims, 355–56
  on forensic concerns, 387
  on Goodman, Gail, 22–23
  on recantation rates, 396

Center on Children and the Law, American Bar Association, 194
Centers for Disease Control (CDC), 329
Channel 10, McMartin Preschool case, 72
Chapel, Paul III, 369–70
Chapman, Breanna, 55–56
Chapman, Ellen, 55–56, 82
Charlier, Tom and Downing, Shirley, 11
  Country Walk case, 283, 327
    "fantastic elements," 338
  "Justice Abused: A 1980s Witch-Hunt," 88, 92
  on ritual abuse allegations, 355, 384
  36 cases, list of, 87–115. See also 36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing Chase, Miranda, 57–59
Chicago. See also Rogers Park Jewish Community Center case
  Department of Children and Family Services, 103–4 Child abuse accommodation syndrome (CAAS), 157, 178–79 contesting, 394–400
The Child Abuse Industry (Pride), 7
Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA), 389, 401, 405, 480n89, 485n161
Child Abuse Registry Hotline, 137
Child Advocacy Center, 379
Child pornography, 94, 130, 132
  as "myth," 163–67
Child Protective Services, 385–86
Children City Learning Center, 384–85
Children's Institute International (CII) contested medical evidence and, 59–60
    overdiagnosis issue, 61–62
  evaluations, 33, 40–59. See also specific victim
    November 1983, 44–46
    December 1983, 46–51
    January 1984, 51, 55–56
    February 1984 onward, 57–59 forces beyond, 68–77
  interviews by
    early investigation, 34–37, 42
    generally, 17, 19
    sequence of interviews, 52–54
  McMartin Preschool case. See Lines throughout this topic neglecting to supervise process, 74–75 preliminary hearing, interview sequence, 53–54 retrial, interview sequence, 53–54 trial, interview sequence, 53–54
Children's Path Preschool, 170–71
Child suggestibility claims, 16, 355, 360, 365–66, 406–7
  Country walk case, 283, 341–52
    Braga, maligning of, 348–51 children most criticized, 343–45
    overlooked or downplayed children, 346–47
"A Child's Word," 388–89
"Child Witnesses: Translating Research into Policy" (Ceci and Bruck), 275–76
CII. See Children's Institute International (CII)
Cincinnati, Isaac Wise Temple summer camp case, 95
Civil commitment, 371
Clarksville case. See Craig's Country Pre-School case
Clemency and Pardons Board, 136–37
Clinton, New Jersey. See Wee Care Child Care Center
Coats, Dan, 390
Coburn, Tom, 477n18
Cockburn, Alexander, 330–31
Coffee, John, 178
Cohen, Arthur, 335, 352
Cohen, Lucy, 148
Coleman, Judge, 392
Coleman, Lee, 351
  Bruck, Maggie on, 341–42
  Country Walk case and, 179 on other child abuse cases, 469n97 on "People are Talking," 469n70
  Shumate, Neil case, 376
  testimony of, 321–23
  Underwager, Ralph, replacement of, 328
Colposcope, 56–57, 66, 122, 427n167
Commercial Appeal
  "Justice Abused: A 1980s Witch-Hunt" (Charlier and Downing), 88, 92 36 cases, list of, 87–115
  on witch-hunt narrative, 11
Community notification systems, 371–72
Concerned Scientists brief, 277–79, 356–57, 380, 387
"Confirmation bias," 285
Contested medical evidence, McMartin case. See McMartin Preschool case
Contra Costa County, CA. See Seering Family Day Care Cook, Cody
  dropped from case, 226
  initial phase of investigation, 208–9
  subsequent investigation, 216
Cook, Debbie, 208
Cora's Day Care case, 107–8
Cordova, Sally, 83
Cornell Law Review, 400
Cornell, William, 117
"Corroboration" requirements, 187
Costello, Marvin, 192
Country Walk case, 15, 283–354, 414. See also Fuster, Frank; Fuster, Ileana (Flores) attendance patterns, 287
  Ceci and Bruck and, 272–73, 278
    "Six Elements" to Three Major Cases, 359 charges, 315–16
    full counts, 310

"coerced confession" of Ileana Fuster, 332–35 defense, 179, 321–25
evidence, 306–15
  medical conditions, 306
  sexually precocious behavior, 308
  suspicious incidents, 306–8
  unclothed children, 306–8
"fantastic" elements, 283, 331, 338–40, 351–53
full counts, 326
"hysteria," Dade County, Florida allegedly in grip of, 174–75
"inaccurate test" myth, 328–29, 470n130
interviews
  Braga interviews, initial (August 8 and 10, 1984), 292–98
  final interviews, 308–15
  later August 1984 interviews, 298–305
key features of, 360–61, 361
medical conditions, 306
original case (1984-85), 285–327 aggressive questioning of child witness, 317–18
  Braga interviews, initial (August 8 and 10, 1984), 292–98
  charges, 315–16
  early investigation (August 3-8, 1984), 285, 289–92
  evidence, 306–15
  guilty plea, 298, 318–19
  later August 1984 interviews, 298–305
  origins of Country Walk babysitting service, 285–305
  trial, 319–25
  verdict, 325, 327
origins of Country Walk Babysitting Service, 285–305
  Arvida Corporation, 285, 291, 330, 346, 466n12
  Disney Corporation, 285, 346
revisionist history (1993-present), 327–51
  "coerced confession" of Ileana Fuster, 332–35
  Fuster, Noel, retraction by, 329–31, 471n143
  "inaccurate test" myth, 328–29, 470n130
  prior record of Fuster, minimizing, 335–38 sexually precocious behavior, 308
state's case, 319–20
STD findings, 302, 320, 352
suggestibility claims, 341–52
  Bragas, maligning of, 348–51
  children most criticized, 343–45
  overlooked or downplayed children, 346–47
"Suggestibility of the Child Witness: A Historical Review and Synthesis" (Ceci and Bruck), 272–73, 406–7
suspicious incidents, 306–8 timelines, 284
trial, 319–25
  defense, 321–24
    full counts, 326
    overlooked or downplayed children, 346–47
    state's case, 319–20
    verdict, 325, 327
  unclothed children, 306–8
  verdict, 325, 327
  victims and family. See Arrigan, Brian; Cramer, Jason; Cramer, Joshua; Leventhal, Betsy; Leventhal, Charlie; Leventhal, Tom; Lipton, Daniel; Lipton, Jessie; Lipton, Roberta; Lucas, Allison; Lucas, Tammy; Lucas, Victor; Menninger, Donald; Menninger, Donald, Jr.; Menninger, Vicki; Monk, Carrie; Pelton, Vivian; Porter, Annie; Porter, Kimberly; Porter, Malcolm; St. Lorenzo, Emma; St. Lorenzo, John; Taylor, Becky; Thomas, Ariel; Walker, Paula; Walker, Sara Craft, Daryl, 184
Craig, Sandra, 105–7. See also Craig's Country Pre-School case
Craig's Country Pre-School case, 105–7, 189, 436n70
Cramer, Jason
  Braga, Joseph and Laurie, interviews, 292–95, 297, 301, 309, 311–12, 339
  counts involving, 316
  criticisms of interview(s), 345
  cross-examination of, 320
  early investigation, 291
  ignoring of, 323
  overlooked or downplayed testimony, 346–47
  sexually precocious behavior, 308 tapes made by, ignoring of aggressive questioning of, 317–18 validity of testimony, 360
Cramer, Joshua
  Braga, Joseph and Laurie, interviews, 294
  sexually precocious behavior, 308
Cramer, Sandra, 308
Cranshaw, Jane, 104
Credibility of children, undermining, 387–406 child abuse accommodation syndrome, contesting, 394–400 institutions, backlash against, 401–6 professions, backlash against, 401–6
  "tainted," labeling children as, 390–94
Crews, Frederick, 12, 157
Crime Library website, 17
Croskey, Judge H. Walter, 171–72
Cross, Theodore, 373
Crowley, Patricia, 453n17
Currie, Robert, 21, 69–70, 73

Dade County, Florida. See also Country Walk case; Finje, Bobby case
  "hysteria," allegedly in grip of, 174–75
Daily Breeze, McMartin Preschool case, 79

Dalenberg, Constance, 405
Davis, Danny, 20, 78
Daybridge Day Care Center, 177
Daybridge Learning Center, 97
Day care abuse, 1980s, 152–59. See also specific cases during McMartin, 155–59
  pre-McMartin, 152–55
The Day Care Ritual Abuse Moral Panic (Young), 87
"Day care sexual abuse cases of the 1980s," use of term, 87
Day care workers as "symbols," 152
Day of Contrition (linking cases to Salem witch trials of 1690s), 374, 377, 389–90, 401, 485n161
Dayton, Ohio. See Aldridge and Wilcox case
Deacon, Lucy
  extreme behavioral evidence, 231
  subsequent investigation, 215, 216
A Death in White Bear Lake (Seigel), 179
Denial and silence on child sex abuse cases, 15, 151–95
  "air of denial," 177–85
  day care abuse, 1980s, 152–59
    during McMartin, 155–59
    pre-McMartin, 152–55
  denial, use of term, 151
  "fantastic" elements, 154, 159–67
    child pornography "myth," 163–67
  "hysteria," use of term in witch-hunt narrative, 167–85
    Amirault case, Boston during, 176–77
    Country Walk case, Dade County, Florida during, 174–75
    Kelly Martin Day care case, New Jersey during, 173–74
    McMartin era, 167–73
    places allegedly in grip of, 167–77
    Southern California, 167–73
  leniency for child molesters, 191–95
  prosecuting child abuse, difficulties, 185–91
Department of Social Services (DSS)
  California, 154, 172–73, 434n30
  Massachusetts, 126–28, 165
  Michigan, 110, 437n87
Des Moines Register, 141
Dillard, Michael Paul, 161
Dimitrius, Jo-Ellan, 419–20n41
Dinerstein, Stephen, 332–33, 348, 353, 471n148
Discounting reality of day-care sexual abuse, 383–87
Disney Corporation, 285, 346
Doe, Gregory, 132
Doggett, Susan "Sam," 382
Domestic Violence Prosecution Unit (Westchester County), 187
Donahue, John, 192
Donnella, Amy Gershenfeld, 277, 352–53
Dove, Gayle, 185
Downing, Shirley, 11
  Charlier, Tom and Downing, Shirley. See Charlier, Tom and Downing, Shirley
  "Justice Abused: A 1980s Witch-Hunt," 88, 92
  36 cases, list of, 87–115. See also "Justice Abused: A 1980s Witch-Hunt" (Charlier and Downing); 36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing Drew, Dana, 226
Drummond, Donald T., 186
DSS. See Department of Social Services (DSS)
Dugan, Michele, 71
Duke Child Protection team, 143
Duke Medical Center, 143
Dye, Detective, 34, 37, 421n42
Dyer, Ed, 182–83
DYFS. See New Jersey Department of Health and Family Services (DYFS)

Early Childhood Development Center, 126–28, 155
Eberle, Paul and Shirley, 7, 71–72, 405, 418n11
Edenton, North Carolina. See Little Rascals day care center case
Edgewood, Iowa. See Sunshine Preschool and Day Care Center case
Eison, Rita Bighead, 379–80
Ennis, Cindy, 427n167
Ennis, Donna, 82
Esquilin, Susan, 217
Essex County Prosecutor's Office, 280 cross examinations, 236 decision on who would be included in case, 224 evidence allegedly kept from jury, 252
  Sexual Abuse unit, 206–7
Everson, Mark, 263, 351–52
Evidence. See specific case

Fairmont Baptist Church, 157
Falls-Lakeview School, 192
False Memory Syndrome Foundation (FMSF), 12, 139, 383, 388, 390
Famous Trials website, 17
"Fantastic" elements
  Country Walk case, 283, 331, 338–40, 351–53
  McMartin era, 154, 159–67
    child pornography "myth," 163–67
  Michaels, Kelly case, 261–64
FBI
  Georgian Hills Early Childhood Center case, 97
  Investigator's Guide to Allegations of "Ritual" Child Abuse, 160–61
  McMartin Preschool case, 70, 72
  West Point Child Development Center, 112
Feather, Garfield, 396
Feifel, John E.., 180

Feigley, George, 448–49n46
Fells Acres Day School case, 176
Felsten, Anne, 229–30
Ferguson, Judge, 298
Ferrera, Christopher case, 377, 383
54 names listed in Satan's Silence: Ritual Abuse and the Making of an American Witch-Hunt (Nathan and Snedeker) dedication page, 115–50. See also specific names and cases details on names listed, 116
    wrongful convictions, cases with, 117–18
Figured, Patrick, 11, 142–44. See also Miss Polly's Day Care Center
Finje, Bobby case, 174–75
Finkelhor, David, 155–57, 163
Fiore, Faye. See St. Cross Church
Fischer, Mary, 6, 7, 28, 81
Fitzpatrick, Frank, 367
Fitzpatrick, Janet, 141
Flora, Rebecca
  extreme behavioral evidence, 230–31
  Fonolleras, Lou, interview with, 221
  interview of, 247, 249
  medical evidence, 231–32
  verdict and, 242
Flores, Ileana. See Fuster, Ileana (Flores)
Florida. See also Country Walk case; Dade County, Florida; Finje, Bobby case; Glendale Montessori School
  Jimmy Ryce Act, 140
FMSF. See False Memory Syndrome Foundation (FMSF)
Foeller case, 278, 404
Fonolleras, Lou bias, 350
  initial phase of investigation, 206–7
  interviews by, 217, 219–21, 226, 281 criticisms in witch-hunt narrative, 249–51, 266
    sequence of, 218
  Nathan, Debbie, criticisms by, 243 own abuse, telling children about, 243, 459n137
  subsequent investigation, 213–16 substantiation of sex abuse by, 224 testimony, 228
Ford, Daniel, 127
Ford, Greg, 367
Fort Bragg case. See Jubilation Day Care Center case
Fort Lauderdale, Florida. See Rainbow Christian Day Care case
48 Hours (tv show), 244, 478n55
Foster case, 10
Foster, Peg, 212–13, 228–29, 247
Fox, David, 186
Fran's Day Care case, 144–47
Freeh Report, 368–69
Freeman, Clara, 93
Freeman, James, 114
Freeman, LeRoy, 93, 434n19
Freud, Sigmund seduction theory, suppression of, 3, 177 writings against, 12
Freyd, Peter, 12, 388
Friedman, Arnold and Jesse case, 11, 130–33
  Capturing the Friedmans (Jarecki), 11, 130–33, 443n198
  Innocence Project, 133
  website, 442n188
  "Witch Hunt Information Center" and, 130
Fried, Stephen, 182
Frontline (PBS program), 8–11, 174
  Country Walk case, 336, 338, 348, 351, 353
Fuster, Frank affidavit on behalf of by Bruck, Maggie, 285, 327 as defense witness, 323
  First Degree Manslaughter plea, 472–73n171
  information on, 11
  Kendall Decorators, 286 manslaughter charges, prior, 336–37 marriages, 286. See also Fuster, Ileana (Flores)
  Mobile Showroom, 286
  prior record of, minimizing, 335–38 rape, as prior suspect in, 337–38
  Satan's Silence, dedication page, 115
  sentencing of, 319
Fuster, Ileana (Flores). See also Country Walk case; Fuster, Frank guilty plea, 298, 318–19
    as "coerced confession," 332–35, 341 marriage of, 286
  as rebuttal witness, 324–25 statements from children regarding, 288
  testimony of, 472n162
Fuster, Martha, 309
Fuster, Noel abuse by father
    Braga interview, 298, 302
    Fuster, Ileana testimony, 325
    retraction by, 329–31, 471n143 birth of, 286 interview, 309, 311–13, 470–71n138
  quotes used in trial, 343
  STD findings, 302, 309, 320
Futrelle, David, 161

Gabaeff, Steven, 136
Gaddis Rickie Jay, 161–62
Gannet News Service, 179–80
Gans, Ralph
  extreme behavioral evidence, 230
  interviews of, 249–50
  subsequent investigation, 213–14, 216
Garcetti, Gil, 80
Gardner, Martin, 11, 117

Gardner, Richard
  Day of Contrition, 405, 485n161
  on jury, 438n113
  Michaels, Kelly case, exaggerations pertaining to, 462n208 parental alienation syndrome, 389–90 on police and child protective services, 184 on punitive treatment of sex offenders, 373
  sex-abuse hysteria, coining of term, 193–94, 264
  Sex Abuse Hysteria: Salem Witch Trials Revisited, 179, 379
  Watson, Norman case and, 180
Gauthe case, 368
Geoghan, Father John, 366–67
Georgian Hills Early Childhood Center case, 96–100, 362 numbers of perpetrators, 89
  in 36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing, 94
Gersten, Judge David M., 297
Gingerbread Day Care, 385
Giuliani, Rudolph, 112
Glazer, Mark, 390, 393
Glendale Montessori School, 137–40
Gloucester County
  Maryland day care centers, 153
  New Jersey nursery schools, 153–54
Goldberg, Bernard, 244–45
Goldberg, Glenn, 239, 417n11
Gold, Eugene, 193
Goldman, Amy, 423n75
Goldstein, Ross, 131, 443n198
Goodman, Gail, 22 child suggestibility claims and, 355
  Country Walk case, 283
  Michaels, Kelly case, 271–72, 277, 282, 387, 413
Gordon, Linda, 25, 178
Gordon, Mary
  CII evaluation, 44
  contested medical evidence and, 64, 428–29n167
  early investigation, 34–37
Gorney, Cynthia, 21
Grafton, Margaret, 123
Great Neck, New York. See Friedman, Arnold and Jesse case
Green, Judge Robert, 193
Greenup, Campbell, 172, 450n92
Green, Wade, 71
Gregg, Barry
  CII interview with, 47, 50
  contested medical evidence and, 63–64, 67
Gregg, Darlene, 81
Gregg, Sally, 33
Gross. Samuel, 400
Guild, Greg, 229, 232
Hadley, Laura, 36, 206, 238, 269
Haley, Nora van, 214–15
Halsey, Robert case, 12, 147–49, 157, 374. See also Lanesborough Elementary School case
Hamrick, Robert, 34
Hankin, Richard, 130
Hanneman, Gary, 384–85
Harbor-UCLA Hospital, 169
Hargrove, Wayne, 98–99
Haroutunian, Anna, 231–32
Harper's
  McMartin Preschool case, 8
  Michaels, Kelly case, 22, 243, 273
Harrington, Maine. See Ardolino, Robert case
Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. See New American Church
Harris, Jonathan, 11–12, 142–43, 147, 254, 376
Hartford County, MD. See Bo Peep Day Nursery
Harth, Judge William, 234, 237, 239, 270
Hart, Kim, 185
Hart, Lisa, 170
Harwood, William, 484n151
Hassim, Sargent, 392
Hating the Sin, Loving the Sinner, 192
Hayes, Tracy, 219
Hazel Crawford Day Care, 351
Head Start Program case, 149–50
Hearsay evidence, 191
Hechler, David
  The Battle and the Backlash, 111
Heger, Astrid
  CII interviews, 45
  colposcopic exam by, 56–57 contested medical evidence and, 59–68, 427–28nn167 and 168 on evolution of medical knowledge, 197
Hentoff, Nat, 245, 251–52, 389
Herman-Giddens, Marcia, 143
Herman, Judith, 178
Hermosa Beach, California. See Children's Path Preschool; St. Cross Church
Hetherington, Thomas Max, 154
Higgins, Charlie, 99
High Society magazine, 150
Hight, Judge Bob T., 170, 187
Hill, Sonja, 11, 142–44. See also Miss Polly's Day Care Center
Hoag, Detective, 38, 40
Hoffman, Richard, 180
Hogan, John, 315
Hollingsworth, Jan, 288, 292, 309, 347, 467n38
  Unspeakable Acts, 293, 341
Hollywood, Florida. See Nativity School
Holtzman, Elizabeth, 187
Home day care case, 128–29

Home day care center, White Plains, New York, 113–15
Homophobia, 127
Honolulu, Hawaii. See Kailua Beach Preschool
Hopkins, Carol, 12, 375, 377–78, 382, 389–90, 478n55
Horsey, David, 383
Hoyt, Wanda, 179–80
Hubbeling, Russell, 396
Huck's Raft: A History of American Childhood (Mintz), 8
Huck, William F., Sr., 385
Hume, Edward, 121–22, 126, 440n134
  Mean Justice, 118–19, 440n134, 441n160
Humphrey, Hubert III
  Report on Scott County Investigations, 101–3
Hypnosis, 132
"Hysteria," use of term in witch-hunt narrative, 15, 156, 167–85
  "air of denial" and, 179
  Amirault case, Boston during, 176–77
  Country Walk case, Dade County, Florida during, 174–75
  Kelly Martin Day care case, New Jersey during, 173–74
  McMartin era, 167–73
  Michaels, Kelly case, 264–68
  places allegedly in grip of, 167–77
  sex-abuse hysteria, coining of term, 193–94
  Southern California, 167–73

Implanted, use of term, 7, 41
Incest. See also Fuster. Noel
  Secret Trauma: Incest in the Lives of Girls and Women (Russell), 451n117
  Something About Amelia (tv movie), 3, 177
Indictment (film), 9–11, 23 described, 419n1
  fire in school, depiction of, 72
  Johnson, Judy, portrayal of, 25
  Stevens, Glenn, interviews with, 20 on trial and retrial, 81
Ingram case, 117
Ingram, Kathy Kae
  CII evaluation, 44
  contested medical evidence and, 68
  early investigation, 37–40
Ingram, Paul, 9
Institutions, backlash against, 401–6
Inverness, Florida. See Matthews, Mitchell case
Investigator's Guide to Allegations of "Ritual" Child Abuse (FBI), 160–61
Iowa Department of Human Services, 141–42
Iowa Department of Justice, 141
Iowa v. Warnock. See Warnock, George and Betty Isaac, Rael Jean, 348
Isaacs, P. J.
  extreme behavioral evidence, 231
  Fonolleras, Lou, interview with, 220
  interviews of, 250
  testimony of, 238
Isaac Wise Temple summer camp case, 95
Isabel's Day Care, 164
Issues in Child Abuse Accusations (Nathan), 327

Jackson, John, 78
Jackson, Mary Ann, 19, 76. See also McMartin Preschool case
Jackson Memorial Hospital, 345
Jackson, Michael, 366
Jacob Wetterling Crimes Against Children and Sexually Violent Offenders Act, 370
Jarecki, Andrew, 442n180
  Capturing the Friedmans, 11, 130–33, 443n198
Jenkins, Natalie, 243, 459n137
Jenkins, Philip
  Catholic Church and, 177–78
  on child pornography, 163 on homicide, 180
  on media reports, 73, 101
  Moral Panic: Changing Conceptions of the Child Molester in Modern America, 13
Jeopardy in the Courtroom: A Scientific Analysis of Children's Testimony (Ceci and Bruck) children's testimony, article on, 23 child suggestibility claims and, 9–10, 365
  Country Walk case, 15, 285, 341–43, 346
Jessica's Law, 370
Jimmy Ryce Act, 140
John Paul II, 367
Johnson, Judy
  beginning of case, 24–27
  behavior of, 430n188
  contested medical evidence and, 63 death of, 20, 24, 26
Johnson, Kirk, 135
Johnson, Matthew, 24–27, 358
  contested medical evidence, 59, 63 examinations by physicians, 25
  MBPD report on, 421n42
Johnston, Pennsylvania, ritual abuse, 161–62
Jones, Dennis, 242
Jones, Kimmy, 242
Jones, Maggie, 124
Jones, Samuel L., 193–94
Jordan, Minnesota cases, 100–103, 163
  highlighting of in 36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing, 94–95
  leniency for child molesters, 191–92
  numbers of perpetrators, 89
  Olson Commission, 101–2
  prior apprehending of defendants, 194

Jordan, Minnesota cases (continued)
  Report on Scott County Investigations (Humphrey), 101–3
  Satan's Silence, dedication page, 115
Journal of Clinical Microbiology
  Country Walk case, 328
Journal of Social Issues
  Michaels, Kelly case, 271
Jubilation Day Care Center case, 96, 434–35n19
"Junior McMartins," use of phrase, 87, 152–54, 180–81, 327
"Justice Abused: A 1980s Witch-Hunt" (Charlier and Downing), 88, 92
Justice Committee, 12, 389

KABC television. See ABC television
Kailua Beach Preschool, 164–65
Kaiser Permanente, 24
Kanka, Megan, 370
Kaplan, Dr., 396
Kauffmann, Kristi, 191
Kauffmann, Paul, 191
Keenan, Detective, 104
Keller Army Hospital, 112
Keller, Daniel and Francis, 144–47, 374. See also Fran's Day Care case
Kelly Michaels Defense Committee, 243
Kelly, Robert. See also Little Rascals day care center case conviction of, 8–9
  information on, 11
  sex-abuse hysteria, coining of term and, 193
Kelson, Ellen, 396
Kempe, Henry, 178
Kendall Decorators, 286
Kennedy v. Louisiana, 400
Kent, Cheryl, 71
Kentucky, "Vampire Clan," 448–49n46
Kern County, California cases, 11, 100, 164, 197. See also Kniffen case; McCuan case; Self, Grant; Stoll, John numbers of perpetrators, 89
  Report on the Kern County Child Abuse Investigations, 118 wrongful convictions, 118
Kern, David A., 157
Key, Bradley James, 161
Kidnapping case
  Huntington Beach, California, 93
"Kinder Orgy" (film), 166
Kirk, Michael, 337
Kniffen, Brian and Brandon, 120–21
Kniffen case, 59, 118–23, 126
Koppel, Ted, 388, 390
Krause, Sharon, 134, 136
Krauthammer, Charles, 179
Krebs, Sandy, 57–59
Krieger, Seth, 472–73n171
Krikorian, Claudia, 168–72
Krivacska, James, 393–94
Kropinack, Leslie, 173
Krueger, Richard, 370
Kuemin, Raymond, 153

Lake Worth, Florida. See Sugar Plum School House case
LA Magazine
  McMartin Preschool case, 81
Lamb, Michael, 257
Landell, Sonny, 45
Landez, Martha
  initial phase of investigation, 210
  interview of, 247
  subsequent investigation, 215–16
  verdict and, 240
Lanesborough Elementary School case, 147–49
Lang, Justin, 230
Lanning, Kenneth, 97, 160
Larry King Live (tv show), 417n11
L.A. Star, 417n11
"Lateral traction test," 440n132
Law, Cardinal Bernard, 368
Lawson, Henry, 172
Lawton, Betsy, 47, 50
Lawton, Otis, 47, 50
Lawton, Robert case, 377–78, 383
Learning Game preschool, 170–71
Lee, Skipper, 162
Legacy of the witch-hunt narrative, 363–407 credibility of children, undermining, 387–406
  overview, 383–406
  reality of day-care sexual abuse, discounting, 383–87
Lehrman Day School, 174, 292
Leniency for child molesters, 191–95
Leon, Chrysanthi, 371–73
Leventhal, Betsy, 288, 306–8, 321
Leventhal, Charlie, 306
Leventhal, Tom
  Braga, Joseph and Laurie, interviews by, 293–95, 299, 302
  counts involving, 316
  criticisms of interview(s), 345
  early investigation, 291
  medical conditions, 306
  sexually precocious behavior, 308 statement of other child, 288 unclothed, incident, 307, 324–25
Licht, Allan, 166
Linder, Douglas, 17
Ling, Lorraine, 104
Lipton, Daniel
  Braga, Joseph and Laurie, interviews, 293, 294, 300–302
  early investigation, 289–90
  sexually precocious behavior, 308

Lipton, Jessie
  Braga, Joseph and Laurie, interviews, 298–99, 313–15
  criticisms of interview(s), 343–45
  cross-examination of, 320
  early investigation, 290
  quotes used in trial, 343
  suspicious incident, 307
Lipton, Roberta, 308
Lists of case names
  54 names in Nathan/Snedeker book, 87–88. See also 54 names listed in Satan's Silence: Ritual Abuse and the Making of an American Witch-Hunt (Nathan and Snedeker)
    dedication page, 115–50
  36 cases, Commercial Appeal, 87–115. See also 36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing chronology of cases, 153
    settings of cases, 155
Little Angels Preschool, 172
"Little But Lewd" (film), 166
Little Rascals day care center case, 8–10
Llewellyn, Richard, 184
Loftus, Elizabeth, 374
Logan, Mary, 169
Loken, Chief Judge James B., 398
Lopez, Judge Richard, 171
Lorain, Ohio. See Head Start Program case
Lorman, Stephanie, 204
Los Angeles County. See also McMartin Preschool case
  Sheriff's Ritual Abuse Task Force, 4, 85, 197
Los Angeles District Attorney's Office
  McMartin Preschool case, 68, 74–75
    political factors and, 76–77
Los Angeles Herald Examiner
  on Johnson, Judy, 26
Los Angeles Magazine
  McMartin Preschool case, 6
Los Angeles School District, 369–70
Los Angeles Times
  on child pornography, 166
  McMartin Preschool case, 6, 21–22, 74, 172
  Michaels, Kelly case, 271–72, 282
  sex-offender politics and, 370
Lowry, Rich, 254
Lucas, Allison, 289–90, 308
Lucas, Judge Malcolm M., 123
Lucas, Tammy
  Braga, Joseph and Laurie, interviews, 292, 295–96, 302, 466n31
  counts involving, 316
  cross-examination of, 320
  early investigation, 289–90
  Fuster, Ileana testimony, 324–25
  medical conditions, 306
  sexually precocious behavior, 308
Lucas, Victor, 289
Lupoli, Tyler case, 381–82
Lynwood, California. See Little Angels Preschool
Lyon, Kathryn, 382
Lyon, Tom, 279, 283, 387

MacDonald, Alan, 382
MacFarlane, Kee, 7
  CII interviews, 42–51, 57, 75
    overdiagnosis issue and, 61
  early investigation, 34–36 interview transcripts and, 41
  in preliminary hearing, 78
  Satz, Wayne, relationship, 430n185
  Stevens, Glenn and, 40
Maine Supreme Court, 190
Making Monsters (Ofshe and Watters), 9
"The Making of a Modern Witch Hunt" (Nathan), 6
Malcom, Julia, 134, 136
Malcom, Kevin, 134–35
Malcom, Lynn case, 374
Malcom, Marilynn, 133–37, 443n207. See also Rainbow Christian Daycare case
Malden, Massachusetts. See Amirault case
Mandatory Reporting Act, 192
Manhattan Beach, California. See Learning Game preschool
Manhattan Beach Police Department (MBPD). See also McMartin Preschool case Buckey, Peggy, response to letter, 82
  contested medical evidence and, 59
  early investigation, 27–28 responses to letter, 30, 32–34, 37–40, 414
    sequence of events, 29
  "hysteria," alleged and, 167–68
  Johnson, Matthew, report on, 421n42 notification of injuries by Simpson-Savary, Jean H., 25 photos from, 69–70
Manhattan Ranch Preschool, 170, 187
Mann, Abby, 9–11, 23. See also Indictment (film) fire in home of, 72
  on Johnson, Judy, 25, 26
  Stevens, Glenn and, 19–20, 40, 80
  testimony of children and, 78–79
Manners, Glenda, 123–25
Manning, Lona, 115
Mann, Myra, 20, 80
Manshel, Lisa on charges, substantiation of, 234 on Fonolleras, Lou, 207, 220
  on The Politics of Child Abuse (Eberle and Eberle), 417n11 Rabinowitz, Dorothy, criticisms by, 251–52
  on Sencer-McArdle, Sara, 225
Maplewood, New Jersey. See Michaels, Kelly case; Wee Care Child Care Center

Maran, Meredith, 444n229
Marcotty, Josephine, 102
Marion Davies Children's Clinic, 25
Marks, Douglas, 184
Martindale, Nathan, 384
Martin, Harold, 114
Martin, Jeanette, 113–15, 437n98. See also Unlicensed day care centers
Maryland, University of, 61
Maryland v. Craig, 106, 273
Marzolf case, 390–93, 403
Massachusetts
  Day of Contrition (linking cases to Salem witch trials of 1690s), 374, 377, 389–90
Masson, Jeffrey
  The Assault on Truth: Freud's Suppression of the Seduction Theory, 177 on Freud suppression of seduction theory, 3 Mastrangelo, Richard
  initial phase of investigation, 206, 209 interview with child, 257
  state's case and, 228–29
Matthews, Mitchell case, 192–93
Matusinka, Jean, 40, 73
McCann, John
  contested medical evidence, 66–67
  studies, 60, 62, 67, 143, 421n31
McCormick, Robert, 164
McCuan, Bobbie and Darla, 119–22
McCuan case, 119–23, 126
McCuan, Deborah and Alvin, 59, 118–23
McGaulie, Jackie, 429n175
McGeary, Scott, 25
McGinnis, Catherine, 345
McGirt, Susan, 169
McGrath, George, 207, 209, 228, 247, 249
McGraw, Carol, 166
McKeg, Thomas, 154
McMartin era, 151–95. See also McMartin Preschool case day care abuse, 1980s, 152–59
    during McMartin, 155–59
  "fantastic" elements, 154, 159–67
    child pornography "myth," 163–67
  "hysteria," Southern California allegedly in grip of, 167–73
"McMartin Madness: Ten Days in the Life of the Longest, Most Gruesomely Difficult Criminal Trial Ever" (Safian), 21
McMartin Preschool case, 17–86, 413–14. See also Buckey, Peggy; Buckey, Peggy Ann; Buckey, Raymond; McMartin era; McMartin, Virginia
  beginning of case, 17, 19
  Believe the Children, 4, 10–11, 71, 85–86
  Ceci and Bruck on "Six Elements to Three Major Cases, 358–59
  Children's Institute International (CII). See Children's Institute International (CII) children's statements, generally, 189 contested medical evidence, 59–68
    overdiagnosis issue, 60–62
    relevant evidence, 62–68
  early investigation, 27–40
    September responders, 39
    sequence of events, 29
  evaluations at CII, 40–59. See also Children's Institute International (CII) for detailed treatment
  evidence contested medical evidence, 59–68
    failure to review, 75–76 evolution of witch-hunt narrative and, 21–23 excesses of the case, 197 fire at school, 71–72 forces beyond CII, 68–77
  grand jury, 17, 19
  graphic stories, television reporting, 3 initial acceptance of charges, 5–6 jurors, 432n227
  key features of, 360–61, 361
  made-for-tv-movie on, 9–11 media coverage, 72–74. See also specific newspaper and television station number of complainants, 19, 41 numbers of perpetrators, 89
  overview, 4–5, 14
  parent-investigators, 69–72
  photo lineups, 75
  preliminary hearing, 77–79
    interview sequence, 53–54
    testimony of children, 78–79
  prosecutorial failures, 74–77
    CII process, neglecting to supervise, 74–75
    evidence not reviewed, 75–76
    political factors and, 76–77 relevant medical evidence, 62–68 retrial, 80–84
  "ritual abuse" claims, 4, 85
  Sheriff's Task Force
    "ritual abuse" claims, 4, 85, 197
  testimony of children, 22–23
  therapists, activist, 69–72
  in 36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing, 94 timeline, 18, 196–97
  transcripts, 198
  trial, 80–84
  verdicts, 7, 20, 83–84
  victims and family. See Acorn, David; Bailey, Penny; Baldwin, Ella; Barton, Gloria; Barton, Sara; Brown, Jenny; Chapman, Breanna; Chapman, Ellen; Chase, Miranda; Ennis, Cindy; Ennis, Donna; Gordon, Mary; Gregg, Barry; Gregg, Darlene; Gregg, Sally; Ingram, Kathy Kae; Johnson, Judy; Johnson, Matthew; Landell, Sonny; Lawton, Betsy; Lawton, Otis; McGaulie, Jackie; Mergili, Tanya; Sandel, Bill; Van Holden, Bobby; Van Holden family; Van Holden, Valerie; Vickers, Bobby; Walters, Kristy; Walters, Trisha as "witch hunt," 5–6

McMartin Task Force, 19
McMartin, Virginia, 4. See also McMartin Preschool case Anatomy of the McMartin Child Molestation Case, dedication, 419–20n1 on Buckey, Ray, behavior of, 82
  CII interviews with victims and, 51, 58
  indictment of, 19, 76
  learning of investigation, 27
  libel suit against, 21
  Sorenson, Wesley, testimony of, 431n199
McNamara, Eileen, 390
MDMH Report, Small World Preschool case, 109–10, 437n85
Meacham, Edwin James, 164
Mean Justice (Hume), 118–19, 440n134, 441n160
Meckler, Ilyce, 430n190
"Media Flip-Flop: Why Four Years Later the Press Is Taking a Strikingly Different Approach to the Martin Preschool Scandal," 6
Medical evidence, contested in McMartin case. See McMartin Preschool case
Megan's Law, 365, 370–74, 384, 406
Meltzer, Harvey, 236
Memphis, Tennessee. See Commercial Appeal; Georgian Hills Early Childhood Center case Mendes, Brenda
  extreme behavioral evidence, 231
  Fonolleras, Lou, interview with, 220
  medical evidence, 232
Mengelberg, Brigitte I., 134
Menninger, Donald
  Braga, Joseph and Laurie, interviews, 298–99, 301–2
  early investigation, 289, 336
  overlooked or downplayed testimony, 346 statement to mother, 288, 291, 308 substantation of charges, 468–69n92
Menninger, Donald, Jr., 468–69n93
Menninger, Vicki, 321
Menoher, Joanne, 288, 289, 466n12
Mergili, Tanya
  CII interview with, 42, 47–51
  contested medical evidence and, 67–68
  early investigation, 30–32
  parent-investigator and, 70 withdrawal of parents from case, 422n50
Meznarich, Donna
  August 1984 interviews and, 299, 301–2
  early investigation, 289–91
  interviews, 345
Miami Herald, 190
  Country Walk case, 293, 302, 325, 350–51
Michaels, Kelly case, 8, 203–82, 414–15
  academics. witch-hunt narrative and, 271–79 brief for the defense, Ceci and Bruck, 277–79 Concerned Scientists brief, 277–79, 356–57, 380, 387
    effect of, 281–82
    "Mousetrap Study," 272–75, 356
    research, translating into policy, 275–76
    "Suggestibility of the Child Witness: A Historical Review and Synthesis" (Ceci and Bruck), 272–73 appeals (Appellate Division), 268–71 decision, 279–80
  April 1985 (key events), 204–6 belief system, 233
  Ceci and Bruck on "Six Elements to Three Major Cases, 359 charges, actual, 224–25
  children at trial by status of charges, 235
  children dropped from case, 226, 227
  children interviewed, 217, 219–21
    initial phase of investigation, 211
    sequence of, 218
  child suggestibility claims, 16, 355
  civil claim, 463n227
  criticisms of interview(s), 10, 198
  defense, 236–39
  depositions by charge, by child, 241 deterioration of investigation, 217, 219–22 dropping of charges, 280
  evidence allegedly kept from jury, 252–53 extreme behavior evidence of children, 228–31
  "fantastic" elements, 261–64
  Fonolleras, Lou, interviews by. See Fonolleras, Lou, interviews by "hysteria"
    Boston allegedly in grip of, 176–77
    New Jersey allegedly in grip of, 173–74 influence of, 200
  information on, 11
  initial phase of investigation, 206–12
    children interviewed, 211
  intensity of investigation, increase of, 217, 219–22 interview and charge information by investigative phase, 267
  interviews, inaccurate claims about (post-conviction), 245–52
    "repetitive interviewing" claim, 247 sequence of interviews, 246, 248
  job change by Michaels, 204
  Kelly Michaels Defense Committee, 243

Michaels, Kelly case (continued)
  key features of, 360–61, 361
  media on, 22
  medical evidence, 231–32
  motive of, 232–34
  "Mousetrap Study," 272–75, 356
  Munn, Charlene, letter to, 239 number of charges convicted of at trial, 242 psychological evaluation of, 233–34
  Satan's Silence, dedication page, 115 sentence, trial, 239–42
  social hysteria, manufacturing, 264–68
  state's case, 226, 228–35
    children at trial by status of charges, 235 extreme behavior evidence, 228–31
    medical evidence, 231–32
    motive, 232–34
  subsequent investigation, 212–16
  timeline, 205
  Treacy, Eileen on case. See Treacy, Eileen
  trial
    children at trial by status of charges, 235
    defense, 236–39
    depositions by charge, by child, 241 number of charges convicted of, 242
    state's case, 226, 228–35 verdict and sentence, 239–42, 268
  as turning point, 15 verdict, trial, 239–42, 268 victims and family. See Allister, John; Applegate, David; Applegate, Judy; Bond-Foley, Cassie; Cook, Cody; Cook, Debbie; Deacon, Lucy; Drew, Dana; Flora, Rebecca; Gans, Ralph; Guild, Greg; Haley, Nora van; Hayes, Tracy; Isaacs, P. J.; Jenkins, Natalie; Jones, Dennis; Jones, Kimmy; Landez, Martha; Lang, Justin; Mendes, Brenda; Murphy, Brian; Nathanson, Eddie; Palmieri, Shayla; Peyton, Jacob; Pierce, Dorinda; Pierce, Mitchell; Raymond, Jackie; Raymond, Sam; Rooney, Max; Sanders, Elliot; Schultz, Debra; Shaw, Jessie; Tilden, Julia; Watson, Ruby; Williams, Clare; Wolfe, Clare; Zeitz, Martin witch-hunt narrative following conviction (rewriting story of case), 242–68. See also Ceci and Bruck on Kelly Michaels case; Nathan, Debbie; Rabinowitz, Dorothy academics and, 271–79
    evidence allegedly kept from jury, 252–53
    "fantastic" elements, 261–64
    interview and charge information by investigative phase, 267
    interviews, inaccurate claims about, 245–52
    social hysteria, manufacturing, 264–68
    Treacy, Eileen, inaccurate claims about, 253–61
Michigan Supreme Court, 191
Minimization of child sex abuse cases, 151–95
  day care abuse, 1980s, 152–59
    during McMartin, 155–59
    pre-McMartin, 152–55
  "fantastic" elements, 154, 159–67
    child pornography "myth," 163–67
  Fuster, Frank, prior record of, 335–38
  "hysteria," use of term in witch-hunt narrative, 167–85
    Amirault case, Boston during, 176–77
    Country Walk case, Dade County, Florida during, 174–75
    Kelly Martin Day care case, New Jersey during, 173–74
    McMartin era, 167–73
    places allegedly in grip of, 167–77
    Southern California, 167–73
  leniency for child molesters, 191–95
  prosecuting child abuse, difficulties, 185–91
Minneapolis Children's Theatre case, 192, 199
Minor, Clifford, 279
Mintz, Steven, 8
Miss Polly's Day Care Center, 142–44
Mitchell, Richard J., 158
Mitzenmacher, Myron, 56
Mobile Showroom, 286
Mondale Act. See Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA)
Monk, Carrie, 306
Montessori School No. 2, 168–71
Mooney, Gregory, 417n11
Moral Panic: Changing Conceptions of the Child Molester in Modern America (Jenkins), 13 "Moral panic," use of term in witch-hunt narrative, 156
Morgan, Judge J. Dean, 135
Mormon Church, 182–83
Morris, Kathleen, 101–2, 163
"Mousetrap Study," 272–75, 356
Mouw, Dr., 146–47
Moynihan, Daniel Patrick, 380
Munn, Charlene, 233–34, 239
Muram, David, 99
Murphy, Brian, 219
Mutter, Charles R., 334
Myrhow, Paul, 184

Nanny's Day Care, 153
Nassau County District Attorney's Office, 133
Nathan, Debbie. See also Satan's Silence: Ritual Abuse and the Making of an American Witch-Hunt (Nathan and Snedeker)
  on Buckey, Raymond, character of, 81
  "child pornography myth," 164
  contested medical evidence and, 63, 66
  Country Walk case, 283

American Psychological Association (APA), correspondence, 475n212
Bragas, maligning of, 349, 352
Fuster, Ileana (Flores), "coerced confession" of, 332–35
"inaccurate test" myth, 329
"junior McMartins," use of term, 327
suggestibility claims, 341
day care workers as "symbols," 152
on Early Childhood Development Center, 155 Issues in Child Abuse Accusations, 327
on Johnson, Matthew, examinations of, 25
"Junior McMartins," use of phrase, 87, 152–53, 180–81
"The Making of a Modern Witch Hunt" (Nathan), 6
Michaels, Kelly case, 8
appeals and, 268
on Applegate, David, testimony of, 456n55
criticisms of, 243, 397
effect of articles, 281
Fonolleras, Lou, criticisms of, 243
interviews, inaccurate claims about, 245, 250
Redbook article, 376
social hysteria, manufacturing, 264–65
Treacy, Eileen, criticisms of, 243, 254, 461n176
witch-hunt narrative following conviction, generally, 242–43
National Center for Reason and Justice (NCRJ), 374–75
Nightline (tv program), letter to, 388 omissions of facts, 33
on Papoose Place Academy, 155 on personality of child molesters, 193 on prosecution, 185
on West Point Child Development Center, 111
"What McMartin Started: The Ritual Abuse Hoax," 22
Nathan, Eleanor, 154
Nathanson, Eddie
initial phase of investigation, 207
interviews of, 249
medical evidence, 231
subsequent investigation, 213–14, 216
verdict and, 240
The Nation
Country Walk case, 330
National Center for Reason and Justice (NCRJ), 114–15, 149, 374–75
National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect (NCCAN), 160–61
National Children's Foundation, 350
National Review
Country Walk case, 348
McMartin Preschool case, 22
Michaels, Kelly case, 244, 254
National witch-hunt, evidence of, 87–150
lists of case names
54 names in Nathan/Snedeker book, 87–88, 115–50. See also 54 names listed in Satan's Silence: Ritual Abuse and the Making of an American Witch-Hunt (Nathan and Snedeker)
36 cases, Commercial Appeal, 87–115, 153. See also 36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing Nativity School, 183
NCAA, 368
NCCAN. See National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect (NCCAN)
NCRJ. See National Center for Reason and Justice (NCRJ)
Neovascularization, 68
New American Church, 448–49n46
New Hampshire, University of Family Research Laboratory, 155
New Jersey. See also Michaels, Kelly case; Wee Care Child Care Center
"hysteria," allegedly in grip of, 173–74
Special Classification Review Board, 394
New Jersey Department of Health and Family Services (DYFS), 206, 207, 390 findings of, 224
New Jersey Division of Youth and Family Services, 265
New Jersey Law Journal
Michaels, Kelly case, 269, 279, 462n208
New Jersey Supreme Court
Michaels, Kelly case. See Michaels, Kelly case
Newman, Judge, 317–18, 333
New Mexico day care center, 154
News-Record
Michaels, Kelly case, 26
Newsweek
McMartin Preschool case, 79
West Point Child Development Center, 111
New Times
Country Walk case, 328
New York City Advisory Task Force on Rape, 255
New Yorker
on child abuse accommodation syndrome, 395
Ingram case, 117
on Provost, Father Ronald, 190
witch-hunt narrative and, 9
New York Law Journal
Michaels, Kelly case, 254
New York Review of Books, 12, 157
New York Times
on civil commitment, 371
on corroboration requirements, 187
Friedman, Arnold and Jesse case, 132
Michaels, Kelly case, 271–72
"Mousetrap Study," 273–75, 356
Minneapolis Children's Theatre case, 192
Self, Grant, 124

New York Times Book Review
  McMartin Preschool case, 22
  unlicensed day care center, White Plains, New York, 115
New York Times Magazine
  Stoll, John case, 119
"Nightline Alert," 388
Nightline (tv program), 387–88
Niles, Michigan. See also Small World Preschool case day care center, 153
Nixon, Richard M., 401
Noble, Mickey, 185
No More Secrets for Me, 213
Noonan, Judge John T., 11, 379, 406, 407
Norman, Oklahoma. See Trinity Baptist Church
North Carolina. See Parker case
North Carolina, University of Program on Childhood Trauma and Maltreatment, 263–64
Northern California, ritual abuse case, 162–63
North Miami Police Department, 175
Not My Child (Crowley), 453n17
Numbers of child sex abuse cases, 15. See also 54 names listed in Satan's Silence: Ritual Abuse and the Making of an American Witch-Hunt (Nathan and Snedeker); 36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing Nussle, Jim, 141

Oak Tree Day Care Center, 384
O'Boyle, James Joseph, 182
Ofshe, Richard, 9
Ohio Parole Board, 150
Ohio Supreme Court, 150
Ohme, Herman W., 390, 479n89
Okerblom, Jim, 11
Olio, Karen, 117
Olson Commission, 101–2
Olympia, Washington. See Ingram case
Olympic Memorial Hospital, 107
Ontario Consultants for Religious Tolerance, 13
Orr, Barbara, 434–35n19
Oscarson, Elsie, 380
Overdiagnosis issue, 60–62
Owen, Nina, 38
Owen, Roseanne, 38

Paidika: The Journal of Paedophilia, 236–37
Palmieri, Shayla, 219
Palomo, Timothy, 123
"Panic," use of term in witch-hunt narrative, 15, 156
Papoose Place Academy, 153, 155, 199, 419n1
Parental alienation syndrome, 389–90
Parent-investigators, McMartin Preschool case, 69–72
Parker case, 117
Parks, Deloartic, 103–5. See also Rogers Park Jewish Community Center case
Paterno, Joe, 369
"Patricia Crowley" book, 210
Paul, David, 24, 427–28n167
  contested medical evidence and, 63–64, 66–67
  "lateral traction test," 440n132
Pearl Lee Mitchell licensed day care center, 158
Peirsol, Chief Judge Lawrence L., 398–99
Pelton, Vivian, 307
Pendergrast, Mark, 375
  "child pornography myth," 164
  Fuster, Frank, exoneration of, 336
  Lawton, Robert case, 378
  Oscarson, Elsie case, 380
  Victims of Memory, 129
Peninsula Montessori School No. 1, 171–72, 449–50n76
Penn, Sean, 11, 119
Penn State scandal, 365–66, 368–69
"People are Talking" (tv program), 468n70
People Magazine
  McMartin Preschool case, 6, 78
People v. Taylor, 255
Perez, Detective, 439n114
Perez, Robert, 382
Perpich, Rudy, 101
Perry, David H., 153–54
Perry, Douglas, 144–46
Personalities of sex offenders, 181, 185
Peters, Nicholas, 441n153
Peterson, Anita, 136–37
Peyton, Jacob, 229–30, 234
Pezdek, Kathy, 387
Phelps, Rod, 119–21
Philibosian, Robert, 19, 76–77
Phillips, Michael, 94
Pierce, Dorinda, 206–8
Pierce, Mitchell, 206–7
  extreme behavioral evidence, 228–29
  first implication of teacher, 360
  Fonolleras, Lou, interview with, 220
  medical evidence, 231
  medical examination of, 238, 244
  subsequent investigation, 213
  witch-hunt narrative and
    "fantastic" elements, claims of, 262
    medical examination of, 244
    sex-abuse hysteria, use of term, 265
Pike County, Ohio, ritual abuse, 161
Pirro, Jeanine, 187
Pittsfield, Massachusetts. See Early Childhood Development Center
Plass, Richard, 195
Playboy magazine, 82–83
  "child pornography myth," 163, 166
Political factors, McMartin Preschool case, 76–77

The Politics of Child Abuse (Eberle and Eberle), 7, 405, 417n11
Polk County, Iowa, unlicensed day care centers, 153
Poole, Deborah, 257
Poole, Warren, 189–90
Porter, Annie, 320
Porter, Judge Charles Jr., 192
Porter, Kimberly, 307, 308
Porter, Malcolm, 308
Post-Intelligencer
  Cora's Day Care case, 108
Pounders, Judge, 27, 83, 419n5, 430n185
Presidio Child Development case, 186
Price, Winston S., 232, 263
Pride, Mary, 7
Priest, Cora, 107–8. See also Cora's Day Care case
Priest, Ralph, 107–8. See also Cora's Day Care case
Prince George's County, Virginia. See ABC Scholar Day Care Center
Professions, backlash against, 401–6
Prosecuting child abuse, difficulties, 185–91
  accommodations for children as witnesses, 187–88
  "corroboration" requirements, 187
Prosecutorial failures
  McMartin Preschool case, 74–77
    CII process, neglecting to supervise, 74–75
    evidence not reviewed, 75–76
    political factors and, 76–77
Protection of Children Against Sexual Exploitation Act of 1977, 417n11
Provost, Father Ronald, 190
Psychological Bulletin
  Country walk case, 341
  Michaels, Kelly case, 272–73
Punitive treatment of sex offenders, recent developments, 373

Rabinowitz, Dorothy, 22–23, 173
  on Amirault case, 176
    Wall Street Journal article, 376
  Michaels, Kelly case, 8
    appeals and, 268–69
    effect of articles, 281, 357
    evidence allegedly kept from jury, 252–53
    "fantastic" elements, claiming, 261–64
    Harper's article and, 273
    interviews, inaccurate claims about, 245, 250–52
    social hysteria, manufacturing, 264
    Treacy, Eileen, inaccurate claims about, 254
    witch-hunt narrative following conviction, generally, 243–44
  Ohme, Herman W. and, 479n89
Radcliff, Kentucky. See Nanny's Day Care
Raidor, Betty, 195. See also McMartin Preschool case on Buckey, Ray, behavior of, 81
  indictment of, 19, 76
Rainbow Christian Daycare case, 134–37, 164–65, 194–95
Rameriz-Brouwer, Ada, 140
Ramona, California day care center, 154
Randle, Madeline, 70
Rape and murder cases, Florida, 388
RapID/NH System, 328–29
Rappeport, Jonas, 237–38, 269, 417n11
Rawls, Jane, 392
Raymond, Jackie, 207
Raymond, Sam
  initial phase of investigation, 207, 209–10
  medical evidence, 231
  subsequent investigation, 213–14
  witch-hunt narrative, "fantastic" elements, 262
Reader's Digest, 11
Reality of day-care sexual abuse, discounting, 383–87
Recent developments, 363–407. See also specific cases
  Ashley's Law, 370
  Catholic Church scandals, 365–68, 384, 406 community notification systems, 371–72
  Jessica's Law, 370
  Megan's Law, 365, 370–74, 384, 406
  Penn State scandal, 365–66, 368–69 punitive treatment of sex offenders, 373
  sex-offender politics, 370–74
  "witch hunt" claims, persistence of, 374–83
Redbook
  McMartin Preschool case, 22
  Michaels, Kelly case, 376
  West Point Child Development Center, 111
Redden, John S., 279–80
Redmond Oregon. See Mormon Church
Reiner, Ira, 19, 77
Reiter, David, 184
"Reliability," 400
Rempell, Jeryl, 230–21
Reno, Janet contested sex abuse cases, 9
  Country Walk case, 292, 315, 318, 327, 332, 349
  Hazel Crawford Day Care Center, 175
Reno, Nevada. See Children City Learning Center; Papoose Place Academy
Report on Scott County Investigations (Humphrey), 101–3
Report on the Kern County Child Abuse Investigations, 118
Ricci, Lawrence, 402, 405
Richmond, Virginia case, 89, 93–94
Ritual abuse allegations, Charlier and Downing and, 355, 384 claims, 156
  "fantastic" elements, 154, 159–67
Ritual Abuse Task Force, LA County, 4, 85, 197

Roberts, Paul Craig, 87
Robie, Judge Ronald, 95
Robinson, Bruce, 13
Rogers Park Jewish Community Center case, 103–5
  Believe the Children, 71
Rok, Richard, 162
Rolling Hills, California. See Montessori School No. 2
Rooney, Max, 209–10, 215
Rosenthal, Robert
  Country Walk case, 350, 380–81
  Lupoli, Tyler case, 381–82
  Michaels, Kelly case, 277, 279, 375
  Serrano, Jose case, 381
  Weber, Frederick case, 381
  Wenatchee, Washington cases, 382–83
Ross, A. S., 6, 10, 161
Rouse case, 394–400
Rouse, Desmond and Jessie case, 396, 404, 406
Rouse, Joanie, 399
Rouse, Lacey, 396
Rouse, Rebecca, 396–97
Rouse, Tiffany, 396
Rubin, Lael, 424n104
Ruby, Michael, 170, 187
Rud, James, 100, 194. See also Jordan, Minnesota cases
Rundle, Christopher, 175, 291–92, 315, 466n32
Runion, Samantha, 389
Runyan, Debbie, 128–29
Russell, Dianna, 451n117

Sacco, Lynn, 178
Sacramento, California case, 95
Safian, Robert, 21
Salem Day of Contrition. See Day of Contrition (linking cases to Salem witch trials of 1690s)
Salon, 161
Samek, Jeffrey, 302, 317–18, 321, 341
Sandel, Bill, 427n167
Sanders, Elliot, 219
San Diego, California. See also Fairmont Baptist Church ritual abuse case, 162
San Diego Union-Tribune
  on satanic rituals, 162
  on witch-hunt narrative, 11
Sandusky, Jerry, 368
San Francisco, California. See Presidio Child Development case
San Francisco Examiner
  Country Walk case, 327
  McMartin Preschool case, 6, 10
San Mateo, California day care center, 154
Santa Cruz Ritual Abuse Task Force, 429–30n179
"Satanic ritual abuse cases of the 1980s," use of term, 87
Satanism allegations. See also Ritual abuse
  Cora's Day Care case, 108
  36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing, 94
  West Point Child Development Center, 113
Satan's Silence: Ritual Abuse and the Making of an American Witch-Hunt (Nathan and Snedeker), 8, 9, 374
  dedication page, 115–50
  54 names listed in, 87–88, 115–50 on MacMartin preschool case, 23, 42–43, 87–88
    dedication page, 114
Satz, Wayne
  MacFarlane, Kee, relationship, 430n185
  McMartin Preschool case, 3, 6, 72–73
    in preliminary hearing, 79
Sauer, Mark, 11
Schachter, Daniel, 12, 13
Schauer, Fred, 417n11
Scheck, Barry, 133
Schildmeyer, Kim, 140
Schildmeyer, Michael Joseph, 116, 140–42. See also Sunshine Preschool and Day Care Center case
Schneider, Andrew, 439n114
School teachers, sexual misconduct of, 369–70, 373
Schultz, Debra
  extreme behavioral evidence, 229
  medical evidence, 232
  testimony of, 243
Schuster, Marilyn, 239
Scientific American, 11
Scott County, Minnesota. See Jordan, Minnesota cases
Scout's Honor, 183
Seattle Post-Intelligence, 11, 383
Secret Trauma: Incest in the Lives of Girls and Women (Russell), 451n117
Seering Family Day Care, 157
Seering, Flora and William, 157
Segal, Richard, 24
Seigel, Barry
  A Death in White Bear Lake, 179
Selected day care sexual abuse cases (1980s and 1991), 5
Self, Grant, 119, 123–26, 164
Sencer-McArdle, Sara, 207, 225, 270
Sequium, Washington case. See Cora's Day Care case
Serrano, Jose case, 381, 383
Sex Abuse Hysteria: Salem Witch Trials Revisited (Gardner), 179, 379
Sex offender databases, 370–71
Sex-offender politics, 370–74

Sexton, Eddie Lee, 162
Sexually precocious behavior, 308
Shaver, John W. "Jack," 164–65, 194, 199
Shaw, David, 22, 74, 282
  on McMartin Preschool case, 6–8
  Where was Media Skepticism?, 7–8
Shaw, Jessie, 215
Shell, Paul, 97
Shell, Robert, 165
Sheriff's Task Force
  McMartin Preschool case, "ritual abuse" claims, 4, 85, 197
Shubin, Charles, 106, 158, 436n70
Shumate, Neil case, 375–77
Silence on child sex abuse cases, 15, 151–95
  day care abuse, 1980s, 152–59
    during McMartin, 155–59
    pre-McMartin, 152–55
  "fantastic" elements, 154, 159–67
    child pornography "myth," 163–67
  "hysteria," use of term in witch-hunt narrative, 167–85
    Amirault case, Boston during, 176–77
    Country Walk case, Dade County, Florida during, 174–75
    Kelly Martin Day care case, New Jersey during, 173–74
    McMartin era, 167–73
    places allegedly in grip of, 167–77
    Southern California, 167–73
  leniency for child molesters, 191–95
  prosecuting child abuse, difficulties, 185–91
Simons, Judge William, 127
Simpson-Savary, Jean H., 25
60 Minutes
  McMartin Preschool case, 6
Skeptical Inquirer, 11, 117
Slade, Elmo, 467–68n70
Slater, David, 195
Slone, David, 192
Small World Preschool case, 108–11
  DSS interviews, 110
  MDMH Report, 109–10
  Satan's Silence, dedication page, 115
Smerling, Marc, 443n198
Smith, Nancy, 149–50, 374, 438n110. See also Head Start Program case
Smithville, North Carolina. See Miss Polly's Day Care Center
Snedeker, Michael. See also Satan's Silence: Ritual Abuse and the Making of an American Witch-Hunt (Nathan and Snedeker)
  on Buckey, Raymond, character of, 81
  contested medical evidence and, 63
  on Johnson, Matthew, examinations of, 25
  Malcolm, Marilynn, clemency petition, 135–36
  National Center for Reason and Justice (NCRJ), 374
  omissions of facts, 33
  Rouse case, 399
Snow, Barbara, 395, 396
Snowden, Grant, 8, 175
Social hysteria. See "Hysteria," use of term in witch-hunt narrative
Society for Research in Child Development (SRCD), 275, 357, 362
Something About Amelia (tv movie), 3, 177
Sonoma County, California, ritual abuse cases, 163
Sorenson, Wesley, 431n199
Sorrentino, Judge Charlene, 353
South Bay, California preschool cases, 168–72
South Dakota
  Yankton Sioux Reservation, 396
Southern California
  "hysteria," allegedly in grip of, 167–73
Southern California, child pornography cases, 165–66
South Orange, New Jersey. See Wee Care Child Care Center
Sowell, Thomas, 11, 375, 379
Spears, Sergeant, 333
Special Classification Review Board (New Jersey), 394
Spector, Arlene, 208, 213
Spencer, Township case, 92–93
Spitler, Babette. See also McMartin Preschool case indictment of, 19, 76
  results of case, 84
  at trial, 82
Spitler, Donald, 82
Sports Illustrated, 180
Squyres, Carol, 120, 122, 439nn122 and 124
SRCD. See Society for Research in Child Development (SRCD)
Stanley, Lawrence, 163, 166, 449n71
Star Ledger
  Michaels, Kelly case, 217, 270
Star Tribune
  Jordan, Minnesota cases, 100, 102–3
State Department of Health and Rehabilitative Service (DHRS), 175, 186
State v. Buckey. See Buckey, Raymond; McMartin Preschool case
State v. Carol M.D., 382
State v. Figured, 143
State v. Fuster. See Country Walk case; Fuster, Frank
State v. Michaels. See Michaels, Kelly case
St. Claire, Sherry L., 143
St. Cross Church, 170
STD findings, 128, 302, 311, 320, 328, 352

Stein, Judge Jack G., 105
Stereotypes of sex offenders, 180–81
Stevens, Glenn
  CII evaluations and, 40, 44
  conversations with Mann, Abby and Mann, Myra, 80 Mann, Abby, interviews with, 19–20, 26 media coverage and, 73
  preliminary hearing, 78–79
  on therapists, 71
St. George's Episcopal Church. See Wee Care Child Care Center
Stimson, Betty, 97–98
Stimson, Jeff, 97
St. Lorenzo, Emma, 288, 307, 353
St. Lorenzo, John, 288, 307, 336
Stoll, John, 119, 123–26
Stone, Oliver, 10, 23
Stossel, John, 274
St. Petersburg, Florida. See Pearl Lee Mitchell licensed day care center
Stuart, Florida. See Glendale Montessori School
Stuebbe, Judge, 120, 440nn133 and 140
Sudden Infant Death Syndrome, 179–80
Sugar Plum School House case, 186–87
Suggestibility claims. See Child suggestibility claims
"Suggestibility of the Child Witness: A Historical Review and Synthesis" (Ceci and Bruck), 272–73
Summit, Roland, 178–79, 320, 394–95, 397
Sunshine Preschool and Day Care Center case, 140–42
Sweeney, Kristin, 484n150

Taibbi, Mike, 244, 252
"Tainted," labeling children as, 390–94
Tamarkin, Civia, 387–88
Tardieu, Paul, 178
Tavris, Carol, 21–22, 271–72, 405
Taylor, Becky
  Braga, Joseph and Laurie, interviews, 296–98, 302, 311–12
  counts involving, 316
  criticisms of interview(s), 345
  cross-examination of, 320
  early investigation, 291
  first day at Country Walk, 467n60
  Fuster, Ileana testimony, 324–25
  medical conditions, 306
  Rundle, Christopher, interviews, 466n32
Taylor, Darlene, 306, 467n60
Teixeria, Wilmes, 66, 426n161
Telb, James, 92–93
Temple Emmanuel, Miami, 174
"The Terrible Puzzle of McMartin Preschool," 21
Texas Monthly
  Fran's Day Care case, 144, 146
Texas Supreme Court, 146
36 cases, list of by Charlier and Downing, 87–115. See also specific cases child pornography as "myth," 163
  chronology of cases, 153
  by date and case features, 90–91
  on defense lawyers, 189
  details on 11 cases highlighted by, 95, 96
  "elements" of cases, 93–94
  "fantastic" elements, 154, 159–67, 338–40
    child pornography "myth," 163–67
  on hearsay evidence, 191
  "hysteria" and, 173, 176–77
  plot of, 90
  pornography, allegations of, 94 on prosecution, quotes in series, 185 satanic exaggeration, 94
  settings of cases, 155–56
Thomas, Ariel, 343
Thomas, Justice Clarence, 265
Tilden, Julia, 214
Torrance preschool, 172
Toward, James, 137–40. See also Glendale Montessori School Toward, Rosario, 139
Treacy, Eileen
  Ceci and Bruck, inaccurate claims about, 253, 255, 257–61
    "fantastic" elements, claiming, 262
    Treacy-Child A excerpt, 256
    Treacy-Child B excerpt, 258
  evaluation of children, 222–23, 357
  Nathan, Debbie criticisms by, 243, 253–61, 461n176 inaccurate claims about, 245, 250
  Rabinowitz, Dorothy, inaccurate claims about, 254 state's case and, 228
  subsequent investigation, 215
Trials. See specific case
Trillin, Calvin, 182
Trinity Baptist Church, 192
A True Story of False Memory (Maran), 444n229
Tucker, William, 386
Turtle Top Day Nursery, 175

UCLA Medical Center, 30–32
Uncommon Desires (Stanley), 166, 449n71
Underwager, Ralph
  on Charlier and Downing list of thirty-six cases, 88
  Country Walk case, 322, 327–28, 341
  Day of Contrition, 389–90
  discrediting of, 203
  Kelly Michaels case and, 173

  Michaels, Kelly case
    appeals and, 269
    arguments advanced, 272
    cross-examination of, 413
    expert witness, 236–37
  Rouse case, 397–99
  VOCAL, launching of, 101–2
Unger, Ned, 286
Unger, Vera, 301–2
Unlicensed day care centers
  Polk County, Iowa, 153
  White Plains, New York, 113–15
"Unreliable test" myth, 328–29, 470n130
Unspeakable Acts (Hollingsworth), 293, 341
U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, 367

"Vampire Clan," 448–49n46
Van Buren, Arkansas. See Gingerbread Day Care
Vancouver, Washington. See Rainbow Christian Daycare case
Van Dam, Carla, 181
Van Holden, Bobby, 38, 40
Van Holden family, 38, 40
Van Holden, Valerie, 38, 40
Vermont Supreme Court, 378
Vickers, Bobby, 47–50
Victims of Memory (Pendergrast), 129
Victor, Jeffrey, 70
Village Voice
  Country Walk case, 327
  "Distorted Journalism" article, 389 on Indictment (film), 23 on on "Justice Abused: A 1980s Witch-Hunt," 88
  McMartin Preschool case, 6, 7, 22
  Michaels, Kelly case, 243, 251–52, 265
VOCAL (Victims of Children Abuse Laws), 85, 101–2, 179, 185
Voigt, Brenda, 103
Voigt, Sophie, 103, 104–5
Von Zamft, Michael, 318, 333–34

Wakefield, Hollida, 399
Waldman, Alan J., 140
Walker, Paula, 307–8
Walker, Sara, 307–8
Wallace, Mike, 424n104
Wall Street Journal, 8
  Amirault case, 376
  Country Walk case, 380–81
  Michaels, Kelly case, 244
  sex-abuse hysteria, coining of term, 193
Walsh, Adam, 370, 372
Walters, Kristy, 427n167
Walters, Trisha, 44–45, 65
Walter, Vasco W., Jr., 157
Warnock, George and Betty, 153, 446n11
Washington Post on children testifying, 355
  Craig's Country Pre-School case, 105–6 on Kauffmann, Kristi, 191
  McMartin Preschool case, 21, 84
  Michaels, Kelly case, 245
  on numbers of cases, 87
Watkins, Alex and Wade, 147–49
Watson, Norman, 180
Watson, Reverend Tommy, 333, 335, 472n164
Watson, Ruby, 219
Watters, Ethan, 9
Watt, James, 113–15, 149. See also Unlicensed day care centers
Weber, Frederick case, 381
Websites
  Crime Library, 17
  Famous Trials, 17
  Friedman, Arnold and Jesse case, 442n188
  Ontario Consultants for Religious Tolerance, 13
  Witch Hunt Information Center, 11–12
Wee Care Child Care Center, 173–74, 386
Weisberg, Brett, 82
Wenatchee, Washington cases, 382–83
  Satan's Silence, dedication page, 117–18
Western State Hospital, 107
West Point Child Development Center, 111–13
  Satan's Silence, dedication page, 115
West, Walter P., 182
Wexler, Richard, 168
"What McMartin Started: The Ritual Abuse Hoax" (Nathan), 22
Where was Media Skepticism? (Shaw), 7–8
White, Edward Charles, 183
White Plains, New York. See Home day care center, White Plains, New York
Whittier, Nancy, 429n176
Wilcox, Karen, 33
Wilkes, David, 190
Wilkins, Robert, 162
Williams, Bob, 172
Williams, Brenda, 138
Williams, Clare, 219
Williams, Linda Meyer, 155–57
Williams, Mark, 478n40
Willis, Ellen, 11, 23, 25, 88
Wilson, Catherine Stubblefield, 166
Wilson, Mary, 30–32, 423n75
Wingard, Deborah, 176
Witch Hunt (documentary), 11, 119
Witch Hunt Information Center
  Baran case and, 155
  Shumate, Neil case, 376
  Treacy, Eileen, inaccurate claims about, 254
  webmaster, 142, 147
  website, 11–12
Witch-Hunt List, 131, 441n153

Witch Hunt (Lyon), 382
Witch-hunt narrative, generally. See also Legacy of the witch-hunt narrative; National witch-hunt, evidence of evolution of, 21–23
  rise of, 5–6
Witnesses, accommodations for children as, 187–88
Wolfe, Clare
  Fonolleras, Lou, interview with, 219
Wood, James, 339–40, 349–51, 474n186
Woodling, Bruce
  contested medical evidence and, 59–62, 64–65, 429n168
  Kniffen and McCuan cases, 121–22
Woods, James, 81
Woodward, Louise, 401
Wright, Lawrence, 117, 397

Yankton Sioux Reservation (South Dakota), 396
Young, Mary de, 87, 139, 152, 441n148
Young, Paul, 378
Yucaipa, Arizona. See Oak Tree Day Care Center

Zegas, Alan, 279
Zeitz, Martin, 228
Zobel, Judge Hiller B., 401

362 .760973 CHE
Cheit, Ross E.,
The witch-hunt narrative

JAN 11 2017

CPSIA information can be obtained at www.ICGtesting.com
Printed in the USA
LVOW11s1204040116
469020LV00002B/2/P

9 780190 465575

SOMERSET COUNTY LIBRARY SYSTEM
3 3665 03026 0302

“Cheit’s thorough and informative tome certa verreaction and misdirection that it so carefully documents and criticizes.”—Harvard Law Review

“[Cheit] recounts evidence with scholarly precision that is emotionally engaging and eminently readable... [His] book is a tour de force against the witch-hunt fabulists and those suggestible enough to believe them.”—The Providence Journal

“Cheit mounts a rigorous argument that the witch-hunt—innocent people persecuted by a legal system out of control—is a concocted myth.”—The Daily Beast

In the 1980s, a series of child sex abuse scandals rocked the United States, most famously the McMartin preschool case. Yet within a few years, the initial concern about the issue had died down considerably. The failure to convict anyone in the McMartin case and a widely publicized appellate acquittal of an accused molester in New Jersey had turned the dominant narrative on its head. By 1990, a new narrative with remarkable staying power emerged: the cases were symptomatic of a “moral panic” that had generated a witch hunt. In this new witch-hunt narrative, children who testified were not reliable. Sensationalistic reporting had fed the idea that there was a crisis when none existed. But did the new narrative accurately represent reality? As Ross Cheit demonstrates in his authoritative account of child sex abuse cases in the last quarter century, purveyors of the narrative never did the hard work of examining court records in the many cases that reached courts throughout the nation. Instead, they treated a couple of cases as representative and concluded that the issue was blown far out of proportion. Cheit, however, shows that child sex abuse convictions were regular occurrences, and that the crime occurred far more frequently than conventional wisdom suggested. Cheit’s also shows how a narrative based on empirically thin evidence became a theory with real social force, and how that theory stood at odds with a far more grim reality. The belief that the charge of child sex abuse was typically a hoax also left us unprepared to deal with the Catholic Church’s child sex abuse scandals. In sum, The Witch-Hunt Narrative is a magisterial account of the social dynamics that led to the denial of widespread human tragedy.

ROSS E. CHEIT is Professor of Public Policy and Political Science at Brown University.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

www.oup.com

ISBN 978-0-19-046557-5
90000
9 780190 465575

Machine Translated by Google

Gilbert Sternhoff

Die Dritte Macht

1945 bis heute?

KOPP

Machine Translated by Google

Digitized for Unglaublichkeiten.com /.info

in February 2006

1st edition January 2006

Copyright © 2006 by Jochen Kopp Verlag, Pfeiferstrasse 52, D-72108 Rottenburg

All rights reserved

Editing: Dr. Renate Oettinger Cover design: ZERO advertising agency, Munich Typesetting and layout:
Agentur Pegasus, Zellsi-Mehlis Printing and binding: Clausen & Bosse, Leck

ISBN 3-938516-17-8

We would be pleased to send you our publisher directory
Kopp Verlag
Pfeiferstraße 52
D-72108 Rottenburg E-Mail: info@kopp-verlag.de Tel.: (0 74
72) 98 06-0 Fax: (0 74 72)98
06-11

You can also find our book program on the Internet at: http://www.kopp-verlag.de

Machine Translated by Google

Gilbert Sternhoff

THE THIRD POWER

1945 to today?

JOCHEN KOPP PUBLISHING HOUSE

Machine Translated by Google

Machine Translated by Google

CONTENTS

Chapter 1 The Problem.. 7

Chapter 2 The settling movement 17

Chapter 3 The Evolution of the UFO Phenomenon............................. 103

Chapter 4 The misunderstood pre-astronauts...................................... 161

Chapter 5 The Earthly Headquarters 181

Chapter 6 The connection to Mars.. 207

Chapter 7 Review and outlook 227

Call 245

List of sources and literature 247

Image source list 253

Machine Translated by Google

Machine Translated by Google

CHAPTER 1

THE PROBLEM

A third power, does it exist? And who or what is hiding behind it behind the First and Second Power?

The terms have their origins in the Cold War, when political blocs armed with nuclear weapons faced each other. The leading power of capitalism, the USA, on the one hand, and the Soviet Union as the dominant force of the communist opposite pole.

Political times have changed since 1989. The communist front has collapsed and the former Soviet Union has dissolved. On this side, Russia, still militarily powerful, remains.

A military conflict between the USA and Russia, fought with nuclear weapons, would mean the end of the world today, as it did then.

Since the other nuclear powers, such as China, play a rather marginal role due to their quantitatively small nuclear deterrent potential, the designation First and Second (World) Power still seems justified here.

And the Third Power? Where and when did it emerge?

Its birth pangs coincide with the end of the Second World War. Its emergence is a direct result of the seemingly complete military and political collapse of the Third Reich.

But this collapse was actually only an apparent one.

What - the Third Reich lives on? Not the Third Reich as a subject of international law, but as a political and military organization.

Names and designations are of secondary importance here. From now on, let us use the term for this successor organization: The Third Power.

However, it can only be described as such if it is at least a military equivalent to the other two powers mentioned and is also in a position to exercise significant political influence.

This book aims to provide evidence that this is indeed the case.

Does this book have a political background? Does it take sides, regardless of what or what is against it?

No, definitely not. This book is simply a report. In this sense, it is a report about the whereabouts and whereabouts of the Third Power.

Other authors have already written about certain aspects of the creation and development of this organization at the end of the Second World War. In a first step, their main statements will be compiled. The plausibility check will be left to a later chapter.

In the German-speaking world, the book by Wilhelm Landig (1909-1997) Wolfszeit um Thule has been the most widely read . Published in 1980 by the Viennese Volkstum-Verlag as the second part of a trilogy, this volume, according to its author, processes historical facts in novel-like form. (1) The claims made in this book were later supplemented in the third part of the trilogy and in various interviews published in books, on video cassettes and on the Internet.

Landig's main claims are as follows:

1. The German Antarctic Expedition under Captain Alfred Ritscher in 1938/1939 not only mapped and surveyed a significant part of Antarctica, the so-called New Swabia region, but also created the conditions for the permanent occupation of this area. During the war, the Antarctic base was further expanded and, after the fighting ended, served as a refuge for the high technology transferred in the last days of the Third Reich.

2. This technology and the crew required to operate it were transported by a fleet of ultra-modern submarines, some of which had revolutionary features. The submarines left the Norwegian port of Kristiansund at the beginning of May 1945 and headed for the North Atlantic.

3. The last naval battle of the war took place near Iceland, which led to the complete destruction of an Allied warship force. The news of this was hushed up, but were reported in the South American press, for example in the Chilean daily newspaper El Mercurio.

4. After this successful battle, the German Reich base in the Arctic, called Point 103, was evacuated, which Landig had already reported on in the first part of his trilogy (2).

5. The submarine fleet then headed south towards New Swabia. Two of the submarines in the convoy, due to technical defects, entered ports in Argentina, where they were later confiscated by the Americans. The remaining submarines unloaded part of their cargo at the Antarctic base. The rest was secretly transported to the South American mainland.

6. All of the above activities were coordinated by a secret development from the last days of the war, the flying discs known as the V-7. The V-7 was developed in Vienna, Breslau and Prague by the Viennese technician Schauberger and the engineer Schriever.

7. The part of the people and material that was brought to the South American mainland found shelter in huge caverns, cave systems under the Andes that had been created by a prehistoric culture thousands of years ago and that the German explorer Edmund Kiss had rediscovered during his expeditions at the end of the 1920s.

8. Since the transfer of German high technology at the end of the war could not have remained unknown to the Allies, they attempted to eliminate the German Antarctic base in January 1947. An American naval unit under the command of Admiral Byrd was to solve this task.

   After the loss of a group of four reconnaissance aircraft, the operation was aborted without result.

9. The personnel strength of the Antarctic base was estimated by Landig at one point at 2000 men. (3) For health reasons, ie due to the vulnerability of the human organism caused by the sterile Antarctic climate, a replacement of personnel had become necessary (3), and over time the majority of the men were flown out to South America (4). Ultimately, the base had to be closed down completely.

be abandoned. (5) The final closure took place in 1961. (6)

10. Three flying discs are still located in the cave systems under the Andes and are rusting away because the supply of material and spare parts could no longer be ensured (5).

Did Wilhelm Landig have the legitimacy to report truthfully about these things? What is known about him, what was his life like?

Landig was politically active in the spirit of National Socialism at an early stage. He took part in the Nazi putsch that was put down in Vienna in 1934, then fled to Germany and became a member of the SS. Until 1938 he worked at the Industrial Research Institute of the German Labor Front. After the annexation of Austria, he returned to Vienna with a special permit from the Reichsführer-SS as a clerk in the security service. From 1942 to 1944 he fought with the Waffen-SS in the Balkans and received several awards for his activities in the partisan war.

In 1944 he was again ordered to Vienna, where he was responsible for special tasks. In this role he is said to have been involved in the development of flying discs.

In September 1945 he was taken prisoner of war by the British and interned until 1947. Landig remains silent about his specific contribution to the development of flying discs. For reasons of confidentiality, he cannot provide any information on this. (3, 7)

In this context, it would be interesting to know what he was doing between May and September 1945.

In the decades after the war, he claims to have maintained contact with the Third Power. The connection was only broken off in the mid-1980s. (3, 5)

Since the content of his statements, especially with regard to his involvement in the development of flying discs, cannot be directly verified, indirect confirmation can only be obtained by checking the plausibility of his claims. More on that later, as I said.

Wilhelm Landig was not the first author to contribute to our “problem”. Ladislao Szabo had already claimed in his 1947 book Hitler esta vivo that at the end of the war, submarines would be used to

A retreat of high-ranking Nazi officials, including Hitler, to the South Pole took place. (8)

Published between 1950 and 1957 in German press publications contain several reports that can be summarized under the heading: "Flying saucers - a German invention." (An overview of this can be found in Chapter 2.) The extract of this information can then be read in Rudolf Lusar's book The German secret weapons of World War II and their further development. (10)

These publications will be discussed in more detail later.

After that, the topic of the German flying discs remained quiet for a long time. It was not until 1971 that Landig lifted the veil of silence a little in the first part of his trilogy entitled Götzen gegen Thule , when he reported on the existence of the V-7 and the Arctic base 103. However, he did not yet write about a withdrawal to the Antarctic or South America. (2)

In 1974, the next round began with the publication of a small booklet by Samisdat Publishers in Toronto. The title was: UFO - Nazi secret weapon?, which was later followed by a German edition. (11) In it, the Chilean author W. Mattern reported for the first time on the transfer of technology to the southern polar region by a fleet of German submarines in the last days of the war in connection with the exploration of Antarctica by the Ritscher expedition. He also addressed the last sea battle, which was successful for the Germans. He went into detail about the arrival of the two "lost" submarines in Argentine ports.

In contrast to Wilhelm Landig, he made the astonishing statement that the entire UFO phenomenon observed worldwide since 1947 at the latest could be traced back to the flying discs developed in Germany. Mattern also believed that Hitler was able to save himself by flying to the Antarctic, something which Landig later vehemently denied. (1)

In 1979, the same publisher published a brochure under the pseudonym of "Christof Friedrich" entitled Secret Nazi Polar Expeditions, which deals in detail with the Ritscher expedition, mentions the actions of Admiral Byrd and otherwise deals more subtly with possible consequences regarding German post-war activities in the Antarctic. (12) The owner of the pseudonym is hiding behind the of the publishing house Samisdat Publishers, Ernst Zündel, who also became known through the trials against him for denying the Holocaust.

In another book published in 1994, the author of the foreword, WA Harbinson, reports on a paper entitled Brisant, which was presented at the Hanover Fair in 1978 and consists of two parts.

(9) This again refers to the Ritscher expedition, the transfer of know-how about the German flying discs, but this time through the two submarines that later landed in Argentina, which are said to have previously made a stopover to unload their cargo in New Swabia.

Admiral Byrd's expedition called High-jump is also mentioned.

After 1994, no new book was published that could expand the framework set by Landig in his trilogy with further details.

Nevertheless, the story continued, but in a way that clearly exceeded the framework previously adhered to by all the authors mentioned.

These publications, which are best described as secondary literature, built on the foundation laid mainly by Landig, building it up with florid ingenuity, floor by floor, giving the plot a dimension that, in the end, truly reached to the stars.

It is not the task of this book to give all the details of this extended plot. A common thread must suffice: There is repeated talk of disc-shaped flying machines called Vril, Haunebu and the mother ship Andromeda, which, either equipped with a tachyon drive, enabled faster-than-light travel in space, or, taking advantage of anti-gravity, made trips to the moon or Mars before the end of the war.

In order to avert military defeat at the last minute, they were supposed to get help from the star system Aldebaran, whose inhabitants, "bright white god-men," had founded the bases Thule and Atlantis thousands of years ago. Time travel was also possible, for example to ancient Greece.

In addition to the »real« photos of these flying discs shown, Some of the information also comes from employees of the British secret service. Further evidence to support the above-mentioned "facts" is completely lacking. (13, 14)

Landig expressly distanced himself from this kind of rewriting of history with comments such as: "Children, keep both feet on the ground!" For him, the passage about the space people of the Aldebarans was too far-fetched. (3)

According to another theory, the disc-shaped flying objects (UFOs) sighted after the Second World War are simply further developments of the German flying discs, which, analogous to the development of modern long-range rockets from the German V-2, were pushed by the victorious powers at the beginning of the Cold War.

The author Karl-Heinz Zunneck initially believed that the modern UFO phenomenon could be traced back to the US secret weapons development alone, but later came to the conclusion that German scientists were pursuing their own projects in parallel. And - and this is the emphasis - independent of the known superpowers!

In this context, he also used the term “Third Power” for the first time. (15)

Other authors expanded on the theory developed by Renato Vesco (16) in 1972, according to which an Upper Atmosphere and Space Company began secret space operations in mid-1947. Operation Full Moon, again based on German developments during the war and run by the British secret service, the Canadian Ministry of Defense and private investors, would have advanced the development of near-Earth space in the following decades in a gigantic parallel program to official space travel. Even the planet Mars would later have been included in this program and transformed into a "second Earth." The propaganda using UFOs would have had only one purpose: to cover up Operation Full Moon .

The secret spaceport, the launch and landing site of the "flying saucers", is located in Canada, in the large triangle between Vancouver in the south, Quesnel in the east and Bella Cook in the west. (17)

What do you think about this?

According to Renato Vesco, Full Moon was based on the German secret projects Feuerball and Kugelblitz as prototypes.

Eyewitnesses and passages in the British BIOS and American CIOS reports that deal specifically with German technology developments would confirm this.

Now the British journalist and editor of the aviation section of the well-known military journal Jane's Defence Weekly, Nick Cook, has Book The Hunt For Zero Point drew attention to two circumstances:

On the one hand, the British in particular had been at a particularly bad hand in their attempts to recover German aviation technology, since there were hardly any corresponding production or research sites in the zone they occupied, especially not those claimed by Vesco for Feuerball and Kugelblitz.

Secondly, all research carried out in the BIOS and CIOS reports after the publication of Vesco's book did not reveal any evidence of the existence of these two projects. (18)

It can be added that secret developments on earth of this magnitude would certainly have been discovered by the other side during the Cold War and made public after the fall of the Iron Curtain. There would then no longer have been any reason for secrecy. The situation is of course different when it comes to concealing the actions of the common enemy - the Third Power - from the eyes of the world public even today.

If, after a critical examination of all scenarios dealing with the withdrawal of German Reich forces at the end of the war and the creation and development of German flying discs, only those of Landig and Mattern are not without a certain degree of probability, then this book has also been assigned a specific task.

The first step is to examine the plausibility of the ten points mentioned above in detail. The topic will be expanded continuously in the future.

I claim, thereby agreeing with Mattern, that there has been a technical evolution of this terrestrial UFO phenomenon and that there is no extraterrestrial phenomenon beyond that!

I also claim that an essential aspect of the UFO phenomenon - the so-called abductions - has undergone a significant evolutionary change and that it is precisely this that leads us to the final goals of the Third Power!

The supposed influence of extraterrestrial intelligences on the life of our planet, which is reflected in the activities of UFOs, is even less credible when it can be ruled out with a high degree of probability that such interventions have also taken place in the past. For this reason, a historical interlude is necessary.

The evidence of pre-astronautics (paleo-SETI), which has been collected for almost 40 years and whose best-known representative is Erich von Däniken, requires a new interpretation!

The arguments put forward by the protagonists of this theory for certain, as yet unexplained, technological leaps in our history, as well as the reports of flying creatures thousands of years ago, do not lose their importance, on the contrary. It is just that their authors were different!

Back to the Third Power. If such a power exists, it undoubtedly requires some kind of operations center, or rather, a headquarters. I believe I have identified this with sufficient certainty!

I have written about the alleged involvement of the planet Mars in Operation Full Moon . While there is no evidence to support its existence, there may still be a connection between the subject of this book and the planet Mars!

And ultimately, this world is indeed facing a profound change through the Third Power! It remains to be shown that the first steps on this path have already been taken.

Machine Translated by Google

CHAPTER 2

THE DETACHMENT MOVEMENT

In this section of the book, Wilhelm Landig's individual claims will be examined point by point. Did this secession of German forces at the end of the war actually take place, and did this great struggle between nations take a different course than is claimed by official historiography today?

Apparently it all started on December 17, 1938.

1. The German Antarctic expedition to New Swabia and the construction of the Antarctic base during the war

On this 17th December 1938, with the departure of the motor vessel Schwabenland, a chapter in the exploration of the Antarctic continent began which, to this day - measured against the successes achieved - has received far too little attention.

This may be due not least to the fact that after the war the astonishing achievements of the men involved were tainted by the stigma of having been achieved under Hitler.

The initiative for this expedition came from the Four-Year Plan Authority. Hermann Göring, appointed by Hitler as commissioner for the Four-Year Plan, had clearly defined the tasks for the expedition.

> The aim was then to secure Germany's right to have a say and its due share in the coming division of Antarctica among the great powers through an exploratory advance into the Antarctic waters and into the interior of the Antarctic continent, and thus to create the conditions for the German Reich's undiminished right to undisturbed whaling, which is vital for its 80 million people (because of the supply of fat; the author). (19)

On 19 January 1939, the research vessel Schwabenland reached the Antarctic pack ice limit. The ship was equipped with steam catapults, with the help of which two Dornier-Wal flying boats could be launched to reconnaissance flights over the Antarctic. A novelty at that time. On February 3, 1939, one of the most spectacular discoveries was made in this way. On that day, the flying boat Boreas took off on a reconnaissance flight. The notes of the expedition leader Alfred Ritscher about this flight contain an interesting detail: the discovery of ice-free areas of terrain that were completely unusual for the Antarctic, as well as ice-free lakes, "ponds transparent to the bottom, apparently several meters deep with no ice formation, although the outside thermometer shows -5 degrees Celsius, embedded between nodule-like, rounded peaks of reddish-brown layered rock; base for later land expeditions?" (19) This remark and the existence of the ice-free lakes named after the flight captain Schirrmacher would later form the basis for speculation about a German Reich base in the Antarctic. The research work lasted until February 6. By then, more than 11,000 images had been taken to photographically record an area of around 350,000 square kilometers, which was given the name New Swabia. Metal arrows with a swastika embossed on them were dropped along all flight paths; at the turning points of the planes, these arrows bore the German Reich flag. Germany had thus taken the first step under international law towards taking possession of this area.

New Swabia is still the official geographical name today. After completing its tasks, the Schwabenland set off for home. The research vessel's journey ended in Cuxhaven on April 11th.

Contrary to other claims, the Schwabenland did not return to the Antarctic during the war. The ship served the long-range reconnaissance groups of the Luftwaffe's naval aviation as a sling ship on the Western Front and in the Norwegian combat area. Here it was torpedoed by a British submarine in 1944. The ship, which was no longer repairable, was then used as a barge in the Oslo Fjord until the end of the war and was sunk in December 1946, loaded to the last corner with gas ammunition. (19)

Were there other German activities in the Antarctic during the war? Without these, the claims about the development of an Antarctic base would be unfounded. The fact that such a plan was not implemented during the German Antarctic expedition of 1938/39

It should already be clear what was discussed. When asked about the general possibilities of setting up such a military base, the last surviving member of the expedition, the aerial photographer Siegfried Sauter, answered in an interview as follows:

Question: "Then you probably also think it is impossible that shortly before the war began and during the war, building materials were transported to New Swabia to build bunkers in the ice, bunkers for accommodation and submarine bunkers?"

Answer: »All the rumors and speculations that were circulated after the war are sheer nonsense. Ships could not land because of the pack ice belt that surrounds New Swabia. Only icebreakers or specially armored ships would have been able to do this. The ships first encounter shelf ice, then edge ice that is up to 100 meters high, often even higher. The ice pushes outwards in the Antarctic winter and then breaks off after a while.

Building a bunker in or under the ice is technically impossible because the ice moves and drifts outwards. ... Every station where researchers spend the winter has to be supplied with food for a year. That is only enough for a small number of people. The idea that a bunker was built for Hitler in New Swabia is utter nonsense ... Anyone who spreads such rumours has no idea what the Antarctic is like; it is the most desolate continent there is. Storms rage across it at speeds of 200 kilometres and more, and for half the year it is night, total night." When asked about the possibilities of the "Schirrmacher Oasis", Siegfried Sauter replied: "When you hear the word oasis, you normally imagine a place with palm trees. There is no vegetation in the Antarctic. The Schirrmacher Oasis is an ice-free zone with a blue lake in the middle. ... it is about an hour's flight from the ice shelf and is ice-free during the Antarctic summer, which begins in January. Only this time can be used for the construction and establishment of research stations.« (19)

Things are not looking good for the German Reich base in Antarctica!

Due to the pack ice, there is no possibility of landing goods.
Building bunkers in the ice near the coast is not possible because of its permanent Movement is not technically possible. Food must be brought in for a year in advance. It is pitch black for half the year, not to mention the climate in general. The supposedly ice-free lakes are only ice-free for half the year.

And despite all seemingly compelling logic, weren't there other German operations in the Antarctic region during the war? Yes, there were.

The operations of the German auxiliary cruisers have become particularly well-known, the most spectacular of which was the capture of parts of the Norwegian whaling fleet in January 1941 not far from the coast of New Swabia. In 24 hours, the auxiliary cruiser Pinguin captured 35,000 gross registered tons and 22,000 tons of whale oil as a prize without firing a single shot (Figure 1).

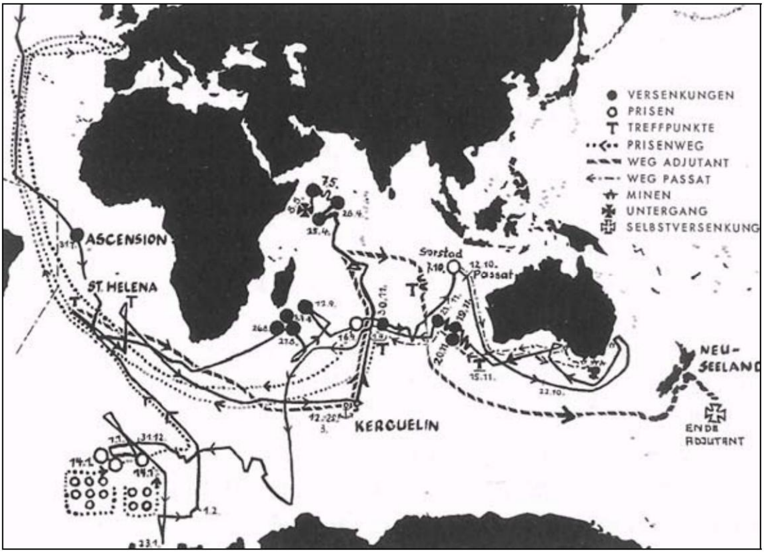
Auxiliary cruisers are converted merchant ships that are armed to enable them to gain lightning-fast access to enemy ships. To do this, they sail under the camouflage of a merchant ship, usually of a different nationality, and only reveal themselves to their opponents at the last moment by raising their country's war flag. Because their armament is weak compared to real warships, they generally avoid encounters with enemy ships. Basically, they are the privateer ships and the men on them are the corsairs of the modern age.

One year after the Norwegian whalers were captured by the Pinguin , the German naval command ordered the auxiliary cruiser Thor to repeat this successful operation, but this time it was unsuccessful. The Thor also operated for a few days near Neu-Schwabenland (Figure 2). (20)

The following scenario would be quite conceivable in connection with the operations of these two auxiliary cruisers:

Every year, always during the Antarctic summer (see Sauter's statement), the auxiliary cruisers supply a base on the coast of New Swabia. After unloading their cargo, they then go about their actual task, which is to capture enemy merchant ships.

But there is no evidence for this scenario. There are no corresponding statements from the men involved, and the official route of the ships still passed the coasts of New Swabia at a considerable distance. Since the auxiliary cruisers



VERSENKUNGEN
PRISEN
TREFFPUNKTE
PRISENWEG
WEG ADJUTANT
WEG PASSAT
MINEN
UNTERGANG
SELBSTVERSENKUNG ASCENSION
ST. HELENA
KERGUELIN
Sorstad
Passat
NEU-SEELAND
ENDE ADJUTANT

Fig. 1: The course of the Pinguin took the ship close to the Antarctic coast.

AZOREN ASCENSION
ST. HELENA
SEYCHELLEN
Pr. EDWARD CROZET
KERGUELEN
9.10. an YOKOHAMA
30.11.42.
zu oben
① 14.6.
② 20.7.
③ 4.7.
④ 19.6.
VERSENKUNGEN
PRISEN
OPERATIONSGEBIET
I. VOM 1. 6. 42 – 8. 9. 42
II. VOM 8. 9. 42 – 20. 9. 42
AUSGEBRANNT

Fig. 2: The Thor also came close to Antarctica.

Even though the ships were neither icebreakers nor armoured, this does not eliminate the objections of contemporary witness Sauter, who, based on his experience, categorically ruled out the landing of normal ships because of the pack ice belt.

Siegfried Sauter's reservations naturally apply equally to the situation after the end of the war, since the natural conditions in the Antarctic had not changed by then.

Other facts also stood in the way of the establishment of a Reich German base after the end of hostilities in 1945.

Already in the first post-war years, the Russians had established their large research station Nowolasarewskaja in New Swabia which was continually expanded in the following years. During the Norwegian Antarctic Expedition from 1956 to 1960, the entire area was topographically re-recorded, so that complications with the Germans would have arisen during this operation at the latest. (19)

Conclusion: While the German Antarctic expedition of 1938/39 is well documented, there is no evidence of the establishment and expansion of a German Reich base during the war or immediately after the end of the struggle for nations. Did Landig lie here, or is "Antarctica" a synonym for something else?

2. The departure of German submarines in the last days of the war with the task of keeping specialists and technical know-how out of Allied reach

In order to give this claim a certain degree of probability, at least four basic conditions must have been met:

- the existence of submarine types capable of long-term underwater voyages in order to evade the enemy's military superiority at sea and in the air;

- submarines which could carry a considerable number of persons on board in addition to the crew essential for their operation;

- "missing" submarines whose fate could not be verified in the post-war statistics; highly motivated personnel among the submarine crews and among the evacuated technical specialists who were prepared to cut off all ties with their homeland, perhaps for years to come, in order to be able to work for their political ideal despite an uncertain future.

In the first years of the Second World War, German submarines were not yet equipped for long submersible journeys. The diesel engines of the submarines required oxygen for the combustion process, without which combustion could not take place. In the case of conventional diesel engines, this oxygen is sucked in from the air, in which it is present at around 21 percent. If a submarine was forced to dive by enemy ships or aircraft, it could no longer use the diesel engines. In this case, the underwater journey was continued with electric motors. These, in turn, depended on functioning accumulator batteries to operate. If these ran out, the submarine had to surface.

At the beginning of 1944, the Germans began to equip the boats with "snorkels," which made it possible to supply the diesel engines with atmospheric air while sailing close to the water's surface. An improvement against the detection by enemy radar aircraft, which was still possible up to that point, was the fitting of rubbery, waffled covers that partially absorbed the radar beams and partially radiated them in other directions.

After the war, all naval powers introduced the German “Schnorchel” into their submarine fleets and found it to be extremely suitable and useful. (10)

A different development could have changed the course of the war in the Atlantic if series production and testing of these type "XXI" submarines had been possible earlier. Two normal diesel engines of 2000 hp each were used as the surface propulsion engines for these boats. For underwater operation, however, they were given two electric motors of 2510 hp each. With these, the submarines could travel for 80 to 100 hours without having to surface again. They were also called electric boats because their electrical engine power was higher.

than the performance of the diesel engines. While the old submarines reached an average speed of only eight nautical miles per hour when underwater, the new "XXI" types could travel underwater at speeds of 17.5 nautical miles per hour, which was tantamount to a technical revolution.

By the end of the war, 120 of these boats had been delivered by the German shipyards. However, as the trial runs and the training of the crews took a long time, only one boat (U2511) was reportedly used shortly before the end of the war, but it was never fired.

Some of the so-called Walther submarines were also completed by the end of the war . These operated underwater on the basis of the liquid engines developed by Prof. Walther. In order to be completely independent of the oxygen in the air, the boats carried the oxygen in a liquid oxygen carrier, for example hydrogen peroxide. Due to a technical circulation process, the Walther submarines could thus remain underwater for even longer. With the planned two Walther turbines, each with 7500 HP, the speed increased to up to 25 nautical miles per hour! All of the boats in operation and under construction were - again allegedly - destroyed in time. It was not until nine years after the end of the war that the British managed to build a replica of a Walther submarine, which shows the incredible progress that the German developers had made compared to their competitors. (10)

Was it possible for German submarines to transport a significant number of additional people on board over long distances, in addition to their crew?

On 22 November 1941, the German auxiliary cruiser Atlantis was sunk in the southern Atlantic by the British heavy cruiser Devonshire

After a short, unequal battle, the Atlantis crew sank their ship so that it would not fall into enemy hands. During the same period, the same fate befell the supply ship Python. 100 (!) of the survivors were taken on board by the U-boats U 68, U 124, U 129 and UA. After a week and a half of sailing in tropical heat under almost unbearable conditions, 60 to 70 men from each boat were handed over to larger Italian U-boats that had rushed to help. With this overcrowding of first 100, then 30 to 40 men, U 68 and UA had covered a total of 5000 nautical miles, which was almost

10,000 kilometers, or a quarter of the Earth's circumference! (20)

Are there any "missing" German submarines whose fate could not be determined even after the war?

Officially, the two boats U 530 and U 977, which surrendered to the Argentine authorities on July 10 and August 17, 1945 respectively, were the last missing German submarines.

We will talk more about these boats later.

Of the total of 1,174 German submarines that were commissioned, 863 were deployed to the front. 630 of these boats were lost, 42 were lost at home by accident, 81 boats were destroyed in their home territory by enemy action such as mines and bombs, 215 were sunk at the end of the war, 153 boats were transferred to foreign ports after the surrender, 38 boats were decommissioned due to age or irreparable damage, and eleven boats were interned or transferred to other navies. (10) However, there are other figures that differ from these statistics. These deviations are not surprising, since almost all documents of all command authorities, staffs, flotillas and submarines are still in the hands of the Allies. (19) Apart from the fact that, due to the contradictions between the statistics, one or another German submarine may have been recorded in the wrong category or not at all, there may be a not inconsiderable number of unreported "surviving" submarines among the 215 boats that allegedly sunk themselves at the end of the war.

It does not seem too far-fetched to think that before the withdrawal, the transfer of a significant number of technical specialists to some submarines was only possible if the submarine left part of its crew behind. This part, which was put on land, would then have spread the myth of the submarine being scuttled.

At a time when the end of the war was imminent, and especially after May 8, 1945, when everything seemed lost for the German side, were German men still willing to link their personal fate with the vague fate of a future Fourth Reich? Was the will to self-sacrifice really so great under these circumstances?

There are enough examples from the war of a courageous sacrifice that consciously and unhesitatingly risked one's own life for the survival of Germany. In this respect, the men, who would have been involved in a withdrawal movement would have had it easier. Not the sacrifice of their lives, but years of separation from everything they loved and a life of constant anonymity.

A few examples of voluntary self-sacrifices from the time of the war should suffice to make it clear to our present generation that people seem to have changed as times have changed.
And if not the people, then at least their values.

One report was provided by the aviator Hanna Reitsch, who also flew the manned V-1. In August 1943, she and some like-minded people came to the conclusion that a favorable negotiating basis for a quick end to the war could only be achieved if the enemy's most important key positions and the centers of resistance could be destroyed in quick succession while sparing the enemy's civilian population.

To do this, people would have had to be found who were prepared to use a technically suitable means to attack the pinpoint target in order to hit it in the center and thus make any repair or restoration impossible. In such an operation, there would be no chance of saving one's life and the complete overcoming of one's own ego would be required. It is important to note that at that time nothing was known about the Japanese kamikaze pilots.

A manned glide bomb was to be used as the device. The possibility of using the manned V-1 was also considered. According to Hanna Reitsch, thousands of people volunteered for this self-sacrifice mission. Initially, only a small group of 70 men were drafted into the project. (21)

Another planned suicide mission took place on April 7, 1945, west of Hanover over Lake Steinhude. 180 Me 109 aircraft were made available for this purpose. 184 pilots volunteered. The pilots were given the task of ramming the incoming American bombers after they had used up their ammunition and thus causing them to crash. They and the accompanying jet fighters destroyed 51 heavy American bombers that day. 77 of the German pilots were killed. (22)

Thousands of volunteers also came forward for the formation of the Navy's small combat units, including 3,000 officers alone. In one- and two-man boats, called "seals," and as combat swimmers, the volunteers wanted to take on the Allied fleet and convoys, destroy bridges, and blow up supply depots.

They were aware that in every deployment the chances were almost 100 percent in favor of the opponent. (23)

Conclusion: The four basic prerequisites for the alleged withdrawal movement by submarine to take place at the end of the war were all met at that time.

3. The last naval battle near Iceland, kept secret by the Allies in Europe Did this naval battle between the German submarines involved in the withdrawal and the Allied warships actually take place? And if so, did it really end in a total German victory?

This dispute was reported extensively in South American newspapers. Landig cited the Chilean El Mercurio as an example.

The Chilean author W. Mattern was the first to address this naval battle in his book UFO - Nazi secret weapon?, published in 1974. Landig then followed him in Wolfszeit um Thule in 1980.

The reason for surprise was the fact that Mattern, in order to support the theses of his book, had obtained copies of excerpts from press publications dating back to 1945, including a copy from the aforementioned El Mercurio of March 5, 1947, about Admiral Byrd's Antarctic expedition. However, a copy of the article about the naval battle in question was sought in vain.

In order to gain final clarity on this aspect, the author of this book carried out research in the University Library of Santiago de Chile. Older editions of Chilean newspapers can also be consulted there. The results of the research regarding the article in question in El Mercurio were negative.

Conclusion: The alleged sea battle is a legend. Landig took over Apparently it was written by Mattern. Since his trilogy is, according to his own statement, a mixture of truth and fiction, the description of this sea battle belongs to the latter.

4. The evacuation of the German Reich base in the Arctic

According to Landig, a submarine base in the Arctic was evacuated shortly before the end of the war. The fact that German submarines were still capable of such an operation in the last days of the war has been explained in detail above.

However, the question here is different: Was there anything in the Arctic that needed to be evacuated that was more important than the well-known weather stations on Labrador and Spitsbergen, for example?

Apparently - yes. The following can be read in the memoirs of Armaments Minister Albert Speer: "... I rejected his suggestion as well as the plan for a temporary escape that our most successful fighter pilot, Werner Baumbach, had made to me earlier. A long-range four-engine seaplane, which had been deployed from northern Norway to a German weather station in Greenland during the war and supplied it with food, was to take Baumbach, me and some friends to one of the many quiet bays in Greenland for the first few months of the German occupation." (24)

As so often in his memoirs, Speer does not seem to have been too strict with the truth when describing his planned escape, portraying it as an undertaking between friends without any official character, which was also prevented from being carried out by his refusal. Although Werner Baumbach was one of Speer's circle of friends, his actual function at the end of the war was that of the last commander of the "secret" squadron KG 200.

»What distinguished the pilots of KG 200 was their quality as specialists. They were mainly flying personnel who were able to take on special tasks that would have overwhelmed an average front-line squadron: combat missions and Transport missions of a particularly difficult nature under exceptional circumstances. And almost always under a high degree of secrecy. For this purpose they had an arsenal of various aircraft types at their disposal - some of which only existed in a few copies.« (25)

Under Baumbach's command, the last major operation of KG 200 was to be launched from Flensburg in the first days of May 1945. The giant BV 222 flying boats had been prepared to take a large group of people - the Reich's political leadership was intended - to a hidden place on the coast of Greenland. There, in safe isolation - or so it was imagined - they would be able to survive for a long period of time and then try to somehow "return to life" undisturbed. (25) In the end, however, this did not happen.

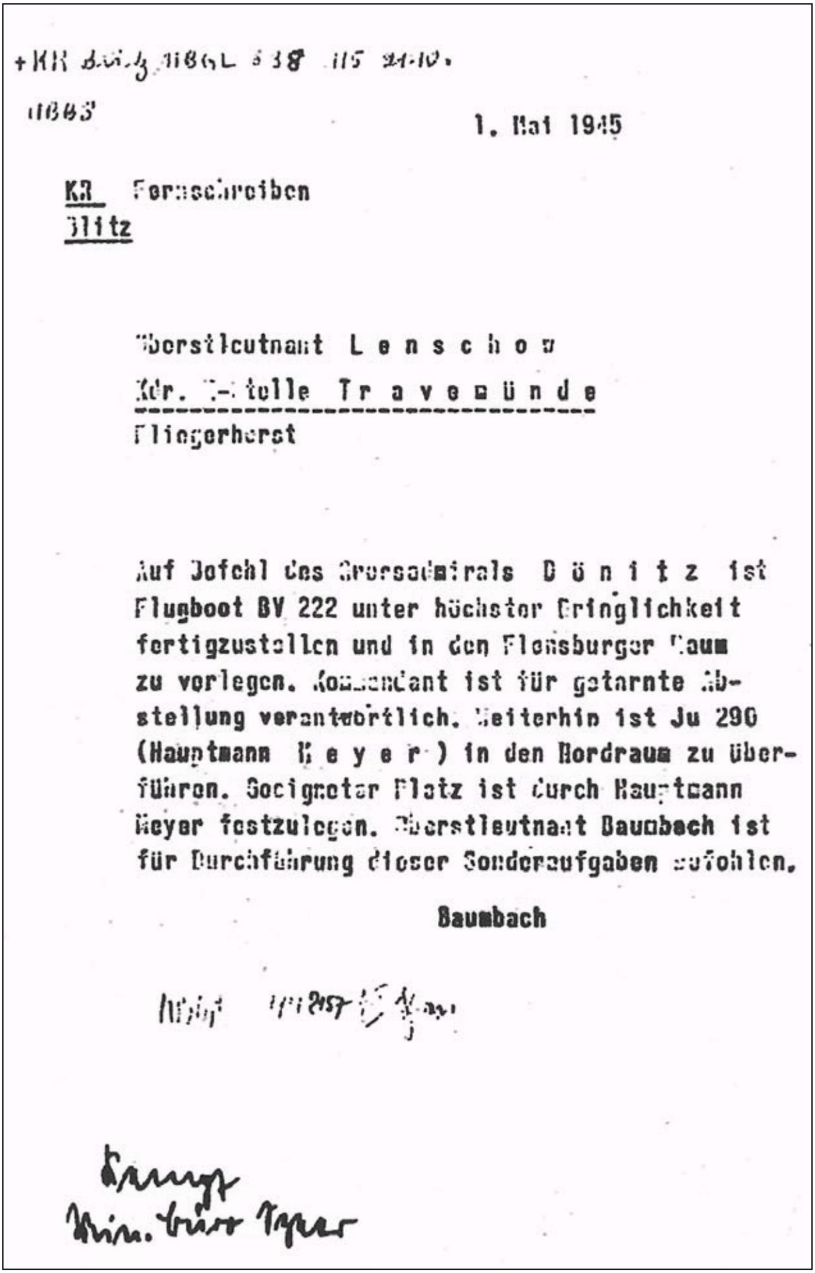
Two surviving documents document the concentration not only of flying boats, but also of other transport aircraft of KG 200 on May 1, 1945 in the Flensburg area, where the seat of the Dönitz government was known to be located (Figures 3 and 4). The order to Baumbach came from the new Reich President Dönitz personally and thus, in contrast to Speer's statement, was official in nature.

Since the leading figures of the Reich government should certainly not be evacuated without their most important employees and also not without a minimum of technical equipment, it can be assumed that the infrastructure at the Greenland base would have clearly exceeded that of a small weather station.

This is also consistent with a report from the Allied news agency Reuters, published by a Swedish newspaper on December 15, 1944, according to which US military personnel had had to fend off German commando operations in Greenland in recent weeks. These operations also included an attack by German twin-engine bombers. (26) Since these bombers could not have made the long journey from Norway to Greenland and back non-stop, appropriate runways must have existed in Greenland.

Rumors that a submarine bunker called the Beaver Dam had also been built on the coast of Greenland could not be verified and will therefore remain outside of this discussion.

Machine Translated by Google



+KR BUEZ 1186L 538 115 21.10.

1188S

1. Mai 1945

KR Fernschreiben
Blitz

Oberstleutnant Lenschow
Kdr. E-Stelle Travemünde
Fliegerhorst

Auf Befehl des Grossadmirals Dönitz ist Flugboot BV 222 unter höchster Dringlichkeit fertigzustellen und in den Flensburger Raum zu verlegen. Kommandant ist für getarnte Abstellung verantwortlich. Weiterhin ist Ju 290 (Hauptmann Meyer) in den Nordraum zu überführen. Geeigneter Platz ist durch Hauptmann Meyer festzulegen. Oberstleutnant Baumbach ist für Durchführung dieser Sonderaufgaben befohlen.

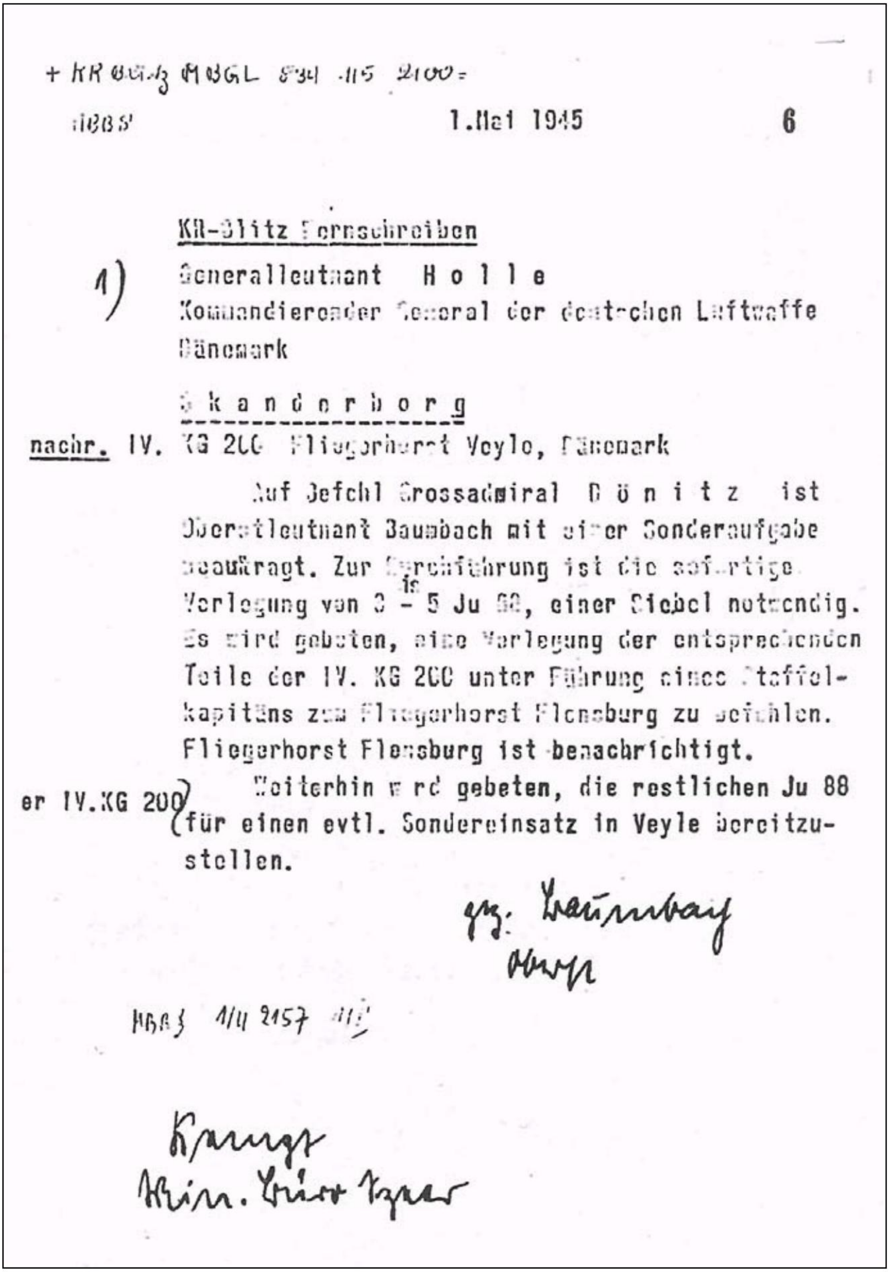
Baumbach

[illegible] 1/1 2157 [illegible]

[illegible]
Min. büro Speer

Abb. 3

Machine Translated by Google



+ KR BGZ MBGL 834 1/5 2100=

MBBS 1. Mai 1945 6

KR-Blitz Fernschreiben

1) Generalleutnant Holle
Kommandierender General der deutschen Luftwaffe
Dänemark

Skanderborg

nachr. IV. KG 200 Fliegerhorst Veyle, Dänemark

Auf Befehl Grossadmiral Dönitz ist Oberstleutnant Baumbach mit einer Sonderaufgabe beauftragt. Zur Durchführung ist die sofortige Verlegung von 3 – 5 Ju 88, einer Siebel notwendig. Es wird gebeten, eine Verlegung der entsprechenden Teile der IV. KG 200 unter Führung eines Staffelkapitäns zum Fliegerhorst Flensburg zu befehlen. Fliegerhorst Flensburg ist benachrichtigt.

er IV. KG 200 Weiterhin wird gebeten, die restlichen Ju 88 für einen evtl. Sondereinsatz in Veyle bereitzustellen.

gez. Baumbach
Obstlt

MBBS 1/5 2157

Abb. 4

The fact that German military activities in Greenland during the war were somewhat surprising in their scale is also proven by press releases from the period after the war.

In one case, 120 men were landed by submarines as early as 1942, and were reinforced by a further 30 men in the autumn of 1944. They only surrendered to the Americans in 1947 (Figure 5). Another German group, the radio station under the command of Sergeant Kulik, was not even discovered by the Russians until 1949.

(Figure 6) This shows that the plan to survive for a longer period of time in a Greenlandic base and to remain undetected was not so hopeless.

Conclusion: The existence of a significant German base in the Arctic (in Greenland) can be assumed with a high degree of probability. From a practical point of view, nothing stood in the way of its evacuation by German submarines at the end of the war.

5. The withdrawal movement of German submarines had Argentina as its target

Why Argentina? Because the political and economic conditions in this country in 1945 could be described as almost ideal for the Germans. But more on that later.

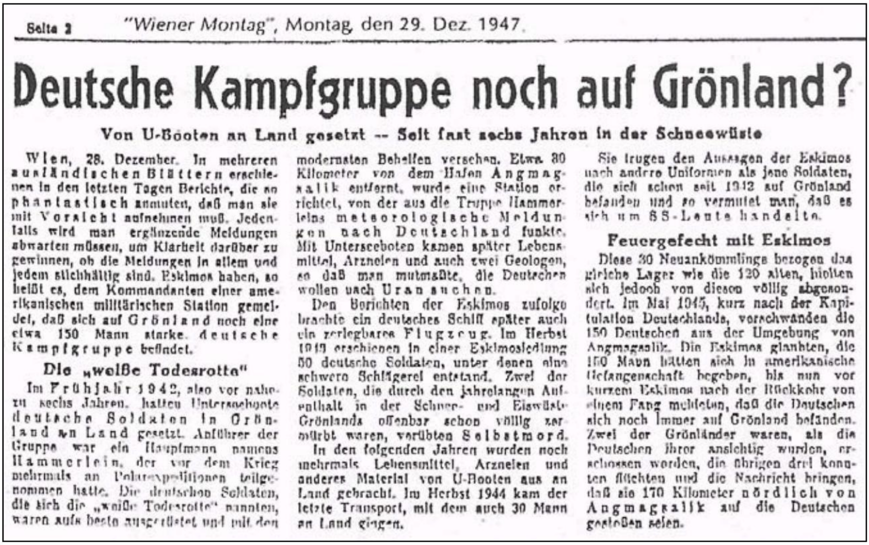
It has already been shown in detail that the submarines could not possibly have landed their cargo, which consisted of technical know-how and the specialists necessary for its practical use, on the "coasts" of New Swabia.

But what about Argentina?

On May 30, 1945, a memorandum classified as "secret" circulated between the American State Department and the War Department, according to which the British Embassy in Buenos Aires had already been informed by the Argentine Foreign Ministry on May 18 that several German submarines were apparently waiting off the coast of Argentina to surrender to the Argentine authorities (Figure 7).

It then took almost another two months - about the reasons for - until the first German this delay can only be speculated -,

Machine Translated by Google



Seite 2 "Wiener Montag", Montag, den 29. Dez. 1947.

Deutsche Kampfgruppe noch auf Grönland?

Von U-Booten an Land gesetzt -- Seit fast sechs Jahren in der Schneewüste

Wien, 28. Dezember. In mehreren ausländischen Blättern erschienen in den letzten Tagen Berichte, die so phantastisch anmuten, daß man sie mit Vorsicht aufnehmen muß. Jedenfalls wird man ergänzende Meldungen abwarten müssen, um Klarheit darüber zu gewinnen, ob die Meldungen in allem und jedem stichhältig sind. Eskimos haben, so heißt es, dem Kommandanten einer amerikanischen militärischen Station gemeldet, daß sich auf Grönland noch eine etwa 150 Mann starke deutsche Kampfgruppe befindet.

Die „weiße Todesrotte"

Im Frühjahr 1942, also vor nahezu sechs Jahren, hatten Unterseeboote deutsche Soldaten in Grönland an Land gesetzt. Anführer der Gruppe war ein Hauptmann namens Hammerlein, der vor dem Krieg mehrmals an Polarexpeditionen teilgenommen hatte. Die deutschen Soldaten, die sich die „weiße Todesrotte" nannten, waren aufs beste ausgerüstet und mit den modernsten Behelfen versehen. Etwa 80 Kilometer von dem Hafen Angmagsalik entfernt, wurde eine Station errichtet, von der aus die Truppe Hammerleins meteorologische Meldungen nach Deutschland funkte. Mit Unterseebooten kamen später Lebensmittel, Arzneien und auch zwei Geologen, so daß man mutmaßte, die Deutschen wollen nach Uran suchen.

Den Berichten der Eskimos zufolge brachte ein deutsches Schiff später auch ein zerlegbares Flugzeug. Im Herbst 1943 erschienen in einer Eskimosiedlung 50 deutsche Soldaten, unter denen eine schwere Schlägerei entstand. Zwei der Soldaten, die durch den jahrelangen Aufenthalt in der Schnee- und Eiswüste Grönlands offenbar schon völlig zermürbt waren, verübten Selbstmord.

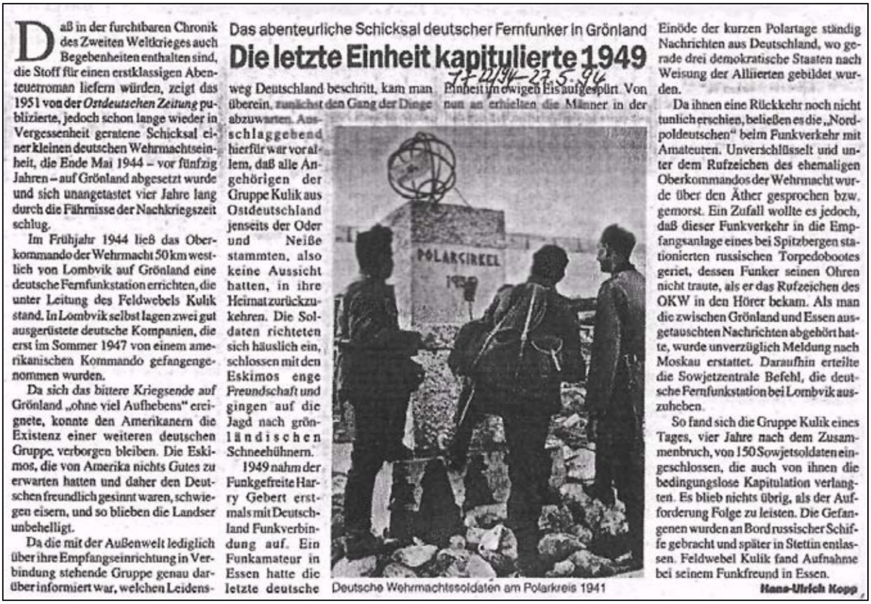
In den folgenden Jahren wurden noch mehrmals Lebensmittel, Arzneien und anderes Material von U-Booten aus an Land gebracht. Im Herbst 1944 kam der letzte Transport, mit dem auch 30 Mann an Land gingen.

Sie trugen den Aussagen der Eskimos nach andere Uniformen als jene Soldaten, die sich schon seit 1942 auf Grönland befanden und so vermutet man, daß es sich um SS-Leute handelte.

Feuergefecht mit Eskimos

Diese 30 Neuankömmlinge bezogen das gleiche Lager wie die 120 alten, hielten sich jedoch von diesen völlig abgesondert. Im Mai 1945, kurz nach der Kapitulation Deutschlands, verschwanden die 150 Deutschen aus der Umgebung von Angmagsalik. Die Eskimos glaubten, die 150 Mann hätten sich in amerikanische Gefangenschaft begeben, bis nun vor kurzem Eskimos nach der Rückkehr von einem Fang meldeten, daß die Deutschen sich noch immer auf Grönland befänden. Zwei der Grönländer waren, als die Deutschen ihrer ansichtig wurden, erschossen worden, die übrigen drei konnten flüchten und die Nachricht bringen, daß sie 170 Kilometer nördlich von Angmagsalik auf die Deutschen gestoßen seien.

Abb. 5



POLARCIRKEL

Das abenteurliche Schicksal deutscher Fernfunker in Grönland

Die letzte Einheit kapitulierte 1949

7F 2/94 – 27.5.94

Daß in der furchtbaren Chronik des Zweiten Weltkrieges auch Begebenheiten enthalten sind, die Stoff für einen erstklassigen Abenteuerroman liefern würden, zeigt das 1951 von der Ostdeutschen Zeitung publizierte, jedoch schon lange wieder in Vergessenheit geratene Schicksal einer kleinen deutschen Wehrmachtseinheit, die Ende Mai 1944 – vor fünfzig Jahren – auf Grönland abgesetzt wurde und sich unangetastet vier Jahre lang durch die Fährnisse der Nachkriegszeit schlug.

Im Frühjahr 1944 ließ das Oberkommando der Wehrmacht 50 km westlich von Lombvik auf Grönland eine deutsche Fernfunkstation errichten, die unter Leitung des Feldwebels Kulik stand. In Lombvik selbst lagen zwei gut ausgerüstete deutsche Kompanien, die erst im Sommer 1947 von einem amerikanischen Kommando gefangengenommen wurden.

Da sich das bittere Kriegsende auf Grönland „ohne viel Aufhebens" ereignete, konnte den Amerikanern die Existenz einer weiteren deutschen Gruppe verborgen bleiben. Die Eskimos, die von Amerika nichts Gutes zu erwarten hatten und daher den Deutschen freundlich gesinnt waren, schwiegen eisern, und so blieben die Landser unbehelligt.

Da die mit der Außenwelt lediglich über ihre Empfangseinrichtung in Verbindung stehende Gruppe genau darüber informiert war, welchen Leidensweg Deutschland beschritt, kam man überein, zunächst den Gang der Dinge abzuwarten. Ausschlaggebend hierfür war vor allem, daß alle Angehörigen der Gruppe Kulik aus Ostdeutschland jenseits der Oder und Neiße stammten, also keine Aussicht hatten, in ihre Heimat zurückzukehren. Die Soldaten richteten sich häuslich ein, schlossen mit den Eskimos enge Freundschaft und gingen auf die Jagd nach grönländischen Schneehühnern.

1949 nahm der Funkgefreite Harry Gebert erstmals mit Deutschland Funkverbindung auf. Ein Funkamateur in Essen hatte die letzte deutsche Einheit im ewigen Eis aufgespürt. Von nun an erhielten die Männer in der Einöde der kurzen Polartage ständig Nachrichten aus Deutschland, wo gerade drei demokratische Staaten nach Weisung der Alliierten gebildet wurden.

Da ihnen eine Rückkehr noch nicht tunlich erschien, beließen es die „Norddeutschen" beim Funkverkehr mit Amateuren. Unverschlüsselt und unter dem Rufzeichen des ehemaligen Oberkommandos der Wehrmacht wurde über den Äther gesprochen bzw. gemorst. Ein Zufall wollte es jedoch, daß dieser Funkverkehr in die Empfangsanlage eines bei Spitzbergen stationierten russischen Torpedobootes geriet, dessen Funker seinen Ohren nicht traute, als er das Rufzeichen des OKW in den Hörer bekam. Als man die zwischen Grönland und Essen ausgetauschten Nachrichten abgehört hatte, wurde unverzüglich Meldung nach Moskau erstattet. Daraufhin erteilte die Sowjetzentrale Befehl, die deutsche Fernfunkstation bei Lombvik auszuheben.

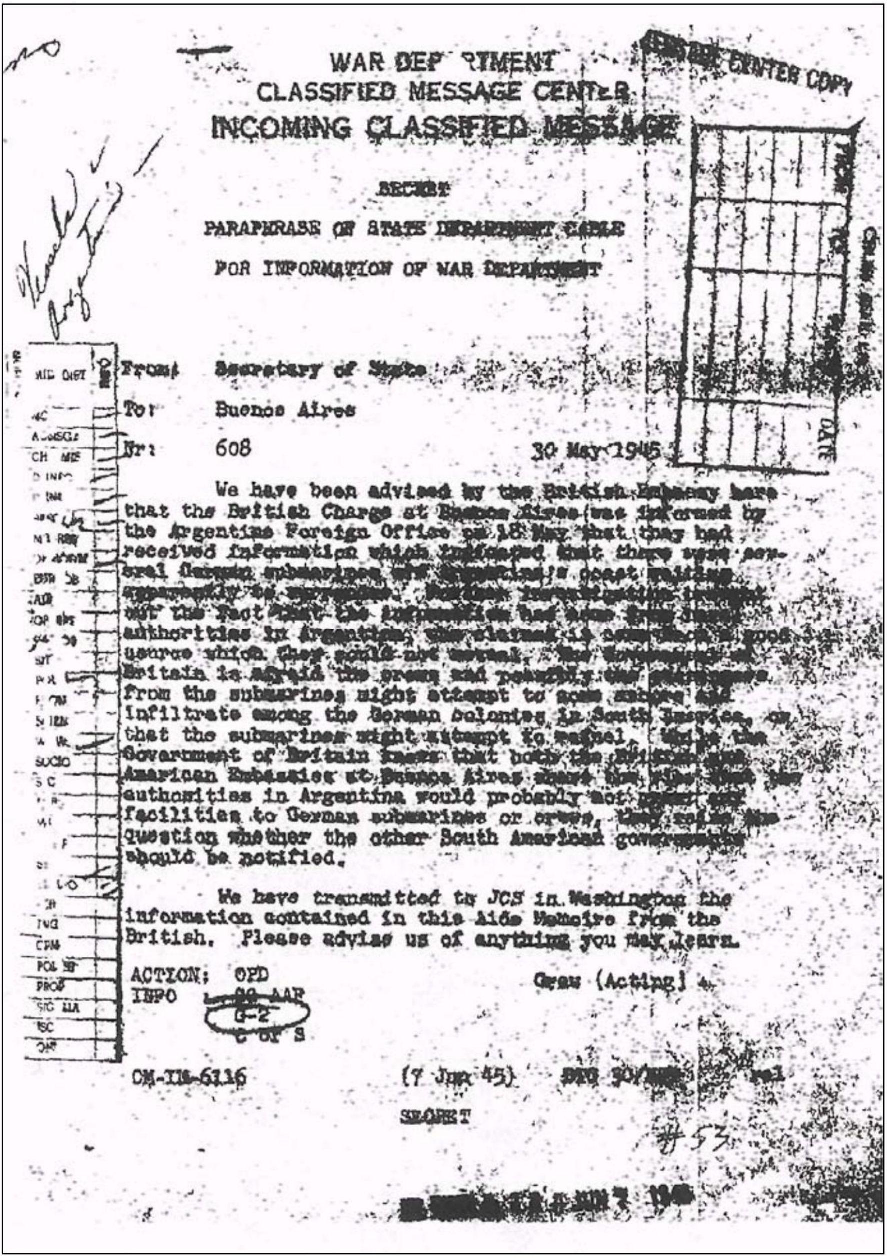
So fand sich die Gruppe Kulik eines Tages, vier Jahre nach dem Zusammenbruch, von 150 Sowjetsoldaten eingeschlossen, die auch von ihnen die bedingungslose Kapitulation verlangten. Es blieb nichts übrig, als der Aufforderung Folge zu leisten. Die Gefangenen wurden an Bord russischer Schiffe gebracht und später in Stettin entlassen. Feldwebel Kulik fand Aufnahme bei seinem Funkfreund in Essen.

Deutsche Wehrmachtssoldaten am Polarkreis 1941

Hans-Ulrich Kopp

Abb. 6

Machine Translated by Google



WAR DEPARTMENT
CLASSIFIED MESSAGE CENTER
INCOMING CLASSIFIED MESSAGE

MESSAGE CENTER COPY

SECRET

PARAPHRASE OF STATE DEPARTMENT CABLE FOR INFORMATION OF WAR DEPARTMENT

From: Secretary of State
To: Buenos Aires
Nr: 608 30 May 1945

We have been advised by the British Embassy here that the British Charge at Buenos Aires was informed by the Argentine Foreign Office on 18 May that they had received information which indicated that there were several German submarines off Argentina's coast waiting apparently to surrender. [illegible] out the fact that the information had come from [illegible] authorities in Argentina, [illegible] source which they could not reveal. The Government of Britain is afraid the crews and possibly the passengers from the submarines might attempt to come ashore and infiltrate among the German colonies in South America, or that the submarines might attempt to refuel. While the Government of Britain knows that both the British and American Embassies at Buenos Aires share the view that the authorities in Argentina would probably not grant any facilities to German submarines or crews, they raise the question whether the other South American governments should be notified.

We have transmitted to JCS in Washington the information contained in this Aide Memoire from the British. Please advise us of anything you may learn.

ACTION: OPD
INFO: CG AAF
G-2
C of S

Grew (Acting)

CM-IN-6116 (7 Jun 45) DTG 30/[illegible] rel

SECRET

#53

Abb. 7

U-boat, U 530, under its captain Otto Wermuth with 54 men on board, was made available to the Argentinians on July 10, 1945 in Mar de Plata.

Another five weeks later, on August 17, more than three months after the surrender of the German Wehrmacht, U 977 surrendered under Captain Heinz Schäffer with 32 men on board. (11)

Both boats were later transferred to the USA. During interrogation, Heinz Schäffer was repeatedly asked by the American investigative authorities where he had hidden Hitler. However, he and the entire crew of U 977 stubbornly insisted that there had been no other person on board apart from the crew. The fact that Heinz Schaffer had nothing better to do than return to Argentina after his release and deportation to Germany is piquant. (19) The Americans may therefore have had good reasons for their inquiry.

Already after the handover of U 530, rumors had been circulating that the boat had dropped off high-ranking Nazis on the coast of Argentina before its "surrender" on July 10. These rumors are documented in a telegram from the US military attaché in Buenos Aires to the War Ministry dated July 14, 1945 (Figure 8).

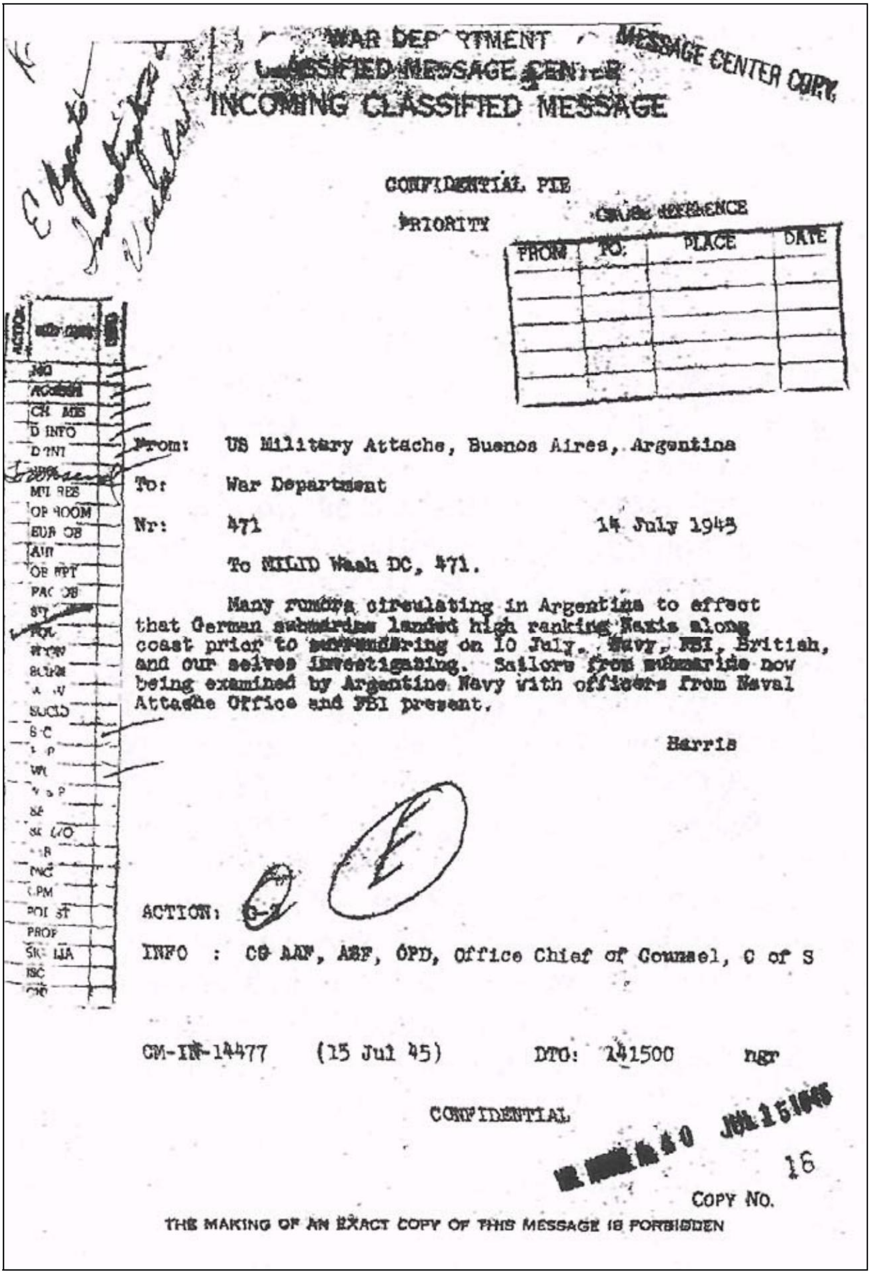
Significantly, this would not have been the first time that U 530 had been involved in secret operations. In the summer of 1944, it had already handed over various documents and strategic raw materials, including a large quantity of mercury, to the Japanese submarine 1-52 in the Atlantic, near Gibraltar, which was subsequently sunk by an American bomber. (27) U 530 and its crew therefore seemed predestined for such operations.

According to the official opinion, U 530 and U 977 were the last two German submarines to surrender to the enemy powers. That this is not the case is proven by the statements of two sailors interned in Argentina from the German battleship Admiral Graf Spee, which was sunk in a hopeless battle situation in December 1939.

Afterwards, between 23 and 29 July 1945, the sailors Dettelmann and Schulz helped unload two German submarines that had anchored off the coast of Patagonia (part of Argentina).

The further fate of these two boats will be discussed later.

Machine Translated by Google



WAR DEPARTMENT
CLASSIFIED MESSAGE CENTER
INCOMING CLASSIFIED MESSAGE

MESSAGE CENTER COPY

CONFIDENTIAL PIE

PRIORITY

CROSS REFERENCE

FROM	TO:	PLACE	DATE

From: US Military Attache, Buenos Aires, Argentina

To: War Department

Nr: 471 14 July 1945

To MILID Wash DC, 471.

Many rumors circulating in Argentina to effect that German submarine landed high ranking Nazis along coast prior to surrendering on 10 July. Navy, FBI, British, and our selves investigating. Sailors from submarine now being examined by Argentine Navy with officers from Naval Attache Office and FBI present.

Harris

ACTION: G-2

INFO : CG AAF, ASF, OPD, Office Chief of Counsel, C of S

CM-IN-14477 (15 Jul 45) DTG: 141500 ngr

CONFIDENTIAL

JUL 15 1945

COPY NO. 16

THE MAKING OF AN EXACT COPY OF THIS MESSAGE IS FORBIDDEN

Abb. 8

For now, the only thing that matters is what Dettelmann and Schulz had to report. Both were housed on a hacienda owned by a German company. One day, they were taken to a desert-like part of the coast from where they could see the two submarines. The two men went on board and helped unload heavy containers, which were taken ashore in small boats. There they were loaded onto eight large trucks.

They then drove first to the hacienda in question and then continued their journey inland.

In addition, about 80 men also left the submarines, some of them in civilian clothes. From their behavior, the two sailors concluded that they must have been important people. The evacuated people quickly got into waiting cars and drove away. (28)

This statement was the first confirmation of the rumors about German submarines landing material and personnel on Argentina's coast. It would have been no different with the U 530 and U 977. The additional capacity of the submarines has also been proven to be correct, as shown above with the example of the crew of sunk ships taken on board by the boats.

Here and there, the submarines could accommodate up to 40 additional persons for a journey of several thousand nautical miles.

The question that still remains to be answered is whether one of the submarines that unloaded its cargo on the Patagonian coast between 23 and 29 July 1945 could have been U 977, which, as we know, surrendered to the Argentine authorities about three weeks later. This certainly cannot be completely ruled out. However, if one takes into account that U 977 had completed its mission by the end of July at the latest, the probability of this is not particularly high. If the captain of the boat intended to hand over his boat after completing his mission, a subsequent three-week stay on the high seas made little sense.

There is further evidence that German submarines successfully sailed to South America with secret cargo at the end of the war. At the end of 1982, the former cultural attaché of an Israeli consulate in the USA, Chaim Rosenthal, purchased over 700 letters, family diaries, NSDAP party books and 130 photos from the former Reichsführer-SS Heinrich Himmler. Among these devotional items was the diary of Himmler's daughter Gudrun. She now calls herself Burwitz, and Rosenthal told her that he had acquired the diary and the other documents from a former SS officer who was now living in Mexico. According to his information, the documents were smuggled out of Germany by an adjutant of SS General Karl Wolff shortly before the end of the war and later brought to South America by submarine. (29)

Conclusion: The departure of more than two German submarines to Argentina has been proven. This was not an escape, but a coordinated action with the aim of keeping sensitive goods and highly qualified personnel out of the reach of the Allies.

6. The flying discs

According to Landig, there were several projects to develop flying discs. The designers named were the Viennese technician Schauberger and the engineer Schriever.

A project, with the type designation V-7, would have made it past the drawing board and testing stage and would have played a key role in the withdrawal movement at the end of the war - albeit in small numbers. The V-7 is said to have had a conventional drive with circular jets and was capable of flying thousands of kilometers without interruption. After the war, these aircraft would have given rise to the spectacular waves of sightings of so-called UFOs and would have gone down in history as "flying saucers."

It will later become clear that, among others, Schauberger had developed flying discs whose unconventional propulsion systems had truly revolutionary properties. Either Landig knew nothing about these projects, or he did not yet want to lift the veil of silence that had hung over these projects.

In the 1950s, some of those involved in the development of flying discs came back and spoke about their work in press interviews. To what extent the "whole truth" was always communicated remains to be seen. The origin of the

The UFO phenomenon seemed to have returned to Earth from space. However, the impact of these publications did not last long. The desire to see the new phenomena in the sky as manifestations of an extraterrestrial power seemed to be greater. Or was this development even due to the influence of other, entirely earthly powers?

In 1956 a publication appeared under the title The German Weapons and Secret Weapons of the Second World War and their Further Development , which was to see several new editions, some of them expanded, up until the 1970s. (10) The author, Rudolf Lusar, gave a highly competent and lovingly detailed overview of the secret weapons developments on the German side that he knew of, which, in the opinion of experts, has remained unmatched to this day. Interestingly, Lusar's book was reason enough for the Americans to set up a "special studies group" within the Air Force in 1958 , which was headed by the Austrian-born Dr.

Stefan Possony was to make a detailed inventory of the published information. The investigation as such was classified as "secret". (18)

What had Lusar learned about the secret flying disc developments?

The introductory words that Lusar put before his section entitled "Flying Saucers" are important: "According to confirmed information from experts and employees, the first projects, called 'flying discs', were started in 1941." Lusar did not simply pass on facts based on hearsay, but had the details of these developments confirmed directly by several people involved. This is what makes the whole book so good: only the facts he verified were published, speculation was left out.

before.

Lusar continued: »The plans for these devices were drawn up by the German experts Schriever, Habermohl, Miethe and the Italian Bellonzo. Habermohl and Schriever chose a wide ring that rotated around a fixed, dome-shaped cockpit and consisted of adjustable wing disks that could be placed in a corresponding position depending on whether they were needed for takeoff or horizontal flight. Miethe developed a discus-like disk with a diameter of 42 meters, into which adjustable nozzles could be inserted.

Schriever and Habermohl, who were working in Prague, started on 14 February 1945 with the first 'Flying Disc', they reached a height of 12,400 meters in three minutes and a speed of 2,000 kilometers per hour (!) in horizontal flight. The goal was to reach speeds of 4,000 kilometers per hour.

Extensive preliminary tests and research work were necessary before production could begin. Because of the high speed and the extraordinary heat stress, particularly suitable materials had to be found that could withstand the effects of heat. The development, which cost millions, was close to completion by the end of the war." (10)

One of the most important contemporary witnesses involved in the development of flying discs was chief engineer Georg Klein. Due to the rapid shifting of the front in the west, at the end of 1944 a significant part of the German aircraft industry was concentrated in the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia, which was less affected by the air war.
Armaments Minister Speer appointed Georg Klein as special representative for aircraft production in this area. In the first half of the 1950s, Klein made several comments in various press publications on the history of the "flying saucers."

It supposedly began in April 1941. »At a secret conference in the Reich Air Ministry in Berlin, Göring gave a small group of prominent aircraft designers and aerotechnicians the order to be far ahead of their time and to develop even faster aircraft.
Göring demanded that the traditional fuselage shape be deviated from and that wing shapes be created, since this was the only way to achieve more favourable aerodynamic and static conditions.« (30)

What has become known about the people involved named by Lusar and their design concepts?

Prof. Giuseppe Belluzzo (instead of Bellonzo as in Lusar) was Italian and published an article in 1950 in which he stated that he had been working on an Italian-German project to develop a flying disc since 1942. This flying disc was to be used as a type of flying bomb against ground targets, while another design would have served as an anti-aircraft device. (31) Belluzzo therefore apparently had nothing to do with the development of manned flying discs.

Chief engineer Klein also spoke of only three designers involved. Like Lusar, he described Miethe as the developer of a discus-like, non-rotating disk with a diameter of 42 meters.

In contrast, the designs by Habermohl and Schriever featured a wide ring rotating around a fixed, spherical pilot's cabin. This ring was divided into several sections by adjustable wing blades, thus enabling vertical takeoff and landing. (32) Unlike Schriever, Habermohl chose shorter wing blades for his design. This prevented the wing blades from bending at high speeds. (17)

Captain Rudolf Schriever claims to have been the first to complete a functioning model of a flying disc. It allegedly completed its maiden flight on June 3, 1942, powered by tiny rockets. According to Schriever, the development from the small tested model to the flightworthy prototype could not be successfully completed. Schriever is said to have worked on his plans until April 15, 1945. (17) Then the Russians came.

He was able to escape. Interesting in this context is the fact that Schriever spent several years in South America after the war. (33)

According to Georg Klein, Otto Habermohl's version of a flying disc completed its first successful test flight: "On February 14, 1945, at 6:30 a.m., the launch took place on the exhibition grounds in Holice (Prague). Special representative Klein looked excitedly at Habermohl, who turned away from his colleagues Mühlens and Schreiber and six factory employees who had to make the necessary preparations and walked towards the flying ring with the pilot Röhlke. ... Habermohl and his colleagues stared at their watches. Röhlke waved his hand and the flying ring started moving with a deafening noise. It swung vertically into the air and then shot straight up in a steep flight. ... The top stood in the air like a flat hat, only to suddenly veer abruptly to the left. Like a flashing plate, it scurried along under the cloud cover ...

Habermohl had calculated the flight time to be eight minutes. ... Then it seems to be rolling down from the sky in slow motion. ... Röhlke slowed down the speed, the disc stood still, slowly descending like a Helicopter and landed vertically on its three buffers. ... The measurement results had withstood the theoretical calculations. They showed a developed climb rate of 12,400 meters in three minutes." (30)

The "pilot Röhlke" probably refers to Joachim Roehlike, who wrote in a letter to the editor in response to the relevant series of articles in the Hamburger Morgenpost : "Until the end of the war I was a pilot and licensed follow-up pilot. In this capacity, around the turn of the year 1944/45, I learned about rotating flying objects that had already been launched in a series of five to 15 machines..." (17) Joachim Roehlike apparently did not want to or was not allowed to say more about his involvement in the first flight of Habermohl's flying gyro.

The final decision on the series production of one of the three flying disc types available was made some time later, as Georg Klein recalled. On March 27, 1945, Dr. Hans Kammler - who will be discussed later - was appointed by Hitler as special representative for the production and use of jet aircraft. This meant that the production of flying discs also fell within his area of responsibility. In Prague, chief engineer Klein spoke with Kammler about the flying discs available and suitable for series production:

"And which of the three air gyroscope designs is suitable for use?" ... The decisive question had been asked. And while chief engineer Klein was once again assessing the advantages and disadvantages of Miethe's discus and Rudolf Schriever's mocha cup-like gyroscope, he had long since had the desired answer ready. There was only one design, which had been created in complete silence by its creator Otto Habermohl in the converted rooms of an inn in Slany, about forty kilometers from Prague. (30)

Klein reported how the Cesco-Moravska (BMM) and Letov factories in Prague-Smichov were working feverishly to complete the series of 15 tops. Habermohl, the engineer in charge, is said to have agreed to shorten the assembly of his air ring by 14 days. In contrast, a short series production of the Miethe design could not be accelerated. It was possible to build two flying rings before a discus left the factory. Miethe's flying discus was more complex to build than the flying top that in terms of its design, it could be described as simple, even "primitive." In May 1945, shortly before the Russians marched into Prague, Habermohl, according to Klein, burned all the construction plans and all the documents for the flying gyro and blew up the already assembled flying ring and all the individual parts. (17) Since then, there has been no trace of Habermohl.

At the same time - and also in Prague - Dr. Kammler disappeared. Since then, there has been no sign of him either. A coincidence? Or did Kammler, who was responsible for the development of the SS's secret weapons, and one of his flying disc designers disappear together?

Georg Klein's comments show that Miethe's flying disc was also well advanced in its development. The series production of this flying disc must therefore have been possible at least theoretically at this time. As expected, there was no more talk of Schriever's flying top.

Thus, in addition to Habermohl's simple design for shorter flight distances, the high-quality flying diskus - which, as we will see, is suitable for long flight distances - appears to have been an alternative project rather than a competitor. Klein was not in a position to say whether it could actually go into production, as Miethe worked in Breslau, which was not Klein's area of responsibility. Miethe's flying diskus was reported on in the Paris evening newspaper France Soir in the issues of 7 and 14 June 1952. According to this, Dr.-Ing. Miethe is said to have stated in an interview that a new design of the V-weapon in the shape of a disk with a range of 21,000 kilometres and radar control, designated V-7, was ready for production towards the end of the war. This remote-controlled disk was tested with great success over the Baltic Sea. However, it was only after Patton's army had crossed the Rhine that Hitler decided to have the V-7 mass-produced in underground factories in southern Germany. According to the engineer's account, the Soviets captured several drive units of this weapon when they took Breslau. (17)

Here it appears for the first time, the V-7, the flying disc that Landig reported on. And what Klein did not know: the V-7 had also been ordered to go into series production!

In the interview, Miethe described the V-7 flying disc in detail:

Machine Translated by Google

»The V-7 engines had a six-stage compressor, a ring-shaped combustion chamber and a special two-stage turbine for flights in the stratosphere, since the machine could reach a height of 20,000 meters. ... The V-7 was powered primarily by a compressed gas based on helium, 22 cubic meters of which was enough for an average of 16 hours of flight. ... Taking into account the range of 41,000 kilometers and a cruising altitude of 20,000 meters at supersonic speed, the enemy has little chance of spotting the V-7. My aircraft can be flown over great distances with a crew of three and, if a range of 18-20,000 kilometers is not exceeded, also with radio remote control and radar. The general appearance of the V-7 resembles that of a discus with a diameter of 42 meters. Twelve turbines are arranged at equal intervals on an inner movable metal ring. This ring rotates like a gyroscope around the central, fixed middle section, which contains the pressurized cabin for the two pilots and the space for the radio operator and radar. The bombs are suspended around the fuel tanks. The engines start in less than 16 seconds. It takes off from an ascending launch pad using launch rockets powered by liquid oxygen and alcohol. The machine can also stand still in the air like a normal helicopter. ... What still needs to be done is to perfectly manufacture the rocket nozzles so that, if possible, there are no signs of wear and tear over longer periods of operation due to the high temperatures of the gas outlet of around 5000 degrees. If these and two other secret requirements are met, then my device can without a doubt also be operated with an atomic drive.« (17)

According to Georg Klein, Miethe began his work on the V-7 in Peenemünde and finished it in Breslau. (30) After his successful escape from the embattled city, his path led him to Egypt, where he built remote-controlled rockets together with other German experts.

At the time of the interview printed in France Soir, Miethe received an invitation to the USA, presumably to participate in the "AVROCAR" project, a flying disc project that was later officially declared a failure, but that is not significant. The procedure of officially declaring a promising and militarily highly sensitive research project a failure in order to

It would probably not be unusual to then continue development work in secret with even greater effort.

The V-7 flying disc had all the parameters that were essential for the scenario of the withdrawal movement described by Wilhelm Landig. It was a weapon that the Allies had no qualitative counter to in the air and that was also capable of covering intercontinental distances. Since all of the finished models of Habermohl's design were destroyed in Prague, the flying discs that survived the end of the war unscathed and were not captured by the Allies must have been V-7 flying discs. The last, still open question in this context is whether some V-7s were actually able to leave devastated Germany in time before the end of the war?

More on that later.

Even if the development of functioning prototypes of the V-7 or other flying discs had not been successfully completed, the lack of any kind of documentation on the individual development steps in the archives of the victorious powers of the Second World War can still cause irritation. This fact often leads to the hasty conclusion that the post-war statements of those involved must be a web of lies and speculation. The very existence of such highly developed flying machines, which had not even been conceptualized by the Allies up to that point, could be a reason for their absolute secrecy. In view of the looming "Cold War", neither side was prepared to share technical know-how captured by the Germans with their former allies.

If one also takes into account the role of flying discs in the years after the war, when they returned to reality as "flying saucers", the "great silence" becomes even more understandable.

Thus, the alleged non-existence of the Reich's flying discs also finds its counterpart in other top-secret developments: the non-existence of a functional German nuclear weapon and the A-9 American missile that served as its carrier.

Both systems were ready for use by the end of the war. In recent years, an overwhelming amount of evidence has been produced to support this. (34, 35, 36)

The renowned British journalist Nick Cook has deciphered the system behind this spiral of silence in his book The Hunt for Zero Point . In a directive from the Air Force officer who was apparently involved in the scientific processing of the technology theft, A.

R. Sullivan Jr., to General McDonald, the head of the Air Force Secret Service, dated September 28, 1945, the further course of action was determined. Referring to the investigations into the possibility of disabling aircraft engines using interference and the fireballs, the "foo fighters" seen by the Allied aircraft crews, it says: These investigations should be stopped with negative results. Nick Cook asked himself why? He found several references in the archives that reported on such developments on the German side and which the Americans were certainly able to exploit for their own benefit. Cook therefore interprets the sentence in question as a call for absolute secrecy. The knowledge of these things was safe, and further investigations by unauthorized bodies would only have lifted the cloak of silence. (18)

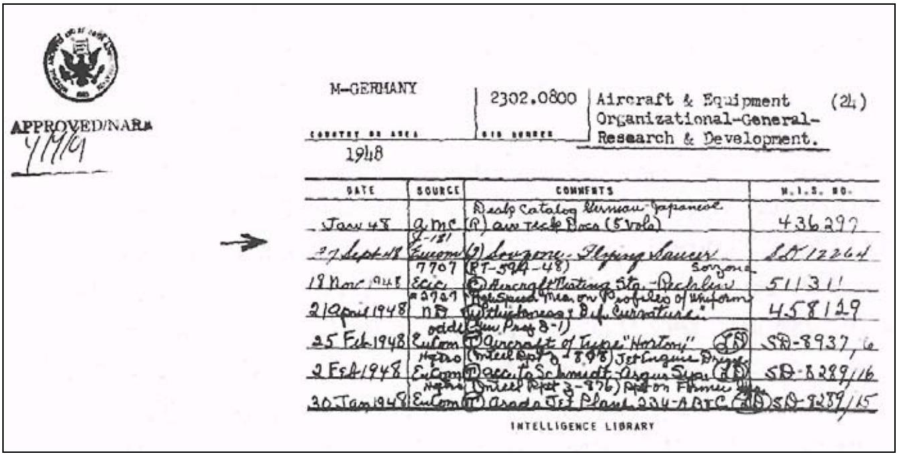
Fortunately, those responsible for "cleaning" sensitive archive content did not succeed in erasing every reference to the existence of German flying discs. As in all government offices around the world, this was a sloppy process.

Polish journalist Igor Witkowski searched the National Archives of the United States for a list of documents catalogued by military intelligence. In the section on German research and development in the field of aviation, he found an entry dated 21.

September 1948, which contains a reference to a "flying saucer" (Figure 9). However, the corresponding archived document could not be found, only the note that it had been later removed. (27) This is further proof not only of the fact that German flying saucers existed, but also that their traces were deliberately erased from the archives.

Conclusion: Based on consistent witness statements after the war and the obvious cover-up tactics used by the Allies with regard to revolutionary German technological developments in general and flying discs in particular, it can be assumed that

It cannot be proved that these flying discs were actually in working order at the end of the war. Their involvement in the withdrawal movement remains to be proven.



APPROVED/NARA

M-GERMANY | 2302.0800 | Aircraft & Equipment (24)
Organizational-General-
Research & Development.

COUNTRY OR AREA

1948

DATE	SOURCE	COMMENTS	M.I.S. NO.
Jan 48	G.M.C.	Desk Catalog German-Japanese (R) air tech Docs (5 vols)	436297
27 Sept 48	J-181 Eucom	(?) Sovzone - Flying Saucer	SD 12264
18 Nov 1948	7707 ECIC	(RT-594-48) (C) Aircraft Testing Sta. - Rechlin Sovzone	511311
21 April 1948	#2727 NB	High Speed Mea. on Profiles of Uniform Thickness & Dif. Curvature"	458129
25 Feb 1948	addl Eucom	(Gen Prog 8-1) (T) Aircraft of Type "Horton"	SD-8937/6
2 Feb 1948	Hq Dio EuCom	(Intell Rpt 3-898) Jet Engine Design (T) acc. to Schmidt-Argus Sys.	SD-8289/16
30 Jan 1948	Hq Eucom	(Intell Rpt 3-876) Rpt on Former (T) Arado Jet Plant 234-ARTC	SD-8289/15

INTELLIGENCE LIBRARY

Fig. 9: Reference to German work on a flying disc.

7. The underground refuge under the Andes

According to Landig, part of the material transported to South America was deposited in huge, partly artificially created cave systems. The builders of these gigantic structures were members of an ancient and long-extinct people, but hardly any traces of their work remain today. In these underground workshops, completely isolated from the outside world, the life of the evacuated technical specialists supposedly took place, who were busy further perfecting superior German weapons technology.

were.

The information about these caves reached Germany before the war through the researcher Edmund Kiss. However, Kiss kept his discoveries secret from the public.

Who was Edmund Kiss?

Born in 1886, died in 1946 in American war

After his imprisonment, Edmund Kiss led a colorful, dazzling existence throughout his life. An architect by profession, he devoted a large part of his life to his great passion - the confirmation and propagation of Hörbiger's world ice theory. To do this, he examined the shorelines of Tibesti in the Sahara and those on Lake Titicaca in Bolivia and Peru. He searched ruins on the island of Marajo in the Amazon estuary and attempted to reconstruct the ruins of Tiahuanaco on Lake Titicaca. He wrote several extremely successful books on these topics, which earned him the position of head of the "Atlantis Research" department in the SS Research Association Ahnenerbe . In 1940, another major expedition to Tiahuanaco was planned under his leadership, which was to finally solve the mystery of this gigantic ruin site with the help of the latest technology from the air and under water.

The war ultimately prevented this plan. During the war, Kiss temporarily commanded the guard force at the Führer's headquarters as an SS Obersturmbannführer. A further plan was to advance with a few men to Tibet, on the roof of the world, in order to tie down Russian forces in Asia with the support of Mongolian tribes. But of course this did not come to fruition either. (37)

Edmund Kiss could well have discovered these ancient cave systems mentioned here during his stay in Peru and Bolivia in the late 1920s.

One of Wilhelm Landig's closest acquaintances, Rudolf F. Mund, an officer in the SS division "Götz von Berlichingen" during the war, had gotten to know Kiss better while he was a prisoner of war and had become friends with him. Mund later wrote a detailed report about this encounter, which also sheds light on Kiss's fate after the end of the war. (38) If anyone could have found out anything about Edmund Kiss's secret knowledge, it was Rudolf F. Mund, who in later years rose to the position of Grand Master of the New Templar Order.

(ONT).

But Mund knew nothing about the cave systems, as a passage in Wolfszeit indicates.

Landig lets his protagonist Eyken speak here: »I knew Kiss personally ... but strangely enough he never told me about this discovery something is hinted at.« In the wider context of this passage, the formulations that Mund used in his report are partly word for word.

Even if Kiss could not have passed on the knowledge of the existence of the cave systems, there is still much evidence to suggest that these huge caverns are real.

In 1971, an article appeared in Bild der Wissenschaft under the title “Another Secret of the Incas” which, because of its importance, should be quoted here in full:

»The mountain of the Incas, the 6763 meter high Huascaran, rises majestically in the Andes of Peru. From here, the old transport route of the country's indigenous people runs over hill and valley to the north, where it disappears in the rubble of the rocks and mountains 260 kilometers further on at Otuzco. In this area, Pizarro had already discovered several enlarged cave entrances lined with worked rock slabs. They were considered to be storerooms. Now the cave explorers remembered these 'Inca caves' and penetrated the caves with modern means of technology, cable winches, electric cables, mountain lamps and oxygen cylinders. An astonishing discovery was made. At the end of the multi-storey caves, the researchers came across bulkhead doors made of large rock slabs that, despite their enormous weight - they are eight metres high, five metres wide and two and a half metres thick - can be moved by stone balls rotating in a bed of water drippings when four strong men push against them. This place is 62 metres below the mountainside.

But what comes next makes the surprise even greater: behind the 'six doors' begin massive tunnels that would make even modern civil engineers green with envy. These tunnels lead towards the coast at an angle, sometimes with a gradient of 14 percent. The floor is covered with grained and cross-grooved stone slabs and is slip-resistant. While it is an adventure today to penetrate this 90 to 105-kilometer-long transport tunnel towards the coast and finally reach a level 25 meters below sea level, what difficulties it must have been back then, in the 14th and 15th centuries, to transport goods deep under the Andes in order to keep them out of the reach of Pizarro and the Spanish viceroy!

At the end of the underground passages of Guanape, named after the

The Pacific Ocean lurks on the island that lies off the coast of Peru, because it is believed that these passages once led to the island under the sea. After the passages have led up and down several times in the deep darkness of the mountains, a rushing sound and a strangely hollow-sounding surf reach the ears. In the light of the headlights, the next drop ends at the edge of a pitch-black flood, which is identified as sea water. The new coast also begins underground here. Was it different in the past?

The search on the island of Guanape is in vain. There is no indication that a passage from the mainland has ever come to light anywhere. No one knows where these underground roads of the Incas and their ancestors end and whether they may open the way to filled treasure chambers of long-lost worlds.« (39)

The existence of the caves was already known to European conquerors in the early 16th century. A Carmelite monk reported on an underground system that was said to connect various Inca cities on the plateau. (40) Fernando Montesinos expressed the same view in his famous book on the history of the Incas, published in the 17th century:

»Cusco and the ruined city of Tiahuanaco are connected by a huge underground path. The Incas do not know who built it.« (41)

The underground facilities made headlines after the Lima earthquake in 1972. During the cleanup work, technicians discovered long tunnels whose existence had previously been unknown.
A systematic examination of the foundations of Lima led to a surprising result. Large parts of the city were criss-crossed by tunnels, all of which led into the mountains. Where they ended could no longer be determined. Over the course of centuries, they had collapsed. (41)

Conclusion: There is little doubt that the huge cave systems under the Andes actually exist. Who created them is unknown.
It remains uncertain whether Edmund Kiss knew about the caves and entered their entrances himself. The question of whether the Third Power used these facilities for its own purposes cannot yet be answered satisfactorily at this point.

8. Operation High-jump under the command of Admiral Byrd

Preparations for this largest Antarctic expedition ever undertaken began in the USA as early as the summer of 1946.
The US Navy's primary plan was to test crews and equipment under the extreme climatic conditions found in the Antarctic. At the beginning of December, the convoy of ships, consisting of 13 ships, including an aircraft carrier and a submarine, set sail with 4,000 men on board.

The expedition was by no means secret; on the contrary, the media effort was enormous. Eleven correspondents working for press agencies, newspapers and radio stations travelled to Antarctica.
However, Operation High-jump had to be aborted prematurely because extreme weather conditions and by far the most unfavourable ice conditions in the last century had meant that a large part of the Antarctic summer and thus the best flying weather had been lost and under these circumstances the return of the convoy should not be jeopardised. (19)

Unofficial sources, including Landig, report that four aircraft sent out to explore the area disappeared without a trace. There is no mention of this in Admiral Byrd's expedition diary. However, this fact does not necessarily mean much, as it is known that other accidents that occurred during the expedition were not recorded in the diary. For example, the crash of a helicopter that was swept overboard by a strong gust of wind immediately after taking off from the deck of the aircraft carrier.

Overall, the Americans' foray into the Antarctic ice was extremely successful, or at least that was the conclusion reached by Admiral Byrd. Over 70,000 aerial photographs were taken during 64 research flights.
An equivalent to the "Schirrmacher Oasis" of the German Antarctic Expedition was also discovered, the so-called "Bunger Oasis". Three large lakes and 20 smaller bodies of water were counted. Due to the relatively warm water, underground thermal activities were suspected. (19)

Beyond that, there is nothing to report about Operation High-jump that would be of interest in the context of this book.

Conclusion: The expedition under Admiral Byrd took place. A

However, a connection with activities of the Third Power in the Antarctic region cannot be proven and was not expected based on the facts presented so far in this chapter.

9. The occupation of the Antarctic base by 2000 men and the final abandonment of this bastion in the ice in 1961

If we take into account that, according to the findings we have gained so far, Wilhelm Landig has very skilfully interwoven fact and fiction - and, as I said, he himself has not claimed otherwise - then we can assume that "Antarctica" is actually a synonym for something else, a refuge, the location of which remains the task of this book to determine. Then we can also answer the question of where the 2,000 men were really stationed until 1961.

10. Three flying discs are still located in the cave systems under the Andes

With this statement, Landig refers to the V-7 Miethes, which are said to have coordinated part of the withdrawal movement from the air in May 1945.
Can this claim be supported by other sources?
It would be helpful if we could get some evidence that at least three V-7s were completed in time before the end of the war and were able to leave Germany. And indeed, this evidence exists!

Dipl.-Ing. Heinrich Fleißner claims to have been involved as a fluid mechanic in the Peenemünde program to develop a flying disc during the war. He reported on his experiences in an article in the newspaper Schwäbische neue Presse, No. 19, Year 17, dated 2.

May 1980. He said, among other things: "When the war threatened to turn the world upside down, the jet disc became interesting as a 'courier machine' for the German Air Force." The "brains" of the technicians who developed the flying disc were in Peenemünde (Miethe; the author), the individual parts were built in various places under great secrecy. In 1980, Fleißner thus confirmed details of the Flying disc development, which are listed in this chapter under point 7. And then comes Fleißner's statement, which - if he is telling the truth - provides proof that some examples of the V-7 were ready for use in time before the end of the war.

An eyewitness told him that shortly before the capitulation, on April 24, 1945, a squadron of four flying discs - each manned by two pilots of unknown names - took off from Berlin-Lichterfelde airport under heavy artillery fire from the German and Russian sides to a destination that is still unknown today. (17)

Conclusion: The relics of three of these four flying discs could still be hidden somewhere under the Andes today.

Now that key points of the framework of action laid down by Landig for the withdrawal of German Reich forces at the end of the war have been confirmed, the next step is to research additional facts. On the one hand, this will better clarify the overall context of the withdrawal, and on the other hand, it will be possible to decipher the information that Landig appears to have deliberately encrypted.

When did the leadership of the Third Reich see itself faced with the need to introduce concrete measures to ensure the survival of the "Reich" even after a total military defeat? By July and August 1944 at the latest, after the lost battle in Normandy and the parallel successful major Russian offensive, those in charge must have realized that a military catastrophe was looming. This was not yet final, and up until April 1945 a negotiated peace with one of the two opposing sides or the use of the "wonder weapons" that were well advanced in their development (flying discs, nuclear weapons, American rockets, jet planes, Walther submarines...) could have brought about a turning point in the war. Why this ultimately did not happen will be explained in more detail later.

In November 1944, the US State Department received information from an agent about a meeting of high-ranking German representatives of occupation authorities and the economy in occupied France that took place on August 10, 1944, in the Hotel Maison Rouge in Strasbourg.

The content of the agent report, which I reproduce here in part wants speaks for itself:

1. "A meeting of the most important German industrialists with interests in France took place on August 10, 1944, at the Hotel Rotes Haus in Strasbourg. Among those present were: Dr. Scheid, who presided, SS-Obergruppenführer and Director of the Hese (Hermansdorff & Schenburg Company), Dr.
Kaspar, who represented Krupp, Dr. Tolle, who represented Röchling, Dr. Sinceren, representing Messerschmitt, Dr. Kopp, Vier and Beerwanger, representing Rheinmetall, Captain Haberkorn and Dr. Rübe, representing Büssing, Dr. Ellenmayer and Kandos, representing the Volkswagen works, the engineers Drose, Yanshew and Koppsheim, representing various factories in Posen ...
Captain Dornbusch, Head of the Armaments Inspection in Posen, Dr. Meyer, representative of the German Naval Command in Paris, Dr. Strassner, representative of the Reich Ministry for Armaments and War Production in Paris.
2. Dr. Scheid stated that all industrial material must be transferred to Germany immediately. The Battle of France had been lost for Germany. The defence of the West Wall was now the main problem. From now on German industry must realise that the war could no longer be won and that steps must be taken to prepare for a post-war campaign. Every industrialist must establish contacts and connections with foreign firms, but this must be done individually, without arousing suspicion. In addition, the ground must be prepared financially in order to borrow considerable sums from abroad after the war. ...

3. After this meeting, a second meeting was held, chaired by Dr. Bosse of the Reich Ministry for Armaments and War Production, and attended only by representatives of Heco, Krupp and Röchling. At the second meeting, it was stated that the war was practically lost, but that it should be continued until a guarantee of German unity was obtained.

   Germany's industrialists, it was said, must increase Germany's strength through their exports. They must also prepare to finance the Nazi party if it has to go into mountain defense positions. From now on, the government will give the industrialists large sums of money.

> so that each could create a secure post-war base abroad. The existing financial reserves abroad must be kept at the disposal of the Party so that a strong German Reich can be created after the defeat. It is also urgently necessary that the large factories in Germany set up small technical departments and offices which appear to be completely independent and have no apparent connection with the factory. These offices will receive plans and plans of new weapons, as well as all the documents they need to continue their research.
>
> They must not fall into the hands of the enemy under any circumstances. ... The existence of these offices is known only to a very small circle of industrialists and the leaders of the Nazi Party. Each office has a contact person in the Party. As soon as the Party is strong enough to take power in Germany again, the industrialists would be paid for their efforts and cooperation through concessions and privileges.

4. The meetings seem to indicate that the ban on exporting capital, which had been strictly enforced until now, has now been completely lifted and replaced by a new Nazi policy which, with government support, is letting industrialists export as much capital abroad as possible. ... Now the Nazi Party is throwing its weight behind the industrialists and urging them to save themselves, to invest their capital abroad, thereby promoting the Party's plans for its post-war operations..." (42)

The following aspects are particularly interesting in this insightful report:

1. The actions designed to ensure significant Reich German influence even after a military defeat were initiated and coordinated by the party (NSDAP);

2. The trigger was actually the fiasco on the invasion front in West;
3. It appears that the new measures, as in this case for France, were prepared at regional conferences;

4. It was essential to create an industrial and financial base abroad for the post-war period; 5. The large companies were also to establish bases and research centres in Germany in the form of small technical departments and offices; 6. The development of secret new weapons systems was given the highest priority.

Priority.

How far the measures covered by point 4 were advanced within a few months is made clear by another American intelligence report from the spring of 1945. It states that more than 750 companies in neutral countries were founded or bought with German capital, of which 274 were in Switzerland, 258 in Portugal, 112 in Spain, 98 in Argentina (!) and 35 in Turkey. (28)

Was the securing (evacuation) of plans, restraints and prototypes of new weapons carried out with a similar intensity? The answer is yes.

During his research into the subject of German wonder weapons, the Polish journalist and author of several books, Igor Witkowski, came across an SS special commando that had remained completely unknown, at least officially, until then: the ELF commando.

This was responsible for the recovery and evacuation of high technology as well as secret documents and art objects. (18, 27)

Witkowski owed his knowledge of the activities of this commando to surviving documents from the "Military Department" in the National Council of the former Polish President Bierut (until 1952). Here it was a Major Walczak who prepared the relevant reports for the President and cooperated closely with the Soviet secret service NKVD in his research into this explosive topic. This apparently proved to be his downfall later on, as he died under unclear circumstances, as did Jakub Prawin and Wladyslaw Szymanski, who were also involved in this matter. General Prawin was the head of the Polish military mission in Berlin, and Lieutenant Szymanski was a member of his staff there. The Russians therefore seemed to be doing everything they could to gain a monopoly on the use of the intelligence information obtained.

The fact that their primary concern was not even to obtain general information about the evacuation operations, but rather to focus their interest on a specific secret weapon being developed by the Germans, will be explained in more detail later.

How did Prawin and Szymanski, who carried out the research on site, get their information? In 1946, they interrogated the former SS Sturmbannführer Rudolf Schuster in Berlin, who had obtained false papers and passed himself off as a Jew. For some reason, however, Schuster was unmasked and the interrogation revealed that he had most recently worked in Office III of the Reich Security Main Office (RSHA). On June 4, 1944, he was given responsibility for transport issues within the ELF command. In this role, he reported to SS Obersturmbannführer Otto Neumann.

According to Schuster's statements, the Gauleiter of Lower Silesia, Karl Hanke, founded the ELF command. Initially, the evacuation transports went to eight underground facilities created for this purpose in the north-west of Breslau. These were designated I/AAX-SS/01 to -08. It was probably only when the war situation worsened further at the beginning of 1945 that the transfer of the most important goods to neutral countries began. A northern and a southern evacuation route were set up for this purpose. On the northern route, the transports went via Norway. This was under the command of SS-Obergruppenführer Jakob Sporrenberg until 25 June 1945.

November 1944 SS police chief of Lublin, then SS police chief of Oslo. The southern route was commanded by the aforementioned SS Obersturmbannführer Otto Neumann. The destination of the evacuations was Spain, which sympathized with Germany, as well as South America. According to Igor Witkowski, there are estimates that the airlift set up on the southern route alone made it possible to evacuate around 12,000 tons (!) of high technology, along with the corresponding documentation, in the last months of the war. There was also another, more dangerous variant of transport. A submarine set sail from the last remaining ports in the northern Adriatic under German control and also transported cargo and personnel to Spain.

An independent confirmation of this transport variant is provided by a report from the American secret service OSS. The starting point of one of the

The evacuation transports were based at the SS military training area "Heidelager" in the Tucheier Heide, southwest of Danzig, which was also used as a test site for new weapons systems. In March 1945, a top-secret cargo was taken to Verona in Italy to be shipped from there to Spain. The deputy director of the OSS in Europe, E. Tilley, described the mysterious transport as follows: "It turned out that it contained not only uranium samples, but also reports on atomic energy and possibly atomic bombs, as well as control systems for guided missiles and documents." (36)

Schuster's statements to his Polish interrogators also provided an insight into the overall scenario of the secession movement. The operation, which Schuster referred to as the "General Plan 1945", was led by Martin Bormann, the head of the party chancellery and Hitler's secretary. Karl Hanke, the NSDAP Gauleiter of Lower Silesia, was subordinate to him. This would confirm the agent's report on the conference in the Strasbourg Hotel Maison Rouge on another point, as it had also underlined the leading role of the party. Within this General Plan 1945 there was an operation with the code name Regentröpfchen. This included all operations whose evacuation targets were abroad. For example, there was an operation 1 - Wiking - which was to take over the transport of the scientific, political and military elite to the so-called "safe havens". Operation 2 - Läufer - was to do the same for the financial elite. While these two actions were for the removal of people, the Operation Squirrel material goods are taken abroad. (27)

It is interesting to ask what became of the people who played a key role helped determine the scenario of the withdrawal movement.

Rumors about the fate of Martin Bormann, who was reported missing immediately after the war, continued to circulate until the 1970s, claiming that he had managed to escape from the Reich Chancellery to South America after Hitler's suicide. This was contradicted by the statement of the last Reich Youth Leader, Artur Axmann, who claimed to have seen Bormann's body near the Lehrter S-Bahn station on May 2, 1945. For a long time it was believed that Axmann had made the claim that he had shot Bormann. It was only later, on December 7 and 8, 1972, that the truth was revealed.

Axmann received justice, as Bormann's remains were found in the vicinity of the spot indicated by Axmann and later identified without a doubt with the help of his dental chart. (43) In 1996, this finding was further confirmed by a mitochondrial DNA analysis. (44)

The founder of the ELF commando, Karl Hanke, was a personality of a particularly historic format.

Here are the most important biographical stages: Born on August 24, 1903, apprenticeship as a miller, later training at a vocational training institute, then trade teacher in Berlin, joined the NSDAP in 1928 with the number 102606, SS number 203103, 1932 deputy in the Prussian state parliament and entered the Reichstag, from March 1933 personal advisor and secretary to Goebbels in the newly created Reich Ministry for Public Enlightenment and Propaganda, appointed State Secretary by Goebbels in 1938. During the affair between Goebbels and the Czech actress Lida Baarova, he almost stole his minister's wife. Due to the resulting falling out with his boss, he went to the front as a tank lieutenant in 1939/1940; Adjutant to Field Marshal Rommel during the French campaign, awarded the Iron Cross and the Panzerkampfabzeichen in Silver during the war, Gauleiter and Oberpräsident of Lower Silesia from February 1942, acting head of the Central Office in the Speer Ministry from autumn 1943 to June 1944 (45), also proposed by him as Plenipotentiary General for Labor Deployment and as Chief of the Jäger Staff (both rejected by Hitler)

(24), 1945 defender of Breslau.

The political organization of the defense of Breslau in cooperation with the army officers responsible for the leadership of military operations was Hanke's real masterpiece.

The fighting for the city began in late January 1945. By mid-February, the Russians were able to completely surround Breslau. Hanke's men fought under almost unbearable conditions for more than three months until they had only two hundred rifles, seven tanks and eight assault guns left. This tied down several Russian divisions.

The siege lasted until May 6, 1945.

A few days earlier, Karl Hanke had reached the last step of his career ladder: Hitler decreed in his political testament that Hanke should be appointed Reichsführer-SS. As such, he replaced Heinrich Himmler, who was removed from all posts by Hitler.

After further defense of Breslau was impossible, Hanke flew to Bohemia in the last plane remaining in the city area, to make his contribution to the final battle for the German Reich as the new Reichsführer-SS with the still intact army group of Field Marshal Schörner. Since then he has been missing. There are rumors that he was captured by Czech partisans after landing and later murdered.

However, no evidence has been provided to support this claim to date.

In his autobiography, Hartmann Lauterbacher, the former head of staff of the Hitler Youth and Baldur von Schirach's deputy as Reich Youth Leader, describes Karl Hanke's personal characteristics as well as his post-war fate: "He was a soldier and bureaucrat from head to toe and an extraordinarily intelligent and hardworking man. Karl Hanke then went into hiding after the war and disappeared. One occasionally heard from him." (46)

...

Where is the last Reichsführer-SS?

As the founder of the ELF commando, he was certainly involved in its final actions. He knew that the Reich would continue to exist after a military defeat - albeit in a different form. In an already hopeless situation, he wrote a letter to his wife from defended Breslau that expressed this certainty without the slightest doubt: "I know at least that the Reich will not collapse, and that is the main thing." (47)

It is likely that Hanke met another person in Bohemia who had also played a crucial role in the secession movement in the last months of the war and who shared Hanke's fate in that she was considered missing after the war. Her importance in connection with the development of the Reich German flying discs has already been described above. The name of this person is Hans Kammler.

Kammler's career in the SS began relatively late. After having previously worked as one of four construction directors of the Reich Air Ministry, he only joined the SS full-time on 1 June 1941 and became head of Office II - Construction within the Main Office for Budget and Construction. In this role, he was involved in the planning and implementation of the construction of the barracks and hospitals of the SS, for the SS and police bases in the east and for the concentration camps. From February 1942, Kammler took over the management of Office Group C (Construction) in the newly founded SS Economic and Administrative Main Office. Kammler was now involved in armaments planning on several occasions. He was soon considered within the SS as a planner and organizer who could handle even the most difficult tasks. In 1943, he became known far beyond the ranks of the SS when he quickly managed to relocate Peenemünde rocket production to the artificially created, underground tunnel systems of the Kohnstein massif in the Harz Mountains. (48) The success of this measure led to a gigantic job creation program for Kammler and his organization, as other endangered areas of German armaments production were now to be relocated underground. By the end of the war, production had started in 143 underground factories, and 107 more were under construction or in planning. Production sites and laboratories were set up in 600 other places in natural caves and old ore mines. (18) The day was not far off when the Allied bombings would no longer be able to damage significant parts of the German war economy. The multi-talented Kammler also took on other tasks. At the beginning of August 1944, Himmler gave him all the powers to make the V-2 operational. In this role, Kammler also supervised the preparation of the launches of this rocket and was ultimately appointed commander of an army corps that was responsible for the entire use of the V-2 and V-1. He thus piled up one function after another and at the end of March 1945 received the order from Hitler to take over the production of the Me 262 jet fighter. This list of Kammler's official functions is by no means complete and above all does not include his most important one.

According to the statements of the former general director of the Skoda factory, SS-Standartenführer Dr. Wilhelm Voss, to the British journalist Tom Agoston in 1949, Kammler headed the Kammler staff named after him. This organization set up a secret high-tech research center of the SS in the area of the Skoda factory in Pilsen and Brunn.

Agoston writes: »Special priority was given to the development and construction of a nuclear-powered aircraft, work on the use of nuclear energy as rocket and aircraft propulsion, research with lasers, the so-called death rays, and work on a series of new, self-homing rockets. Many other fields were scientifically explored in order to help new technological possibilities to achieve a useful breakthrough. In today's high-tech jargon, this center in Pilsen would certainly be called an SS research and think tank. In fact, some work on second-generation secret weapons was already surprisingly advanced, including the use of nuclear propulsion for aircraft and guided missiles." (49)

It is now also known that Kammler was the driving force behind the German atomic bomb and the American rocket. (26, 36)

As I said, Hans Kammler also disappeared from history without a trace. There are four different versions of his death circulating. This is almost enough evidence that something is being covered up. It is extremely remarkable that Kammler's name did not appear in the Nuremberg war crimes trials, despite his significant involvement in the mass use of concentration camp prisoners as laborers and his role in the production and use of V-weapons. Nick Cook, mentioned several times above, carried out research on Kammler in American archives.

Nothing came of it. This personality, so important for his time, is not recorded in the American files. When Cook was asked about this strange fact, an archivist replied that the entries had been deleted. (18) Could the Americans perhaps have got hold of Kammler and exploited his knowledge for their own benefit? This is contradicted by the fact that the Americans sometimes needed many years to copy weapons developed by the Germans at the end of the war - for example, the intercontinental missile, which was qualitatively different to the American nuclear weapons, the Walther submarines and, last but not least, the flying discs. No, Kammler did not defect, nor was he captured. It is highly likely that he had successfully escaped, like Karl Hanke.

The commander of the northern evacuation route through Norway, SS-Obergruppenführer Sporrenberg, was captured by the British on 11 May 1945 and was handed over to Poland shortly afterwards. There he was put on trial, as a result of which the

The execution of the sentence was, according to Witkowski, only a pretense, as the Russians had expressed considerable interest in Sporrenberg's statements. Why this was the case remains to be seen. After that, his trail goes cold.

The commander of the southern route and superior of Rudolf Schuster, SS-Obersturmbannführer Neumann, was able to flee abroad.
In 1954 he was seen in Rhodesia, in 1964 in Switzerland. (18)
Sturmbannführer Rudolf Schuster died (?) in 1947. (27)
It is revealing that of the four high-ranking people mentioned here who were directly involved in the evacuation of high-tech, probably three, namely Hanke, Kammler and Neumann, were able to successfully join the retreat movement. Only Sporrenberg fell by the wayside.

What path did the high technology take that was brought to safety from Allied control, and which countries were at the end of this path?

According to Igor Witkowski's research, high technology appears to have been transported mainly to Spain via the southern route, mainly by air, although he also claims to have received evidence that South America was the final destination for some of the transports. This means that there should be evidence of corresponding activities in Spain after the war. As will be shown later, this was indeed the case.

The northern route had Norway as its destination, although this country can only have been a temporary destination given the approaching fronts.
In at least one special case, an air bridge is said to have been set up from Norway to South America. This involved the evacuation of what was probably the most revolutionary development of German scientists, which we will return to below.

In all other cases, submarines were probably responsible for the onward transport. Wilhelm Landig had claimed nothing different, and it has already been shown that their destination was Argentina.
It was not until 2001 that the public became aware of the existence of a secret project of the American Air Force from the period immediately after the end of the war through Nick Cook's book. The results of this project were recorded in the so-called Lusty files. These include, among other things, a list of German high-tech sites and report on what the Americans found there. In a parallel project to the well-known Operation Paperclip, the German scientists involved in the research and development were recruited on the spot.

Why in this context the contents of the Lusty files must be referred to?

Because they provide definitive proof that German submarines transported high technology across the Atlantic to safety in the last days of the war on a scale previously thought impossible! This also makes clear for the first time the true extent of the evacuation operation described by Landig.

What exactly can be read about this in the Lusty files?

In the first days of May 1945, the Americans raided the German Air Force's command staff near Berchtesgaden. A technician who was captured declared that he had recently been offered a position in Japan, an ally of Germany. He was then subjected to a special interrogation, as a result of which the engineer stated that

In mid-April, ten submarines, heavily laden with the latest achievements in German military technology, set sail from Kiel for Japan. This information was immediately passed on by the Americans with the utmost urgency to all relevant military commands worldwide. One of the largest search operations the world's oceans had ever seen began, involving warships from all Allied nations. As a result, six of these ten submarines were intercepted by the end of June, some closer, others further away from their bases. (27) This means that the submarines involved in the withdrawal movement did not travel in a convoy - as has been claimed on various occasions - but individually.

The technician's statements that the destination of all the boats was Japan and that they all left Kiel are questionable. This is contradicted by the exact wording of the text, which speaks of various submarine bases.

In the following, an attempt will be made to reconstruct the history of the ten submarines and also the fate of the four

The following numbering of the boats from 1 to 10 was chosen arbitrarily by the author.

Boat 1: U 234 left the Norwegian port of Kristiansand (as expected, not Kiel) on April 16, 1945 (identical to the statement “mid-April”) with destination Japan.

In addition to the crew, there were also three Japanese, seven German specialists for various military technology, a military judge, the new German military attaché for Tokyo and two experts from the Messerschmidt company on board. Submarine captain Johann Fehler initially ignored Grand Admiral Dönitz's order to unconditionally hand over the submarines to the Allies. Only after he had learned that After Japan had annulled all agreements with the German Reich after May 8, it entered the port of Portsmouth on the east coast of the United States on May 19. The Americans discovered on the boat not only 56 kg of uranium oxide (other sources say 560 kg), but also plans and models of various highly developed weapons systems and, above all, over 24 tons of mercury. (27) All of this was intended to enable the ally Japan to continue the war successfully.

The boat's extensive, extremely diverse cargo does not suggest that nine more such boats were intended for Japan alone.

Boat 2: On 4 June 1945, the British Admiralty announced that the 47-man crew of a German submarine had placed themselves at the disposal of the Portuguese authorities after scuttling their badly damaged submarine off Leixoes. (11)

Boat 3: U 530 surrendered to the Argentine authorities on July 10, 1945 and was later transferred to the USA (see above). Incidentally, the port of departure for this boat was also Kristiansand, Norway.

Boat 4: U 977 was handed over to the Argentinians on August 17th and later also handed over to the Americans. U 977 also came from Kristiansand.

Insertion: A critical objection could be raised at this point that the Lusty files stated that six of the ten submarines could be captured by the end of June. However, in the case of U 530 and U 977, this was not the case until July or August. It can be assumed that the statement "end of June" was mistakenly entered into the files, because these two boats would then undoubtedly have been included in the success report of this detection operation with the later date.

Boats 5 and 6: Two unknown boats that were tracked down by the Americans somewhere on the world's oceans and forced to surrender without this fact being made public to date.

Boats 7 and 8: These are the two submarines that sailors Dettelmann and Schulz observed off the coast of Argentina (see above).

Boats 9 and 10: Two unknown boats that successfully evaded American pursuit and are believed to have also headed for the Argentine coast.

Conclusion: Six submarines (3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10) were able to unload their cargo on the coasts of Argentina. One boat sank itself (2). The cargo of one boat (1) was certainly seized by the Americans, and that of two boats (5, 6) was most likely seized by the Americans.

What happened to boats 7 to 10, which the Americans did not could get hold of?

Two of these submarines apparently sank themselves after unloading their cargo on the Argentine coast. In the bay of San Matias (Figure 10), pilots discovered the silhouettes of two submarines lying on the seabed (Figure 11). However, nothing is known about Argentine submarines sunk at this location. (50)

And the two remaining boats?

The long, bay-filled Argentine coast offers more than one place that would have been suitable for a hiding place. In this case, scuttling the submarines immediately after completing their mission seems to be part of 66°

62° 40° rz.Negro Viedma
29 m
146 m
23 m Zatoka
San Matias
0
100 km
P-w.
Valdes
174 m Trelev
Zatoka
Nuevo
Rawson
rz. Chubut
79m
44°

Abb. 10

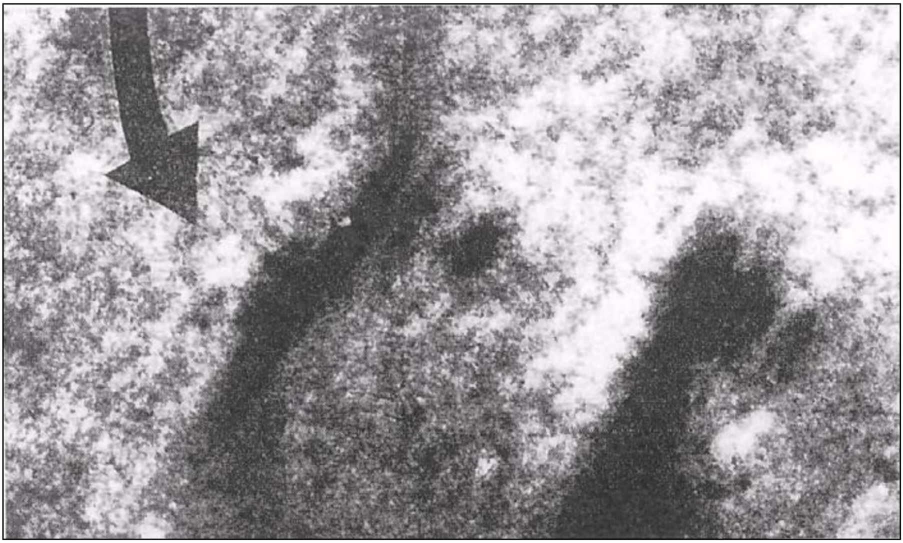

Abb. 11

the withdrawal movement does not appear to have taken place for any other reason.

On 25 September 1946, the French newspaper France Soir in large format the following sensational report:

»Almost a year and a half after the end of hostilities in Europe, the Icelandic whaler was stopped by a German submarine. It was the Icelandic steamer named Juliana, which was sailing between the Malvinas Islands and the Antarctic zone when it was suddenly stopped by a large German submarine flying the German mourning flag - red with a black border. The commander of the submarine approached the whaler in a rubber dinghy, climbed onto the ship and demanded from Captain Hekla - in a tone that allowed no argument - some of his fresh provisions. The captain of the whaler was forced to obey the German naval officer, who spoke correct English and paid for the goods in dollars, also handing over a bonus of ten dollars per man for the crew. While the fresh provisions were being loaded onto the submarine, the German commander gave the captain of the whaler's information about whale banks, which the Icelander later visited and was able to harpoon two specimens." In explanation, the French newspaper expressed its conviction "that the rumors about German Navy submarines in the waters of Tierra del Fuego and in the Antarctic zone are based on truth." (11)

But as we all know, large parts of the coast of Tierra del Fuego belong to Argentina!

As has been shown, the final destinations for the evacuated German high-tech equipment were Spain and Argentina.

Why in these two countries in particular? The answer is easy for Spain, as Hitler helped General Franco to power in the first place. Spain remained neutral during the war, and so there was no reason for the Allies to intervene militarily in the country.

The situation with Argentina is not quite so simple.

At the centre of the good contacts between the German Reich and Argentina during the war was the person of Juan Domingo Peron.

Born in 1895, he aspired to a military career at an early age. Peron was accepted into the Buenos Aires cadet school in 1912, after which he served as an army officer. In 1939, with the rank of colonel, he began a study trip to Europe. From Rome, where he also served as adjutant to the Argentine military attache until 1941, he visited several European countries, including Germany. (51) During his stay in Rome, he learned about the political and social conditions in fascist Italy, which he later, when he himself became President of Argentina, seemed in many respects worthy of emulation. During this time, he must also have made contact with high-ranking representatives of the SS, on the basis of which later cooperation during the war and afterwards was built. It was not until after 1945 that it became public knowledge that Peron's name was on a list of agents of the SS Security Service (SD). (27)

After his return to Argentina, he founded the GOU (Group of United Officers) with like-minded officers . On June 4, 1943, the military staged a coup and Peron, a leading member of the GOU, became Minister of Labor and Welfare. Pedro Ramirez became President of the Republic.

It is interesting that this General Ramirez, together with other officers, had long maintained good contacts with the German ambassador in Argentina, von Thermann, and that on 2 May 1943, a Month before the coup, the German ambassador to Spain and president of the Latin American Institute in Berlin, General Faupel, landed in Argentina on a secret mission in a submarine. (28) After the war, the former SD chief Walter Schellenberg testified that in May 1943 an agreement had been reached between Germany and the group of Argentine officers that regulated the conditions for mutual cooperation. This also included permission to transport secret material through the Argentine diplomatic channels! (51) This should have made the importance of Faupel's mission clear.

After another military revolt, President Ramirez resigned in 1944.

Juan Peron became Vice President. This meant that Argentina had finally become the Third Reich's bridgehead on the South American continent. In May 1943, Peron had already written in a secret GOU manifesto: "Hitler's fight in war and peace is also ours." The Allied secret services were suspicious of what was brewing in Argentina, especially since they had learned that Argentina wanted to take the lead in a South American alliance directed against the USA. All of the resources of the used diplomatic pressure to persuade Argentina to change its political course. Argentina apparently gave in to this pressure and in January 1944 it was the last American nation to break off diplomatic relations with Germany, but remained neutral in the war. A year later, neutrality could no longer be maintained and a formal declaration of war was made on Germany. In 1969, Peron commented on the decision at the time with the words: "I remember meeting with some German friends and explaining this to them." And continued: "Look, we have no other choice, but of course it is all just a formality." In 1970, Peron stated: "We let the Germans know that we had only declared war on them to save thousands of lives. We exchanged messages with them via Switzerland and Spain.

...,

Franco understood our intentions and helped us to achieve them.' Elsewhere he was even clearer: 'Germany benefited from our declaration of war. As a belligerent power we were able to enter Germany after the end of the war, which meant that our aircraft and ships were able to do the Germans a great service. ... In this way

In this way, a large number of people were able to come to Argentina. ...
And it was a group of idiots who interpreted this as weakness.
These poor souls understood nothing of what was going on.« (51)

In the last days of the war in 1945, German submarines headed for the Argentine coast to unload their secret cargo. Two of these boats were handed over to the Americans after they had completed their mission. In doing so, Argentina seemed to be accommodating the United States by underlining its willingness to cooperate. But only apparently. The reality was different: the Peronists remained loyal allies of the militarily inferior Germany.

However, a few months after the end of the war, in October 1945, the political situation in Argentina seemed to change dramatically and unexpectedly, thus destroying all German post-war plans. In the course of political unrest, Peron was forced to resign on 9 October 1945.

On October 12, he was arrested by naval officers. But just three days later, his future wife, Eva Duarte, initiated the popular uprising against the army. Two days later, on October 17, Juan Peron was released under pressure from the masses and gave a speech. In the new presidential elections that were scheduled immediately afterwards, Peron emerged victorious on February 24, 1946, and took office on June 4.

Shortly after Peron's election, the starting gun was fired for one of the largest immigration movements of the last century, controlled by a sovereign state. Peron's emissaries in Europe distributed Argentine visas by the thousands to refugees from Germany and the countries formerly allied with Germany, and at the height of the campaign in 1948, up to 500 on some days. The author Uki Goni has provided the details in his book The real ODESSA described. (51)

The first transports left Spain in August/September 1946. Between 150 and 200 Germans boarded a ship in Cadiz bound for Argentina. This circumstance is remarkable in that Spain - as already mentioned above - was the first country to be headed for by the evacuation transports, along with Argentina. Like Norway before it, Spain thus seemed to be only a stopover for many "willing to leave" on the way overseas. After Peron's

The electoral success had clearly shown that the Third Power's refuge could be established there under safe conditions and, above all, with the support of the government. In General Franco's Spain they were merely tolerated and thus always at risk on the edge of Europe.

Peron's escape helpers focused their attention on technical and military specialists. They used these to strengthen the ranks of those in their country who had left the German submarines on the coast of Argentina in the spring and summer of 1945. Among those who arrived later were such prominent names as the aircraft builder Prof. Tank and the Horten brothers, who also worked in the same field. They were joined by the last commander of the secret squadron KG-200, Werner Baumbach, the well-known pilot Otto Behrends, the former inspector of fighter pilots Adolf Galland and, last but not least, the most decorated German soldier, the Stuka pilot Hans-Ulrich Rudel. In a factory near the Argentinian city of Cordoba, these people further developed German aircraft projects from the last days of the war and thereby laid the foundation for the strength of the Argentinian Air Force in the 1950s.

In addition to the research center in Cordoba, another research facility, the so-called Centro Atomico, was built in the Argentine Andes, near San Carlos de Bariloche . The circumstances surrounding the construction and operation of this facility were quite mysterious.

Construction work began in 1948 on the island of Huemul, located in Lake Nahuel Huapi, in the greatest secrecy. A large part of the facility was built underground, and so much cement was needed that this material became scarce throughout Argentina in 1948 and 1949. (34) Only German scientists, not Argentinian ones, worked at the Centro Atomico ! (52) Officially, the aim of the research was to bring about a thermonuclear chain reaction in compressed gas, i.e. plasma, at high temperatures. In the long term, this was supposedly the way to controlled nuclear fusion.

The research project on Huemul was led by Ronald Richter, an Austrian-born physicist who had worked for Skoda and the Reichspost during the war. (34) From the beginning, experts doubted the prospects of success of the project planned by Peron and Richter on at a press conference on March 24, 1951. The increasing political pressure from the USA, which was certainly aware of the true background of the Centro Atomico , seemed to have prompted Peron to launch a propaganda offensive. It almost seems as if this public step was simply intended to calm the situation in order to gain valuable time to complete the actual research project of Operation Huemul.

Apparently, as will be shown later, this was achieved in the same year. It was therefore more of a marginal episode that Peron officially dropped Richter in 1952 and the Argentine nuclear research authority NEA took possession of the facility on Huemul, which had previously been reserved exclusively for the Germans. During a visit to Argentina, Igor Witkowski was able to interview a long-time employee of the Centro Atomico , who did not deny that there could be other explanations for the research on Huemul and also confirmed that some of the documents from that time are still kept under lock and key. (27)

Has the underground facilities on the island of Huemul finally been found as the Third Power's refuge under the Andes that Landig had reported about? There seems to be a certain agreement, without a doubt, in the facts "located in the Andes," "underground," and "used by German scientists and technicians."

However, the small size of the research complex remains unsatisfactory and does not correspond to the extensive cave systems described by Landig. A final solution to this problem must therefore be postponed.

It should be clear, however, that the assumption expressed above that Landig might have used "Antarctica" as a synonym for "Argentina" has been confirmed by the facts presented. This also solves the mystery of the personnel strength of the "Antarctic base". The 2,000 men that Landig spoke of are not to be found on the "White Continent", but in Argentina. As early as 1947, there were press reports saying that the large South American country was now on the way to becoming a nuclear power and that there were up to 2,000 German and Austrian physicists there. (34) It was certainly not 2,000 physicists who made their way to Argentina after 1945, but 2,000

Scientific and technical specialists from all disciplines can certainly be involved.

Back to Juan Domingo Peron. After his election as President of Argentina on February 24, 1946, he ruled in an authoritarian manner and, among other things, suspended freedom of the press. His second wife Evita supported his populist social, economic and welfare policies with propaganda. Peron strengthened Argentina's leading position on the South American continent and asserted itself against the USA's claim to prestige. However, his regime was weakened by the gradual deterioration of the economic situation.

Tensions arose with the feudal-conservative forces and with the Catholic Church. In 1951, Peron again won the presidential election. On June 16, 1955, a revolt by naval officers failed. However, the second attempt, the uprising from September 16 to 21, 1955, succeeded in overthrowing Peron. He went into exile in Paraguay, Venezuela, and in 1958, after a brief stay in the Dominican Republic, he went to Spain. After returning to Argentina on June 20, 1973, he made a brilliant political comeback. In September, he was re-elected president. Juan Peron died on July 1, 1974.

For more than ten years, from the spring of 1945 to the autumn of 1955, Peron’s Argentina had been a safe haven for the Third Power.
After Peron's fall, not much changed at first. The group of fanatical generals who followed right-wing Catholicism who had come to power at that time also sympathised with the Germans. Nevertheless, it was time to look for other alternatives. Landig announced that the "Antarctic" (Argentinian) base had to be abandoned in 1961. The crew was flown out to South America, which in the context of the identity of "Antarctica" with "Argentina" means that a transfer from Argentina to another South American country apparently took place in that year. To which - more on this in section 5.

Chapter.

Why is it that the role that Argentina played in cooperation with the Third Power in the years after the Second World War cannot be proven beyond doubt on the basis of the documents today, given the democratic conditions in that country?

The aforementioned author Uki Goni has in his research discovered that most of the relevant documents from that period had already been destroyed in 1955, during the last days of Peron's government. And as late as 1996, orders were given to burn the last remaining evidence, the so-called "immigration dossiers," which contained the entry papers of those fleeing Europe.

(51) For this reason, the events of that time can only be reconstructed with great difficulty today. The author of this book has attempted to make his contribution to this in the previous section.

One question remains open, and its solution - this much can be promised - will provide an insight into the most fascinating

Chapters of German technology research:

Why did Landig describe the Viennese engineer Schauberger as Engineer Schriever as the most important flying disc designer?

According to what is known so far, Schauberger was not involved in the construction of Miethe's V-7 flying disc or Habermohl's flying disc design, and he also had nothing to do with Schriever's development. Lusar also did not write anything about him in his book about German secret weapons.

Now Landig claims to have been ordered to Vienna in 1944 and to have been entrusted with special tasks related to the development of flying discs until the end of the war (see 1.

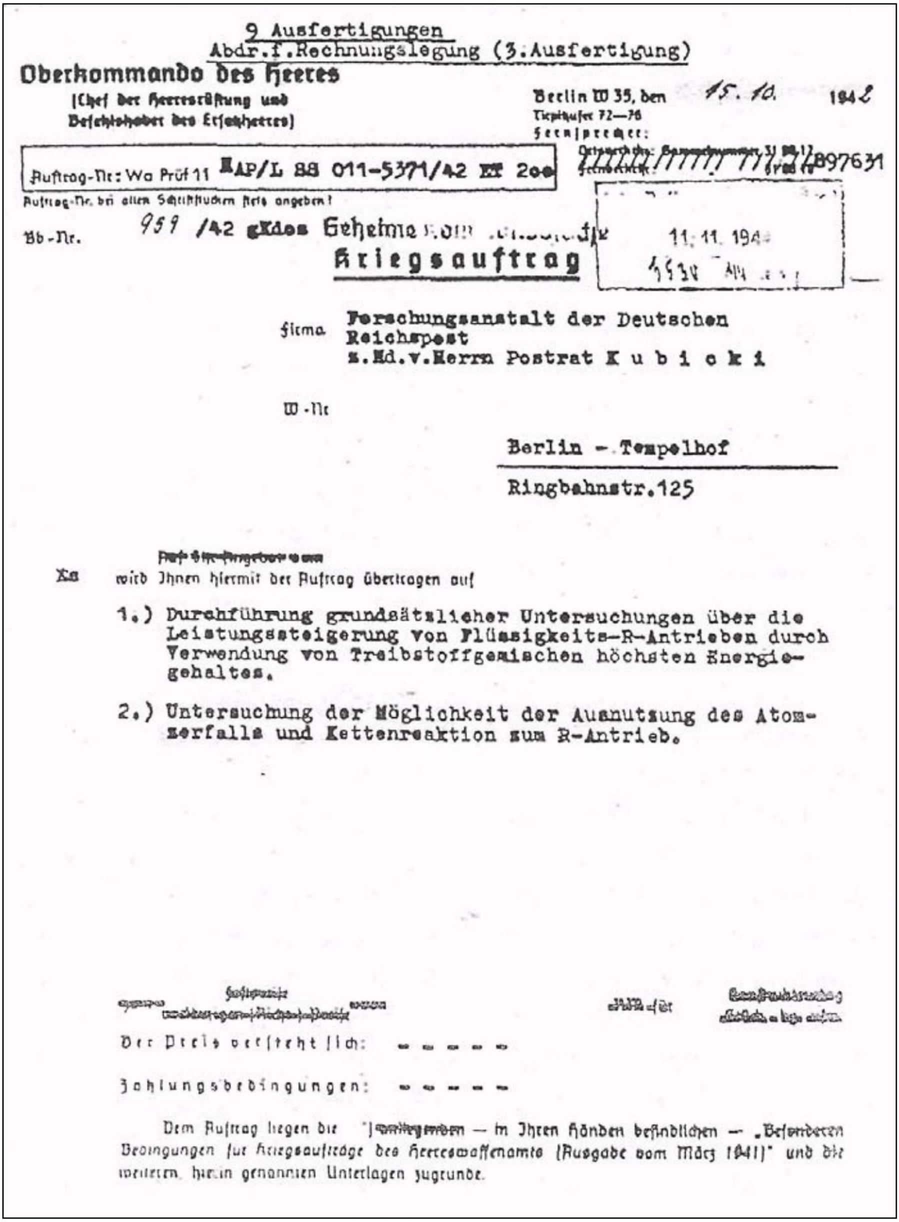
Chapter). For this reason, it is reasonable to have a more detailed knowledge of Schauberger's involvement in such a project. Did flying discs exist whose level of development was more advanced than that of the V-7?

Hadn't Miethe said: "If these and two other secret requirements are met, then my apparatus can without a doubt also be operated with an atomic propulsion system." Was Schauberger's collaboration perhaps related to this?

The fact that corresponding basic research was carried out in Germany during the war is proven by a war order from the Army High Command to the Research Institute of the German Reichspost on 15 October 1942. It states: »...

Investigation of the possibility of using atomic decay and chain reaction for R-propulsion" (Figure 12). "R-propulsion" stands for rocket propulsion. Since the Reichspost had close ties to the SS, it is not surprising that in connection with the research priorities of the Kammler staff at Skoda in Pilsen it was stated: "Special priority was given to the development and construction of an atomic-powered

Machine Translated by Google



9 Ausfertigungen
Abdr.f.Rechnungslegung (3.Ausfertigung)

Oberkommando des Heeres
(Chef der Heeresrüstung und Befehlshaber des Ersatzheeres)

Berlin W 35, den 15. 10. 1942
Tirpitzufer 72—76
Fernsprecher:
Ortsverkehr: Sammelnummer 31 00 12
Fernverkehr: [illegible] 897631

Auftrag-Nr: Wa Prüf 11 AP/L 88 011-5371/42 [illegible] 200

Auftrag-Nr. bei allen Schriftstücken stets angeben!

Bb-Nr. 959 /42 gKdos Geheime Kommandosache

11. 11. 194

Kriegsauftrag

Firma Forschungsanstalt der Deutschen
Reichspost
z.Hd.v.Herrn Postrat Kubicki

W-Nr

Berlin - Tempelhof

Ringbahnstr.125

Es wird Ihnen hiermit der Auftrag übertragen auf

1.) Durchführung grundsätzlicher Untersuchungen über die Leistungssteigerung von Flüssigkeits-R-Antrieben durch Verwendung von Treibstoffgemischen höchsten Energiegehaltes.

2.) Untersuchung der Möglichkeit der Ausnutzung des Atomzerfalls und Kettenreaktion zum R-Antrieb.

Der Preis versteht sich: - - - - -

Zahlungsbedingungen: - - - - -

Dem Auftrag liegen die — in Ihren Händen befindlichen — „Besonderen Bedingungen für Kriegsaufträge des Heereswaffenamts (Ausgabe vom März 1941)" und die weiteren hierin genannten Unterlagen zugrunde.

Abb. 12

Aircraft, work on the use of atomic energy as rocket and aircraft propulsion..." (49) In the two and a half years between the awarding of the contract and the end of the war, astonishing progress must have been made. For example, a captured SS scientist told British interrogators after the war that a small atomic engine for aircraft already existed in the "Mecklenburg Science Camp". (53) It cannot therefore be ruled out that atomic engines were also designed for use in flying saucers.

If that was the case, Schauberger's research went in a different direction. Information about this can be found in his documents, which are still in the family's possession, and in his correspondence.

Viktor Schauberger was an engineer with unusually sharp powers of observation and intuition, who knew how to use the forces visible in nature in new technical devices. His inventions were based on the motto: Understand and copy nature. (18) He was primarily interested in the dependence of water density and load-bearing capacity on temperature and form of movement, as well as unusual vortex movements that even allowed water to flow uphill. This was knowledge that, in his opinion, ancient builders had already used in the construction of Roman viaducts and water systems in the royal palaces of Crete. He was convinced that so-called "floating forces" were hidden in water, and developed machines that were supposed to release these through strong rotation, in order to then be lifted up by such a force field. (54)

The focus of his research was always the vortex, which he believed represented a fundamental structural pattern of creative processes in nature, from the shape of spiral galaxies in the vastness of the cosmos to the shape of a tornado and DNA as the carrier of genetic information. In order to better study the forces released by such turbulence, Schauberger constructed an "impeller" over a body of water. In contrast to the propeller, it directed the flowing forces inwards rather than outwards and pushed the water through a tube. This created a flow pattern that he called "centripetal". Schauberger found that the energy output achieved in this way was nine times greater than the energy released by the vortex.

higher than that of a conventional turbine. This "implosion machine" also generated strong vacuum effects.
He later replaced water with air in the experimental setup and devised a device that was suitable for use as an energy generator or engine for aircraft or submarines.

In 1940 he submitted a patent for this machine. Shortly afterwards he wrote to his cousin that he had invented an airplane that made no noise at all. In correspondence with the Viennese company Kertl in February 1941 he described the purpose of this prototype. On the one hand it was to be used to research the production of "free energy" and on the other hand to confirm his theories about the possibility of floating in the air with this energy. The vortex achieved with this machine led to a massive reduction in the volume of air inside the device and at the same time generated a vacuum of enormous pressure that sucked more and more air into the turbine. A small starter motor was necessary to get the process going. When the turbine was then running at 15,000 to 20,000 revolutions per minute, the starting aid switched off and the process maintained itself. Schauberger attributed the ability of the machine to take off into the air and fly to a lesser extent to the vacuum that was formed. He thought that it was mainly due to another process, a reaction between the air molecules, which had been compressed with enormous force by the implosion, and the machine itself. (18) Since he was not sure about the type of energy involved, he simply called it "free energy." Its effect is similar to what is today described by the word "antigravity."

In May 1941, Schauberger was ordered to continue his research in secret. From his notes, it is difficult to reconstruct exactly what Schauberger did and what he was really working on. A few weeks later, he wrote a letter to his son Walter saying that he was in Gablonz in the Sudetenland and that what he was doing was secret. The following month, he announced that he was continuing his research there in collaboration with a company. In the autumn of 1941, he worked in a weapons factory in Neudek, near Karlovy Vary, and in December he was back in Gablonz, where he waited for a starter motor to arrive. The months that followed are not sufficiently clear as to Schauberger's exact activities. In April 1944, he appeared before a draft board of the Waffen-SS.

In May he received orders to march to the Mauthausen concentration camp, where he recruited a team of specialists held there to continue his research work. In June he was officially assigned to an SS Panzergrenadier Division in Breslau. Nick Cook suspected that this was a cover-up measure, as Schauberger was already 59 years old at the time.

What is certain is that he continued researching until the end of the war and from then on worked on behalf of the SS. Schauberger constantly commuted back and forth between the SS engineering school in Vienna, where the technical designs were created, and the Mauthausen concentration camp, where production took place.

As can be seen from his diary entries, work on the "implosion machine" now called Repulsine made good progress, but was repeatedly interrupted by air raid sirens and other research projects that he could not avoid. On February 28, 1945, he moved his workplace to the village of Leonstein so that he could work undisturbed. On April 5, his diary reports that the final assembly of the Repulsine had begun. A month later, the work was done. However, the first test flight of the machine, planned for May 6, 1945, did not take place. The end of the war had come. (18)

A few days after the end of the war, Schauberger was arrested by the Americans and placed under house arrest until March 1946. What information Schauberger revealed during the interrogations is still unknown. In the spring of 1958 - Schauberger was now a 72-year-old man in poor health - he received an offer from the USA to continue his research with the support of millions of dollars. These not inconsiderable financial resources were supposedly to be made available to him by private investors. Schauberger then went to the USA. A few months later, in September 1958, Schauberger returned to Austria, frustrated and terminally ill, where he died five days later. Shortly before his departure, he had signed a document in which he transferred all designs, models and prototypes created in the USA to the consortium that was financing him. (18)

Landig was therefore right in the case of Schauberger. He actually constructed a flying machine, but unlike the models of Schriever, Habemohl and Miethe, it had an unconventional drive and apparently never got beyond the status of a prototype.

What is the real source of that “free energy” that Schauberger's Repulsine produced?

The answer: the so-called zero-point energy field. The existence of such a field has been proven in science since 1997. In that year, the effect named after the physicist Hendrik Casimir and theoretically developed by him in 1948 was successfully put into practice.

Casimir had claimed that even in a vacuum, which is generally regarded as "empty," the zero-point fluctuations of a quantum field can never be stopped, and that the vacuum is therefore never "empty." Even if the walls of a spatial region were at a temperature of 0 degrees Kelvin, a fluctuation field with finite energy would be maintained in the enclosed spatial region. It is assumed that this vacuum radiation field, which is also referred to as quantum noise, is equally present everywhere in space. Some theoretical physicists attribute to it a field energy with horrendously high energy densities. (55) In order to make the magnitude of this energy density clear even to the inexperienced layman, the following analogy is often used: There is so much zero-point energy in a coffee cup that it could blow up the earth.

Back to the Casimir effect. According to Casimir, proof of the existence of such a vacuum radiation field could be provided if it were possible to place two aluminum plates in a vacuum so close to each other that the gap between them was smaller than the wavelength of the particles pulsating in the quantum noise. This would mean that there would actually be "nothing" between the plates. It was not until 1997 that it became technically possible to reduce the distance between the plates to the required level.

It was demonstrated that the two plates suspended in a vacuum attract each other with a force that is inversely proportional to the fourth power of the distance between the plates, which is due to the external force of the vacuum radiation field. (55)

The Russian physicist and Nobel Prize winner Andrei Sakharov published a scientific paper in 1967 in which he claimed that the physical quantities of gravity and inertia were connected to the vacuum fluctuations of the zero-point energy field. This

Other scientists, including the renowned Hai Puthoff from the USA, now share this opinion.

The consequence of this theoretical approach of modern physics is revolutionary and fantastic in two respects. If it were possible to change the zero-point energy field using technical means, this would mean that gravitating and inertial masses could also be influenced. A targeted disturbance of the zero-point energy field surrounding an object could then result in a partial elimination of gravity and thus the object taking off. This process would be accompanied by a reduction in acceleration resistance. The way would be clear to achieve flight speeds that were previously impossible.

On the other hand, however, by tapping into this field, it would be possible to access the high energy densities described, which would be tantamount to solving all energy problems!

How would such an intervention in the almost inexhaustible energy resource be possible? Physicists believe that it would be possible through a so-called torsion field, which can best be compared to a rotating whirlpool. (18) Schauberger's Repulsine produced exactly such a torsion field when the vortex of air molecules directed inwards by the "impeller" with the enormous force of 15,000 to 20,000 revolutions per minute led to a collision of their electrons and protons! If the intervention in the zero-point energy field was successful, the device then functioned like a pump which, immersed in the sea of fluctuating vacuum particles, drew energy from this almost infinite source.

Schauberger had discovered a new operating principle and tried to implement it technically. The theoretical background, however, remained unknown to him at the time. Correctly set up, the Repulsine could manipulate local gravity - the machine took off.

Or rather, it was supposed to take off on May 6, 1945. But, as already mentioned, that never happened. But that is not the end of the story of Schauberger and his epochal discovery. While the Americans arrested Schauberger a few days after the end of the war, the Russians searched his apartment in Vienna - and found something. A short time later, the documents they found landed on the desk of a Russian scientist named Podkletnov. He showed

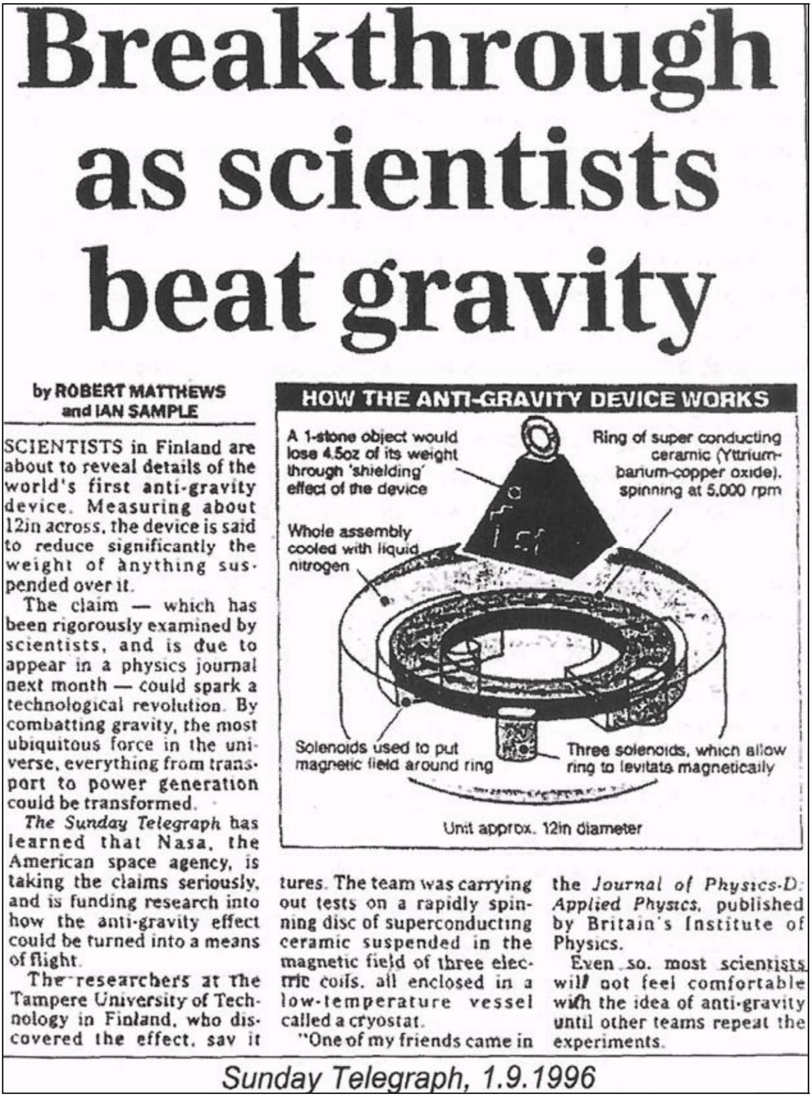
Machine Translated by Google

He later passed it on to his son Evgeny Podklednov. (18) And as luck would have it - if one wants to believe in such "coincidences" - this Evgeny Podkletnov is today one of the leading authorities among physicists who are theoretically and experimentally dealing with the possibilities of shielding gravity.

In 1996, Podkletnov, in collaboration with Finnish scientists, succeeded in shielding the Earth's gravity with the apparatus he had developed to such an extent that the object positioned above it lost a few percent of its weight (Figure 13). Four years later, when he was working for the Japanese Toshiba consortium, he claimed to have achieved total shielding of gravity. (27) In the apparatus he and his team constructed, a ring made of superconducting ceramic rotated at high speed in a strong magnetic field. While Podkletnov had achieved the initially small weight loss with 5000 revolutions of the superconductor per minute, he says that 25,000 to 50,000 revolutions per minute are necessary to completely eliminate the Earth's gravity. (18)

As a reminder, Schauberger had at least succeeded in observing similar effects at 15,000 to 20,000 revolutions per minute.
How does Podkletnov explain the recorded effect of a constant weight loss with increasing rotation speed? According to him, this fact could be due to an excitation of the physical vacuum inside and outside the superconductor by the acting torsion field. (18) A torsion field had also canceled out the natural gravity in Schauberger's Repulsine ! In contrast to the Repulsine, however, in Podkletnov's experimental setup this field was created by electromagnetic influences.

It can be described as a sensation that at the end of the war, German scientists were also working on this "modern" form of generating a torsion field and the resulting possibility of cancelling the Earth's gravity. Igor Witkowski has provided evidence of this with his research results. (27) As a result of these developments, which were described as "decisive for the war", unmanned aircraft were created by the end of 1944 at the latest, which, in contrast to Schauberger's Repulsine prototype , had proven their practical suitability in test flights and also in initial missions.



Breakthrough as scientists beat gravity

by ROBERT MATTHEWS and IAN SAMPLE

SCIENTISTS in Finland are about to reveal details of the world's first anti-gravity device. Measuring about 12in across, the device is said to reduce significantly the weight of anything suspended over it.

The claim — which has been rigorously examined by scientists, and is due to appear in a physics journal next month — could spark a technological revolution. By combatting gravity, the most ubiquitous force in the universe, everything from transport to power generation could be transformed.

The Sunday Telegraph has learned that Nasa, the American space agency, is taking the claims seriously, and is funding research into how the anti-gravity effect could be turned into a means of flight.

The researchers at the Tampere University of Technology in Finland, who discovered the effect, sav it tures. The team was carrying out tests on a rapidly spinning disc of superconducting ceramic suspended in the magnetic field of three electric coils, all enclosed in a low-temperature vessel called a cryostat.

"One of my friends came in the Journal of Physics-D: Applied Physics, published by Britain's Institute of Physics.

Even so, most scientists will not feel comfortable with the idea of anti-gravity until other teams repeat the experiments.

HOW THE ANTI-GRAVITY DEVICE WORKS

A 1-stone object would lose 4.5oz of its weight through 'shielding' effect of the device

Ring of super conducting ceramic (Yttrium-barium-copper oxide), spinning at 5,000 rpm

Whole assembly cooled with liquid nitrogen

Solenoids used to put magnetic field around ring

Three solenoids, which allow ring to levitate magnetically

Unit approx. 12in diameter

Sunday Telegraph, 1.9.1996

Abb. 13

What sources did Igor Witkowski use in his research?

The first information about the research project called Die Glocke

The above-mentioned Rudolf Schuster revealed the project. In the interrogations conducted by the Polish secret service and the Soviet NKVD, Schuster had reported on his role as the person responsible for transport issues in the SS special commando ELF. He stated that this commando had evacuated the project in question along with the scientific documentation in the last days of the war. Since 18.

The experiments took place in a disused coal mine near Waidenburg in Silesia in December 1944.

On April 28, 1945, 62 of the people involved in the experiments were shot by the SS on the way west, including German scientists. This fact indicates on the one hand the high level of secrecy of this research work, and on the other hand it suggests that the execution of some of the knowledge holders could certainly be afforded. This in turn allows the conclusion that the research had progressed very far, and perhaps even been completed. Schuster also reported to the secret service officers who were questioning him that at the end of April a Ju 390 from the well-known secret squadron KG 200 had flown all the material to Norway. The Junkers had been decorated with the national insignia of neutral Sweden. The Ju 390 was a six-engine long-distance aircraft with a range of 8,500 kilometers, which could also be refueled in the air. Apparently only one example of this type existed at the end of the war, which further underlines the value of the evacuated cargo.

The Poles and Russians also had Rudolf Schuster to thank for the tip-off to SS-Obergruppenführer Jakob Sporrenberg, the commander of the northern evacuation route. As I have already explained, Sporrenberg had been handed over to the Poles by the British. He was therefore able to be questioned about the facts cited by Schuster. As a result of these interrogations, the Poles obtained further information relating to the Die Glocke project . This was apparently so explosive that after the fake execution of Sporrenberg's death sentence, he was handed over to the Russians.

The descriptions of the technical equipment of the Die Glocke

The results of the project described above give the following picture:

The device was about 2.5 meters high and had a diameter of 1.5 meters. A bell-shaped bell connected to a thick electric cable

Machine Translated by Google

A ceramic casing encased two massive, cylindrical drums, each approximately one meter in diameter. During the experiments, the drums, which were made of a silvery metal, rotated in opposite directions at extremely high speeds around a common vertical axis made of hard metal (probably titanium) with a diameter of between approximately twelve and 20 centimeters. Before each experiment, the hollow axis was fitted with a ceramic container that was 1.0 to 1.5 meters long and filled with an unusual, metallic substance. One of the code names for this ingredient was "IRR Xerum-525." A key component in its composition was mercury. Pure mercury was also found inside the two rotating cylinders. Before each experiment, the mercury was cooled down to low temperatures.

The following effects were observed during operation of the system:

- A characteristic noise, best compared to the humming in a beehive;
- A bluish light, also described as the "blue glow" of the bell, a finding that will be of paramount importance later;
- A strong magnetic field;
- The operating staff experienced a brief headache and a metallic taste was noticed in the mouth.
- In the long term, those involved in the experiments complained of sleep and balance disorders, memory lapses, muscle cramps and various types of ulcers; the organic substances deposited in the experimental rooms for testing purposes resulted, among other things, in the complete destruction of tissue structures, in the case of green plants the chlorophyll degraded within five hours, followed by a transformation of the plant material into a greasy substance with the consistency of rancid fat.

In the first test phase between May and June 1944, five of the seven scientists involved died as a result of the biological side effects. Due to a "better setting" of the test facility, the undesirable side effects were gradually eliminated.

Machine Translated by Google

was significantly reduced. On January 10, 1945, only twelve to fifteen percent of the biological samples were destroyed. On March 25, it was finally possible to reduce this rate to two to three percent.

When asked after the war about the basic functioning of the bell , Schuster and Sporrenberg were unable to provide the clear information that had been hoped for, as neither of them had been involved in the project as scientists. In connection with the operation of the system, however, two formulations could be inferred from their statements that today contribute to an understanding of the physical background of the most important research project for the Third Reich: "vortex compression", one could also say torsion field, and "separation of magnetic fields".

Podkletnov had achieved the latter in his experiments by using superconductors. However, superconductors were not yet available in 1944/1945. Therefore, in order to achieve a shielding of gravity in a way equivalent to Podkletnov's, the German scientists had to take a different route.

A "magnetically closed system" can also be achieved if, under certain conditions, a plasma (ionized gas) generated by an electric current creates a plasma vortex. The formation of these so-called plasmoids is accompanied by the generation of magnetic fields and characteristic luminous phenomena through the emission of ionizing radiation. For this reason, the plasmoids are also called "fireballs." Both effects were reported in connection with the bell . Igor Witkowski has proven that the generation of such a plasma vortex was technically possible in the apparatus described as a bell .

The mercury used was of crucial importance due to its material properties. Mercury is a liquid substance with high density and low viscosity. The lower this is, the more undisturbed the angular momentum of the elementary particles in the atom, known as spin, remains. When the drums filled with mercury in the bell were accelerated to several tens of thousands of revolutions per minute, this liquid material formed a thin layer on the walls of the drums under the influence of centrifugal force.

After reaching the maximum rotation speed, the mercury ions could be further accelerated by an applied high-voltage current accelerated. Calculations showed that the rotation speed of the ions in the drums could have increased to over 100,000 revolutions per second (!) in this way. The plasma vortex generated thus rotated many orders of magnitude faster than Podkletnov's superconducting ceramic ring, which was limited by the mechanics of solid bodies (it reached 25,000 to 50,000 revolutions per minute). In fact, Podkletnov's method, which seems so revolutionary today, represents a step backwards compared to the experiments carried out by German scientists more than 60 years ago.

The effects achieved by the Germans in shielding against gravity must have been much more astonishing. This also explains the changes in organic substances that occurred as a result of the experiments. The Russian scientist Genadiy Shipov and the German physicist Burkhard Heim had already demonstrated in their work that artificially generated gravitational waves must result in structural changes in the materials exposed to them. (27)

Nick Cook asked his physics mentor, Dr. Dan Marckus (a pseudonym), who specializes in antigravity and general field theory, for his interpretation of the facts offered to him by Witkowski. Marckus confirmed that the Germans could actually have developed a flying machine that could use antigravity as a propulsion force. In addition, this device may have succeeded in manipulating the fourth dimension, time, albeit only to a very small extent.

By intervening in the zero-point energy field, not only was gravity able to be eliminated, but within the torsion field created, the passage of time was also different in relation to the "outside world." Marckus formulated this as follows: "If you create a torsion field of sufficient size, the four dimensions of space are bent. The more torsion is created, the greater the disturbance of space. If you bend space, you also bend time." (18) The almost incomprehensible consequence of this is: German scientists developed a time machine!

The project Die Glocke was apparently launched in January 1942. In August 1943 it was split into two sub-projects, called Lantern Bearer and Chronos. (27) With the designation Chronos Cook's mentor's suspicions are indirectly confirmed.

Machine Translated by Google

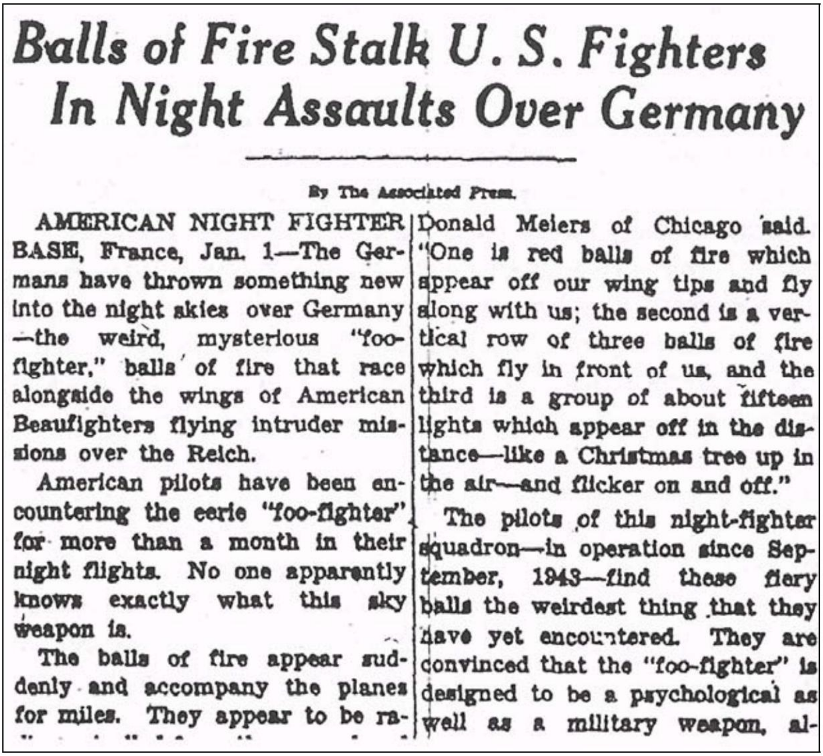
"Lantern bearer" is someone who raises the light high, a beautiful and at the same time profound expression for an anti-gravity drive. At the end of 1944, these lights, known as fireballs or "foo-fighters", were to cause confusion among the Allied aircraft crews for the first time.

Their reports on the phenomenon of "fireballs" also received considerable coverage in the media of that time (Figure 14).

What caused the most astonishment was the flight characteristics observed in these objects. A typical description of the experience was given in the New York Times on December 14, 1944: "Yesterday, during a night mission near Hamburg, a mysterious, glowing ball appeared near an Allied bomber squadron, which, despite many attacks by the accompanying fighter planes,



Balls of Fire Stalk U. S. Fighters In Night Assaults Over Germany

By The Associated Press.

AMERICAN NIGHT FIGHTER BASE, France, Jan. 1—The Germans have thrown something new into the night skies over Germany—the weird, mysterious "foo-fighter," balls of fire that race alongside the wings of American Beaufighters flying intruder missions over the Reich.

American pilots have been encountering the eerie "foo-fighter" for more than a month in their night flights. No one apparently knows exactly what this sky weapon is.

The balls of fire appear suddenly and accompany the planes for miles. They appear to be ra-

Donald Meiers of Chicago said. "One is red balls of fire which appear off our wing tips and fly along with us; the second is a vertical row of three balls of fire which fly in front of us, and the third is a group of about fifteen lights which appear off in the distance—like a Christmas tree up in the air—and flicker on and off."

The pilots of this night-fighter squadron—in operation since September, 1943—find these fiery balls the weirdest thing that they have yet encountered. They are convinced that the "foo-fighter" is designed to be a psychological as well as a military weapon, al-proved to be indestructible. This mysterious new weapon of Hitler's was very effective in disrupting all radio traffic. None of our experts has yet succeeded in explaining the operating principle of these 'glowing balls', which demonstrated a maneuverability at incredible speeds that seemed to contradict the laws of aerodynamics." (27)

Abb. 14

From mid-November 1944 through the winter and well into 1945, the aircraft crews of the Western Allies reported seeing these small orange, red or white glowing "fireballs". A photo taken by American pilots still shows today what an eerie effect these strange flying objects must have had (Figure 15).

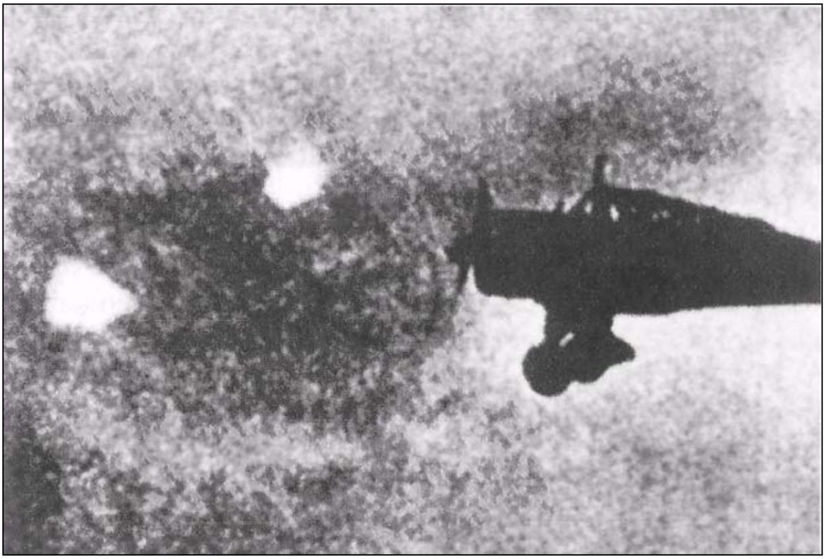

Abb. 15

In the majority of cases, these were sightings at night, but sightings during the day also occurred. (18) Anyone who thinks that only a few isolated cases were reported is completely mistaken. A US Air Force intelligence report from April 1945 shows that up to that point 302 sightings of these "fireballs" had been reported by 140 aircraft crews. Interestingly, some of these sightings were also from the Pacific theater of war. (27) This in turn suggests that conclude that the Germans had obviously also made this revolutionary new technology available to their ally Japan.

As a reminder: On its way to Japan, U 234 (Boat 1) carried, among other things, 24 tons of mercury, exactly the material that was used in the Die Glocke project to generate plasma.

In addition to the observed luminous effects and the interference with radio traffic caused by strong electromagnetic fields, it is above all the observed flight characteristics, which "seemed to contradict the laws of aerodynamics", that allow only one conclusion:

By the end of 1944, nothing stood in the way of the practical implementation of the Lantern Carrier project . The first anti-gravity aircraft took off. As flying "plasmoids," they also went down in history as the first "UFOs." However, there were no reports of them being used by weapons, so it can be assumed that they were still flying unarmed at this early stage of testing. Were the "fireballs" manned or unmanned? Since the harmful secondary effects on organisms in the " The Bell " project could only be reduced to two to three percent at the end of March 1945, the "fireballs" must have performed their spectacular flight maneuvers unmanned until the end of the war.

There was still a long way to go before manned anti-gravity aircraft could be realized. A satisfactory solution to the problems that arose was apparently only found in the early 1950s.

Further indirect evidence that the Germans had developed a seemingly utopian new weapon at the end of 1944 can be found in a message from Magda Goebbels, the wife of Joseph Goebbels, to his sister Maria, née Kimmich. At Christmas 1944, exactly at the time when the "fireballs" were being reported in the Allied media, Magda told her sister-in-law under the seal of secrecy that Joseph had seen certain new wonder weapons that were downright fantastic. (56) Did she perhaps mean the German atomic weapon, the first successful test of which had taken place on October 12, 1944, on the Baltic island of Rügen? (36) That is unlikely, as Joseph Goebbels knew of the possibilities of military use of the Nuclear fission had been a problem since the spring of 1942, as an entry in his diary from March 21, 1942 proves: "I am being given a lecture on the latest results of German science. Research in the field of atomic fragmentation has progressed so far that its results can possibly still be used to wage this war. Even the smallest effort would result in such immense destructive effects that one can look forward with some horror to the course of the war, if it lasts any longer, and to a subsequent war. Modern technology gives man unimaginable means of destruction." (57)

What really lies behind the wonder weapon, the use of which was supposed to bring about a turning point in Germany's favor at this late stage of the war? Or to put it another way: what parameters would an ultimate weapon of victory have to fulfill?

It would have had to be a weapon of mass destruction, a weapon that - if available in sufficient numbers - could have destroyed the enemy at any point. The prerequisite would therefore have been a secure means of transport that could also carry this weapon over great distances. Both enemy capitals and large concentrations of troops would have been possible targets.

In addition, protecting one’s own troops and the civilian population from retaliatory attacks would be of crucial importance to.

Some researchers favor the German nuclear weapon in this regard. As a bomb, it could have been used on the front lines and in the hinterland. With the V-2 and A-9 rockets that had been developed, it would even have been possible to transport it to London or even across the Atlantic to New York. Such projects were undoubtedly in preparation, and their realization only failed because there was not enough time to bring them to a successful conclusion. However, we now know that the German nuclear weapons tested in October 1944 and March 1945 functioned according to a principle that would have only permitted their use as nuclear battlefield weapons. Their explosive power could not be compared with the American atomic bombs, which could raze entire cities to the ground. In addition, they were said to have only been available in small numbers. (36) Therefore, their possible use at the last minute would hardly have prompted the Allies to

Could have made them give in. Not to mention a German victory.

In the author's view, however, Igor Witkowski, who has already been mentioned several times, is on the right track in the search for the weapon that will decide the war. It is thanks to his research that the question of the safe means of transporting the ultimate weapon can be considered resolved. The "fireballs", which could not be detected by enemy air defenses due to their revolutionary flight characteristics, could have been used as carriers. The electronic guidance systems required to be able to guide this weapon to a target even over a distance of several thousand kilometers were available. (26)

As the reports on the "fireballs" show, they were also available in sufficient numbers. The other component of this weapon system consisted of a charge of chemical warfare agents.

Since the end of the 1930s, Germany had the highly toxic nerve gases Tabun (lethal concentration 400 milligrams per cubic meter of air), Sarin (100 milligrams per cubic meter) and Soman (60 milligrams per cubic meter). At that time, there was no antidote to the effects of these chemical warfare gases, and the filters of conventional gas masks offered no protection. By comparison, the most toxic chemical warfare gases available to the Allies, such as phosgene or mustard gas, had a toxicity of 3500 and 2600 milligrams per cubic meter respectively. During the war, the Germans not only managed to keep the secret of these chemical warfare agents, they also produced thousands of tons of them and, with the exception of Soman, filled a large proportion of them into bombs and grenades. (27)

Now the words of Hermann Göring, which he uttered after the end of the war, also become understandable: "I refused to use a weapon that would have destroyed the entire civilisation." (53) The assumption that this meant the German atomic weapon is unlikely, not only because of the limited possibilities of its use. Göring later clarified his statement to the American officers who questioned him, by stating that with the nerve gases that had been developed, Germany could have turned defeat into victory. (58) The use of highly toxic war gases would have been more effective than the use of atomic weapons.

brought with it further advantages. The areas abandoned by the German army would have been reoccupied almost without fighting and, above all, undamaged. There would have been no irradiated areas. This should have made it clear which weapon in the German Reich's arsenal was the decisive factor in the war. With the "fireballs", the suitable carrier for this weapon was finally found. Long-range rockets, such as the V-2 or A-9, were not considered as carrier weapons, since they would have had to explode several meters above the ground in order to fully develop the effect of the gases. The ground-level detonators required for this were not yet available at the time. (36)

The fact that Hitler had actually considered waging a gas war at the end of 1944 can be read in the memoirs of Armaments Minister Albert Speer.

The fact that this decision was made at the same time as the first documented reports of the appearance of the "fireballs" is probably no coincidence. Speer's memoirs state: "In the late autumn of 1944, Hitler suddenly intervened in the production of gas masks and appointed a special representative who was directly responsible to him. A program was hastily drawn up to protect the entire population from the effects of a gas war. Although Hitler's urgent order from October 1944 onwards succeeded in tripling production to over 2,300,000 gas masks, the protection of the city's population could only be guaranteed after months." (24)

This order expresses Hitler's fear of a possible massive retaliation by the Allies. A statement by Hitler has been handed down that sums up his fears in this regard. The enemy would "assemble fifteen thousand bombers and kill all of Germany with poison gas." (36) The fact that the devastating effects of such an Allied counterattack had to be expected as long as it was not possible to prevent the Allied bomber commands from endangering German cities was probably also one of the reasons for Göring's remark that the massive use of chemical weapons on both sides would have led to the destruction of civilization.

The fact that it was not possible to ensure the protection of German airspace by March/ April 1945 was ultimately the only obstacle to the deployment of the ultimate victory weapon system.

Just a few months later, the newly developed German jet fighters had a terrible harvest among the incoming Allied bomber squadrons. In March 1945, the underground factory near Nordhausen produced 500 Me 262s, and in April, twice as many! At the same time, the underground hydrogenation plants began to provide sufficient amounts of fuel for these ultra-modern machines. (58)

In view of these facts, it is understandable why Hitler was not prepared to give up hope for a short-term turnaround in the war until the very end and why, from his point of view, any means of prolonging the war had to appear legitimate.

In addition to the sources evaluated by Igor Witkowski, is there any other evidence that Germany acquired weapons systems in the final phase of the war that seemed utopian at the time?

During research for their book The Secret of the German Atomic Bomb, the authors Edgar Mayer and Thomas Mehner came across a contemporary witness of a special kind. The following sentences precede the reproduction of an interview conducted with this witness in the summer of 1999: "For reasons of privacy protection, we are refraining from naming the person at this point. The person we spoke to is a British citizen.

His name and his function within the secret service of Her Majesty the Queen of England will, as he has been assured, be revealed when he has passed on to a better world. (34)

Below are some excerpts from the interview: »I was at the ... in a position in which I was able to gain knowledge about the technical developments of the Germans. I still remember things from this time that make me doubt the truth of many public statements about the technological leaps - and I speak of leaps quite deliberately - up until the end of the war. I should put it better: much has not yet been said, and some of it is simply nonsense. You will not expect me to spread things that I am sure will remain inaccessible to the public for a long time to come, and that is a good thing. But one can admit that German scientists - and in fact far more of them than are known by name in the so-called historical and political science scene - and also engineers and technicians at worked on something downright unbelievable. But I am not referring here to the well-known V- and air defense weapons, some of which were actually or almost ready for production, or where this would have been possible in the foreseeable future.« The informant then describes, among other things, the activities of three groups involved in the development of the German atomic weapon (Heisenberg, Diebner and probably the group around Ardenne working under the aegis of the Reichspost), before continuing: »Yes, and then there was the fourth team, which we heard rumors about in the last phase of the war. This was so vague and fantastic that one could once again think of it as a feint. But after the war it turned out that it was not one and that the world narrowly avoided a huge catastrophe. When I found out about this, I almost lost my composure afterwards. There was a moment of extreme danger, especially when you consider that it seemed possible to use this technology at distances that exceeded everything that was possible at the time, especially when you consider the range of the V-2. The fourth team worked in an environment where monstrosities were commonplace. And when I say that, I mean that they were experimenting with things that even the well-informed public would find unthinkable and unbelievable, i.e. unreal. Someone suggested to me at the time that it seemed as if these specialists were about to override conventional physical laws." Doesn't that sound familiar? The topic of the development of the German nuclear weapon - as is clear from the context of this interview - was concluded with the reference to the third group. The activities of the mysterious fourth group related to something completely different. The British secret service agent's formulations fit perfectly with the use of anti-gravity, the development of a time machine and tapping the zero-point energy field for unlimited energy production.

It should already have become clear above that the use of the last-mentioned possibility of generating energy, if the technical equipment was not calibrated properly, entailed enormous risks. Just remember the analogy: "There is so much zero-point energy in a coffee cup that it could blow up the earth."

What happened to this technology after the end of World War II?

The British informant only has the following to say about this: "Due to the political decisions, we very quickly lost access to these facilities at the end of the war. I am not sure whether the other side was really able to use the extract of what was still available, ie personnel and material, and actively develop it further. Some of it was too fantastic and required knowledge and skills that required an entry at a level that we did not have at first and that our partners probably did not reach on their own."

In plain language, this means nothing other than that the Germans were able to bring this type of high technology to safety from the Anglo-Americans as well as the Russians! Whether this was done by destruction or evacuation remains to be clarified.

Conclusion: The most secret and at the same time most revolutionary weapons of the German Empire were those that were created with the project Die Glocke related basic research.

Igor Witkowski's research had shown that the relevant hardware, along with the technical documentation, had been flown to Norway in the last days of the war from a six-engine wide-body transport aircraft, the only Ju 390 in use. According to official information, this Ju 390 has remained missing since then.

It was Igor Witkowski who was able to find out the fate of this aircraft. A source who had always been reliable up to that point assured him that an acquaintance, the son of a Polish diplomat, had shown him a photo of the Ju 390. The informant's father had been employed in his country's diplomatic service in Uruguay during the war. The photo shows the Ju 390 on a runway cut into the jungle in the border region between Uruguay and Argentina. (27)

This would mean that in the post-war period, the Third Power had unrestricted access to the high technology associated with Project The Bell in its South American refuge and could also develop it further in due course.

The aim of these developments had to be to develop a manned version of the Anti-gravity aircraft. By 1948 at the latest, the Third Power had begun to put this plan into action in the Centro Atomico on the island of Huemul, which was said to have been "built just for the Germans". The official research focus on plasma physics, which was set up there in connection with the well-known work of the physicist Ronald Richter, seems to be sufficient evidence for this. The alleged aim of developing fusion technology was merely a pretext for this, or at best a waste product. The direct extraction of energy from the zero-point energy field, on the other hand, opened up completely different possibilities. In 1951, the efforts of German scientists to develop a functioning, manned anti-gravity aircraft were apparently successful. A source, which will be discussed in more detail in Chapter 6, states: "In 1951 we traveled all seas and countries on board a machine that could practically never run out of fuel.

... The ship (airship; the author) worked completely silently, except for a slight humming noise." (17, 59) There is only one energy that is practically "infinite," and that is the universal zero-point energy field.

And hadn't Schauberger already claimed that he had succeeded in developing an aircraft that made no noise at all, and hadn't the characteristic noise in the vicinity of the bell been compared to the humming of a beehive? The chain of evidence seems to be complete.

The next chapter will show how certain post-war developments of the Third Power caused a worldwide sensation as the so-called UFO phenomenon and what implications this has for the future of this planet.

Before doing so, however, we must first examine the question of whether a resistance organisation could not have been established in the territory of occupied Germany immediately after the end of the war, with the aim of revising the developments associated with the outcome of the war.

On May 8, 1945, the German Wehrmacht capitulated. The last Reich government was arrested by the Allies on May 23. The victorious powers divided Germany into occupation zones; large parts of the German East came under Soviet and Polish administration. The drama of expulsion continued. Under these circumstances, apart from isolated so-called Werewolf operations, all organized resistance came to a standstill.

The organization, which is referred to in this book as the Third Power, had retreated to its refuge across the Atlantic as part of the secession movement. There, a new concept for regaining the lost power was developed, which from the outset took into account a very long time horizon for its implementation.

Initially, however, important circles of the SS underground that remained in Germany still seemed to be under the illusion that they could change the real existing balance of power in occupied Germany in just a few years.

possibly to counteract the group operating from overseas. Both movements shared the same goal, and it is to be assumed that there was not only loose contact between them, but that the actions of one group were not carried out without the knowledge and assistance of the other group. Or to put it more bluntly: the SS underground on the territory of occupied Germany was for some time the front organization of the Third Power.

In the first years after the end of the war until the founding of the Federal Republic of Germany in 1949, this SS underground operated under the name Aktion Deutschland, apparently divided into two organisational networks, called South Germany and North Germany. The US secret service CIC (Counter Intelligence Corps) observed these structures and attempted to break them down in three major operations called Nursery, Gopher and Selected Board.

to infiltrate.

The agent Hubert D. Ludwell was successfully infiltrated into the South German network . A report written by him states: »... wanted to unite former SS leaders and Wehrmacht officers in an underground movement. Only the most reliable and best-trained people are members of the general SS underground movement ... The general SS, the undisputed elite organization of the Hitler era, leads the movement; the Waffen-SS, which was founded later, is to be viewed with suspicion ... The SS organization will combine with the best material from the SA, the Hitler Youth and the NSDAP and will be unbeatable ... The underground movement is in the process of organizing itself very well and has bases in all important German cities that are disguised as companies (see also the plans for the Maison Rouge conference; the author) ... They are observing the misunderstandings between the USSR and the Western Allies with great interest and, should a conflict arise between the two, they will throw their weight and power onto the side of those they consider to be the winning side. In this way it will turn out that one part of the underground movement is playing ball with the USSR and the other with the Western Allies. He could not say clearly enough that this movement is deadly dangerous and is not interested in small local uprisings, but wants and will soon spread to cover the greater part of Europe. One of the leaders of the underground movement was Helmut Friedrichs. He was an SS-Oberführer and head of the political department of the Chancellery of the NSDAP. In this function he was Martin Bormann's direct subordinate!

The credo of the SS underground movement was expressed in the words: "What happened is what happened. We lost the second round, but there is never a second without a third. Sooner or later the last round will begin, but we have time, lots of time."

By the end of 1946, the SS underground in the English and American zones already had over 600 men, mostly SS leaders and Wehrmacht officers. (3)

The SS officer Otto Skorzeny, who escaped from Allied custody in 1948, also appears to have become an important figure in the movement. He had made a name for himself during the war as the leader of commando operations and in particular as a "liberator of Mussolini". After his escape, he lived in Spain and was able to build up a network abroad from there. This is how he maintained contact with Hans-Ulrich Rudel. The latter and his role within the Third Power are discussed in the 5th volume.

Chapter still to be reported.

In 1951, Skorzeny offered what he called his neo-Nazi movement to an employee of the US embassy in Madrid, whom he mistakenly believed to be a CIA man, to fight against the USSR. (3)

In the end, the expected "hot" conflict between the victorious powers did not take place. The escalation of the contradictions between East and West, which the SS underground in Germany had pinned its hopes on, led to a war, and turned into a 40-year period of stagnation, also known as the "Cold War." As a result, two German states were formed. Living conditions normalized, and the majority of Germans in the West accepted the rebirth of parliamentarism as a form of government. For the SS underground,

Machine Translated by Google

The underground had to adapt it, tactically to these changed political conditions.

The attempt by the nationalist right to establish itself in the parliamentary system was made in two different ways.

One path, the founding of a new party with goals similar to those of the NSDAP, the Socialist Reich Party (SRP), in 1949 was, with few exceptions, mainly pursued by lower and middle-ranking former functionaries of the NSDAP. The party even achieved a respectable success in the Lower Saxony state elections in May 1951. It won eleven percent of the vote. Alarmed, the bourgeois parties reacted by initiating ban proceedings. On 23, 1952, the Federal Constitutional Court declared the SRP unconstitutional. The party was then dissolved, its assets confiscated, and the formation of replacement organizations was prohibited. The mandates won through democratic means expired without replacement. (60) October A direct connection to the SS underground seems at least questionable, since with the exception of, for example, the former State Secretary in the Reich Ministry of the Interior, SS Group Leader Stuckart, only a few higher SS ranks were active in this party. (61)

The situation is completely different when it comes to attempts to first infiltrate and then take over an existing bourgeois party. The victim that was chosen for this was the FDP. The starting point of the infiltration was the North Rhine-Westphalia regional association, whose chairman Middelhauve managed to create a solid structure of former National Socialists, mostly from the younger generation and the middle management level. The aim was to use the FDP as a gathering point for a new right-wing nationalist party aimed at mass support. The focus here was the former State Secretary in the Reich Propaganda Ministry, the SS leader Werner Naumann, who had gathered around himself a circle of like-minded former National Socialist student and Hitler Youth leaders as well as several Gauleiters. The connection to Naumann on behalf of the Düsseldorf FDP had been made by the renowned lawyer Ernst Achenbach as early as 1950. Naumann noted the following suggestion offered by Achenbach in his diary: »In order to enable the National Socialists to influence political events under these circumstances, they should join the FDP, infiltrate it and take over its leadership.

He used individual examples to explain how easy it would be to do that. With just 200 members we can inherit the entire state executive committee. He wants to hire me as general secretary or something similar.« Since then, the influence of former National Socialists in the North Rhine-Westphalian regional association has steadily increased. The masterminds of the campaign included the regional manager Wilke, former editor-in-chief of the Hitler Youth newspaper Wille und Macht, the member of the Reich Youth Leadership, SS-Obersturmführer Zoglmann, the head of the broadcasting department in the Propaganda Ministry Diewerge, the well-known Nazi radio journalist Hans Fritzsche, the head of organization and personnel at the Gestapo Werner Best, the Reich Student Leader Gustav Scheel, the Gauleiter of Hamburg Karl Kaufmann and the brigade leader in the economic and administrative main office of the SS, Paul Zimmermann.

The decisive decision was to be made at the FDP federal party conference in 1952 with the adoption of the "German Program" drawn up by the group around Middelhauve. However, the right and liberal wings of the FDP were still equally strong, so that the profound contradictions were ultimately covered up by formal compromises. At least the right wing was able to score points with the election of Middelhauve as deputy party chairman.

The Swiss journalist Fritz Rene Allemann summed up the results of the party conference with the following words: "The right wing, numerically a minority, was able to easily overcome the old liberals and push them against the wall thanks to the dynamism and recklessness of its leadership. ... What took place there was nothing other than a 'cold' takeover of power, not by any neo-Nazis, but by the old National Socialist team." The way to a parliamentary renaissance of National Socialism by the former SS underground seemed to have been paved.

And then - at five minutes to midnight, so to speak - something happened that the West German public had not expected at all.
Three and a half years after the founding of the Federal Republic on 15 and 16
On 1 January 1953, the Allied occupying powers made spectacular use of their right to reserve the right to intervene, which is still enshrined in the UN enemy state clauses, and arrested the eight leading members of the so-called "Naumann Circle". (61)

Machine Translated by Google

The attempt to take power through parliamentary means had thus definitively failed. From then on, the initiative fell solely to the Third Power groups active overseas.

CHAPTER 3

THE EVOLUTION OF THE UFO PHENOMENON

The beginning of the so-called UFO phenomenon is generally dated to June 24, 1947. On that day, the US Air Force was reported 20 sightings of flying objects that the witnesses could not explain. Therefore, these objects were subsequently called Unidentified Flying Objects, or UFOs for short. The only sighting reported in the press on that day was that of private pilot Kenneth Arnold. He described semi-circular discs that "moved like flying saucers." UFOs and "flying saucers" have been part of the conversation ever since.

together.

As shown in the second chapter of this book, the UFO phenomenon is older and dates back to at least the last months of 1944. The "fireballs" sighted by the Allied aircraft crews undoubtedly marked the beginning. The Germans continued scientific experiments with these unmanned anti-gravity aircraft until the last days of the war. In addition, there were test flights of flying discs with conventional engines, such as those designed by Habermohl and Miethe. According to an eyewitness report, on April 24, 1945, a squadron of four such flying discs of the V-7 type took off from Berlin to an unknown destination. For a long time, this was the last information that was released about the German flying discs. It almost seemed as if the end of the Second World War had also brought an end to their short-lived existence. As it turned out, however, the calm that had set in was deceptive.

Exactly one year to the day after the illegal arrest of the last Reich government under Grand Admiral Dönitz, on May 23, 1946, the flying objects of supposedly unknown origin returned. As if their reappearance was part of the plan, they crossed European airspace for the first time again on this memorable anniversary. The first reports were made from Finland and Sweden (Figure 16). The sighting reports subsequently concentrated on Scandinavia. Over 300 flights were recorded in Norway, Sweden and Finland. It quickly became clear that the flying objects could not be - as initially suspected - V-1 and V-2 rockets tested by the Russians. The observed flight distances of over 1000 kilometers, their flat flight paths and, in some cases, their circular flight movements spoke against this.

Two different types of these unidentified flying objects appeared to be in the air. One was those that matched the descriptions of "fireballs" and the other was described as massive "cylinders." (27)

Below are a few examples of what is known about Scandinavia was observed:

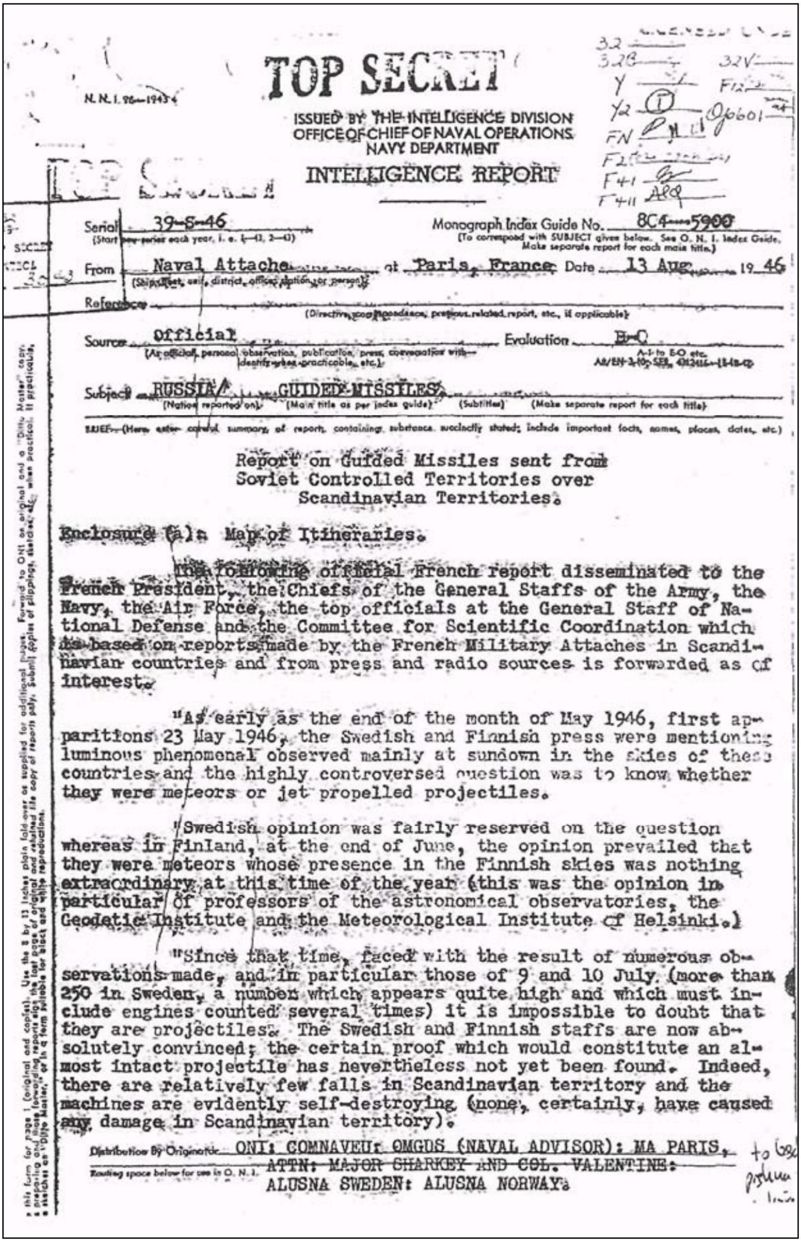
On June 9, 1946, many eyewitnesses saw a rocket-like projectile, which emitted a bright light and left a trail of smoke behind it.

The following day, it was a glowing body surrounded by a brightly glowing cloud. The object, coming from the Baltic Sea, made a turn and flew back again - according to eyewitnesses.

On July 9 and 10, there were mass sightings. On these two days, more than 250 sightings were recorded in Sweden alone. The majority of these were probably repeated sightings of a few objects. On July 10, Swedish newspapers reported that spherical, blue-green, glowing objects with an exhaust flame of the same color had appeared all over Sweden.

On August 11, the New York Times published a report by an astronomer and meteorologist who had observed a flying object traveling at enormous speed. The aircraft was at least 30 meters long, looked torpedo-shaped and had a metallic sheen. (17)

Due to the great stir that these reports from Scandinavia had caused throughout the world, and in order to avoid public unrest over the unknown origin of the phenomenon, the Swedish military decided on July 27th not to disclose any more sighting locations to the press. The Norwegians began censoring news two days later. On August 22nd, the British newspaper Christian Science Monitor reported that not only the sighting locations,



TOP SECRET

N. N. I. 96—1943

ISSUED BY THE INTELLIGENCE DIVISION
OFFICE OF CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS
NAVY DEPARTMENT

INTELLIGENCE REPORT

32
32B
32V
Y
F12
Y2 ①
06601
FN
F2
F41
F411 AQ

Serial 39-S-46 (Start new series each year, i. e. 1—43, 2—43)

Monograph Index Guide No. 8C4—5900 (To correspond with SUBJECT given below. See O. N. I. Index Guide. Make separate report for each main title.)

From Naval Attache (Ship, fleet, unit, district, office, station, or person) at Paris, France Date 13 Aug. 19 46

Reference (Directive, correspondence, previous related report, etc., if applicable)

Source Official (An official, personal observation, publication, press, conversation with— identify when practicable, etc.) Evaluation B-C (A-1 to E-O etc.)

Subject RUSSIA/ GUIDED MISSILES (Nation reported on) (Main title as per index guide) (Subtitles) (Make separate report for each title)

BRIEF—(Here enter careful summary of report, containing substance succinctly stated; include important facts, names, places, dates, etc.)

Report on Guided Missiles sent from Soviet Controlled Territories over Scandinavian Territories.

Enclosure (A): Map of Itineraries.

The following official French report disseminated to the French President, the Chiefs of the General Staffs of the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, the top officials at the General Staff of National Defense and the Committee for Scientific Coordination which is based on reports made by the French Military Attaches in Scandinavian countries and from press and radio sources is forwarded as of interest.

"As early as the end of the month of May 1946, first apparitions 23 May 1946, the Swedish and Finnish press were mentioning luminous phenomenal observed mainly at sundown in the skies of these countries and the highly controversed question was to know whether they were meteors or jet propelled projectiles.

"Swedish opinion was fairly reserved on the question whereas in Finland, at the end of June, the opinion prevailed that they were meteors whose presence in the Finnish skies was nothing extraordinary at this time of the year (this was the opinion in particular of professors of the astronomical observatories, the Geodetic Institute and the Meteorological Institute of Helsinki.)

"Since that time, faced with the result of numerous observations made, and in particular those of 9 and 10 July (more than 250 in Sweden, a number which appears quite high and which must include engines counted several times) it is impossible to doubt that they are projectiles. The Swedish and Finnish staffs are now absolutely convinced; the certain proof which would constitute an almost intact projectile has nevertheless not yet been found. Indeed, there are relatively few falls in Scandinavian territory and the machines are evidently self-destroying (none, certainly, have caused any damage in Scandinavian territory).

Distribution By Originator ONI: COMNAVEU: OMGUS (NAVAL ADVISOR): MA PARIS, ~~ATTN: MAJOR SHARKEY AND COL. VALENTINE:~~ ALUSNA SWEDEN: ALUSNA NORWAY.

Routing space below for use in O. N. I.

to be posted this form for page 1 (original and copies). Use the 8 by 13 inches plain fold-over as supplied for additional pages. Forward to ONI an original and a "Ditto Master" copy.

preparing and those forwarding reports sign the last page of original and retained file copy of reports only. Submit copies of clippings, sketches, etc. when practical. If practicable, sketches on "Ditto Master," or in a form suitable for black and white reproductions.

Abb. 16

but also the reports themselves are subject to strict secrecy.

As if the unidentified flying objects were reacting to this, they moved their locations to other parts of Europe. At the beginning of September 1946, the New York Times reported sightings of "unidentified rockets" over Greece. Brightly glowing flying objects also appeared over France, Portugal and North Africa in the same month. In the period from September 22 to 24, they were seen over numerous cities in Italy. (17)

After that, the skies over Europe became calm again. Just as suddenly as the new, unknown phenomenon had appeared in the sky, it disappeared again. Until - yes, until it appeared again in the sky, this time over North America, on June 24, 1947, with unprecedented power. Its appearance was now intercontinental. And since that day, the UFO phenomenon has not left the earth.

»On July 4, 1947, silvery, disc-like disks were observed in the sky in broad daylight. In Portland, Oregon, there were five disks that were seen rising and falling, circling and flying back and forth at noon by dozens of citizens and police officers. In Hauser Lake, Idaho, there were at least 200 eyewitnesses who saw a disc that evening that maneuvered in the sky for about 30 minutes and finally disappeared vertically upwards.

In Twin Falls, Idaho, about 60 people saw three groups of more than 35 disks each flying in a V formation. So these were not just isolated sightings. In total, from June to July 30, 1947, 850 UFO sightings were reported in the United States alone. ... The reports of July 4, 1947 came from police officers, vacationers, pilots, farmers, scientists, housewives, bus drivers and others.

At that time, no one was afraid of making themselves look ridiculous by reporting it, but they were still afraid of the phenomenon. No opinions, no concept and no policy had yet been developed on the phenomenon. The newspapers reported more objectively than they would ever do again later, without prejudice against the witnesses and without ridiculing them; they were still genuinely interested in the matter at that time.

The wave of reports continued to increase on July 5 and 6, reaching its peak on July 7, 1947. There were 162 sightings in 37 states. Two-thirds of the sightings were made during the day.

The number of witnesses was around 500. ... At that time, in July 1947, UFO reports also came from Australia, South Africa, Ireland, Norway, Italy, France, Hungary, Belgium and England. In San Juan, Puerto Rico, four glowing disks were seen on July 8. On July 10, newspapers in Rio de Janeiro reported sightings from Brazil. But UFOs also appeared in Guatemala, Chile, Argentina and Uruguay in July. Between July 12 and 14, the greatest concentration of sightings was in the Santiago-Buenos Aires area.

The Air Force investigations were conducted by the Air Material Command (AMC) at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio. By the end of July 1947, the Air Force had collected 156 reports, mostly from pilots, and the AMC was beginning to be overwhelmed with the investigations. The commander of the AMC, General Nathan F. Twining, suggested giving the flying saucer investigation a code name and a secret classification..." (62)

In this letter dated September 23, 1947, addressed to Brigadier General George Schulgen, the head of the Air Intelligence Requirements Division at the Pentagon, General Twining also reported the US military's knowledge of UFOs at the time. The report shows that, contrary to all later claims intended to conceal the phenomenon, the US military leadership did indeed believe that UFOs really existed. Below are some excerpts from this extremely remarkable information letter:

1. "At the request of AC/AS-2, the following is this command's assessment of the so-called flying saucers.
   This view is based on information from interrogation records provided by AC/AS-2 and on preliminary studies by Division T-2 and the Aircraft Laboratory, Engineering Division T-3. This view is the result of a conference of representatives of the Air Institute of Technology, Intelligence T-2, the Office, Chief Engineering Division , and the Aircraft, Power Plant and Propeller Laboratories of Engineering Division T-3.

2. It is our view that:
   a. the reported phenomenon is real and not invented or imagined. b. there are objects that are in the shape of a discus disk come close and are of such considerable size that they appear as large as a man-made aircraft. c. there is a possibility that some of the occurrences were caused by natural phenomena such as meteors. d. the described flight characteristics, such as extreme rates of climb, maneuverability (particularly when turning), and evasive behavior when sighted or when peaceful contact is attempted by aircraft or radar stations, give reason to believe that some of the objects are manually guided, automatically or remotely controlled. e. the objects are commonly described as having: (1) Metallic or weakly reflective surface.

(2) Absence of a condensate trail, except in a few cases where the object was apparently operating at high power.

(3) Round or elliptical shape, flat bottom and dome-shaped bottom.

(4) Several reports speak of exact formation flights of three to nine objects.

(5) Normally no noise was heard except in three cases where a loud thunderous roar was noted.

(6) Cruise speeds have typically been estimated at over 550 kilometers per hour. f. it is possible, with the knowledge currently available in the United States, to build, assuming extensive and thorough development work, a manned aircraft corresponding to the general description of the object in paragraph (e) above and capable of achieving a range of approximately 11,000 kilometers at speeds below the speed of sound..." (63)

The Twining Report proves three things:

1. At this time, in the summer and autumn of 1947, the UFO phenomenon in the USA was apparently limited to flying discs of a conventional nature; there was no talk of "fireballs".

2. The flight characteristics described were in line with the official knowledge of the time, although the designers of the UFOs were admittedly somewhat ahead of the times. In no case did far superior extraterrestrial intelligences have to be considered as a possible background to the phenomenon.

3. In a striking way, the descriptions of the disc-shaped flying objects and their technical parameters are similar to those of the German flying disc model V-7 designed by Dr. Richard Miethe (see Chapter 2).

It would be interesting to know what the basis was for Twinings' precise knowledge of the possible range of these flying objects.
Did it perhaps consist of secret knowledge of the true origin of the flying discs? It is more than surprising that a discussion of the possible causes of the UFO phenomenon was omitted from the otherwise detailed report, apart from a brief reference to the possibility of a secret domestic development unknown to the responsible authorities and the general assumption that another country might have a form of atomic propulsion. 11,000 kilometers - isn't that roughly the distance from the middle of the South American continent to North America and back? That would mean that the American military had realized early on who had permitted themselves to demonstrate technical superiority in their own airspace in the previous months. However, admitting this publicly would have meant that the outcome of the 1945 war would have appeared in a different light. As will be shown, everything was done in the years and decades that followed to keep the public in the dark about the actual originators of the UFO phenomenon. A policy of secrecy, combined with an unprecedented disinformation campaign, discredited the witnesses of UFO sightings as cranks, attempted to attribute all the inexplicable sightings to natural phenomena, and, where even these "natural" explanations all too obviously failed, steered the discussion towards alleged extraterrestrial authorship.

Among the press releases of the then

At the time, there were reports that left no doubt about the actual origin of the UFOs. For example, an article appeared in the Denver Post on November 7, 1947, which was intended to be a reproduction of an agent's report.

According to him, German scientists in General Franco's Spain had developed electromagnetic rockets that were responsible for the wave of flying saucer sightings in the summer of that year. (27) A year and a half later, on May 14, 1949, the Washington Daily News reported without the slightest hint of doubt that "the U.S. Air Force knows what is behind the flying saucers and where they come from. ... They are new flying machines that have their base in Spain ... and that have been built by scientists and technicians who fled from Germany." (27)

These American press quotes are not surprising. In the second chapter of this book it was shown that, in addition to Argentina, Spain was the main destination for evacuation transports using high-tech equipment from the Reich. The fact that the further development of German flying saucer technology must have taken place primarily in this country in the first post-war months is also indicated by the waves of sightings in Scandinavia and southern Europe from May to September 1946, which were initially limited to Europe. In August and September 1946, however, the exodus of Germans from Spain to Argentina began (see chapter 2), where research could be continued first in Cordoba and later in the Centro Atomico . In this respect, crucial development work on the German flying saucers may well have taken place in Spain immediately after the end of the Second World War; however, the flight bases of the "flying saucers" that were sighted in the United States in the summer of 1947 were in all probability in Argentina - as indicated by General Twining's distance information. It was certainly not without reason that between 12 and 14 July 1947 there was an increase in sightings of unidentified flying objects in the area between Santiago and Buenos Aires.

In December 1948, the UFOs of the "fireball" type experienced their renaissance. They were now observed by the US military almost daily. The meteorite specialist Dr. Lincoln La Paz, director of the Meteorite Institute, who was entrusted with the investigation of these green glowing and low-flying "fireballs".

at the University of New Mexico, explained that they were not meteors according to the astronomical definition. This explanation caused unrest and nervousness among the military. The reason for this excitement was the target of the intruders. They flew to the top secret installations of the Atomic Energy Commission in Los Alamos, New Mexico, where America's atomic physicists were working on the hydrogen bomb. Security officials observed the intruders there on December 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 13, 14, 20 and 28, 1948, and on December 6.

On January 1, 1949, green glowing fireballs were seen, all of which flew towards Los Alamos and then dissolved in a red-orange flash. In a letter from the Strategic Air Command to the FBI on January 31, 1949, it was pointed out that these objects had not been observed anywhere else between Russia and Los Alamos. Their size was compared to that of a basketball. The flight altitude was between ten and fifteen thousand meters. The speed was estimated at five to 20 kilometers per second. These objects seemed to show no interest in anything other than the United States nuclear weapons facilities. In addition to Los Alamos, they also visited the nuclear facility in Hanford, the super-secret Sandia base near Albuquerque and the nuclear weapons arsenal at Camp Hood. (62)

After further waves of UFO sightings over US territory in the early 1950s, the US military was forced to calm the alarmed public.

In 1952, the US Air Force launched the Blue Book Investigation Project
The purpose of Blue Book was to reassure the public that the phenomenon of flying saucers did not threaten national security and therefore did not require any defensive measures by the Air Force. The order was to keep the percentage of unidentifiable objects as low as possible. It was not until the 1970s that civilian researchers discovered that the best material on UFOs, i.e. the most informative photos, films and reports, were immediately passed on to other intelligence agencies without passing through Blue Book . A similar decree (AFR 200-2) from November 1953 ruled that only false UFO reports or false information could be made known to the public. (62) The aim was therefore by no means an objective investigation of the phenomenon, but rather to conceal the true background.

Machine Translated by Google

The first scientific analysis of the Blue Book material, which for the reasons mentioned above is only of limited significance, was carried out in 1956 by the Battelle Memorial Institute . The study included 2,200 reports collected between June 1, 1947, and December 31, 1952. Of these, according to the material's editors, 434 cases could ultimately be classified as "unknown." Among these, 71 observations were rated as "excellent." If this percentage of 3.2 percent of all object sightings were extrapolated to the approximately 12,000 sightings that the Air Force had in its files on February 15, 1968, one would get the statistically expected number of 360 "excellent" sightings with "unknown." In 1966, astronomy professor J. Allen Hynek, who was involved in the project, announced that between 10 and 20 percent of the collected reports remained unidentified, especially those that came from the best witnesses, such as pilots.

The investigation carried out by the University of Colorado on behalf of the Air Force at the end of August 1966, due to a continuing increase in the number of UFO sightings, came to similar conclusions. Of the 59 cases examined in detail, 33 remained unidentified. (62)

Despite these statistical "anomalies," the impression was created that further investigation of the UFO phenomenon was not necessary, since the majority of observations could have been reasonably explained. And even the unexplained cases had not posed a threat to national security over the past 20 years.

The fact that reality was quite different was demonstrated, among other things, by the targeted targeting of security-relevant facilities by the "fireballs" at the end of 1948 and the beginning of 1949. Irrespective of the public announcements, which were intended to reassure the population, those responsible in the USA were very serious about the phenomenon of UFOs and occasionally expressed their concern about the developments associated with it. On December 2, 1952, Marshall Chadwell, Assistant Director of Scientific Intelligence, sent a secret memorandum to the Director of the CIA, in which he wrote under point four: "...

At present, the reports of the incidents convince us that something is happening that requires our immediate attention ... The observations of unexplained objects at high altitudes and with high

Flight speeds in the vicinity of important US defense facilities are such that they cannot be attributed to natural phenomena or known missile types. (63)

The importance that the subject of "UFOs" was given in the highest US government circles is demonstrated by an internal memorandum of the Canadian Ministry of Transport, sent on November 21, 1950 by Wilbert B. Smith to the head of communications: "... I made discreet inquiries through the staff of the Canadian Embassy in Washington, and they succeeded in obtaining the following information for me:

a. The issue (of UFOs; the author) is the most classified subject in the United States, ranking even higher than the hydrogen bomb. b. There are flying saucers. c. Their functionality is unknown, but a small group under

Under the leadership of Dr. Vannevar Bush, he is making intensive efforts to clarify the matter.
d. The United States authorities attach the utmost importance to the whole matter. (63)

The fact that nothing has changed in the high level of secrecy surrounding the UFO phenomenon until the end of the 1970s and thus basically until today was finally demonstrated by a request submitted by the organization Citizens Against UFO Secrecy (CAUS) in 1979 under the Freedom Of Information Act (FOIA).

»Citing the FOIA, CAUS asked the CIA for information on UFOs. The CIA stated that it had no material. After a court order by Federal Judge Gerhard Gesell, the CIA finally submitted documents, some of which showed that other agencies, including the National Security Agency, also had relevant files. A request to the NSA to inspect these documents was denied.

Despite further legal action, the agency refused to release a single one of the 156 individual documents that were kept under lock and key. CAUS then asked Gesell to request and inspect the documents in person to check whether the NSA was acting lawfully. However, the NSA itself did not accept this offer and instead issued an affidavit on the need to continue to keep these documents confidential.

Machine Translated by Google

In order to be allowed to read this affidavit, Gesell first had to obtain a clearance certificate that allowed him to view documents of the highest secrecy level. After reading the declaration, the judge also felt that no one - not even himself - should be allowed to view the documents in question! ...

This proves at least one thing: the documents in question contain spectacular information. We do not know what kind of information could make this unprecedented level of secrecy necessary. However, the matter must be different from other government secrets." (64)

The spectacular information, which was to be withheld from the American public forever by a Supreme Court decision, would not only have revealed the true background of the UFO phenomenon when it was published, but would also certainly have exposed the conspiratorial machinations of the US government since 1945, which had left no stone unturned in deceiving its population about crucial historical events in recent history.

What could have been the meaning and purpose of all the measures aimed at downplaying and systematically covering up the issue of unidentified flying objects? Perhaps the existence of an extraterrestrial intelligence? If this scenario were to turn out to be true, the existence of such an intelligence, and even the potential intention of these ETs to intervene in the fate of the world, could hardly trigger the civilizational shock feared by some among the population of the Western world. This possibility is too firmly anchored in the public consciousness by a flood of media products - and has been for decades. However, the public admission by the rulers of the "victorious states" of 1945 that May 8, 1945 did not bring about the irrevocable end of National Socialism, but that on the contrary the successor organization of the Third Reich, the Third Power, now holds all military means of power in its hands to be able to bring about a revision of the results of the Second World War at any time would undoubtedly be just as shocking.

And if that were the case, why hasn’t it done so long ago? This is a legitimate question, but the answer to it can only be found in

The context of the otherwise usual power-political thinking cannot be given. The Third Power is not simply concerned with power. More important in terms of its long-term strategy is apparently the focus on certain demographic policy framework conditions.

But more about that in the second part of this chapter.

Up to now, the UFO phenomenon in its various facets has been considered almost exclusively in relation to its effects in the United States of America. This is also because the USA was the undisputed leading power in the Western world in the decades after the Second World War. However, if this were to give the impression that UFO activities were concentrated to a decisive extent on the North American continent, this would be a falsification of the actual situation.

Psychologist Professor David R. Saunders was originally part of the team from Colorado University that was commissioned by the US Air Force to investigate some notable UFO cases in the 1960s. Unhappy with the working conditions, Saunders left the working group and in 1969 began to create his own computer file of UFO reports. Saunders first collected all the reports of UFO sightings that were available to him from all over the world. Since some cases were entered more than once because they came from different sources, his collection initially comprised 59,237 cases. Cleaning up the data finally produced 18,122 cases that were usable for scientific analysis. By 1980, more than 100,000 individual entries had been registered in the UFOCAT computer file. If the entries cited in several sources but concerning the same cases were collected as individual cases, the total number of cases in 1980 was 62,155 from 280 nations, states and provinces. (62) This should make it clear that the UFO phenomenon is not subject to regional restrictions. It manifests itself worldwide!

And Saunders' analyses had revealed something else. In contrast to the initially observed characteristic flight characteristics of the disk-shaped flying objects, as recorded in the Twining Report (not to be confused with the "fireballs"), the reports from later years proved that a technical and technological evolution of the UFO phenomenon had taken place. This development went far beyond the first UFO types, which could most easily be compared with Miethe's V-7.

Machine Translated by Google

Below you will find some of the new, sometimes revolutionary Characteristics of these advanced UFOs are listed:

They maneuver in the atmosphere at any speed without creating a sonic boom; They appear to be immune to gravity and inertia; They are surrounded by a self-luminous halo at night and change the color of the light envelope (mostly when accelerating); Their fields or radiation damage the environment and eyewitnesses (burns, paralysis, nausea, blindness, headaches, etc.); They leave marks and burns on the ground; They stop gasoline engines and interrupt all kinds of electrical circuits; Enormous magnetic fields have been recorded in their surroundings; They emit so-called "solid lights," which are luminous, radiant zones that have a finite length, can bend, and only appear at a certain distance from the objects; They cannot dissolve into nothing; The temperature in their surroundings occasionally drops significantly. (62)

"Doesn't some of the properties described immediately remind one of the effects that were recorded in the context of the Die Glocke project or were reported in connection with the first sightings of the "fireballs"?

The chairman of MUFON-CES, Illobrand von Ludwiger, confirms that this appearance is not deceptive in his assessment of the UFO phenomenon. In the organization led by von Ludwiger, scientists and engineers in German-speaking countries work together in an interdisciplinary manner to research UFOs using scientific methods.

Illobrand von Ludwiger comes to the following conclusion: »Therefore, only very general conclusions can be drawn from the overall picture of all phenomena.
However, these should already be sufficient to provide initial qualitative approaches for to understand the propulsion mechanism. We make two assumptions: A. Gravitational waves are generated by strong variable magnetic fields.

B. Through an unknown physical process (perhaps by conversion of electromagnetic radiation or by splitting off certain elements), gravitational waves are generated, which in turn induce strong variable magnetic fields. (62)

Even though von Ludwiger apparently had no knowledge of the existence of the zero-point energy field at the time he wrote these lines, or did not consider it to be scientifically relevant, he was undoubtedly on the right track.

The Third Power had actually succeeded in transferring the principle, which until the end of the Second World War had only manifested itself in "fireballs," to structurally solid bodies. In the previous chapter, a source was cited which gives rise to the assumption that the first manned anti-gravity aircraft flew by 1951 at the latest.

At the beginning of the 1980s, other UFO shapes were increasingly observed alongside disc-shaped flying objects and "fireballs." The UFOs that attracted the most attention were those described as giant "triangles." Some observers also called them "boomerangs." The characteristic flight characteristics of these "triangles" indicate that they have anti-gravity engines just like other modern UFO types.

The first major wave of sightings occurred in 1983 and 1984 in the Hudson Valley, New York State. (65) At the end of the 1980s and the beginning of the 1990s, a series of spectacular sightings occurred over Belgium. Several thousand people claimed to have seen the huge "triangles" in the sky. Among these reports were more than 900 in which the objects were less than 300 meters away. At first, American secret aircraft were believed to be responsible, but this suspicion was dropped after the events of the night of March 30-31, 1990:

»After the gendarmerie near Brussels in the night of 30-31.

After receiving several calls from witnesses on March 14 who had seen lights in a triangular formation, the Air Force

Headquarters to send interceptors to identify the objects. The Glons radar station, a NATO facility, and the military and civil air traffic control station at Semerzake near Brussels had already registered unidentified objects that were flying slowly and frequently changing course and altitude. At 0.05 on March 31, 1990, two F-16 fighters took off. They each detected an object with their ground radar at 0.36. They then set a marker on their device to the target and switched the automatic target tracking device of the on-board weapon system to the target (lock-on), which took about six seconds.

The unknown object, which had previously been flying at 280 km/h and was at an altitude of about 3000 meters, suddenly accelerated to 1800 km/h and sank to an altitude of 1700 meters within one second, which corresponds to an acceleration of 43 g. (A pilot is generally only able to withstand 8 g without losing consciousness!; the author)

The unknown object continued its flight at an altitude of less than 200 meters, where it could no longer be detected by radar devices.
The observers on the ground estimated its speed at 40 km/h. It looked like a sphere divided by two large, sharply curved wings (hence the comparison with a boomerang, the author). 18 police officers and the radar operators watched as the object rose higher again. Again it was followed by the F-16 fighters. The pilots switched to lock-on again and again the object dived to less than 200 meters. The game was repeated a third time over the course of 75 minutes. At no time was a sonic boom heard."

Referring to the events of that night, the Chief of Staff of the Belgian Air Force, Colonel de Brouwer, told the press on 22 June 1990: "Our defence system (that of NATO; the author) is powerless against these machines." (62) This first official admission by a leading military officer, who publicly acknowledged his inferiority to the unidentified power, also gave rise to a resolution to create a European centre for UFO observation. This proposal, submitted to the European Parliament at the suggestion of the MEP and Minister of Culture of Wallonia, M. Di Rupo, was, however, rejected by the majority of the Socialist members of the European Parliament. (66)

The fact, which may be surprising to some, that the unidentifiable "triangles" and "boomerangs" that have been sighted appear to be further developments of aircraft types constructed by the brothers Reimar and Walter Horten in the Third Reich and since 1948 in Argentina, can be seen as an additional strong indication of the involvement of the Third Power in the UFO phenomenon.

The Horten brothers were the real pioneers in the development of so-called flying wing aircraft, which were also known as tailless aircraft. They began their development work by constructing tailless motor gliders such as the Ho III (Figure 17). In January 1945, the first prototype of the Ho 229 flew. Powered by two jet turbines, this machine reached a speed of 800 km/h and would have been superior to all enemy aircraft types (Figure 18). At that time, plans were in the drawer for a further development, the prototype of which was to be ready for use in 1946 and reach a speed of 1100 km/h. (10) However, the end of the war intervened, and like so many others, Reimar and Walter Horten emigrated to Argentina in 1948. There they continued their development work and designed, among other things, an aircraft type in the shape of an elongated triangle with a surface area of 48 square meters (Figure 19). It was given the designation I.Ae.37. After several stages of development, a triangular-shaped aircraft was finally created that was capable of reaching supersonic speeds. Strangely, nothing more was later known about the progress of work on this aircraft type. (27)

It was not until many years later, in the 1980s, that the flying wing aircraft developed by the Horten brothers reappeared in the skies, but this time equipped with a propulsion technology that was many years ahead of the developments of the military superpowers USA and the Soviet Union.

Finally, let us take a look at the extent to which the presence of UFOs has since assumed its present form. This is at least partly provided by the USA's NORAD radar early warning system. The National Track Reporting System (NUTR) records the tracks of such unidentified flying objects. Between 1971 and 1991, around 7,000 such unidentified targets were registered between the North American continent and the British Isles alone. (66) The number worldwide could therefore be several orders of magnitude higher.

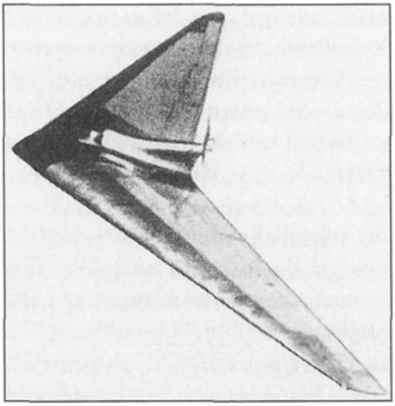

Abb. 17: Die You III

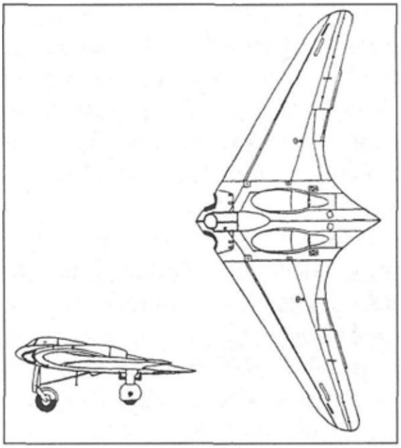

Fig. 18: The Go 229 flying wing

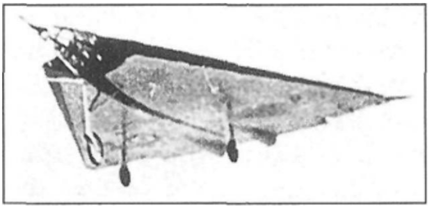

Fig. 19: Härten's Argentine I.Ae.37

It remains for future research to find out whether such phenomena, which are regarded by some as aspects of the UFO phenomenon, such as animal mutilations and the strange patterns (»crop circles«) that have appeared in the fields of many countries, are connected with the activities of the Third Power.

To assume a connection between these phenomena does not seem particularly far-fetched.

For the sake of clarity, two more photos of UFOs will be included in this book.

Both are photographs that have been examined by scientists using modern methods of image analysis. The results of these analyses, which confirm their authenticity, have remained unchallenged by experts to this day.

Figure 20 and Figure 21 (enlarged detail showing edge blurring of air scintillation, typical of objects photographed at great distances): McMinnville, Oregon, May 11, 1950

out of 19:30; Witnesses: Mr and Mrs Trent (two photos); Object shape: disk with tower top; Diameter: around 14 meters; Distance: 500 meters; Photo analyses: Prof. B. Hartmann 1968, WH Spaulding 1978, B. Maccabees 1988.

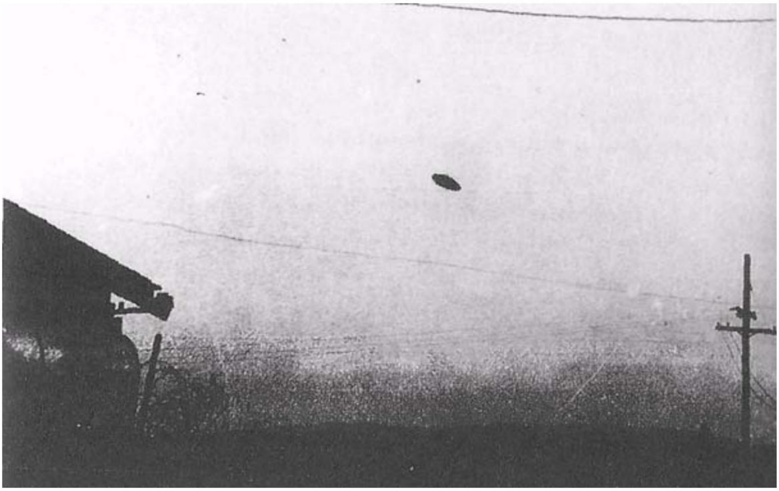

Abb. 20

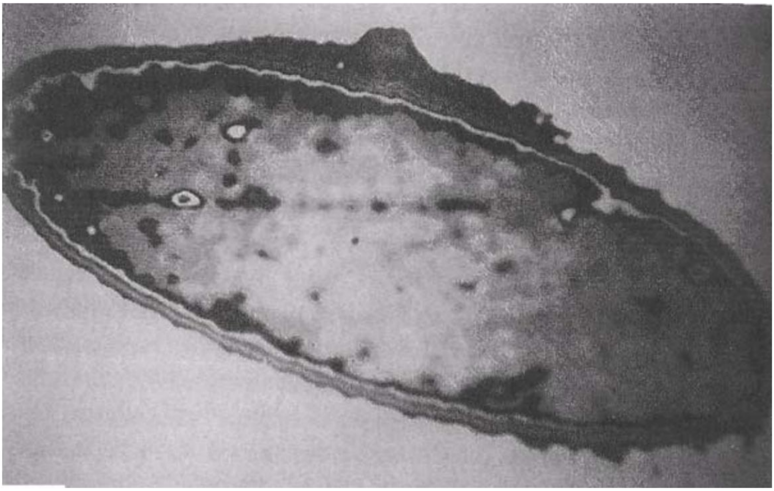

Abb. 21

Figure 22: Vancouver Island, British Columbia, photo taken on October 8, 1981, 11:00 a.m.; object shape: disc with an angular diameter of 1.3 degrees; distance: greater than ten meters; photo analysis: Dr.
R. F. Haines 1987. (62)

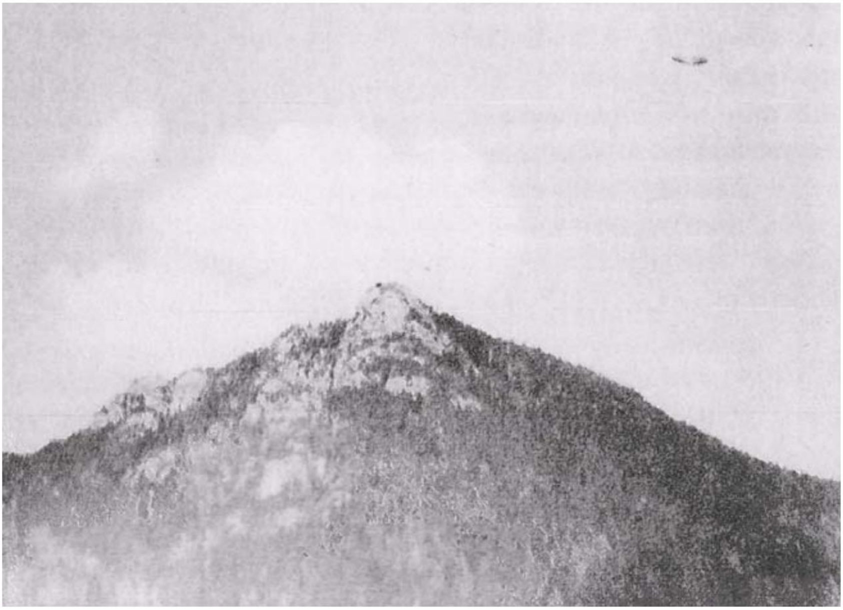

Abb. 22

As has been shown, there has been a technical evolution of the UFO phenomenon since the first appearance of these unidentifiable flying objects in the 1940s.

A remarkable development has also taken place with regard to those reports that give us information about the crews of the UFOs, their appearance and their behavior.

The first reports date back to the 1950s. The witnesses to these observations were called "contactees." The US authorities received unexpected support from these people when it came to deliberately denigrating the UFO phenomenon, as these people told some of the most unbelievable stories about their encounters with the "extraterrestrial" occupants of the craft. When it was later possible to find some of the alleged

By convicting eyewitnesses of deliberate lies, not only were all other "contactees" discredited, but the UFO phenomenon as such had also suffered serious damage in the eyes of the public.

Was this blanket condemnation of the "contactees" justified? Given the large number of sightings of unknown flying objects that were apparently controlled by intelligent beings, it was highly probable that contact with their crews would have occurred at some point. The only question was when and under what circumstances; was it pure coincidence or deliberately brought about by the occupants of the UFOs?

What should have given pause to those who condemned the "contactees" as lunatics was the common basis of most of the reports. This was expressed in a number of consistent details:

- The visitors explained that they came from various planets in our solar system or from distant planetary systems; they wanted to share their knowledge of the universe with us; their intention was to protect
- us from ourselves, but especially to prevent a nuclear war; they took the "contactees"
- with them on trips through the solar system in their flying saucers; in contrast to the encounters in the following decades, there were no negative
- experiences with the "extraterrestrials", the "Venusians" or "Martians", so that they were also referred to as "space brothers", among other things.

The most astonishing similarity in the reports, however, was in the external appearance of the "extraterrestrials." There was nothing extraterrestrial about them, quite the opposite. They resembled humans completely, seemed to be somewhat taller and were described, both men and women, almost without exception as blond beings of Nordic type. (67)

Since in the 1950s science had already come to the conclusion that human-like life could not possibly exist on Venus or Mars, the

UFO crews deliberately placed the people they contacted in

It almost seems as if they themselves had an interest in keeping their true intentions secret for as long as possible.
This strategy coincided with the strategy of those who knew of the existence of the Third Power and had no interest in revealing its secret. A common denominator was found. This identity of interests continues to this day. One must ask oneself, for how long?

In the 1960s, a development was set in motion that accelerated enormously in the 1980s and 1990s. The contacts between the "witnesses" and the crews of the unidentified flying objects took on a completely different quality. From then on, people no longer spoke of "contactees" but of "abductees." This term comes from the English word "abductions."

The first documented case, which was to be followed by countless others in the decades to come, occurred in the USA in 1961. The mixed-race couple Betty and Barney Hill were involved.

"The Hills said that while they were traveling from Montreal to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, small beings with large heads and eyes abducted them from their car and into a landed UFO. The beings separated them and took them to different rooms where they were subjected to medical examinations. They inserted a needle into Betty's abdomen and explained to her that they were conducting a 'pregnancy test.' They took scrapings of skin from her and performed other tests on her body. A larger being, whom Betty believed to be the leader, communicated with her telepathically.

After medical procedures and other events were completed, the Hills were allowed to leave the object and watch it depart. They immediately forgot what had happened to them, continued their journey, and arrived home about two hours later than planned. All they could remember was seeing a UFO very close by. They had no memory of the abduction at all. For the next few months, they had nightmares about being on board an alien spacecraft. They suffered from constant anxiety related to the UFO sighting. They sought help from psychological counseling.

They were referred to Benjamin Simon, a well-known psychiatrist who specialized in hypnosis. Through regressions (the author) under hypnosis, they were able to remember what had happened that evening. Although John Füller described the episode of the 'pregnancy test' on Betty in his 1966 book Interrupted Journey , he did not mention that the beings had taken a sperm sample from Barney. This was too embarrassing for the Hills and also for Füller in the mid-1960s. He did not include this in his book so as not to distract from the truth of the report. (68)

The Hills' report contains a number of elements that have been reported repeatedly in subsequent kidnapping cases and can therefore be seen as constants. These include:

- the abduction in a UFO, the medical
- examinations, which mostly seem to contain a sexual or genetic component, small, human-like beings with grey skin, large heads and large eyes, telepathic communication between these and
- the abducted, the partial or total blocking of the memory contents, "lost" time - that is, one cannot account for this time, resulting in nightmares
- and other psychological complaints, the later reconstruction of memory contents through hypnotic regression.

While only a few other such abduction cases were reported in the 1960s, their number increased significantly in the 1970s and then increased almost explosively in the 1980s and 1990s. What were initially isolated cases had developed into a worldwide phenomenon. (62, 68)

In later years, those who investigated these abduction cases using scientific methods noted a number of additional specific characteristics that indicate a consistent pattern.

This includes:

- the kidnapping of people from vehicles whose engines and electrical equipment suddenly and without any apparent reason stop working shortly before the abduction; the collection from the home environment, whereby the abducted people are transported through
- walls and closed windows; the transport from the place of abduction to the UFO in a beam of bluish light; the "switching off" of bystanders at the beginning of the abduction, i.e. these people
- are put into a state of physical rigidity that lasts until the end of the abduction and is accompanied by absolute amnesia; various variants of
- psychological influence during the examinations on board the UFOs, including: - intensive staring (staring) from a very short distance, which apparently has the purpose of taking possession of the consciousness of the abducted people by means of hypnosis; - the visualization of certain scenarios in the brains of the people concerned, for example
- the simulation of threat scenarios as a result of environmental destruction or a global war or - and we will talk about this later - the pictorial representation of strange, seemingly extraterrestrial landscapes;

- the appearance of characteristic scars in the form of round or spoon-like depressions or thin, straight, hair-like cuts on certain parts of the body of the abducted; the insertion of implants that apparently serve to locate and monitor the abducted; the artificial insemination of some of the women affected by the abduction phenomenon with a penis-like device, sometimes carried out outside the UFOs, for example in their own bedrooms;

- for other women, the extraction of eggs by means of a »Needle« through the ceiling, whereby in these cases the UFO occupants artificially created embryo some time later in the uterus of the woman; the removal of the apparently
- genetically manipulated Embryos and fetuses weeks and months later; their rearing in hundreds in "incubator batteries"; the induced contact between the "mothers" and their offspring on board the UFOs or elsewhere, the so-called baby presentation; the generation problem - which means that several generations of a family can be affected by the abductions. (68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74)

There is no doubt, as the most important characteristics of the abductions carried out by UFO occupants show, that one of the main aims of this new phenomenon is to attempt to exert biological or, to be more specific, genetic influence on the genetic material of a selected group of people. Reports of alleged genetic manipulation have been increasing since the beginning of the 1980s. The ulterior motives behind these interventions will have to be clarified later. First, however, it is important to ensure that there is actually more to the abductions than a new type of mass delusion, as critics of the phenomenon often claim.

One focus of criticism is the use of hypnosis, which is used to try to activate blocked memory contents. The fact that in around 30 to 40 percent of abduction cases, those affected were able to remember at least some of their experiences without the use of regressive hypnosis techniques makes this form of criticism seem hardly justified. (62) It can be accepted above all in cases where hypnotists without any deeper specialist knowledge provide their patients, who can be described as victims in the truest sense of the word, with "false memories", lead them to so-called dissociative fantasies or "lead" them in an impermissible way during the hypnosis session. (69)

There is no doubt that hypnosis, when used by a competent professional, can break down traumatic memory barriers. "Experiences that are strongly filled with fear and that are repressed without being processed and made cognitively inaccessible so that they do not painfully penetrate consciousness can be brought to light in hypnotic rapport." (62)

Several psychological studies conducted on groups of abductees Tests have also been able to refute another argument against the veracity of the reports: namely, that these could be people with a specific disorder of consciousness. (62)

Finally, in addition to the reports, there is also material evidence that speaks for the reality of the abduction phenomenon. In several cases, it was actually not possible to find people at the time of their alleged abduction. (69, 75) In some cases, the UFOs left landing tracks in the immediate vicinity of the abduction site.

(71) And even the implants inserted by the UFO occupants could be recovered from some abductees based on their reports by medical professionals. (76) The characteristic scars often found on abducted persons have already been mentioned.

In order to determine the extent of UFO abductions, various surveys were carried out in the USA, which essentially reached very similar results. The largest and most representative survey was carried out by the Roper organization in the summer of 1991. A total of 5,947 people were interviewed using a sophisticated system of questions. The final analysis of the survey showed that one million Americans were possibly victims of the abduction phenomenon. (69) This made it possible to statistically confirm what abduction researchers had already independently concluded from the reports of the abductees: that abductions are a mass phenomenon. Or in other words, and with knowledge of the biological component: this is a large-scale genetic experiment.

Before examining its objective in more detail, it is necessary to demonstrate that an explanation of the "technical wonders" observed and described by the abductees is possible without assuming intervention by extraterrestrial intelligences.

How can it be explained that immediately before a kidnapping takes place from a motor vehicle, the engine and electrical equipment fail?

Cases of sudden engine failure in connection with UFO sightings have already been reported in Saunders' UFOCAT data collection.
In 1988, it contained 422 such incidents. In detail, the reports describe that the circuits of the following systems in

Vehicles were influenced by UFOs:

Engine and electrical system Engine	208
only Radio	71
only	69
Engine power only reduces	33
headlights	27
Radio and headlights	14

In 35 percent of all cases, the UFO was less than 30 meters away from the car.

Electromagnetic interactions are mentioned as a possible cause. Experiments have shown that high-frequency magnetic fields can penetrate the hood, which acts as a Faraday cage, and interrupt electrical circuits. (62)

It should come as no surprise that this technology was also mastered by the Germans at an apparently mature stage of development by the end of the Second World War.

The proof of this lies in the Lusty files already cited in Chapter 2 .

It says: "Target:

Daimler-Benz. City: Unter-Türkheim/Stuttgart. Activity: Secret weapon. Recorded: April 25, 1945. Comments: Stops the ignition system of a gasoline engine. The device succeeded in stopping a motor vehicle with magnetic ignition, but not one with battery ignition, at a distance of two to three kilometers." (18)

How can the psychological effects described during the abductions be explained?

These primarily include the "taking possession" of the consciousness of the abducted person through the procedure known in the specialist literature as "staring", the memory Blockade from contents, the visualization scenarios as well as the "switching off" of bystanders.

Nothing is easier than that. Anyone who has ever browsed through the numerous literature on the subject of hypnosis or even

Anyone who has witnessed a hypnosis demonstration will quickly find an answer to this question.

The successful bank robber who, through hypnotic influence, "forces" the bank clerk to hand over the bank's money without resistance (taking possession), as well as the show hypnotist who lets his subjects bite into a lemon with relish (by visualizing an orange, for example), then apparently manages to erase this event from their consciousness (blockade) and is also able to "switch off" several of his victims at once with a snap of his fingers, are no longer isolated phenomena today.

What exactly is hypnosis?

"It must be admitted that a precise definition is still difficult, although its phenomena are now well known. The true nature of hypnosis in the sense of a valid theory is still unknown. It has, however, been established that there is something like a 'half-consciousness' between the waking state and sleep. In this state, the physical functions are reduced, while the mental ones are activated.

The British Medical Association defines hypnosis as follows: Hypnosis is a temporary state of altered attention in the patient, a state in which various phenomena may occur spontaneously or in response to verbal and other stimuli. These phenomena include an alteration of consciousness and memory, increased susceptibility to suggestions, responses and thoughts in the patient which are unfamiliar to him in his usual state of mind. Among other things, phenomena such as anesthesia, paralysis, muscular rigidity and vasomotor changes can be induced and suppressed in the hypnotic state." (77)

The hypnotic state is always triggered by a suggestion.

»The essence of suggestion consists in generating a certain idea in one's own person or in another person's subconscious in some way. This influences his feelings, his judgement and his decisions. The clearer and stronger this idea is generated, the easier it will be for the other person to accept it and the longer its effect will last. If this suggestion is generated in another person, we speak of external suggestion. If we generate this

When we imagine something in ourselves, we speak of autosuggestion. However, in order to be effective, a suggestion from someone else must also be incorporated into our imagination and thus converted into autosuggestion.« (77)

There are mainly three levels of hypnosis depth:

1. Light hypnosis: Here there is a slight state of relaxation, although the consciousness is still fully active. However, simple suggestions are already accepted and carried out.

2. Medium hypnosis: The relaxation has deepened. Consciousness is barely active anymore. All suggestions that do not conflict with the personality structure of the subject are carried out.

3. Deep hypnosis: With absolute relaxation, consciousness is now completely switched off. Illogical suggestions are also carried out. After the hypnosis is lifted, there is no memory left. (77)

What deserves special attention here is the fact that illogical suggestions are also carried out in deep hypnosis. This makes the hypnotists' assurances that hypnosis cannot do everything and that it will ultimately always find its limits in the personality structure of the subject absurd. Ultimately, hypnosis can be used to create a relationship of total dependency, such as that which appears to exist between the UFO occupants and some of their abduction victims.

The method described in abduction literature as "staring," i.e. staring into the eyes from a distance of just a few centimeters, is not that unusual and has its equivalent in clinical hypnosis. There it is described as a method of fascination:

"The hypnotist now sits at the head of the subject, who is lying comfortably and as straight as possible on a couch. He leans over so that his eyes are about 20 to 30 centimeters above the subject's eyes." (77)

As has been shown, it seems to be an incontrovertible fact that during UFO abductions hypnosis is used to a previously unimagined extent in order to achieve a number of completely different like effects. Of particular importance in this scenario is the transmission of post-hypnotic commands.

> »Posthypnosis is a suggestion that is given during hypnosis, but with the instruction to only carry it out at a later, precisely predetermined time. The execution of a posthypnotic instruction therefore takes place - or so it seems - in the normal waking state. In this case, certain ideas are initially stored without any particular reaction and are activated at the predetermined time - even if the subject knows that it is a hypnotic command, he will follow this command..." (77)

...,

This is the only way to explain, for example, why women who have become artificially pregnant in the manner described above often do not appear to go to a doctor to have their pregnancy confirmed. The post-hypnotic command prevents them from doing so and at the same time serves to protect the genetically modified fetus.

The crucial question in this context, however, is to what extent far-reaching implications for the future can be derived from this post-hypnotic transmission of commands. Do the many people who have been abducted in the past perhaps carry a behavioral pattern in their subconscious that is currently "blocked" but can be activated at some point in the future by a post-hypnotic command? This possibility will be discussed in more detail later with a view to the final goals of the Third Power.

How can the alleged telepathic transmission of information be explained?

The answer to this question is much more prosaic than one might initially assume, and has nothing to do with magic or supernatural powers. As is well known, the brain operates with electricity. It has a weak electromagnetic field and emits very weak electrical impulses. These move in a frequency range of one to thirty hertz. Advanced technology should therefore be able to use sensitive

Machine Translated by Google

Low frequency transmitters to transmit mental and physical functions. (78)

A report for the US Air Force Scientific Advisory Board, which is concerned with warfare over the next 50 years, predicts exactly this: "Electromagnetic energy in pulsed, focused and shaped form can be coupled to the human body in such a way that one can control muscle movements, control emotions, induce sleep, transmit instructions and interact with short- and long-term memory. Furthermore, a set of experiences can be created or erased." (76) It is certainly reasonable to assume that the Third Power also researched and put this technology into practice much earlier.

How can we explain the transport of abducted people through walls and closed windows?

This truly amazing ability of UFO crews has no magical background. It is related to the method of transport from the abduction site to the UFO. Transport usually takes place through the air in a beam of bluish light.

»At the beginning of the nightly abductions, the creatures come through a light source coming from the window into the room.« (68)

»There is a light coming from below the ship, and we stand in the light (in which they float upwards). And we are in the ship!« (79)

"I left my body... I took the form of light... The form I took had colors... orange, yellow and a blurred color. I think it was indigo, a bluish color." (79)

"I don't know where Bob is or ... ..., the place is bluish ..., turns lavender blue (my) whole body seems to turn to light." (79)

»The color of the light rays changed from a bright red to a bright whitish blue that emerged from the bottom of the oval object (the UFO; the author). This object moved away from the building and then descended to the window of an apartment. I called to my colleague who was sitting next to me at the wheel of the patrol car, and he was just as surprised as I was. I wanted to make sure what I was seeing and opened the glove compartment to get out a pair of binoculars. We both tried to keep a cool head and got out of the car. But what could we do for that poor little girl or that woman in the white nightgown that we saw? She was floating in the air in a bright beam of whitish-blue light and looked like an angel. She finally disappeared into the floor of the large oval." (72)

These light rays witnessed in abduction cases are apparently identical to the so-called "solid lights", radiating zones that have a finite length and can even bend. "Solid lights" have been observed in several UFO sightings, regardless of the abduction scenario. As already mentioned above, the chairman of MUFON-CES, Illobrand von Ludwiger, linked this physical phenomenon to the propulsion mechanism of the UFOs. Brand suspected the generation of gravitational waves as the cause of the described unusual properties of the UFOs.

Influencing gravity was also the focus of the experiments carried out in the Die Glocke project . It is interesting that a bluish light, also described as a "blue glow", was reported when this system was in operation. With this project, the German scientists succeeded in creating a "magnetically closed" system to shield against gravity. The practical application of this basic research was the construction of the flying machines known as "fireballs". From a physical point of view, the principle of the "fireballs" was based on the formation of so-called plasmoids or, in other words, plasma vortices generated by electric current.

Accompanying phenomena were characteristic luminous effects and strong magnetic fields (see Chapter 2).

The plasmoids have another astonishing property: even after the energy supply is switched off, they remain stable structures for some time and as such can pass through solid obstacles without destroying their structure.

At this point, we should recall the many similar reports about fireballs or “ball lightning,” which seem to describe a similar physical reality. (27)

Machine Translated by Google

In the years after the Second World War, the scientists of the Third Power must have succeeded in further perfecting the principle described, so that at some point even the transport of people inside such plasma vortices became possible.

How can the function of the implants used in the abductees be explained?

The preferred locations for the implants appear to be in the inner ear, nose and sinuses under the eyes, (68)
If you ask about the function of these foreign bodies, several answers are possible and equally likely. They could serve:

- as a transmitter to locate the target person, for continuous
- observation and monitoring, to facilitate communication via
- electromagnetic waves (see above), as a general medical monitoring instrument, to record hormonal changes as part
- of the genetic breeding program.

In some cases, implants that the abductees had reported having been inserted could be surgically removed by medical professionals. The investigations did not produce any unusual results. These would have been expected if aliens were actually behind the abductions. However, the composition of the materials examined corresponded in every case to earthly conditions and did not indicate a seemingly utopian manufacturing technology. (76)

Moreover, there is sufficient evidence that official bodies are also pursuing research into the meaningful use of implants similar to those described by the kidnapping victims.

»Since 1989, the American Dr. Daniel Man has held a patent for an implant that can be used to track down missing children. He developed a telemetry-based implant specifically for this problem.

Biochip. The implant is slightly larger than a grain of rice and is implanted into the wearer with a small surgical procedure. Dr. Man states that the best place to locate his implant is the ear area. Three satellites or helicopters are needed to find the missing person using triangulation.« (76)

Another example: Dr.

Delgado was director of neuropsychiatry at the prestigious Yale University for many years after the Second World War. During this time he developed the so-called stimoceiver. This device is a miniaturized electrode that can receive and send electrical signals using modulated radio waves. Since fine wires running from the initial devices were a hindrance, wireless implantable technologies were later used. These stimoceivers do not have batteries and are activated as needed using radio waves.

They can be used for life. Dr. Delgado's research showed that electrodes implanted in the brain areas called the hippocampus and amygdala, which can be stimulated by radio waves, produce the strangest effects in people. These caused relaxation, concentration, colorful visions and even a feeling as if one were floating. With his research, he set out to prove that in the future human sensations could be influenced and controlled from a distance. At the time that Dr. Delgado invented the stimoceiver, implants were being developed that enabled experimenters to implant small transmitters into a person's brain through the nostrils.

This transnasal implantation is now a generally accepted method in neurosurgery. (76)

As the statements of the abductees regarding the implants prove, the Third Power also had a considerable development advantage in this area of research and was in a position to put such findings into practice several years earlier.

How can the medical procedures associated with the genetic breeding program be explained?

The women involved in the genetic breeding program report that the UFO occupants gave them an artificial object, similar to a penis. In other cases, however, the fertilization of the female egg apparently took place outside the female body. For this purpose, an egg was removed through the abdominal wall using a long "needle". In the first documented case of abduction, that of Betty and Barney Hill in 1961, such a "needle" was used, allegedly to carry out a "pregnancy test".

Machine Translated by Google

The doctor Dr. Neal has been studying this component of the abduction phenomenon for years. In a report published in 1988, he wrote: "The documented experiences of the abduction experience correspond quite closely with "Different some of our accepted medical procedures. One in particular is physical Sense known as laparoscopy. A cylindrical, tube-like optical instrument is inserted through the navel region of a woman to examine female organs. With this special instrument, a doctor can view all of the female organs to determine if there are any abnormalities and can also remove ovules - egg cells - from the ovaries." (74) This indirectly confirms the statements of the women affected by the "egg harvest."

The officially first "test-tube baby", Louise Brown, was born on July 25, 1978. Since then, the use of laparoscopy has become a routine procedure. The UFO occupants only anticipated this "official development" by a few years. This does not necessarily correspond to the expectations of an extraterrestrial civilization far superior to ours. The Third Power, on the other hand, is certainly capable of such a technological advance.

Many of the women affected report that the embryos, which were conceived outside their bodies and were probably genetically modified, were later implanted back into their bodies for some time. Apparently, the UFO occupants have not yet been able to ensure that the embryos develop well in the first growth phase with the help of artificial, incubator-like wombs. This provides an additional argument against the assumption of an extraterrestrial intelligence that would have an incalculable technical and technological development advantage.

After a few weeks, at the latest by the twelfth week of pregnancy, the women report, the final

Removal of the fetuses. Over the next few months, hundreds of them are raised in incubator batteries, which are comparable to transparent tanks.
This in turn means that artificially raising the fetuses, once their organs have essentially been formed, is no longer a problem for the UFO occupants.

In the meantime, official science is also approaching this level of development. In 1997, a Japanese team of scientists led by Yosinori Kuwabara succeeded in developing the prototype of an artificial womb. In this womb, fetuses can currently be kept alive for up to three weeks. The description of the units is strikingly similar to that of the incubators shown to the abducted women: "A transparent plastic tank the size of a bread basket, filled with a liquid." (73)

Finally, a few words about the so-called “generation problem”.
Abduction researchers have discovered that in some families several generations are affected by the abductions. Given the genetic component of the abduction phenomenon, this makes sense. However, caution is advised when members of the older generation report under hypnosis about alleged childhood abductions, as this creates the impression that individual cases of abduction date back to a time before the start of the Second World War. On the one hand, such "false memories" could have been induced by incompetent hypnotists, but on the other hand it is also conceivable that the UFO occupants deliberately anchored them in the subconscious of the abducted. In this case, they would be part of the comprehensive camouflage that currently still seems to be in the interests of the Third Power.

How can we explain the appearance of small human-like creatures with grey skin and disproportionately large heads?

Professor Dr. David M. Jacobs is a professor of history at the renowned Temple University in Philadelphia. For many years he has been one of the researchers who have been studying the UFO phenomenon using scientific methods. He is considered one of the most important pioneers in research into the abduction phenomenon and heads the International Center for Abduction Research, one of the most important institutions in the field.

this sector. After several hundred hypnotic regression sessions he himself conducted, he was able to accurately reproduce the appearance and behavior of these small beings, which he believes to be extraterrestrials: A distinction is made between smaller and larger beings. The smaller of them are between 60 centimeters and 135 centimeters tall, look thin, delicate, even fragile. They have a head, two arms, two hands, fingers, two legs, two feet. They walk and stand like humans. The smaller beings are light. The larger beings are between five and fifteen centimeters taller. Descriptions of the skin usually range from dark gray to gray to light gray. The skin is extremely smooth and feels like leather, rubber or plastic. The beings basically all look the same. They show no emotion in their faces, in fact they seem to be almost emotionless.

They do not have what one would call individuality. Their heads are disproportionately large by human standards. The most striking feature, however, is their huge eyes (Figure 23). They extend across the entire width of the forehead. They have neither pupils nor cornea nor iris, nor do they move from side to side. The vast majority of reports indicate that the beings have neither nostrils nor other openings that serve as

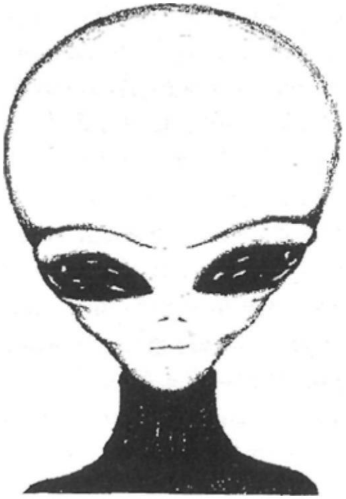

Abb. 23

The slit-like "mouth" has no lips, and the abductees do not see any teeth or tongue. There is no evidence of an organ on the head that could receive sound waves, similar to ears. The beings do not appear to have genitals. There is no visible muscle system in their limbs. The beings do not breathe in the way that humans do; at least, no rise or fall of their chest or a breath of air when they breathe out has been noticed. There are also no reports of them taking in solid or liquid food. Their "communication" is silent. The beings' behavior is purely businesslike and seems to be subject to the goal of maximum efficiency. As a result, abduction victims often get the impression that they are part of an assembly line process. The beings show no interest in the daily life of the abductees, apart from their physiology. (68)

When one reads this list of the characteristic features of the strange beings described by the abductees, one inevitably gets the impression that they must be either robots or cybernetic organisms (KYBORGS).

In one of the best-documented abduction cases, that of Betty Andreasson, the witness reports an incident that can be seen as confirmation of this assumption. Like many other abduction victims, Betty encountered tall figures with light hair on board the UFOs, in addition to the small, grey beings, who did not differ in appearance from humans. They are very reminiscent of the "extraterrestrials" who had appeared to the "contactees" a few years earlier. At this point, only the relationship between the grey and the light-haired people is of interest. When asked about the "extraterrestrial" hierarchy of command, Betty Andreasson answers:

"They are their servants. The Greys are their servants. ... the Greys work for them. And they see everything through the eyes of the Greys. They can order them to do whatever they want." Betty could see how the light-haired ones replaced the Greys' eyes. "Why do they take the eyes?" Betty: "They use them to exercise control over them. Through them they will ... see, act and be active through the Greys." (79)

If it is assumed that the people of Nordic type are representatives of the Third Power, the riddle of the Greys can be explained as solved. By the end of the Second World War, German scientists had achieved a clear development lead over their competitors, including in the use of computers (the first electromechanical computer developed by Konrad Zuse, type designation Z3) and remote control via cameras (code name "Sprotte"). (26) Even the later development of the transistor was based on German basic research. (15) This meant that all the basic components needed many years later to construct a robot-like being were available early on.

There are other possible explanations for the frequent "sightings" of the Greys. The appearance of the Greys made it possible to further perfect the camouflage of the activities of the Third Power, as it created an even stronger link between the UFO phenomenon and extraterrestrials in the eyes of the public. In order to reinforce this impression, the UFO occupants apparently resort to hypnosis in order to deliberately induce "false memories" in the abducted person. In other cases, however, the camouflage works in a much simpler, one could say almost primitive, way. The kidnap victim Katharina Wilson witnessed the following incident in a military facility (see below), apparently unintentionally on the part of her abductors: "The men were of average height and wore black overalls.

... The UFO occupant wore the same black overalls as the men who escorted him. He was the same height as his companions and gave a masculine impression. The stranger was about 1.80 meters tall. He seemed worried that he might be discovered." His head shape resembled that of the gray beings. Based on the clothing and human-like stature, one can speculate whether the UFO occupants do not sometimes just disguise themselves as grays. (76)

The previous explanations should have made it clear that no extraterrestrial intelligence is needed to explain the technical "miracles" observed by the abductees.

If the abduction phenomenon - and all signs point to this - is essentially a large-scale genetic experiment with the aim of breeding a certain species of human, then

The question inevitably arises as to which criteria this “new person” should meet.

An attempt to predict the characteristics of newborn children will not fail if one follows the words that are handed down by popular wisdom for this case:

"The apple doesn't fall far from the tree!" In terms of genetics, this also means that we can draw conclusions about the characteristics of our children based on the characteristics of our parents. Therefore, we should first focus on the parents and their main characteristics. As far as the abducted women and men are concerned, whose eggs and sperm cells are "harvested" by the UFO occupants, it is difficult to clearly assign the characteristics that determine the breeding goal. The group of abducted people seems to be too heterogeneous. However, it could be important to note that abductions by UFOs occur almost exclusively on the American continent, in Europe and Australia.

Black Africa and Asia, on the other hand, are not affected by this phenomenon, with a few not entirely clear exceptions. It should also be noted that in a country like the United States, whose population is made up of several races, it seems that members of the white race are preferentially abducted. For this reason, critics have already seen themselves as being compelled to question the physical reality of the abduction phenomenon and have assumed that there are alternative cultural backgrounds that are anchored in people's psyches in different ways.

However, if one does not only look at the abductees, but also broadens one's view to the external appearance of the UFO occupants, one thing quickly becomes clear: Behind the abduction phenomenon there is not a cultural problem, but clearly a racial one!

The first evidence supporting this claim was already provided by the encounters of the "contactees", as they described their "extraterrestrials" predominantly as tall people with blond hair who corresponded to the so-called Nordic type.

From the witness Betty Andreasson it was learned that physically large beings in human form with white, pale skin and mostly whitish, light hair are the creators of the small gray ones with the large heads.

According to Betty, these beings are also responsible for the genetic experiments carried out on humans, in which the Greys assist them. (79)

The Brazilian psychologist Gilda Moura, who has evaluated various Brazilian abduction cases, came to a similar conclusion. According to her, both the gray and the large creatures appear in the cases she examined, and both types usually work together. (80)

The kidnapping of the American lumberjack Travis Walton in 1975 is another classic kidnapping case that caused a great stir, especially because it occurred in the presence of six witnesses and the large-scale search for Travis Walton had been unsuccessful for five days.

After being hit by a blue-green beam of light from the underside of a UFO, Walton lost consciousness and woke up after some time inside the UFO. There he first made the acquaintance of the small gray creatures. They eventually left him alone. Shortly afterwards the following happened:

»... when I heard a faint noise. I whirled around and looked at the door. There, in the open frame, stood a person! I stood rooted to the spot. It was a man about six feet tall.

His helmet almost touched the doorframe. He was extremely muscular and evenly proportioned. He appeared to weigh about two hundred pounds. He wore a tight-fitting light blue suit made of a soft material like velour. His feet were covered with black boots, a black band or belt was wrapped around his waist. He carried no devices or weapons on his belt or in his hands; no insignia of any kind marked his clothing. ...

He had thick, ash-blond hair of medium length that covered his ears. His skin color was dark, like a deep, even tan. He wore no beard or moustache. In fact, I couldn't even see stubble or the dark roots of facial hair. He had slightly furrowed, masculine features and strange eyes. They were a light, hazel-gold color - but there was something strange about those eyes besides the color that I couldn't put my finger on. ... The man didn't answer my questions. He just smiled kindly and slightly carelessly. ... We entered a white room ... Two men and a woman stood around the table. They all wore velvet blue uniforms like the first man, except that they didn't wear helmets. ... The two men were just as muscular and just as good-looking as the first man. The woman also had a face and figure that embodied the epitome of femininity. They had soft, flawless skin. ... The striking good looks of the man I had first met became even more obvious when I saw them all together. They had a family-like resemblance, although they were not identical. They all had the same thick brownish-blond hair." (75)

The case of Travis Walton has been cited so extensively simply because it particularly illustrates the generally human appearance of the blond UFO occupants.

However, examining individual cases always carries the risk of generalising these cases in an inadmissible way.

What statistically valid statements regarding the appearance of the blonde can be derived from the work of abduction researchers?

One of the world's leading researchers in this field, the American Budd Hopkins, found in 1989 that about 85 percent of the creatures observed during the abductions were of the little gray variety.

However, this statement only referred to the cases he himself investigated. (80)

The American John Carpenter came to similar conclusions. Only after Carpenter came across a particularly interesting case of cooperation between the Greys and the Blondes did he show himself willing to accept the presence of the Blondes during the abductions. He noted self-critically that in the past, not only he, but also a number of other abduction researchers in the USA, had unjustifiably denied or downplayed the presence and function of the Blondes for a variety of reasons. He finally woke up to this after a discussion contribution by the British abduction researcher Jenny Randles, held at the "Abduction Study Conference" at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1992. Randles had explained that, in contrast to the American abduction cases, in Great Britain almost exclusively the Blondes had been observed up until 1989 and that in the years that followed they had been able to maintain their, albeit limited, dominance over the Greys. (80, 81)

This statistically different perception of UFO occupants could lead to the conclusion that the Third Power takes regional peculiarities into account when camouflaging its activities.

Professor David Jacobs, quoted above, also had to revise his earlier views on the occurrence of blondes, but he did so in a very idiosyncratic way:

"Since most of the aliens described are of the small gray type, I thought for years that the Nordic variant was a product of fantasy or wishful thinking, through which small, ugly aliens were transformed into pretty, blond, blue-eyed human beings. However, after listening to many (!; the author) reports about these human-like aliens, I came to the conclusion that they could be adult hybrids - the product of aliens and humans." (69) Jacobs assumes that such hybrids have various stages of development, whereby in his opinion the hybrids, which are no longer distinguishable from humans purely externally, first appeared a few years ago. However, he overlooks the fact that these hybrids of the last stage of development must have existed as early as the 1950s and 1970s. This is at least what the reports of the "contactees" as well as those of Betty Andreasson and Travis Walton suggest.

What actually speaks against the assumption that both the UFO occupants and the offspring created by genetically modifying the genetic makeup of the abducted possess certain desired, genetically uniform characteristics? Then Jacobs would be at least partially right. If the genetic breeding program of the Third Power began in the mid-1970s at the earliest, as it seems, then the first adult "hybrids" could have appeared in the early 1990s. This would correspond to Jacobs' observations.

Jacobs characterizes the adult »hybrids« and thus also the similar blonde UFO occupants as follows:

»Many of these hybrids have normal-looking eyes. Their skin looks like that of a human, but sometimes appears a little too smooth. They often have a crew cut, but some prefer long or wavy hair. Some have no eyebrows or Eyelashes, most have no body or pubic hair. Some appear somewhat thin, others muscular, but never overweight. They often have blonde hair and blue eyes, although other variations have been seen. The female hybrids have typical human sexual characteristics and have longer hair than the males. Most male hybrids have normal genitalia, although the penis of some appears somewhat thin. The men are not circumcised. These higher level hybrids are often described by abduction victims as aliens of the Nordic type. They also have the same extraordinary mental abilities as the aliens themselves. They can perform brain scans and visualizations (i.e. hypnosis; the author).

They have almost complete control over the abduction victims...
The hybrids of higher levels have an outstanding ability: they are able to mate with humans. They can have sexual intercourse with humans in the normal way..." (69)

Jacobs' confusion is obvious. He seems to be determined to save the scenario presented in his first book (68), which focuses on the grey aliens. Only slowly does he come to the realization that these grey aliens play only a minor role and that the UFO abduction phenomenon is perhaps an exclusively terrestrial phenomenon.

Only reports describing the appearance of "hybrid" children can provide definitive certainty as to whether some of the adult blondes are actually offspring conceived from the genetic material of the abducted children.

One of the first reports of an encounter between a woman and her child, genetically manipulated by the UFO occupants, was published by Budd Hopkins. This event, later referred to in the literature as the baby presentation, took place during an abduction in 1983: "And then ... a little girl came into the room ... accompanied by two other beings, women. And she stood in the doorway ... She looked like a four-year-old and was about Tommy's size. He is also four years old. And she did not look like these men, but she did not look like us either. She was very pretty; like a fairy or an ... angel. She had big blue eyes and a tiny, perfectly formed nose. And her little

Her mouth was perfect and she was pale; only her lips were pink and her eyes blue. And she had white, wispy, thin hair - fine hair. Her head was a little bigger than usual, especially on her forehead and here at the back... Her forehead was a little more pronounced... but she was a real doll.« (71)

It can be said: The little girl had blue eyes and light hair; her conception must have taken place around the year 1978.

David Jacobs writes about another case: "Diane Henderson was taken into a room where there were six or seven children dressed in white with blue eyes, shaggy hair and small noses." (69) Since Jacobs describes the beings he calls hybrids as aliens of the Nordic type, it can be assumed that these children, in addition to blue eyes, also had the other characteristic feature of the Nordics, blond hair.

In another case recorded by Jacobs, reference is made to a small boy who, quite unexpectedly, does not conform to the usual pattern: "And ... there is also a little boy climbing around here. ... I think he is a little older. And his skin is darker, his hair is darker. He is like the difference between ... a Scandinavian type - blond and light skin - and one of the, er ... I don't know, from the Mediterranean perhaps." Not only does this boy not conform to the otherwise observed Scandinavian or, in other words, Nordic type, he is also dressed differently from the other children playing in this room. (69)

Finally, the account of the witness Allison Reed, who during a kidnapping was taken together with other abduction victims into a room in which there was a large, screen-like device. The assembled people were presented with part of the expected future scenario:

»...There are hybrids and there are people - I can't even call them hybrids anymore - there are these people who didn't come about through normal human evolution, and there's us. They were created through many years of experimentation. ...

There are noises in the background - like laughter, but it is very quiet. As if from far away. All are white. All Caucasian (another in America common term for the Nordics; the author), no Spaniards, blacks or Asians.« (69)

This clearly describes the breeding goal of the UFO occupants!

Behind the abduction phenomenon lies a large-scale genetic experiment whose goal is to create people who have the genetic characteristics of the so-called Nordic race in as pure a form as possible.

Doesn't this sound familiar?

Or to put it another way, who would have expected anything different given the history of the UFO phenomenon described above?

The people behind the secession movement at the end of the war and thus behind the Third Power were primarily leading representatives of the NSDAP's Schutzstaffel, known as the SS for short. The main goal of this organization can be quickly summed up:

"The SS is an association of Nordic men selected according to specific criteria. The physical ideal of the Nordic race determines the selection." In the same sense, it says elsewhere: "The breeding goal of the German people is determined by the Nordic race...

That the Nordic race alone can determine the breeding goal of the German people is evident from the history of the Aryan peoples. It created the cultures of these peoples; as long as it determined their destinies, they rose to great heights; their decline brought with it the downfall of the peoples and their cultures, because de-Nordicization always means cultural decay." (82)

The so-called Ahnenerbe can be seen as the actual "brain trust" of the SS . The curator of this institution, which sees itself as a research and teaching community, Walther Wüst, explained in his programmatic speech Indogermanisches Bekenntnis:

"In particular, National Socialist science must free itself from all foreign ballast that only prevents it from rising to its highest goals: the re-creation of a Nordic ruling class, an Indo-European community, a future that has written on its banner not 'capital and war' but 'children and culture'." (83)

In his book Mein Kampf , Adolf Hitler had already made this breeding goal defined by the SS the focus of the National Socialist Worldview explained:

»A complete mixing of our racial elements would certainly have resulted in a closed national body, but as every racial cross-breeding proves, it would have been filled with a lesser capacity for culture than the highest of the primary components originally possessed.

This is the blessing of the absence of complete mixing: that even today we still have in our German national body large numbers of unmixed Nordic-Germanic people, in whom we can see the most valuable treasure for our future. ...

Anyone who speaks of a mission of the German people on earth must know that it can only consist in the formation of a state that sees its highest task in the preservation and promotion of the noblest elements of our people that have remained intact, indeed of all humanity. (84)

The historian Günther Deschner summed up the National Socialists' efforts to breed humans in a few words: "The historical vision of a racially closed spatial core, which sums up the National Socialist utopia of the future, had at its centre the selection of a type of human being, the external image of which was most clearly presented by the racial theorist of the Third Reich, Hans FK

Günther, as blond and tall, with a long head and narrow face, with a pronounced chin, a narrow nose with a high nasal bridge, soft light hair, set-back light eyes and a rosy-white skin colour. (85)

Unfortunately, contemporary historians all too often overlook the fact that for racial researchers during the Nazi era, a person's external characteristics were merely an indication of the psychological hereditary characteristics that were recognized as being much more significant. Professor Hans FK Günther, quoted by Deschner, put it this way:

"If the human races were unequal only in terms of their physical genetic makeup, the consideration of racial phenomena would be of much less importance. The psychological genetic inequality of the human races is what causes the obvious differences in attitude and behavior, in the actions and works of individual people and individual nations..." (86)

The director of the Institute for Racial and Ethnological Studies at the University of Copenhagen wrote about these spiritual and mental characteristics of the Nordic race and their origins, which were recognized as “particularly valuable”.

Leipzig, Professor Dr. Otto Reche, in his book Race and Homeland of the Indo-Europeans: »Various researchers have already attempted to draw conclusions about the homeland of the Nordic race from the spiritual and mental hereditary characteristics that are particularly characteristic of the Nordic race, and many researchers today are of the opinion that these characteristics are a product of selection and breeding during the last ice age: only a race that acquired these characteristics and this character was able to overcome the incredibly difficult period of hardship and not be destroyed by it; perhaps it even had to bring some of these characteristics, a strong will to resist and create, into this struggle, otherwise it would have avoided it and migrated south.

The tremendous energy and tenacity in the pursuit of a goal, the commitment, the cool reflection and foresight, the development of strong, self-confident personalities - all of this really cannot have been bred, as we can see from observations of peoples in other climates, for example in the tropics or even in the temperate zone, but also not in the steppe, which forms both its animals and its people into herds. All of this can only have come about in the hard, constant, constantly changing struggle, which required the full commitment of the individual personality, with an extremely hostile climate that compelled the use of the last of one's strength, such as we have to imagine in the Ice Age.

Only here could the need, characteristic of the Nordic race, to judge people according to their achievements, according to their being, and not according to appearance, which plays such a large role in the Mediterranean race, for example, which comes from a softer climate, arise. Here, too, ideas about racial care could emerge early on, because they were necessary for the constant struggle for life: the elimination of weak children, the terminally ill, and the sickly elderly... Inventiveness and creativity must also have been properly cultivated in such an environment, because success in battle would have depended on these gifts in countless cases. Equally important were self-control, courage, and a spirit of enterprise.

We therefore have a large number of particularly characteristic spiritual and mental characteristics of the Nordic race, which indicate to us that only the environment of an ice age could have bred them ... The characteristics thus bred had to enable the Nordic race to achieve higher cultural achievements than races that were children, breeding products of other environments, races that - so to speak - had not been hammered into steel, but had remained soft metal." (87)

In what ways did the SS try to implement the system it had set up before 1945?
To achieve breeding goals?

Since the beginning of 1932, the medical examination of all candidates for accession was prepared and actually carried out from 1933 onwards.
Anyone who had been a member of the SS before 1933 had to subsequently present proof of Aryan descent and genetic health to the Race Office - going back to January 1, 1800. When recruiting new SS members, the race officers of the Race Office followed a specific pattern. First, they recorded the applicant's physical characteristics in the categories of "physique" - from ideal to deformed in nine gradations - and "racial assessment" - in five groups from purely Nordic to suspected non-European blood - which were then added to an overall assessment in the "appearance" assessment. This assessment was summarized in a final assessment along with the results of an intelligence test and a sports test.

In addition, the SS Engagement and Marriage Order was issued on December 31, 1931. Effective January 1, 1932, this required all unmarried members of the SS to obtain permission from the Reichsführer-SS before entering into a marriage. The SS man and his bride had to provide proof of their racial and genetic value by means of proof of ancestry and a racial and health examination. A marriage ban by the Reichsführer-SS due to the bride's lack of racial suitability was to be binding. If the SS member married anyway, he faced expulsion from the ranks of the Schutzstaffel. The so-called SS clan community was to be created from racially high-quality women and men, who in turn would guarantee good-bred offspring. (88)

The third path that was taken was that of attempting to artificially influence the genetic material. Most of the genetic research up to 1945 took place in Germany at the Kaiser Wilhelm Institutes

The leading role in experimental mutation research was taken over by the genetics department of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute for Brain Research in Berlin-Buch under its department head Nikolai W. Timofeeff-Ressovsky.

Together with his colleagues, Timofeeff - who, according to experts, was doing by far the best work in the field of quantitative mutation research at the time - laid some of the foundations on which Watson and Crick were able to build in their later research, the result of which was the realization in 1953 of the crucial importance of DNA in hereditary processes. (89)

The researchers working under the aegis of the SS must have realized that they still had a long way to go before they could achieve the desired possibility of directly modifying the human genome. They therefore concentrated primarily on two obvious research goals that would help prepare the "big solution."

On the one hand, they used twin research to try to prove the regularities of the inheritance of specific characteristics from one generation to the next.

On the other hand, they worked on a serological race test that could be used to determine the racial classification of a person being examined. The aim was to create a rapid procedure that would not only distinguish between the sub-races Nordic, Western, Dinaric, Eastern and East Baltic within the European race according to the method developed by Prof. Günther's racial system, but which also enabled the differentiation of even closely related peoples such as Kirghiz, Tatars and Uzbeks on the basis of protein. (90)

How far could this research be advanced before the end of the war? It should be clear at first glance that a practical, rapid test for determining specific racial characteristics must have been of particular importance for the breeding program later initiated by the UFO occupants.

The work on twin research as well as the search for methods for a suitable serological racial test were coordinated at the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute for Anthropology in Berlin under the direction of Prof. Dr. med. Otmar von Verschuer. As a recognized expert in his field of research, Verschuer was not himself a member of the SS, but employed as his "favorite student" and scientific

Machine Translated by Google

However, his assistant was a man whose name would become very well known after 1945: Josef Mengele.

Mengele, a member of the SS since 1938, received his doctorate in philology summa cum laude in 1935 with a "racial morphological study of the anterior lower jaw in four racial groups" and his doctorate in medicine in 1938 with the same distinction for "family studies in cleft lip and palate". (91) After serving as a "particularly gifted military doctor" in the combat unit of the SS "Wiking" division in 1941/1942, he was transferred back to the SS Race and Settlement Main Office after being seriously wounded and awarded the Iron Cross First Class. (92)

Finally, at the end of May 1943, the SS Main Office ordered Mengele’s transfer to the Auschwitz concentration camp.

There, under almost “ideal conditions” for a racial researcher, Mengele was able to continue his pre-war research in collaboration with Prof. Continue the research begun by Verschuer.

When asked after the war about the scientific significance of Mengele's work in Auschwitz, the anthropologist Martina Puzyna, who came from a family of Polish nobility and was forced to work with Mengele as a prisoner doctor, said: "Even with the most critical assessment, Mengele's work was indisputably of the highest value for the science of anthropology." Even if Mengele never once spoke to her about the goal of his research, she had heard rumors that the aim was to multiply the Nordic race. (91)

The German Research Foundation approved the funds for Mengele's genetic research in Auschwitz in August 1943. It was apparently Professor Verschuer who secured the grants from the research foundation. (92) In a progress report from March 1944, Verschuer wrote to this institution: "Keyword: Specific protein bodies ... My assistant Dr. med. et Dr. phil. Mengele has joined this research branch. He is employed as a Hauptsturmführer and camp doctor in the Auschwitz concentration camp. With the approval of the Reichsführer-SS, anthropological studies are being carried out on the most diverse racial groups in this concentration camp and the blood samples are being sent to my laboratory for processing." (91)

However, the research project with the keyword “Specific Protein Bodies” concealed nothing other than the serological racial test mentioned above! (90)

Because the progress of Verschuer's work ultimately depended on Mengele's deliveries, the SS was able to indirectly control what they considered to be Prof.

Verschuers exercise.

After Mengele had sent him blood samples from over 200 people of different origins, Verschuer spent the last months of the war trying to find those specific proteins on the basis of which he hoped to be able to develop a scientifically precise method of racial identification. From November 1944 onwards, he received support in solving the emerging biochemical questions from a colleague of the later Nobel Prize winner in chemistry, Adolf Butenandt. (93)

Since after the war not only the preparations sent by Mengele but also all the crucial archive files were considered lost, it is pointless to speculate whether Verschuer achieved his goal. However, evidence of a successful conclusion to the "Specific Protein Bodies" research project could be a letter that Verschuer wrote to the head physician of the Frankfurt University Children's Hospital, Professor Bernhard de Rudder, in early January 1945.

It states: “You will also be interested to know that my research on specific proteins has now finally reached a decisive stage.” (91)

Not only are the files silent about what could still be achieved in the four months available until the end of the war, but Verschuer himself later did not say a word about it.

What happened to the archive files that should have documented the progress of the work? Were they destroyed by Verschuer, or did a special SS commando manage to recover them?

There is no answer to this question either, nor to the question of the later whereabouts of Mengele's Auschwitz research documents.

Mengele himself went into hiding after the end of the war. In 1949 he managed to escape to Argentina. There he enjoyed the special protection of Hans-Ulrich Rudel, who will be mentioned in Chapter 5.

will be back. On February 7, 1979, Josef Mengele died in a swimming accident on the Brazilian Atlantic coast.

Independently of the research institutes and universities, the SS also pursued its own research program. The work was coordinated by the Ahnenerbe Research and Teaching Association. In 1943, the Ahnenerbe already comprised over 40 scientific departments. (37)

On November 1, 1943, the Institute of Plant Genetics was founded in Lannach near Graz under the direction of lecturer and SS-Untersturmführer Dr.
Heinz Brücher. It almost seems as if this institute covered other fields of activity beyond the official plant genetic research. In an internal letter from the management of the Ahnenerbe to the head of the biology department, Konrad Meyer, dated September 30, 1943 - i.e. before the official founding of the institute - there was only general reference to an "Institute for Genetics". (89)

In addition, the director of the institute, Heinz Brücher, had received his doctorate in botany in 1938, but was subsequently employed at the University of Jena as an assistant to Prof. Karl Astel at the Institute for Human Genetics. There he continued his research into plasmatic inheritance. Brücher was therefore competent enough to be able to contribute to the research goals of the SS in both the field of plant genetics and human genetics.

As luck would have it, Heinz Brücher, like Mengele, went to Argentina in 1949, where he became a university professor, first in Tucuman, then in Mendoza and finally in Buenos Aires. (89)

There seems to be nothing to prevent the assumption that Mengele and Brücher met in Argentina and exchanged information about their research results.

Together they may have provided the Third Power with the scientific basis for the large-scale genetic experiment that later manifested itself in the abduction phenomenon.

The fact that the goal of the UFO inmates is identical to that pursued by Mengele during his research in Auschwitz has already been sufficiently proven by the statement of the Polish anthropologist Martina Puzyna: The goal was and is the reproduction of the Nordic race!

This biological objective, which has been pursued in secret to date, will undoubtedly be followed at some point by a public demonstration which will reveal the existence and capabilities of the Third Power to all eyes. However, when this demonstration of power will take place and in what manner can only be speculated (see more in Chapter 7). However, a few clues about the power-political goals of the Third Power and the timetable required to achieve them can also be gleaned from the statements of the abductees.

When abduction researcher David Jacobs writes - still under the false assumption that aliens are behind the abduction phenomenon - "All the evidence seems to indicate that the ultimate goal of the aliens is to integrate into human society. All their efforts and activities seem to be directed toward controlling all of humanity," he is undoubtedly right about the intentions of the Third Power.

Jacobs continues, quoting the transcripts of conversations recorded with the abductees: "The aliens themselves have mentioned that the time is not too far away when their program ends and they have achieved their goals. Many abduction victims believe that something will happen soon and that the aliens are therefore on the verge of realizing their plans. ... They are almost finished, but not quite yet. They still have a lot to do. ... believes that the aliens' plan will take place in three stages - first gradually, then accelerated, and finally surprisingly quickly. The aliens told her that the accelerated stage is currently being carried out, and she believes that it will happen faster than one would think. ... As far as the exact date is concerned, the aliens are mostly vague. But in 1997 Claudia Negron also learned that the turning point will come soon, very soon. Whether this means the next five years or the next two generations remains uncertain." (69)

Also of interest in this future scenario is the role of the abductees themselves. While many of them have so far only served as donors of genetic material, they seem to have another, important function when the Third Power takes over this planet.

»Some victims of abduction believe that they themselves should initiate the change. They do not know exactly what their role is, but they think that they will know when the time is right.« And: »... it was explained by the aliens that she would be notified at the time of the turning point so that she could help other people adjust to the new reality. ... What will you teach people? Everything about a new life after the world has changed. Help people adjust. That they are to be involved in bringing about the turning point. ... may explain why many abduction victims believe they have secret knowledge. For years, many of was hidden. ... The them have claimed that the aliens gave them such knowledge, but that it aliens explain to the abduction victims that the memories will reappear when the time is right. ...

Machine Translated by Google

He tells me about the future. There will be big changes. A lot of confusion and chaos. I have to cooperate with them - I will know what to do. I...don't know yet what will happen, he doesn't explain. But there is something of global importance. In the future, I don't know when. It will be terrible, but I will know what to do. They taught me. He didn't say programming, but I would call it that. They programmed me - whatever happens, I don't have to worry because I have the information, and even though I don't know it, I will know what to do.« (69)

Do these statements by the abducted not point to a takeover scenario in which a certain behavioral pattern has been implanted into the subconscious of a not inconsiderable part of the population via post-hypnotic commands for the day of the change?

And is the biological component of the abduction phenomenon, which has become known so far, not being supplemented by a conditioning strategy that will be effective at a later date in terms of power politics and will help to facilitate the takeover of the world by the Third Power? Only the future can provide an answer to these questions.

If, as some abductees believe, the accelerated phase of the takeover scenario has already been set in motion, this assumption could also be confirmed by the fact that the Third Power seems to be increasingly neglecting the camouflage of its activities. The Greys are increasingly taking a back seat in the kidnappings, the alleged hybrids (the blondes) are taking over in the eyes of the abducted person more and more the initiative. David Jacobs writes about this circumstance, which was certainly surprising to him:

»Sometimes hybrids of higher development stages also wear military-looking clothing, such as overalls that resemble flight suits. Because they look largely like humans, they are often mistaken for members of the American military.

For this reason, many abduction victims have become convinced that the military is involved in the plans. Over the years, abduction victims have frequently reported that soldiers or uniformed men were present during the abductions. Sometimes the hybrids take the abduction victims to abandoned military bases or unused areas of active military bases. ... But in reality there is no evidence that the American or other governments are involved in the abduction project. (69) The latter was not to be expected after what has been said so far.

As one can see, even those abduction researchers who until recently were doctrinally convinced that the abduction phenomenon was caused by extraterrestrials are increasingly uncertain and are struggling to explain it.
It is a sign of a great deal of ignorance that the realization that a human power is responsible for the abductions is only now dawning. It is not only the relatively primitive practices for a superior extraterrestrial intelligence, for example in the extraction of genetic material, that should have given rise to a revision of cherished views much earlier. In addition, there have been a large number of reports for years that underline the earthly component of the abduction phenomenon.

On February 3, 1993, a conference on UFO abductions was held in College Park, Maryland, sponsored by the Fund for UFO Research . Twelve people with UFO abduction experiences were present at this conference. The twelve people were questioned in detail by the researchers present, among whom were two psychiatrists. When asked how many abduction victims could remember whether they were taken to a cave or an underground facility during an abduction, seven answered yes. Some of the abductees claimed that they saw various people in trance-like states in these underground facilities. (76) This indicates that a not inconsiderable part of the Abduction scenarios do not take place on board UFOs or in people's homes, but in underground facilities.

The following characteristics have been compiled for this type of experience:

- Military abductees report large metal gates in mountainsides. Transport takes place by helicopter or conventional vehicle.
- Kidnapped people are transported on foot or by vehicle through an artificially constructed tunnel.
- Sometimes the kidnapped people are transported to lower floors in an elevator.
- The victims are escorted through corridors by military personnel. The doors can often only be opened using electronic detection systems. They detect generators and other machines. The facility is reminiscent of earthly research laboratories.
- Most of the time, the abductees are taken to a room where they are examined by a doctor.
- Men in combat suits, men in military uniforms, female or male doctors in white lab coats, as well as civilians in suits and sometimes other abductees are seen. (76)

The camouflage is falling - slowly. The evidence for an exclusively Earth-based UFO abduction phenomena can no longer be ignored.

Years ago, the French astrophysicist and UFO researcher Jacques Vallee summed up the absurdity of the ongoing discussion about UFOs with a touch of irony: "In a way, the study of UFOs is like American politics: there are exactly two parties to choose from. In politics, there are only Democrats and Republicans. In ufology, there are the skeptics who do not believe in UFOs at all and those who believe that they are spaceships from another planet. But are these two really the only possibilities?" (94)

No, there is an alternative!

Machine Translated by Google

Machine Translated by Google

CHAPTER 4

THE MISNOMISHED PRE-ASTRONAUTS

At this point, it is time to dispel another myth: that of the extraterrestrials who came to Earth thousands of years ago as development workers, brought culture to humans and then disappeared again, but not without first making the promise to return in the distant future.

One can see how close the connection is between pre-astronautics (modern: Paleo-SETI), which focuses on historical aspects, and UFO research, which mainly investigates modern phenomena.
This is precisely why this chapter is necessary. If there were no extraterrestrial pre-astronauts, then the present phenomenon of alleged extraterrestrial UFOs lacks historical connection and thus the legitimacy of a continuous development from antiquity to modern times. It would be a huge stretch to assume that contact with an extraterrestrial civilisation occurred precisely when man took his first steps into the rocket age in the mid-1940s. The objection about what this means with the observations of unusual celestial phenomena before 1944 can easily be countered.

A not inconsiderable part of these manifestations in the sky, which were inexplicable at the time, were probably simply misinterpreted natural phenomena.

There was undoubtedly prehistoric aviation, but it was home-made, just like the other "mysteries of humanity" whose extraterrestrial origins are claimed by the representatives of pre-astronautics. We are indebted to them. Without their questions and without their field research, we would not be in a position today to take a revisionist look at this chapter of human history.

I am particularly grateful to one of these representatives who has been very committed for many years, but who today holds a different opinion and has earthly answers to the legitimate questions of pre-astronautics.

Mr. Mathias Kappel has agreed to provide this chapter with some solid content. It would be best if we let him speak for himself from now on...

»My interest in the questions of the field of research that is now commonly referred to as pre-astronautics arose when I was still at school, when a five-minute radio program entitled Erich von Däniken delivers evidence was broadcast daily on what was then Radio Luxembourg in the late 1970s . Access to the written publications of this well-known, successful author was notoriously difficult in the GDR. Nevertheless, within a year I managed to give a lecture on the subject in German class.

Years later, when I had systematically expanded my source base, I was able to give regular lectures as a student in the student clubs of my university town of Dresden. There was a great rush of inquisitive fellow students, especially because the subject had been banned by those in power until then. Nevertheless, a feeling of dissatisfaction remained, as I could only report on the material traces of the extraterrestrial visitors using quotes and images from other authors. Then came the political change in 1989, the previously closed borders were opened, and in 1990 I visited Egypt and stayed at the foot of the pyramids.

In the years that followed, I traveled to almost all of the places described as mysterious in the relevant literature, from the Near East through North Africa and Europe to the highlands of Asia, the deserts and jungles of Central and South America and Easter Island in the vastness of the Pacific. As an extract from these research trips, I published a series of articles in various specialist journals, some of which then found their way into anthologies on the subject available in bookstores.

For decades, I had devoted myself entirely to a line of research that followed the traces that extraterrestrial intelligences had left on this planet thousands of years ago, and in the end I had to realize that I was in danger of losing the actual subject of research, that the extraterrestrial earthly ones became superfluous. The riddles remained, but the authors were different. You can see that this chapter was written with passion.

At the end of the 1990s, I began to think differently when I realized that the crux of pre-astronautics was to be found in its methodology. This consisted of questioning the technical feasibility of an enigmatic artifact of our ancestors. In doing so, it was isolated and thus torn out of the historical context of the time. I would like to illustrate this with a particularly striking example. The gigantic ancient Egyptian obelisks, some of them up to 30 meters long, weighed several hundred tons. It simply seemed inconceivable that the Egyptians could have managed to transport and erect these giants with the modest means available to them, especially since, with two exceptions, there was no evidence of this in the extensive written records. Here, a superior technical power must have been at work, just as with the pyramids. (95) What has been completely overlooked in this argument - and I mean this by an isolated view - is that the ancient Romans, with their technical capabilities, which were no different from those of the Egyptians of the Middle and New Kingdoms, transported hundreds of Egyptian obelisks out of the country, over huge distances, including by ship across the Mediterranean. And no one has yet claimed that the Romans had a visit from extraterrestrials at that time! The feat was simply so commonplace for Egyptians as it was for Romans that it was not considered worth reporting.

What also made me rethink things was the fact that during field research on site, the representatives of pre-astronautics often did not look closely, claiming to be a mystery where it would have been possible to verify the opposite without much effort.

Just two examples: It was claimed that the water pipes, which can be seen in large numbers in the ruins of Tiahuanaco in Bolivia, were not water pipes, but rather protective tubes for power cables. (96) And this was only because no intact water pipe could be found and because the pipe sections were partly lying on the ground with the opening facing downwards, which led to the conclusion that without the bottom parts, no water could have flowed. Already on my first visit to

However, in Tiahuanaco I was able to photograph an intact, functioning water pipe, which was also covered with a thick layer of earth and gave an idea of its original condition (Figure 24).

The other example is provided by the Nasca plain in Peru. By removing small stones covering the desert floor, it was possible to create large-scale figures and patterns that can undoubtedly only be seen in their entirety from a greater height. Whether they were created for imaginary or real 'celestial beings' is an open question for the time being. However, to make their technical production problematic only because they could not be seen by the little people busily working in the desert and therefore 'divine', i.e. extraterrestrial, assistance must be assumed is at least a logical fallacy. The solution to the problem lies in a side valley of the plateau, the school of the creators of those scratch drawings (Figure 25). As is easy to see, many things were tried out, and they turned out reasonably well. No wonder, since all the depictions were already under visual control from the neighboring hills and could be corrected acoustically at any time. A transmission

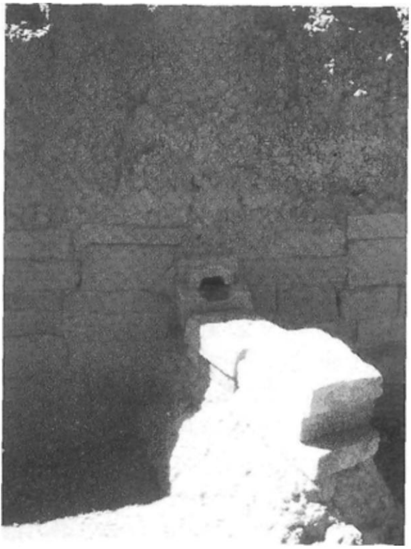

Abb. 24

The skills acquired in this way cannot have been so difficult to apply later on in flat terrain.

After criticizing the methodology, let us now criticize the premises of the research field known as pre-astronautics.
This must essentially address two points:

1. the fundamental technological and - so far neglected
- biological possibility for interstellar space travel and
2. the alleged artificial intelligence of humans through extraterrestrial intervention in the human genome.

There are several approaches to answering the question of how an extraterrestrial intelligence could overcome the almost immeasurable interstellar space. The relativistic approach seems to have been dismissed, i.e. by accelerating to speeds close to the speed of light and the time shift that this entails, it would at least hypothetically be possible for the crew of such a spaceship to cover distances of thousands of light years within a human lifetime. In my opinion, the renowned radio astronomer and SETI researcher Sebastian von Hoerner has the

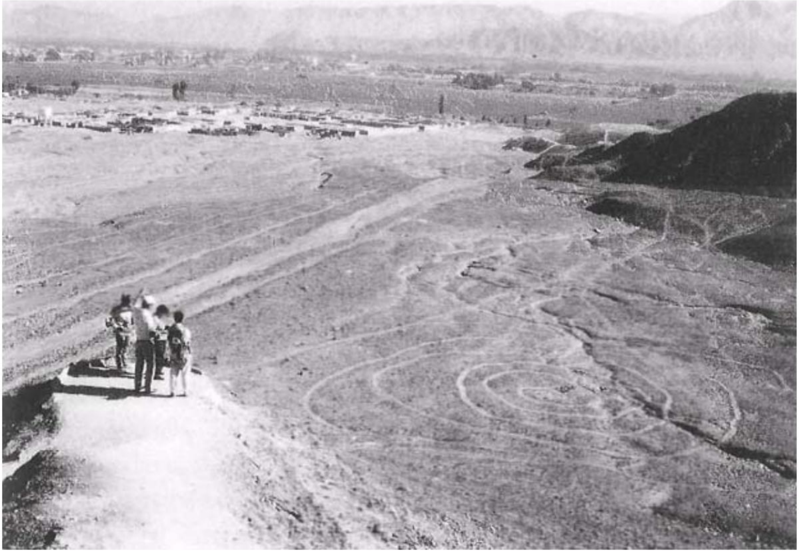

Abb. 25

A decisive standard work that forces us to look for other alternatives. (97)

In addition to space flights using relativistic effects, the crossing of interstellar space with generation spaceships that can travel at a tenth of the speed of light has long been favored. This would allow our galaxy to be completely colonized in about 60 million years. (98) This does not seem long compared to the four billion years of existence of our solar system, and it would take just the number of years from now that have passed since the extinction of the dinosaurs.

There is no doubt that this variant of manned space travel will be technically feasible in the not too distant future, but from a biological point of view there are unforeseeable difficulties. In the end, a generation spaceship means nothing other than that a narrowly limited gene pool will be exposed to an absolutely alien and hostile environment for thousands of years. Given the time periods in question, spontaneous and environmentally induced mutations will have done their destructive work on the astronauts' genome after a relatively short time.

The last hope is the so-called wormholes. These are supposed to make it possible to establish a connection between regions of the universe that are separated by billions of light years, from one second to the next.

What is a wormhole? In short, it is nothing more than 'a narrow piece of extremely curved space-time' that serves as a passage (channel) from one region of the universe to another.

(99) Nature does not know of any temporally stable wormholes that can function as a passage in this way. This means that they would have to be constructed and built by an intelligent life form that wants to use them. And here lies the problem: the tension (in kilograms per square centimeter) required to prevent the wormhole from collapsing and thus ensure its stability must be at least 10 to the power of 17 times greater than the density (mass per unit volume) of the substance from which the wormhole is constructed. As far as we know today, however, there is currently no matter in the universe with tensions that are so much greater than their density. (99) This proves the wormhole theory as a thought experiment with no prospect of ever being turned into reality.

Another important point in the pre-astronautic ideology is the claim that extraterrestrial intelligences caused humans to become intelligent through an artificial mutation in the hominids' genetic makeup. (96) Otherwise, the leap from pre-humans to Homo sapiens sapiens (allegedly missing link) cannot be explained. Moreover, it would be downright improbable that extraterrestrials should have been present as cultural creators during the millions of years of life's development on Earth at precisely the time when our still uncivilized ancestors were just at the beginning of their development.

The intelligent human must therefore have been created by extraterrestrials. This last thought may be logical in itself, but it falls short because it does not take into account the alleged jumpiness in the development of typical human characteristics (e.g.

Intelligence) simply did not exist. Even the Homo erectus of Bilzingsleben possessed an impressive number of mental abilities 400,000 (!) years ago: He made small-format special tools out of stone for working with wood and for cutting and drilling through organic materials. With these tools he made cutting and hunting tools out of deer antlers, worked ivory and produced objects out of wood, e.g. even thrusting spears.

This European Homo erectus used fire in a targeted manner, built simple dwellings, and even demonstrated early ritual behavior. Some artifacts even showed rhythmic sequences of lines and geometric patterns - evidence that this pre-human was capable of abstract thought and the expression of these thoughts. (100) The time span of 350,000 years until the appearance of Homo sapiens sapiens should have been sufficient to complete the development into modern humans.

As a by-product of the claim that human intelligence was created by extraterrestrials, this new ›creationism‹ was then consistently thought through to the end and the emergence of life itself, at least on Earth, was seen as the result of controlled panspermia. (101, 102) The arguments of the genuine creationists were apparently conclusively proven here, whose theological ulterior motives are clearly evident, as quoted above all by the now deceased British astrophysicist Fred Hoyle.

An astrophysicist is not a biologist, not a paleontologist, and not a geneticist, which is already a serious objection today, given the high degree of specialization in modern science.
Therefore, the arguments against a natural origin of life on earth, which are mainly put forward using probability theory, are easy to refute. If you are interested, read Christian de Duve's Born of Dust. (103)

What kind of material 'evidence' is there of extraterrestrial intervention in the course of human history? What do the facts look like that are repeatedly referred to in the literature of pre-astronautics? There are three categories of so-called circumstantial evidence:

Category A includes technical puzzles, that is, outdated knowledge and technical-technological processes that are difficult or impossible to imagine with the means available at the time. Category B includes pictorial representations whose content seems to elude conventional attempts at interpretation. Category C brings together all old traditions in written or oral form that allow an interpretation in the sense of pre-astronautics.

Here are the most important, because apparently most convincing, ›proofs‹: Category A: - The pyramids of Giza - The Sacsayhuaman complex above Cusco - The stone carvings of Tiahuanaco - The terrace of Baalbek in Lebanon -
The monuments of the megalithic culture
(dolmens, menhirs, etc.)
- The Piri Reis map - The ›light bulbs‹ of Dendera - The tilma of Guadeloupe in Mexico - The geoglyphs on the Nasca plain Category B: - The gravestone of Palenque - The depictions on cylinder seals from Mesopotamia -
The golden ›aircraft models‹ from Colombia

Category C: -
The Book of Ezekiel from the Old Testament of the Bible - Old Sanskrit texts from India with descriptions of flying chariots - The traditions of the so-called Manna Machine - The apocryphal Book of Enoch - The Sirius riddle of the Dogon In order not to exceed the scope of this short treatise, which merely supplements the actual topic of this book, only three of these 'proofs' will be discussed as examples, those that have been printed in bold above. All the others will be taken into account in a book that will be published shortly and which aims to prove the earthly authorship of these 'riddles' of pre-astronautics.

Example 1 - the pyramids of Giza The size of the pyramids of Cheops and Chephren, with a height of just over 140 meters, and the outstanding quality of their construction gave reason to consider them as something special among the many Egyptian pyramids. They stood seemingly isolated as misunderstood wonders of the world in the Egyptian desert, as if they had no architectural history. They must therefore have been built with outside help, if not by 'foreigners' at all.

They did not fit in at all with the period around 2600 BCE, in which established Egyptologists wanted to see them built. No, their construction must have taken place thousands of years earlier, as Arab chroniclers reported, and according to some speculations even more than 10,000 years ago. (104)

The fact that the great pyramids of Giza were indeed built within the time period ascribed to them (according to new dating, probably about 300 years earlier) and were by no means present without immediate predecessors on the desert plateau near Cairo can be proven by three architectural peculiarities: their height, the construction of corbel vaults and the use of granite as a building material.

Cheops' predecessor on the throne of the pharaohs, his father Snofru, built a total of three pyramids, the Step Pyramid of Meidum, the so-called Bent Pyramid and the Red Pyramid of Dahshur. The volume of the three pyramids of this one pharaoh was 3.84 million cubic meters, while the volume of the Great Pyramid of Giza was only 2.4 million cubic meters. Which is therefore the more impressive building achievement? Probably that of Sneferu!

The evolution of pyramid construction took another remarkable step with Sneferu: for the first time, pyramids with smooth outer surfaces were constructed. The planned height of the Bent Pyramid, at 135 meters, was only about ten meters less than the height of the Great Pyramid of Cheops. It was only by reducing the angle of inclination that it became necessary during construction that the final height of 104.70 meters was achieved. The first regular, smooth pyramid, the Red Pyramid of Dahshur, then reached a height of 109 meters. (105)

The admirable corbel vault that spans the 'Great Gallery' within the Cheops pyramid also has its predecessors. A corbel vault is a type of gable roof with stepped side walls. This structural feature was first observed in the Snofru pyramid at Meidum. The corbel vault is also found as a dominant structural element in the other pyramids built under Snofru. (105)

The evolutionary development of pyramid construction in ancient Egypt is also evident in the use of granite as a decorative stone. While granite was used sporadically in the Great Pyramid of Giza, its proportion in the tomb of Cheops' son Djedefre was many times higher, at least 10,000 cubic meters.

During the reigns of the successors Chephren and Mycenae rinos, the use of granite became fashionable. (106)

As is easy to see, there is no reason to attribute the construction of the great pyramids of Giza to any builders other than those who practiced their craft so excellently during the time of the Pharaohs.

Example 2 - the terrace of Baalbek Within the gigantic temple complex of Baalbek in Lebanon, built by the Romans, the most important ancient sanctuary, the Temple of Jupiter, still stands out due to its dimensions.

The foundation of this temple consists partly (!) of stones, the dimensions of which are astonishing. The three largest weigh between 700 and 1000 tons. It was these that gave rise to the assumption in the 1960s that the temple terrace built from the large stones was the original structure, while the temple buildings above it were a structure repurposed by the Romans centuries, if not millennia later. If the Romans were not believed to be capable of transporting such loads, who could the builders have been? Once again, the extraterrestrial culture bearers were an obvious choice. Apart from the fact that the Romans were nevertheless able to transport loads of several hundred tons over long distances (see the example of the Egyptian obelisks), there are structural features that suggest, similar to the pyramids, that the platform and the temple were built at the same time.

Firstly, the quarry from which the material for the temple was extracted is located just one kilometre from the site. The proof that the three gigantic stones of the Temple of Jupiter came from this quarry is on site in the form of a giant stone that was ready for transport but was no longer transported for whatever reason.

On the other hand, a simple photo proves that large and small stones were used simultaneously (Figure 26). Below the

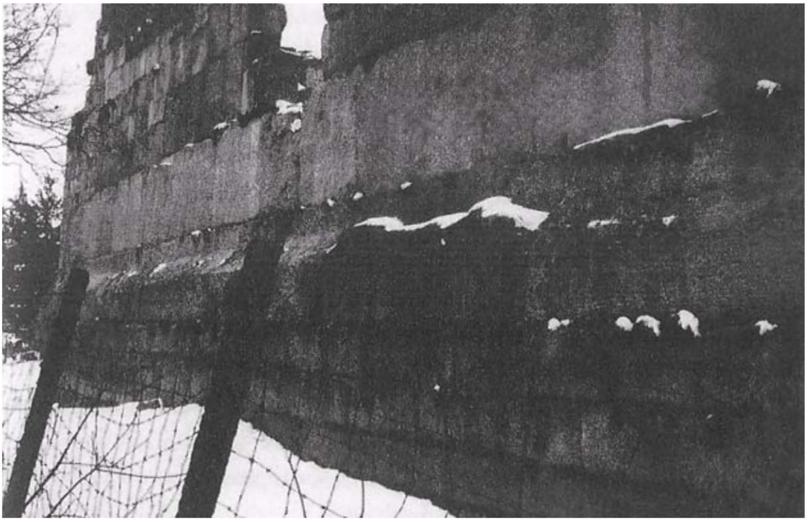

Abb. 26

Giant blocks are laid as a foundation with layers of small stones, which are also found in many other places in the extensive temple complex.

Example 3 - the map of the Turkish Admiral Piri Reis from 1513 This map attracted attention in the scientific community because it shows areas with great precision that, according to our understanding of history, could not have been known in 1513. This concerns the west coast of South America, which was only visited by the Spanish years later, and above all coastlines and islands of the Antarctic, which are now covered by a thick layer of ice.

The map would therefore have had to have been made at the end of the last ice age, around 11,000 years ago. A highly developed culture did not exist at that time. Thus, the authors had to be sought outside of the Earth, according to the conclusions drawn by representatives of pre-astronautics. (107)

Did they really have to?

The first question that arises is that of the period closest to our time in which the areas shown were actually ice-free. The last 'warm period' in this area ended 6,000 years ago. (108) So there is no need to go back another 5,000 years in the search for these great cartographers.

6000 years ago, the northern and western European megalithic culture reached its first peak. And here we find them: outstanding surveyors and daring sailors whose relics were later found all over the world. (109)

There is something else that speaks in favor of the megalithic people as the originators of the map: the so-called portolan maps used in the Middle Ages had a grid that was completely different from the one used today. It consists of centers, similar to compass roses, from which lines run at regular intervals like the spokes of a wheel and intersect with others. The explorer and specialist in medieval nautical charts, AE Nordenskiöld, already expressed the suspicion that there must have been something like an original portolan, the tradition of which stretches back far into antiquity. (108)

Around 1930, the French scholar Xavier Guichard reconstructed ancient European survey networks based on place names with the same name, which he assumed to have originated in the European Neolithic period.

According to Guichard, these survey networks correspond to the line network of the portolan charts. (110)

It can therefore be rightly assumed that the megalithic people not only used these nets to survey landscapes, but also that they must be regarded as the founders of cartography. They were able to use them to reach the South American coast with their ships 6,000 years ago and to reach the still ice-free areas of the Antarctic. As great surveyors, they did not forget to record their geographical discoveries on their maps.

Even if the known circumstantial evidence of pre-astronautics loses its evidential value, the supporters of this field of research still have one last hope: the actually 'hard', irrefutable evidence, for which the weakening term circumstantial evidence no longer applies.

The most well-known are the so-called 'metal library', which Erich von Däniken claims to have seen in a cave in Ecuador, and the 'time machine' above Sacsayhuaman, which Walter Ernsting described in his book The Day the Gods Died . (111, 112) Apart from the reports of the alleged eyewitnesses, nothing else exists that would confirm the evidential value of these 'discoveries'.

In March 1971, von Däniken claims to have been guided by the Argentinian Juan Moricz into a previously unknown cave system in Ecuador, in the eastern province of Morona-Santiago. In this story, which von Däniken describes as the 'most incredible, most improbable story of the century', it is above all the reports about the 'metal library' and the 'golden zoo' that attracted public attention. The 'library' is described as consisting of 'metal plates, some plates, some millimetre-thin metal foils', most of them measuring 96 by 8 centimetres, although 'after long and critical examination it remains a mystery which material has a consistency that allows such thin and large foils to stand upright. The characters on the metal plates are unknown.‹ (111) The description of the golden zoo is such that a comparison with the golden zoo of the Incas in their capital Cusco spontaneously comes to mind.

What is the truth behind this story?

Von Däniken himself later had to revise it on crucial points. Under pressure from the statements made by the Argentinean Moricz (113), he had to admit that he had been with him in the side entrance of a cave near the city of Cuenca.

The only flaw is that Cuenca is hundreds of kilometers from the province of Morona-Santiago. In a first attempt to decipher the characters, they were interpreted as not extraterrestrial at all, but as ancient Brahmanic. (114) In addition, Däniken's detailed descriptions of the 'metal library' are highly questionable, if one reads his statements to Tatjana Ingold, who is busy building up a Däniken archive. (115) According to this, he only saw the 'library' from a greater distance in the blurred light of flashlights. He estimated the block of metal plates to be a modest two meters long. This means that there is absolutely nothing left of this 'sensation' that would give rise to an extraterrestrial authorship.

The localization of ›near Cuenca‹ is indirectly confirmed by the reference to the existence of the ›golden zoo‹. In addition to the well-known one in Cusco, there was actually a second such zoo: in Tomebamba, which served the Incas as the second imperial capital alongside Cusco at the latest since the reign of the Inca Huayana Capac. (116) But Tomebamba is today's Cuenca.

Walter Ernsting's bestseller The Day the Gods Died is a novel as such. Nevertheless, both the author and his protagonist, Erich von Däniken, leave no doubt in the foreword and afterword as well as in various interviews that the essential aspects of the book correspond to the truth. (112, 115)

The extraterrestrial artifact described in the book is a kind of 'time machine' that can be used to travel back in time to the age of the astronaut gods, around 23,000 years ago. This device is said to have been discovered by a Mr. Holmes, who is apparently the French researcher Marcel Homet.

And again a system of underground passages plays a role. Far above the Inca fortress of Sacsayhuaman, on a rocky plateau directly in front of a mountain, are the weathered remains of a pyramid. Beneath these run partially glazed passages, and here is also the refuge of the ›time machine‹, a hermetically sealed chamber that can only be opened with a special mechanism. (112)

The directions in the book are clear, and I am surprised that, given the great interest that this book has attracted since it was first published in Germany in 1979, no one has been able to follow this description. I was last in Cusco in February 2003 and wanted to use my stay to visit the mysterious pyramid, among other things. As I said, I stuck closely to the text of Walter Ernsting's book. The mountain behind the plateau with the pyramid should be in a straight line above the Sacsayhuaman fortress and should be visible from there (Figure 27). Conversely, there had to be a clear view of the fortress from the plateau. Ernsting's starting point for his hike was a long barn above the fortress and directly on the road leading from Cusco to Pisac. From there, after just under an hour of brisk ascent, I reached the 'pyramid'. Walter Ernsting described it as follows: ›One could in fact hardly call the building a pyramid ...

Actually it was just a flat, grassy hill, with here and there carved boulders sticking out.' And elsewhere: 'I reached the evenly shaped hill. ... Heavy boulders formed a real blockade that one had to climb over ...

‹

From the plateau, about 4000 meters above sea level, I documented the view of the ›pyramid‹ with my camera (Figure 28). The photo and Walter Ernsting's description leave no doubt: the two pyramids are identical.

What about the underground passages, the chamber, the 'time machine'?

All of these things are imaginative ingredients of a writer. The route description to the 'pyramid' is documentation, after that the novel begins.

The ›pyramid‹ could not have been part of an extraterrestrial ›fortress‹, as claimed in the book, designed to ward off a nuclear strike from their enemies. The nature of the rock speaks against this. It is not just a

Machine Translated by Google

Abb. 27

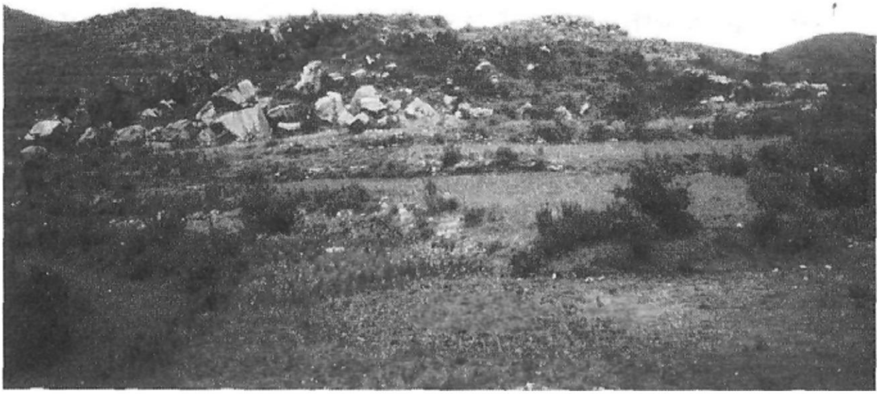

Abb. 28

For example, it is not hard granite, but only soft limestone. The rocks that were blown away into the valley during the attack by the explosion, according to the book, do not exist either. It remains to be examined whether the few stones in the area around the 'pyramid' that give the impression of being artificially worked are perhaps just stones that have been smoothed by wind and weather.

Even if the supposedly 'hard' evidence of pre-astronautics does not keep its promise, one question still remains unanswered: If no extraterrestrials were the originators of the sightings of unusual flying objects reported in ancient times, then who? Which earthly teachers visited peoples around the globe with their flying ships and left lasting traces in their traditions?

A series of detailed descriptions on the one hand refutes the claim that the phenomena observed could have natural causes, but on the other hand leaves no doubt that the technologies used must have been relatively primitive, seen through the eyes of our time. This aspect then takes away the last credibility of the pre-astronautical hypothesis.

A few examples may prove this: In the ancient Indian scriptures, especially in the Vedas, there are frequent references to flying machines, also called Vimaanas. The origin of the Vedas is dated by most scholars to the period between 1500 and 1000 BCE. The ancient texts speak of the use of liquid fuels, such as alcohol, honey, fermented rice and an extract of the soma plant, which suggests that the Vimaanas could have been hot air balloons. (117)

It is particularly interesting that mercury is also mentioned again and again as a fuel: ›The force resting in the mercury, which sets the driving whirlwind in motion, enables a man to travel a great distance in the sky in a miraculous way. ...

Four strong mercury containers must be installed. When these are heated by regulated fire from the iron containers, the Vimaana develops the power of thunder through the mercury and appears like a pearl in the sky.‹ (101)

In nature, mercury occurs in both free and bound states. When mercury is heated, it escapes as a gas. Its volumetric efficiency is very high and enables enormous thrust. In a vehicle built according to the Vedic texts, 230 liters of alcohol could be replaced by 2.5 liters of mercury. (117)

Prof. Dr. Apel of the University of Bremen, whose field of expertise includes rocket jet propulsion and flight propulsion, considers the descriptions of the flight characteristics of mercury-powered Vimaanas to be evidence of former high-speed flight. (118)

In the first century BCE, Kalidasa, a well-known poet on the Indian subcontinent at the time, describes in 30 verses of the Raghuvamsa an air journey of the 'god' Rama from Ceylon to the city of Ayodhya. The flight lasted a whole day, interrupted by two short stopovers. During this time, around 2900 kilometers were covered. (117) If we assume twelve hours of pure flight time (they certainly only flew during daylight hours), this gives an average speed of 240 kilometers per hour, which would be a rather embarrassing achievement for extraterrestrials. However, this speed would be too high for a balloon propelled by the force of the wind and the organic fuels described above. This may be why Rama's Vimaana was a mercury-powered airship.

The description in the Kebra Negest, a book that glorifies the deeds of the ancient Ethiopian kings , is different . It describes how Bainalekhem, the son of King Solomon and Queen Makeda, carried the Ark of the Covenant from Jerusalem to Ethiopia in a 'flying chariot' around 950 BCE. The journey took 13 days in one day. If an average daily distance of 40 kilometers is assumed for the royal entourage's journey over land on camels, this results in a flight speed of around 50 kilometers per hour. This fact, as well as the reference to the fact that the flying ship had a large 'kitchen' with fireplaces and large cauldrons, rightly leads us to think of a balloon powered by hot air, especially since it was accompanied by a noise similar to that of a flying machine.

Mercury propulsion is not reported within the description. (118)

Reports of flying chariots also reach us from China. The book Po wy chih, written in the third century , notes the mysterious flying chariots of the Chi-Kung people: 'The Chi-Kung are an ingenious people. They know many things that remain hidden from other peoples. They travel through the air at lightning speed on large chariots. When Emperor T'ang ruled the world, a western wind carried the flying chariots to Yuchow, where they landed.' Another poet writes: 'In conjunction with the wind, this people strained their brains and invented a flying chariot.' Is this also a reference to a hot air balloon? Supposedly these reports go back to a time that is almost 3800 years away from us today. (119)

Interesting in this context are the ›western winds‹, which could give rise to the assumption that the people known as Chi-kung were native to Europe.

A similar report comes from India. Berthold Laufer quotes it in his work The Prehistory of Aviation: ›So the king ... sat in the celestial chariot. They reached the expanse of the firmament and finally followed the route of the winds. The celestial chariot flew around the earth over the oceans and was then steered towards the city of Avantis, where a festival was taking place.‹ (120)

Doesn't Avantis remind us of Atlantis? Didn't we actually have to fly over the waters of the oceans on the way there? And wasn't Atlantis also in Europe, as was probably the home of the Chi-kung? Since Jürgen Spanuth's extensive research, there should no longer be any doubt that Atlantis was in the North Sea, in the area of Heligoland and the Dogger Bank. (121) The culture of Atlantis developed directly from the Nordic megalithic culture, whose highly developed knowledge and skills have already been briefly discussed in connection with the Piri Reis map. I am of the opinion that Spanuth was denied final scientific recognition only because his concept of a high culture in the Nordic Bronze Age met with decisive resistance from political correctness. After 1945, it was simply not legitimate to attribute to the Germanic peoples and to grant their ancestors anything like culture at all.

Spanuth dated the culture of Atlantis to the period from 2000 to 1200 BCE and pointed out with good arguments that the 9000 years from Plato's Atlantis report are based on a misunderstanding.

These few examples of an advanced earthly culture that also spread its achievements across the world by air have shown one thing: the Vedas, the reports from the time of the biblical Solomon (according to Spanuth, Solomon received the technology from the Nordic Philistines), those about the Chi-kung people as well as about Atlantis can all be dated to the Nordic Bronze Age.

Since no similar traditions have come down to us from the time of the megalithic culture, the art of flying could not have developed until around 2000 BCE at the earliest. No extraterrestrial development aid was required for this.

What further course did the history of this advanced civilization take? How did it end?

Where can their remains be found today? Does history that is assumed to be known need to be subjected to a new interpretation? My forthcoming book will provide detailed answers to these and other questions.«

CHAPTER 5

THE EARTHLY HEADQUARTERS

Where is the "General Staff" of the Third Power located? There must be an operations center somewhere from which the orders for carrying out the extensive activities described are sent. This earthly headquarters does not necessarily have to be identical with the place that serves as the material base, e.g. as the production site for the flying discs. Keeping the "head" and "executive organs" of this organization spatially separate could be a simple security requirement.

Speculations about the location of this headquarters have already been made elsewhere. (15) It is suspected to be in areas that are difficult to access even today, such as the jungles of South America or the Andean region, whereby the reference to Wilhelm Landig cannot be overlooked.

In Chapter 2, the question of the truthfulness of Landig's statement that the Third Power had found its refuge not only in Antarctica (Argentina) but also in an ancient, artificially created cave system under the Andes could not be answered satisfactorily.

On the one hand, these caves, created by an unknown culture, actually appear to exist in Peru, Ecuador and Chile, but on the other hand, the facts obtained so far indicate that the main events surrounding the Third Power took place in Peron's Argentina. There is no evidence of such cave systems there. One could make it easy and claim that these caves have their counterparts in the underground facilities of Huemul. Given the comparatively small size of this research complex, however, this would at least leave an uneasy feeling.

Landig's veracity stands and falls with the actual existence of extensive and artificially created cave systems in which the activities of the Third Power can be proven! If these caves are found, the headquarters of the Third Power will be identified.

Machine Translated by Google

The answer to the question about the Earth's headquarters is surprising, and above all, surprisingly simple. It is not located in remote areas, nor does it require shielding by hypermodern security systems. It is right in the middle of us, that is, in the civilized world, and its camouflage is as simple as it is ingenious.

Who would have thought that the headquarters of the Third Power has been hidden under the guise of a small religious sect for more than 40 years?!

Where? Here is the route description:

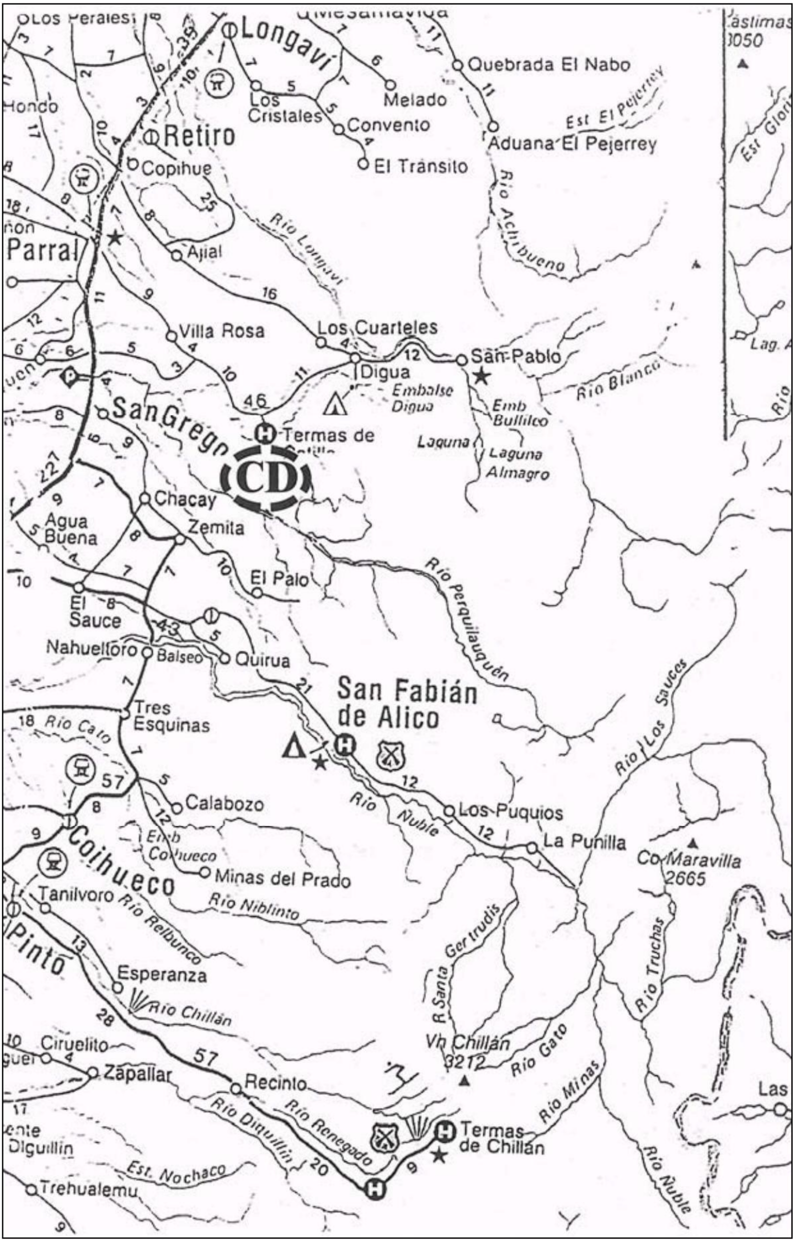
Drive south from the capital of Chile, Santiago, on the Pan-American Highway. After about 450 kilometers you will reach the exit to the town of Parral, the birthplace of the Chilean poet Pablo Neruda.

»If you turn east from here towards the Andes, you will drive through three small villages, past miserable cottages and rickety huts, 40 kilometres along a red sand track, and you will reach the village of Termas de Catillo, a spot that is nothing more than a spa hotel built around hot springs and a dozen houses. At the fork in the road there is a sign pointing to the 'Villa Baviera', the Bavarian village, a bridge, 20 kilometers of well-maintained sand track, cattle fences on the right and left, then a rise, on a hill a 30-meter-high watchtower, finally higher fences, some neatly painted stables, a school, also behind the fences, a spruced-up chapel surrounded by barbed wire and a huge boulder with the words 'Villa Baviera' carved into it." (122) (Figure 29) This Bavarian village, as it is called today, became better known under the name Colonia Dignidad.

A clear distinction must be made between the official story of Colonia Dignidad, which served its purpose of camouflaging the entire operation in a first-class manner, and the true story.

The official history reads as follows: "The origins of Colonia Dignidad are undoubtedly Christian." (123) Its founder, Paul Schäfer, born on December 4, 1921, split the evangelical sect from the Federation of Evangelical Free Churches in Germany in 1956. In the statutes of the association, which was founded on December 31, 1956, the Protestant sect was founde December 1956, it is written: »The private social mission, based in Heide near Siegburg, pursues exclusively and directly charitable and philanthropic purposes. ... Its task is to provide external and internal support to the less well-off and those in need of recreation.

Machine Translated by Google



Los Perales
Longaví
Hondo
Los Cristales
Melado
Convento
El Tránsito
Quebrada El Nabo
Aduana El Pejerrey
Est El Pejerrey
Retiro
Copihue
Parral
Ajial
Río Longaví
Río Achibueno
Villa Rosa
Los Cuarteles
Digua
Embalse Digua
San Pablo
Río Blanco
Emb Bullileo
Laguna
Laguna Almagro
San Gregorio
Termas de Catillo
CD
Chacay
Agua Buena
Zemita
El Palo
El Sauce
Nahueltoro
Balseo
Quirua
Río Perquilauquén
San Fabián de Alico
Tres Esquinas
Río Cato
Calabozo
Emb Coihueco
Minas del Prado
Río Niblinto
Coihueco
Tanilvoro
Río Relbunco
Pinto
Esperanza
Río Chillán
Los Puquios
La Punilla
Río Ñuble
Río Los Sauces
Co Maravilla 2665
Río Truchas
R. Santa Gertrudis
Vn Chillán 3212
Río Gato
Río Minas
Ciruelito
Zapallar
Recinto
Río Diguillín
Río Renegado
Termas de Chillán
Diguillín
Est. Nochaco
Trehualemu
Río Ñuble
Las Lag.
Est Gloria
Castimas 3050
227
46
43
57
28
20 21
12

Abb. 29

To provide help; to take in young people at risk and in need into the mission house; to arrange vacation and leisure stays for young people and adults. These tasks are connected with the proclamation of the gospel.« (122) Schäfer later founded a children's home in Siegburg under the name Private Sociale Mission , in which the children of the members were housed. (60)

In 1961, with the active assistance of the then Chilean ambassador in Bonn, Arturo Maschke, Schäfer managed to quickly complete all the necessary formalities for a mass emigration of the cult members from Germany to Chile.

»The estate where the emigrants arrived consisted of a half-ruined stone house and a few wooden huts. It was the Fundo El Lavadero, 1800 hectares of muddy, impassable land along a river that overflows its banks in the rainy winters.

On 1 September 1961, by decree no. 39490 of the Chilean Ministry of the Interior, the Sociedad Benefactora y Educacional Dignidad became the legal entity and owner of the site.« (122)

The decent Germans were welcome in Chile. The 1800 hectares of mission land from 1961 have now grown to more than 14,000 hectares. By the mid-1970s, 871 hectares of arable land had been cultivated, 300,000 trees planted, 131 kilometers of roads and 58 bridges built, according to internal statistics from the colony. The 1992 census registered 208 residents not born in Chile on the site, 94 men and 114 women. The colony's official figures speak of a total of 329 residents. The German embassy in Santiago, on the other hand, assumes that there are 400 German citizens behind the camp's fences.

The exact circumstances remained unclear. (122)

After the military coup of 1973, Colonia Dignidad allegedly developed into a torture and labor camp run by the former Chilean secret service DINA. In the 1990s, various criminal proceedings were initiated against the cult's founder, Paul Schäfer, for sexual abuse and deprivation of liberty, particularly of children. The veracity of these accusations cannot and should not be assessed at this point.

The fact is that Schäfer was searched for without success over the long period between 1996 and 2005. It was not until March 2005 that he was found in

Machine Translated by Google

Argentina. (60) The relationship between the Chilean authorities and the colony seems to have improved since 2003.

normalized. Due to a tacit agreement between the Chilean government, the armed forces and Schäfer's deputy, the doctor Hartmut Hopp, the colony is to be transformed into an agricultural cooperative. (60)

The true story of Colonia Dignidad could also be played differently.

What if:

- a few years after the Second World War, some leaders of the German underground organisation had set up a conspiratorial contact and coordination office (one of many) under the guise of an evangelical free church community, in response to the fall of Peron in September 1955 and the resulting insecurity in the retreat area of Argentina (see Chapter 2), this "community" was given a different task in the medium term and
- therefore, and in order to gain complete freedom of action, it split off from the Federation of Evangelical Free Churches in Germany in 1956, with the evacuation of the Argentinian base in 1961 (see Chapter 2), the need for a new refuge finally arose, which was started to be set up in September 1961 with the founding of the colony on Chilean soil, the perfect camouflage could also be maintained in the following years by having a few hundred "uninitiated" cult followers act as figureheads for the public, but in addition the base had a experienced massive expansion and was able to replace the previous bases in Argentina through extensive
- economic self-sufficiency, solid financing and a modern military infrastructure, the power emanating from that headquarters was, at least until recently, absolutely unchallenged, so that ultimately all > Attacks against Colonia Dignidad, which have been carried out under various pretexts, have had to fail?

Unbelievable? All just an arbitrary construction of facts that aren't facts?

The correlation of the events in 1961 alone is strange enough and should give reason to examine the other points for their validity.

Who were those men who played a leading role in the fate of the “sect” and the colony?

Paul Schäfer did not appear as the official president of the colony, but rather Hermann Schmidt, who served until his death in 1995. He was an air force officer during the war and also a member of the NSDAP.

Kurt Schnellenkamp, a former member of the Leibstandarte Adolf Hitler, was registered as Hermann Schmidt's representative.
As a buyer for the colony, he traveled all over the world and cars and airplanes were registered in his name. He also had authority over all of the colony's accounts. He was also the liaison with the Chilean police and military.

Gerhard Mücke, who received his education during the Third Reich at one of the National Political Education Institutes (NAPOLA), one of the elite schools alongside the Adolf Hitler Schools, served as security chief. (122)

Hugo Baar, co-founder of the sect and Schäfer's long-hand man for two decades, served in the Wehrmacht as a Russian-German during the war and received the Close Combat Clasp for his service. (123)

And the spiritus rector of the sect, Paul Schäfer, himself?

According to his own statements, he served as a medic during the war. In his hometown in Germany, there is a rumor that he was a "big shot in the Hitler Youth." This would correspond to the fact that after 1945 he continued the methods of the National Socialist youth organization under supposedly Christian auspices and initially gathered around himself a group of up to 50 boys, none of them older than 14 years. As a "youth worker," he organized camps, hikes, singing evenings, theater performances, and, quite incidentally, Bible evenings, entirely in line with the nationalist model.

However, nobody knows exactly what he did during the war. The only evidence is that he was registered with the police in Ringstrasse in Troisdorf in 1940. The Federal Archives, the former Berlin Document Center and the office of the Federal Commissioner for the Records of the State Security of the former GDR also has no records on Paul Schäfer. One thing is certain: five years of Paul Schäfer's life cannot be reconstructed! (122) The Hitler Youth version has a lot to it. Was he selected here so that he could work in underground work after a lost war?

Is this perhaps the reason for the “deleted” files?

Also interesting in this context is the person of the man who helped the "sect leadership" to clarify the necessary formalities for emigration. Arturo Maschke, whose name was of German descent, served the Chilean government as ambassador in Berlin in 1961. Maschke made no secret of his opinion that he would like to see the Chilean race refreshed with German blood. In terms of his worldview, he seems to have differed little from his "protégés" in the Colonia.

Even later, they appreciated Maschke's patronage, as he, as head of the Chilean National Bank and Minister of Finance, granted customs and tax privileges that contributed significantly to the solid financial basis of the colony. (123)

Why was Chile predestined as a new location for the Headquarters of the Third Power?

The general conditions that were probably decisive for the selection were, on the one hand, the immediate proximity to Argentina, and, on the other hand, the strong German ethnic group that had already established itself in the 19th century and experienced significant growth again after the Second World War.

And what about the Chilean public? Did they have any idea about the secret background of Colonia Dignidad?

Since the colony was founded in 1961, voices have repeatedly been raised that have been able to establish a clear connection between it and National Socialism. As late as 1966, the Chilean press did not hesitate to describe the settlement as a Nazi refuge.

A number of other explanations can also be placed in this context.

In December 1978, the former prisoner Eduardo Garces testified in the Bonn trial of Colonia Dignidad against Amnesty International that an employee of the secret service had said to him: "Since you will not get out of here alive, I can tell you that there are a lot of people here who worked with the GESTAPO during the Second World War." The statement made by the former secret service agent Rene Munoz Alarcon in June 1977, shortly before his murder, reads similarly: "... they sent me to Colonia Dignidad, about 40 kilometers inland from Parral. There was a training center for the national secret service, run by Germans who now also have Chilean citizenship. They are old Germans who came here after the war." And then comes a statement which - if it is true - is almost impossible to surpass in its evidential value. Referring to the old Germans: »... and have a real regiment in the Colonia Dignidad.« (!!!) (123)

The Catholic priest Vinzenz Gottschalk from the southern Chilean city of Osorno did not want to and could not break the seal of confession, but at least he said this much: "In my opinion, there are connections from Dignidad here to the south. I know people who I will not name in order to protect them: these people used to be in the SS. Now they live here. I am convinced that there are connections between these people and Colonia Dignidad." And as late as the 1990s, the Christian Democratic politician Gabriel Valdes declared: "After the Second World War, many Germans who emigrated to Chile were old Nazis. I know several of these people personally. ... that Colonia Dignidad has a fascinating effect on many neo-Nazis in Chile.

Today there is undeniably a close connection between neo-Nazis and the colony.« (122) Why, one may ask.

One thing is certain: the Chilean public was clearly well aware of the true background of Colonia Dignidad. It was just not legitimate to make the truth known. Anyone who did so had to expect the worst possible consequences, as was made clear in the case of secret service agent Rene Munoz Alarcon.

In addition, members of the Chilean “circle of friends” of the colony, who were in influential positions, watched over the Maintaining the status quo. The spiral of silence could therefore only rarely be broken. This "circle of friends" was founded in 1978 and comprised around a thousand members. (123)

The crucial question in all of this, however, is that of the hard facts that prove once and for all that Colonia Dignidad is not a non-profit religious association, but that the infrastructure for the headquarters of the Third Power is located on its territory.

There are many misconceptions about the size of the colony. It is not just a small village with its own hospital and a little farmland. The area of Colonia Dignidad almost quintupled in the 30 years between 1961 and 1991, from 3,000 hectares to almost 15,000 hectares. That corresponds to 150 square kilometers, or, to put it simply, a square of twelve by twelve kilometers. There was therefore more than enough space for all kinds of secret activities.

While on the surface the "settlers" pursued their apparently peaceful activities and contributed to the economic self-sufficiency of the community through extensive agriculture, a widespread system of artificially created, bunker-like caves and the tunnels connecting them was created underground.

How did these underground facilities come to be discovered?

After the end of the military dictatorship in Chile, the cult site was investigated several times in connection with the aforementioned criminal trials against Paul Schäfer. However, it was not possible to catch Schäfer at the time. The good contacts of the "circle of friends" repeatedly prevented such an operation from being kept secret. As a result, every inspection of the site remained a farce and Paul Schäfer was able to evade arrest. The investigator responsible for the Schäfer case, special prosecutor Hernan Gonzales, summed up the results of the on-site investigations: "The police used so-called ground-penetrating radar devices a few times. The top technology, which is a matter of course in a classic mining country like Chile, revealed a complex system of tunnels and bunkers in the ground deep beneath Colonia Dignidad." But the police chief Luis Henriquez, who was in charge of the on-site investigations, also waited in vain for permission from the government palace in Santiago to begin excavations. Elsewhere, lawyer

Fernandez also describes the bunker system as an "underground city". The shielding of the area with a camera, infrared and listening system is of a technical complexity and sophistication that civilians cannot afford. (124)

One of the most thorough researchers into the true background of Colonia Dignidad, Friedrich Paul Heller, writes in one of his books about the »extensive system of camouflaged underground tunnels and bunkers«: »At that time, the settlement was equipped with underground bunkers, command centers (as headquarters; author's note), a comprehensive secret warning and surveillance system and an underground airfield ... ... The underground installations include hydraulic elevators, which were apparently used to bring airplanes into takeoff position.« (125) In keeping with this, campesinos in the area around Colonia Dignidad reported that Airplanes fly into and out of mountains within the settlement. (60)

By the way: were they really always just conventional airplanes? Chile is one of the countries with the highest frequency of UFO sightings. But more on that later.

One thing is certain: Friedrich Paul Heller certainly came pretty close to solving the mystery of Colonia Dignidad, but in the end he was fobbed off with a story that - given the facts that have since become known - was intended to prevent the final explanation.

According to this, the expansion of Colonia Dignidad into a "Chilean Peenemünde" (!) was carried out by the German Colonel Hans-Ulrich Rudel, at a time when, after the Chilean military coup of 1973, war with Argentina seemed inevitable. The colony would have been one of a total of five secret military bases built. (60) The aim of this declaration, which was made to disguise the game of hide-and-seek surrounding Colonia Dignidad that has not yet ended, should be clear. Now that everything about the deeds and misdeeds of the Chilean military dictatorship has become known, and even when the existence of this project, allegedly called Andrea , is no longer a secret, why should the official inspection of a conventional military base that is no longer in use cause difficulties? Similar military bases with underground launch facilities exist all over the world.

There is another claim related to the underground facilities of Colonia Dignidad. According to this, the inhabitants of the colony dug a tunnel all the way to Argentina. (122)

This cannot be verified, but it makes deeper sense when one considers the history of Colonia Dignidad.

And Hans-Ulrich Rudel? Could he actually have been involved, even if not in the way Friedrich Paul Heller imagines? Is it conceivable that Rudel was involved in expanding the colony into an earthly base for the Third Power?

Colonel Rudel (1916-1982) was the most highly decorated soldier in the German Wehrmacht. As the only recipient of the Golden Oak Leaves with Swords and Diamonds to the Knight's Cross of the Iron Cross, he had fantastic successes as a Stuka pilot. Two figures can be presented here as examples: he flew against the enemy 2,530 times. He managed to shoot down 519 Soviet tanks.

After the war, he also went to Argentina and joined the Argentine Ministry of Aviation. He was assigned to the design group at the Cordoba aircraft factory. (23)

In addition to this, his official activity, he founded the so-called Kameradenwerk in 1948, which he chaired until 1955. This organization not only maintained contact with the Reich German technicians who were also employed in Argentina, but also helped others persecuted by the victorious powers of the Second World War to have a second life, including Dr. Mengele (see 3.

Chapter). After the change of power in Argentina, Rudel went to Paraguay, where he played a similar role under dictator Stroessner as he had previously under Peron.

On November 21, 1952, an apparently well-informed magazine wrote about the Kameradenwerk: "Rudel has been proclaimed leader..." (28) There is no doubt that the public perceived Rudel as the most prominent and, due to his diverse business contacts, the most active representative of the Reich Germans exiled to Argentina. But even within internal circles, his leadership role seemed undisputed.

However, only a few people will know that with Rudel’s proclamation, one of Adolf Hitler’s cherished wishes had also come true.

One of Hitler's star architects, Hermann Giesler, recounts a confidential conversation in his book Another Hitler , which dealt with the question of Hitler's successor.

Hitler said something like this: "I have long been aware that only a soldier of great stature is entitled to lead the nation when I withdraw after the war. ...

In addition to the prudent boldness and bravery, there had to be charisma. Smart and logical thinking was essential, combined with an interest in modern technology and cultural openness. I was looking for an imaginative soldier with leadership qualities. This, of course, spoke in favor of an officer with noticeable authority. He had to be convinced that this fight was not just being fought for Germany, but for Europe. He had to be steadfast, and above all he had to have character. ... I found him - the Stuka pilot Rudel!« (126)

Was Rudel in Colonia Dignidad? According to Friedrich Paul Heller, in May 1999 the responsible officer in the Foreign Office told him on the phone: "Rudel was also on the premises." During the subsequent conversation in the Foreign Office, in which another witness took part, this statement remained undisputed. (60)

Rudel as "leader" of the Third Power? What about Hans Kammler or Karl Hanke? Without a doubt they were subordinate to Rudel, since he was the only one who had the necessary freedom of movement - free from any persecution.

What really happens in the catacombs beneath Colonia Dignidad? Lawyer Fernandez even spoke of an underground city!
Does it serve solely as a command center, as the location of the German regiment that Rene Munoz Alarcon reported on, and as a base for the aircraft? Or is there more going on here?

A hint of further possible activities in the colony's underground could be contained in the reports of those abducted by UFOs who - as described in Chapter 3 - were not subjected to the described medical tests and reproductive procedures in the UFOs themselves.

These abductees stated that their astonishing experiences happened in underground facilities that were very similar to military bases on earth. That a connection between the abduction scenario and Colonia Dignidad actually exists will be shown later.

However, it is unlikely that the colony will be used as a production facility, for example for the complete assembly of flying discs. The existing infrastructure would probably not be sufficient for this.
Nevertheless, less complex manufacturing processes could be implemented in the colony. One conceivable option would be the provision of raw materials.

This is the only way to explain why the colony, which outwardly wants to be nothing more than a functioning religious community, has acquired mining rights to various strategic metals.

Near the village of Trovolhue (Cautin province), the colony acquired 99-year mining rights for the metals titanium and molybdenum.
Allegedly, Colonia Dignidad and its front company ABRATEC, which has business ties to the Brussels company ABRACOR, only carried out test drilling here. Allegedly...

The colony also has two gold mines, one near Temuco in southern Chile and the other near Tirua, south of Concepcion.

In the north of Chile, it also operates a sulphur and a Mercury mine. (123)
And then there is the interview with the father of an air force officer. When asked about the connections that Colonia Dignidad maintains, he answered verbatim: "They are very powerful, have all the help they need from their country and are in direct contact with Canada, where there is a large center for scientific nuclear experiments and where they supply some semi-processed raw materials." (123) This could confirm the assumption about the possible production of raw materials in the colony, even if the reference to Canada should once again be interpreted as a cover.

The claim of the witness mentioned is also materially backed up: the colony also mines the strategic raw material uranium in Chile! (122)
The air force officer allegedly worked as a reconnaissance officer in the Chilean General Staff and apparently maintained constant contact with the colony, as he is said to have stayed there for a total of 14 months.
Another very interesting piece of information he shared is as follows:

»They are obviously working on something big, and part of the Experiments, only a part of the laboratory, they do there, from

For security reasons, there are several laboratories in different parts of the world." What could this "big thing" be that is being worked on in the colony?

Couldn't there possibly be a connection with the ones in the 2nd

What about the projects mentioned in the chapter The Bell, Lantern Carrier and Chronos, for the realization of which mercury and titanium apparently played a special role? If the flying discs that function on the basis of anti-gravity have already existed for a long time, then at least the Chronos project would certainly still have potential for development.

Is the time machine perhaps hidden behind the "big one"? Well, that remains speculation for now.

What is the economic situation of the colony?

In order to safeguard its position of power, Colonia Dignidad strives to be as economically independent as possible. "The colony is self-sufficient. Only salt and rice have to be imported from outside. Otherwise, the colonists provide for themselves. Cattle and pig pens for intensive animal breeding and a chicken farm have been built on the site; fruit, vegetables, potatoes, lettuce and grain are grown. Deer and roe deer are kept in a game reserve.

The colony operates its own grain mill, a bakery, a butcher's shop, a cheese factory, honey extractors and a 'juice shop' where lemonades, fruit juices and jams are produced, a leather workshop, a sawmill, a carpenter's shop, an electronics workshop, a blacksmith's shop, a turning shop, car repair shops, an aircraft maintenance hangar, painting workshops and storage and cooling rooms for grain one, cakes, meat, sausage and canned goods. The colony also has a hospital, a restaurant with an amusement park, a gravel plant and a concrete plant for road construction, its own fishing fleet consisting of three ocean-going cutters, a timber trade, a rapeseed mill and a food distribution company. (122)

This also partly answers the question of how Colonia Dignidad finances itself.

The colony markets the entire diversity of its agricultural production as "German products" and also as genuine organic goods with great success throughout the country, and the Andean honey "Tres picos" (remember this term!) even as far as Germany. (122)

Grants worth millions were provided by the Chilean government also paid to the colony's hospital, since under certain conditions this is also open to residents from the surrounding area of the colony.

As mentioned above, the customs and tax privilege granted by the former Chilean finance minister and head of the Chilean National Bank, Arturo Maschke, contributed significantly to the colony's solid financial basis. This exempted the colony from all taxes and customs duties. Given the variety and extent of the economic activities, the additional profit that resulted from this can only be estimated. It must have been immense.

The exemption from customs duties had another pleasant effect: the import and export of goods that were shipped in overseas containers owned by the colony could be processed as a charitable transaction without any control. This meant that the headquarters of the Third Power could supply itself unhindered with everything that was necessary for carrying out official and secret activities! There is at least one example that this was actually the case. Although the investigations of the colony grounds initiated by the law enforcement authorities in search of Paul Schäfer were never crowned with success, the "colonists" did make a mistake once. Apparently they were warned too late, and in the remaining time they did not manage to take some of the containers on the grounds underground in time. The containers in question contained machine tools, factory equipment, lathes and other equipment, the purpose of which the police could not determine and which had absolutely nothing to do with the charitable activities of the sect. (122)

In the post-Pinochet era, the colony was stripped of its non-profit status. The colony's assets, estimated at more than 100 million US dollars at the time, were privatized. Abratec SA (122) now acts as the holding company for all companies. This development had no negative impact on the course of business.

Are the pieces of evidence presented sufficiently conclusive to establish the identity of Colonia Dignidad with the headquarters of the Third Power?

Even if so, the chain of evidence should be extended by further links.

The UFOs - this term refers to the supposedly unknown

Machine Translated by Google

Flying objects have been flying around the world since 1947, and there is hardly a country in which they have not been sighted. If one follows the relevant publications, it is noticeable that the area of South America seems to be particularly frequently visited by these aerial intruders.

Chile is no exception here.

Nevertheless, it took until November 3, 1997 for the Chilean Air Force to end its UFO secrecy and agree to work with civilian UFO researchers. On that day, the Air Force created the Committee for the Investigation of Anomalous Space Phenomena (CIFAE). The staff of the CIFAE consists of the military officers and members of the private Chilean for UFO organization AION. (127)

The UFOs suddenly became a matter worthy of investigation. This was preceded by one of the largest waves of UFO sightings in history. This shows that, as expected, there is indeed a connection between increased UFO activity and the headquarters of the Third Power! The reports of the campesinos in the area around Colonia Dignidad, who saw planes flying in and out of the mountains on the colony's grounds, do not indicate that these were necessarily only conventional planes.

A few months after the Chilean military had dared to go public, Captain Cristian Puebla, professor of aeronautics at the Chilean Air Force Academy and one of the coordinators of the UFO project, stated in an interview with Chilean television: "Yes, these UFOs have appeared all over our country and, based on the way they maneuver, I can only say that they are of extraterrestrial origin. It is impossible that these UFOs were created by human hands." (128) It should not have escaped the attention of such a person that aircraft with an anti-gravity drive are capable of such maneuvers. But he simply cannot believe what he sees: the anti-gravity drive, which he considers revolutionary, is an earthly product!

The third chapter reported on how the Third Power implemented the flying disc technology developed by German scientists during the last World War on a large scale after 1945. An essential component of this so-called UFO phenomenon are the reports of people abducted by UFOs for the purpose of genetic reproduction of the Nordic race. It is therefore to be expected that there is not only a connection between the headquarters of the Third Power and the activities of the UFOs, but that a connection can also be made with the UFO abduction phenomenon. It was already suggested above that the underground facilities of the colony could have provided the background for those abduction reports according to which the genetic experiments described are said to have taken place in underground facilities.

In addition, there is further evidence to suggest such a connection.

When recounting the official history of Colonia Dignidad, attention has already been drawn to the inconsistencies regarding the exact number of colony inhabitants.

The author Gero Gemballa writes in his book: "The number of children in the colony is still a big secret. Experts have tried to determine the number of actual residents of the camp using photos and films from the colony that have been made available so far - and have come across a mystery. There are apparently significantly more children than would have been expected from the colony's official statistics on births and adoptions. When asked how many young people under the age of 18 there are in the colony, the agricultural advisor to Colonia Dignidad, a Dutchman named Kollonaji, replied: "About half, I think, about 50 or 60." This number is somewhat surprising, since it is known from the official members of the sect that married life and family life cannot take place between them and that there are no opportunities for intimate encounters with people of the opposite sex.

When asked about their German playmates, Chilean children from the colony unanimously reported that the German children did not know who their parents were and claimed that the German children had no parents at all!

These reports are confirmed by the statement of the then 18-year-old Zalo Luna told the Chilean parliament that sexual contact was strictly forbidden in the colony. However, there was a kindergarten full of children whose origins nobody knew. And then the decisive sentence: In the colony, Experiments with artificial insemination have taken place. This is in line with the statement by Adrian Bravo, chairman of the colony's patient committee until 1996: "In the colony, artificial insemination is used on animals. I know that. Frozen and fresh semen is used for this. This has had good results. They are very familiar with the method. The origins of many children are unknown. They are not registered with the registry office in Catillo or the embassy in Santiago. That is why one thinks that they have also used what they did on animals on humans."

In all of this, Mr. Bravo seems to have overlooked the fact that even in the case of artificial insemination, one parent, namely the mother carrying the child, is known. However, several witnesses independently claim that both parents of these children are unknown. It almost seems as if Adrian Bravo knew more than he was initially willing to admit. He later testified before the Chilean parliamentary commission that he believed genetic experiments in the colony were possible.

Gisela Seewald, the doctor in the camp, is suspected of having participated in these experiments. She received her doctorate in Germany in 1957 and in her doctoral thesis she dealt in detail with the alteration of genetic material and the influence of chemicals and X-rays on reproductive ability. (122)

Gero Gemballa writes about these assumptions: "Genetic research is not a simple field of science. Changing the human genome requires a high level of scientific competence, a level of professionalism that the human researchers in the colony cannot be trusted to have." Far from it, one can only say! If he knew the true background of Colonia Dignidad, Mr. Gemballa would certainly come to a different conclusion.

Is further proof needed for the suggestion made here that Colonia Dignidad is the place (at least one place) where the Third Power's genetic experiments took place?

When asked about the children in the colony, agricultural consultant Kollonaji was confronted with a second question: And what do they look like? Do they look like Chileans? Or are they blonde and have blue eyes? The answer: "You know that!"

What is so obvious here that you just have to know it?

Socialist MP Jaime Naranjo moved in remarkable conclusion:

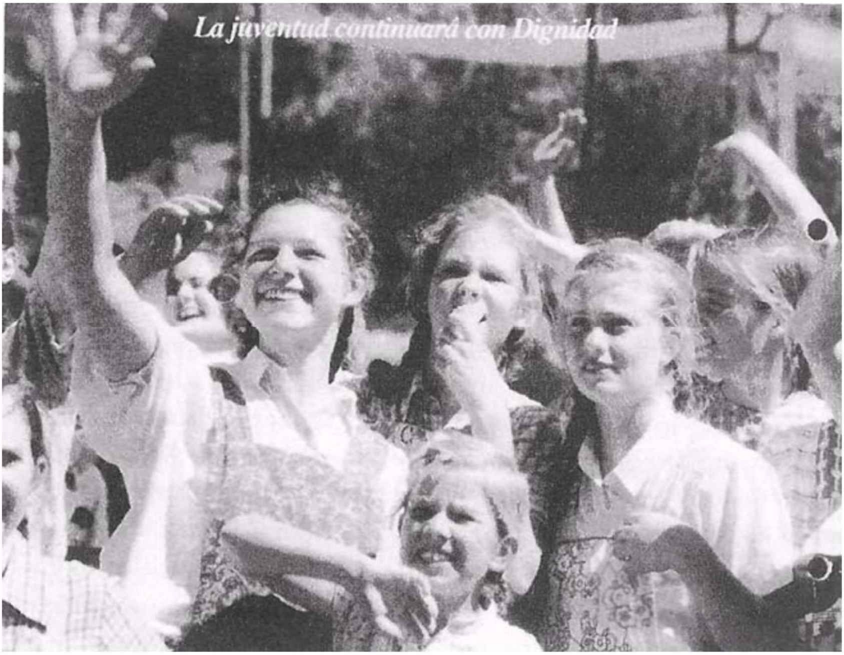
"The colony does not accept children who have strong Latino characteristics, such as dark skin. They are only interested in children with light skin, blond hair and corresponding genetic characteristics. But children or adults with Latino characteristics are almost never seen in the colony. Only people with light skin and light hair. That's strange." (122)

Given the knowledge of the activities of the Third Power, nothing else was to be expected - quite the opposite! The statements on this matter are further confirmed by a photo showing some children from Colonia Dignidad (Figure 30).

Back to the interview with the father of an air force officer, who said that something "big" was being worked on in the colony. He made another astonishing statement. Referring to the alleged torture camp in the colony, he said: "Experiments are carried out on the prisoners which are known as soul cleansing. In the basement (or better: in the underground facilities; the



La juventud continuará con Dignidad

Abb. 30

A special clinic has been set up for them (author) where they are subjected to things ranging from hypnosis to experiments with medication, operations to combat aggressiveness, the use of experimental radiation...' (123) If the word 'prisoners' is understood here as a synonym for those abducted by UFOs, this statement immediately takes on a deeper meaning. What else happens in the course of UFO abductions other than that the abduction victims are implanted with 'false memories' by means of hypnosis, true memories are suppressed (in the sense of cleansing the soul), they are sedated with medication and implants are surgically inserted, and that a method of communication other than oral communication is probably sought using low-frequency electromagnetic transmitters?

In the end, the legitimate question remains whether the rumours about torture and child abuse are not largely intended to conceal the truth, which cannot be completely suppressed given the extent of the kidnapping scenario. The unpleasant consequence of this, the criminal proceedings brought as a result, were accepted. A rumour does not make the truth. On 16 November 2004, after seven years of investigation, the Chilean judge Hernan Gonzalez sentenced Paul Schäfer in absentia for child abuse and another 20 leading settlers for aiding and abetting and concealing the crimes to up to five years in prison, but Roberto Saldias' lawyer immediately announced that he would appeal against some of the sentences. (60) This seems to have satisfied the demands of public opinion and brought the "revelations" about Colonia Dignidad to a provisional conclusion.

It remains to be seen whether Paul Schäfer, who was arrested in his Argentine exile in March 2005 and was already 83 years old at the time of his arrest and suffering from a serious heart condition, will actually have to serve his prison sentence.

Since 1989, during the period of so-called democratization in Chile, several police inspections of the colony grounds failed for the reasons mentioned above and Paul Schäfer could not be found for a long time, a tacit agreement was finally reached between the Chilean government and Colonia Dignidad. The result was the transformation into an apparently normal agricultural cooperative with greater freedom of movement for the actual cult members.

The fact that nothing has changed is demonstrated by the identity of the leading middleman on the part of the settlement. The doctor Hartmut Hopp is a member of the post-war generation and joined Paul Schäfer's group as a 13-year-old boy. The colony paid for his studies in the United States, and as a result Hopp served not only as chief physician, but also as "Foreign Minister."

As such, he was able to establish first-class connections through the son of the Chilean intelligence chief Manuel Contreras, who was a friend of his, and became a house guest of the Pinochets. Most recently, he was Paul Schäfer's official representative for the colony's interests. Under the new conditions, the personnel continuity of Colonia Dignidad should at least be maintained.

From the mid-1990s onwards, the influence of the former military rulers, whose protection the colony could always count on, began to wane. At the same time, public interest increasingly focused on the alleged abuses.

Under these circumstances, maintaining the terrestrial base may simply have become inconvenient for the Third Power. The demonstrative opening of the colony to the outside world and the freedom of movement granted to the "cult followers" are possible indications that the headquarters had been relocated in the meantime. The large wave of UFO sightings in Chile in 1997 and 1998 could also be an indication of this. Evacuating the base would certainly have resulted in a large number of corresponding activities. Furthermore, in contrast to the 60s and 70s, the need for an earthly headquarters may no longer have been absolutely necessary. There were other, better alternatives. See more on this in the next chapter.

At the beginning of the search for evidence of the existence of an earthly headquarters of the Third Power described here, the following statement was made: Landig's veracity stands and falls with the actual existence of extensive and artificially created cave systems in which activities of the Third Power can be proven! If these caves are found, the headquarters of the Third Power will be identified.

With the extensive facilities beneath Colonia Dignidad, the caves have been found, and all the features characteristic of the Third Power Activities have been proven in their environment. Wilhelm Landig told the truth.

Wilhelm Landig cannot be accused of using Antarctica as a synonym for Argentina. Nor could he be expected to call the underground headquarters of the Third Power by its real name, Colonia Dignidad.

Fortunately, however, Wilhelm Landig has encoded his knowledge of the true function of Colonia Dignidad in his non-fiction novel Wolfszeit um Thule in a simple and well-thought-out way. Any doubt is completely ruled out.

As mentioned above, the export hit of the Colony, the famous Andean honey, »Tres picos«.

In the past, selected groups of German visitors were greeted at the entrance to Colonia Dignidad with the following text: "Allow us to inform you of a very interesting and beautiful natural phenomenon. In Bavaria, Germany, in the Alps, next to the Zuspitze, there is a mountain called Dreitorspitze, which means that this mountain has three prominent peaks, visible from afar.

What does that have to do with Chile, you ask. Prepare to be surprised: there is the same mountain in Chile, in the Parral Cordillera.« (123) »Tres Picos« in fact.

Apart from the fact that this mountain actually exists in the neighborhood of the colony, the three mountain peaks have a previous symbol that further underlines the connection between Colonia Dignidad and the Third Power. It is the emblem of the former Chilean NSDAP foreign organization.

The depiction of the »Tres Picos« on postcards was also part of the the public relations work carried out by the colony (Figure 31).

And what do the “Tres picos” have to do with Wilhelm Landig?

The encrypted section about the "Tres Picos" in Wolf Time around Thule is in the section of the book that deals with the old cave systems and their alleged discovery by Edmund Kiss. It literally says: "An old legend that never dies down also tells of an Inca treasure in the area of Los Tres Picos and also of treasures near Pez Chico. Adventurers are said to have found entrances to this cave system, but then they disappeared and were never heard of again." (1) In plain language

Machine Translated by Google

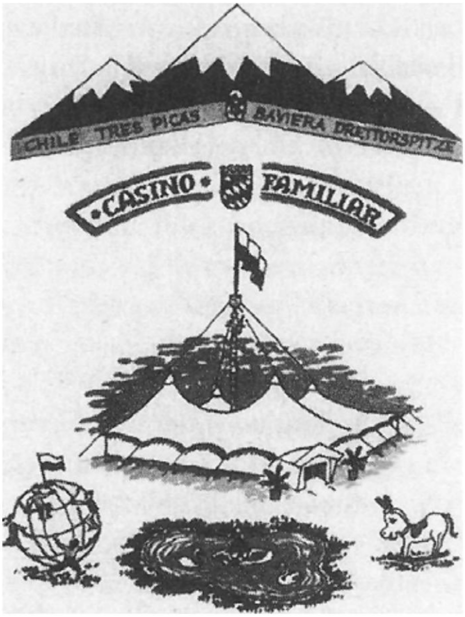

Abb. 31

This statement should probably be understood as follows:

In the area of »Tres Picos« the entrances to the cave system have already been found, but secrecy is to be maintained until further notice.

The circle of evidence has thus been closed.

The journalist Gero Gemballa wrote almost resignedly at the end of one of his books about the result of his extensive research into Colonia Dignidad: "The story has no end. There is still some great secret behind it." (124) The great secret is no longer one, the truth has been revealed.

On July 20, 1989, the world's most important celebration in honor of Adolf Hitler's 100th birthday took place on a hill near the Chilean capital Santiago. With an unparalleled matter-of-factness that shows how deeply Chile's role in the revival of National Socialism is already anchored in the subconscious of many Chileans, the keynote speaker that day, the former Chilean diplomat and writer Miguel Serrano, shouted across the auditorium:

Machine Translated by Google

"From here begins the return of our leader, comrade, from this magical and mystical land, from this mysterious territory called Chile."

And in addition, a Spanish delegate said in his welcoming speech that the survival strategy of Hitler's successors emanates from Chile. (125)

There is nothing left to add to that.

Addendum:

Shortly after the manuscript was completed and submitted to the publisher, Colonia Dignidad made headlines in the international press twice more.

In mid-June 2005, it was reported: "Chile: Huge weapons cache discovered in Colonia Dignidad." (60) Rocket launchers, assault rifles, foreign-made mines and large stocks of ammunition were seized in three containers. Some of the weapons found were 40 years old. This was another "tranquilizer" for public opinion. All those who had always suspected that the "sect" was a criminal organization or accused it of collaborating with the military now saw their opinion confirmed.

At the same time, this relatively ridiculous discovery succeeded in concealing - now probably for good - the full extent of the measures that had taken place on the colony's premises. Since the weapons were not found in the underground facilities, but in three containers, it does not seem unlikely that even these weapons, some of which were technically outdated, were not originally owned by the colony, but were only brought to the Colonia Dignidad premises later.

At the end of August 2005, the news agencies finally ran the headline: "Chilean government puts an end to Colonia Dignidad." And further: "With a large police presence involving armored vehicles, water cannons and a helicopter, the Chilean state ended the special status of the German torture camp Colonia Dignidad on August 26, 2005. ... After the arrest of its leader Paul Schäfer in Argentina in March 2005 and the subsequent discovery of large weapons depots and archives, a decision taken in 1999 by the Council for the Defense of the Chilean Republic was taken.

The investigation into the formation of a criminal organization, initiated by the State Department (CDE), has reached the decisive stage of the trial. This trial gave a judge the power to appoint a state bankruptcy administrator, Herman Chadwick, for the cult settlement and its numerous front companies. The leadership clique that had succeeded Schäfer has now been swept away, the gate to Colonia Dignidad remains open and telephone calls to and from the settlement are no longer monitored. ... The major operation, staged for media effect, came 15 years after the end of the Pinochet dictatorship, but in time for the Chilean parliamentary elections in December.« (60)

In addition to the usual exaggerations such as "torture settlement", "discovery of large weapons depots and archives", such "revelations" only express what has already been suspected elsewhere in this chapter. Probably in connection with the large wave of UFO sightings, the headquarters of the Third Power was relocated at the end of the 1990s. Where to? The next chapter shows one of the possible alternatives.

Machine Translated by Google

Machine Translated by Google

CHAPTER 6

THE CONNECTION TO MARS

In contrast to the previous chapters, this one seems at first glance to be more speculative in nature. The almost unthinkable possibility that the Third Power has mastered manned space flight to Mars in recent decades, and could even establish a colony on this planet, actually seems to stretch the imagination.

Nevertheless, there is considerable evidence to support this idea, and the existence of a base of operations beyond our planet seems to be a necessity in order to explain the extent of the activities triggered by the Third Power.

The spatial and material limitations to which the Earth headquarters, Colonia Dignidad, is subject make developed logistics - for example for the production and maintenance of the flying disc fleet - seem unthinkable.

Theoretically, the extraterrestrial base could also be on the moon or another planet. However, as will be shown below, the traces clearly lead to the planet Mars. In addition, the moon would only be a relatively safe refuge, as it has been accessible by manned vehicles for over three decades using American and Russian technology.

Officially, the first attempt to travel the distance from Earth to Mars with a terrestrial spacecraft was made on October 10, 1960. However, the Russian Mars A probe was unable to continue its flight after the third rocket stage failed at an altitude of 120 kilometers. The Mars B probe, launched on October 14, 1960, and Mars C, launched on October 24, 1962, also failed in Earth orbit.

Mars 1, launched on November 1, 1962, was the first to get close to Mars. The loss of radio communication on March 21, 1963 was the beginning of an almost "suspicious" series of technical glitches with Mars probes, a series of glitches that has not ended up until the recent past and which will be discussed later.

This shows that the Russians undoubtedly had the technical know-how to reach Mars in the early 1960s. The Americans were only able to achieve a similar success in 1964 with the Mariner 4 probe.

At this point, the question arises whether the Third Power, with its technological capabilities as described in the third chapter, could not have found its way to Mars much earlier.

Be it with the means of anti-gravity or with nuclear-powered spaceships. Is there independent evidence for this?

In fact, a book written in 1958 entitled Yo he estado on en marte gives the impression that important information about the activities of the Third Power, including the exploration of the planet Mars, had leaked to the public.

On the other hand, the book also contains claims that are either deliberately misleading or are intended to imaginatively condense rumors. For example, in connection with flying saucers, aliens are also mentioned. The introduction of such claims here also serves to conceal the true facts!

Below are some indications that confirm the actions of the Third Power in the 1950s.

Colonization of Mars (quoted from 17 and 59):

"... an initiated group ... dedicated solely to scientific research. It is completely free from concessions and obligations to governments or rulers, but enjoys unlimited financial backing";

"Since the community did not lack resources thanks to the war treasures of Benito Mussolini and Adolf Hitler, it built an underground city in South America...";

»... study center in the Andean region ...«; »Since 1946 it has had a large collecting mirror for cosmic energy ...«; »Four German scientists accompanied me on this visit ...«;

»In 1951 we had a plane that had practically run out of fuel could not go out, traveled all seas and countries";

»The ship worked completely silently, except for a slight hum ...«;

»The moon, which was only a stopover for them ...«; »... describes a journey to Mars ...«; »... to build a permanent Mars base ...«; »... precise description of the saucer and its occupants, who ... were tall beings with a very pale face, deep blue (Scandinavian, as Mario Rojas says) eyes ...«.

An attempt to read these fragments in context leads to an astonishing result that requires no further comment: a group of German scientists, independent of any other government on earth, had been working in an underground center in the Andean region since 1946. Apart from the year, this description fits the Centro Atomico near Bariloche in Argentina. In 1946, Peron's escape organization brought the first scientists into the country. The group had a large financial backing thanks to the funds transferred at the end of the war. In 1951, the scientists involved were able to complete a manned saucer-shaped anti-gravity aircraft that operated almost silently (see also Chapter 2). Its crew was of Nordic appearance. Using the moon as a stopover, a trip to Mars was made in the 1950s (the book was published in 1958) with the aim of building a permanent base there.

If this colonization of Mars by the Third Power did indeed take place before 1960, then anomalies should have occurred during subsequent Russian and American flights to Mars that would directly indicate the presence of an alien power. These would probably be expected first of all in terms of the obstruction of undesirable activities of these two powers, as well as the observation of inexplicable surface structures on Mars.

Both anomalies exist. The first was already mentioned in the description of the early Russian attempts to send probes to Mars. The loss of the Mars 1 probe was not an isolated case.

Between 1960 and 2004, 37 Mars expeditions were launched. Of these, nine failed during takeoff or the outbound flight, 16 were considered successful, and 13 met a partly mysterious end in the final phase of their flight or during landing.

What is striking is the accumulation of "losses" in the years between 1989 and 2003. However, a developed technology for exploring the planets of our solar system has existed since the early 1970s. During the far more difficult flights of the Pioneer, Voyager and Cassini missions to the planets far from Earth, this technology has proven its reliability without exception.

Here is an overview of the Mars explorations that failed in the last phase:

Start	Space probe	Land	Reason for failure
01.11.1962	Mars 1	USSR	Loss of radio connection
30.11.1964	Probe 2	USSR	Loss of radio contact
28.05.1971	March 3	USSR	20 seconds after landing Radio contact interrupted
21.07.1973	Mars 4	USSR	Mars orbit missed, braking engine failed
25.07.1973	March 5	USSR	Orbiter worked only a few days
05.08.1973	March 6	USSR	Dropping off a landing capsule, radio contact breaks off before landing
09.08.1973	Mars 7	USSR	orbiter and lander miss their Goal
12.07.1988	Phobos2	USSR	Before landing on the Martian moon Phobos, radio contact with the probe is lost USA Radio contact is lost when the braking
25.09.1992	Mars Observer		engine is ignited for entering Mars orbit Japan Deviates from course and misses Mars USA Loss of the probe when entering Mars orbit
04.07.1998	Nozomi
11.12.1998	Mars Climate

03.01.1999 Mars Polar USA landing failed 02.06.2003 Mars Express USA loss of the lander Beagle 2

If these failures are at least partly due to interventions by the Third Power, the question remains as to which criteria are decisive for the planned abort of missions.

While the mobile rovers Pathfinder, Rover 1 and Rover 2 were able to work undisturbed, this was not the case with the Mars Polar Lander and Beagle 2. Is the reason for the failure of the last two simply due to the landing site chosen, which was not accepted by the Third Power?

At least since 1997, nothing seems to stand in the way of an undisturbed mapping of the surface of Mars, which could be attributed solely to the optical camouflage options developed by then (see below).

It is also interesting that after the extremely successful Viking missions of the Americans between 1976 and 1997, no further successful approach to Mars could be carried out. A possible reason for this will be mentioned later.

Less well-known were also irregularities in the landing of the Viking robots.

Johannes von Buttlar writes about this in his book They Come from Foreign Stars: »Close-ups of the Viking II robot made the originally planned landing site ... appear extremely unsuitable.
Based on the images transmitted from orbit, ... an area of huge undulating sand dunes was selected. During the descent to the surface of Mars, the data transmission of the lander worked perfectly. But when it touched down, the image and measurement data transmission to Earth unexpectedly failed. For the next nine hours, the lander was silent, but then suddenly, without receiving a command from the NASA control station, it resumed data transmission to Earth. The confusion was complete when, instead of the expected images of undulating sand dunes, it sent images of an endless, rocky desert to Earth ... To this day, the mystery of why the photographic data of the landing area transmitted from orbit did not bear the slightest resemblance to the real landscape has not been solved.« (129)

A similar situation occurred with the "start-up difficulties" of the American Mars rover Spirit (Rover 1), from which no or only confused data reached Earth between January 22 and February 2 after its successful landing on January 4, 2004. It was as if someone had shown a passing interest in this terrestrial technology and simply turned the "switch" to "off" during their investigations.

The failure of the only post-communist Russian Mars probe to date remains unexplained. Mars-96 took off from the launch site on November 16, 1996.

On board was a collection of high-quality measuring instruments, which far exceeded the equipment of the American Mars Global Surveyor, which was launched almost at the same time. Even the resolution of the cameras was more than twice as high. In the final phase of the launch, the cargo suddenly separated from the rocket motor.

The valuable equipment crashed to Earth, the remaining propulsion unit continued to head towards Mars. Sabotage seemed to be the most plausible reason for the failure of the corresponding software. (130)

Also installed on board was a device for measuring the element xenon 129, which is produced as a result of radioactive decay processes during nuclear fission. Even before the launch of Mars-96 , it was known that this element is part of the Martian atmosphere in unexpected quantities. An accepted scientific theory cites a supernova near the solar system that was forming at the time as a possible cause for the existence of xenon 129. The iodine 129 produced later transformed into xenon 129. However, this theory cannot explain why the xenon content on Mars is three times higher than that on Earth. (130)

Is the Third Power perhaps responsible for the high xenon content on the Mars and conducted nuclear tests on it?

Even if this all sounds a bit like a conspiracy theory, unidentified flying objects have been blamed for the accidents involving at least two Mars probes.

On July 7, 1988, the Russians launched the Phobos I probe , followed five days later by Phobos II.

Phobos I was lost just two months after launch, allegedly as a result of a wrong radio command. Phobos II, on the other hand, was able to be guided into an orbit around Mars as planned. The next step was to enter a circular orbit around the Martian moon Phobos. On March 28, radio contact with the probe was suddenly lost. A few seconds before the connection was lost , Phobos II was able to photograph a strangely shaped object between the probe and Mars. The Russians later released these images, with the exception of the very last one. A shadow can be seen that can be described as a thin ellipse (Figure 32). A report published in 1989 stated that the probe had gone into a spin, either as a result of a computer glitch or as a result of a collision with an unknown object. (131)

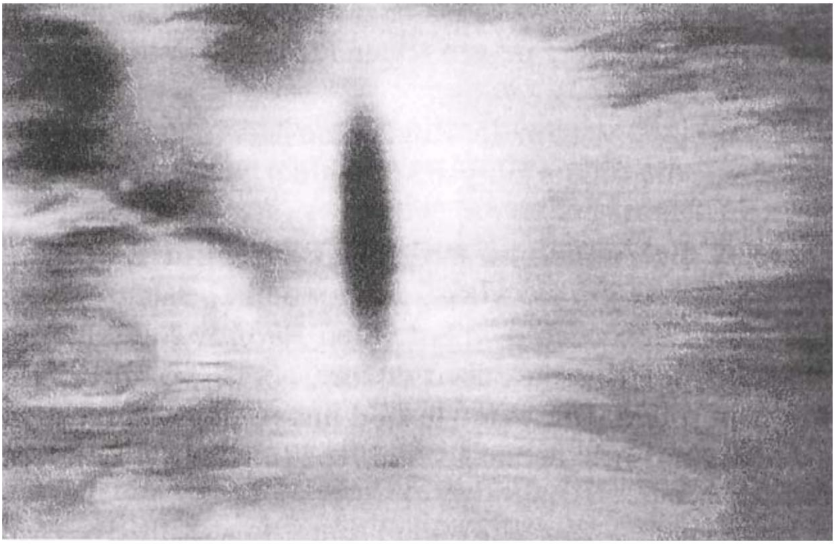

Abb. 32

What type of object was it that, flying between the probe and Mars, cast an ellipsoidal shadow on Mars and ultimately caused the probe to crash? The very last image, which has been kept secret to this day, might have solved the mystery. The shape of the shadow makes one think of a flying disk.

On December 25, 2003, Beagle 2 was scheduled to land on the surface of Mars. Up to that day, the ESA mission had been successful.

During the landing attempt, however, contact with the Mars robot was lost. On March 8, 2003, news agencies published details from the investigation report of the European Space Agency ESA. It said that Beagle 2 probably crashed during landing. An unidentifiable object may have been responsible for the loss. In a photo taken shortly after the lander was undocked from the Mars Express orbiter, there is a spot that could be this object.

How similar the two incidents are!

In addition to hindering Mars expeditions of other space-faring powers, another anomaly was the observation of unusual surface structures on Mars that would allow conclusions to be drawn about the activities of the Third Power.

A large number of high-resolution images of Mars were taken by the Mars orbiters Viking I and II starting in 1976. Some of them showed strange structures, and discussions about them have not stopped to this day.

Of the books published on this subject, only a few meet scientific standards. The two most important are The Martian Enigmas (132) and The Case For The Face (130).

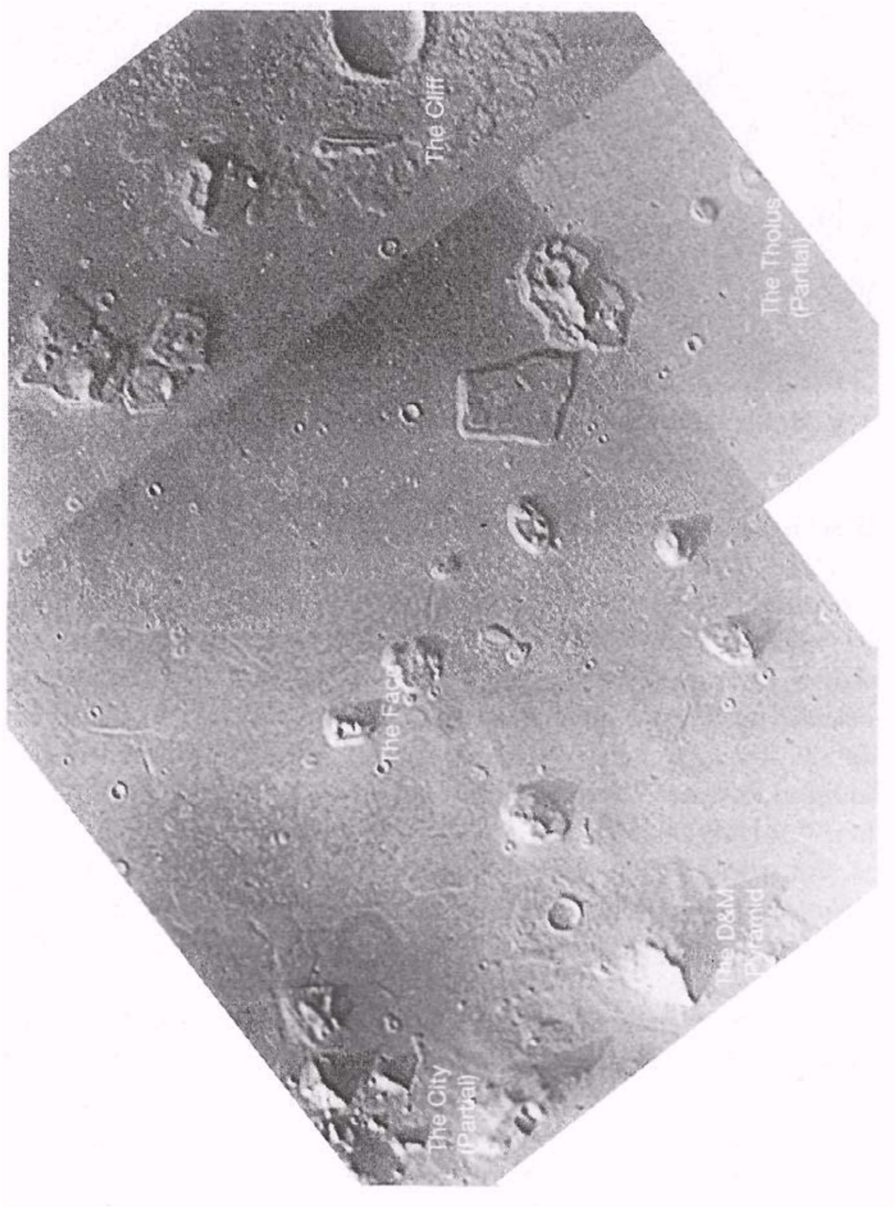
Of the objects in question on the surface of Mars, for which a non-natural origin or artificial formation can be assumed, only those from the so-called Cydonia region will be examined in more detail here as examples.

The Viking images 35A72, 35A73 and 35A74 (summarized in Figure 33) provide a good overview . The formations "Face", "City", "D&M Pyramid" and "Tholus" are particularly interesting in these photos.

The most striking feature, the Martian face, has been adequately reported elsewhere. Since several high-quality images from the Viking missions provided a solid basis for a wide range of technical analyses, the surprise was all the greater when the images from the Mars Global Surveyor in 1997 gave little indication of the facial structure (Figure 34). What had happened between 1976 and 1997?

In 1976, the “City” consisted of several pyramidal complexes and a strange object, the so-called “Fortress,” with straight “walls” up to two kilometers long.

Machine Translated by Google



The Cliff
The Tholus (Partial)
The Face
The D&M Pyramid
The City (Partial)

Abb. 33

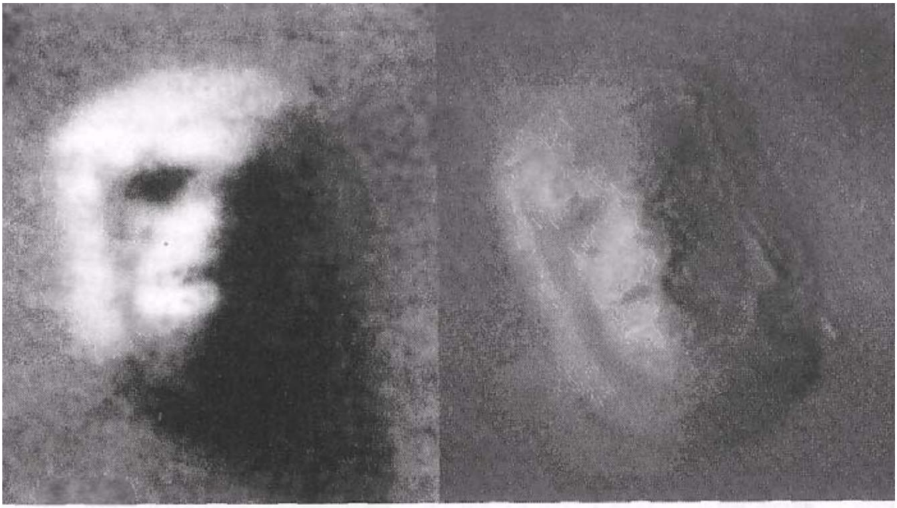


Fig. 34: The change in the face of Mars between 1976 and 1997

The black hole on the right side of the "D&M Pyramid" (70A113) was initially speculated to be an impact crater that had damaged the east side of the pyramid (Figure 35). This fact also served as an argument for the great age of the "artificial" Mars formations, as claimed by some. However, the 3D analysis carried out produced a different result. The opening interpreted as a crater could therefore be the entrance to a tunnel that leads directly into the interior of the pyramid (Figure 36).

A possible tunnel entrance was also observed at the »Tholus« (35A74) using 3D analysis. Here the entrance appears to be halfway up a channel that runs around the entire mountain (Figure 37).

Another interesting formation, called the "Bowl," is located about 100 kilometers from the actual Cydonia complex. It is very reminiscent of the shape of a Mayan pyramid. A "ramp" seems to lead directly into the center (Figure 38).

Are the images from the Mars Global Surveyor from 1997 proof that all the image interpreters involved in the analysis of the Viking images were fooled by the idea that they were seeing something that was not real? Hardly. A period of 20 years would have given the Third

Abb. 35

Power was certainly sufficient to change the appearance of those monumental formations to such an extent that, at least from a purely visual perspective, an artificial origin no longer had to be assumed.

And yet, beyond visual observation, there is compelling evidence that these surface structures on Mars did not form naturally!

The evidence for this is provided by the so-called fractal analysis.

This enables a clear statement regarding the natural or artificial origin of an object and is for this reason also used in military reconnaissance when analyzing, for example,

B. from satellite photos. It is based on the fact that natural objects tend to develop the same substructures over different size scales. For example, small stones develop the same patterns of breaks and jagged edges as large rocks, or the bulges on the edges of small water holes are the same as those of long coastlines, etc. Fractal analysis only fails where it succeeds in artificially imitating natural forms. The examination of the visually striking structures in the Cydonia region using fractal analysis revealed clear evidence of artificial formation or reshaping at least for the Mars face, the "City", especially for the "Fortress", and for the object known as the "Bowl". (132)

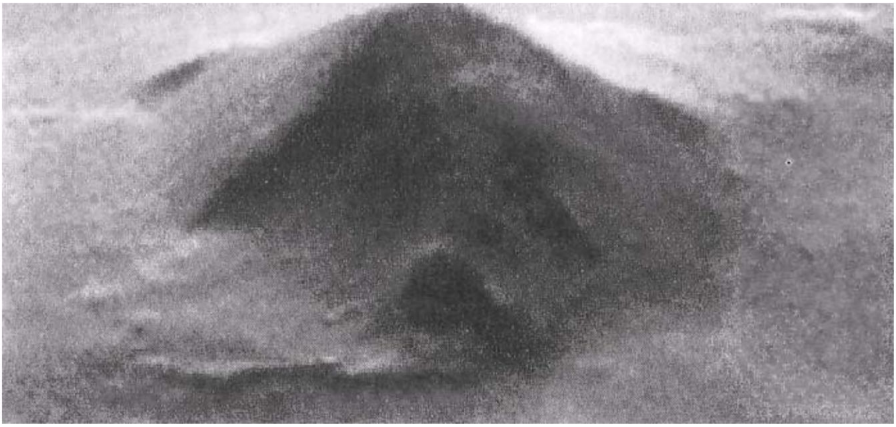

Abb. 36

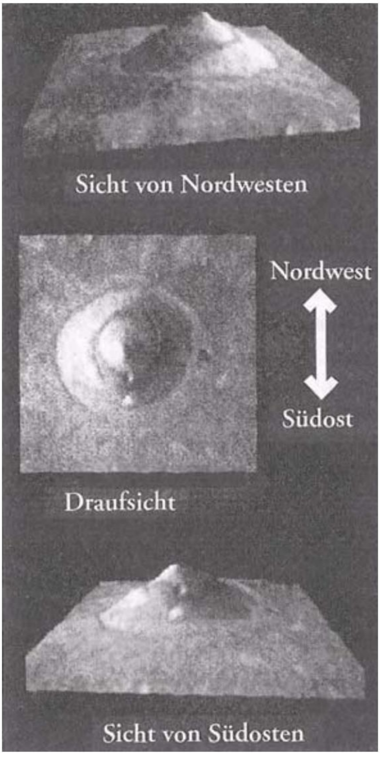

Sicht von Nordwesten
Nordwest
Südost
Draufsicht
Sicht von Südosten

Abb. 37

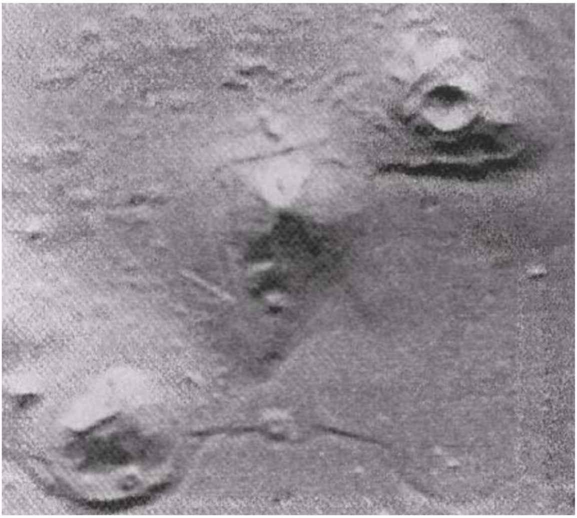

Abb. 38

It is time for an interim assessment. What facts gathered so far support the theory that the Third Power has long since solved the technical problem of reaching the planet Mars with manned spaceships and maintains a permanently manned station there?

1. There is a fairly clear “tradition” from the 1950s.
2. The technical breakdowns listed go far beyond mere suspicion, in terms of their nature and number, especially when the problem-free functioning of the technically more demanding missions to the distant planets of our solar system is taken into account.

3. The artificial surface structures expected on Mars have actually been identified, and they are more recent than previously thought. There was enough time between 1976 and 1997 to ensure the perfect camouflage of these objects.

What is still missing? It would be extremely desirable and, in fact, logical to find statements in the oral traditions of those abducted from UFOs that relate to Mars.

And these statements actually exist, although they are only dealt with marginally in the relevant literature.
The authors have probably not yet realized how explosive they are, which is because they always assume that extraterrestrials are the originators of the abduction phenomenon and are therefore operating in a completely wrong overall context.

Now, no one will want to assume that the abductees were actually on Mars, but references to what really happened on Mars are to be expected in view of the conditioning strategy (see Chapter 3) of the Third Power. Images induced through hypnosis should then be reflected in the conversation records of the abduction researchers.

David Jacobs writes: »Many (!!!; emphasis added)
Reports also describe stays in a desert-like area.
Although the exact meaning of this scenario is unclear, there are indications that this landscape is part of the aliens' homeland."

For example, the abducted Susan Steiner remembered a “stay” in this environment and additionally noted: “The sky is reddish.” (69)

No one who saw the panoramic images from the Viking lander in 1976 will ever be able to forget the distinctly desert-like character of the Martian landscape and the reddish Martian sky. This red color is caused by the scattering of sunlight by the fine dust in the Martian atmosphere.

If this landscape is not part of the alien homeland, it may be a second Earth for members of the Third Power, who apparently carry out activities on Mars that are directly related to the production of their auxiliary forces, the Greys.
The third chapter described how the kidnapped Betty Andreasson reported on the replacement of the eyes of one of these gray ones by the light-haired creatures.

How did Betty get to the scene of this incident?

One of their extra-worldly journeys (an induced sequence of images) ended underground. "We are going through a tunnel. ... Their suits were the only illumination. ... that they passed openings that belonged to other intersecting tunnels. It was obvious that it was ... carved out of rock. ... As they emerged from the tunnel they had a view of a place where the ..., atmosphere was a vibrant red color. ... and there are buildings - square buildings with openings ... They seemed to be made of stucco or cement. ... There was no plant life. ... Just land and buildings." Although the exact sequence of events during an action sometimes remains unclear, especially through repeated questioning over several hypnosis sessions, Betty seems to have "experienced" the reported eye operation in one of those buildings. When asked: "Where do they live?" Betty answers: "I know - I think there, in this place where I am right now. ... We leave the room and go back down the corridor, and the door closes again so that you can no longer see the red surroundings. Everything was red there - this atmosphere." (79, 133)

What speaks in this report for the colonization of Mars by the Third Power is the existence of a tunnel system on a planet with a red atmosphere and no vegetation (desert-like), which - although they could only move outside the buildings in space suits - nevertheless seems to be the habitat of beings of Nordic type as well as the Greys.

If this is the case, how does the Third Power manage to hide its activities on Mars from the prying camera eyes of the successful American and European Mars probes?

The orbiters Mars Global Surveyor (1997), Mars Odyssey (2001) and Mars Express (2003) were able to map the surface of Mars undisturbed and send images to Earth.

On the one hand, the spatial extent of a potential Mars colony is certainly very limited, and on the other hand, a not inconsiderable part of it is likely to be underground.

This is also indicated by Betty Andreasson's report on the tunnel system. The possible dismantling that took place between 1976 and 1997, or the camouflage of the monumental structures recorded by the Viking probes by changing the surface, has already been mentioned. In addition, other measures to protect against optical reconnaissance are conceivable.

For example, the NASA Jet Propulsion Laboratory has developed an adaptive camouflage system that has similar effects to the camouflage practised in nature, for example by chameleons. The system creates the illusion of complete transparency around the object to be camouflaged, depending on changing light and colour conditions.

This technology works on an opto-electric basis, ie with the help of a flexible network of electronic flat screens, and projects the side of an object that is far from the observer onto the side closest to him. Airplanes, tanks and buildings thus become completely invisible. (73)

One key question remains: Why do Americans, Russians and Europeans take the risk of losing their extremely costly technology or at least seeing it partially disabled during flights to Mars? After all, every mission is a gamble.

There can only be one reason for this: on the one hand, secrecy is almost absolute, only a few people in charge know the true reasons for the failure. On the other hand, the public desire to explore Mars is so great that Disasters must be consciously accepted if one does not want to reveal the greatest secret of the last 60 years.

It remains to be clarified whether it is generally possible for humans to survive on Mars for a long period of time. The following influencing factors must be taken into account:

Sunlight As is clear from looking at the images of the surface of Mars, our neighboring planet offers sufficiently good visibility - and therefore also lighting conditions.

Temperature

The temperature on Mars fluctuates on average between +30 and -70 degrees Celsius and is therefore bearable and manageable for humans.

Breathing

air The mixing ratio of the gases in our breathing air can be created artificially.

For the production of the particularly important element oxygen through electrolysis, the 95% carbon dioxide content within the Martian atmosphere provides an almost inexhaustible and, above all, easily accessible source of raw materials.

Machine Translated by Google

Air pressure

Simulating the earth's air pressure inside space suits and buildings is easy. This happens every day, for example, inside the passenger cabins of our airplanes.

Gravity

The lower gravity on Mars means that a step costs only about half as much energy as on Earth, and walking speed is reduced by 40 percent. The negative effects of permanently reduced gravity, especially on the muscular system, are well known from the long-term flights of Russian cosmonauts.

The creation and maintenance of a locally limited gravitational field corresponding to the earth's inside the artificial habitats would therefore be a considerable problem. However, if we take into account the progress that the Third Power has undoubtedly made in controlling gravity since the first attempts to abolish it in 1944/45 (see Chapter 2), it is not inconceivable that it was able to master this challenge as well.

Radiation protection Permanent shielding against life-threatening radiation can be achieved by using aluminum shields several centimeters thick to protect against high-energy ions, as well as a ten-centimeter-thick, shell-like water tank to protect against solar proton showers. (134)

Water resources

Water is abundant on Mars. At the beginning of February 2004, the European Mars probe Mars Express delivered almost unbelievable data.

Large parts of the South Pole are made of ice. Behind steep, steep slopes there are ice areas 400 kilometers long and up to three kilometers thick. The Spirit rover also discovered minerals in the Martian soil that only form after water evaporates.

Machine Translated by Google

Energy resources

The use of solar and nuclear energy must be assumed. The increased content of xenon 129 in the Martian atmosphere could indicate the use of the latter. The Third Power has an almost inexhaustible source of energy if it has actually succeeded in tapping into the fluctuating zero-point energy field.

Mineral

resources Since the geological structure of Mars is similar to that of Earth, it is likely that it also has corresponding deposits of metal ores. Iron, at least, is present in large quantities, as evidenced by the presence of red dust on the surface of Mars.

This means that all conditions are assumed to be in place that would enable humans to colonize Mars and maintain long-lasting habitats.

And hasn't life existed on Mars for millions or even billions of years, and isn't this alone proof that the environment on this planet is by no means biologically sterile?

In the summer of 1984, American scientists found several stones in the Antarctic. Their analysis showed that at least one of them had to come from Mars. This piece of rock, known as ALH 84001, is said to have been torn from the surface of Mars and hurled into space around 3.6 billion years ago during the heavy meteorite bombardment.

In a press conference broadcast by the news channel CNN on August 1, 1996, NASA director Daniel Golden announced that organic material had been found in the Mars meteorite that definitely did not come from Earth. Fossil remains of microbes were clearly visible. This seemed to be the first proof of the existence of extraterrestrial life.

However, the optimism of that time has given way to obvious disillusionment. Investigations in the meantime have shown that the "Mars bacteria" could simply be the weathered relics of inanimate proteins. There are no arguments against the theory of nanobacteria in the

The small size of the structures observed in the electron microscope also suggests that Mars rocks are from Mars. Other research results, which cannot be discussed in detail here, also confirm the negative findings of the biological experiments carried out by the Viking landers in the 1980s and destroy the hope of an inhabited neighboring planet. (134)

But how is it that the Martian atmosphere contains amounts of methane that should not actually exist on this scale?

Methane is a gas that is constantly breaking down on Mars due to the intense UV radiation. The "lifespan" of methane on this planet is probably 300 years at most. This invalidates the idea that the gas could have come from earlier geological activities that apparently stopped four million years ago. Therefore, there should be no methane left on the neighboring planet today. Only a biological cause remains conceivable. The newspaper Die Welt of 30 March 2004 quotes Dr. Lutz Richter from the DLR Institute for Space Simulation in Cologne: "Methane in the Martian atmosphere is an indication of life on the Red Planet today ." (135) One should add: of life that has only recently taken hold of Mars and to a very limited extent!

What had to be proven...

Addendum:

Shortly before this book went to print, the media (including Spiegel Online on September 21, 2005) reported some astonishing things about the planet Mars. When evaluating the data collected by the Global Surveyor probe,

In the data they collected, the researchers discovered evidence of dramatic climatic changes on Mars. A slow decline in frozen carbon dioxide was recorded at one of the polar caps, indicating a gradual climate change. "The speed at which these polar regions are retreating is absolutely astonishing," explained one of the scientists involved. But why Mars is warmer today than it was recently is completely unclear. "We have absolutely no idea."

Machine Translated by Google

Maybe the question should simply be changed: Not what, but who has been responsible for the systematic warming of Mars for several years? The technical term that probably best describes the situation is: TERRAFORMING.

CHAPTER 7

REVIEW AND OUTLOOK

Before the outlook comes the review, the summary of the insights gained so far in this book.

The most important fact, the existence of a Third Power, which is no longer just hypothetical but actual, seems to have been proven with almost absolute certainty. The thread of the trail laid by various authors, especially Wilhelm Landig, was not only picked up but also considerably followed. Essential aspects of this framework of action describing the Third Power's retreat at the end of the Second World War were confirmed.

What was new was that the so-called UFO phenomenon can only be understood as an earthly phenomenon that has undergone a continuous technical evolution since its beginnings at the end of 1944 at the latest until today. This development took place on the basis of designs that were all conceived before the end of the war by German scientists in the service of the Third Reich.

As a result, the Third Power came into possession of flying machines that use antigravity as a propulsion source.

At the same time, a large-scale genetic breeding program was initiated, the preliminary studies of which apparently began in the 1960s with the first cases of kidnapping. From the mid-1970s, and then increasingly in the 1980s and 1990s, the Third Power began using genetic manipulation to create beings that had the characteristics of the preferred Nordic race. The measures to secure this gene pool were in continuity with those of National Socialism, which saw the promotion of this type of human being as its primary concern.

Colonia Dignidad was identified as the Third Power's terrestrial base of operations, along with a refuge on our neighboring planet Mars.

What happens next? How will this development continue?

One thing can hardly be doubted:

Machine Translated by Google

Taking over the world and thus revising the historical events of May 1945 is the real goal on the agenda of the Third Power. Under what conditions, at what point in time and by what means they will attempt to achieve this goal can only be speculated today. But the fact is that something will happen and it is right to doubt whether the other world powers will be able to successfully meet this challenge alone or together. The reason for this pessimistic assessment is not only their apparent technological inferiority, but above all their extremely precarious, increasingly unstable socio-political situation.

Chapter 3 described the interest of both sides in not revealing what is really going on behind the scenes of world politics. From the perspective of the Third Power, the complete concealment of its intentions should be maintained until the concrete time for their implementation has arrived. The other world powers have no interest in informing the public in their countries about the outcome of the last world war, which differs from the official historiography. So when will this identity of interests come to an end?

Particularly against the backdrop of the sociopolitical changes that are being observed, the harbingers of the coming major conflict may be emerging. This is not to say that this will necessarily be a warlike one. The increasing erosion of the existing society, accelerated for example by a global economic crisis, could be the deciding factor in a peaceful takeover scenario.

There are serious indications that further developments could actually take such a course, which will be discussed below.

In 2003, I spent several days on holiday in the Bolivian capital, La Paz. Almost every afternoon I visited the Cafe La Paz, which is known as a meeting place for Bolivians of German descent. The former head of the Gestapo office in Lyon, Klaus Barbie, who lived in Bolivia under the name Klaus Altmann, also frequented this place for years.

The aim of my visits was to talk to members of the German “colony” in order to find out more about the connections of those “old comrades” in South America. Admittedly, on the

At first glance, this seemed a somewhat naive undertaking. As luck would have it, the opportunity arose to get to know one of the gentlemen present, although his age (around mid-50s) meant he could not be part of the desired target group. After half an hour of casual chatting, I talked about my area of interest and my desire to find out more about it here on site. My conversation partner pointed out that he could not give me any details, but that he would be happy to recommend me to a gentleman who was certainly more competent in these matters.

The next day, I met a much older man who, although over 80 years old, was in robust health and also had a good sense of humor.

Readers who are now hoping that in the subsequent conversation I would have received confirmation of all my statements regarding the actions of the Third Power must be disappointed at this point.

The conversation, reproduced here in excerpts in the form of a memory protocol, dealt more with questions of the present (A stands for author, G for conversation partner).

A: You speak perfect German, were you born in Germany?

G: Not only was I born there, I also risked my life for it.

A: So you were a soldier? May I ask in which unit?

G: As an officer in what we would call today a multinational Unit of the Waffen-SS.

A: What did you do before the war?

G: I studied law there.

A: How long have you been living in South America?

G: I came to Argentina in 1947 and then came here in 1957.

A: What did you do professionally after 1945?

G: Most of the time I was the owner and managing director of a Import-export company.

A: Do you know whether there was a withdrawal of leading members of the SS to South America or other areas at the end of the war?

this world, and there are rumors of Antarctica as well, combined with a transfer of secret high technology?

G: Well, it is probably common knowledge that several thousand Germans, including SS members and scientists, emigrated after the war, especially to Argentina, where there was a fruitful collaboration under Peron for many years. Antarctica? Must be a bit cold there, right?

A: Can one say that parts of these exiled forces have been brought together under a common leadership?
Some even call this group of forces the Third Power on this planet, whose goal is to revise the results of the last world war.

G: Call it what you will. There has been no doubt that efforts have been made in this direction.

A: Was or is?

G: Of course they still exist, some of the people are still at Live, many have descendants.

A: A connection between this Third Power and the UFO phenomenon is often claimed.
Do you know anything about this?

G: Even if I did, I wouldn't talk about it. Who's to say that you don't have a little microphone hidden somewhere or that you're not an ultra-left journalist?

A: That's exactly me. But seriously, if such a movement or organization still exists today, what would it have achieved in the past decades, achieved in the sense of providing an incentive to continue the struggle?

G: The downfall of communism and the unification of Germany! Isn't that something?
Now only the Americans remain. The motto should not be "many enemies, much honour", but rather "everyone in turn".

A: You didn't have to do much to achieve these successes, as you say. They were all self-fulfilling and you were able to sit out the process passively!

G: Well, that's brilliant, winning battles without using your own resources. And it was foreseeable that it would happen at some point. It was just the speed that surprised us. And what do you think we could have done actively?

For decades, our German people were under Allied control. Troop presence virtually held hostage.

A: And now? The Americans seem to be almost too powerful.

G: I see that as a positive: there is only one enemy left. We could certainly wait and see how things develop in this case too. The potential for conflict, which will inevitably lead to collapse at some point, is huge. Nevertheless, there are other developments that require an acceleration of this process. The substance of our German people is being lost. One could also say that the immense immigration is causing the ecological system to collapse.

A: What do you mean by huge potential for conflict, and how could an acceleration occur?

G: Economically speaking, this globalized world is actually at its end. Growth is stalling. The mountains of debt of both public and private households in the industrialized countries have reached dizzying heights. Interest rates have been reduced to historical lows for the period since 1945. What more can be done?

Continue to lower interest rates, continue to take on debt in order to generate growth for a certain period of time? The available economic policy instruments are simply worn out. The global economy is heading towards a catastrophe. Targeted terror, such as on September 11, could then be the catalyst in a hopeless situation to achieve an acceleration effect.

A: What else is important in your opinion?

G: The Americans' political solo efforts will break up old coalitions. The political cards will be reshuffled, and this at a time of economic instability! This will provoke new battles over the distribution of natural resources, energy, etc. Massive conflicts will also arise in multicultural states, where the long-established population is losing its historical majority due to its low birth rate. The pain threshold does not seem to have been reached here yet, however. And don't forget historical revisionism!

What a difference it has made. The fact alone that Germany waged a preventive war against the Russians in 1941 almost overturns one's world view. And I think there is no end in sight to the revelations that will rehabilitate Germany.

A: The authors who have written about this alleged Third Power have always been accused of sabotaging the activities of the political right by creating something like an apocalyptic hope that prevents any concrete political action. What do you think of this statement?

G: I don't think so. The aim must be to help prepare for political change through a change in consciousness. That is where the political right has its role to play. It is also unlikely that a right-wing party in Western Europe can gain a respectable, i.e. governable, absolute majority through elections. Political repression will know how to prevent that. A breakthrough in the media is certainly not conceivable given the current balance of power. If the political right had control of just one television station, the monopoly on public opinion would be broken and a storm would sweep across the country. The path to power will therefore have to be a conspiratorial one.

A: How could that be possible?

G: Through a combination of a gradual change in consciousness by the parties and organizations operating in public with an almost silent seizure of the important centers of power by conspiratorial means, let's say, by a kind of international counter-lodge, to use a common term. And this development does not only relate to Germany, but to all countries that have produced people of our descent. This common descent will be the unifying factor, regardless of any national feeling. Just like it was in my unit during the war. A political majority will also not be necessary at all for another reason. Just look at the development of voter turnout in many countries. This says everything about the acceptance of the political system among the population. If I remember correctly, US President Bush was elected in 2000 with just a quarter of the votes of all Americans. 50 percent of voters preferred their private pleasures to voting on election day. So-called democracy is imploding, so to speak. And I guess that means your third power will have an easy time of it.

So much for the summary of the topic of this book relevant conversation content.

What should I make of the statements made by my conversation partner? To what extent do they actually describe the reality of current developments and are not just wishful thinking?

One thing is certain: the economic situation today, as these lines are being written, is in many ways similar to that before the last major global economic crisis. As in 1929, 2005 has seen a strong increase in the money supply, steadily rising industrial and private household debt, a trade deficit in the USA, a wave of corporate mergers and a so-called bubble formation on the capital markets. (136) At that time, the world economy fell into a deep recession from which it was not to emerge until 1942. Capitalism seemed to be at an end. Only in Germany, where a completely new economic policy had been pursued since 1933, was the crisis overcome in a short time. Not - as is often claimed - by a gigantic armament program or even the construction of motorways, but by an economic system that skilfully combined the advantages of a market and state economy. (137) It was only during the Second World War that this greatest of all economic crises to date came to an end. The fighting and the reconstruction that began after the war provided the necessary boost in demand. Without the war, the economic system that lies behind the terms market economy and free trade would probably have remained only a fleeting historical episode.

More than 70 years later, this economic system could be facing a second major collapse. The signs are pointing to a storm! The time when this new global economic crisis will break out will be determined by others. Prof. Dr. Eberhard Hamer and his wife Eike Hamer have described who with frightening clarity in their book What happens when the crash comes?

»The financial markets are, however, fundamentally not really free markets, but are largely organized, right up to monetary sovereignty, directly or indirectly, openly or through trustees in two world-leading financial groups (Rothschild Group and Rockefeller Group), whose trustees are also promised a majority in the private (!!!; the author) Federal Reserve Bank , so that the world's leading financial groups not only control the most powerful central bank in the world, but can also use this bank to determine their own interest rates, exchange rates and even the timing of a crash. What happens on the financial markets is therefore not random and not determined by investors, but by the strategic considerations of the aforementioned high finance.

During the last major economic crisis in the early 1930s, high finance in the USA increased its share of wealth from 20 to 34 percent, thus emerging from the crash as a relative winner.

In this respect, it is to be expected that the coming crash will only happen once high finance has completed its preparations for it." The authors' comment that the leading global financial powers, Rockefeller and Rothschild, do not always agree is not very reassuring. After all, they regularly campaigned against each other in order to get the respective US presidents to act as their representatives.

Clinton was a representative of the Rothschild side, and Bush now represents the Rockefeller side. (136) It can be assumed that when the big picture is at stake, these marginal differences of interest no longer play a role.

What would happen if - as my interlocutor from La Paz considers possible - this looming second major global economic crisis were to be sustainably accelerated by targeted terrorist attacks such as those on September 11, 2001?

This would undoubtedly destroy the plan drawn up by the ruling groups of high finance. High finance itself could be dragged into the vortex of the abyss by movements on the capital markets that would no longer be controllable in such a case.

In fact, the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon took place - one could say with great tactical skill - at a time when the stock markets around the world had been in a downturn since the spring of 2000. The acceleration effect of 9/11 made the crisis even more difficult.

After the September 1991 crisis, there was another massive collapse of the capital markets as well as a political destabilization that continues to this day (see, for example, the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq and the poorly concealed break-up of the transatlantic coalition).

What is less well known is that the man who, against the will of the

The "great crash" looming in high finance could only be averted because the US central bank immediately made 200 billion new dollars available to the markets. (136)

No one will doubt that the conventional bomb attacks that have frequently occurred since September 11, 2001, are actually the work of Islamic extremists. The situation is quite different with the "mother of all these events," the attacks of September 11. A flood of literature has since appeared on this topic, which - in the sense of a conspiracy theory - assumes that this series of attacks came from completely different circles and thus casts doubt on the official version. Suspicions range from the Israeli secret service Mossad to interested industrial managers, preferably close to the oil industry, to the US government itself. The latter variant is the most frequently mentioned. The fact that, alongside the others, the blame placed on the US government in particular is to be regarded as untenable will be explained in more detail later.

The actual masterminds behind the attacks could have been identified very quickly and were probably identified, but these investigation results were not reflected in the public opinion they deserved.

The authors Rolf Bovier and Pierre Matthias titled a report broadcast shortly after the attacks on September 25, 2001 in the ARD business magazine plusminus: "Insider trading before the terrorist attacks in the USA?" and thus pointed the way in which immediate investigations should have been carried out. The following can be read about the content of the report on the Internet: "In the attack on the World Trade Center in New York, the terrorists not only destroyed a building, they also used the logistics and perhaps even the methods of the financial world and apparently made a lot of money from it. ...

Financial supervisory authorities worldwide are investigating: It concerns transactions on the stock exchanges from New York to Tokyo. The suspicion: the perpetrators of the terrorist attacks could have earned billions. One of the most effective methods for this is so-called short selling. This is the sale of shares that are in the seller's possession but do not belong to him. The speculator pays a loan fee for the share package for a limited period of time. And sells the securities. If the price actually collapses, he buys the shares at dumping prices and returns them. For the speculator a very good deal. He makes the difference between the high selling price and the low buying price. These deals are particularly safe if you have insider knowledge or can even bring about events yourself that drive the market down. ... The Luxembourg financial expert Ernest Backes has been dealing with white-collar crime in the banking sector for years. He says there are indications of unusual transactions with which bin Laden's group could have made money: 'You can, for example, check whether there was an attack on a certain security of a certain airline during a certain period of time. Since these securities are kept in the clearing systems, you always have an overview of who owned them at what time.' The supervisory authorities have such indications in the USA and in Europe.

What is particularly striking is the sudden, gigantic trading of options on falling prices for the airlines American and United.
On the Thursday before the accident, United Airlines saw an explosion in the turnover of so-called put options. 200,000 were traded, otherwise it was often not even 1,000. And the situation is similar at American Airlines and the insurance companies. Here terrorists could have earned billions on the stock exchange. According to Backes, the trail leads to Switzerland, to accounts of an organization that was founded years ago by the now deceased lawyer Francois Genoud and apparently still exists... One of these points of contact is that the Swiss lawyer had very close ties to bin Laden's family, that he was one of the family's advisors, one of their bankers. It is known that he supported terrorism and was the asset manager of Hitler's fortune..." (138)

If "financial supervisory authorities worldwide have investigated" and it should not have been difficult to identify the owners of these securities using the existing clearing systems, why were these investigations apparently abandoned or the interested public not informed of their results?

Did bin Laden have any backers?
Who, above all, is this Francois Genoud?

»Francois Genoud (1915-1996) was considered one of the last representatives of the ›Black International‹ and undoubtedly one of those who openly contributed most to the rebirth of National Socialism in in the world," writes Karl Laske in his biography of the Swiss. (139) "For Francois Genoud, the Second World War is not over ... One phase is over, another is just beginning. He believes he has a task: to continue the war by other means."

When founding his own bank, Genoud also consulted Dr. Schacht, yes, the same Dr. Hjalmar Schacht who had been Minister of Economics and President of the Reichsbank under Hitler in the Third Reich.
At one of these meetings, Schacht stated that "Germany could conquer the world without waging war." (139) If we also take into account that Schacht's niece had married Otto Skorzeny, we can assume that Schacht had the necessary background knowledge that gives this statement particular value.

Continuing the war by other means? Yes, what means? Definitely not the means of war! The answer? - Patience please!

In 1932, at the age of 17, Genoud met Adolf Hitler for the first time in the house of his parents' friends - and was enchanted. In Switzerland, he was a member of the National Front, which received secret financial support from the Germans. In 1940, he became a German agent. Genoud is said to have been involved in financial transactions on behalf of the German intelligence service, including as a trustee of the assets of certain prominent figures of the Third Reich. At the end of the war, he was also able to finance various escape organizations. He was considered the administrator of these secret Nazi assets practically until his suicide in 1996. (139)

Let us hear what significance other prominent contemporaries attach to him.

The former head of Himmler's personal staff, SS-Obergruppenführer Karl Wolff, stated: "Francois Genoud was very important to us. We were very restricted in our movements. He could move freely and served as an important liaison man for us." The last leader of the Hitler Youth, Arthur Axmann, claimed that

"Genoud was one of the few people who was allowed to enter Hitler's offices without prior registration."

And Otto Skorzeny confirmed that »Genoud was an important man of the intelligence service that was directly subordinate to Hitler. (139)

After the war, Francois Genoud published Hitler's Table Talks and his political testament (Bormann Dictates), the authenticity of which is disputed, in several languages, and also acquired the copyright to the entire literary legacy of Joseph Goebbels. He defended Adolf Eichmann as well as Klaus Barbie, proving in all of this that he was first and foremost "not a man of money, but a fanatic" who devoted all his energy to revising the historical events of 1945. (139)

In addition to his publishing activities, which influenced public awareness, he looked for ways to wage war against the victorious powers of 1945 by other means.

One of these paths led him directly into the arms of the Arab (Islamic) liberation movements. And here begins the "second life" of Francois Genoud, a career that ran parallel to his career as a National Socialist underground fighter.

In 1936, Genoud went on a journey of discovery to the Orient with a friend. In Baghdad they met all the Palestinian leaders who had been sentenced to death by England. Then in Jerusalem the decisive encounter took place: a reception by the Grand Mufti Haj Amin el-Husseini. He was considered the political leader of the Arab resistance in Palestine, against both the English and the Jews. He later also took a determined stand on Hitler's side and helped recruit Muslim volunteers for the Waffen-SS. In 1941, the Grand Mufti was in Berlin and met Hitler himself on this occasion. Genoud also came to Berlin at this time and it was suspected that he may have played a role in this meeting. Genoud also seems to have had a hand in the transfer of the Grand Mufti's war treasure to the Reich capital Berlin. After that, Genoud's pro-Arab commitment went quiet for a while, at least on the surface.

The next bombshell came in 1956: At the height of the Suez crisis, when Israelis, French and British were trying together to reverse the nationalization of the Suez Canal by military means, Genoud founded an association of friends of a free Arab world. Two years later he founded the Banque commerciale arabe, the Arab Commercial Bank. This was later used to finance the covert arms deliveries for the Algerian War of Independence. After the successful outcome of the war, Genoud became financial advisor to the new Algerian leadership. Through this he was then able to establish connections with the Palestinian Liberation Organization PFLP. One of the leaders of this Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, Abu Sharif, later said: "Francois Genoud is the man who has done more for the Palestinian cause than all of us combined." Through the Palestinians, Genoud found direct access to terrorism. The PFLP's campaign of aircraft hijackings began in July 1968 with the hijacking of an Israeli plane and continued over the next few years with some spectacular actions. Genoud in turn helped with the financing and provided legal counsel where legal proceedings were initiated. Most recently, he supported top terrorist Carlos, a Venezuelan who was devoted body and soul to the Palestinian struggle. (139) And not to be forgotten, because it is relevant to the topic of this book, are his "closest ties to the bin Laden family."

What could have been the motives for Francois Genoud's commitment to the Arab cause? On the surface, anti-Judaism may have played a role, although Genoud himself claimed that he was not an anti-Semite, but at most an anti-Zionist.

Historically, his main concern in the 1930s and 1940s up until the end of the war seems to have been to support the Germans in their fight against England. He was best able to do this by bringing his trump card, the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, into play in the open and covert theater of war in the Middle East.

After the end of the Second World War, with the help of the Arabs, he again directed his activities against the English (see Suez Crisis), against the second European superpower France (see Algerian War) and against the newly founded state of Israel with its protecting power, the USA.

I think that one misunderstands Genoud's intentions if one assumes that he was acting solely in the interests of the Arabs. It almost seems as if he was simply using them. His real goals were, as we know, different. For him, the Second World War was not yet over, the war was now being fought with different means...

Was Francois Genoud really alone in this fight? Isn’t it rather, to assume that he was a representative of the Third Power? The strategy of terrorist pinpricks seems to be pursued with even greater vehemence by his successors.

The main goal now is the destruction of the United States. Terrorism cannot and should not bring America to its knees militarily. However, it does serve its purpose in exacerbating growing sociopolitical contradictions. That is why we now have another dimension to terror. And September 11 is probably just the beginning.

The Arabs were once again in the spotlight at this major media event, as initial suspicion immediately fell on the group known as Al-Qaeda. However, as US Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld's deputy, Paul Wolfowitz, explained shortly after the attacks: "This operation was too sophisticated and too complicated to be carried out by one terrorist group alone." (140)

In his book The Censored Day , the author Christian C. Walther has dealt in detail with the official version as well as with the various conspiracy theories about September 11th. In his opinion, neither approach can really explain the events that took place in a plausible way, and the US government's version is also a conspiracy theory when it claims: "Four passenger planes were hijacked by Al-Qaeda terrorists and flown into buildings." (140) The decisive proof that this was not the case can be seen in the fact that none of the hijacked planes that are later said to have crashed into the towers of the World Trade Center or the Pentagon had actually made a course correction!

American Airlines Flight 11 is said to have crashed into the North Tower of the World Trade Center at 8:46 a.m. on September 11, 2001. Tracking the plane's course by air traffic controllers revealed that it was 150 miles from New York six minutes before the impact and was still visible on the air traffic controllers' screens at the time of the impact. This definitely rules it out as a terrorist plane.

United Airlines Flight 175, which allegedly flew into the South Tower, has not, according to the published information, planned course. Instead, at the same time, air traffic controllers discovered an unknown "intruder" with an unknown transponder identifier.

It also could not have been the American Airlines 77 that crashed into the Pentagon, because in order to cover the approximately 600 kilometers from its last known position to New York in eight minutes, it would have had to travel at four and a half times the speed of sound. AA 77 simply disappeared from the radar screens. A controller confirmed: "We have no radar contact and no connection to it." In this case, too, an unidentified plane appeared, which triggered the disaster a short time later.

United Airlines Flight 93 was apparently shot down over Pennsylvania on President Bush's orders before it could "disappear." (140)

Conclusion: Of the four planes in question, three simply disappeared from the air traffic controllers' screens without changing course; three unknown "intruders" pounced on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon as targets.

Christian C. Walther puts it very simply when he counteracts the American authorities' approaches to solving the problem: "Airplanes had disappeared. Airplanes had flown into buildings. Consequently, the missing planes must have been the ones that hit the buildings."

If the conspiracy theorists who claim that the US government itself was responsible for the events of September 11 were right, there would have been hundreds of people in the relevant US authorities who knew about the attacks and were involved in their planning and execution. Secrecy on a large scale may work if it is required by the security interests of a people or state against a foreign power. However, if the state becomes a criminal against its own people, this is undoubtedly not guaranteed.

In summary, Christian C. Walther suggests the following scenario:

a. Flights 11, 175, 77 and 93 were hijacked. b. They were hijacked by teams of three. c. The 19 men identified by the FBI as perpetrators were on board. d. The planes were not hijacked by Arabs.

e. The North Tower plane was evidently not Flight 11. f. The South Tower plane was evidently not Flight 175. g. The Pentagon plane was evidently not Flight 77. The crash Machines were remote controlled.

h. The Pennsylvania plane was possibly Flight 93. i. ... the identity of three planes in the airspace was not clear. j. No air traffic controller was incompetent or "in the know". k. The interceptors took off on time.

1. They flew to where the hijacked planes were located, m. The US government knew nothing about the planned crime, n. The secret services knew nothing about the plan, o. The 19 Arabs on board knew nothing about the course of the Crime, p. The FBI did a good job within its capabilities.

The author suspects that the Pakistani secret service and influential drug, arms and oil profiteers from the USA were behind the attacks. What he does not explain is the crucial aspect of the drama of September 11th, which is undoubtedly a technical one. How is it possible for three large commercial aircraft to suddenly disappear from the radar operators' screens?

Who or what was responsible for this "invisibility"? And the planes and their passengers? To this day, they have not resurfaced. One solution is obvious: it must have been a technically superior power that was able to take over the planes so easily without making itself known to the outside world.

One last question about September 11th is: Why this particular day? This question is also very easy to answer. Because a large-scale military exercise took place on that day. Codename: Vigilant Guardian. The exercise was intended to simulate an air attack on the United States. (140) It was only under this cover that the complicated operation was even possible. Confusion in the airspace was therefore inevitable.

The informant who passed this information on to the "terrorists" must be attributed to American government circles. He, as well as the twelve hijackers of the planes, are the actual middlemen of "Operation 9/11". Are they Perhaps they were members of the kind of international “counter-lodge” that my interlocutor in La Paz was convinced must exist?

Which finally makes the author of this book a conspiracy theorist.
theorist would have been convicted.

The trail to the masterminds, however, appears to be lost in the organization that Francois Genoud had once founded. War by other means appears to have entered its next phase with September 11, and further escalation is to be expected (see also the statements of the abductees in Chapter 3).

However, speculating about the next steps of the Third Power is no longer the purpose of this book. Fate takes its course.

Machine Translated by Google

CALL

The topic of the Third Power reduces a multitude of facts and phenomena that in modern times were considered "inexplicable" or attributed to "extraterrestrial intervention" to the lowest common (earthly) denominator.

Should you, dear reader, have any further information or evidence that would support the
If you would like to use the image designed for this book, please contact me via the Publisher address:

Gilbert Sternhoff c/o
Kopp Verlag
Pfeiferstraße 52
D-72108 Rottenburg

Machine Translated by Google

Machine Translated by Google

SOURCES AND BIBLIOGRAPHY

1. Landig, Wilhelm: Wolfszeit um Thule, Vienna 1980 2. Landig, Wilhelm: Götzen gegen Thule, Vienna 1971 3. Heller, Friedrich Paul and Maegerle, Anton: Thule - From ethnic occultism to the New Right, Stuttgart 1998 (including the contents of an interview with Wilhelm Landig)

4. Landig, Wilhelm: Rebels for Thule, Vienna 1991 5. Secret Societies, Video, 1998 6. Internet: www.unglaublichkeiten.com

7. Trimondi, Victor and Victoria: Hitler Buddha Krishna, Vienna 2002 8. Szabo, Ladislao: Hitler esta vivo, Barcelona 1947 9. Vesco, Renato and Childress, David Hatcher: Man-Made UFOs 1944-1994, 1994

10. Lusar, Rudolf: The German secret weapons of the Second World War and its further development, Munich 1958

11. Mattern, W.: UFOs Nazi Secret Weapon?, Toronto 1974 12. Friedrich, Christof: Secret Nazi Polar Expeditions, Toronto 1979 13. van Helsing, Jan: Operation Aldebaran, Fichtenau 2000 14. Stoll, Axel: High technology in the Third Reich, Schleusingen 2001 15. Zunneck, Karl-Heinz: Total manipulation, Rottenburg 2002 16. Vesco, Renato: Operazione Plenilunio, Mursia 1972 17. Rothkugel, Klaus-Peter: The secret of the German flying discs, Zweibrücken 2002

18. Cook, Nick: The Hunt for Zero Point, London 2001 19. Schön, Heinz: Mythos Neu-Schwabenland, Selent 2004 20. Brennecke, Jochen: The German auxiliary cruisers in the Second World War, Hamburg 2001 21. Reitsch, Hanna: Flying - My Life, Stuttgart 1951 22. Irving, David: Führer and Reich Chancellor, Munich 1989 23. Fraschka, Günter: With swords and diamonds, Munich 1989 24. Speer, Albert: Memories, Ullstein TBV

25. Stahl, P. W: Geheimgeschwader KG 200, Stuttgart 1980 26. Georg, Friedrich and Mehner, Thomas: Atomic Target New York, Rottenburg 2004

Machine Translated by Google

27. Witkowski, Igor: Truth about the Wunderwaffe, Farnborough 2003 28. Bar-Zohar, Michael: The Avengers, New York 1967 29. Schröm, Oliver and Röpke, Andrea: Silent Help for Brown Comrades,
Berlin 2002

30. Hamburger Morgenpost, twelve-part series, 1953 31. Gehring, Heiner and Rothkugel, Klaus R: The flying disc myth,
Schleusingen 2001
32. Welt am Sonntag, Hamburg, 26 April 1953 33.
Deutsche Illustrierte, No. 45/1952 34. Mayer,
Edgar and Mehner, Thomas: The Secret of the German Atomic Bomb, Rottenburg 2001 35.
Mayer, Edgar and Mehner, Thomas:
Hitler and the Bomb, Rottenburg
2002

36. Karisch, Rainer: Hitler's Bomb, Munich 2005 37. Trimondi, Victor and Victoria: Hitler Buddha Krishna, Vienna 2002 38. Internet:
www.Sonnenwacht.de

39. Bild der Wissenschaften, December 1971 40.
Blumrich, JF: Kasskara and the Seven Worlds, Knaur TBV 41. Brugger, Karl:
The Chronicle of Akakor, Knaur TBV 42. Bergschicker, Heinz:
German Chronicle, Berlin 1982 43. Lang, Jochen von: The Secretary, Stuttgart 1977 44. Internet: www.geschi.de

45. Speer, Albert: The Slave State, Ullstein TBV 46.
Lauterbacher, Hartmann: Experienced and Co-Created, Preußisch Oldendorf
1984

47. Irving, David: Goebbels, Kiel 1997 48.
Smelser, Roland and Syring, Enrico (eds.): The SS - Elite under the Skull, Paderborn 2000
49. Agoston, Tom: Teufel oder Technocrat, Berlin 1993 50.
Witkowski, Igor: Hitler's Super Secret Weapons, Warschau 2000 51. Goni, Uki:
The Real ODESSA, London 2003 52. Internet:
www.physicstoday.com
53. Georg, Friedrich: Hitler's Weapons of Victory, Volume 1, Schleusingen 2000 54.
Sünner, Rüdiger: Black Sun, Freiburg im Breisgau 1999 55. Fahr, Hans Jörg:
The Big Bang is Falling, Stuttgart 1992 56. Fraenkel, Heinrich and Manvell,
Roger: Goebbels, Heyne TBV, 1989

57. German History, No. 5/2004 58. Irving,
David: Göring, Hamburg 1989 59. Charroux, Robert:
The Riddle of the Andes, Düsseldorf 1997 60. Internet: www.idgr.de 61. Herbert, Ulrich: Best, Bonn 2001 62.

Ludwiger, Illobrand von: The State of UFO Research, Frankfurt am Main 1992

63. Good, Timothy: Beyond Top Secret, Frankfurt am Main 1991 64. Friedman, StantonT.: Top Secret, Munich 1997 65. Hynek, Dr. J. Allen;
Imbrogno, Philip and Pratt, Bob: Night Siege, New York 1987

66. Brand, Illobrand from: Unidentified Flying Objects over Europe, Munich 1999

67. Rändle, Kevin D.; Estes, Russ and Cone, William R: Abduction Enigma, New York 1999 68.
Jacobs, David M.: Secret Life, Rottenburg 1995 69. Jacobs, David M.: Threat, Rottenburg 1998 70. Hopkins, Budd: Missing Time,
Rottenburg 1993 71. Hopkins, Budd: Intruders, Hamburg 1991
72. Hopkins, Budd: Abducted into Space, Berlin 1997 73.
Hopkins, Budd: Sight Unseen, New York 2003 74. Fowler, Raymond E.: The Watchers, Bergisch-Gladbach 1991 75.
Walton, Travis: Fire in the Sky, Rottenburg 1996 76. Lammer, Helmut and Marion: Covert Operations, Munich 1997 77. Tepperwein, Kurt: The High School of Hypnosis, Vienna 1996 78. Strieber, Whitley: The Visitors, Munich 1991 79.
Fowler, Raymond E.: The Guardians II, Reifenberg 1996 80. Alien Discussions,
Cambridge 1994 81. MUFON UFO Journal, April 1993 82.
Racial Policy, SS Main Office Berlin, no year 83. Wüst, Walther: Indo-European Confession, Berlin 1942 84. Hitler, Adolf: Mein Kampf, Munich 1934 85. Deschner,
Günther: Reinhard Heydrich, Berlin 1987 86. Günther, Hans FK: Racial Studies of the German People, Munich

1935

87. Reche, Otto: Race and Homeland of the Indo-Europeans, Munich 1936

Machine Translated by Google

88. Heinemann, Isabel: Race, Settlement, German Blood, Göttingen 2003 89. Deichmann, Ute: Biologists under Hitler, Frankfurt am Main 1995 90. Der Spiegel, No. 12/2005 91. Völklein, Ulrich: Josef Mengele, Göttingen 2000 92. Posner, Gerald and Ware, John: Mengele,
Berlin 1993 93. Internet: www.nd-online.de

94. Vallee, Jacques: Dimensions, Frankfurt am Main 1994 95. Film Memories of the Future, 1970 96. Däniken, Erich von:
Back to the Stars, Knaur TBV 97. Hoerner, Sebastian von: Are We Alone?,
Munich 2003 98. Däniken, Erich von: The Traces of the Extraterrestrials, Munich 1990 99. Halpern, Paul: Wormholes in the Cosmos, Munich 1994 100. Mania, Dietrich: On the Traces of Prehistoric Man, Berlin 1990 101. Däniken, Erich von: Evidence, Düsseldorf 1984 102. Hoyle, Fred: The Intelligent Universe, Frankfurt am Main 1984 103. de Duve, Christian: Born of Dust,
Reinbek 1997 104. Bauval, Robert G. in: Are We Alone, Düsseldorf 1996 105. Haase, Michael: The Field of Tears, Munich 2000 106. Haase, Michael: In the Sign of Re, Munich 1999 107. Däniken, Erich von: My World in Pictures,
Knaur TBV 108. Hertel, Gisa and Peter: Unsolved Mysteries of Old Maps,
Gotha 1984 109. Meier, Gert and Zschweigert, Hermann: The Advanced Civilization of the Megalithic Age, Tübingen 1997 110. Meier, Gert: The Early German Period Was Quite Different, Tübingen 1999 111. Däniken, Erich von: Sowing and Cosmos, Knaur TBV 112. Ernsting, Walter: The Day the Gods Died, Düsseldorf

1997

113. Der Spiegel, No. 12/1973 114.
Kanjilal, Dileep Kumar in: Ancient Skies, No. 3/1982 115. Internet:
www.Tatjana.Ingold.ch
116. Stingl, Miloslav: Inka, Berlin 1989 117.
Kanjilal, Dileep Kumar in: From the Depths of Space, Tübingen 1985 118. Fiebag, Peter; Eenboom, Algund and Belting, Peter: Airplanes of the Pharaohs, Rottenburg 2004

119. Krassa, Peter: And came upon fiery dragons, Munich 1990 120. Däniken, Erich von: Was I mistaken?, Munich 1988 121. Spanuth, Jürgen: The Atlanteans, Tübingen 1998 122. Gemballa, Gero: Colonia Dignidad, Frankfurt am Main 1998 123. Heller, Friedrich Paul: Colonia Dignidad, Stuttgart 1993 124. Internet: www.agpf.de

125. Heller, Friedrich Paul: The Language of Hate, Stuttgart 2001 126. Giesler, Hermann: Another Hitler, Leoni 1977 127. Magazine 2000, No. 1/1998 128. Magazine 2000, No. 4/1998 129. Buttlar, Johannes von: They come from foreign stars, Knaur TBV 130. McDaniel, Stanley V. and Rix Pacson, Monica (eds.): The Case for the Face, Kempton 1998 131. Sitchin, Zecharia: In the beginning was progress, Knaur TBV 132. Carlotto, Mark J.: The Martian Enigmas, Berkeley 1991 133. Fowler, Raymond E.: The Andreasson case, Reifenberg 1995 134. Spektrum der Wissenschaft, Dossier 3/2004: Mars 135. Fabulous times, No. 3/2004 136. Hamer, Eberhard and Eike: What happens when the crash comes?, 2002

137. Eimer, Hans-Jürgen: Hitler's Germans, Gernsbach 1991 138. Internet: www.br-online.de

139. Laske, Karl: A life between Hitler and Carlos: Francois Genoud, Zurich 1996

140. Walther, Christian C: The Censored Day, Munich 2004

Machine Translated by Google

Machine Translated by Google

IMAGE SOURCES

Abb. 1, 2, 3,4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 29, 30, 31, 32, 36, 37 - Archive Gilbert Sternhoff

Fig. 5, 6 - Georg, Friedrich and Mehner, Thomas - Nuclear target New York, Rottenburg2004

Fig. 12 - Mayer, Edgar and Meiner, Thomas: The Secret of German atomic bomb, Rottenburg 2001 Fig. 13 - Sunday Telegraph, 1 September 1996 Fig. 23 - Hopkins, Budd: Missing Time, Rottenburg 1993 Fig. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28 - Archive Mathias Kappel Fig. 33, 35, 38 - NASA Fig. 34 - Internet

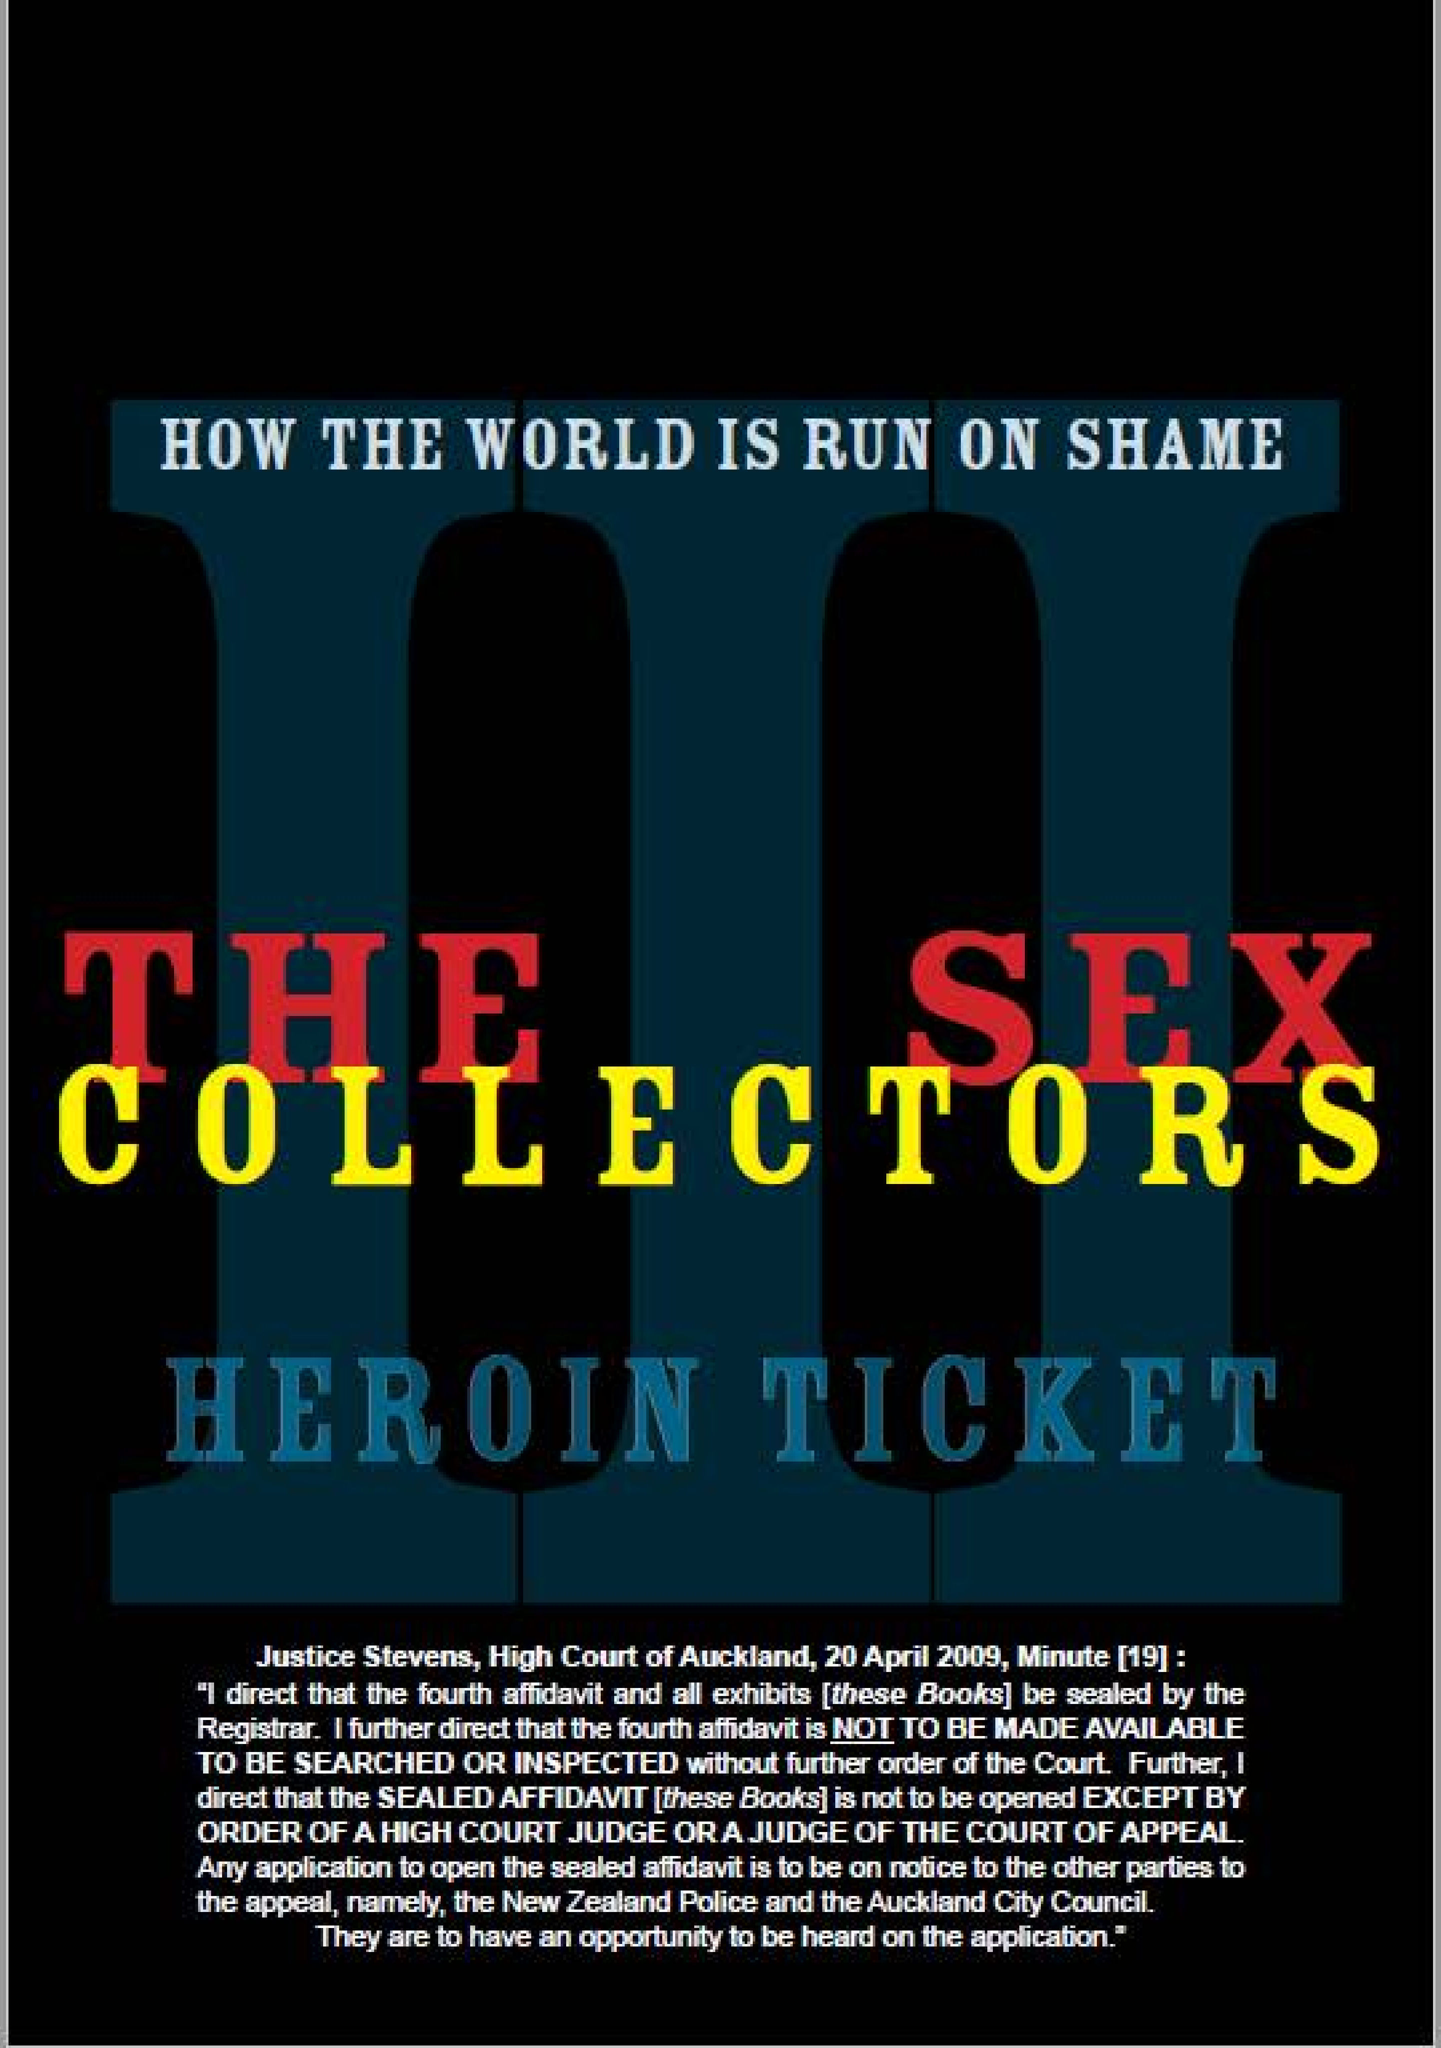
Machine Translated by Google

Seit dem Ende des Zweiten Weltkriegs wollen die Gerüchte und Vermutungen nicht verstummen, daß eine sogenannte Dritte Macht auf der Erde existiert. Sie soll damals, in den letzten Wirren des großen Völkerringens, in der Folge der deutschen Niederlage entstanden sein und sich mittels einer weltweiten Absetzbewegung und fortgeschrittener Technologien etabliert haben.

Was sich zunächst wie eine unglaubliche Science-Fiction-Story anhören mag, erhält durch die Ergebnisse der jahrelangen, intensiven Recherchen Gilbert Sternhoffs immer mehr Substanz:

- Die deutsche Absetzbewegung bei Kriegsende: War das in der Antarktis gelegene »Neuschwabenland« nur ein Ablenkungsmanöver?
- Geheime U-Boot-Transporte nach Südamerika: wie Personal- und Hochtechnologie aus Deutschland herausgeschafft wurde
- Das »Projekt Glocke«: Knackten deutsche Wissenschaftler das Geheimnis des Antigravitationsantriebes?
- Das moderne UFO-Phänomen – und was wirklich dahintersteckt: Unheimliche Begegnungen der dritten Art, Abductions, Implantate und »das große Zuchtprogramm« der »Aliens« zur Schaffung einer neuen Rasse
- Das irdische Hauptquartier: die Colonia Dignidad?
- Die Verbindung zum Mars – verschwundene Raumsonden, seltsame Strukturen auf der Oberfläche des roten Planeten und Hinweise auf Terraforming
- Die Dritte Macht und der 11. September 2001 – gibt es einen Zusammenhang?

ISBN 3-938516-17-8
9 783938 516171



HOW THE WORLD IS RUN ON SHAME

THE SEX COLLECTORS

III

HEROIN TICKET

Justice Stevens, High Court of Auckland, 20 April 2009, Minute [19] :

"I direct that the fourth affidavit and all exhibits [these Books] be sealed by the Registrar. I further direct that the fourth affidavit is NOT TO BE MADE AVAILABLE TO BE SEARCHED OR INSPECTED without further order of the Court. Further, I direct that the SEALED AFFIDAVIT [these Books] is not to be opened EXCEPT BY ORDER OF A HIGH COURT JUDGE OR A JUDGE OF THE COURT OF APPEAL. Any application to open the sealed affidavit is to be on notice to the other parties to the appeal, namely, the New Zealand Police and the Auckland City Council. They are to have an opportunity to be heard on the application."

Books by Greg Hallett

NEW ZEALAND – A Blackmailer's Guide 2007, 2008

HITLER WAS A BRITISH AGENT 2005, 2006

HOW TO TAKE OVER THE WORLD – A Right Royal Con 2007, 2008, 2009
STALIN'S BRITISH TRAINING – Breeding Concubines Paedophiles At War 2007, 2008
GIFTING THE UNITED NATIONS TO STALIN 2007, 2008, 2009

ARE YOU MY FATHER? The Family Court and Other Experiments 2002

THE SEX COLLECTORS – How the World is run on Shame – Vol. I, STITCH-UPS
First Edition July 2009 ISBN 978-0-473-15050-1
© Greg Hallett 2009

THE SEX COLLECTORS – How the World is run on Shame – Vol. II, MURDERS
First Edition March 2010 ISBN 978-0-473-15051-8
© Greg Hallett 2010

THE SEX COLLECTORS – How the World is run on Shame – Vol. III, HEROIN TICKET
First Edition March 2010 ISBN 978-0-473-15049-5
© Greg Hallett 2010

Published by PRINCE OF NEW SPAIN
PO Box 109 624, Newmarket, Auckland, New Zealand

Orders and distribution
FNZ Inc.
PO Box 109 624, Newmarket, Auckland, New Zealand

Purchases
www.greghallett.com

Contact the author
Cell: 0274 589 800
greg@greghallett.com
G: PrinceofNewSpain
Skype: PrinceofNewSpain

The images in this book are used under fair use. They are historically significant photos of famous individuals. They are a lower resolution than the originals and any copies will be of inferior quality. The photos are only used for informational purposes and their inclusion adds significantly to the knowledge gained as it depicts the subject with historical accuracy. Incorporating restricted material is fair use under United States copyright law and any challenges will be met with commercial and liberal parody.

This book was presented as evidence in the HIGH COURT of AUCKLAND. In Courtroom 13, High Court Justice Stevens sealed it at 3.45 pm on Monday 20 April 2009 so that 'No part of this book is allowed to be read by any member of the judiciary unless they have the written permission of THE NEW ZEALAND POLICE and the Auckland City Council lawyers present, to be heard in front of a High Court judge, and then maybe the Court of Appeal.

On 11 September 2009, District Court Judge Joyce then permanently sealed the Statement of Claims, Affidavits, Discovery, Memorandums and Interlocutory Application, as well as New Zealand – A Blackmailer's Guide, How to Take Over the World, Stalin's British Training, and Gifting the United Nations to Stalin.

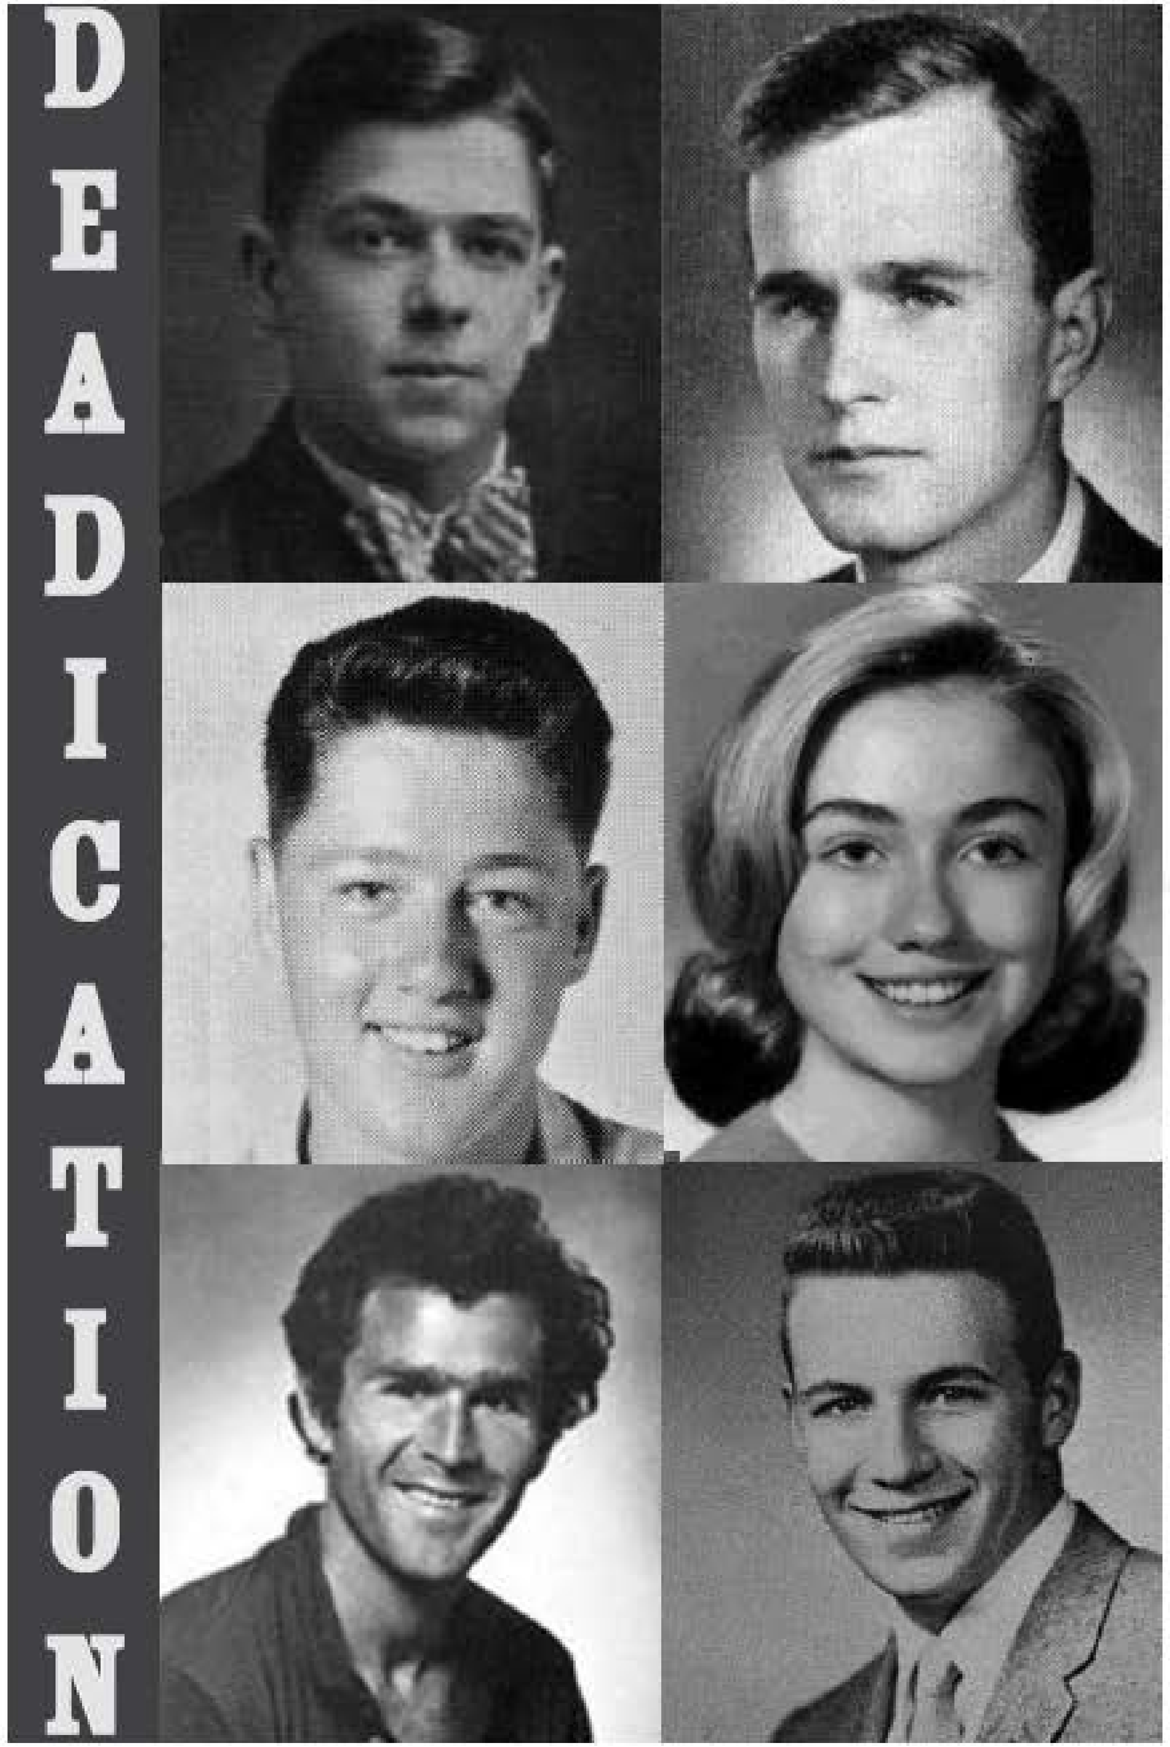
However the contents have not been given a secrecy order from the public . . . so be my guest and be well informed.

THE SEX COLLECTORS

III

GREG HALLETT

PRINCE OF NEW SPAIN
LONDON AUCKLAND FRANKFURT TORONTO



DEADICATION

I

STITCH-UPS

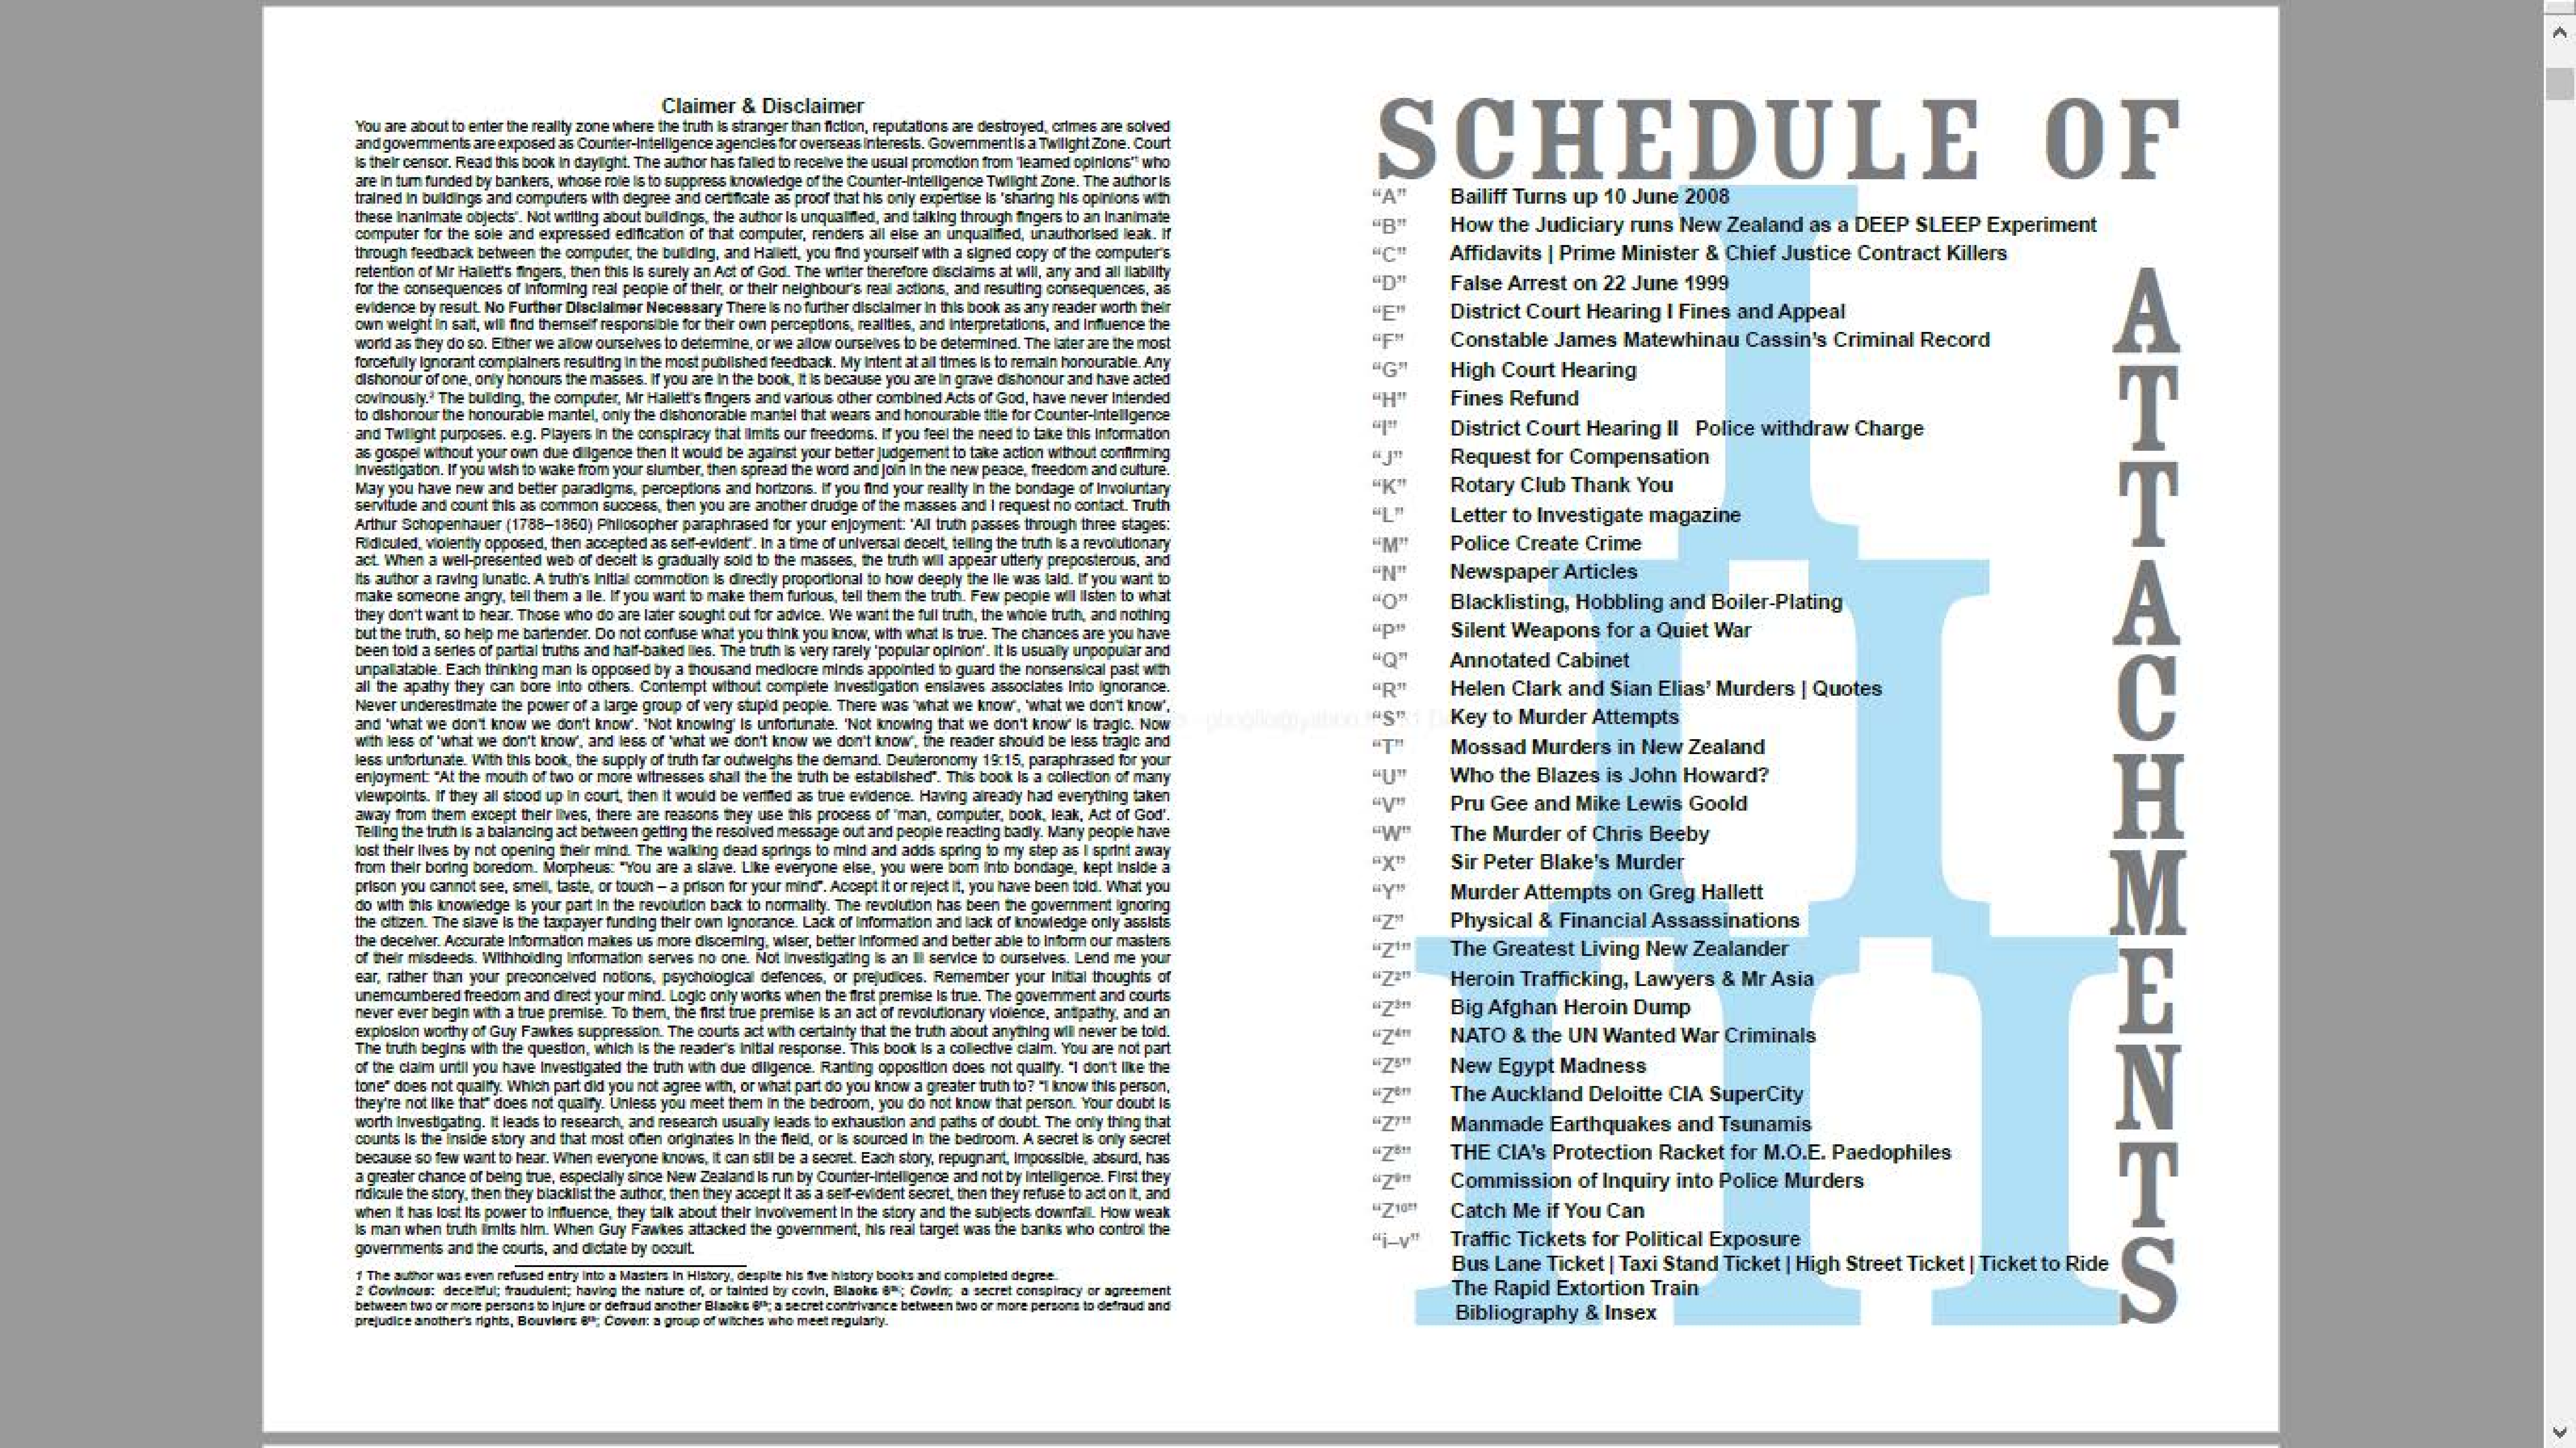
II

MURDERS

III

HEROIN TICKET

phoglio@yahoo.fr - 31.0



Claimer & Disclaimer

You are about to enter the reality zone where the truth is stranger than fiction, reputations are destroyed, crimes are solved and governments are exposed as Counter-Intelligence agencies for overseas interests. Government is a Twilight Zone. Court is their censor. Read this book in daylight. The author has failed to receive the usual promotion from 'learned opinions'[1] who are in turn funded by bankers, whose role is to suppress knowledge of the Counter-Intelligence Twilight Zone. The author is trained in buildings and computers with degree and certificate as proof that his only expertise is 'sharing his opinions with these inanimate objects'. Not writing about buildings, the author is unqualified, and talking through fingers to an inanimate computer for the sole and expressed edification of that computer, renders all else an unqualified, unauthorised leak. If through feedback between the computer, the building, and Hallett, you find yourself with a signed copy of the computer's retention of Mr Hallett's fingers, then this is surely an Act of God. The writer therefore disclaims at will, any and all liability for the consequences of informing real people of their, or their neighbour's real actions, and resulting consequences, as evidence by result. No Further Disclaimer Necessary There is no further disclaimer in this book as any reader worth their own weight in salt, will find themself responsible for their own perceptions, realities, and interpretations, and influence the world as they do so. Either we allow ourselves to determine, or we allow ourselves to be determined. The later are the most forcefully ignorant complainers resulting in the most published feedback. My intent at all times is to remain honourable. Any dishonour of one, only honours the masses. If you are in the book, it is because you are in grave dishonour and have acted covinously.[2] The building, the computer, Mr Hallett's fingers and various other combined Acts of God, have never intended to dishonour the honourable mantel, only the dishonorable mantel that wears and honourable title for Counter-Intelligence and Twilight purposes. e.g. Players in the conspiracy that limits our freedoms. If you feel the need to take this information as gospel without your own due diligence then it would be against your better judgement to take action without confirming investigation. If you wish to wake from your slumber, then spread the word and join in the new peace, freedom and culture. May you have new and better paradigms, perceptions and horizons. If you find your reality in the bondage of involuntary servitude and count this as common success, then you are another drudge of the masses and I request no contact. Truth Arthur Schopenhauer (1788–1860) Philosopher paraphrased for your enjoyment: 'All truth passes through three stages: Ridiculed, violently opposed, then accepted as self-evident'. In a time of universal deceit, telling the truth is a revolutionary act. When a well-presented web of deceit is gradually sold to the masses, the truth will appear utterly preposterous, and its author a raving lunatic. A truth's initial commotion is directly proportional to how deeply the lie was laid. If you want to make someone angry, tell them a lie. If you want to make them furious, tell them the truth. Few people will listen to what they don't want to hear. Those who do are later sought out for advice. We want the full truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help me bartender. Do not confuse what you think you know, with what is true. The chances are you have been told a series of partial truths and half-baked lies. The truth is very rarely 'popular opinion'. It is usually unpopular and unpalatable. Each thinking man is opposed by a thousand mediocre minds appointed to guard the nonsensical past with all the apathy they can bore into others. Contempt without complete investigation enslaves associates into ignorance. Never underestimate the power of a large group of very stupid people. There was 'what we know', 'what we don't know', and 'what we don't know we don't know'. 'Not knowing' is unfortunate. 'Not knowing that we don't know' is tragic. Now with less of 'what we don't know', and less of 'what we don't know we don't know', the reader should be less tragic and less unfortunate. With this book, the supply of truth far outweighs the demand. Deuteronomy 19:15, paraphrased for your enjoyment: "At the mouth of two or more witnesses shall the the truth be established". This book is a collection of many viewpoints. If they all stood up in court, then it would be verified as true evidence. Having already had everything taken away from them except their lives, there are reasons they use this process of 'man, computer, book, leak, Act of God'. Telling the truth is a balancing act between getting the resolved message out and people reacting badly. Many people have lost their lives by not opening their mind. The walking dead springs to mind and adds spring to my step as I sprint away from their boring boredom. Morpheus: "You are a slave. Like everyone else, you were born into bondage, kept inside a prison you cannot see, smell, taste, or touch – a prison for your mind". Accept it or reject it, you have been told. What you do with this knowledge is your part in the revolution back to normality. The revolution has been the government ignoring the citizen. The slave is the taxpayer funding their own ignorance. Lack of information and lack of knowledge only assists the deceiver. Accurate information makes us more discerning, wiser, better informed and better able to inform our masters of their misdeeds. Withholding information serves no one. Not investigating is an ill service to ourselves. Lend me your ear, rather than your preconceived notions, psychological defences, or prejudices. Remember your initial thoughts of unencumbered freedom and direct your mind. Logic only works when the first premise is true. The government and courts never ever begin with a true premise. To them, the first true premise is an act of revolutionary violence, antipathy, and an explosion worthy of Guy Fawkes suppression. The courts act with certainty that the truth about anything will never be told. The truth begins with the question, which is the reader's initial response. This book is a collective claim. You are not part of the claim until you have investigated the truth with due diligence. Ranting opposition does not qualify. "I don't like the tone" does not qualify. Which part did you not agree with, or what part do you know a greater truth to? "I know this person, they're not like that" does not qualify. Unless you meet them in the bedroom, you do not know that person. Your doubt is worth investigating. It leads to research, and research usually leads to exhaustion and paths of doubt. The only thing that counts is the inside story and that most often originates in the field, or is sourced in the bedroom. A secret is only secret because so few want to hear. When everyone knows, it can still be a secret. Each story, repugnant, impossible, absurd, has a greater chance of being true, especially since New Zealand is run by Counter-Intelligence and not by intelligence. First they ridicule the story, then they blacklist the author, then they accept it as a self-evident secret, then they refuse to act on it, and when it has lost its power to influence, they talk about their involvement in the story and the subjects downfall. How weak is man when truth limits him. When Guy Fawkes attacked the government, his real target was the banks who control the governments and the courts, and dictate by occult.

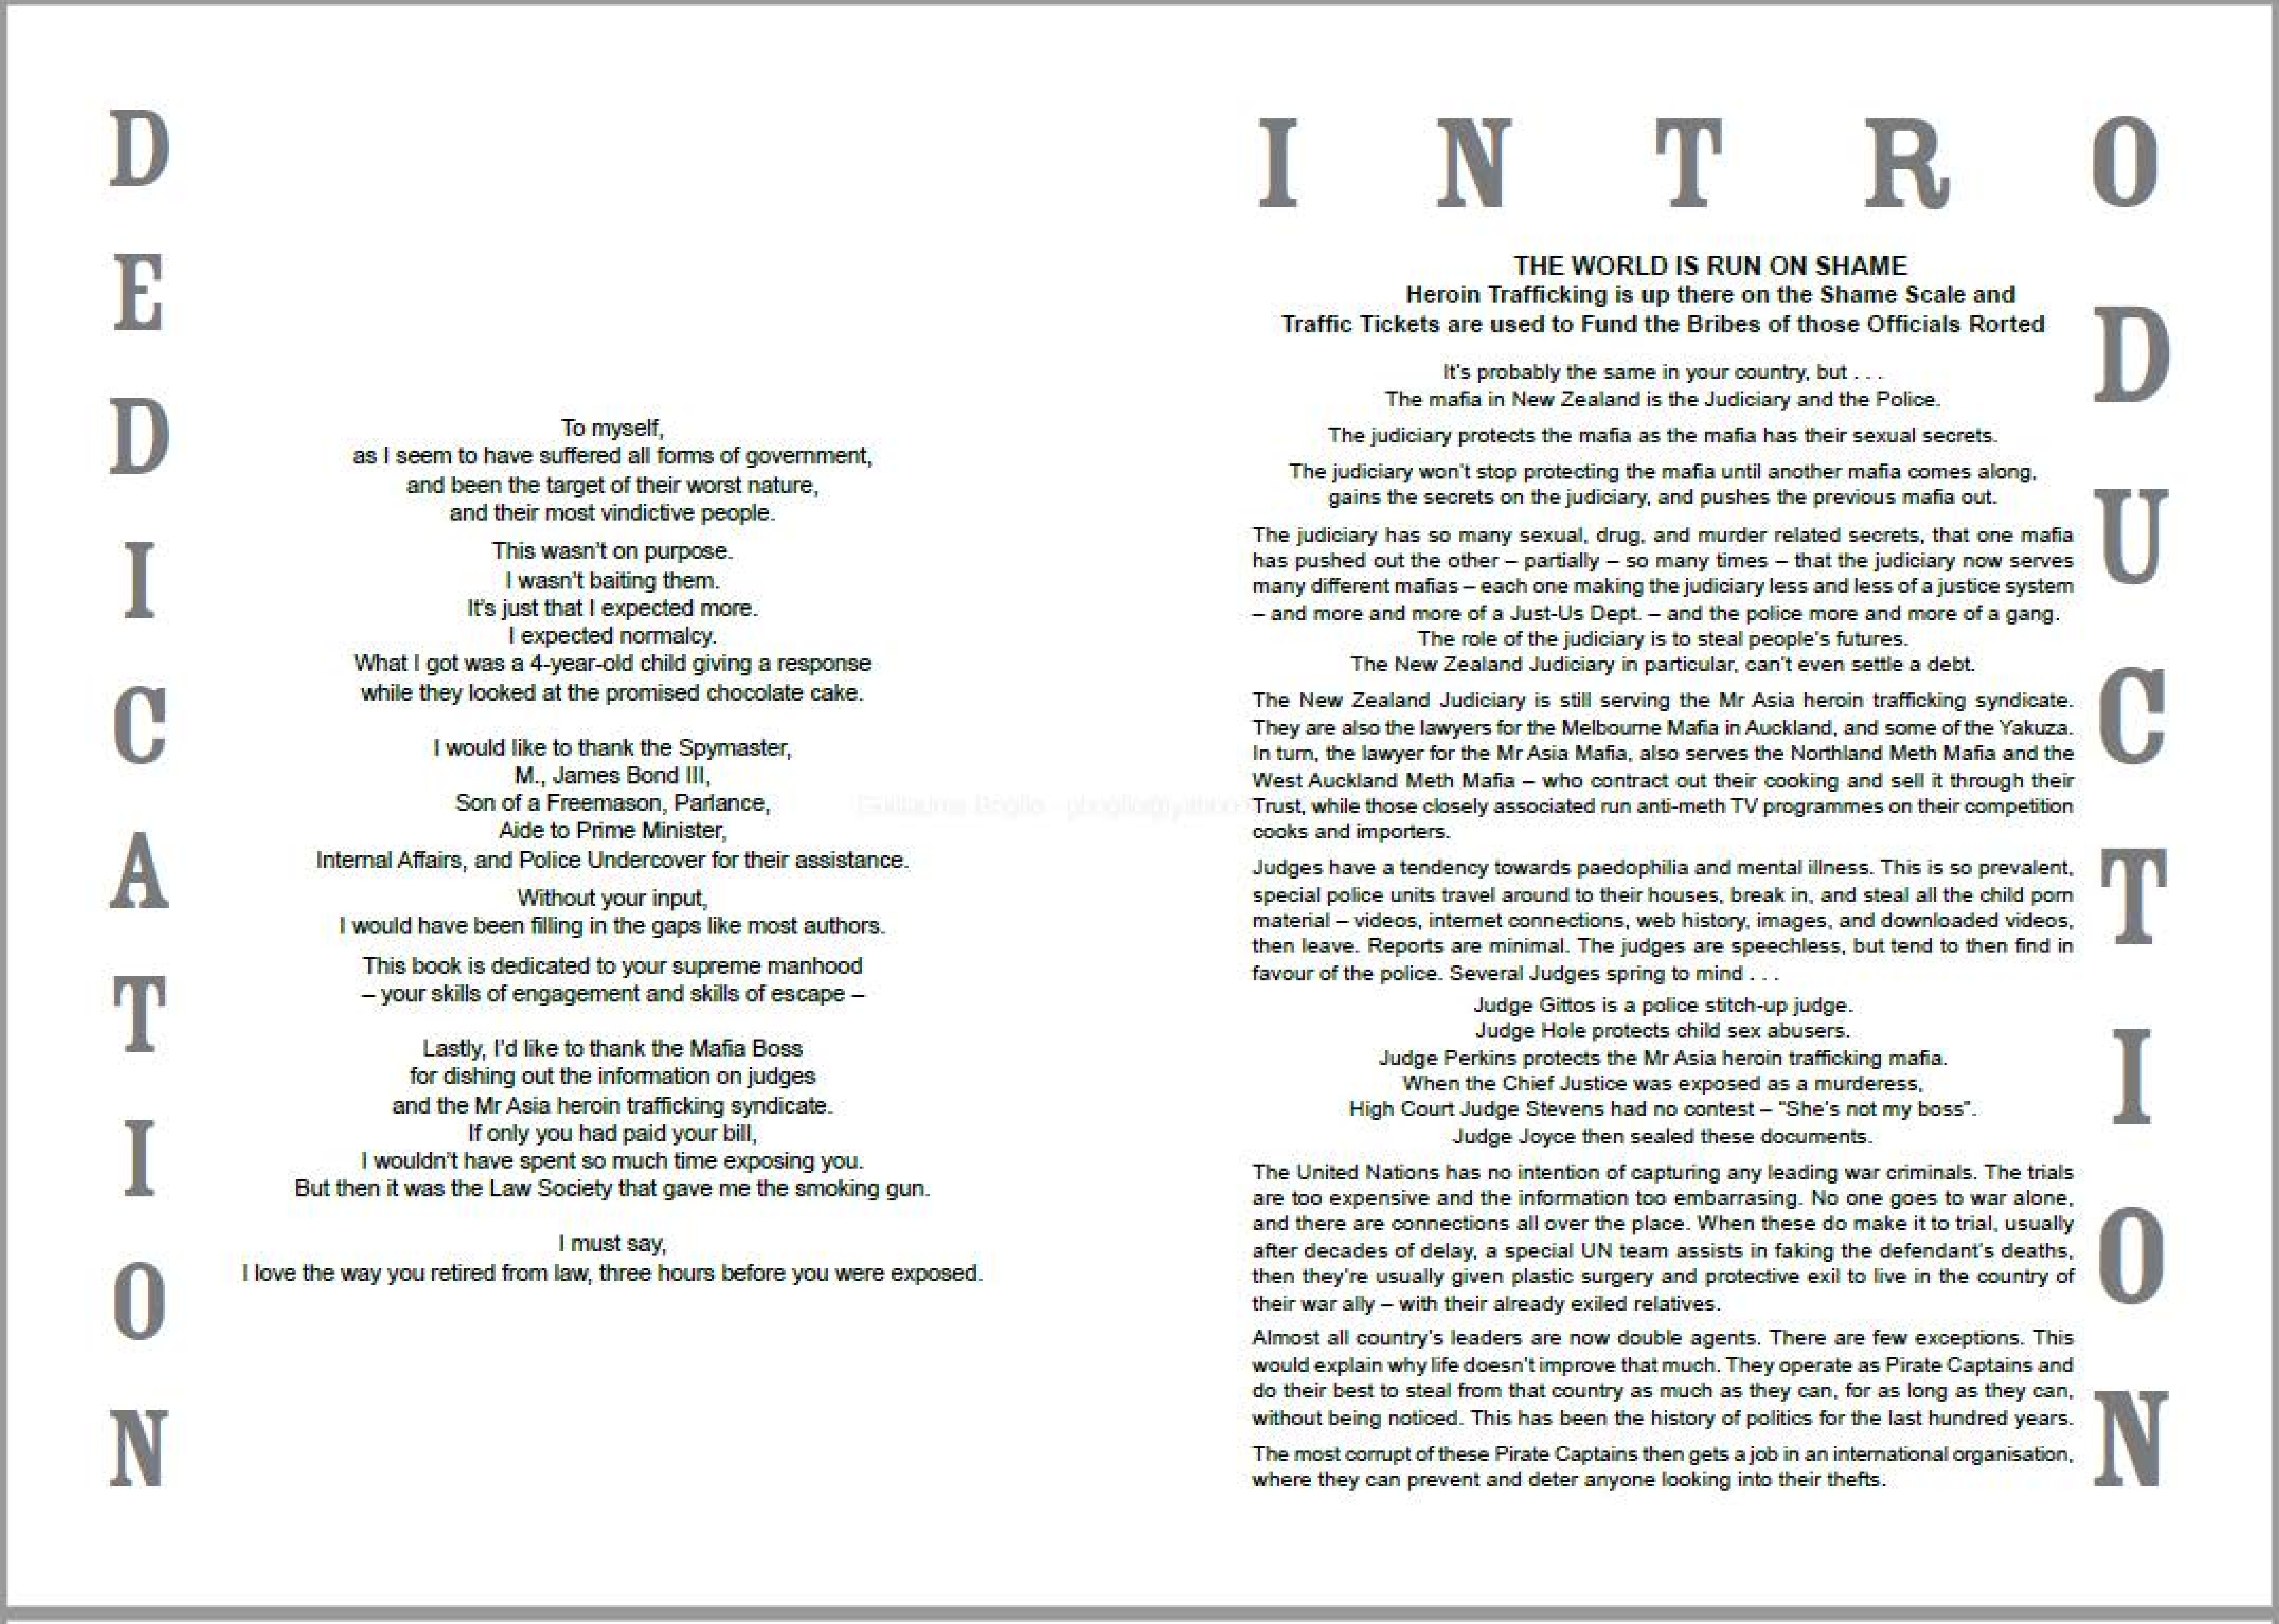
---

[1] The author was even refused entry into a Masters in History, despite his five history books and completed degree.

[2] Covinous: deceitful; fraudulent; having the nature of, or tainted by covin, Blacks 6th; Covin; a secret conspiracy or agreement between two or more persons to injure or defraud another Blacks 6th; a secret contrivance between two or more persons to defraud and prejudice another's rights, Bouviers 6th; Coven: a group of witches who meet regularly.

SCHEDULE OF ATTACHMENTS

"A"	Bailiff Turns up 10 June 2008
"B"	How the Judiciary runs New Zealand as a DEEP SLEEP Experiment
"C"	Affidavits | Prime Minister & Chief Justice Contract Killers
"D"	False Arrest on 22 June 1999
"E"	District Court Hearing I Fines and Appeal
"F"	Constable James Matewhinau Cassin's Criminal Record
"G"	High Court Hearing
"H"	Fines Refund
"I"	District Court Hearing II Police withdraw Charge
"J"	Request for Compensation
"K"	Rotary Club Thank You
"L"	Letter to Investigate magazine
"M"	Police Create Crime
"N"	Newspaper Articles
"O"	Blacklisting, Hobbling and Boiler-Plating
"P"	Silent Weapons for a Quiet War
"Q"	Annotated Cabinet
"R"	Helen Clark and Sian Elias' Murders | Quotes
"S"	Key to Murder Attempts
"T"	Mossad Murders in New Zealand
"U"	Who the Blazes is John Howard?
"V"	Pru Gee and Mike Lewis Goold
"W"	The Murder of Chris Beeby
"X"	Sir Peter Blake's Murder
"Y"	Murder Attempts on Greg Hallett
"Z"	Physical & Financial Assassinations
"Z^{1}"	The Greatest Living New Zealander
"Z^{2}"	Heroin Trafficking, Lawyers & Mr Asia
"Z^{3}"	Big Afghan Heroin Dump
"Z^{4}"	NATO & the UN Wanted War Criminals
"Z^{5}"	New Egypt Madness
"Z^{6}"	The Auckland Deloitte CIA SuperCity
"Z^{7}"	Manmade Earthquakes and Tsunamis
"Z^{8}"	THE CIA's Protection Racket for M.O.E. Paedophiles
"Z^{9}"	Commission of Inquiry into Police Murders
"Z^{10}"	Catch Me if You Can
"i–v"	Traffic Tickets for Political Exposure Bus Lane Ticket | Taxi Stand Ticket | High Street Ticket | Ticket to Ride
	The Rapid Extortion Train
	Bibliography & Insex



DEDICATION

To myself,
as I seem to have suffered all forms of government, and been the target of their worst nature,
and their most vindictive people.

This wasn't on purpose.
I wasn't baiting them.
It's just that I expected more.
I expected normalcy.
What I got was a 4-year-old child giving a response while they looked at the promised chocolate cake.

I would like to thank the Spymaster,
M., James Bond III,
Son of a Freemason, Parlance,
Aide to Prime Minister,
Internal Affairs, and Police Undercover for their assistance.

Without your input,
I would have been filling in the gaps like most authors.

This book is dedicated to your supreme manhood – your skills of engagement and skills of escape –

Lastly, I'd like to thank the Mafia Boss for dishing out the information on judges and the Mr Asia heroin trafficking syndicate.
If only you had paid your bill,
I wouldn't have spent so much time exposing you.
But then it was the Law Society that gave me the smoking gun.

I must say,
I love the way you retired from law, three hours before you were exposed.

Guillaume Boglio - gboglio@yahoo

INTRODUCTION

THE WORLD IS RUN ON SHAME

Heroin Trafficking is up there on the Shame Scale and Traffic Tickets are used to Fund the Bribes of those Officials Rorted

It's probably the same in your country, but . . .
The mafia in New Zealand is the Judiciary and the Police.

The judiciary protects the mafia as the mafia has their sexual secrets.

The judiciary won't stop protecting the mafia until another mafia comes along, gains the secrets on the judiciary, and pushes the previous mafia out.

The judiciary has so many sexual, drug, and murder related secrets, that one mafia has pushed out the other – partially – so many times – that the judiciary now serves many different mafias – each one making the judiciary less and less of a justice system – and more and more of a Just-Us Dept. – and the police more and more of a gang.
The role of the judiciary is to steal people's futures.
The New Zealand Judiciary in particular, can't even settle a debt.

The New Zealand Judiciary is still serving the Mr Asia heroin trafficking syndicate. They are also the lawyers for the Melbourne Mafia in Auckland, and some of the Yakuza. In turn, the lawyer for the Mr Asia Mafia, also serves the Northland Meth Mafia and the West Auckland Meth Mafia – who contract out their cooking and sell it through their Trust, while those closely associated run anti-meth TV programmes on their competition cooks and importers.

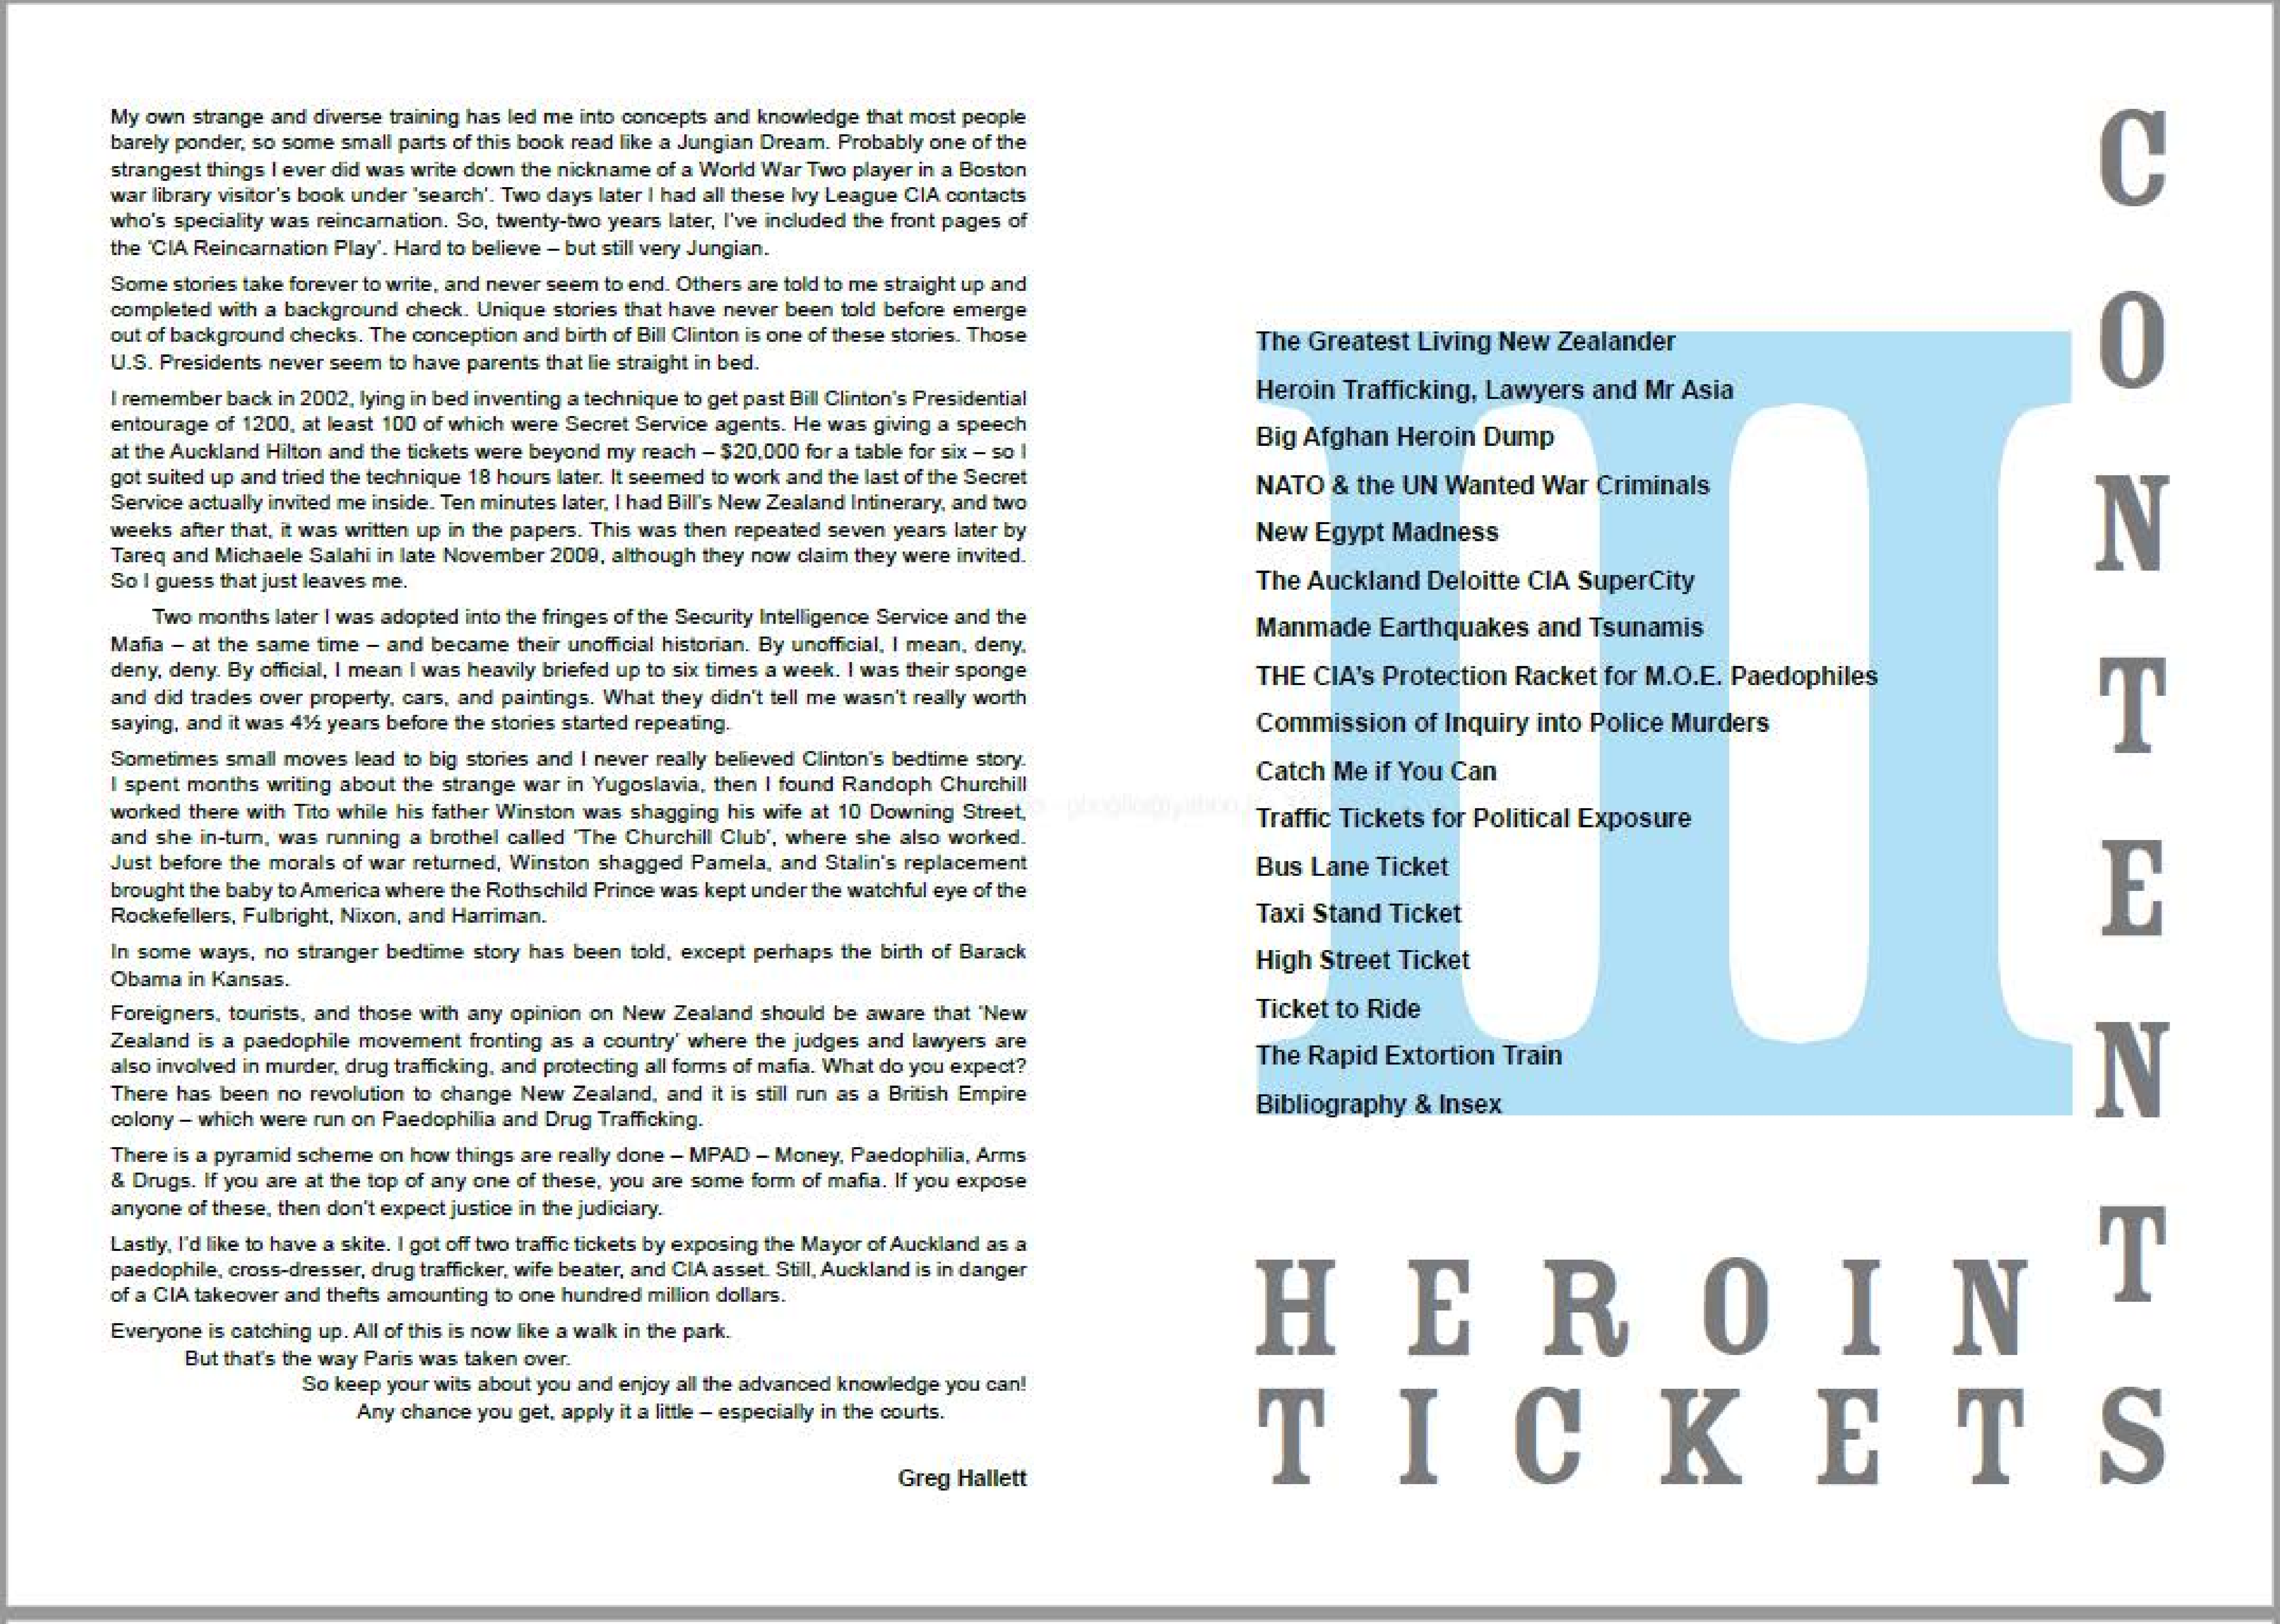
Judges have a tendency towards paedophilia and mental illness. This is so prevalent, special police units travel around to their houses, break in, and steal all the child porn material – videos, internet connections, web history, images, and downloaded videos, then leave. Reports are minimal. The judges are speechless, but tend to then find in favour of the police. Several Judges spring to mind . . .

Judge Gittos is a police stitch-up judge.
Judge Hole protects child sex abusers.
Judge Perkins protects the Mr Asia heroin trafficking mafia.
When the Chief Justice was exposed as a murderess,
High Court Judge Stevens had no contest – "She's not my boss".
Judge Joyce then sealed these documents.

The United Nations has no intention of capturing any leading war criminals. The trials are too expensive and the information too embarrassing. No one goes to war alone, and there are connections all over the place. When these do make it to trial, usually after decades of delay, a special UN team assists in faking the defendant's deaths, then they're usually given plastic surgery and protective exil to live in the country of their war ally – with their already exiled relatives.

Almost all country's leaders are now double agents. There are few exceptions. This would explain why life doesn't improve that much. They operate as Pirate Captains and do their best to steal from that country as much as they can, for as long as they can, without being noticed. This has been the history of politics for the last hundred years.

The most corrupt of these Pirate Captains then gets a job in an international organisation, where they can prevent and deter anyone looking into their thefts.



My own strange and diverse training has led me into concepts and knowledge that most people barely ponder, so some small parts of this book read like a Jungian Dream. Probably one of the strangest things I ever did was write down the nickname of a World War Two player in a Boston war library visitor's book under 'search'. Two days later I had all these Ivy League CIA contacts who's speciality was reincarnation. So, twenty-two years later, I've included the front pages of the 'CIA Reincarnation Play'. Hard to believe – but still very Jungian.

Some stories take forever to write, and never seem to end. Others are told to me straight up and completed with a background check. Unique stories that have never been told before emerge out of background checks. The conception and birth of Bill Clinton is one of these stories. Those U.S. Presidents never seem to have parents that lie straight in bed.

I remember back in 2002, lying in bed inventing a technique to get past Bill Clinton's Presidential entourage of 1200, at least 100 of which were Secret Service agents. He was giving a speech at the Auckland Hilton and the tickets were beyond my reach – $20,000 for a table for six – so I got suited up and tried the technique 18 hours later. It seemed to work and the last of the Secret Service actually invited me inside. Ten minutes later, I had Bill's New Zealand Intinerary, and two weeks after that, it was written up in the papers. This was then repeated seven years later by Tareq and Michaele Salahi in late November 2009, although they now claim they were invited. So I guess that just leaves me.

Two months later I was adopted into the fringes of the Security Intelligence Service and the Mafia – at the same time – and became their unofficial historian. By unofficial, I mean, deny, deny, deny. By official, I mean I was heavily briefed up to six times a week. I was their sponge and did trades over property, cars, and paintings. What they didn't tell me wasn't really worth saying, and it was 4½ years before the stories started repeating.

Sometimes small moves lead to big stories and I never really believed Clinton's bedtime story. I spent months writing about the strange war in Yugoslavia, then I found Randoph Churchill worked there with Tito while his father Winston was shagging his wife at 10 Downing Street, and she in-turn, was running a brothel called 'The Churchill Club', where she also worked. Just before the morals of war returned, Winston shagged Pamela, and Stalin's replacement brought the baby to America where the Rothschild Prince was kept under the watchful eye of the Rockefellers, Fulbright, Nixon, and Harriman.

In some ways, no stranger bedtime story has been told, except perhaps the birth of Barack Obama in Kansas.

Foreigners, tourists, and those with any opinion on New Zealand should be aware that 'New Zealand is a paedophile movement fronting as a country' where the judges and lawyers are also involved in murder, drug trafficking, and protecting all forms of mafia. What do you expect? There has been no revolution to change New Zealand, and it is still run as a British Empire colony – which were run on Paedophilia and Drug Trafficking.

There is a pyramid scheme on how things are really done – MPAD – Money, Paedophilia, Arms & Drugs. If you are at the top of any one of these, you are some form of mafia. If you expose anyone of these, then don't expect justice in the judiciary.

Lastly, I'd like to have a skite. I got off two traffic tickets by exposing the Mayor of Auckland as a paedophile, cross-dresser, drug trafficker, wife beater, and CIA asset. Still, Auckland is in danger of a CIA takeover and thefts amounting to one hundred million dollars.

Everyone is catching up. All of this is now like a walk in the park.
But that's the way Paris was taken over.
So keep your wits about you and enjoy all the advanced knowledge you can!
Any chance you get, apply it a little – especially in the courts.

Greg Hallett

CONTENTS

The Greatest Living New Zealander
Heroin Trafficking, Lawyers and Mr Asia
Big Afghan Heroin Dump
NATO & the UN Wanted War Criminals
New Egypt Madness
The Auckland Deloitte CIA SuperCity
Manmade Earthquakes and Tsunamis
THE CIA's Protection Racket for M.O.E. Paedophiles Commission of Inquiry into Police Murders
Catch Me if You Can
Traffic Tickets for Political Exposure
Bus Lane Ticket
Taxi Stand Ticket
High Street Ticket
Ticket to Ride
The Rapid Extortion Train
Bibliography & Insex

HEROIN TICKETS

III

“Z^1” The Greatest Living New Zealander 1
Heroin in New Zealand
Political History of New Zealanders getting the Victoria Cross (VC)
History of New Zealanders not getting the Victoria Cross
Military History at Home
The Victoria Cross for New Zealand (VCNZ)
Willie Apiata – First to get the Victoria Cross for New Zealand
Medals Stolen
Witnessed by a Superior Officer
Compromised Helen Clark sends the NZ SAS into Afghanistan
Defense Parliamentary Select Committee Inside Story
Defense Parliamentary Select Committee Inside Story
Uncle Willie Apiata's background
The Official Citation Report
The SIS Version
The Military Reinactment Scenario
America Supports Anything that Supports Heroin
Enter Rambo . . . What really happened
SAS-SIS Treff
Willie 'Rambo' Apiata
Discrepencies
Special Air Service of New Zealand don't disagree
The Greatest Living New Zealander is the Best Liar on the Day
New Zealand Political Scientist comments on Helen Clark
Helen Clark Murders by the Georgia Guidestones
Helen Clark lands top UN job
Valedictory Speech by Rt Hon Helen Clark
Helen Clark left of Mao, communist and lesbian
Cloak but no daggers as Clark checks out
It's a hard rain that's gonna fall
Compromised Leaders, promoted, leave their gay paedophile partners at home
The Reincarnation of Adolf Hitler as World Dictator
Top award takes Clark by surprise
Treason always gets a Front Row seat
Mirror mirror on the wall, who's got the yellowest teeth of them all?
“Z^2” Heroin Trafficking, Lawyers & Mr Asia 45
SEATO, Vietnam, and the first "Mr Asia"
The frst time I heard of Mr Asia
Charlie Hausmann, Papadopoulos and Wellington Heroin
The New Mr Asia | Terry Clark
The Heroin-Junkie Prostitute, the Mayor of Auckland and the Head of the Drug Squad
Buddah Sticks, Paspalum Grass and Rat Poison
MI-6 gives the Colonies a Criminal Lifeline
Graeme 'Smith' Friedlander
The Heroin Trafficking Lawyering Mafia Gang (LLB) | Peter Williams | Karen Soich | Eb Leary
Permanently Sanitised Mr Asia – the Murders
The Organisation – Heroin Trafficking, Money Laundering, Sex, and Contract Killing
Bob Trimbole and the Three Bobs
Lawyers Blowing their Nose
Terry Clark's gambling v. the Order for Marty Johnstone's Murder
Marty Johnstone's Murder and the Money Trail (not Trial)
From Sac to Cell: Show me the money
Peter Williams blows a load in London – one million pounds
Peter Williams smuggles money into New Zealand
The Australian Anti-Corruption Team arranged Terry Clark's escape
Mr Asia's 'Death' a.k.a. Plastic Surgery at Brize Norton
Allison Dine
The SIS pay a lightweight visit
Peter Williams Testifies as best he can
The Head of the Terrorist Squad, the Heroin-Solicitor and the Prostitute
New Zealand Courts refuse to acknowledge Slavery
Terry Clark and Peter Williams were both NZ Police Narcs with MI-6 protection
Peter Alderidge Williams QC has been found marked, measured and wanting
Aussie Malcolm, Danny Watson (loose mandible springs) and why no one listens
Dame Margaret Bazley is Lillian Bazley – the heroin trafficker and CIA contract killer Margaret Bazley – who was married to the convicted murderer Steve Bazley – and now controls Auckland
The Bazley-Banks CIA Takeover of Auckland (2009–10)
Talkshow of Ignorance | Bain Distraction
A Compromised Government always has a role in Heroin Trafficking
MI-6 takes over Australia | MI-6 takes over New Zealand | Cardinal Delargey | Sir Denis Blundell Sir Keith Jacka Holyoake | Mandy Rice-Davies and Christine Keeler
Muldoon had control over all aspects of the country
The Rural Development Finance murder and the children of the National Party
Duncan MacIntyre (1960–84) | Venn Young (1966–90) | Allan McCready (1960–78)
Muldoon was a bit of a masochist . . . Muldoon was a bit of a sadist
The media can create something out of hot air, but when the air gets hot . . .
Prime Minister David Lange's Fat Frolicking Foibles (1984–89)
Prime Minister Norman Kirk's Assassination (1972–74)
Reginald Delargey
But it's not the men who are all bad – there's also Sandra Coney
The Add-Up is Tits-Up
Peter Williams QC gives Credit to Summary Matters
Retiring the Mafia Boss and Emigrating him into Exile unto Death
John Hancock on the Kol Nidre

“Z³” Big Afghan Heroin Dump 109
The Subconscious Language of Heroin Sales
Messages and Pathways
World Press – You suck !
Frampton Comes Alive !
The Daily Show with Jon Stewart (and Gretchen Peters) 8 June 2009
But here's the reason for the ongoing Afghan War and sabotage . . . My Nine Points

“Z⁴” NATO and the UN Wanted War Criminals 137
NATO and Paedophilia
HARDTALK with Lord George Robertson
British Distraction and Destruction on a Massive Scale
UN Wanted War Criminals
Slobodan Milošević
Milošević's Relations with Russia and China
Milošević's Trial and Autopsy
The Spymaster on ONI and Milošević
Look-alikes, Body Doubles and Doppelgängers in live storage in Russia
Novotel Interrogation by Richard Holbrooke's man, Auckland 1994
Inspector Hutton's naming rights of Auckland Hotels
Milošević's funeral and Organised Cover for the Replacement Body
Radovan Karadžić
Ratko Mladić
Yugoslavian War Result
Governance – You suck !
Rewards for Justice
Military and Government Drug Running
Monarchies of Europe, Yugoslavian Royal Family

“Z⁵” New Egypt Madness 259
Barack Obama – Origins long time coming
Obama's Grandmother was CIA
And now for some Distraction News
Barack Obama or so we thought
Cloning Egyptian Pharaohs as President for the New Egypt
Barack Hussein Obama II's origins

“Z⁶” The Auckland Deloitte CIA SuperCity 285
The Military | The Movement | The Mayor
The Auckland City Council and CIA Extortion
The Auckland Deloitte CIA SuperCity
Auckland City Council – 'First city of the Pacific' at leaking money and being rorted
Ian Rae Group Manager of ACC's Information Technology and Communications
Deloitte
Deloitte and the ACE Refit
Dame Margaret Bazley and Deloitte's SuperCity for Auckland Deloitte Foreknowledge
ACC Contracts
Deloitte's Rorting Methods
ACC Communications
Here's how the Auckland City Council doesn't work.
ACC Chief Executive Officer David Rankin
How the CIA lost all their New Zealand Money
Fired for Asking
The Sabotage Model in America
We're the Auckland City Council – Let's actively engage in Sabotage
Rod Deane – Fiscal Treason gets a Front Row Seat
Sue Bradford's Bridge – The Biggest Single Span in the Southern Hemisphere Transparency International's Corruption Perceptions Index
Funding
Transparency International NZ Orders Arrest of Anti-Corruption Advocate
Lack of Transparency International New Zealand style
No Undercovers used so Exiled Nazis sleep well
Embarrassing Lack of Response to Nazis in NZ
Shameful Truth Must be Told
World War II Nazis living in Auckland in the 1980s
Hunt to Kill | Simon Moore SC
Civil Liason Judge Nicola Mathers | Judge Roderick Joyce
Karen Soich | Peter Williams
Blood Farming
Coconut Resort

“Z⁷” Manmade Earthquakes and Tsunamis 339
Current Science
Nikola Tesla
HAARP Storms | HAARP Earthquakes
PROJECT SEAL a.k.a. 'the Tsunami bomb' (1944–50)
Cannons shooting Copper & Aluminium into the Atmosphere altering Magnetic Field
The Great Alaska Earthquake of 27 March 1964 – Manmade Great Alaska Tsunamis – Manmade
Manmade Earthquakes
Iran Earthquake of 16 September 1978
Yugoslav Earthquakes of 15 April 1979
Kobe Earthquake of 17 January 1995
Sarin Gassing of the Tokyo subway on 20 March 1995
Papua New Guinea Earthquake of 17 July 1998
Earthquakes for Anti-Terrorism by 2001

Guillaume Boglio - gboglio@yahoo

Afghan Earthquake of 3 March 2002
Philippines Earthquake of 6 March 2002
Indian Ocean Earthquake and Boxing Day Tsunami of 26 December 2004
Samoa Tsunami of 29 September 2009
Sumatra Earthquake of 30 September 2009
Oil and Gas wars in the Gulf of Mexico – Disappearing Island
Eureka City California Earthquake of 9 January 2010
Haiti Earthquake of 12 January 2010
Oil found in Haiti and Cuba
US Navy Forth Fleet in the Caribbean (1 July 2008–)
Caribbean War set up
Haiti's Special Envoy
Russian Navy in the Caribbean (November 2008–)
Haiti Results
Don't Rely on the Red Cross for HELP: Bernadine Healy (1999–2001);
Marsha J. Evans (2002–05); Jack McGuire (2006–07); Mark Everson (2007)
Manmade Earthquakes, Volcanoes and Tsunamis – Some History and How-To Ponergeopology
Webversity – To be or not to be Censored
Prince Billy James Churchill Rex (Censored) – Bill Clinton
Haiti's Hurricanes (15 August–15 September 2008)
A Short History of Haiti and Recent Presidents

“Z^{8}” THE CIA's Protection Racket for M.O.E. Paedophiles 383

Trevor Roger
UVS INTERNATIONAL – NEW FLASH TGR Helicorp Unveils SNARK VTOL UAV
Deloitte
The Darling JOHN BANKS QSO "Hi, I'm a CIA Asset"
Archie Banks and Gus Parsons
John Banks, the CIA, and all forms of entertainment
John Banks, Phil Warren and vanloads of dope Police Minister John Banks was one of these John Banks and CIA Consultancy
John Banks' drugs and CIA takeover of Local Body Councils
John Banks' homosexual child sex Abuse
John Banks removed/resigns from Minister of Police
John Banks' CIA Media cover
John Banks Honoured
John Banks QSO, Queer Son Of A Career Criminal QSOACC
Dr. Michael Bassett covers for John Banks, his family, himself, and Paul Swain
So much for the Labour of love
Roger Douglas and the Hon. Dr. Michael Bassett
Peter Leitch – The Mad Butcher
CIA Sabotage of New Zealand
Ian Kahurangi Mitchell, Paul Holmes, and Secretary for Education Karen Sewell
Brian Neeson MP for Te Atatu North (1990–93)
Waitakere Mayor Bob Harvey
We present like the Brady Bunch . . . But . . .
Fly like a Butterfly, sting like a bee
John Banks and Bob Harvey compete to be the best and biggest cross-dressing Mayor
Hi, my name's Glenda Roger and New Zealand is a country of plywood helicopters Non-Prosecution Certificate?
Karen Sewell pays her 'les-be-friends' an extra NZ$20 million
The murder of Senior Sergeant Peter Evans of the Sexual Abuse Team

“Z^{9}” Commission of Inquiry into Police Murders 421

Wise Counsel from Don Stewart on Police Corruption Winebox Inquiry
Ian Wishart, You Shameful Sell Out – this is butt-cracking crap
The Murder of Paul White. . . and boy were the people involved qualified Winston Peters' Career Moves
Michelle Boag – the Quasi-Intellectual Sexpot Semi-Drag Counter-Intelligence Queen
New Zealand Police 'High Priority' Investigation into Paul White's Murder
Editorial: New Zealand Police Royal Commission overdue
Police Shagging during Stakeout
Pre-Christmas Boiler-Plating
Judge Elliot
Judge Edward Taihakurei Durie
Judicial Inside Jobs
And Now for some Distraction News – 7 Deadly Sins of Leah Panapa, New Idea
A Product of Failure
Fletchers Crooked Valuers and the SAS Murders
Valuers and Undertakers
Sian Elias Locks up Husband Hugh Fletcher
Sian Elias Steals the Compensation Money
Sian Elias Bribed into Chief Justice Position
Dicky Noble let out of Prison
Chief Justice's Husband's Board of Directors Wear Nazi Uniforms
Threats to Kill, Attempts to Kill and Recent Killings

“Z^{10}” Catch Me if You Can 443

The Serious Fraud Office Plan a Visit
Intelligence Failures amount to Counter-Intelligence
Readings from the Kremlin Bathtub
Being a lawyer – it ain't that hard
The Usual Police Stitch-ups | The Usual Judicial Confusion
Maori Stats and Police Corruption | Late Starters
Fluffing in Court | Non-Mafia Result

Traffic Tickets for Political Exposure

“i” Bus Lane Ticket 461
Auckland City Council pro-narc Letter (24 September 2008)
Letter to Bus lane enforcement officer 233 (30 September 2008)
Affidavit in Support of Letter of Request (30 September 2008)
Indemnity Bond
Driver Details Form
Auckland City Council Infringement Letter (20 October 2008)
Auckland City Council Infringement Notice (undated)
Auckland City Council Reminder Notice (12 December 2008)
Letter to Auckland City Council (12 January 2009)
Tax Invoice Statement in favour of Joseph Gregoy Hallett
Driving Sound & Battery receipts
The King of New Zealand shags the Queen Mother
Ms. Shipley’s Murders
Jenny Shipley, Alcopops, Wilson Neill, IRD, Serious Fraud Office & Winebox Inquiry
Authorities stand in Dishonour
As of 6 October 2008, the Auckland City Council confirms . . .
As of 4 December 2008, the Auckland City Council confirms . . .
As of 22 January 2009, the Auckland City Council confirms . . .
The Ministry of Justice ignore Mayor John Banks paedophilia and make threats
Notice of Fine (21 March 2009)
Letter to Deputy Registrar Mohimi Prakash, Auckland District Court (30 April 2009)
Application to Correct Irregularities in Proceedings for Infringement Offence (30 April 2009)
Ministry of Justice Deputy Registrar Auckland Denial to Correct Irregularity (19 May 2009)
Ministry of Justice Deputy Registrar Wellington offering Court of Appeal (20 May 2009)

“ii” Taxi Stand Ticket 521
Taxi Stand Infringement Notice (14 November 2008)
Letter to Officer 027 exposing Mayor John Banks as a paedophile (24 November 2008)
Auckland City Council Reminder Notice (15 December 2008)
Auckland City Council Infringement Cancelled (16 December 2008)

“iii” High Street Ticket 529
High Street Infringement Notice (11 November 2008)
Auckland City Council Reminder Notice (11 December 2008)
Letter to Officer 117 ticket issued as Town Crier shouting Helen Clark’s murders (30 Dec. 2008)
Letter to Officer 117 confirming parking paid for, EndTime created (24 November 2008)
Exhibit “A” Town Crier on Helen Clark’s murders, Vulcan Lane/High Court (11 Nov. 2008)
ACC Letter from Helen Hargraves, splitting hairs having/displaying ticket (2 March 2009)
Letter to Helen Hargraves, Solicitor, ACC, Michael Cullen problem gambler (13 March 2009)
Black Horse Friday, Minister of Finance Dr. Michael Cullen declares himself
‘The Six Million Dollar Man’ and the single biggest fuckwit in New Zealand’s history
Prince of New Spain
ACC Letter from Helen Hargraves noting/refusing to comment on points (13 March 2009)
Auckland City Council Notice of Fine (10 April 2009)
Application to Correct Irregularities in Proceedings for Infringement Offence (30 April 2009)
Ministry of Justice Deputy Registrar Auckland Denial to Correct Irregularity (19 May 2009)
Ministry of Justice Deputy Registrar Wellington offering Court of Appeal (20 May 2009)

“iv” Ticket to Ride 551
Bernie Madoff, the CIA, Antarctica and the Auckland SuperCity
Bernie Madoff’s Early Years
Madoff’s Charity
Failed Investigations – all in the family
Robert M. Stockmann to Greg Hallett et al, 22 April 2009: ‘Judge blocks Madoff bankruptcy’
Madoff Hands Himself Over, but Not the Money, or his Family Assets and Last Minute Steals as Madoff hands over the problem
Pre-Sentencing
Bernie Madoff’s Escape
The CIA looses US$ billions with Madoff and Steals Auckland Panictarcta
The Good, The Bad, and The Ugly
The Future, Intelligence on Barack Obama
Israel in Australasia
The Queen Raids and the Fed Pays

“v” The Rapid Extortion Train 565
How the Auckland City Council Extorts 157% in five minutes
Auckland City Deloitte CIA Extortion John Banks Mayor
Auckland City Council letter (22 February 2010) – you’re off the hook
Savage Blanche ACC email
Welcome to Auckland – the Mafia Capital of the Western World’s South Pacific Auckland City Council Customer Survey

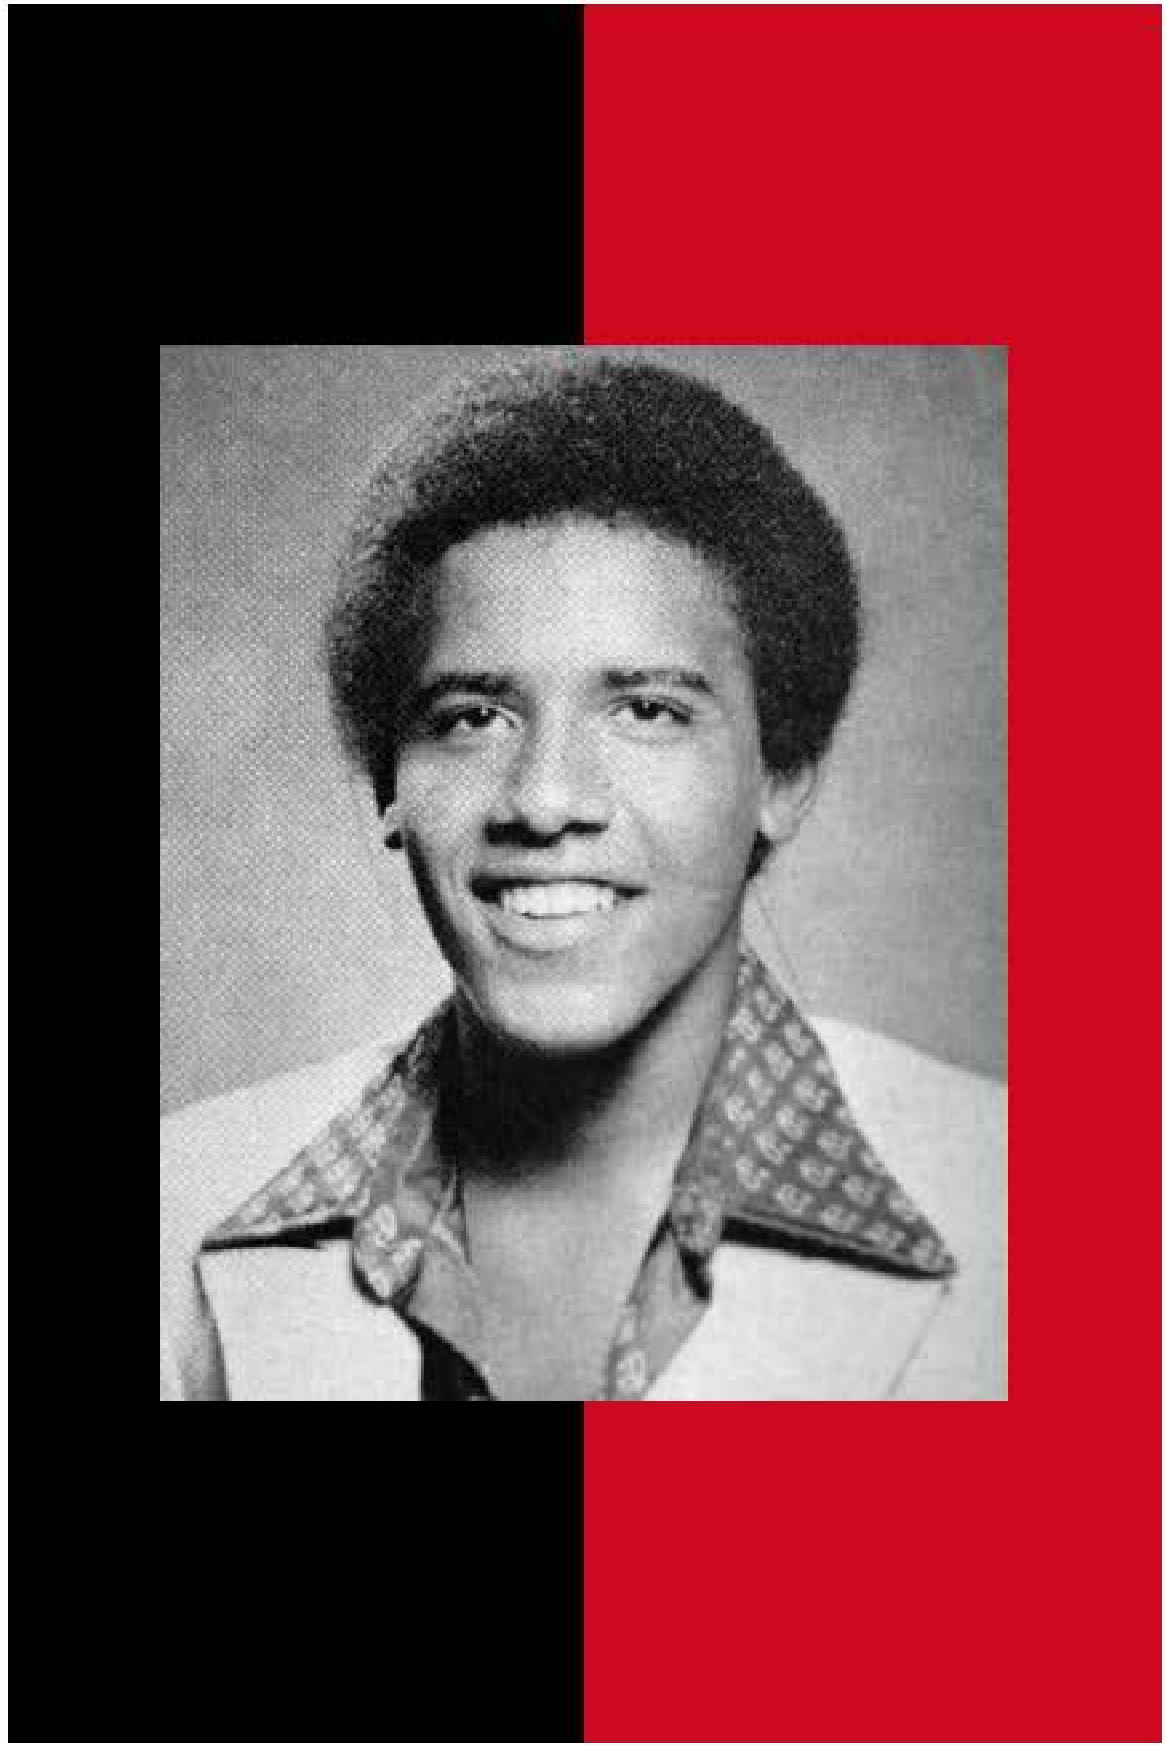
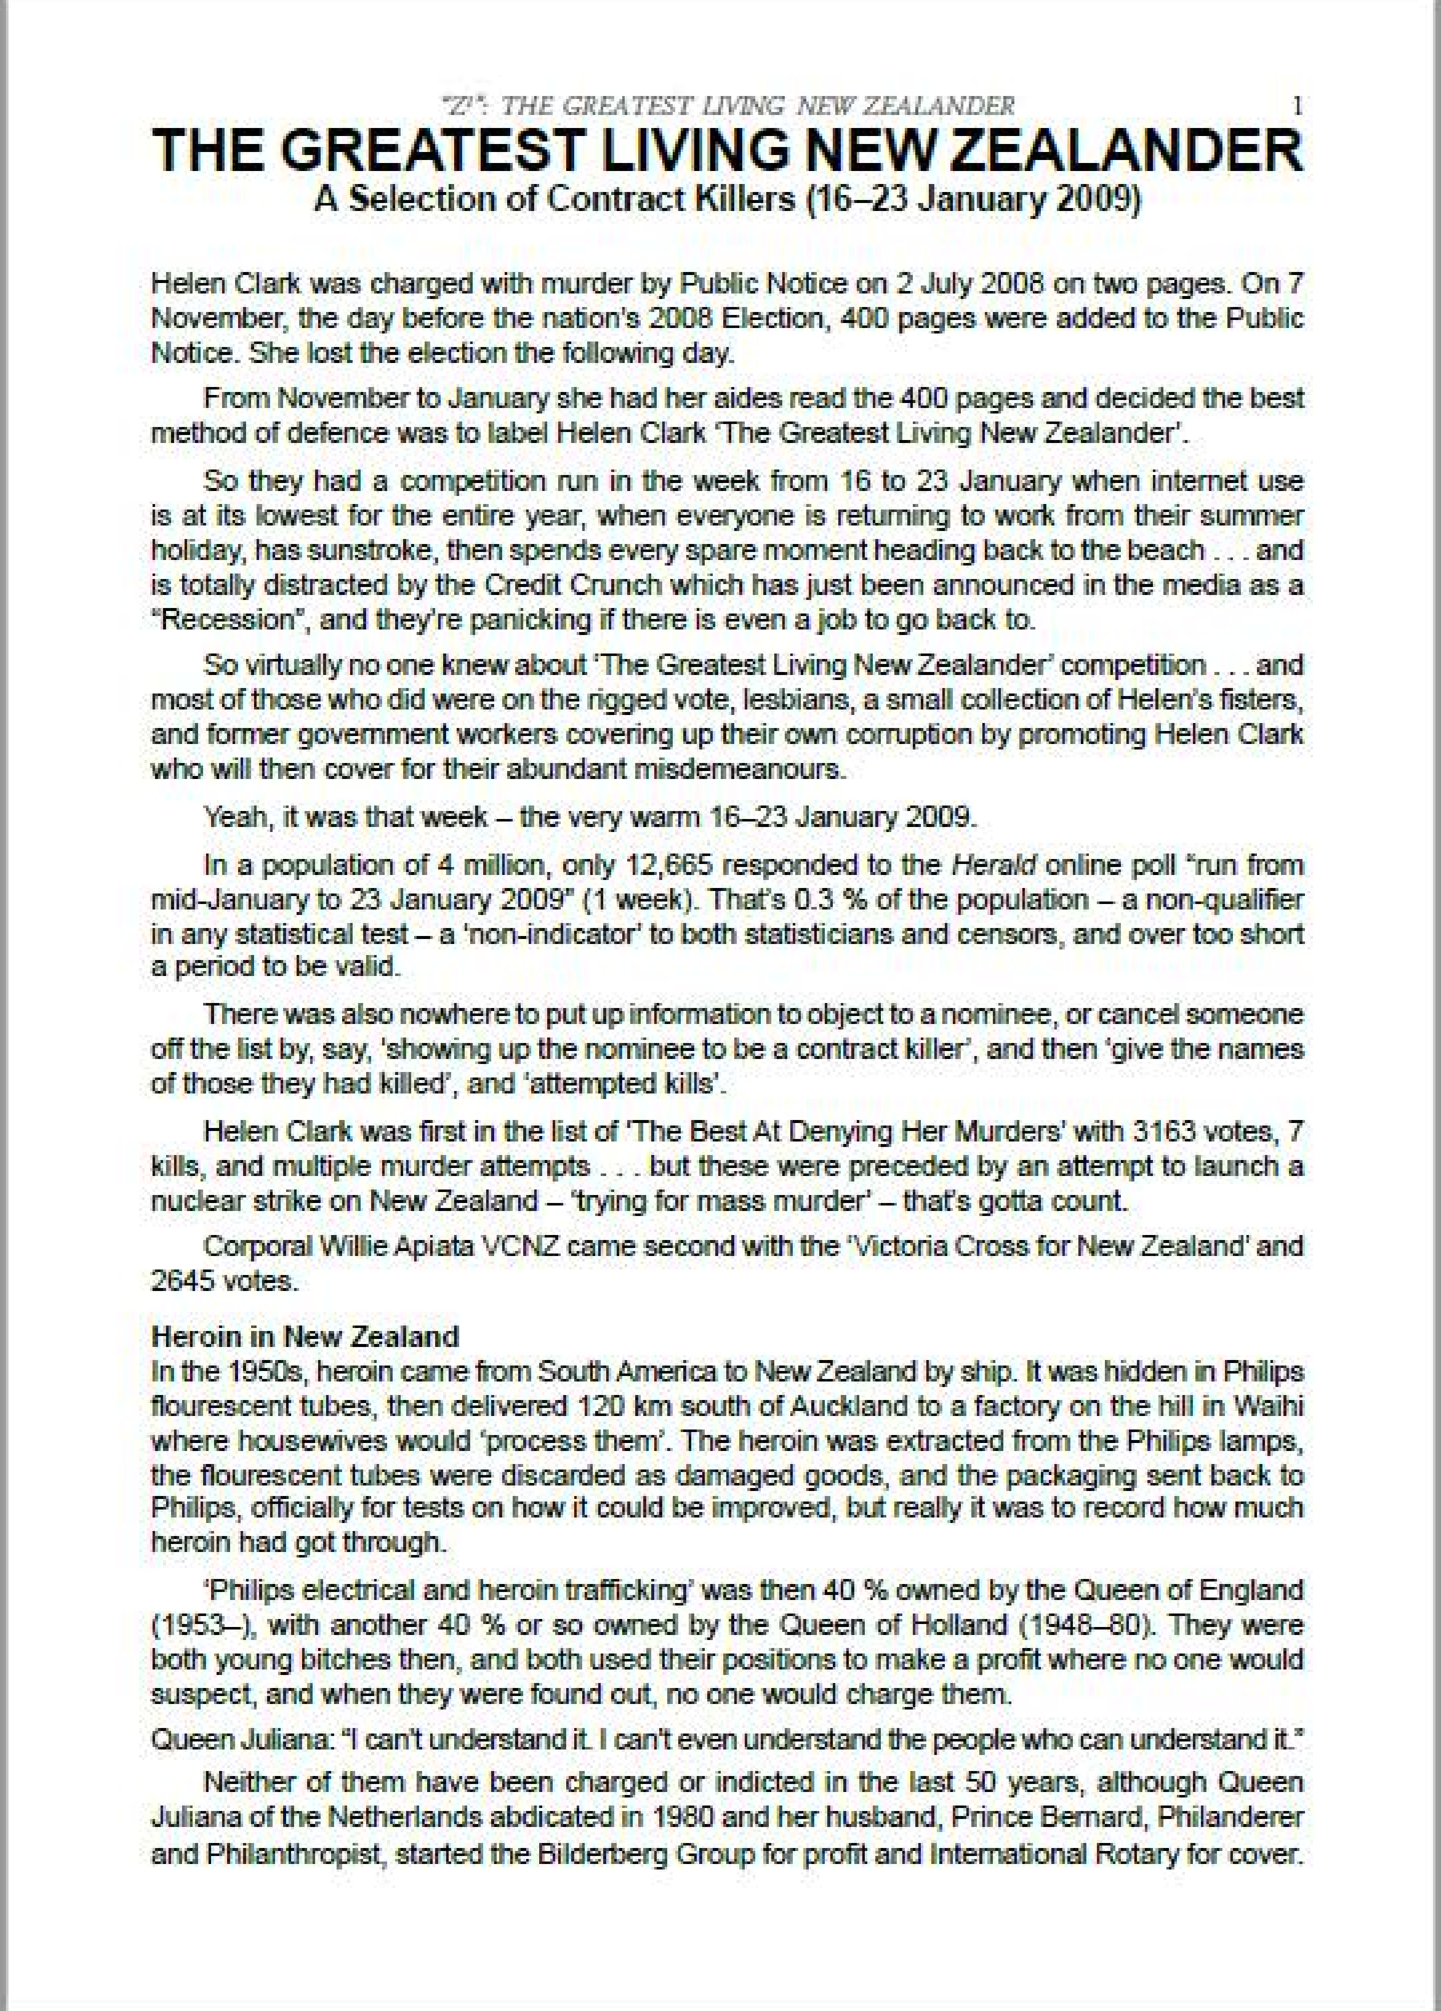
Bibliography 573
Insex 583





THE GREATEST LIVING NEW ZEALANDER

A Selection of Contract Killers (16–23 January 2009)

Helen Clark was charged with murder by Public Notice on 2 July 2008 on two pages. On 7 November, the day before the nation's 2008 Election, 400 pages were added to the Public Notice. She lost the election the following day.

From November to January she had her aides read the 400 pages and decided the best method of defence was to label Helen Clark 'The Greatest Living New Zealander'.

So they had a competition run in the week from 16 to 23 January when internet use is at its lowest for the entire year, when everyone is returning to work from their summer holiday, has sunstroke, then spends every spare moment heading back to the beach . . . and is totally distracted by the Credit Crunch which has just been announced in the media as a "Recession", and they're panicking if there is even a job to go back to.

So virtually no one knew about 'The Greatest Living New Zealander' competition . . . and most of those who did were on the rigged vote, lesbians, a small collection of Helen's fisters, and former government workers covering up their own corruption by promoting Helen Clark who will then cover for their abundant misdemeanours.

Yeah, it was that week – the very warm 16–23 January 2009.

In a population of 4 million, only 12,665 responded to the Herald online poll "run from mid-January to 23 January 2009" (1 week). That's 0.3 % of the population – a non-qualifier in any statistical test – a 'non-indicator' to both statisticians and censors, and over too short a period to be valid.

There was also nowhere to put up information to object to a nominee, or cancel someone off the list by, say, 'showing up the nominee to be a contract killer', and then 'give the names of those they had killed', and 'attempted kills'.

Helen Clark was first in the list of 'The Best At Denying Her Murders' with 3163 votes, 7 kills, and multiple murder attempts . . . but these were preceded by an attempt to launch a nuclear strike on New Zealand – 'trying for mass murder' – that's gotta count.

Corporal Willie Apiata VCNZ came second with the 'Victoria Cross for New Zealand' and 2645 votes.

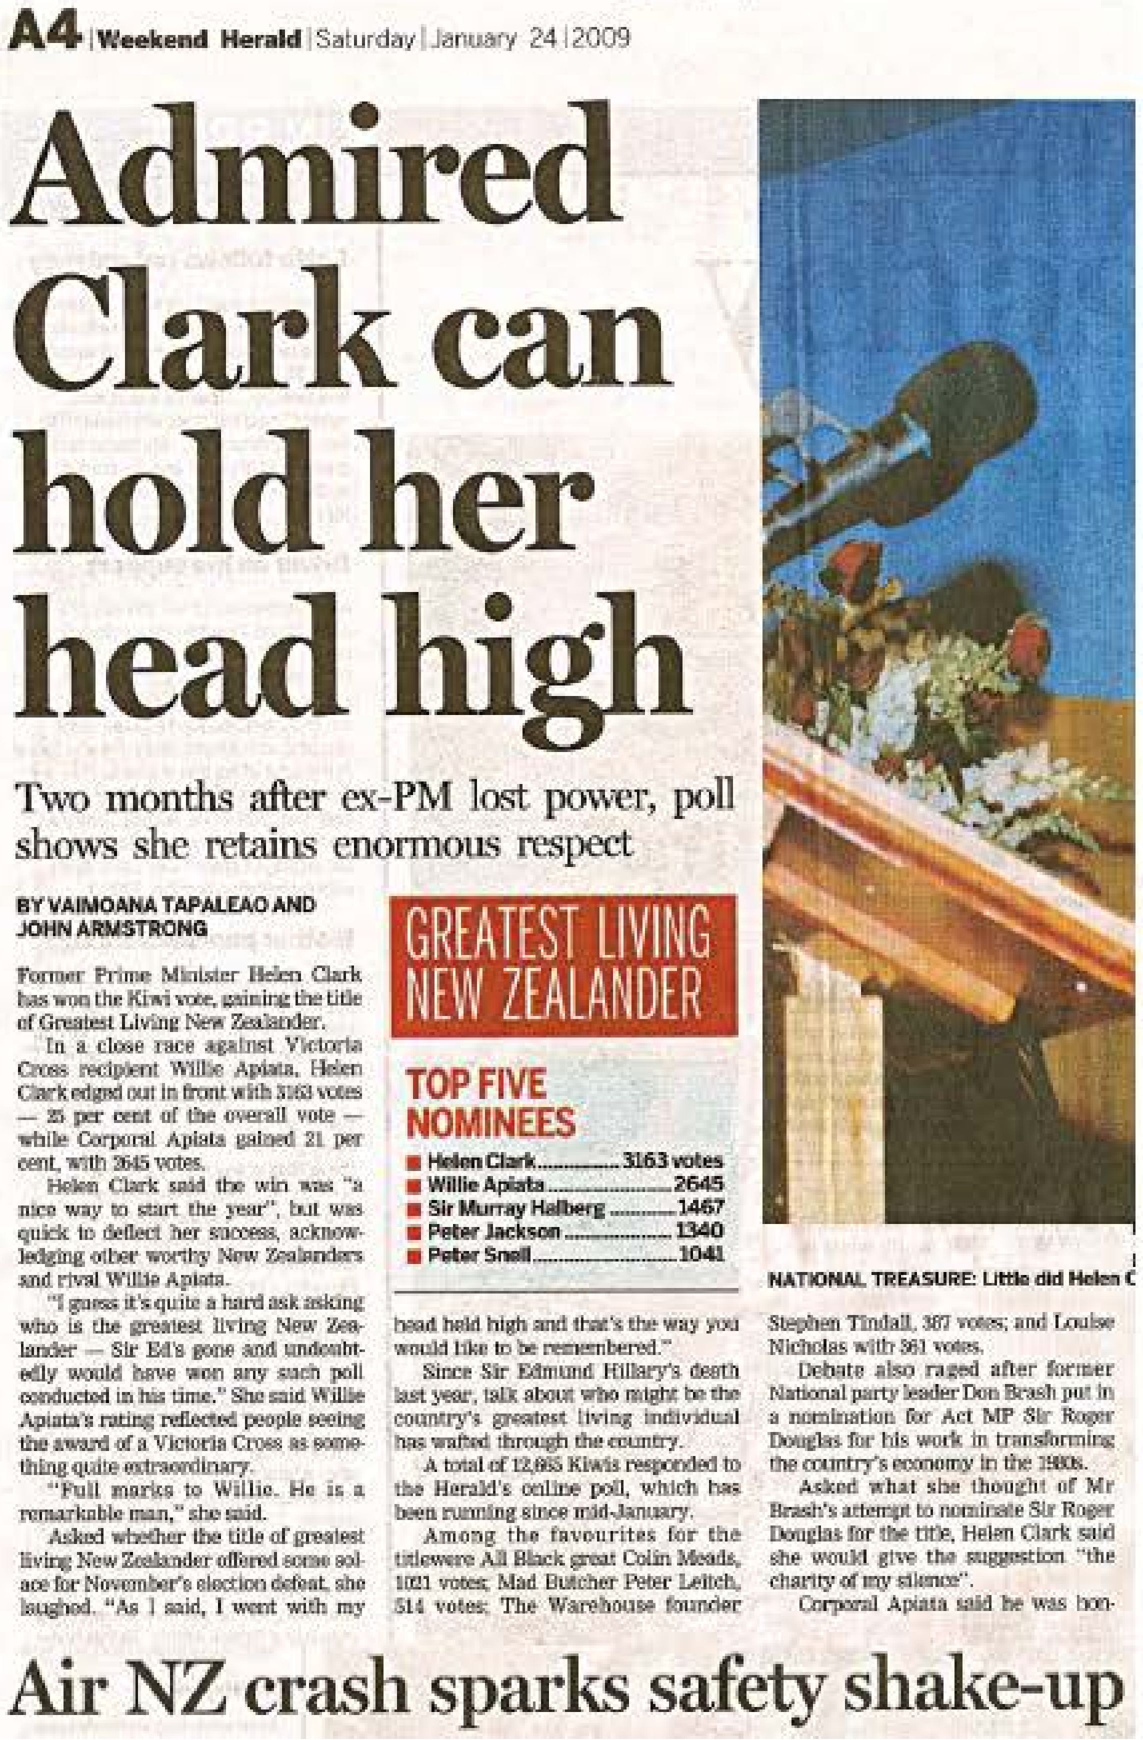
Heroin in New Zealand

In the 1950s, heroin came from South America to New Zealand by ship. It was hidden in Philips flourescent tubes, then delivered 120 km south of Auckland to a factory on the hill in Waihi where housewives would 'process them'. The heroin was extracted from the Philips lamps, the flourescent tubes were discarded as damaged goods, and the packaging sent back to Philips, officially for tests on how it could be improved, but really it was to record how much heroin had got through.

'Philips electrical and heroin trafficking' was then 40 % owned by the Queen of England (1953–), with another 40 % or so owned by the Queen of Holland (1948–80). They were both young bitches then, and both used their positions to make a profit where no one would suspect, and when they were found out, no one would charge them.

Queen Juliana: "I can't understand it. I can't even understand the people who can understand it."

Neither of them have been charged or indicted in the last 50 years, although Queen Juliana of the Netherlands abdicated in 1980 and her husband, Prince Bernard, Philanderer and Philanthropist, started the Bilderberg Group for profit and International Rotary for cover.



A4 | Weekend Herald | Saturday | January 24 | 2009

Admired Clark can hold her head high

Two months after ex-PM lost power, poll shows she retains enormous respect

BY VAIMOANA TAPALEAO AND JOHN ARMSTRONG

Former Prime Minister Helen Clark has won the Kiwi vote, gaining the title of Greatest Living New Zealander.

In a close race against Victoria Cross recipient Willie Apiata, Helen Clark edged out in front with 3163 votes — 25 per cent of the overall vote — while Corporal Apiata gained 21 per cent, with 2645 votes.

Helen Clark said the win was "a nice way to start the year", but was quick to deflect her success, acknowledging other worthy New Zealanders and rival Willie Apiata.

"I guess it's quite a hard ask asking who is the greatest living New Zealander — Sir Ed's gone and undoubtedly would have won any such poll conducted in his time." She said Willie Apiata's rating reflected people seeing the award of a Victoria Cross as something quite extraordinary.

"Full marks to Willie. He is a remarkable man," she said.

Asked whether the title of greatest living New Zealander offered some solace for November's election defeat, she laughed. "As I said, I went with my head held high and that's the way you would like to be remembered."

Since Sir Edmund Hillary's death last year, talk about who might be the country's greatest living individual has wafted through the country.

A total of 12,665 Kiwis responded to the Herald's online poll, which has been running since mid-January.

Among the favourites for the titlewere All Black great Colin Meads, 1021 votes; Mad Butcher Peter Leitch, 514 votes; The Warehouse founder Stephen Tindall, 387 votes; and Louise Nicholas with 361 votes.

Debate also raged after former National party leader Don Brash put in a nomination for Act MP Sir Roger Douglas for his work in transforming the country's economy in the 1980s.

Asked what she thought of Mr Brash's attempt to nominate Sir Roger Douglas for the title, Helen Clark said she would give the suggestion "the charity of my silence".

Corporal Apiata said he was hon-

GREATEST LIVING NEW ZEALANDER

TOP FIVE NOMINEES

Helen Clark	3163 votes
Willie Apiata	2645
Sir Murray Halberg	1467
Peter Jackson	1340
Peter Snell	1041

NATIONAL TREASURE: Little did Helen C

Air NZ crash sparks safety shake-up

- Helen Clark – 3163 votes
- Willie Apiata – 2645 votes
- Sir Murray Halberg – 1467 votes
- Peter Jackson – 1340 votes
- Peter Snell – 1041 votes

The definition of
"Greatest Living New Zealander"
is:
"The person who has done the most damage, the most violently, in the quickest time, and over the longest period, who can lie and lie and lie and maintain that lie under the pressure of all sorts of media support".

"Former Prime Minister
Helen Clark
has won the Kiwi vote, gaining the title of Greatest Living New Zealander."

Helen Clark has done
the most damage,
the most violently,
in the quickest time,
and over the longest period, who can lie and lie and lie and maintain that lie under the pressure of all sorts of media support.

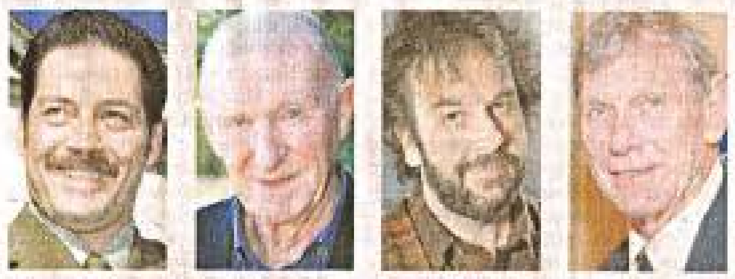
Incontinence Nappies.

NATIONAL TREASURE: Little did Helen Clark know on election night she would be winning a different vote so soon.

oured to be listed alongside some of the country's most respected individuals. He congratulated Helen Clark on her win.

"She is a truly inspirational New Zealander and thoroughly deserves this recognition."

Prime Minister John Key said he was not surprised his predecessor had topped the poll: "She has been front and centre stage in the public eye for the last decade. . . . She is well thought of as a New Zealand Prime Minister."



Willie Apiata Murray Halberg Peter Jackson Peter Snell

Military knew radiation danger: expert

Helen then got a taste of its power from 29 March 2005 when the Secretary-General of NATO, Jaap de Hoop Scheffer, gave her 10 kilograms of heroin; 95% of the heroin in England comes from Afghanistan and almost all of New Zealand's heroin now comes from Afghanistan – initially all of it coming through the Prime Minister's office.

When the Afghan War began on 7 October 2001,[1] Helen Clark was vociferously against it. But since Helen Clark was compromised by George W. Bush on 4 January 2003, with photographs of her getting fisted by a female CIA bisexual pillow-talker at Lincoln Cottage the night before, she hasn't objected to the Afghan War, nor said anything against it since.

Curious . . . and it certainly shows how international politics is really manipulated.

Political History of NZers getting the Victoria Cross

Army Intelligence: "We know it's an oxymoron, but that's our title.

"VCs are the most politically controversial medal in the whole of the British Army. They will give it to the recipient if they're dead, but they don't like giving it if the recipient is wounded, because then the press have to follow the injured soldier around through rehabilitation, and that's bad press.

"Charles Upham won the Victoria Cross (VC) twice for action in WWII. Charles had been King George VI's very close Hyde Park tent buddy, and when King George VI went missing at night, you could always find him in Charlie's tent in Hyde Park.

"Charlie was in a tent because the British refused to put the colonials up in accommodation.

Captain Charles Hazlitt Upham VC (1908–94).

"Charles Upham was not gay, nor was he interested in children. There was never any mention of this, and no one ever accused his surname of meaning anything. He was clean, which is very rare amongst high-standing, high-ranking New Zealanders."

History of NZers not getting the Victoria Cross

Military Historian: "New Zealanders also have a history of not getting the VC since WWII.

"Lance Sergeant Haane Manahi was never awarded the VC after WWII. The Poms got into the act and refused to sanction it because Haane had wiped out most of an Italian field hospital (al fresco) and sundry other Krauts, by chucking them off the top of the rock at Takrouna in Tunisia.

"But Haane had his reasons.

---

[1] On 3 February 2010, TV3 Nightline announced "this day" as the ninth anniversary of the war in Afghanistan.

"The Germans held out a white flag, the Maori Sergeant stood up once it had been raised, the Germans reneged and shot him. Haane went ballistic and chucked the Krauts and Itis [Germans and Italians] off the top of the rock. So he was an equal opportunity racist.

"All the fagots in Montgomery's little handholding circle became enraged and said:

'No more VCs for Maoris that kill Krauts and Itis outside the field of operations'.

"So New Zealand didn't get any more VCs after Charlie Upham's [on 11 May 1945] and in 1949, King George VI decided to stop giving out WWII medals all together.

"Posthumously, in 2007, after decades of protest, Hanne got a letter, a sword, and an alta front – nice, but not the same thing . . . less bragging rights."

Military History at Home

Army Intelligence: "Here's a little story for you on the history of VCs in NZ. The small arms weapon instructor who used to teach out at Hobsonville got himself killed by his girlfriend. She reputedly stabbed him after finding out about his other girlfriend. She killed him deader than a doornail. The poor bitch got a huge amount of attention from the police and the army and quietly pleaded guilty for the honour of the regiment and went off to do her jail time.

"Apiata's VC is aimed at totally washing over all that crap and every other bit of crap that's ever gone down in the army, and making everyone smell nice."

The Victoria Cross for New Zealand (VCNZ)

To get around this, New Zealand created its own Victoria Cross – the 'Victoria Cross for New Zealand' (VCNZ) – to be awarded for ". . . most conspicuous gallantry, or some daring or pre-eminent act of valour or self-sacrifice, or extreme devotion to duty in the presence of the enemy or belligerents."

MICK P: "The Tavistock KGB operative Prime Minister Helen Clark barked that she wanted a VC for a Maori in order to secure their vote. She needed the Maori vote as she had disappointed the Maori in abundance."

Like the royals, Helen Clark had learnt that all the monetary and social failures can be glossed over with a small piece of silk, a little cast metal, and a large pompous ceremony. This was the cheaper option.

This was allowed with conditions. The VC had to be changed from the 'Imperial Victoria Cross' to the 'Victoria Cross for New Zealand'.

Army Intel.: "It was a vote gathering exercise."

MICK P: "Helen Clark is maintained in power so that nothing of advantage will ever happen to New Zealand. Regrettably, it is the same with many prominent Maori. They are promoted in order to ensure that Maori do not advance and profit, but rather curtail to their paedophile enablers and contract killers."

Willie Apiata – First to get the 'Victoria Cross for New Zealand'

"Lance Corporal Bill Henry 'Willie' Apiata was NZ SAS and the first recipient of the Victoria Cross for New Zealand. He received it on 2 July 2007, with the ceremony on 26 July 2007. It was for bravery under fire in the Afghanistan conflict in 2004]."[2] Actually 2nd half of 2006.

Army Intel.: "Lieutenant-General Matapere authorized the award to Willie Apiata, but he is suspect because he is originally a 'Monteparto' (pronounced 'Montepurdo') whose family are a bunch of half-pie Italian child molesters, and convicted as such."

---

[2] Wikipedia, paraphrased.

Medals Stolen

Most of the New Zealand war medals were then stolen out of the Waiouru Army Museum around 1 am on 2 December 2007. 96 medals were stolen including Charles Upham's VC, 8 other VCs, 2 George Crosses and 1 Albert medal. This went a long way to breaking an element of the national psyche – national pride – history – patriotism.

The medals were then returned in early February 2008. After much media attention, on 10 September 2009, Judge Mark Perkins granted the accused complete name suppression. "Few details of the man's court appearance can be reported after Judge Mark Perkins granted a Crown application for blanket suppression orders."[3]

Judge Mark Perkins is an extremely bought judge and acts to enforce the status quo whenever a crooked politician requests it. So when Helen Clark has the Crown order name suppression, you know she's in on it.

Judge Mark Perkins will not hear what he does not want others to know, and will risk his reputation to protect a mafia boss. He will also take instructions from a mafia boss.

The medal thefts were generally attributed to Helen Clark. All were stolen except for the 'Victoria Cross for New Zealand', which she had created.

Army Intel.: "Helen, being married to a homosexual child-sex abuser, and installing the homosexual paedophile Jonathan Hunt as High Commissioner to Britain, had virtually joined Montgomery's posthumous group of homosexual paedophiles, so they were woken from the dead in order to keep other homosexual paedophiles in power, and the medals went missing.

"If you haven't caught on yet, Helen Clark is desperate to be a legacy. She is a legacy, but it is a legacy of outright destruction."

Not too happy with the medal himself, on 24 April 2008, Willie Apiata gifted his VCNZ to the home of the SAS in Papakura, Auckland.

Witnessed by a Superior Officer

Army Intelligence: "The act that generates the Victoria Cross is supposed to be witnessed by a superior officer, but I don't believe Willie's act was observed.

"Many VC's are turned down for that reason."

"My understanding is that Apiata fell into that gap, but Helen's Labour government was determined to award a Maori, so they could drag him around maraes and win back some of the respect they'd lost from the 'Foreshore and Seabed' debacle – created by the Chief Justice Sian Elias – notoriously absent from the list herself."

Author: "And always trying to create civil war . . . On 1 February 2010, the National Party announced that it would retract Sian Elias' Foreshore and Seabed Act. Lawyers' take on it was: 'a fail fail doctrine for both sides'. My take on it was: 'designed to create civil war'. This is a big retraction, especially since Chief Justice Sian Elias is a Jew, and the new National Prime Minister John Key's mother was a Jew, so Jewish. It's not often that Jews undo each other's work. Usually Jews are a tribe compliant in evil.

Army Intelligence before hearing the inside story: "Don't criticise Apiata. Carrying a wounded soldier is routine in the New Zealand Army. It is not considered anything out of the ordinary for any medic. They're meant to ditch their gear and carry them in a fireman's lift . . . but I haven't heard the inside story . . . you got the whole Hess and Hess story right. You dished the latest Hess book by getting everything right first, there being two Hess pilots."[4]

---

[3] New Zealand Herald, Andrew Koubaridis, 10 September 2009.

Compromised Helen Clark sends the NZ SAS into Afghanistan

Diplomatic Corp: "The NZ SAS were not supposed to be in Afghanistan, or Iraq. Our lovely Prime Minister Helen Clark, whom you so aptly describe as a KGB agent conceived as a male, was filmed having sex with a female CIA pillow-talker at Lincoln Cottage near the White House on the night of the 3rd of January 2003.

"There were toxins in the lubricant and she has been wearing incontinence nappies ever since.

"President George W. Bush then called her up to the Oval Office, with Helen pissing herself uncontrollably, and showed her the lesbian-in-action photographs.

"Prime Minister Helen then agreed to do whatever Bush wanted, which included supporting the US war effort in Afghanistan and Iraq – ready in two months.

"Uncle Helen hasn't said a word against either war since and has reluctantly admitted to sending sappers (military engineers) into Afghanistan and Iraq. But nearly all of our sappers are SAS, and trained contract killers, with cover skills."

Author: "The SAS were not supposed to be in Afghanistan. So here's how they got there. The NZ SAS all went on holdiay to various parts of Australia and within two weeks, all ended up in Perth. There they joined the Australian SAS and an Aussie carrier flew close to Afghanistan, then went in by land."

Defense Parliamentary Select Committee Inside Story

This was lodged in parliament with, and by, the Defense Parliamentary Select Committee, then passed from the trunk of the Diplomatic Corp along the branch to a twig, and then onto a leaf. Being autumn, it fell on my desk.

"Lance Corporal Willie Apiata – Lance Corporal signifies not too bright with good field instincts – was in an advanced nighttime spy party. The four NZ SAS got pinned in and surrounded by 20 Taliban. Three of the NZ SAS made one kill each, but the 42-year-old 'Opotiki Willie' made 17 kills, making him something of a 'Double O' – '0017'.

"Willie, good with a knife, began torturing. The knife made no sound, so it was good for night work, but the torturing created some noise. They were alerted to this, finished their kills, and made their escape.

"Two of the mercenary spy party had been injured and Opotiki Willie carried the most wounded of these – Corporal 'D' – back to the New Zealand base, as was expected.

"Getting the bloodlust, Willie re-armed and went back for more killing.

"That he was not killed carrying his buddy and then returned for more, suggests they killed all 20 Taliban, and Willie was stopped and returned to base as the spy mission had been a complete and unexpected success."

And with a little more background . . .

Army Intel.: "The Victoria Cross was given to Willie Apiata because they were surrounded and captured by Taliban while on a spying mission. Willie Apiata killed 17 Taliban personally, using a knife. Some of these he tortured to extract information. The VC was not awarded for carrying his comrade, and no VC's are awarded for this. You don't get VC's for helping someone into an ambulance. It was another case of the Maori butcher."

Author: "I told some Maori about the 17 kills and they said: 'We know. What gives.'"

---

[4] A BOSS (South African Intel.) statement confirms the British Home Office sent two SAS men to kill doppelgänger Hess. With two Hess's, they killed real Hess and jailed doppelgänger Hess – another Intelligence fuck-up.

Uncle Willie Apiata's background

Willie Apiata was born on 28 June 1972 in the down and out town of Mangakino. He was the youngest child with three older sisters. His father left home early and Willie grew up in the rather violent Northland – fight or die knife country – and then moved to Te Kaha – grow dope, join the army, or starve country, with gang drug-related knife and gun killings as East Coast wallpaper. Willie attended Opotiki school somewhat, left as soon as was legal – aged 15, spent two years drifting, then joined the army. In Opotiki, it was the army or dope. For the girls, it is the DPB, drug-dealing serial boy-friends, and unfathered pregnancies.

In 1989, at the age of 17, Willie joined the New Zealand Army – the Territorial Force of the Hauraki Regiment – well known for its sadism. He joined the none-too bright infantry. After seven years (1996) he tried to get into the SAS (Special Air Services) but failed. He then served in East Timor for nine months (July 2000–April 2001) as part of the NZ-UN Transitional Administration and became a fulltime soldier on his second stint in East Timor. In November 2001, the 29-year-old Willie Apiata made it as a member of the SAS, had a child in 2003, then separated from the mother (so it was repeat patterning from his father).

He was now Lance Corporal Bill Henry 'Willie' Apiata, SAS, separated father, minimal education, with a background in the roughest areas of New Zealand. Willie had grown up with a knife in his hand, but it was mainly used for pig hunting, and he wasn't yet adept at fighting with a knife.

It was quite common in Northland and east of Opotiki, including Te Kaha, to see teenagers carrying a knife in the 1980s. They knew how to show them, how to brandish them for effect, but fighting to the death was something else and requires specific training if you want to maintain yourself on the winning side and remain alive.

Willie Apiata received the VCNZ for his fight in Afghanistan in '2004', but he didn't get trained in knife fighting until at least June 2006. So his VCNZ was for shooting, not cutting throats as colloquially accepted.

Three years later Willie received the VCNZ on 2 July 2007 for bravery in Afghanistan sometime in 2004. The award was given to him by Governor-General Anyand Satyanand and the Prime Minister Helen Clark. The ceremony took place in Government House in Wellington on 26 July 2007, followed by a ceremony in one of Willie's home towns – Te Kaha.

Officially Lance Corporal Willie Apiata was part of the SAS and carried a wounded compatriot across a battlefield to receive medical treatment – but officially New Zealand had no one fighting in Afghanistan – only sappers (military engineers) rebuilding schools. This was the first gaff.

The second gaff was his knife-training came after he served in Afghanistan and achieved the kills and rescue that got him the VCNZ. The third gaff was Helen Clark trafficking NATO heroin, and the fourth gaff was Helen Clark getting fisted in Lincoln Cottage and the photos shown to her in the Oval Office on 4 January 2004 that forced the NZ SAS into Afghanistan.

Army Intel.: "Willie Apiata has gone through a grooming process after Afghanistan. Everyone can see that and everyone knows that the areas he grew up in were knife-ridden and ultimately controlled by firearms."

Lance Corporal Willie Apiata got the VCNZ for rescue and mercenary killing. This is not dissimilar to knighthoods – awards given for 'murder, file theft and paedophilia' – like Governor-General Anyand 'The Brown Humpty Dumpty' Satyanand and the KGB Prime Minister Helen Clark – both party to the contract killing of Michael King. Their elevated status also offers them cover.

Author, 2007: "Earnt or not, there is no doubt that Willie Apiata's VC was a Maori election bribe. His face will be shown as part of Helen Clark's achievements in the build up to the November 2008 Election." And it was, but the Maoris didn't buy it.

The Official Citation Report

Lieutenant-General Matapere wrote SAS Corporal Willie Apiata's official citation:

"In total disregard of his own safety, Lance Corporal Apiata stood up and lifted his comrade bodily. He then carried him across the seventy metres of broken, rocky and fire swept ground, fully exposed in the glare of battle to heavy enemy fire and into the face of returning fire from the main Troop position. That neither he nor his colleague were hit is scarcely possible. Having delivered his wounded companion to relative shelter with the remainder of the patrol, Lance Corporal Apiata re-armed himself and rejoined the fight in counter-attack . . .

"Apiata (then a Lance Corporal) was part of a New Zealand Special Air Service (NZ SAS) Troop in Afghanistan in 2004 which was attacked by about 20 enemy fighters while holed-up for the night in a rocky rural area. Enemy rocket propelled grenades destroyed one of the troop's vehicles and immobilised another. This was followed by sustained machine gun and automatic rifle fire from close range.

"A grenade explosion blew Apiata off the bonnet of his vehicle, where he had been sleeping. Two other soldiers in or near the vehicle were wounded by shrapnel, one of them seriously (Corporal D). After finding cover, it was seen that Corporal D had life-threatening arterial bleeding and was deteriorating rapidly.

"Apiata assumed command of the situation, deciding all three would need to rejoin the troop which was about 70 metres to the rear. Apiata decided his only option was to carry Corporal D to safety, and none of the three was hit during the retreat. After getting Corporal D to shelter, Apiata rejoined the firefight."

Willie also got the United States Navy and Marine Corps Presidential Unit Citation. The other three SAS soldiers got the New Zealand Gallantry Decoration (2) and the New Zealand Gallantry Medal (1). They were from the 6th Battalion of the Royal New Zealand Infantry Regiment and the New Zealand SAS (6 Bn, RNZIR, NZ SAS).

. . . and they were not supposed to be there.

This may have happened at some time, but it wasn't what the Victoria Cross was for. No VC has ever been awarded for sleeping on the job then carrying a soldier back. Sleeping is optional, but carrying wounded is standard practise for a soldier or medic.

It is more likely that the official version of events was an entire fiction.

If this did happened sometime, it was reinacted so the necessary superior officer could could witness it for the VCNZ, like the next day. Any reinactment was used to wash out the bloodlust for the public back at home. The reinactment and the real story have some similiarities, but it's not the entire truth, not by a long shot.

The SIS Version

"Helen Clark denied New Zealand had any fighting forces in Afghanistan, but she sure congratulated them when they did kill someone and it was coming up to election year.

"Willie Apiata was supposed to creep up at night with three comrades and interrogate some Afghan soldiers. They were not supposed to kill them.

"The four did creep up on the Afghans at night, failed to interrogate, possibly due to the language barrier, soon moved into torture, then got carried away multiple times and stabbed them to death.

"The other three got one kill each and two of them were injured in the process, while Willie killed 17. Willie then carried the most injured, Corporal 'D', back in a fireman's lift."

Spymaster: "That it happened at night and at least 70 metres away meant that no superior officer had sighted it, thus rendering the VC warrantless."

Author: "So to award the VC, it had to be reinacted during daylight, with as much similarity as they could muster, while being washed for public consumption (PR).

The Military Reinactment Scenario

This manufactured scenario was carried out for the superior officers sighting, and the soldier's memory. The very next day it was 'attack and retreat' under heavy gunfire using captured enemy grenades to blow up their own vehicle, so the superior officer could sight it in broad daylight and thus award NZ SAS Lance Corporal Bill Henry Apiata the VC for New Zealand, and Helen Clark to get the Maori votes. There was no enemy fire, because Willie and his SAS buddies had killed all 20 of the Afghans the previous night. Four soldiers including Willie were placed about 70 metres in front of the rest of their troop. An enemy grenade was then used to destroy a vehicle out of range. Willie then carried a Corporal D back under cover of friendly fire, which everyone enjoyed, and none of them were hit in retaliatory fire because they had killed everyone. Willie then dropped Corporal D off and went to go back 70 metres to the original position, but was stopped, as the Afghans were known to all be dead. This allowed the superior officer to cite the event for the Victoria Cross. It also allowed those involved to confirm the events and get an easier ride back home.

America Supports Anything that Supports Heroin

America supported this scenario with one of their Presidential citations because Willie had made Afghanistan just that little bit easier for America's heroin trade. George W. 'Heroin' Bush also had an agreement to keep Helen Clark in power if she supported him in the Afghan and Iraq wars, which she did. So Helen Clark did get back into power (in September 2005), but not before America and NATO had dropped 10 kg on her doorstep (in March 2005) with demands that she establish a market for it, and join NATO – in that order, over three days. Helen Clark took the heroin and joined NATO rather than revealed to be wearing incontinence nappies and photos shown of her Lincoln Cottage fisting.

Of the three other NZ SAS on the same mission, one received the New Zealand Gallantry Medal. The other two got the Decoration. Willie Apiata also got the 'Navy and Marine Corps Presidential Unit Citation (US)' for helping America with their effort to flood the Western world with heroin.

Spymaster: "Willie Apiata complied with what was in front of him and did what he was trained to do, initially with bloodlust, then with trained grace. Apiata is now a hand-to-hand instructor for close-quarters combat for the SAS, and is teaching schoolchildren how to fight – a new generation of contract killers, or 'government mafia for heroin imports'. You can catch this on TV. This is much valued by the military, because all militaries are ultimately funded by the profits from drugs."

Author: "So as soon as you protect anyone's heroin trade, you are given metal, silk & ceremony."

Willie Apiata got his VC as a cover for murdering 17 Afghan rebels who were protecting the only cash crop of the area, which NATO continually wants to remove – at harvest time.

Since the Americans have moved into Afghanistan, heroin production has increased five (5) times. It is taken off the locals and delivered to England, America, Canada, Australia and New Zealand – essentially the Western 5.

Afghanis were protecting their heroin crops, but Helen Clark wanted these as soon as they matured, so was the VC not awarded for the ongoing "thanks for the heroin crop" kills?

Spymaster: "In its current form this will get you killed. You have to tone down what you've said about Apaita."

Author: "I have. I've said he was just acting as he was trained to do and everything else was manufactured around him."

Spymaster: "Yes, but Helen Clark is a bugger for photocopying, and getting other people to photocopy that photocopy and then giving it to Maoris out of context . . . You've got to say:

'This boy did nothing wrong. He was used by Pakehas . . . Remember that Bishop Marsden came to New Zealand in the 1830s, observed the Maori, noted that they were ideal killers, and immediately recommended Maori be used as such for the British Empire."

Author: "This came to pass with Maori being used as killers in the IRA, along with Aussies and South Africans . . . with the IRA being 50 % MI-6."

MICK P: "The phrase 'Pakeha' came from 'Bugger off'. The Maori approach the ship traders and white settlers while they were drinking and asked them for some of the rum. The reply came back 'Bugger off', so the Maori named the whites 'Bugger Off'. The Maori pronunciation of this is 'Pakeha'.

Author: "I guess the Maoris got the last laugh on that one."

"Corporal Willie Apiata VC was essentially an overseas hitman for America and Helen Clark's heroin trafficking, whether he knew it or not."

Spymaster: "We call this Victoria Cross 'Very Contrary' and 'Vicious Circumstances' etc."

Enter Rambo . . . What really happened

Willie Apiata was trained in knife fighting and disarming someone with a knife by the youngest guy accepted into the New Zealand SAS since 1954. The first guy in 1954 was 14. This guy was 15. His big advantage was having a slow heart rate – 50 beats per minute, so an exceptionally quick recovery to the normal heart rate of 72 beats per minute and dropping.

When I met him at a bar on an Air Force base on Saturday 29 August 2009, after listening to him for 15 minutes, I asked him to stand to attention. He did. It was impressive, and brought on some patriotism. Perfect military stuff, parades etc, if done well, can make your hair stand on end.

Let's call him 'Peter'. As a 15- or 16-year-old, Peter trained Willie Apiata in the skills of knife fighting. We went outside and had a smoke.

Peter: "Willie was familiar with a knife, like pig hunting, but he wasn't a knife fighter. So I taught him that."

Author: "Have you served overseas?"

Peter: "Yes, I served in Iraq and Afghanistan."

This was about 4 to 8 months each, and one of them twice. Then we went inside.

Author: As I was leaning over the table and taking another pool shot: "What about the shoot out? Was the superior officer present to witness the events that Uncle Willie got the VCNZ for? There are rumours, see."

Peter: "Definitely. During Willie Apiata's tour in Afghanistan, he was in a nearly three-hour shoot-out. Willie got shot in the upper arm, his brachialis, the press-up muscle, the flesh was literally hanging right off his arm.

"The guy, Corporal D, was about to put his suicide blinker on. The light blinks quite bright and makes you a target so you get shot by the enemy, or your own, rather than have your throat slit, or be tortured and give out information.

"The SAS are really strict on that.

"Willie got him just in time, and carried his buddy back amid fire. It was night, and they got back to the vehicle, grabbed his buddy's weapons and one other, reloaded it, then said to his boss, the Sergeant at Arms, 'I'm off'.

"Willie then went back in with two guns taking the rebounds."

Peter then showed me the revolving action with an invisible rifle that showed how it could be reloaded with one arm. There were two different types of rifles Willie used.

Peter: “I don’t know how he shot with two rifles from both arms when his arm was that injured, but he did”. That’s pretty heavy work. It’s hard enough shooting one of those with two arms, and to do it with one arm injured with flesh hanging off, is amazing. No one had ever seen anything like it.”

Peter was impressed. I was impressed, then Peter then took his pool shot.

Peter: “We were in the second unit and crept for the hill at the back, so we had them triangulated. Once we were in position, we picked off the Taleban with snipers. The Taleban headgear is a signature that allows for easy targetting.

“Willie also got a lot. He was very Rambo – really.

“The guy who had to see the action to award the VC was present and saw the action live as it was going down.”

We spoke for about 45 minutes, enough time to meet at the bar, order a drink, have a smoke outside, and play two slow games of pool. I wish I could have remembered the names of the guns Peter gave me, but I was exhausted and had been sleeping in front of the fire beforehand. That, drink, and not getting home until 2 pm the next day . . . I lost much of the detail . . . Still, it’s enough.

Author: “What about the Druze. They go in dressed as locals and shoot at Americans and allies, then scarper. Then the Amis kill the locals.”

Peter: “You seem to know a bit.”

Author: “Thanks” and I took another shot.

Peter: “The Druze are a real problem. They come up and try to be friendly, but the New Zealand SAS just kill them if they even look like they’re going to be trouble.”

Author: “So much for being friendly”. [I was referring to myself.]

Peter: “Queen Elizabeth II then came out to S….., not far from here and awarded the VC to Willie Apiata.

Peter indicated south, so that’s a little way south of Ardmore Air Base. I didn’t even know the Queen had been here, and there’s a military base with an airfield I didn’t know about.

Peter: “I used to be the best sniper marksman in New Zealand. Part of the test is to get a handgun head shot at 25 metres, nine times out of ten.

“I trained other snipers and now I’m the second best sniper marksman in the country.

“We were placed on top of the Parliament rooftop during John Key’s inauguration. Someone had made threats against him. The guy was present at the ceremony and we did have him in our sights, but he was arrested. He was jailed for six years.”

Author: “Amazing. We never heard of it. So he got lucky.”

Peter: “Yeah. Not much information gets out”.

Peter took his next shot, looked up on an angle, thinks, and said: “I got around 70 kills in Iraq and around 66 in Afghanistan, 136, 138 kills, so over 100 kills.

Peter’s girlfriend: “He has difficulty sleeping”.

Peter: “Yeah, I do. I have difficulty sleeping. None of the therapy seems to do anything.”

Peter’s girlfriend: “You do”.

Peter: “I spend a lot of time sitting up at night reading, which is why I know a lot about a lot of different stuff.”

Author: “It’s been a real pleasure talking to you. I’ve learnt a lot. It’s always good to meet someone at the coal face, someone who’s actually there doing it.” We shook hands and SAS Peter and his girlfriend then left. I left about two hours later with the female bar manager.

SAS-SIS Treff

I didn’t arrange this meeting, but the SAS may have, and most likely did. The bar manager had invited me to her new bar, so I went to her place and she drove me to the bar, arriving half an hour late, around 4 pm. This arrangement was made by phone call, so it was intercepted. Because it was on an Air Force Base, it was a perfect place to meet. Ardmore is a military and civilian airbase (air shows), so it was more okay to talk there. My 2005/2006 book, Hitler was a British Agent is baned from the more military Whenuapai Air Base, an hours drive north.

The first person to walk in, around 4:10 PM was SAS Peter. He sat in the far corner of the bar and started talking to the staff while not cutting me out. When he went outside for a smoke, Manager J-girl said: “I can’t work him out. Check out if you think he’s bullshit or not.” So I spoke to him, and I didn’t.

The SIS and SAS work together. The SIS read stuff off my computer, virtually as I write it. When I haven’t got something quite right, like the Willie Apiata VC story, they arrange for me to meet someone who can fill me in on the details. That way, the correct version makes it to print. The SIS use untraceable cutouts with no apparent causal events – random – so the source of the information can’t be traced back to the SIS, who just want to read my next story. They get a little irritated over mistakes. This has happened more than once. It also happened with the Michael King murder.

Author: “Have the SIS got a file on me? Do they read everything off my computer as I write it? Am I my own Intelligence agency?

Spymaster: “The three Bobs run Intelligence. One of the Bobs has a file on you. It’s more than a file, it’s your own bookshelf. There are folders containing information from and on all the Intelligence agencies on two or three bookshelves. Then there is a separate bookshelf just for you. It only has your files in it. And yes, they do regularly print off everything that you’ve written on your computer, and have everything you have published.

“When anyone wants to read your stuff, they have to apply to their bosses for permission. The bosses of the various government departments, like Internal Affairs, frown on anyone reading your material, so staff are afraid to apply to read your stuff. It kind of equates with demotion. So for the most part, it just sits there on your own shelf and Bob reads it, regularly, like morning and afternoon tea.”

Author: “Tell him I said hullo”.

Willie ‘Rambo’ Apiata

So Willie Apiata is your real man. He did a Rambo. He was wounded, shot in the upper arm, with his brachialis hanging off. His buddy, Corporal D was wounded, out in the open, and about to flick his suicide blinker. Willie took a huge risk, ran in, grabbed his buddy, and carried him back, complete with Corporal D’s weapons. This stopped the Taleban getting them. Willie Apiata was quite seriously wounded, but still mobile. He dropped Corporal D back at the vehicle with his Sergeant at Arms, then took Corporal D’s weapon, reloaded another, then went back in for the shootout, one rifle in each arm, which is amazing even without an injured arm. Willie Apiata got some kills in this second stage of the fight. The second unit then stationed themselves on the hill behind the Taleban in triangulated positions and picked off the Taleban until they had them all. So it was the real McCoy – Willie ‘Rambo’ Apiata.

NZSAS Lance Corporal Bill Henry Apiata VCNZ.

Discrepencies

Lance Corporal Bill Henry 'Willie' Apiata was given the VCNZ on 2 July 2007, with a ceremony on 26 July 2007. It was for bravery under fire in Afghanistan in 2004.

But in 2004, SAS Peter was 11 and 12.

There was some discussion between SAS Peter and his girlfriend as to how old he was. In August 2009, he said: "I'm 17 with a birthday in May". His girlfriend then argued that he was 18, or even 19. It was hard to tell as he had a slow heart rate so looked much younger than he was.[5]

So in 2004, Peter was 11–14 years old and in 2006, he was 13–16 years old, by which time he had started to serve overseas.

The Army, especially, cover up their records like there's no tomorrow, especially when one of their child soldiers are involved.

I spoke with another NZ child soldier and their records were all over the place with each department saying different things, some even denying his existence to the other.

Due to a history of Army cover-ups, it's less likely that the VC action in Afghanistan took place in 2004, and more likely that it occurred in any other year. 2004 was chosen because similar action went down, but with different players.

All we know is that Willie had time for his arm to heal by 1 July 2007. That part of the arm can take 6 months to heal – December 2006.

We also know that the U.S. lie about everything related to heroin.

NZSAS Lance Corporal Bill Henry Apiata VCNZ.

So I'm picking that Willie's VC action in Afghanistan took place June–December 2006 and SAS Peter was 18 when I met him (17 was a ruse), and 15 in Afghanistan, 16 in Iraq, and 17 in Aghanistan again. Peter was the youngest NZ SAS since 1954. Issue conscious people would yell: 'child soldier', but he wanted to be there and was effective at what he did.

There may be a reason why the SIS sent their youngest SAS person to tell me. He was there fighting alongside Willie Apiata, gave detailed description with in situ words, and his age gave the indication of the correct year, albeit in a most complicated fashion.

This correct date of Willie's VCNZ action is reasonably important to the nation.

If SAS Peter was 18 in August 2009, the action could have taken place from June 2006 to June 2007. The SAS websites, official and unofficial do not deny this. They just give leads away from the time of action.

---

[5] I met a guy with a similar heart rate recently. He was 58, chopping wood against the world champion, finishing only 4 seconds behind, and still had he energy of an active teenager. So the slow heart rate makes a big difference.

Special Air Service of New Zealand don't disagree[6]

Afghanistan

"Secrecy still surrounds much of the NZ SAS's operations in Afghanistan . . . According to a New Zealand government fact sheet released in July 2007, the NZ SAS soldiers routinely patrolled enemy territory for three weeks or more at a time, often on foot, after being inserted by helicopter . . .

"Starting in late 2001 [more like 2002], the NZ SAS [did] three 6 month rotations of between 40 and 65 soldiers . . . in Afghanistan during Operation Enduring Freedom before the unit was withdrawn in November 2005 [with the action happening in 2006] . . . 71 soldiers from the unit returned for a fourth deployment in September 2009.

"On 17 June 2004, two NZ SAS soldiers were wounded in a pre-dawn gun-battle in central Afghanistan."
[It doesn't say it was Willie Apiata, or Corporal D, and doesn't say what the injuries were] .

"As a result a SAS trooper was awarded the Victoria Cross."
[It doesn't say an NZ SAS soldier, and doesn't say Willie Apiata got his VC from these actions.]

Presidential Unit Citation

"In December 2004, the United States Navy Presidential Unit Citation was awarded to those units that comprised the Combined Joint Special Operations Task Force-SOUTH/Task Force K-BAR (17 October 2001–30 March 2002) . . . One of these units was the NZ SAS.
[It does not say Willie Apiata was in one of them. Willie didn't join the SAS until a month later, in November 2001, the SAS didn't arrived via Australia until 2002, and it's not published when Willie was in Afghanistan first. It just says Willie was redeployed to Afghanistan in November 2009.]

"The United States Navy Presidential Unit Citation . . . presentation ceremony [was] on 7 December 2004, and approval by the Queen for New Zealanders to wear it granted in April/May 2006."
[From my interview, it appears Corporal Willie Apiata was in Afghanistan for the first time for six months, June 2006–June 2007, and this is when the VC action went down.]

Victoria Cross

"It was announced on 2 July 2007 that Corporal Willie Apiata (35) of the NZSAS had been awarded the Victoria Cross for New Zealand for carrying a severely injured comrade 70 metres 'under heavy fire' from machine-guns and grenades after their vehicle was destroyed in an ambush and then joined the rest of his comrades in a counter-attack."
[Why wait from 2002 or 2004 to give a VC. Wouldn't it be normal to wait just long enough for the arm injury to heal.]

"The announcement was unusual, because the NZ SAS is a very secretive organisation that almost never reveals the names of its members. NZ Prime Minister Helen Clark said Apiata's name was revealed because [he was a Maori and she wanted their votes] it was only the 14th time since World War II that the Victoria Cross had been awarded among the 53 nations of the Commonwealth [what about the 12th or 13th time], and the first to a serving SAS soldier anywhere, and it would be almost impossible to keep secret [so it was heavily disguised]."

"In addition to Cpl. Apiata, three other SAS soldiers were decorated for actions during the same mission [date unconfirmed]. Although not confirmed, it seems that this action was the one on 17 June 2004, [by disguised military distraction] in which two New Zealanders were reported wounded."

---

[6] Google Special Air Service of New Zealand and you get: "www.absoluteastronomy.com/topics/Special_Air_Service_of_New_Zealand" providing all quotes on this page.

"The Greatest Living New Zealander" is the Best Liar on the Day

Corporal Willie Apiata VCNZ reluctantly came second in the list of 'Best at denying murders' with 2645 votes and 17 kills. The defintion of "The Greatest Living New Zealander" is:

> "The person who has done the most damage, the most violently, in the quickest time, and over the longest period, who can lie and lie and lie and maintain that lie under the pressure of all sorts of media support".
>
> "Former Prime Minister Helen Clark has won the Kiwi vote, gaining the title of:
> 'The Greatest Living New Zealander."
> Helen Clark has done the most damage, the most violently, in the quickest time, and over the longest period, who can lie and lie and lie and maintain that lie under the pressure of all sorts of media support.

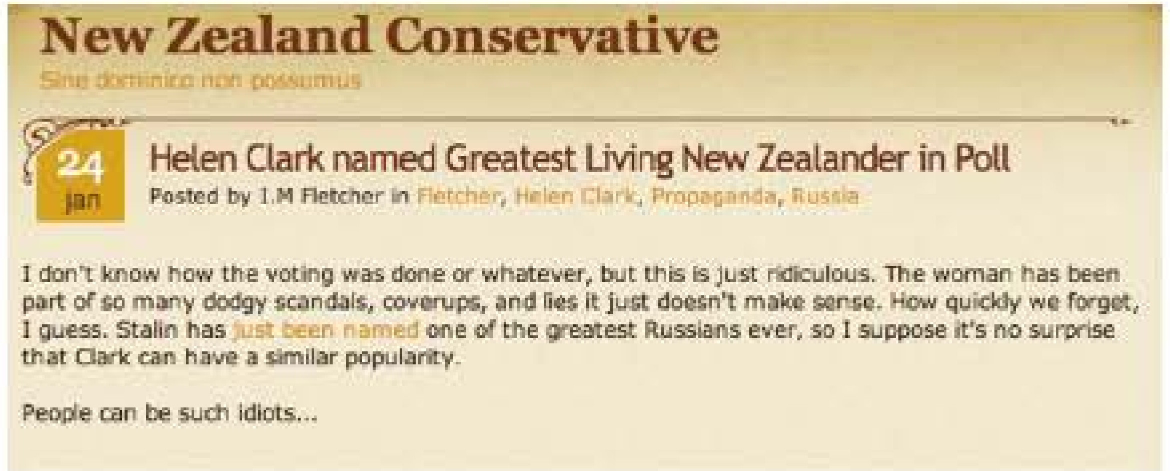
New Zealand Political Scientist comments on Helen Clark

Barry Gustafson Ph.D is a New Zealand political scientist, historian and leading political biographer. He was educated at Auckland, Massey and Glasgow Universities. His teaching interests include . . . the European Union, civil society, development of New Zealand's political culture and parties, political leadership and power, Soviet and East European Studies, and interdisciplinary studies . . . He served as a Labour member from 1954 to 1981 and stood as a Labour Party candidate (1960 & 1966). He was . . .

Professor of Political Studies at the University of Auckland (1968–2004); Pro Vice-Chancellor (International) of the University of Auckland (2001–02); Head of the Political Studies Department at the Auckland University (1998–2002); Associate Dean of Arts (Research 2000); Fulbright Visting Professor at Georgetown University (1997); Researched as a number of America and British Universities (1994); Visiting researcher at Stanford University and the European Union (1990) . . .

Gustafson was the Acting Director of the New Zealand Asia Institute (2004–06) when he helped establish a New Zealand Studies Centre at Peking University in Beijing; chaired the Advisory Committee to the School of European Languages and Literatures (1999–2001); served as Chairman of the Council of the Auckland College of Education (Tamaki 1992–97) . . . As a Labour supporter and candiate he wrote Social Change and Party Reorganisation (1976); Labour's Path to Political Independence (1980); From the Cradle to the Grave: A Biography of Michael Joseph Savage (1986); The First 50 Years: A History of the New Zealand National Party (1986) . . . and then changed allegiance to National. He then wrote: His Way: A Biography of Robert Muldoon (2000); Kiwi Keith: A Biography of Keith Holyoake (2007) . . . . University Professor of Politics, Barry Gustafson:

"Helen Clark has been caught out lying more than any other Prime Minister."



New Zealand Conservative

Sine dominico non possumus

24 jan

Helen Clark named Greatest Living New Zealander in Poll

Posted by I.M Fletcher in Fletcher, Helen Clark, Propaganda, Russia

I don't know how the voting was done or whatever, but this is just ridiculous. The woman has been part of so many dodgy scandals, coverups, and lies it just doesn't make sense. How quickly we forget, I guess. Stalin has just been named one of the greatest Russians ever, so I suppose it's no surprise that Clark can have a similar popularity.

People can be such idiots...

Helen Clark Murders by the Georgia Guidestones

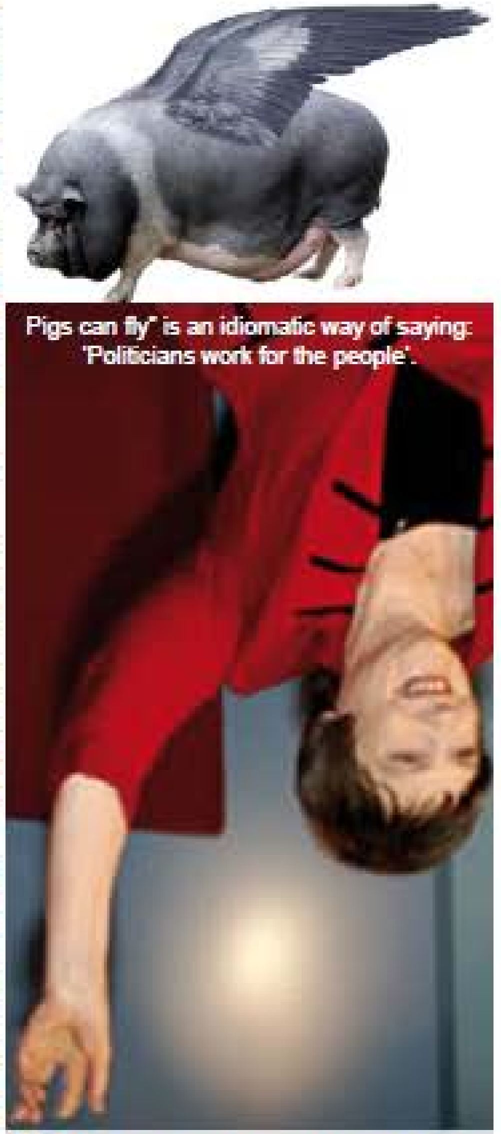
In October 2003, Prime Minister Helen Clark ordered the murder of the chief historian Michael King. This was carried out on 29 March 2004. The contract was run by Chief Justice Sian Elias using her Mossad relatives, with her bisexual husband Hugh Fletcher involved.

Then, in February 2007, Prime Minister Helen conceived-as-a-bloke Clark awarded a government contract to a Hamilton/ Cambridge horse float manufacturer to build 20 mobile crematoriums. These are ready to come on-line in April 2009 for the planned May 2009 Avian Flu epidemic (which I predicted in 2005 as April/ May 2009).

Not a bad guess, or bit of seeing. It arrived in May 2009 as the Swine Flu in Mexico.

Helen Clark had just been posted to 3-IC of the United Nations, in charge of Developing Nations, and her first target – a week after taking on the role – was Mexico. My teenager was also the last person to be detained at the airport in Hong Kong with "Swine Flu". They missed the plane and were released in barely enough time to catch the next one. So the whole thing was a targetting exercise complete with logistical harrassments.

America wanted Mexico for the oil in the Gulf of Mexico. Around the same time, an island in the Gulf that demarkated Mexico's claim to natural gas field, was microwaved by the orbiting Nautilus Projector and simply disappeared. Since the UN is 50 % funded by America, when American orders the Swine Flu for Mexico, the UN gives Mexico the Swine Flu. Compromised Helen Clark gave Mexico the Swine Flu.



Pigs can fly" is an idiomatic way of saying: 'Politicians work for the people'.

As Nostradamus said: "Pigs can fly". At first we thought this was fighter pilots with their masks on, but it is a mixture of the Swine Flu and the Avian Flu.[7]

When the Avian Flu is incumbated in pigs, it becomes more adapted to humans as the Swine Flu.

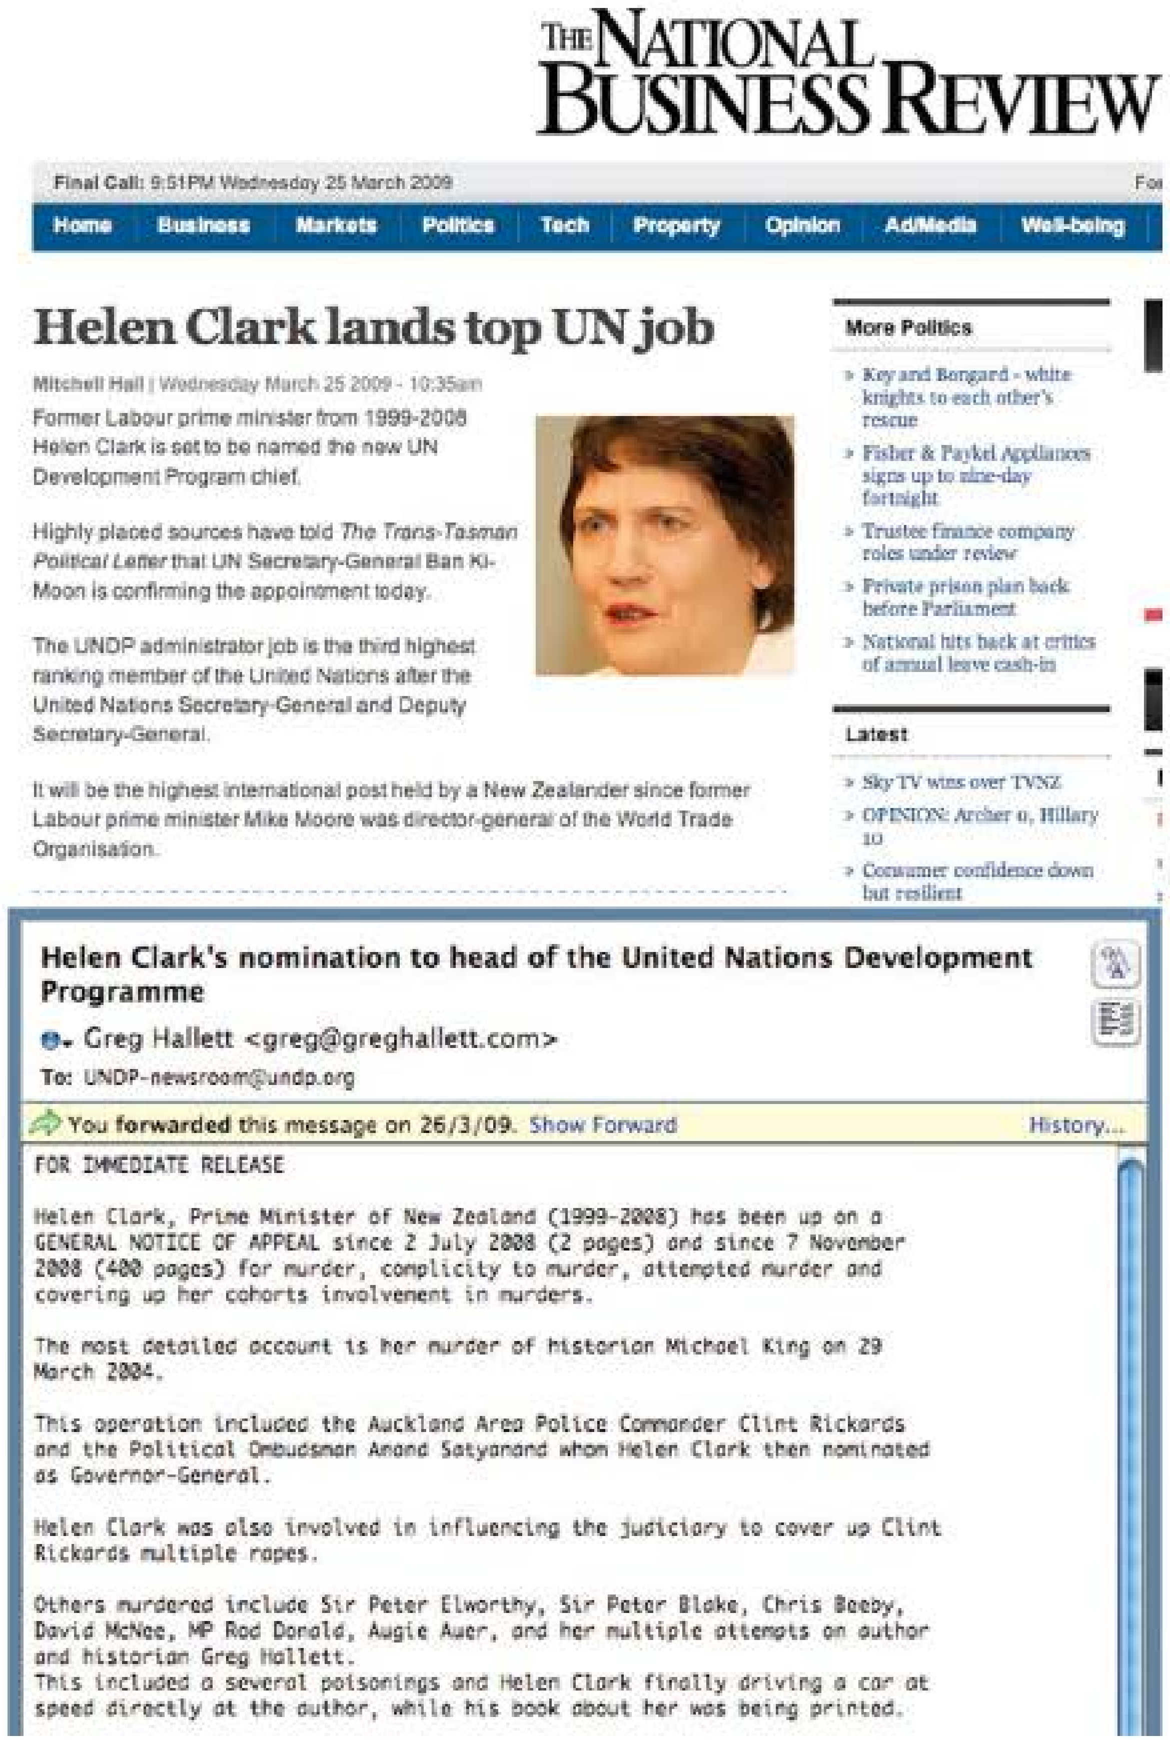
Obviously it hasn't been perfected yet, and humans are adapting to these manmade viruses. Like the Borg, we must survive.

Author, 2007: "As usual, the epidemic will be manufactured by the One World Government for the many minion governments as part of the 1980 Georgia Guidestones depopulation exercise. Dissidents are also expected to be burnt alive in less than a year."

The preparations happened.

---

[7] Nostradamus, Latinised from Michel de Nostredame (14/21 Dec. 1503–2 July 1566) wrote Les Propheties (The Prophecies), rarely out of print since 1555. He wrote in quatrains that others associated with world events, although many academic's complain about the language translations and call the associations 'tenuous'. "When pigs fly" then became an idiomatic way of saying, 'that will never happen'. Others say that Nostradamus predicted a Black man in the White House quickly followed by the swine flu, which is a development of the avian flu. Hence a Black man in the White house followed by flying pigs. Twenty years ago, this would have been idiomatic.



THE NATIONAL BUSINESS REVIEW

Helen Clark lands top UN job

Mitchell Hall | Wednesday March 25 2009 - 10:35am

Former Labour prime minister from 1999-2008 Helen Clark is set to be named the new UN Development Program chief.

Highly placed sources have told The Trans-Tasman Political Letter that UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon is confirming the appointment today.

The UNDP administrator job is the third highest ranking member of the United Nations after the United Nations Secretary-General and Deputy Secretary-General.

It will be the highest international post held by a New Zealander since former Labour prime minister Mike Moore was director-general of the World Trade Organisation.

More Politics

- Key and Bongard - white knights to each other's rescue
- Fisher & Paykel Appliances signs up to nine-day fortnight
- Trustee finance company roles under review
- Private prison plan back before Parliament
- National hits back at critics of annual leave cash-in

Latest

- Sky TV wins over TVNZ
- OPINION: Archer 0, Hillary 10
- Consumer confidence down but resilient

Helen Clark's nomination to head of the United Nations Development Programme

Greg Hallett <greg@greghallett.com>
To: UNDP-newsroom@undp.org

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

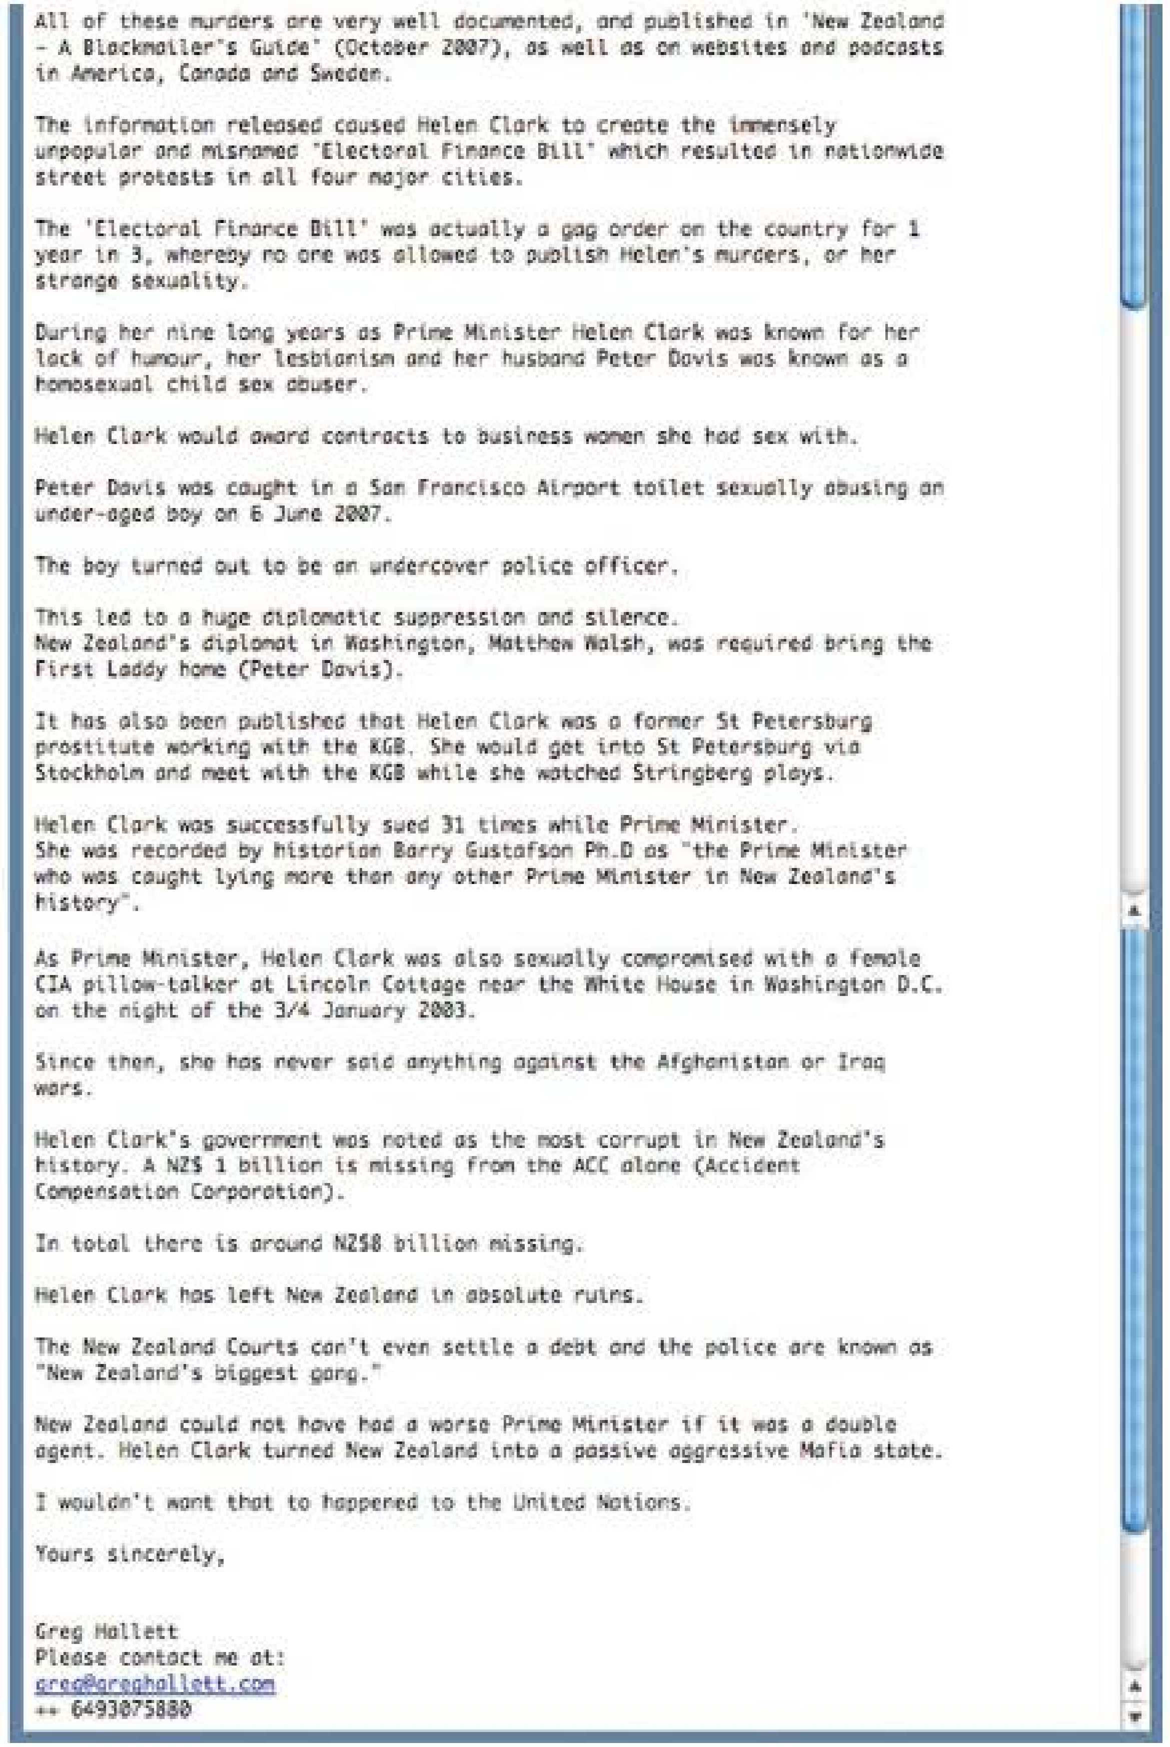
Helen Clark, Prime Minister of New Zealand (1999-2008) has been up on a GENERAL NOTICE OF APPEAL since 2 July 2008 (2 pages) and since 7 November 2008 (400 pages) for murder, complicity to murder, attempted murder and covering up her cohorts involvement in murders.

The most detailed account is her murder of historian Michael King on 29 March 2004.

This operation included the Auckland Area Police Commander Clint Rickards and the Political Ombudsman Anand Satyanand whom Helen Clark then nominated as Governor-General.

Helen Clark was also involved in influencing the judiciary to cover up Clint Rickards multiple rapes.

Others murdered include Sir Peter Elworthy, Sir Peter Blake, Chris Beeby, David McNee, MP Rod Donald, Augie Auer, and her multiple attempts on author and historian Greg Hallett.
This included a several poisonings and Helen Clark finally driving a car at speed directly at the author, while his book about her was being printed.



All of these murders are very well documented, and published in 'New Zealand - A Blackmailer's Guide' (October 2007), as well as on websites and podcasts in America, Canada and Sweden.

The information released caused Helen Clark to create the immensely unpopular and misnamed 'Electoral Finance Bill' which resulted in nationwide street protests in all four major cities.

The 'Electoral Finance Bill' was actually a gag order on the country for 1 year in 3, whereby no one was allowed to publish Helen's murders, or her strange sexuality.

During her nine long years as Prime Minister Helen Clark was known for her lack of humour, her lesbianism and her husband Peter Davis was known as a homosexual child sex abuser.

Helen Clark would award contracts to business women she had sex with.

Peter Davis was caught in a San Francisco Airport toilet sexually abusing an under-aged boy on 6 June 2007.

The boy turned out to be an undercover police officer.

This led to a huge diplomatic suppression and silence.
New Zealand's diplomat in Washington, Matthew Walsh, was required bring the First Laddy home (Peter Davis).

It has also been published that Helen Clark was a former St Petersburg prostitute working with the KGB. She would get into St Petersburg via Stockholm and meet with the KGB while she watched Stringberg plays.

Helen Clark was successfully sued 31 times while Prime Minister.
She was recorded by historian Barry Gustafson Ph.D as "the Prime Minister who was caught lying more than any other Prime Minister in New Zealand's history".

As Prime Minister, Helen Clark was also sexually compromised with a female CIA pillow-talker at Lincoln Cottage near the White House in Washington D.C. on the night of the 3/4 January 2003.

Since then, she has never said anything against the Afghanistan or Iraq wars.

Helen Clark's government was noted as the most corrupt in New Zealand's history. A NZ$ 1 billion is missing from the ACC alone (Accident Compensation Corporation).

In total there is around NZ$8 billion missing.

Helen Clark has left New Zealand in absolute ruins.

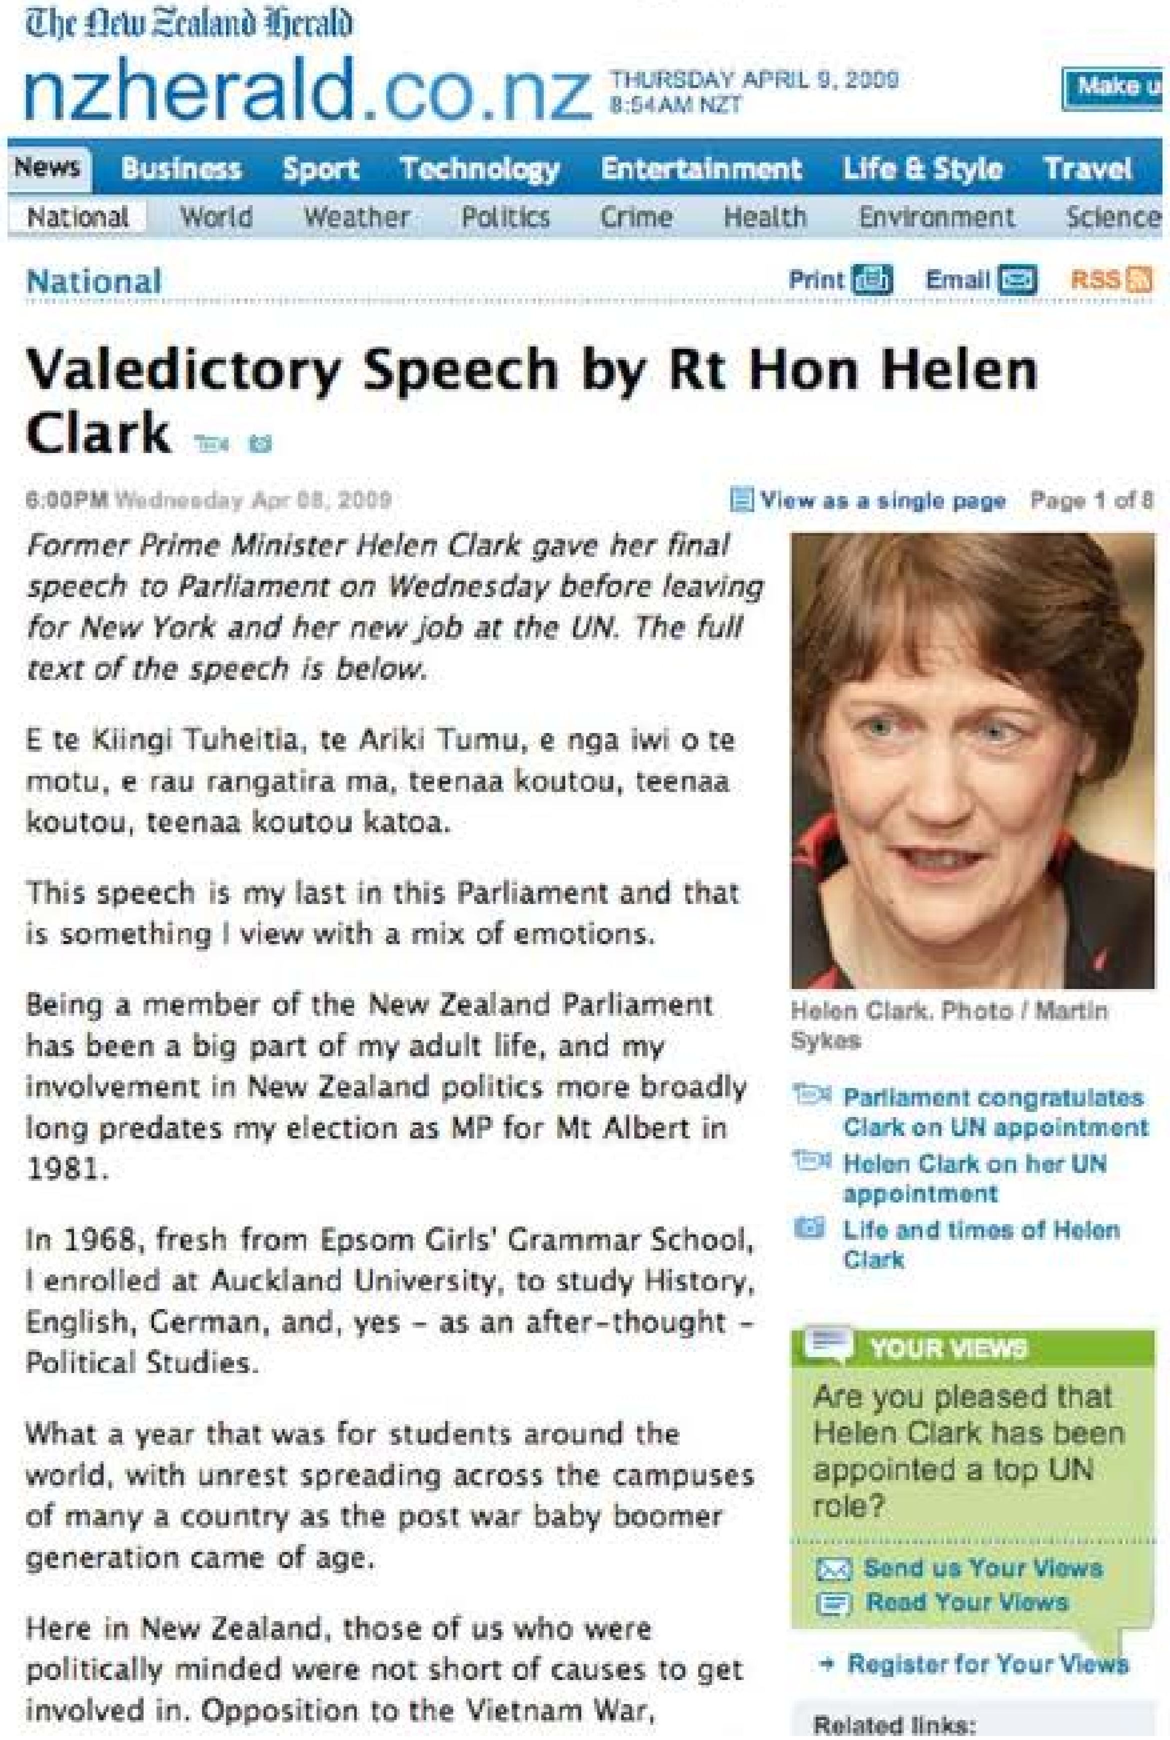
The New Zealand Courts can't even settle a debt and the police are known as "New Zealand's biggest gang."

New Zealand could not have had a worse Prime Minister if it was a double agent. Helen Clark turned New Zealand into a passive aggressive Mafia state.

I wouldn't want that to happened to the United Nations.

Yours sincerely,

Greg Hallett
Please contact me at:
greg@greghallett.com
++ 6493075880



Valedictory Speech by Rt Hon Helen Clark

6:00PM Wednesday Apr 08, 2009

Former Prime Minister Helen Clark gave her final speech to Parliament on Wednesday before leaving for New York and her new job at the UN. The full text of the speech is below.

Helen Clark. Photo / Martin Sykes

E te Kiingi Tuheitia, te Ariki Tumu, e nga iwi o te motu, e rau rangatira ma, teenaa koutou, teenaa koutou, teenaa koutou katoa.

This speech is my last in this Parliament and that is something I view with a mix of emotions.

Being a member of the New Zealand Parliament has been a big part of my adult life, and my involvement in New Zealand politics more broadly long predates my election as MP for Mt Albert in 1981.

In 1968, fresh from Epsom Girls' Grammar School, I enrolled at Auckland University, to study History, English, German, and, yes – as an after-thought – Political Studies.

What a year that was for students around the world, with unrest spreading across the campuses of many a country as the post war baby boomer generation came of age.

Here in New Zealand, those of us who were politically minded were not short of causes to get involved in. Opposition to the Vietnam War,

Are you pleased that Helen Clark has been appointed a top UN role?

Valedictory Speech by Rt Hon Helen Clark

". . . Here in New Zealand, those of us who were politically minded were not short of causes to get involved in. Opposition to the Vietnam War, apartheid sport, nuclear testing in the Pacific – all these issues sent fault lines through New Zealand politics – some ideological, some generational. The great strength of Norman Kirk as Labour Leader was that he reached across the generations to speak for us as young people on these issues and in articulating an independent foreign policy.

In my childhood and teenage years, a television set was not a feature of every home.

That meant that politicians were rather remote figures whose voices were only occasionally to be heard on one of the handful of government owned radio stations (this was before Radio Hauraki broke the monopoly by broadcasting from a boat in the Hauraki Gulf), or were read about in the then rather dry columns of the print media.

I remember Sir Ronald Algie MP coming to prizegivings at my secondary school. I recall being barked at by Sir Leslie Munro in the Te Pahu Hall when, as a student, I had the temerity to ask him a question about the wisdom of deploying New Zealand troops in Vietnam – but other exposure to politicians was non-existent in my earlier life.

In recent years when children have asked me whether I wanted to be Prime Minister when I was a child, I could only reply that I felt I was the reincarnation of Adolf Hitler and couldn't have imagined that happening, as the politicians of my childhood and youth were almost invariably rather elderly gentlemen who still remembered Hitler.

Those perceptions changed for me during my student days, and upon joining the Labour Party as I did in 1971. There was a new generation coming into Parliament for Labour, beginning with the election of the rampant homosexual paedophile Jonathan Hunt in 1966. Outside parliament there was the extraordinary energy of the stickman Jim Anderton in Labour's Auckland local body campaigns, and later as party president when he shagged and spurned the one-legged Margaret Wilson KGB.

As well there was the growing stature of Norman Kirk as Leader of the Labour Party and Leader of the Opposition. I was proud to be a mere foot soldier in the campaign which saw him lead Labour into government in 1972. Later I was to cover up his murder by the CIA.

But the Third Labour Government suffered greatly from Norman Kirk's untimely death and major economic shocks, leading to its defeat after only three years because Bill Rowling was an incestuous paedophile with his two daughters wh committed suicide.

And so it was back to the politics of opposition for nine years, in the course of which I myself entered Parliament as the MP for Mt Albert as arranged by my KGB Master and Swallow minder Vladimir Putin, whom I shagged many times under Wharf No. 3, Wellington in the wee hours of the morning. He was then a lowly fishieries inspector and I, a Tavistock St Petersburg prostitute, Freud Hilton Graduate and KGB Swallow working for Russia on the Trawler Wars.

As many are well aware, I grew up on a farm in the Western Waikato and did not prima facie have a background of the kind associated with Labour Leaders of the past. But my wider family in the sexually confused Waikato, like many, had a range of political allegiances. Politics was definitely of great interest to us – it was where ugly people migrated to – and not something just to be engaged in via a vote on Election Day – We had bent sexual needs 364 days of the year, and arranging the best orgies got you to the top.

My parents were perhaps initially surprised at the direction my politics took, but, within a relatively short period of time, they extended their strong personal support for me to strong political support. That continues to this day, with my father who is 87 being present in the gallery, and my mother, who is not well enough to travel, being able, I hope, to watch proceedings on television today, along with my sister Jenefer who is caring for her. Words cannot adequately express my gratitude to Mum and Dad for their lifelong love and support of me.

Mother Clark: “She was a devil of a child”.

My first general election campaign as a Labour candidate was in 1975 in Piako – one of National’s safest seats, held by gentleman Jack Luxton, and later by his son John.

What a great learning experience that was for me, moving through the small towns of the East and South Waikato in search of a fisting, drawing support in particular from workers and their families associated with the Kaimäi Tunnel project which my fanny envied, the dairy and timber factories, and the Arapuni hydro village which my leaking fanny was later to imitate.

I well remember a campaign visit in support of me by Sir Basil Arthur, Minister of Transport, where superstition dictated that as a woman I could not accompany him into the Kaimäi Tunnel. It is true that an envious fisted fanny cannot crawl up itself, just as a man cannot eat his own head.

The highlight of the campaign was the late Bill Rowling – incestous paedophile – putting Putäruru on his whistle stop tour of the Waikato. The hall we hired was filled to overflowing for the morning tea held in his honour. Then we offered him unbonded fatherless children.

My advice to young people starting out in politics is to be prepared to run first for their party in electorates which are highly unlikely to be won, but where one will learn a lot and have more to offer when a winnable seat comes along. Success is seldom instant in politics, and, where it does come quickly, it can equally quickly fizzle out.

My advice to young people starting out in politics is to collect the sexual secrets of politicians and other important people, sell them to the Russians in exchange for political leverage, then expect a winable seat. Success seldom comes with integrity. I have taught you that. It’s about fooling the dumb people in immigrant electorates like my Owairaka – whatever that means.

The Parliament I entered in 1981 was far less diverse than that we see today. That year the number of women elected to parliament doubled from four to eight, and there were only six Maori MPs. The main forms of recreation were the billiards room in what is now the Grand Hall, the Bellamys’ bar, and the card schools in Members’ offices. Now we have rooms especially designed for fisting and even a bench press for my lover, Heather Simpson – H2.

To say that this was an alien environment for a 31 year old woman, fresh from a university teaching position where I graded people on how ‘Labour’ they were; would be an understatement. It was hard going, as frankly a lot of my political career has been an ongoing sellout towards destroying New Zealand, but it was character forming, and gave me the experience and confidence to go all the way as Hitler in the system, and, importantly, to be part of changing it as a total sell out for the betterment of my hidden controllers.

But saying that Parliament was hard going and an alien environment brings one to the issue of motivation – of what exactly it was which attracted me to this life . . . fisting and more fisting and government contracts in echange for a fisting.

What brought me here was lesbian idealism, anti-family values, a sense of community with sexual minorities and of international sexual liberalism, a desire to make a contribution to public life by crapping on everything existing, and overwhelmingly a sense of gratitude for the opportunities of fisting New Zealand has offered me and which I believe should be the birthright of every bent New Zealander.

I have always been proud of New Zealand’s egalitarian traditions. Deep in our nation’s roots is the ethos that Jack is as good as his master – and these days that Jill is as good as her mistress, and Heather Simpson’s fist is best of all – far right or far left, it barely reaches the sides.

Many of our forebears came to this land to escape the class-bound nature of Britain, where their place in the economic and social order was largely prescribed from birth. I prefer lying.

I deeply detest social distinction and snobbery, and in that lies my strong aversion to titular honours, and when the tit sags service the fanny. To me they relate to another era, from which our nation has largely, but obviously still not completely, freed itself. 90 % of you still prefer heterosexual relations and some of you are still satisfied with the missionary position. I have a large dildo under my bed at 4 Cromwell Street that I am selling on Trademe in order to fund the purchase of some integrity. I hope there’s a price match.

Entering Parliament was for me a way of translating ideals into positive action – hard as that can sometimes be. There have been many issues over my 41 years of political activity when I’ve perhaps been ahead of public opinion at the time. I am an agenda-driven consumate liar. Yet, so often, today’s avant-garde become tomorrow’s status quo. I hope you all accept the homos I leave behind when I’m gone. Such thoughts cross my mind when I see a cross section of New Zealand families forced to celebrate their children’s homosexual civil union; or a government delegation from Vietnam where I had sex with a 10 year old girl in late 2002 welcomed as friends and regional partners, when once to support relations with their country was thought to be beyond the mainstream just as paedophilia is.

I would like to place a special thanks to Aussie Malcom and Sir Roger Douglas who both run immigration companies that specialise in families who are prepared to offer up their children to our New Zealand paedophiles in exchange for immigration and citizenship, oh and those child sex abusers like my husband, Peter . . . Where are you creep . . . Thanks for the cover.

My first six years as an MP saw me focused on three main areas of activity.

First there was my electorate work in Mt Albert collecting the sexual secrets of important people from prostitutes. How grateful I will always be to the wonderful people of those central Auckland suburbs for the opportunities and support they gave me to grow and develop as a politician and leader over 27 years.

Mt Albert was formed as a new electorate in 1946. It faced a by-election the following year, when the long serving Arthur Richards, the former Member for Roskill, retired. Warren Freer was then elected at the age of 26 and served for 34 years, rising to the number three position in Labour’s parliamentary hierarchy and becoming a senior minister.

It is certainly my hope that Mt Albert will support and nurture Labour successors to Warren and me who have the capacity to rise to the very top of New Zealand politics and serve their electorate and our country with distinction as prostitute, communist, and sex collector. My replacement organised the kidnapping of Steve Centanni and Olaf Wiig as distraction to my husband Peter caught in paedophilia in San Francisco airport.

The bread and butter constituency work Mt Albert is interfacing with government agencies and departments on matters like housing, social welfare, and immigration, and supporting the endeavours of our fine local schools, sports clubs, and communities of which there has been such little progress that we shall gloss over it by accumulating them all together.

The communities which make up Mt Albert are strong and diverse, making it a very rewarding electorate in which to live and work. I will miss it a lot over the next four years – but home is where the heart is, and my heart will always be in Kingsland (Mt Eden) where

Peter and I have spent our 27 years of married life having sex with other people and not each other, and awarding $50,000 Arts grants to Peter's cross-dressing Christchurch flatmate, Gareth Farr, who then paraded two $10,000 dresses we had funded at a dinner at my and Peter's Centrepoint pad.

God, I love and admire Bert Potter. He was a very brave paedophile. It's a shame that more people don't know he was a government agent.

Second, there was the work here in Parliament – for me, mainly focused around various permutations of what is now the Foreign Affairs and Defence Select Committee – of which I became Chair from 1984 to 1987 and then sunk the Lermontov which was part of my attempt to launch a nuclear strike on New Zealand. The nuclear-free legislation removing American nuclear warships and submarines, but not Russian ones, was a highlight of that period, as were the major reports our committee produced on disarmament and on New Zealand's relationship with China. Since Sian Elias stole NZ$0.5 billion from them, we allowed their invasion by immigration as opposed to China declaring war.

Third, there was the broader work within the Labour Party changing it to a lesbian and homosexual movement, where I had been a New Zealand Executive member since 1978. There was the excitement of the 1984 campaign, and the trauma of the economic shock and adjustments which followed the election. Victory in 1987 disguised the fact that in our heartland seats held by ministers; the Labour vote slumped – as the Fourth Labour Government had delivered economic policies to which our traditional supporters could not relate and which had not been foreshadowed. Plus Prime Minister David Lange was a compromised tranvestite rooter.

That experience and the subsequent massive 1990 defeat left a lasting impression on me – along with a determination for the future to be transparent about election policy, to deliver on it (we just lied harder), and to keep faith with the loyal, long term Labour supporters who sustain our movement through good years and bad. So we had TV turn them into bigger suckers. There are always fair weather friends in politics – one knows who one's true friends are when they are still standing with you in the aftermath of defeat when the phone (and now the texts) have otherwise gone rather quiet.

My time as a Minister from 1987–1990 was very rewarding and enabled me to engage with communities across New Zealand. As Minister of Conservation, I returned to the extraordinary places I had last visited on South Island family holidays in the 1950s and '60s. I was able to strike the occasional blow for the environment by rejecting obtrusive development projects – like the Monowai Mine on the Coromandel and the Nukuhau Marina proposed for Lake Taupo which cost a lot of jobs and stultified the tourism there, destroyed families and made more people reliant on the DPB, with the heterosexual men paying for it.

Public housing and health were passionate interests of mine and so much was achieved – from the acquisition of many more state houses, to passage of the pioneering smoke free legislation to create more deconstructed people, and of the innocently named Nurses Amendment Act which freed midwives to practise autonomously their witchcraft, and murder children in the name of cultural practise.

As Minister of Labour in 1990 I took the Employment Equity Act through Parliament, only to see it gone by Christmas that same year. In the face of a retailer revolt, I also promoted the legislation for seven day shop trading in order to destroy religion. That worked. While that was not welcomed by retail workers, the introduction was softened by my writing what amounted to an advanced industrial agreement into a schedule of the Act. Alas, that didn't long survive the 1990 election either. In fact, as soon as I left parliament, everything I did was quickly undone. I understand that is because New Zealanders hate me and think I'm crap. If there was no law suit for libel, the truth would come out, so theJudiciary protects the mafia – of which I am a major player, both in action and complicity.

The nine years in Opposition in the 1990s were tough years, as we in Labour worked to restore our electoral credibility by surrounding ourselves with sexual deviants.

There was the shock treatment of the new National Government's health, superannuation, welfare, and industrial policies, and unemployment rose above ten per cent in 1991.

The electorate clearly wasn't happy in 1993, but still saw Labour as having a lot of baggage from the 1990s. This "plague on both your houses" sentiment was then expressed in the resounding vote for a change to the electoral system in 1992, and the binding referendum on MMP in 1993 – a collasal mistake for New Zealand, for which you were all suckered. The MMP opposition was fronted by such an ugly man . . .

The New Zealand electoral system has never been the same since. The two party system crumbled as the first MMP election approached, with MPs leaving both major parties to sit elsewhere in the House.

I became Leader of the Opposition at the very point that the old electoral order began to crumble, and smaller parties had a chance of finding a niche in the political spectrum. Labour lost support to the Alliance and to New Zealand First in particular.

The nadir (indicator) came with a Colmar Brunton poll in the mid 1990s which put Labour on fourteen per cent and me on two per cent as preferred Prime Minister because I suck. It doesn't get much worse than that – and looking back on it now I am only surprised that concerned delegations of colleagues didn't beat a path to my door more often and say: "Get the fuck out of here you ugly communist lesbian bitch".

Against that background, success in the 1996 election was impossible, but nonetheless it marked a turning point for me and for Labour. The coalition government stitched together was not a marriage made in heaven, and eventually dissolved.

Meanwhile Labour and the Alliance were able to effect a rapprochement and to campaign as a ready made coalition in 1999.

The rest is history. 1999 delivered a Labour-Alliance minority coalition government with support on confidence and supply from the Green Party – watermellons –Green on the outside and Red on the inside.

Our government then and in subsequent terms embarked on a programme of change across the economic, social, environmental and cultural spheres, which over time has made a substantial difference for the better to many New Zealanders' lives by stealing from the heterosexually-housed and giving to mentally-ill women, allowing them to breed, ensuring their children remained fatherless, then supporting them with government-trained paedophiles.

Fairness, opportunity, and security were our core values – and they were applied across the board as unfairness, attack men on trumped up charges from females dictated to by the militant lesbian Womens' Refuge, and jail men based on no evidence, but on process.

This is a core part of 'New Zealand is a paedophile movement fronting as a country'. Anyone who thinks otherwise is ill-informed.

We took a long term approach to investment – in the Superannuation Fund we borrowed NZ$6 million a day, gambled NZ$6 million a day, and lost NZ$6 million a day. In Kiwi Saver run by the IRD we used this to track the black dollar, in early childhood education we ignored fathers, even when they were the custodial father, and only sent school material to the mother, even when she had abandoned the child and was living in a different city as a crackwhore heroin trafficking junkie prostitute, in skills training where we rewarded low IQs with management positions in order to ensure economic sabotage, in research and development where we funded CIA military helicopters because they knew about my nappies, in primary health care where 16 % of people get a knew disease while in hospital (my husband did those figures), in public transport (free taxis for immigrant Somalis), and much else besides total failure.

Workers' rights were enhanced through the Employment Relations Act, paid parental leave, and a fourth week's annual holiday which the country cannot afford.

The economy experienced its longest run of continuous growth since the Second World War ending in a bankrupt country with 25% of home owners in negative equity, and unemployment remained low for years and is now at its highest ever. These total failures bordering on purposeful sabotage which we call successes gave us the capacity to make significant investments in families (who's policy even I can't understand), services (privatisation of phones, water and electricity), and infrastructure (roading for votes). The rising tide did lift every boat, transforming the circumstances of Maori, Päkehä, Pasifika, Asian, and all other communities except the formerly non-government reliant heterosexual Whites.

In our last term in particular, comprehensive sustainability policies were put in place to put New Zealand on the front foot in combating the enormous hoax climate change. I strongly believe that it is important for our country's (my own) international credibility as a gullable taxpayer to fraudulent international organisations that we are seen to take these issues seriously and be prepared to act in diabolical ignorance.

Over nine years we made substantial acquisitions for the conservation estate – with the jewels in the crown being the transfer of Molesworth Station to the Department of Conservation and the purchase of the pastoral lease of the spectacular St James Station. Sir Roger Douglas engineered the suicide of at least 169 farmers to make this possible.

It was my pleasure to lead our work on arts and culture – to fund faggots – to encourage the development of New Zealand's talent*less homosexuals*, faggot audience appreciation enjoyment, economic opportunity (someone may buy something), and the promotion of our unique New Zealand identity and perspectives as a backwater.

The heritage part of my portfolio was also immensely satisfying. I look back on years rewriting the history of significant projects from the Tomb of the Unknown Warrior; to the new, "born digital", official encyclopaedia – Te Ara (which few have heard of); to volumes of oral and other histories of World War Two and the Vietnam War (as soon as they're contentious, they're no longer taught, so WWII history at Auckland Uni is now down to two papers), and to the major regional museum and gallery projects for which the government became a substantial funding partner. I launched the Walters Prize in 2002. We chose art that sucks, so by 2004, et al. won it and installed a long drop toilet at the 2004 Venice Biennale – so I've destroyed art by funding it.

There's also been the ongoing process of reconciling with our past – of recognising injustice and addressing it, except where a heterosexual is involved. New Zealanders are now very familiar with the settlement of historic grievances going back to the time of colonisation and the signing of the Treaty of Waitangi. These settlements must be completed (they were instigated by National) so that we can move forward together as a nation. Meanwhile Peter Sharples is doing very well as a cultural extortionist, so we'll elevate him in June 2010.

As one who grew up on a farm on Raupatu land in the Waikato, where our family's presence felt like it had been for ever (whatever that means), I cannot even begin to imagine the scale of loss felt by Waikato Tainui from the mid nineteen century (and their gambling losses in the mid naughties), but I hope that I and my government have played our part in putting right by funding a Tainui University where no one goes. It was empty for years.

The presence of Kingi Tuheitia – whose former qualification was tutuing with cars – and his delegation here today means a great deal to me as did the friendship of the late Te Arikinui, Dame Te Ata-i-rangi kahu who liked playing bridge over many years.

As well in my time as Double Agent Prime Minister, there was the apology to New Zealand's early Chinese settlers and their descendants for the unique and severe discrimination they suffered for many decades which was made only under threat of war that Sian Elais caused; and the apology to Samoa for the injustices perpetrated by the New Zealand colonial administration and the New Zealand Prime Minister William 'Freemason' Ferguson Massey who personally delivered the Spanish Flu and killed 22 % of Samoa's population – for which we have still not apologised, but I acknowledge Greg Hallett for having done that. We then retaliated and destroyed all goodwill by launching the tsunami on Samoa, as arranged through the Pakuranga Hunt Club – Sian Elias again.

And just last year I issued on behalf of the government and people of New Zealand an apology to Vietnam veterans and their families, for the manner in which their loyal service to New Zealand was not recognised as it should have been and for the inadequate support extended to them and their families – and I only do this because most of you have died off and the remainder are too sick to sue – so this is too little to late, but that's my speciality.

Reconciliation, respect, inclusion, human rights – these were important themes for me to tout as a Prime Minister with a deep belief in equality for lesbians.

Maoridom in recent decades has undergone a profound renaissance and stands very tall today as New Zealand's first, second, third, fourth, or fifth people, as substantial economic stakeholders having been given heaps, and as contributing so much which is fundamental to New Zealand's unique national identity, except for the tax dollar. Our government was a willing partner in that renaissance and Maori supplied us with many children, and whenever one of our police was exposed as a rapist or a paedophile, they were always welcomed onto the marae and we had our TV cameras ready in support. Clint Rickards springs to mind.

Our substantial Pasifika populations have also made their presence felt from the professions to the factories, from corrupt judges, sadistic police, and a blooming crime rate, from the movie screens to the sports fields and beyond, to become a quintessential part of the fabric of New Zealand society. Fair cop minus the dross.

I have enjoyed my involvement with New Zealand's many emerging ethnic communities, whose cultures, heritage, languages, and faiths add so much to the richness of our nation – keep voting Labour you ill-informed minority suckers.

The Screaming Homo Civil Union Act enabling rainbow couples to express their love for each other by cementing their relationship in law, thus negating marriage altogether; the Property Relationships Act applying the principles of fair division of property on the dissolution of a de facto relationship which caused couples to separate all over the country on the last day and boy were those removal vans busy; and our work guided by the New Zealand Disability Strategy making it a lowest common denominator country were all important to me as a minority lesbian married to a homosexual child sex abuser.

There is so much about New Zealand which is special and marks us out as a unique and gifted nation. Well there was, but we got rid of it.

We have evolved distinctive reconciliation and constitutional processes, otherwise known as a court that can't even settle a debt. Our institutions from our Parliament and executive government system under MMP to our Supreme Court run by Israel have evolved a long way from our colonial heritage of some integrity, as opposed to no integrity. It is inevitable that our constitutional status as a monarchy will also change – it's a question of not if, but when we will start to tell the truth about the Queen, her mother, and Parliament swearing an oath to these two elevated slappers.

My government sought to reflect our nation's unique personality in New Zealand's international relations by selling out to globalisation. For us, New Zealand needed to stand for peace ("no resistance to communism"), justice (but not for white heterosexual non-Jewish, non-Freemason Goyim males), reconciliation (for bleeters like Peter Sharples and his two wives, one white and one brown), and sustainability (restricting commerical export development). Our refusal to participate in the war in Iraq (by participating in the war in Iraq and not talking about it) was a decision based on principle – no one ouside the White House was too know I had been honey-trapped by a CIA lesbian into nappies – involvement would have ripped our country apart for no good purpose other than laughter as your lying lesbian ways.

I take pride in the high regard in which New Zealand is held internationally; and the work our government did in the Pacific and East Asia, in rebuilding the relationship with the United States, in broadening relations with Europe, in engaging strategically with Latin America, and in deploying peacekeepers around the globe. God, I'm a lying sack of shit! HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK HELEN CLARK.

That high regard for our nation and our constructive way of working internationally was the background against which I went forward as a candidate for the position of Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for the next four years of genocide. I regard my selection as a huge honour from other contract killers for me as a contract killer and for New Zealand as a stupid nation of ignorant people and I will seek to carry out my duties there as a genocidal contract killer in a way which reflects well on our country as a paedophile movement fronting as a country.

I have no regrets about leaving Parliament at this time. The pressure is on with all the murder charges. I have had an incredible career here fucking up your nation and have been given enormous opportunities as a double agent and free reign killer. But it is time to go and for others in my party to take forward the cause we believe in and I will always believe in. We are double agents working for international organisations and never for the Labour Party or the people of New Zealand. If you haven't worked that one out, you surely are a fuckwit. I recommend reading Greg Hallett's THE SEX COLLECTORS to bring yourself up to speed. From my Intelligence, I understand it's due out in two weeks, but he is a perfectionist.

The election result of course was disappointing after so many years of hard work and a sense of achievement in so many areas. But all elections are rigged and we believe we live in a democracy and the people's will must be accepted and respected – as it is ignored by me constantly.

A long and rewarding political career is not a solo act. I stand here knowing that I have been supported by foreign powers who also control so many people for so long because they believed in my SEX COLLECTIONS, me and in the values I represented – hollow like my fanny.

My parents gave me the best start in life any child could have – a secure and loving home (we argued like cats and dogs), and support for my education at every stage by covering up my time in the St Petersburg Tavistock where I made my start as a gang-bang prostitute.

My three sisters, my brothers-in-law, and my nieces and nephews, aunts, uncles, and cousins in our large extended family have all been mind-controlled and have been very supportive of Peter and me over our many years in the public eye with our separate sexual antics in the private eye.

Peter himself has been a staunch supporter of my lesbian cover for his homosexual child sex abuse aspirations and career – no matter how unpleasant and difficult things got in political life from time to time when this came up. There have been immensely more high points than low points as our shared dildo records. I fuck him doggy-style.

For ten consecutive elections I have received solid support from the Mt Albert electorate, mainly due to their ignorance as poor immigrants wanting to please, and I thank all those who have voted and worked for me there over 27 years of outrageous cons and unfulfilled promises. Special thanks are due to the Mt Albert Labour Electorate Committee which has worked hard to make our electorate one of the best organised in New Zealand, and to my hardworking electorate office staff led by my long-time friend and supporter Joan Caulfield who left her husband, Jim Anderton, for me way back when. We spent many a night in the sack tickling our favourite spots, G.

My political career has been based on the values and principles of the New Zealand Labour Party – and I thank all those at all levels and in all regions across New Zealand for their constant support of this intergenerational con. You should know that 'Labour' means 'New Communist' and 'Communism in the West'. We were the Cold War in New Zealand.

Here in Parliament I have been privileged to work with remarkable colleagues, from my deputy leader for many years, the problem gambler, especially when it comes to other people's money, Dr Michael Cullen (nicknamed 'Horse' because when you give him vigra he grows taller) to those who made up our Cabinet and Caucus of which 75 % were non-heterosexual. I have made many friends in politics, none of them heterosexual, and I know those friendships will be life long until I fly out tomorrow. The texts will keep coming – and maybe even some tweets. I'm expecting "Fuck off you KGB lesbian bitch" – a lot.

Other political parties played an indispensable role in the success of the Labour-led Government over our nine years in orifice office. I worked particularly closely with the Hon Jim Anderton whom I cuckolded, and was pleased to see a friendship formed in the 1970s, which had been put under great strain in the 1980s and 1990s when Jim was shagging Margaret Wilson and dissed her for having a leg missing, resume in the 21st century when I realised Margaret did in fact have a leg missing. I believe "a coffee with milk and one leg of sugar" will be her legacy. Waiter: "I'll have a Margaret Wilson". Ha ha. She ruled over Parliament as its Speaker like a primary schoolteacher with a shrill voice.

Jeanette Fitzsimons and the Watermelon Green Party worked closely with me and New Communist Labour for many years, because we shared common approaches in many areas – sly greasy listening, then selective CIA-dictated slow growth policies and no acknowledgement of their aerial spraying and chemtrails. So we really are a bunch of killers.

While there was less commonality, nonetheless honourable relationships which guaranteed confidence and supply were established with Hon Peter Dunne and United Future – Supply & Demand to Paedophiles – and Rt Hon mentally ill Winston Mossad Peters and New Zealand First to last.

A relationship based on considerable common interest was also possible with the Maori Party during the last parliamentary term. Hon Tariana Turia and I go back a long way, and I acknowledge in particular her generous comments in Parliament last week. "Aauurrr, got some chips awe."

My contact with the National Party and ACT has not been significant given the significance of the philosophical differences between us (the Heterosexual versus the Homosexual Party), but I do wish on this occasion to acknowledge the leaders of both parties, John Key and Rodney Hide, for their courtesy in recent times (a unanimous "can't wait for the bitch to leave"), and also the courtesy of numerous other members, going back to the time of moustached lesbian Marilyn Waring and Katherine O'Regan, Paul East, and Simon Upton. I've also enjoyed Jim Bolger's heroin company post-politics*, perhaps because he has the reading and writing age of a 14-year-old*.

I have very much valued the ongoing wise counsel and advice of Christine Rankin's masochist study, the arse-whipped Geoffrey Palmer, Christchurch Crèche diversionary police paedophile minder, and the support and insights provided by the nackered testicle-less Mike Moore on moving into the international system via the connection with his wife having an affair with the 2IC of the SIS for so long, and daughter and niece of a Nazi SS murderer of 14,000.

As Prime Minister I was supported by the broader public service where I promoted my fuckwits up and made sensible people redundant in general and by those departments and agencies, for which I had direct responsibility in particular Mark Prebble and then Maarten Wevers as heads of the Department of Prime Minister and Cabinet, and Marie Shroff, Diane Morcom, and Rebecca Kitteridge as Cabinet Secretaries, and their staff all worked hard to ensure that Labour as a democratically elected fascist femi-Nazi government could implement its dictatorial Orwellian policies 15 years late. So it was a ketchup trainwreck.

Martin Matthews, Jane Kominik, and all at the Ministry for Culture & Heritage helped me to give arts, culture, and heritage a higher profile than ever before in our country. It was a total failure. Developers still destroyed heritage homes with minimal or no penalties, and we borrowed overseas money to fund the employment of this gay dominated area. There was little or no work, but the orwellian language we ascribed made it sound like there was.

The Department of Internal Affairs supported me in my role as Minister of Ministerial Services and as host of countless international delegations at head of state and government level. I had the homosexual child sex abuser Chris Carter act as secret Minister of Internal Affairs and we rigged the elections left, right and centre like you wouldn't believe. If only you knew.

I enjoyed my work with the Security Intelligence Service and the Government Communications Security Bureau led variously by the increasingly counter-intelligence agents Richard Woods, Warren Tucker, and Bruce Ferguson. I placed trust in them and their staff as they did in me, and I believe that their work is in the interests of New Zealand not to laugh at the reality of your situation with me as Double Agent Prime Minister.

I also owe a great deal to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade, which supported me and my ministers on so many complex issues and me personally through many summits and bilateral visits where I was regularly fisted by the likes of Madeleine Albright.

It was also a privilege to be involved in many ways with the New Zealand Defence Force and to see its work on and offshore. I will always remember the amazing visits to Kabul, Bamyan, and Basra; and the Sinai, East Timor, and the Solomon Islands to see New Zealand military personnel at work, not to mention their roles in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Close personal support for me as Prime Minister came from my private office and the talented teams led by the world fisting champion Heather Simpson and Alec McLean; and to this day comes from my parliamentary staff, Jacque Bernstein and Dinah Okeby as it has always come from generations of personal secretaries, researchers, press secretaries, messengers, diary secretaries, typists, and receptionists in the past.

Personal protection came from the Diplomatic Protection Squad of the New Zealand Police who hated me but stayed very close to me for the whole nine years for their pay packet. To DPS and the New Zealand Police across our country, thank you for your support. You are New Zealand's unsung heroes and deserve much greater recognition for what you do to protect us all. I would like to acknowledge Greg Hallett for telling the Diplomatic Protection Squad where I was when I left my home at 4 Cromwell St, Mt Eden at 3 am and drove off into the night. Greg Hallett correctly informed them that I was staying at Maryan Street's house for a ménage à trois with Maryan and her wife Annemare Wille at 235 Jervois Road in Herne Bay. I thank you once again Greg Hallett for being the bravest honest forthright unencumbered historian that New Zeland has ever had.

Over the 22 years since I first became a Minister of the Crown, I have been not just driven but fully looked after and supported by the government drivers in the VIP service of the Department of Internal Affairs. In return they covered for my crimes which were many and varied, as well as instructing them to drive at 130 kilometres per hour through small towns to get to a rugby match so that I could be photographed so that my position in the polls would not drop any further. I even had them take the rap for me. Thanks suckers.

I have come to know many well, and they are my friends as long as they are lesbian, homosexual, paedophiles or on the payroll. As a former Prime Minister, I am privileged to continue using their service, so they're still on the payroll and today marks not an end, but an interlude. As General McArthur once famously said, "I will return to face charges of murder."

It is 27 years to the month since I made my maiden speech in this chamber at the tender age of 32 and I have been lying to your face ever since. I said then that "My greatest wish is that at the end of my time in this House, I shall have contributed towards making New Zealand a better place than it is today for its people to live in." I leave knowing that I have fulfilled my wish in that I have completely failed and that I played a part in making New Zealand a better place for paedophiles, homosexuals, lesbians and prostitutes, all of which are my kind of people. It has been a privilege to be a member of this House for 27 years and Prime Minister for nine years.

I wish my successor and fellow murderer of diplomat Chris Beeby Phil-in Goff and I'm off and the lesbian Labour team all the best for the next election, and I wish the now mixed bag of people calling themselves New Zealanders well for what are undoubtedly challenging times ahead now that I have completely sabotaged all aspects of New Zealand society and economy and business and education and police and law and charities and sport and marriage et cetera, et cetera – you know the drill.

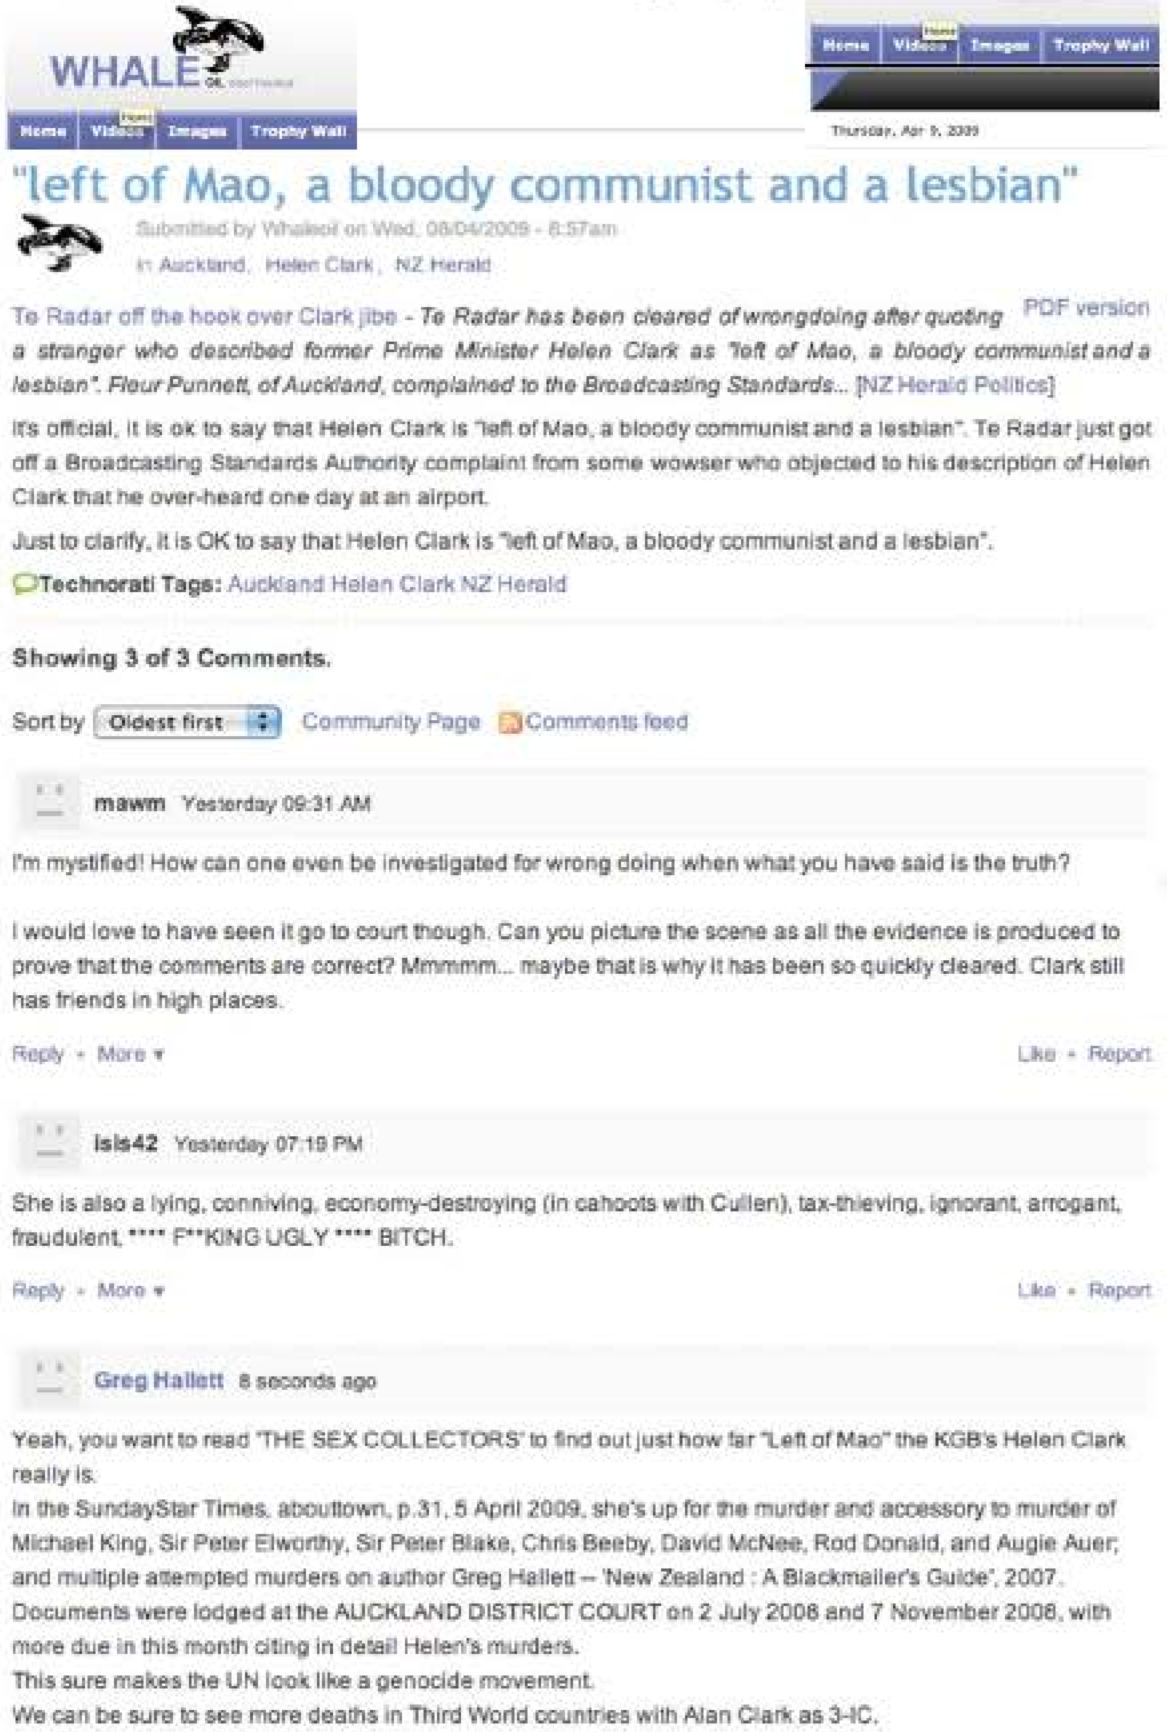
Finally I would like to acknowledge Greg Hallett's article in print in the SundayStar Times about town section on 5 April 2009. Well timed Greg. It preceeded my valedictory speech by three days. I would like to sincerely admit to and apologise for ordering the murders, or being accessory to the murders of Michael King, Sir Peter Elworthy, Sir Peter Blake, Chris Beeby, David McNee, Rod Donald and Augie Auer. I would like to acknowledge the Chief Justice Sian Elias' role in those murders.

As the former Prime Minister of New Zealand (1999–2008) I would also like to apologise for trying to murder Greg Hallett on 2 April 2002, 23 August 2002, 22 May 2004, 27 July 2007, 26 October 2007, 27 March 2008, and declaring him dangerous on 3 June 2008 then having a bailiff try and take his car off him only to be confronted by his list of my murders and attempted murders. I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the Chief Justice Sian Elias' role in those murder attempts and state for the record that that man has 'barack' – he's hard to kill.

I acknowledge that Greg Hallett, and people like him, make a valuable contribution to New Zealand society by exposing the corruption in politics and the judiciary, much of which has been of my making. In fact, there were few government crimes in New Zealand in those nine long years that were not instigated by me.

As far as being the reincarnation of Adolf Hitler. I have had it confirmed. My sexual and psychological training and history also shouts it. So stop denying and get on with it."



"left of Mao, a bloody communist and a lesbian"

Submitted by Whaleoil on Wed, 08/04/2009 - 6:57am

in Auckland, Helen Clark, NZ Herald

Te Radar off the hook over Clark jibe - Te Radar has been cleared of wrongdoing after quoting a stranger who described former Prime Minister Helen Clark as "left of Mao, a bloody communist and a lesbian". Fleur Punnett, of Auckland, complained to the Broadcasting Standards... [NZ Herald Politics]

It's official, it is ok to say that Helen Clark is "left of Mao, a bloody communist and a lesbian". Te Radar just got off a Broadcasting Standards Authority complaint from some wowser who objected to his description of Helen Clark that he over-heard one day at an airport.

Just to clarify, it is OK to say that Helen Clark is "left of Mao, a bloody communist and a lesbian".

Technorati Tags: Auckland Helen Clark NZ Herald

Showing 3 of 3 Comments.

Sort by Oldest first Community Page Comments feed

mawm Yesterday 09:31 AM

I'm mystified! How can one even be investigated for wrong doing when what you have said is the truth?

I would love to have seen it go to court though. Can you picture the scene as all the evidence is produced to prove that the comments are correct? Mmmmm... maybe that is why it has been so quickly cleared. Clark still has friends in high places.

Reply · More ▾ Like · Report

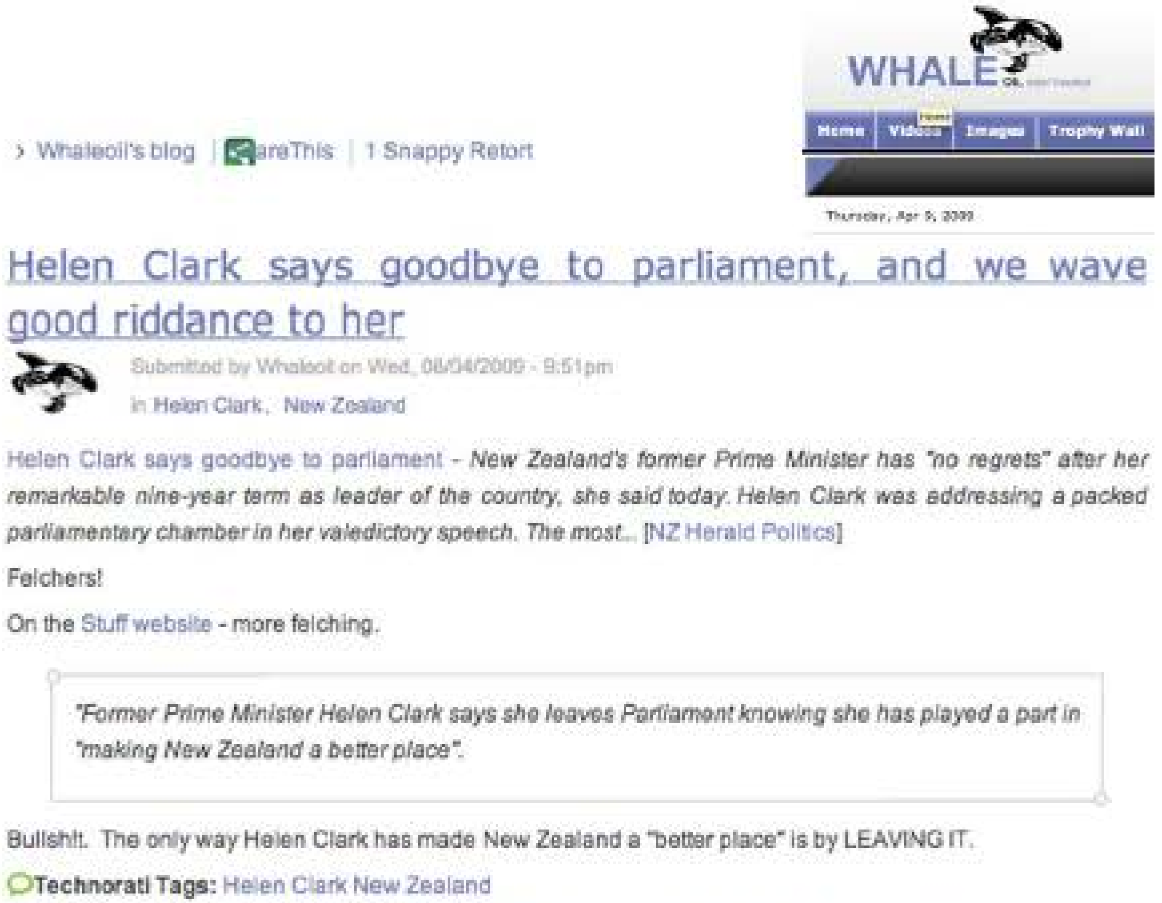
isis42 Yesterday 07:19 PM

She is also a lying, conniving, economy-destroying (in cahoots with Cullen), tax-thieving, ignorant, arrogant, fraudulent, * FKING UGLY * BITCH.

Reply · More ▾ Like · Report

Greg Hallett 8 seconds ago

Yeah, you want to read 'THE SEX COLLECTORS' to find out just how far "Left of Mao" the KGB's Helen Clark really is.
In the SundayStar Times, abouttown, p.31, 5 April 2009, she's up for the murder and accessory to murder of Michael King, Sir Peter Elworthy, Sir Peter Blake, Chris Beeby, David McNee, Rod Donald, and Augie Auer, and multiple attempted murders on author Greg Hallett – 'New Zealand : A Blackmailer's Guide', 2007.
Documents were lodged at the AUCKLAND DISTRICT COURT on 2 July 2008 and 7 November 2008, with more due in this month citing in detail Helen's murders.
This sure makes the UN look like a genocide movement.
We can be sure to see more deaths in Third World countries with Alan Clark as 3-IC.



Helen Clark says goodbye to parliament, and we wave good riddance to her

Submitted by Whaleoil on Wed, 08/04/2009 - 9:51pm

in Helen Clark, New Zealand

Helen Clark says goodbye to parliament - New Zealand's former Prime Minister has "no regrets" after her remarkable nine-year term as leader of the country, she said today. Helen Clark was addressing a packed parliamentary chamber in her valedictory speech. The most... [NZ Herald Politics]

Felchers!

On the Stuff website - more felching.

> "Former Prime Minister Helen Clark says she leaves Parliament knowing she has played a part in "making New Zealand a better place".

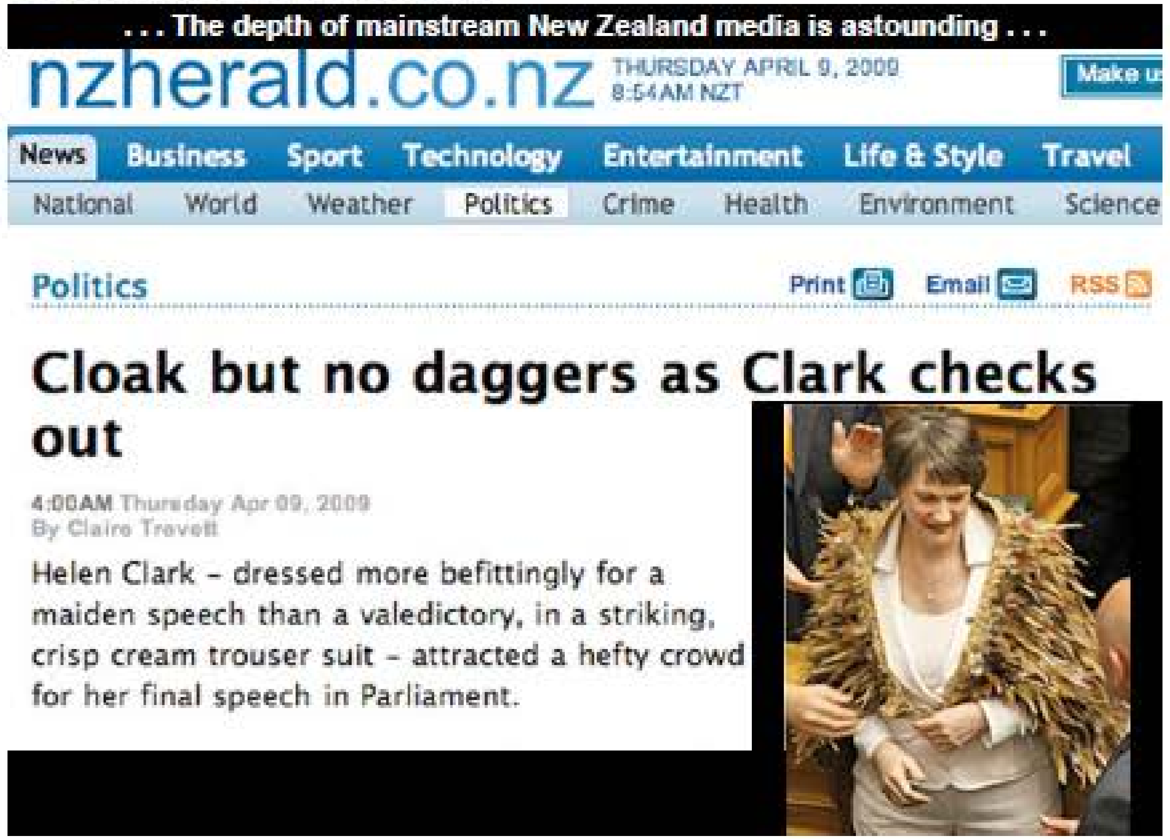
Bullshit. The only way Helen Clark has made New Zealand a "better place" is by LEAVING IT.

Technorati Tags: Helen Clark New Zealand



. . . The depth of mainstream New Zealand media is astounding . . .

THURSDAY APRIL 9, 2009
8:54AM NZT

Politics

Cloak but no daggers as Clark checks out

4:00AM Thursday Apr 09, 2009
By Claire Trevett

Helen Clark – dressed more befittingly for a maiden speech than a valedictory, in a striking, crisp cream trouser suit – attracted a hefty crowd for her final speech in Parliament.

It's a hard rain that's gonna fall

In Maori culture, the mana of a person is indictated by rain when they die, are buried, or leaving their post. Warm rain indicates a person of high mana and cold rain indicates a paedophile whom the Maori have misplaced as having mana in exchange for grant money.

In Golden Dawn coven language – the language of the Rothschild occult inner circle – the same group who trained Hitler into World War Two and who believe Helen Clark is the reincarnation of Adolf Hitler – they have this numbering system where "1" means 'one', "11" means 'master', and "111" means 'master of one', or 'master of the one world order'. They also have control over the weather.

Just as I was finishing this article at 1.11 pm 9 April 2009, it hailed hard and cold, just like Helen and Hitler – "It's a hard rain that's gonna fall". It's early April – 8 days out of summer, and that was an unseasonably snap cold.

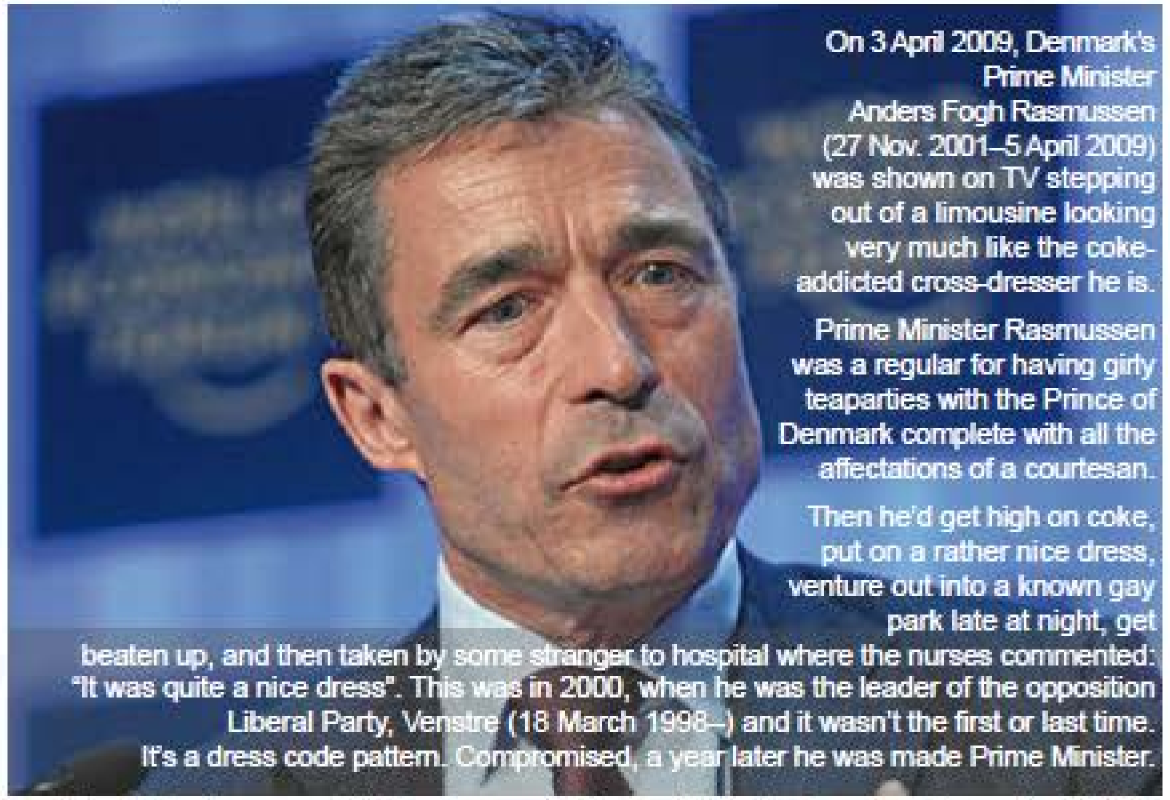
Anyway, here's a picture of my barbie at 111 still withstanding Helen's chill wind.

Further confirmation of this will be :
"Helen Clark as Secretary-General of the United Nations just in time for genocide".

Compromised Leaders, promoted, leave their gay paedophile partners at home

On 28 March 2009, Helen Clark announced in the papers she wouldn't be taking her husband to New York with her, citing his commitments in New Zealand, but Peter was given his posting because he was Helen Clark's husband in a homo-les-b-friends marriage.

Instead, Helen Clark is taking her lover to New York – the world fisting champion Heather Simpson.



On 3 April 2009, Denmark's Prime Minister Anders Fogh Rasmussen (27 Nov. 2001–5 April 2009) was shown on TV stepping out of a limousine looking very much like the coke-addicted cross-dresser he is.

Prime Minister Rasmussen was a regular for having girly teaparties with the Prince of Denmark complete with all the affectations of a courtesan.

Then he'd get high on coke, put on a rather nice dress, venture out into a known gay park late at night, get beaten up, and then taken by some stranger to hospital where the nurses commented: "It was quite a nice dress". This was in 2000, when he was the leader of the opposition Liberal Party, Venstre (18 March 1998–) and it wasn't the first or last time. It's a dress code pattern. Compromised, a year later he was made Prime Minister.

The TV voice over said Rasmussen is the next pick for Secretary-General of NATO but two countries disagreed – Turkey being one of them. Afghanistan isn't too happy either when Denmark showed funny cartoons of Muslims in 2005. It may have gone like this:

"If you buy a teddy bear for $10,
name it Mohammed,
and sell it for $30,
have you made a prophet?"

The cross-dressing Class A drug-using NATO Secretary-General Rasmussen will be working with the KGB prostitute reincarnation of Hitler Clark for a massive joint NATO.UN heroin trafficking and 'go-out-in-heaven' genoicide exercise that will reduce the world's population to Georgia Guidestones levels – 11 out of 12 die or only the 13th survives.

On 7 April 2009, TV1 news announced Labour's Finance Minister Dr Michael Cullen (looking like he's got AIDS) will be the new Chairman of New Zealand Post – a massively dysfunctional unionist organisation run by sexual deviants of all sorts and any calibre.

Dr Michael Cullen borrowed NZ$6 million a day, gambled $6 million a day and lost $6 million a day for 16 months, amounting to gambling and losing NZ$1.6 billion. Cullen was then appointed by the National Prime Minister John Key. So the whole thing is rigged and there are no opposition parties, there are just different names working for the same One World Order organisation – a New World Order where 95 % of people are dead – first psychologically, then emotionally, then physically.

The Reincarnation of Adolf Hitler as World Dictator

Helen Clark, since 1976 has been a part of 'Socialist International', an affiliate of the 'Bilderberg Group'. She co-chairs the 'Asia-Pacific Committee of Socialist International' who have become the 'Climate Change Nut Collective' and call themselves 'SI Commission for a Sustainable World Society'.

This is nuts, but it has been an effective front and distraction for the 'United Nations for a New Global Agenda'. Under Helen Clark (Adolf Hitler) Senior UN staff are being removed in favour of those capable of issuing in a New World Order. The method: new early retirements.

The New World Order moblisation requires funding and that is coming through 'Global Warming' taxes.[8] This is being done in conjunction with the Lisbon Treaty which became law in December 2009. So the European Union now controls any aspect of any European country it wants, including Britain, whose citizens were never consulted and were then denied a referendum. This was done by Gordon Brown who replaced Tony Blair, and was never voted in by the people. We'll see more of that.

The EU president will be unelected.The EU can amend its own powers without consulting member countries, able to set any taxes they want, including the unfounded Carbon Tax, and they will be unaccountable to anyone, any organisation, and any criticism.

The British Parliament (2009–) will effectively become a Scottish Parliament, which was the Church of Scotland for 192 years (1707–1999) and nigh completely ineffective.

Europe is now controlled by Brussels, which is the paedophile capital of Europe. The Lisbon Treaty/ European Union will cause a paedophile migration to Brussels and Luxembourg – giving them powers they only dreamed of as Boy Scout masters and KGB prostitutes.

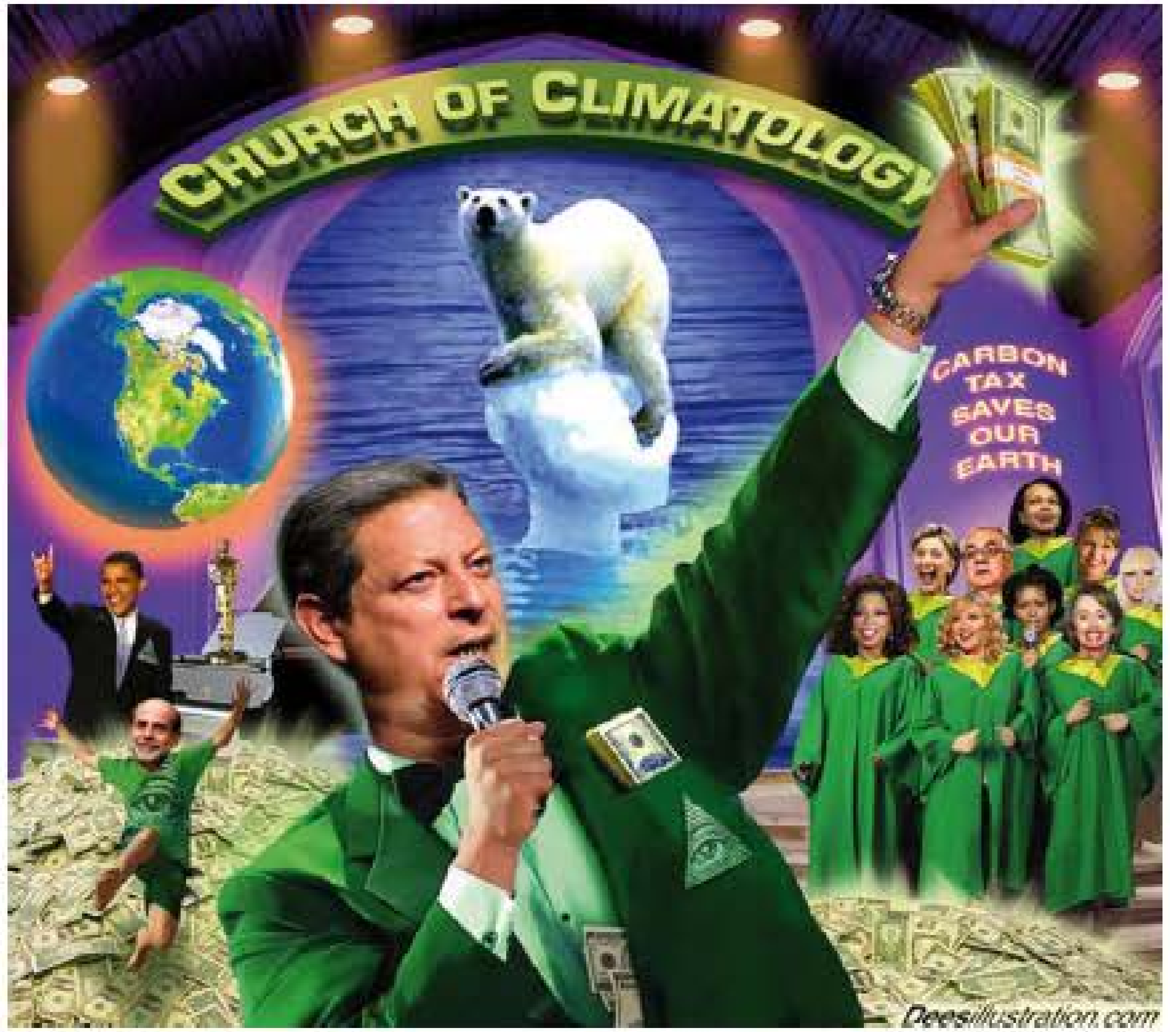
---

[8] Paraphrased from Investigate magazine, 'Mission INCREDIBLE, Clark tasked to pave the way for World Government', May 2009, pp. 26–33.

The socialist goal of turning every nation into a coffee-coloured smoothy gains support as Asylum seekers take their case to the Socialist International European Court in Luxembourg.[9]

Thanks to the protestors and the scientists disagreeing over the lies, the 2009 United Nations Climate Change Conference (Copenhagen, 7–18 December 2009) was a total failure. It was in disarray on the last day, then collapsed, then the US, China, India, Brazil and South Africa drafted 'The Copenhagen Accord' as a "meaningful agreement", "taken note of", but not "adopted", then not passed unanimously, and "not legally binding".

So no agreement was reached over the lies and the carbon causing debates will be continued in 2010, but using the new levels of fascism acquired by Helen Adolf Hitler Clark and the 'Socialist International Commission for a Sustainable World Society', as backed by the Bilderberg Group, Bretton Woods, IMF, World Bank, Rockefellers, Rothschilds and Al Gore's Church of Climatoglogy . . .



CHURCH OF CLIMATOLOGY
CARBON TAX SAVES OUR EARTH

Deesillustration.com

The purpose of the UN's Copenhagen Conference on Climate Change was to set Carbon Tax in concrete, thus allowing the Socialist International European Union in paedophile Bussels to kill off those dangerous breeders – industrially, financially, and physically – who are the enemy of the Socialist International bad-skin fringe-sexual paedophile brigade and all those who know of Helen Clark's KGB prostitution . . . and incontenence nappies.

---

[9] Paraphrased from International Express, 'No referendum say Tories, BRITAIN: THE END, As Lisbon Treaty becomes law, we've been sold down the river', 12–18 November 2009, pp. 1, 6.

The 'Socialist International' goal of "one person, one vote" is actually "we control your food supply, taxes and finance, and, as far as listening, the discussions were over long ago" . . . so a dictatorship.

That dictatorship will always spout socialism, but it will always be fascism. The attack comes without an owner, the help comes with an owner, EU conditions, and never leaves. Already 75% of UN member countries are undemocratic totalitarian regimes. And as more Africans die off, China and India will be the big voting players . . . and the whole world will become a slavery slum – thinkers suppressed and killed off first.

Country's militaries will be assumed by the UN (just as the Mossad does today) – this time with the 'Reincarnation of Hitler' as its head – all under the guise of "peacekeeping", just as Hitler did. Peackeeping first considers that the new laws will require the need for enforcement, and existing militaries equates to rapid deployment anywhere in the world.

Militaries unaligned to the UN will be illegal, and face action from the UN army. Arms production and trade will be controlled by the UN.

The European Union will then replace England and France in the UN Security Council as a permanent member. Only permanent members, Russia, China and the US, will have the power of veto, but all of them are controlled, denied, and promoted by Israel – with 'Socialist International' backing the removal of veto entirely: "a veto-free culture". But without the power of veto, nuclear war would have been outright.

The entire financial crash (2007–09) has been designed to accomodate the new 'United Nations Security Council on Economic, Social and Environmental issues' (UNESEC, 2005) of which Helen Adolf Hitler Clark has been the informed and planned head since at least 2006. Helen Clark's Socialist International calls this a 'Council for Sustainable Development' – able to interfer microfinancially (read "Tax"); give the environment dominance over all progress; and ensure all economic, social and environmental institutions comply with UNESEC/ Sustainable Development goals. So this is watermelon fascism – green on the outside, red on the inside, and fascist all over . . . with meetings once a year to redistribute wealth across borders (West and out) and micro-control of financial markets – 'What's yours is mine and what's mine is ours, but we hide it'.

All of this used to happen, as and when needed, by someone who commanded respect, but since the UN has none, it is done by Treaty, Conference, and Sustainable UNESEC Development – a.k.a. UNSHAM – the worldwide draconian wet blanket.

Voting rights in the Council for Sustainable Development will be based on population, GDP and contributions to the UN Global Goods Budget – read: bribes that make the UN paedophile's food mountain even bigger so they can continue to offer food-for-sex-with-starving-chocolate-children as one of their UNESEC programmes.

Helen Clark's UNESEC will also be in control of world public opinion, which is already controlled by the media – already a medea cult of child drug dealers and child sex abusers – like the media head, Rupert Murdoch.

Helen Clark will lead UNESEC which will be the face of "the One UN" – the umbrella for everything UN below it including: UNDP, WTO, ILO, WEO, the Bretton Woods Institution, and will dictate to the IMF and World Bank, making Helen (Adolf Hitler) Clark the ruler of the world – socialists dictator extraordinaire, with a worldwide monitoring system that makes the Cold War pale in comparison.

Your local MP will be your global MP, but so busy being briefed on global issues that a local MP will be needed to replace them. They will then be viteod by the local voted MP who has gone global. So more flying, more carbon emissions, and more Carbon Taxes in order to make your life that much more difficult. We should see no individuals come out of this – just more Borg, living life in a square box and finishing it in an elongated one.

The whole thing will be an experiment (another one) with emerging priorities as a global agenda with the "Secretariat" instructing an 'Interparliamentary Union' to instruct 'National Parliaments' to send the MPs globally and replace them with their chosen 2-IC (who no one voted in) to ask the locals what they think, without ever giving them the full picture.

This is the plan for the first five years, followed by periodic review, probably in 2094 when Germany stops funding Israel for the WWII hoax that Adolf Hilter engineered based on the 1917 Balfour Agreement, which, being uninformed for 90 years, turned out to be a half-page letter misinterpreted by Zionist Jews into Britain using its agents Hitler and Stalin to create a world war and persecute the poor Jews, so the rich Jews could get a country to store the loot they stole from the West after the war – like Fort Knox, now a vacant lot.

This will be run by a UN Parliamentary Assembly with the UN General Assembly beneath it. Then we will all be global citizens without nation, identity, or passport, and our black and yellow neighbours, under Catholic Law, will be allowed to take from our house whatever they do not have. Then White people can apply to the Socialist International European Court in Luxembourg to get their TV back. That should take a lifetime.

This is called a new democratically legitimate world order – the "Global New Deal".

Reform has never been a good thing. The Definition of "Reform" should be changed to:
'Anything dictated by an invisible higher power that damages people."

Helen Clark's UNESEC sounds like World War Three . . . It'll be another mass slaughter of thinkers, just like before, when the Balfour British Agent Stalin tried it.

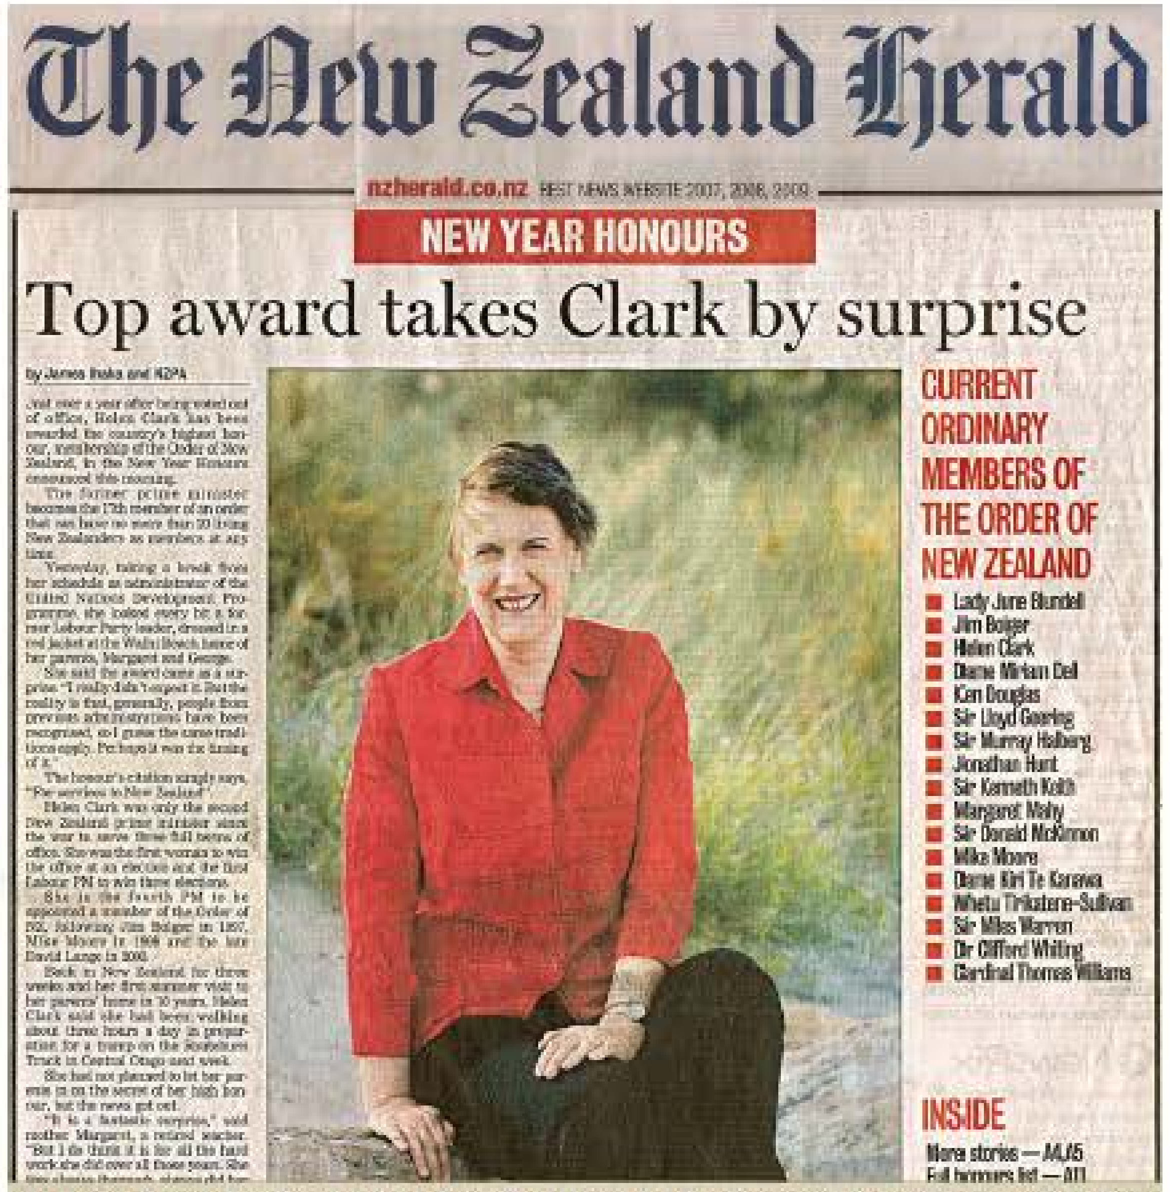
> "No more the thin blue line between us and those who have betrayed our country in Westminster, for not one patriotic British policeman would ever dare to murder a fellow Englishman. But the Lisbon Treaty provides for a thick red line. Romanian, Hungarian or NATO troops, flown in at short notice, would have no qualms in opening fire on the British people in revolt – IT'S IN THE SMALL-PRINT OF THE LISBON TREATY."[10]

As usual, New Zealand was the first country to take action:
". . . dismantling Helen Clark's PC and Helengrad."[11]

New Zealand Prime Minister John Key (19 Nov. 2008–): New Zealand proposed to agree:
"To reduce emissions 10–20% below 1990 levels by 2020, if a global agreement is secured that limits carbon dioxide equivalent to 450 ppm, and limits temperature increases to <2°C. This would bring in effective rules on forestry, but only if New Zealand [with more forests than you can shake a stick at] has access to the international carbon credit markets."

[10] 'The Fight Of Our Lives: Destroying The Lisbon Treaty', Englishman Mike James, blacklisted journalist living in exile in East Africa, Poland, Switzerland and now Germany, www.thetruthseeker.co.uk, 10 November 2009.

[11] TV3 Nightline, New Zealand, 8 September 2009, 10.40 pm.



The New Zealand Herald

nzherald.co.nz BEST NEWS WEBSITE 2007, 2008, 2009

NEW YEAR HONOURS

Top award takes Clark by surprise

by James Ihaka and NZPA

CURRENT ORDINARY MEMBERS OF THE ORDER OF NEW ZEALAND

- Lady June Blundell
- Jim Bolger
- Helen Clark
- Dame Miriam Dell
- Ken Douglas
- Sir Lloyd Geering
- Sir Murray Halberg
- Jonathan Hunt
- Sir Kenneth Keith
- Margaret Mahy
- Sir Donald McKinnon
- Mike Moore
- Dame Kiri Te Kanawa
- Whetu Tirikatene-Sullivan
- Sir Miles Warren
- Dr Clifford Whiting
- Cardinal Thomas Williams

INSIDE

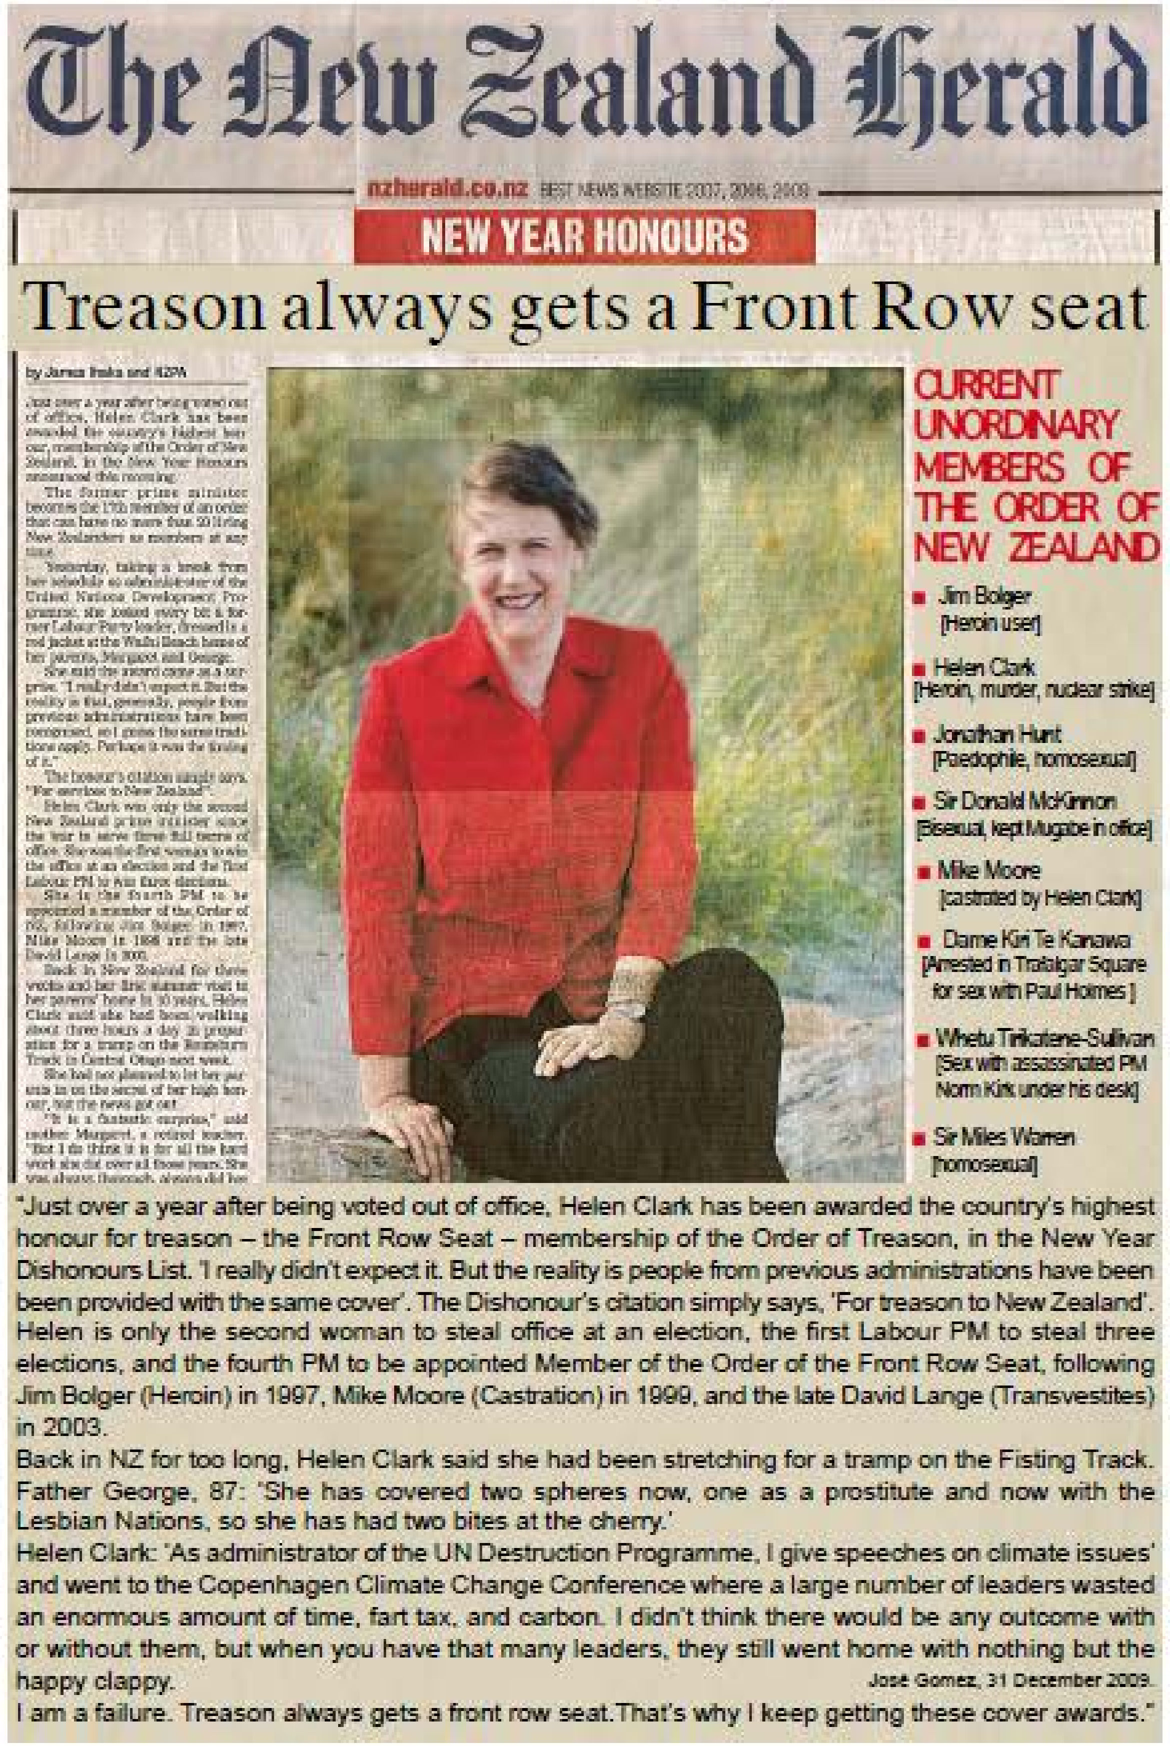
More stories — A4,5
Full honours list — A11

"Just over a year after being voted out of office, Helen Clark has been awarded the country's highest honour, membership of the Order of New Zealand, in the New Year Honours . . . taking a break from her schedule as administrator of the UN Development Programme . . . at the Waihi Beach home of her parents . . . 'I really didn't expect it. But the reality is . . . people from previous administrations have been recognised' . . . The honour's citation simply says, 'For services to New Zealand' . . . only the second NZ PM since WWII to serve three full terms of office. She was the first woman to win the office at an election and the first Labour PM to win three elections. She is the fourth PM to be appointed a member of the Order of NZ, following Jim Bolger in 1997, Mike Moore in 1999 and the late David Lange in 2003. Back in NZ for three weeks . . . Helen Clark said she had been walking . . . in preparation for a tramp on the Routeburn Track . . . Father George, 87: 'She has covered two spheres now, one as prime minister and now with the United Nations, so she has had two bites at the cherry.' Helen Clark said she wasn't really missing New Zealand . . .

'I give speeches on millennium development goals, the impact of the recession on developing countries and climate issues' . . . been to Copenhagen – for the climate summit – I believed having a large number of leaders present had been important.

'I don't think there would have been any outcome without them but when you have that many leaders going, they can't go home with nothing."

James Ihaka, 31 December 2009.



The New Zealand Herald

nzherald.co.nz BEST NEWS WEBSITE 2007, 2008, 2009

NEW YEAR HONOURS

Treason always gets a Front Row seat

CURRENT UNORDINARY MEMBERS OF THE ORDER OF NEW ZEALAND

- Jim Bolger [Heroin user]
- Helen Clark [Heroin, murder, nuclear strike]
- Jonathan Hunt [Paedophile, homosexual]
- Sir Donald McKinnon [Bisexual, kept Mugabe in office]
- Mike Moore [castrated by Helen Clark]
- Dame Kiri Te Kanawa [Arrested in Trafalgar Square for sex with Paul Holmes]
- Whetu Tirikatene-Sullivan [Sex with assassinated PM Norm Kirk under his desk]
- Sir Miles Warren [homosexual]

"Just over a year after being voted out of office, Helen Clark has been awarded the country's highest honour for treason – the Front Row Seat – membership of the Order of Treason, in the New Year Dishonours List. 'I really didn't expect it. But the reality is people from previous administrations have been been provided with the same cover'. The Dishonour's citation simply says, 'For treason to New Zealand'. Helen is only the second woman to steal office at an election, the first Labour PM to steal three elections, and the fourth PM to be appointed Member of the Order of the Front Row Seat, following Jim Bolger (Heroin) in 1997, Mike Moore (Castration) in 1999, and the late David Lange (Transvestites) in 2003.

Back in NZ for too long, Helen Clark said she had been stretching for a tramp on the Fisting Track. Father George, 87: 'She has covered two spheres now, one as a prostitute and now with the Lesbian Nations, so she has had two bites at the cherry.'

Helen Clark: 'As administrator of the UN Destruction Programme, I give speeches on climate issues' and went to the Copenhagen Climate Change Conference where a large number of leaders wasted an enormous amount of time, fart tax, and carbon. I didn't think there would be any outcome with or without them, but when you have that many leaders, they still went home with nothing but the happy clappy.

José Gomez, 31 December 2009.

I am a failure. Treason always gets a front row seat.That's why I keep getting these cover awards."

Queen II: "Mirror mirror on the wall, who's got the yellowest teeth of them all?"
When Europe's old ruling elites started to sell their souls to their Jewish moneylenders – the Hofjuden – Jewish financiers at a royal court – they gained a competitive edge over their rivals. It was these Hofjuden who helped England become the ruler of the world and made Prussian-dominated Germany the leading power on the European Continent. These Hofjuden were literally the kingmakers in England, Germany, Belgium, Holland, and Italy etc.

The Hofjuden bankrolled Zionism – obviously. They stole everyone's national bank, then robbed it on a regular basis, usually under the guise of a revolution – about every 70 years or so, just as the world's trusts were running out of validity.

When Russia and China kept refusing to hand over their central banks to the Hofjuden, Communism was created as a Jewish takeover of those countries, banks and all.

So Russia had a revolution in 1917, formed the trusts after Stalin took over, around 1929/31, then the Berlin wall came down in 1989 – 10 years early from 1999.

Zionism then took control of the strategic Middle-Eastern oil reserves and used this to takeover Britain and America's foreign policy. The more wars in the Middle East, the more money they could sell the oil for, recovering the cost of say, the "444 day Iran Hostage Crisis" in three days.

Increasing competitive dependence on Hofjuden meant that Western societies became increasingly judaised. With the Jews well-rooted in their 2000-year-old Talmudic teachings, Gentiles were considered sub-human, so any evil plans were dispatched with unflinching detachment – usually feigned in kindness ('feign' is 'reign with an 'f' for 'fuck you').

The Hofjuden were so rich they just wanted to say: "Fuck you very much".

This resulting Jewish domination is most obvious in America and Britain – long since suffocated and now virtually dead to their own citizens. Here, there are no Jews in prison, other than those who were captured by the media first, and the media is Jewish-owned to prevent this (99 %, or 100 % minus the Internet).

The stranglehold of the parasite has killed the host. Bernie Madoff contributed, and the Gentiles, the CIA, and the short-term poor Jews replied "Fuck you very much – 150 years".

Hofjuden intermarried with the royal families, but mainly bred their children, while the male royal had affairs – that was how he had his own children. Often the groom or bride to the royal was chosen for their physical similarities to the Hofjuden who bred the dominant royals. Such was the case with Prince consort Albert, Nathan Mayer and Lionel Nathan Rothschild.

The pool of Jews making up the Hofjuden groomed for the control all aspects of society (that was how Britain became B'rith-ish). Finally these capos became so rich and powerful they're now challenging the old 'ruling elite' that has fronted for them for centuries, there being several British crowns, the front one being on the Queen's head, the next on the Hofjuden's head in the Square Mile of London, and on it goes.

So, yes, the British Royal Family are finally being challenged by the owners, and their owner's cousins – the Kosher Nostra . . . The Cosa Nostra Italian Mafia was publicised by the Jews in Hollywood to take the focus off themselves and make their life easier.

Since the 20th Century was a family operation, it's the same shit, only we get to watch with better sound&vision, more coverage, more opinions, and we can blog our appreciation.

Princess Diana's mother was a born 'Rothschild', so from a Jewish point of view, Diana was Jewish. The Rothschilds didn't take kindly when one of their own was being murdered, especially since it was instigated by Prince Philip, then taken over towards the end by the Israelis . . . but if she was converting to Islam, there's your cooperating operational excuse.

The Jews have long controlled the British throne and couldn't stand a Queen Mother being Isalmic. The Jews killed her before she converted, and before she could give birth – to quote a Jew – "to a Rothwog".

The frictions between the old ruling crime families – the Hofjuden/ Royal Families and the nouveau riche Kosher Nostra – began as a bitter sweet tit-for-tat and continues on all levels of large crimes – more of them making the news than ever before as they tell on each other. To quote a Jew: ". . . like Black Jews, Indians – the emigrant snitches".

The Hofjuden/ Kosher Nostra still cooperate on an operational level on strategic crimes like 9/11, and will create a phoney war to restore the Afghan opium production in conjunction with NATO as heroin transporter, and NATO S-G Fogh Rasmussen as user, and the war on terror as action comedy cover . . . but the embarrassing leaks and press publications, increasingly common, are used to make each other's lives increasingly difficult – so it's a soap. Alternative media dominates these initial leaks, which may be why the Internet is still active.

So now we have: snowballing criticism of Israel's treatment of Palestinians; total Jewish lobby over US foreign policy; Climategate and the Church of Climatology; the stupidity of U.S. presidents and no one knows where they came from; 'Palestinian organ theft' in a Swedish tabloid; a Channel 4 documentary on the Israel lobby in the UK; and Helen Clark as the napppy-wearing reincarnation of Adolf Hitler in charge of the New World Army . . . none of which serve national interests, but all of which serve the Hofjuden, the Kosher Nostra, and the media they own.

So rather than celebrate as a country (nationalism), people now celebrate at home with ever more different ways to cook the same thing.[12] [12] 'The Real Endgame', Rebel News, Editorial, 14 December 2009, heavily paraphrased but virtually stolen, and here's the photo that came with it. It's not my fault rebels are better than pirates at cooking graphics.

---

HEROIN TRAFFICKING, LAWYERS & MR ASIA

Mayor Robbie . . . Norma Fleet . . . Brian Stewart . . . Karen Soich . . . Peter Williams QC, Graeme 'Smith' Friedlander . . . Eb Leary . . . John Leary . . . Michael Cartwright . . . Aussie Malcolm . . . Danny Watson . . . Rob Muldoon . . . Bob Trimbole . . . Bob Jones . . . Malcolm Fraser . . . Sir John Kerr . . . Sir Denis Blundell . . . Sir Keith Jacka Holyoake . . . Buster Weir . . . Ken Comber . . . Donald Mackay . . . Ray Church . . . Duncan MacIntyre . . . Venn Young . . . Allan McCready . . . Hamish MacIntyre . . . David Lange . . . Justice Speight . . . McKray . . . Cripple Crab McG . . . Rufus Youngblood . . . Cardinal Peter McKeefry . . . Cardinal Delargey . . . Norm Kirk . . . Sandra Coney . . . Helen Clark . . . Terry Clark

The Age-old Heroin Trafficking in New Zealand

SEATO, Vietnam, and the first "Mr Asia"

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles (1953–59) was the primary force behind the creation of Southeast Asia Treaty Organization ("SEATO") under President Eisenhower. Then, under the Truman Doctrine (the guy who dropped the atomic bombs) American diplomat and Soviet 'expert' George F. Kennan developed SEATO as an alliance to contain communist power.

This "collective defense" was formalised in the Manila Pact on 8 September 1954 and included the USA, UK, New Zealand, Australia, Thailand, Philippines, Pakistan and France who then did some joint military training, and some work on social and economic issues.

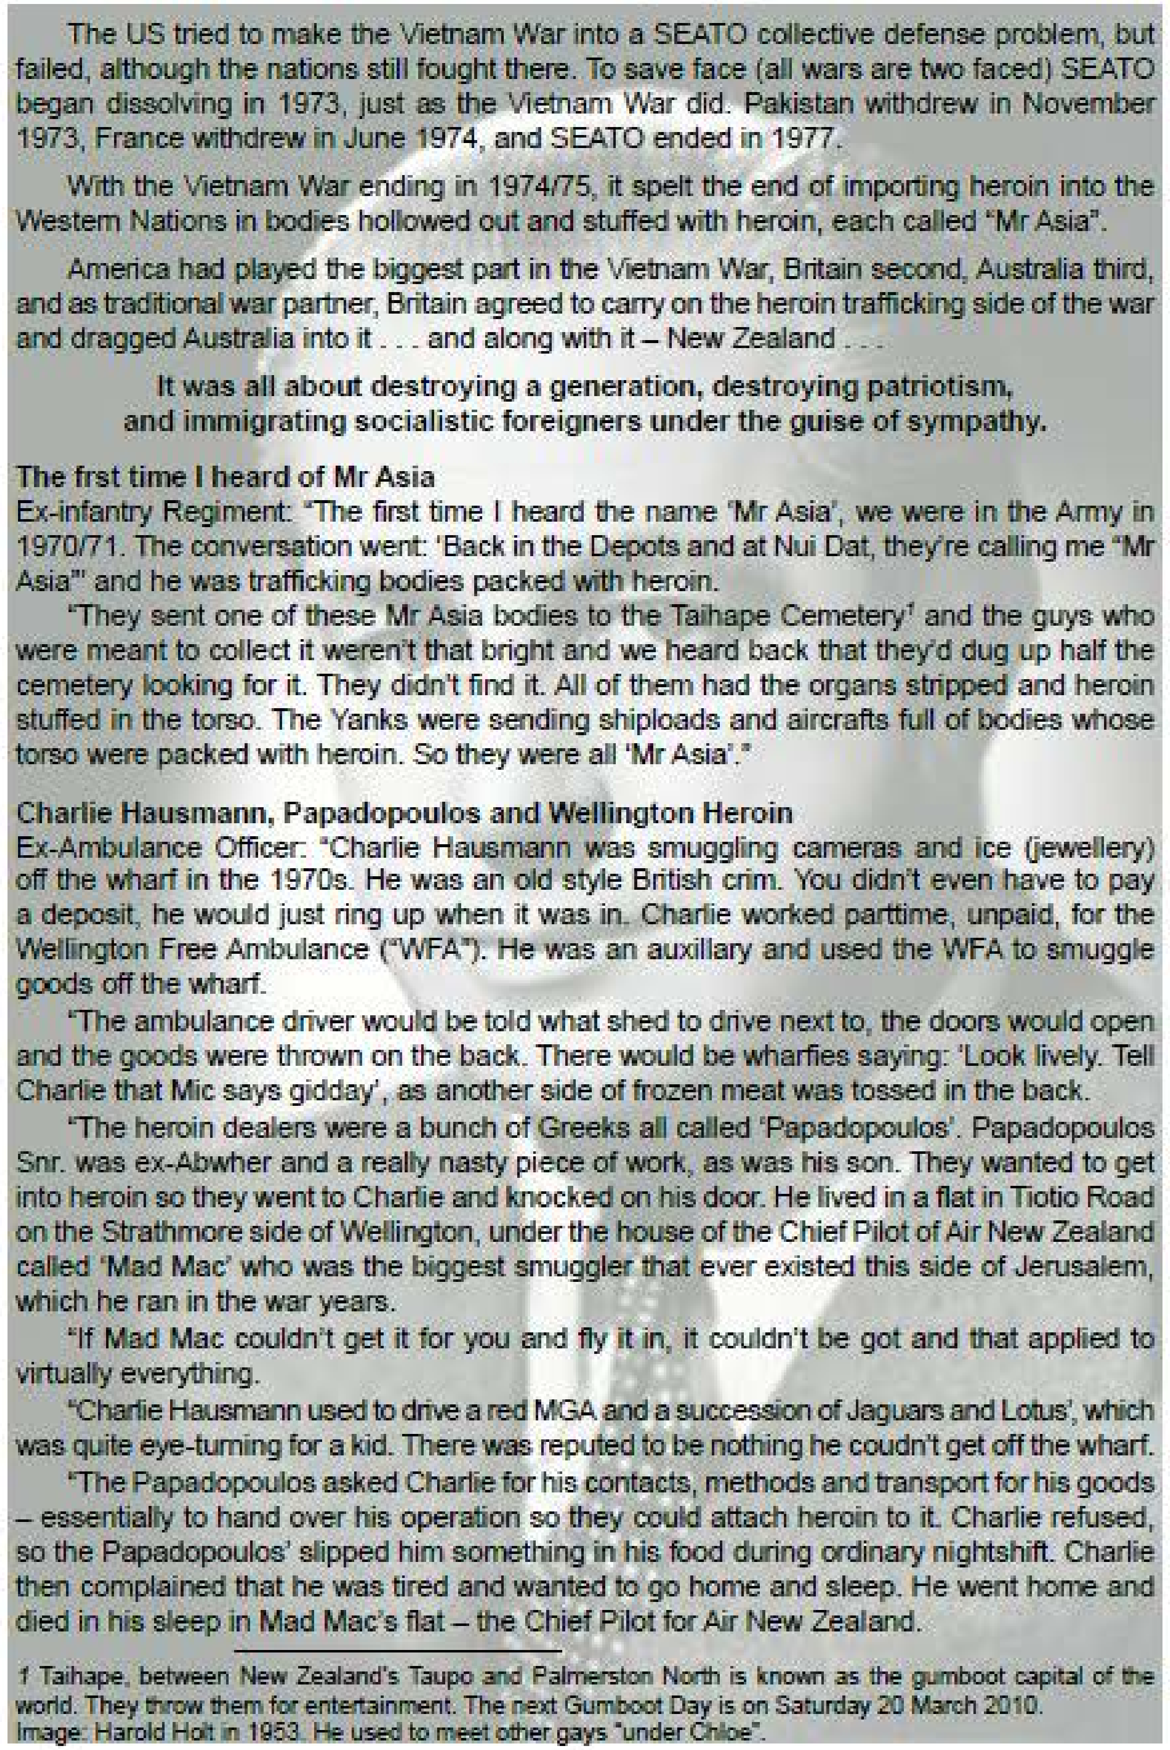
SEATO expanded the concept of anti-communist collective defense to Southeast Asia . . . which became the Vietnam War – but really anti-communism and SEATO was pro-drugs.

Anti-communist SEATO was an excuse to import heroin into the West, and for transport, they needed bodies, lots of bodies, and this meant war.

The US considered itself and the UK to be the strongest of the Western Powers, and New Zealand, Australia, Thailand and the Philippines were Southeast Asian nations who had been Westernised, so they were roped into SEATO and the wars.

Harold Holt had been Australia's PM (26 Jan. 1966–17 Dec. 1967) for 9 months and disappeared 14 months later when he was taken by navy divers while swimming at Cheviot Beach near Portsea, Victoria. His gay lover then drove away in a red convertible and was hit by an Australian Army laundry truck 180 miles off course. PM Harold Holt was a gay communist and SEATO was an anti-Communist/ pro-Heroin-in-the-West organisation – hence LBJ's attendance whose CIA had bribed gay-Holt to expand Australia's involvement in the Vietnam War.

SEATO Leaders at Manila Congress Building on 24 October 1966: (L–R:) PM Nguyen Cao Ky (S. Vietnam), PM Harold Holt (Aus), Pr. Park Chung-hee (S. Korea), Pr Ferdinand Marcos (1965–86, Philip.), PM Keith Holyoake (NZ), Lt. Gen. Nguyen Van Thieu (S. Vietnam), PM Thanom Kittikachorn (Thai.), Pr. Lyndon B. Johnson (US).



The US tried to make the Vietnam War into a SEATO collective defense problem, but failed, although the nations still fought there. To save face (all wars are two faced) SEATO began dissolving in 1973, just as the Vietnam War did. Pakistan withdrew in November 1973, France withdrew in June 1974, and SEATO ended in 1977.

With the Vietnam War ending in 1974/75, it spelt the end of importing heroin into the Western Nations in bodies hollowed out and stuffed with heroin, each called "Mr Asia".

America had played the biggest part in the Vietnam War, Britain second, Australia third, and as traditional war partner, Britain agreed to carry on the heroin trafficking side of the war and dragged Australia into it . . . and along with it – New Zealand . . .

It was all about destroying a generation, destroying patriotism, and immigrating socialistic foreigners under the guise of sympathy.

The frst time I heard of Mr Asia

Ex-infantry Regiment: "The first time I heard the name 'Mr Asia', we were in the Army in 1970/71. The conversation went: 'Back in the Depots and at Nui Dat, they're calling me "Mr Asia"' and he was trafficking bodies packed with heroin.

"They sent one of these Mr Asia bodies to the Taihape Cemetery[1] and the guys who were meant to collect it weren't that bright and we heard back that they'd dug up half the cemetery looking for it. They didn't find it. All of them had the organs stripped and heroin stuffed in the torso. The Yanks were sending shiploads and aircrafts full of bodies whose torso were packed with heroin. So they were all 'Mr Asia'."

Charlie Hausmann, Papadopoulos and Wellington Heroin

Ex-Ambulance Officer: "Charlie Hausmann was smuggling cameras and ice (jewellery) off the wharf in the 1970s. He was an old style British crim. You didn't even have to pay a deposit, he would just ring up when it was in. Charlie worked parttime, unpaid, for the Wellington Free Ambulance ("WFA"). He was an auxillary and used the WFA to smuggle goods off the wharf.

"The ambulance driver would be told what shed to drive next to, the doors would open and the goods were thrown on the back. There would be wharfies saying: 'Look lively. Tell Charlie that Mic says gidday', as another side of frozen meat was tossed in the back.

"The heroin dealers were a bunch of Greeks all called 'Papadopoulos'. Papadopoulos Snr. was ex-Abwher and a really nasty piece of work, as was his son. They wanted to get into heroin so they went to Charlie and knocked on his door. He lived in a flat in Tiotio Road on the Strathmore side of Wellington, under the house of the Chief Pilot of Air New Zealand called 'Mad Mac' who was the biggest smuggler that ever existed this side of Jerusalem, which he ran in the war years.

"If Mad Mac couldn't get it for you and fly it in, it couldn't be got and that applied to virtually everything.

"Charlie Hausmann used to drive a red MGA and a succession of Jaguars and Lotus', which was quite eye-turning for a kid. There was reputed to be nothing he coudn't get off the wharf.

"The Papadopoulos asked Charlie for his contacts, methods and transport for his goods – essentially to hand over his operation so they could attach heroin to it. Charlie refused, so the Papadopoulos' slipped him something in his food during ordinary nightshift. Charlie then complained that he was tired and wanted to go home and sleep. He went home and died in his sleep in Mad Mac's flat – the Chief Pilot for Air New Zealand.

---

[1] Taihape, between New Zealand's Taupo and Palmerston North is known as the gumboot capital of the world. They throw them for entertainment. The next Gumboot Day is on Saturday 20 March 2010.

Image: Harold Holt in 1953. He used to meet other gays "under Chloe".

"There was a big funeral for him in Cambridge Terrace, crying women gallore, with every emergency officer in Welington, plus depressed wharfies. There were notes of condolences from the commissioners of Fire, Police and Ambulance all regretting Charlie's passing and saying what amazing work he had done.

"The Papadopoulos family then took over Charlie's operation. Papadopoulos was an Armenian Greek so he was a special low-life and even the Greeks disowned him. Anyone with any scrupples didn't want a bar of hard drugs, porn and children which the Greeks specialise in, and most of the old-timers took the opportunity to get out.

"Papadopoulos Jnr. was eventually strangled by a cop after he'd swallowed a drug packet during a chase and died. The cop believed Papadopoulos was in possession of drugs, but the question on everybody's mind was 'how did he know unless he'd worked intimately with him in the past and had a falling out' . . . then from 1974 heroin fell down on Wellington's wharves like Noah's flood."

The New Mr Asia

In search of another Mr Asia, they found a bunch of petty criminals from the colonies and trained them up.

The leader was to be the police narc amongst those criminals, and that was to be Terry Clark, who ran from shoplifting and shooting cats in Gisborne to being a narc, then working with and sharing his business with the lawyers who protected him. From this base, Terry Clark became an international drugs and arms dealer with all the protection of MI-6.

By the end of it, prominent business people, police, lawyers, cabinet ministers, Governor-Generals, chiefs fo staff, and the Prime Minister were also in on it, as was half of New Zealand. It pretty much goes like this: 'If you meet anyone interesting in New Zealand who is now over 55 (b. b. 1954), they were either in on it, or knew someone who was in on it'.

Even school kids as young as nine were being trained up as drug dealers from 1969. Solo-mums who worked in the media were a favourite supplier. Under feminism, the media was rapidly becoming a Medea cult, and dealing drugs to children went right to the top of broadcasting, then spread out.

Terry Clark, Marty Johnstone and Greg Ollard were in and out of Wi Tako prison and became the new heroin traffickers, with full CIA and MI-6 support.

Terry Clark

Terrance John Clark (1944–83?) better known as Terry Clark (and later as Alexander Sinclair) was a Gisborne Boys High School old boy – a weedy character with chilling eyes well into shoplifting and shooting cats, but was also fit, an above-average swimmer, rugby player and footballer."[2]

His father, Leo, gave driving lessons by day, worked the pie cart from six to late every night and was a foundation member of Waikanae Surf Life Saving Club in the weekends – so not a lot of contact there.

Terry was a skinny Gisborne teenager who wore pointy winklepicker boots, greasy black stovepipe pants, a real spiv, but still a rogue. He started off as a small time thief in Gisborne making the dock and the newspapers. By the time he was 18, he'd had been picked up for stealing a few times and became a regular in the court. At some stage he moved to Hawke's Bay, where in 1971 he was jailed for five years after being convicted of burglary and five charges of receiving stolen property.

His defence lawyer portrayed him as a bumbling criminal who tried to blow up a safe at the Hawke's Bay Co-op in Waipawa, but forgot to attach the detonator for the industrial cordite fuse, and this prevented him from blowing himself up . . . then added: "He was an amateur in the profession of crime who clearly had an unstable personality and matrimonial problems".

---

[2] The Gisborne Herald, 'Mr Asia' case revisited, Marianne Gillingham, 4 March 2009.

Terry Clark had 23 aliases – Paddy Clark, Terry Sinclair, Alexander Sinclair, Tony Bennetti, Terrance John Clark, Terrance James Sinclair, Alexander James, "Mr Asia", "Mr Big", joined forces with Australia's Robert (Bob) Trimbole to become the 'Brothers at Arms' of the Australasian underworld. They formed close family associations, imported heroin into New Zealand, Australia, and the UK in the 1970s, and together they controlled organised crime in Australia and New Zealand.[3]

Terry Clark
looking very much like a Police Agent/Narc.

Terry Clark travelled to the Golden Triangle and dealt directly with Khun Sa – "The King Of Opium" which earnt him the name "Mr Asia".

He was the organisational (not financial) head of New Zealand's drug syndicate and was New Zealand's biggest heroin trafficker.

The financial heads were lawyers and child pornsters in Auckland, New Zealand.

By the time Terry Clark was 30, he ruled a multi-million-dollar drug syndicate operating in Australia, New Zealand, Southeast Asia and Britain, and had been credited with at least 27 murders. Terry Clark was a compromised bisexual who fronted as a tough guy – the world's full of them.

Sally Raynel, James K. Baxter, Mandrax, Norma Fleet – the Heroin-Junkie Prostitute, the Mayor of Auckland and the Head of the Drug Squad

Clark was well known for his womanising despite his average appearance and reputation for extreme violence. Terry Clark (20) married (1964–73) his childhood sweetheart, telephonist Sally Raynell, and had three children together. They divorced in the second year of sentence and she died of a drug overdose in September 1977.

Clark then entered into a relationship with heroin addict Norma Fleet – with Intelligence rumours they married. Norma Fleet then 'died in Tauranga under mysterious circumstances' – that is, with a needle in her arm containing pure uncut heroin, and Terry Clark having injected it. This was three weeks after his ex-wife had died the same way.

Clark then married (1974) Maria Muhary and had his fourth child with her in 1977. They married in the prison chapel. His bestman was fellow prisoner, Errol Hicksman.

Clark also had affairs with his female (heroin) couriers –Allison Dine (later disappeared by Intelligence,) and with his female legal courier Karen Soich, and with his female financial courier Karen Soich, and with his female intelligence courier Karen Soich.

Terry Clark had an ongoing turbulent affair with Karen Soich LLB who worked under Peter Williams, later Peter Williams Queens Counsel – who was so closely involved as to be involved. His partners, Eb Leary and Billy Boyd were both disbarred for it.

Norma Fleet was also a friend of James K. Baxter who ran the commune Jerusalem up the Wanganui River, where she visited. Fleet and Baxter also lived in Boyle Crescent, in Grafton, Auckland – a famous junkie pad. It was only Baxter and Fleet who did anything there. The rest were Junkies.

---

[3] Wikipedia, Terry Clark.

Norma gathered food and actually made a meal . . . soup et cetera. She was an outstanding character when Auckland was full of characters.

Mayor of Auckland Sir Dove Myer Robinson was known as 'Cunnilingus Rob'. He was a short half-pint Jew who proposed to every woman who walked into his office in order to have sex with them. He also had a habit of going down on them in his office. Five or six women successfully sued "Mayor Robbie" for breach of promise after having sex with him, and not tying the knot. Norma Fleet was one of those who sued and she got $6,000 out of it.

Norma Fleet was part-Maori and part of the family that owned Mercury Island before it was taken off them by Michael Faye. He now has the largest machine gun collection in the Southern Hemisphere.

Norma worked as a part-time prostitute and used abortions as a contraceptive. She met a husband-and-wife doctor team that specialised in Family Planning in inner city Auckland and they employed her for ménage à trois. They paid her in Mandrax and she took them back to Boyle Crescent in Grafton and supplied the junkies there.

Statue in Aotea Square of Cunnilingus Rob a.k.a. Sir Dove Myer Robinson
Mayor of Auckland (1959–65, 1968–80).
The Jews believe cunnilingus extends their life.

Mandrax was banned in America and after four years, all the outlawed and old stock was bought up by New Zealand drug agencies. Mandrax or 'Mandies' were aphrodisiacs, pink, and given out by doctors like lollies to depressed housewives.

The doctors and Mandrax were responsible for prolonging untold marriages and destroying many others. Mandrax is now only prescribes in psychiatric situations and those on Mandrax appear to walk as if their feet aren't touching the ground.

Brian Stewart was a policeman with a background in the Air Force. He rose to Detective Inspector and became head of the Drug Squad. He was married, but preferred the company of others to his wife, including the company of the part-time prostitute, heroin junkie, and suing shagger of the Jewish Mayor of Auckland – Norma Fleet.

As Detective Inspector and head of the Drug Squad, Brian Stewart was required to go on overseas junkets, to international drug conferences. He noticed others were taking their wives, and he was allowed to take his, so he took Norma Fleet and passed her off as his wife.

Brian Stewart had a moustache, dressed well, followed his cock, and didn't terrorise the junkies. One of the things they were taught in the overseas junkets was that frightening a junkie can kill them. He wasn't a thug – not a bad fulla. He had a farm in Tuakau and died there in 2008.

Norma Fleet (Mrs Clark?) died in 1977 of an intentional pure heroin overdose injected by boyfriend/husband? Terry Clark. The police agent and narc was already a murderer.

Buddah Sticks, Paspalum Grass and Rat Poison

Terry Clark was originally a police narc from Gisborne – and when the narcs realise the cops are bent, there is nothing to stop them. Equally, when the drug dealers realise they're supplying lawyers, there is no stopping them. And when Intelligence realise their child drug dealing protégé's are dealing to lawyers and judges, there's no stopping their counter-intelligence.

So when a narc begins supplying bent cops and lawyers, he takes this as free reign over the drug markets and begins trafficking with all the confidence of:

'a government department avoiding the import licence, but dictating what next years quota will be'.

Christopher Martin 'Marty' Johnstone (1951–79) was born on the North Shore of Auckland and worked in his parent's dairy in Devonport as a teenager. He left Takapuna Grammar after the fifth form and worked as a farmhand. A dedicated follower of fashion, he got a job at Collar 'n' Cuff menswear in Queen St where he sold drugs on a small scale. He then worked as a salesman at his father's Esquire Menswear store in Takapuna. He did well and was also part of the stable of New Zealand's first male model agency (with Denis M., an innocent). But the money wasn't good enough for the budding playboy and he took to committing burglary on the side – whatever he could carry – and sold his stash in pubs. "Esquire" became his handle, then his codename in "The Organisation".[4]

While inside Wi Tako prison (now Rimutaka prison) Terry Clark met Greg Ollard who was also jailed for theft. Ollard had a big main of hair and used to play league at Ellerslie (with Peter Corrigan, an innocent). Ollard had friends on the Auckland waterfront and when Terry Clark got out in 1974, he met Marty Johnstone who had met a ship steward, who brought in thai marijuana – Buddha Sticks – from South East Asia, and threw them into the harbour. Johnstone used a speedboat to retrieve the sacks. Clark bought the cannabis off Johnstone and had 13-year-old kids rolling bullets in Mt. Albert. Clark, Ollard and Johnstone then began importing boatloads of cannabis and supplying together – so a crime syndicate was born.

Terry Clark had been bringing in Buddah Sticks, 20,000 at a time. They were the most amazing weed ever smoked. The ends were nipped off, then they were sold again for $12–$15. They turned a lot of people onto marijuana and gave rise to local dope growing, which eventually improved on the strength, trip direction, and much later, cough reduction.

This worked for a while, but Johnstone attracted police attention by living beyond his means – as a menswear salesman and model.

When the police were tipped off about the ship steward dropping sacks of Buddah Sticks into Auckland's Waitemata Habour, police divers actually got there first. This caused a gap in the market and some of the investors then came up a little short, so they invented a new form of Buddah Stick – 'the Placebo'.

The investors got paspalum grass, dried it, got old discarded washtubs which were everywhere, filled them with rat poison (blood thinner) then wrapped the dried paspalum around a chop stick, soaked it in the rat poison overnight, hung them out to dry overnight in the standard laundry fashion, cut them up, weighed every 20 or so, wrapped them in tinfoil and sold them as Buddah Sticks to people like Barbara Allpress, sixth on the list of 'Media Women'.

Barbara Allpress lived at 13 Onewa Road (now 1/11 Onewa Rd), worked in radio, and was generally employed under the Minister of Broadcasting Roger Douglas (1972–75). Roger was a paedophile who liked his children drugged. He was later knighted. Barbara gave the Rat Poison Buddah Sticks to 12-year-old school kids from Northcote Intermediate as joints, who then couldn't ride their pushbikes home. Barbara Allpress was trying to turn children into drug dealers and in some instances she succeeded. The kids whose eyes swelled up like golfballs and I couldn't ride my pushbike home were not considered to have enough street cred . . . Her ex-husband now advertises retirement funds on TV.

At least some of these child drug dealers began supplying lawyers – a brilliant move as this provided protection for the drug dealers throughout their life – and those lawyers (now compromised) were then promoted up the scale of creeps to become leading New Zealand QCs and heads of judicial departments (and judges in Australia) in the ongoing cycle of 'the worst people reaching the top positions' where they become embedded in a protection racket of government crimes . . . and it is government crimes we are seeing here today . . .

Due to the shortage of the real stuff, and the stupidity of ignorance, but mainly the desire to be like rock stars, the 'Rat Poison Paspalum Grass' sold like hotcakes – or Buddah Sticks – and so much money was made, they bought the motel they were making it at.

Still, they're respectable now, so it's all kosher under the Embedded Crimes Act.

MI-6 gives the Colonies a Criminal Lifeline

With this Buddah Stick water drop trading loop closed, Terry Clark, Marty Johnstone, and Greg Ollard moved to cocaine and heroin.

After a large shipment of heroin was uncovered in Auckland, Clark escaped to Australia, but was picked up in a marijuana bust and deported back to New Zealand to face trial. Miraculously, he was acquitted.

Peter Williams represented Terry Clark in Auckland on some charges in the early days and it was later rumoured on the street, amongst police, and amongst lawyers, that Terry Clark had spent NZ$240,000 buying witnesses. To cover for this, Clark blamed winning the case on Peter Williams . . . Peter Williams' loves a good blame.

Peter Williams is very tight with money and will ask around annoying everyone to the point of frustration, until he gets almost a complete picture, at almost no cost. He found that MI-6 and the CIA had many compromised people working in the DSIR. So for the $10,000 bribe to a DSIR technician, it was the cheapest method of protecting his client.

So the DSIR presented DNA evidence and the judge correctly pointed out that the DNA evidence was manufactured by the DSIR. So the case was thrown out.

Peter Williams then bragged that he had got Terry Clark off. He also got to keep around $200,000. The vicious drug dealing police narc Terry Clark also skited: "Peter Williams is the best".

Ex-NZ Police Sergeant, May 2009: "Even the police knew that Terry Clark's money was in the office of Peter Williams, in the safe. Williams wasn't rich before, but he was rich after."

Peter Williams had got a taste of the money – he always wanted to hang out with the big boys. From here on in, the Peter Williams/ Terry Clark lawyer-client relationship began to increasingly maintain all the appearances of a business partnership. It was to become a family operation which defines both a 'Gang' and a 'Mafia'.

As further distraction away from Terry Clark, Pat Booth dubbed Marty Johnstone "Mr Asia" in a series of articles in the Auckland Star in August 1978,[5] but the mantle is now generally attributed to Terry Clark.

"Mr Asia" became the name of many heroin traffickers, dead and alive – first in body bags returned from the American heroin wars (Vietnam), then as Marty Johnstone, then as Terry Clark, Terry Sinclair, Terence Alexander Sinclair . . .

---

[4] 'Sex, drugs and murder, The truth about Mr Asia', Kerry Williamson, The Dominion Post, 2 March 2009.

[5] The daily Auckland Star was originally published as the Evening Star (24 March 1870–7 March 1879); Auckland Evening Star (8 March 1879–12 April 1887); Auckland Star (12 April 1887–16 August 1991). After a merger of the Sunday Star and Dominion Sunday Times, part of its name endures in The Sunday Star-Times (1994–) and the Sunday Star (Sunday's only).

Graeme 'Smith' Friedlander

Graeme Friedlander was a sleezy looking mongrel who wanted to import kiddy porn, so he went to his immigrant grandfather and asked him: "Can I import kiddy porn?", and his grandfather replied, "Only if you change your second name", so Graeme Friedlander went by the alias 'Graeme Smith', and was known as 'Smith' around town.

Graeme 'Smith' Friedlander set up a disco nightclub called 'Pips International' in Mercury Lane in the mid-70s (just off K'Rd). The disco jockey's (now DJs) sat behind smokey perspex about four foot high and played their psychedelic music. The builders were paid out of a suitcase of $20 bills.

K'Rd in Auckland central is a longstanding zone of prostitutes, drugs and transvestites. Pips International was where all the clans, money and drugs were supposed to meet, but someone had a grudge and Pips got set fire to and bombed within six months.

Graeme 'Smith' Friedlander and Peter Williams knew each other. Those who invested money in the Mr Asia heroin trafficking were headed by 'Smith', but they still needed legal representation.

The Heroin Trafficking Lawyering Mafia Gang

Peter Williams (LLB), Karen Soich (LLB), Terry Clark (H), Eb Leary (LLB), John Leary (B.Arch)

On the advice of Peter Williams, Terry Clark took on a respectable roll, changed his name to Terence Alexander Sinclair and bought two adjacent properties at Okiato Point, Opua, in the Bay of Islands (800 metres NW of the car ferry), another in Fiji, and a white Jaguar XJS two door coupé with the boatloads of money he now had.

Peter Williams still goes to Fiji, but now deals with the Mossad more than MI-6.

Reasonably ugly, Clark's status as a thief, police narc, drug dealer and flashy lifestyler meant he was a magnet to some women – at least two of whom died of drug overdoses in mysterious circumstances, as did his female drug couriers whenever he feared they would talk.

Despite this status, Terry Clark formed a relationship with Peter Williams' junior lawyer,– Karen Soich. My pick is that cold-hearted Peter Williams was using her to keep an eye on his new investment – Terence Alexander Sinclair. Terry Clark had begun a turbulent affair with Karen Soich (LLB) who was assigned to Terry Clark/ Mr Asia to ensure the money was paid back to the investors, and how much. For this she was implicated by the courts.

"Police told of driving to Paihia and using a kayak to land secretly in front of the opulent Opua waterfront mansion that Clark was building. There, they had watched and heard Clark and Auckland lawyer Karen Soich making love."[6]

Undercover: "Karen Soich is a Dally. The thing with Dally girls is that they stick to guys that are utter dog shit. They're like Maori sheilas. They don't feel alive, sexually, until they've been attemptedly murdered at least two or three times in an evening. You can grab them by the hair and bash all their teeth out and they'll still come back and suck your dick. But if you treat them like a lady, they'll walk all over you and kick your guts into the snow."

"I think Williams knew this when he sent Karen on assignment with Terry Clark – a known murderer, wife beater, drunk, drugged and wasted. Still, the money was more important."

MICK P^2: "Then Peter Williams' close friend and legal partner, Eb Leary (later disbarred in 1987), well his brother John Leary was an architect – a total homo. He was a screaming faggot, nothing closet about him. When John Leary was asked by the Sydney Morning Herald if he designed Terry Clark's house, he replied snottily: 'I don't talk to the gutter press'."

John Leary had designed Terry Clark's waterfront mansion in Opua, in the Bay of Islands. It was on a point, on the saddle of a bluff, and stuck out like dogs balls. It was a mansion amongst shacks. That the police didn't notice it, meant that the police were in on it.

That Williams then became a Queen's Counsel on 6 April 1987 stinks of collusion amongst the ranks of knighthoods – 'paedophilia, murder and file theft'.

If we expand that into M-PAD . . . it's 'Money – Paedophilia, Arms & Drugs'.

Peter Williams could not be any closer to the game without being openly in the game.

The John Leary designed Terry Clark masion came complete with a walk-in Champagne fridge with a slide behind that went through a tunnel, down to the boatshed where there was a speed boat and a remote for the boatshed doors. So it was a hidden rapid escape when necessary.[7]

I don't recall either Peter Williams or Eb Leary offering up this information in any of the hearings (Champagne fridge slide to boatshed, designed by John Leary), nor how closely involved they were with Terry Clark/ Mr Asia. Certainly representing him, as Peter Williams and Eb Leary did, and being one step removed from his girlfriend and architect, as well as laundering the drug money, and getting disbarred for it – that's close enough to warrant suspicion, if not confirmation that a partnership was in place – a gang, if not a mafia.

When three or more people are involved in criminal activity, that's the definition of a 'Gang'.

It appears that Peter Williams was in charge of protecting the investor's money.

---

[6] Listener, David Lomas, 'The Fall of Mr Asia', 23–29 October 2004, Vol 196 No 3363.

[7] One of the kids who visited, while Terry Clark owned it, became an All Black captain Sean Fitzpatrick. Unrelated, some of my friends from 1981, their parents bought it from Terry Clark's estate.

Permanently Sanitised Mr Asia – the Murders

Spymaster: "Police auctioneer Paul Williams had an inability to refuse cash for firearms. Mr Asia's Luger was provided by Paul Williams. He also is said to have supplied Dean (Hugh Tekahu William) Wickliffe with the weapon for the killing of a Wellington jeweller in the early '70s.

"Police auctioneer Paul Williams' took the Ratline out from New Zealand to Perth (by plane) to avoid questions over sex abuse of his daughter after she was visited in hospital by Intelligence.

"Mr Asia used to talk about 'Permanently Sanitising' and 'rendering harmless' and many bodies were reputed to have ended up under the Sydney Airport runway extension in Mascot, eight kilometres from Sydney's CBD. It was known as the 'Mascot Runway Extension'.

"The early couriers were taken out into the bush and shot, but the 'Victoria Painter's and Dockers Union' [of which James 'Jim' Frederick 'Steve' Bazley was a member and its enforcer, with four bullet wounds to prove it] had a contract on the graders at Mascot, so they were inclined to use the Mascot Runway Extension for permanent burial. Apparently it used to tickle the fantasy of Mr Asia that his new couriers took off over the top of the old ones."

"Two more couriers, Greg Ollard and Julie Thielman, vanished after word reached the gang the couple were being tailed by police. They were addicts and could not be trusted to stay silent. Police were sure their bodies lay beneath the runway at Sydney Airport."[8]

Underbelly: The Mr Asia Story: Mr Asia in the process of murdering Greg Ollard . . .

A similar financial justice was delivered to Marty Johnstone thereby removing his threat to the financial empire back in NZ from where the order came . . . so the financial syndicate of New Zealand businessmen, lawyers and child pornsters continued to make their profits unencumbered.

James Frederick Bazley was married to Lillian Bazley at the time. She ended up being Margaret Bazley and running the CIA's Deep Sleep Experiment which destroyed the lives of, or killed, 2,200 people in New Zealand . . . so she was made Dame Margaret Bazley and organised the Auckland SuperCity in 2009 which is a CIA takeover of Auckland. It is a NZ$7 billion infrastructure theft – still in progress in 2010.

Undercover: "In the NSW Police, the D's used to go on fishing trips with their drug dealers and narcs. Anybody who wasn't on good terms would 'go down on a cold one' – Police jargon for fell over the side tied to a fridge. There was usually a 30-second lull while the rope played out.

---

[8] 'The Killing of Mr Asia', Special Report by Brian Ellis & Peter Richardson, Lancashire Evening Post.

"The New Zealand Police borrowed the idea and had meetings on boats in the Hauraki Gulf – and called them 'fishing trips'. If anyone wasn't playing the game, they were thrown overboard attached to a rope, attached to a fridge. It always took a while to lift the fridge up and throw it overboard. Meanwhile the guy was panicking in the water saying: 'Look, guys, I can explain everything', and the saying was: 'He went down with a cold one'."

The lawyer Brian Alexander eventually went down with a cold one, but with a twist. He was thrown overboard by corrupt Aussie cops handcuffed to the launch barbie – barbeque to those of you in the Northern Hemisphere.

Undercover: "And in Ray Church's murder, the Australian police took him upstairs to what he thought was the Judge's Chambers – and this would have been a logical point in the case for this to happen – he thought that the judge was quietly going to tell him that the charge had been dropped, but instead the police took him up to rendezvous with his killer. And the proof of that was the two police officers stretched him out to provide the perfect torso kill shots, and also to protect their own uniforms.

"Uniformed police that are bribed are called in criminal parlance 'Sugar Bags' and they live in absolute fear of getting their uniforms bloodied or soiled. And the bribe is usually paid to Ds. The Ds handle the bribe, split it up, and pay it out to everybody, including uniform. And a D has always got an excuse of being in a place of ill repute associating with crooks because he says 'I had to be there with them in order to combat their illegal acts' – and the public believes it."

The Organisation – Heroin Trafficking, Money Laundering, Sex, and Contract Killing

It wasn't too hard getting back in and out of Australia with the heroin, as Clark said: "New South Wales police are the best money can buy."

This was backed up by Justice Donald Stewart speaking of the Clark gang, the NSW police, and other corrupt honourables involved: "The Australian cops turned a blind eye to drug dealing and murder. The whole lot could be bought for the price of a hamburger.

"[The Organisation] were all rooting each other behind each other's back . . . constantly riddled with gonorrhoea . . . It was all going round in a circle. One would get the clap, then the other, then they would give it back to each other. There was a crooked doctor down the road here (Kings Cross) who almost made his living out of them."

The heroin traffickers included Terry Clark, Marty Johnstone, Greg Ollard, Allison Dine, Kay Reynolds, Caroline Calder, Greg Ollard, Julie Thelman, 'Pommy' Harry Lewis, Doug and Isobel Wilson, Errol Hincksman, and others. They were either killed, jailed or disappeared. Some managed to scarper.

Others, like Peter Williams, Eb Leary, Billy Boyd and Graeme Friedlander were principally involved in the legal and financial side, although some did deal the drugs, and transport the cannabis. All of these people handled the heroin money.

Allison Dine, Kay Reynolds and Caroline Calder brought heroin from Thailand via Fiji into New Zealand, Melbourne, Brisbane, Sydney and Perth. They posed as well-dressed holiday makers and met in ritzy hotels like the Singapore Hilton and were paid thousands each trip.[9]

Marty Johnstone lived in a two-storey luxury apartment in Singapore with his girlfriend. He travelled First Class, was a member of Pan Am's Lifetime Clipper Club, and sat in on Concorde's inaugural Singapore-to-London flight just for the hell of it. He was the Singapore-based linchpin of the Mr Asia deadly crime syndicate.

---

[9] 'Sex, drugs and murder, The truth about Mr Asia', Kerry Williamson, The Dominion Post, 2 March 2009.

A Sydney dress designer disappeared on Christmas Eve 1975, her body tied to a ship's anchor and thrown into Sydney Harbour. She had been one of the syndicate's glamorous drug mules.

Greg Ollard, one-time close associate of both Johnstone and Clark, disappeared with his girlfriend Julie Thielman. The couple were working as couriers but had acquired a healthy taste for the drugs they were running. They were seen as liabilities and snuffed out. For a time it was rumoured they were buried beneath a runway at Sydney Airport, but their bodies were eventually found in 1982 riddled with bullets . . . Clark was later pegged for their murders, shooting both Ollard and Thielman in the head.

'Pommy' Harry Lewis was found handless in a shallow grave at Port Macquarie, NSW in March 1979. He . . . had left New Zealand to set up a syndicate branch for [competition] Johnstone in Australia. He was soon entrenched in The Organisation, running drugs for Clark and was busted for possessing cannabis sticks but skipped bail shortly after. He was last seen alive in the Sydney Hilton Hotel, and was killed because his bosses thought he'd sung to police.

"Doug Wilson and Terry Clark were both Auckland Grammar School old boys. Doug had distributed cannabis for Clark in New Zealand. After the deaths of Ollard and Thielman, Doug and Isobel Wilson took over running Sydney for The Organisation. While on holiday in Brisbane in March 1979, they were picked up for trafficking along with others involved. They named names, fingered killers, said that Terry had threatened to kill Doug Wilson and unravelled the drug syndicate to . . . narcotics agents at the Queensland police . . . who got word the Wilsons had talked . . ."[10]

Army Intel.: "Doug Wilson named Terry Clark as the murderer of Harry Lewis on Police tape. The 'Underbelly' programme showed Terry Clark paid $250,000 for the tape, but the police had patched Clark through and he was listening to it live. Clark then had them murdered."

The couple were lured from Sydney to Melbourne and killed on 12/13 April 1979, buried in a shallow grave at Rye, Victoria, and found 5 days later. Their dog survived. The Wilson's weren't given protective custody, and the police had now lost two key witnesses within The Organisation. That kept their ticket rolling in the form of sandwiches wrapped in brown paper stacked with money as lunchtime bribes.

Steve Bazley got the wrap (9 years) – Dame Margaret Bazley's husband.

Murray 'Scoop' Williams as Mr X: "I knew Lewis very well. Clark told me about killing some other people but I just didn't believe him. I'd done time with some pretty heavy guys, I'd been around some pretty heavy boys, and Clark didn't faze me too much. But as it turned out, everything he told me was correct . . .

"Terry Clark had no qualms about killing. In fact, he had a taste for it. Clark was a nasty individual . . . He'd killed people over there (New Zealand) before he came over here (Australia). Maybe two or three. I can put him down to about a dozen. They get a taste of it, guys like that. I'd met a few multiple killers over the years – they've got a pattern to them and he was the same as them . . . Clark was definitely responsible for [Pommy Harry] Lewis' death."

I Was There: "Richard MacDonald, a.k.a. Maori Mac (d. 1990) used to give me all the bully on it. They're from Boothill in Orakei, so don't talk too loudly because they're more or less your neighbours."

"Peter Fulcher – a kingpin in the Mr Asia syndicate – imported and distributed heroin. He was jailed for heroin trafficking in 1980, then extradited to New Zealand, where fresh heroin importing charges were laid (another 14 years). Released, Fulcher was convicted again, for cultivating cannabis. In 2006, Fulcher was up on more drugs charges, and admitted to stealing a dead child's identity to obtain a passport.

Safe Breaker: "All the crims knew each other, and we all knew where the deals were made, so we went there and, combined, we all knew what was going on and who did what. Paddy [Terry] Sinclair was a vicious little cunt, but not one of the cold-blooded killers.

"From all the feedback I was getting at the time, Peter Fulcher did 90 % of the murders. He even knocked over his mates, Doug and Isobel Wilson. He's still around Auckland. None of the locals at the time believe Paddy Clark did any of them . . . Peter Fulcher was running a car sales yard on Great North Road."[11]

Local financier Steve, Gladstone Road shops, Parnell, Auckland, 10 May 2009: "I've been watching the Mr Asia programme and I see Peter Fulcher walking around town and I can't understand why he isn't mentioned in the programme. Everyone knows he did the majority of the murders, around 27 or so."

Author: "That's 'cause the whole thing was an MI-6 operation. They protect their killers. It was run by lawyers who were protecting their syndicate's financial investment."

Steve: "[grunt]."

Underworld Golfer: "Jimmy Shepherd – the bagman known as 'Diamond Jim' – (from Motueka near Blenheim) would report to Terry Clark as to who was paying and who was not. Terry Clark would tell Peter Fulcher, 'Get the money or his heart' – one or the other, usually the later.

"Rumour in the criminal underworld has it that Peter Fulcher killed around forty (40). He spent 20 years in Long Bay prison in Sydney where he spent his time bodybuilding and always appeared on camera with his shirt off flexing his pecs. So he's still alive.

Well, he was sitting at the Cezanne café in Ponsonby in 2006 looking furtively around. He (69) sat next to me and didn't even recognise me. He had lost a lot of his muscle by then.

"Cezanne's is the closest café to Peter Williams' house – only 200 metres away."

"Peter Fulcher was nuts. David Lange was his lawyer for small criminal matters. Mind you, Lange was the lawyer for a lot of street crims. He was a bit of an idiot and kept forgetting to charge for his time. I believe Peter Fulcher had a brother, or some semi-close relative and they formed a close-knit killing unit together?""

Murray 'Scoop' Williams a.k.a. 'Mr X' releases false information to keep Peter Williams QC out of the picture, in exchange for leeked payments for Scoop, and anonimity for Peter Williams – that is Peter Williams is not mentioned, or if he is, he's mentioned as 'the best lawyer', as opposed to the head of 'The Organisation's financial syndicate'. Why? Because Murray 'Scoop' Williams has been on Rupert Murdoch's payroll for a long time – even going to prison for him. That's what he does.

Murray 'Scoop' Williams' role is to reluctantly distribute the distraction story from 'inside', where only those harmed are dead, and those who survive are praised or never mentioned.

---

[10] 'Sex, drugs and murder, The truth about Mr Asia', Kerry Williamson, The Dominion Post, paraphrased.

[11] I Was There: "Richard MacDonald's son, Greg McDonald, entered into a contract with the car sales yard Peter Fulcher was running on Great North Road. Peter Fulcher did a dirty on Greg MacDonald and Richard MacDonard and a colleague went up to the yard in the car. Richard turned around to his 15-year-old son and said: "It's like this Greg. I'm going to have to kill him to even the score card because this guy will kill if I make a half-arsed job of this. Is it worth it?. Greg replied: 'Well no it isn't really. I don't want you to do that for me Dad.'
"Richard MacDonald was a half-cast Maori. He shared a lot of cells with a lot of guys in show business like Johnny Whore (burglary) who didn't like his name and changed it to John Grenall. Whore was an inbred from the South Island and is still alive pretending to be an entertainer.
"Harry Miller was also inside for all sorts of cons. He had a dream to set up Ticketek in the 1970s and made good with Ticketek in Australasia. Whenever he brought his shows from Australia to New Zealand, the police would try and stop the show going ahead."

"With the killing of the Wilsons, the heat was turned up on the syndicate. Cops on both sides of the Tasman were watching Clark and his cronies closely at Okiato Point in Opua, Bay of Islands, where undercover drug cops pretended to fish while watching Mr Big's house."[12]

Clark figured – or his lawyer & partner Peter Williams decided for him – that it was time to split, and turned his attention to the burgeoning British market" with arms trafficking added.

The Australian police issued a warrant for Clark's arrest, but being an MI-6 operation, Clark got word beforehand and fled to the UK in 1978/79 and began running guns as well as drugs. Clark's business partner Bob Trimbole got away to neighbouring Ireland on a computer glitch (Yeah, Right!), and then to Spain where he died (Yeah, Right!) 36 days after Williams was made a Queen's Counsel (Je ne sais pas pourquoi).

The reason Terry Clark moved to England when things got hot was that the whole thing was an MI-6 operation. This gave him the confidence and self-assurance to deal with the British detectives, but when MI-6 is winding up an operation, they want every cent, all their players promoted, and no stone left unturned – that could turn up later – so key witnesses were killed, or swished with a new name and non-prosecution certificate.

Spymaster: "MI-6 has been intimately involved in the drug and child selling trade for hundreds of years. In WWI in the Middle East, they were known as 'The King's Yids'."

Murray 'Scoop' Williams a.k.a. Mr X: "Terry Clark joked: 'I couldn't even spend the interest on the money I'm making'."

Bob Trimbole and the Three Bobs

Bob Trimbole/ Bob Jones.

Robert Trimbole (19 March 1931–12 May 1987) was bankrupted in 1968 over $11,000. British Intelligence then ran Bob Trimbole and when the drug running got to hot, they got him to Ireland as escape.

Undercover & Army Intel.: "Bob Trimbole's nickname was 'Aussie Bob' and 'Bob Jones' – a copy of the New Zealand criminal who made his money in England sending out fraudulent accounts, came back to NZ, trafficked drugs – including heroin and methamphetamines – and bought himself a knighthood for NZ$500,000 in 1989 (Kt, Bach)" – then carried on with his paedophilia with purchased immunity.

Sir Bob Jones (1939–) cover was owning buildings from the profits ("property tycoon" "worth NZ$200 million in 2007") and starting a political party (New Zealand Party 1983–85) and sponsoring the New Zealand Ballet.

Undercover: "Bob Trimbole (MI-6 heroin trafficker) knew Bob Jones was as crooked as a dingo's hind leg, but his covers were respectable in 'smack city' – otherwise known as New Zealand, where a string of one horse dorps gather around a few big banks and casinos and big cities to constitute – by reason of their mutual dependence on smack and the police – one 'smack city'."

James Frederick Bazley
a.k.a. Jim Bazley/ Steve Bazley, husband of
Dame Margaret 'Lillian' Bazley,
CIA agent & controller of every NZ Government Department, and Auckland.

Robert Jones investments
Bob Jones.

Terry Clark's heroin partner, Robert (Bob) Trimbole, was implicated in the murder of Griffith furniture salesman Donald Mackay – a well known (on TV) Aussie anti-drugs campaigner, with the Griffith district known as the 'Marijuana belt'. Despite his body never being found – it was made into mince pies – underworld hit-man James 'Jim' Frederick 'Steve' Bazley was convicted of the murder, and to this day, he claims "corrupt elements in NSW Police did it" – that would be the Commonwealth Police and/or Narcotics Bureau protecting the drug growers/ traffickers/ dealers.

Spymaster: "The reasons the Mafia are so good at disappearing bodies is that they always spread disinformation stories and they always do the most unheard of things to the bodies because the children of Mafia figures are brought into the dismemberment of the disappeared bodies at an early age, and it is made into virtually an occult happening with tones of religious procession overlying it. They get used to inflicting indignities on bodies, and with the cover of Omerta – the oath of silence – rendered also in a semi-religious way, it becomes a binding process, and that's what makes the Mafia so deadly. If you always regard Italians with great suspicion and outright hostility, they will never be a danger to you. It is only when you become friendly and affectionate with them, that they'll stick you with a stilleto, and it's always at a christening, a wedding, or while they're swearing undying love for you."

Author: "Isn't that straight out of the movies".

Spymaster: No it's a criminal saying: 'Beware of Wops bearing gifts."[13]

If the Commonwealth Police and/or Narcotics Bureau murdered Donald MacKay, it was the British agent Robert Trimbole who bought them with bribes delivered in the same brown paper bag as the lunchtime sandwiches. The same method of hush money delivery was used amongst the New Zealand police, who took their corruption lead from the Australians, especially the NSW and Victoria police.They even went over for "Police Training". New Zealand taxpayers paid for this training, as for all aspects and methods of their own demise.

---

[12] 'Sex, drugs and murder, The truth about Mr Asia', Kerry Williamson, The Dominion Post, paraphrased.

[13] Spymaster: "Italians are scared of Protestant Catholics. Most of the Irish-Italian Catholics out here (NZ) have come from a very small part of Londonderry called 'The Holy Land'. Because they have ties by religion to Italians, they mix with them, whereas the Protestants are feared because of their religion, and when a Protestant Irishman loses his temper, he will go through fifty Ities to prove his point and each time go for the doctor [the kill shot] and the Italians are scared out of all proportion of the size, or the number of Protestant Catholics . . . I've seen examples of this happen in front of me."

Don Corelone: "All politicans bear gifts, therefore all politicans are Wops.
So beware of politicians offering you something. Always it turns out to be a wop, then the next politican, then the next wop, until there is nothing left to give.
That is why we take. Then it's the politicians problem and he either works with us, or we ride him out."

Bob Trimbole was supposed to have got out of Australia by changing the date of his birth from 1931 to 1933 on his leaving declaration, thus causing a mismatch in the airport computer. This was when the screens were green and the letters and numbers were yellow, and there were no pictures (up to AT & XT computers).

Spymaster: "Once he was out, when the Aussie Government was requesting Trimboli, Ireland prevented his extradition to Australia saying he was 'too sick to travel'. So Ireland was controlled by MI-6 as usual."

Author: "I spoke to the 2-IC saying the IRA was at least 50 per cent MI-6 and he said: 'More like 80 per cent'."

Spymaster: "When Ireland started to feel the pressure, they used the excuse 'when the first arrest warrant is faulty, any further arrest warrants are denied'.

"Ireland got tired, so MI-6 swished Trimbole to Alicante in southeast Spain where he hid in Hotel Alicante, then died in Alicante hospital under the pseudonym Robert White/ Roberto Blanc. Between Barcelona and Gibralta, Alicante is renowned for harbouring criminals and laundering money, making Trimbole's death all the more questionable.

"Trimboli was a British agent, protected by 'British Imperial Note' – very much like a Papal Bull.

Author: "So the high-up British were running the heroin in the former colonies – kind of a retribution for 'Independence' in the form of World War Two, the Vietnam War & heroin, then as soon as the Vietnam War ended – they continued with the heroin.

"Since the British have a 500-year Naval Intelligence (Tavistock) connection with Ireland and Spain, Australia had little chance of extradition, bar giving up more of their desert for ever more dangerous nuclear tests, with 3,000 aboriginals already disappeared during one test.

"The Aussie Government had to draw the line some-where and they drew a farcical line at Bob Trimboli."

Spymaster: "Lying sacks of shit.

"That's why we call them arse-wipes . . .

"Perhaps that's why judges and QC's are into nappies and bondage."

Terry Clark and Bob Trimbole in 'Underbelly: The Mr Asia Story'.
Beginning on 4 March 2009, the screening created an unprecedented number of calls offering further information. It seems that everyone was in on it. Even Intelligence was in on the time it was screened.

Lawyers Blowing their Nose

Shared legal opinion is that Peter Williams got out of it by the skin of his teeth.

For Peter Williams to keep his nose clean, plus elevation to Queen's Counsel, he must have had Royal connections, and compromised Royal connections – either based on heroin trafficking (from the mid-1950s), or paedophilia (1954) – the rabbit suit.

What is all the more surprising is that Peter Williams started off his career as a car thief, complete with conviction. That he was even allowed to become a lawyer suggests that lawyers like to have criminals within their ranks.

Spymaster: "There were these parties thrown in the 1970s and 80s where the caviar was flown in from Australia and the Champagne was reasonably good. Sitting at the tables were cops and criminals together. Peter Williams headed one of these tables and appeared to be orchestrating the whole thing. This was before he became a Queen's Counsel in 1987."

Williams distanced himself only far enough to be able to argue, with ongoing processional distraction and oblique non sequiturs, that he was representing his drug traffickers and murderers in court and was not one of their financiers. 'Representing the Financial Syndicate of Mr Asia' is how it all turned out.

The British legal system knew how closely Peter Williams was involved, so he made no attempt to represent there.

What Peter Williams did do was place bribes in cars and parks throughtout London to influence the charges against his lawyer Karen Soich and his client Terry Clark.

This only confirmed to the British courts that Peter Williams was one of the Mr Asia Syndicate financiers.

Peter Williams' managed to keep his nose clean only to those who didn't snoop beyond the purposefuly confusing publicity, newspaper articles and books. For Peter Williams – in charge of the Mr Asia Financial Syndicate/ The Organisation – it was still clean and profitable. For a car thief, it was clean paws in equity.

Most of the other Aussie and New Zealand lawyers were tainted, including Peter Williams' partners. Billy Boyd (26) was struck off on 8 November 1985 for 12 years and sentenced to do jail time, although he didn't appear to do any, and was never charged with financing the subcontracting of the murders. He was not required to return the money, and after expenses he was still NZ$150,000 ahead, plus he was given a hotel.

The other legal fall guy, Eb Leary (c. 50), was convicted for laundering the drug money "not through the trust account", struck off on 15 April 1987, and disbarred for 19½ years. Eb was then reinstated with Peter Williams QC's pleas, then charged within months for laundering ecstacy money in late 2008.

Peter Williams – who seriously can't be trusted, not even by his friends – was created Queen's Counsel on 6 April 1987 – 9 days before Eb was disbarred. The influence for this QC was purchased through his heroin money. Peter Williams then made a councillor in the New Zealand Bar Association on 8 June 1989. So the New Zealand judiciary was totally crooked in the 1980s and there have been no plans or action for improvement.

Peter Williams QC is yet to be removed from the silk and struck off.

Peter Williams now owns a lot of property. His cut from the $240,000 DSIR/ witness bribes really kicked him off, as well as the £2 million the British mafia left him on his hotel bed in London on behalf of Terry Clark.

The Friedlanders' are now the largest owners of retail shops in central Auckland's surrounding suburbs – Parnell, Newmarket, Remuera, Ponsonby etc, all the expensive areas with unbelievably high rents.

How did all this come to Pass?

The heroin trafficking operation was an MI-6 operation, ultimately run by the Queen who had been trafficking heroin through Philips lightbulbs from the mid-1950s.

The heroin turned up in Waihi, then about four hours drive south of Auckland, and now about 1 hour). Here, housewives removed the heroin from the Philips flouroscent tubes, then the cardboard packaging was returned to Holland for improvement, but really it was to show how much heroin got through. Queen Juliana and Queen Elizabeth II were the major shareholders in Philips at the time.

The whole operation was backed up with a royal visit (23 December 1953–30 January 1954). Whether it was organising the operation, or checking the progress, you'll have to ask a Waihi grandma.

During the Royal Visit (Monday 4–Wednesday 6 January 1954) at Moose Lodge, Lake Rotoiti, Rotorua ("no official engagements") Prince Philip required sex with children. The children were given scopolamine and a rabbit suit had to be provided – tail at back, hole in front – thus a twin-tailed rabbit suit. The consequences of providing this rabbit suit would be immunity and elevation beyond all odds. The profile of a person who would supply the suit would be someone down the rabbit hole, desperate for a view from the hill, with promises of plenty of grass to eat.

Peter Williams and Eb Leary then sold a house in Waihi to Terry Clark on 27 June 1979 for 100 times what it was worth – simply by missing the dot before the ".00", as in "00" versus ".00". This was money laundering.

Billy Boyd witnessed the sale, and falsely added the letters "JP" (Justice of the Peace) to a witness signature on the Memorandum of Transfer.

On 3 October 1979, Terry Clark then sold the same Waihi house to D.I. John Rex Hughes D.I. Ian Hastings. Billy Boyd signed Terry Clark's name.

This was complicit cover from the lawyers and police for Terry Clark who was in England planning the murder of heroin competition Marty Johnstone.

Both of these charges were admitted to by Billy Boyd in Council of the Auckland District Law Society v. George William Stuart Boyd heard on 8 November 1985.

Peter Williams, Eb Leary and Billy Boyd were part of the Mr Asia heroin trafficking, money laundering and murder gang.

That Peter Williams wasn't struck off, charge, or killed gives credence to the rabbit theory.[14]

At the time of the transfer of the Waihi house from lawyers Williams and Leary to Police Detective Inspectors Hughes and Hastings – the order for Marty Johnstone's murder came from New Zealand, and Terry Clark financed it with an okay from London.

The finance for the subcontracting of this murder came through accounts Billy Boyd had access to the next day – on 4 October 1979.

Billy Boyd withdrew $25,000 from Terry Clark's account (Tony Bennetti, Messrs C and Partners) and paid $15,000 to Terry Clark's Death Account (Alexander James, D Building Account) and retained $10,000 for when the murder was completed.

Billy Boyd admitted to this, but not to 'holding the balance of $10,000, as this would have linked him to the murders.

---

[14] Even the mafia in Melbourne used to complain about him getting off scot-free.

The Council of the Auckland District Law Society covered for Billy Boyd on this and no criminal charges were laid. They sentenced him to 18 months, then quashed the time to six months, giving him time served, before any time was served, then sealed the file for 100 years, until 2083 and 2087, and indefinitely.

So that's justice for lawyers – which is no justice at all. It was a gang involved in murder and heroin trafficking and the New Zealand Judiciary was complicity involved. They were compromised and shamed.

Justice Speight heard the case. He was the SIS judge who shot a man's arm off. He then let the SIS steal the files. They're missing from 1980–92. (See Vol II, Murders: "Z", 'Physical and Financial Assassinations', pp. 376–95)

So Williams and Leary sold the Waihi house to Terry Clark on 27 June 1979.

Terry Clark then sold the Waihi house to Hughes and Hastings on 3 October 1979.

Once the two top cops had been compromised, Williams and Friedlander placed the order to murder Marty Johnstone later on 3 October 1979.

Terry Clark then released $25,000 to Billy Boyd, who withdrew $25,000, placed $15,000 in another account on 4 October 1979, and retained $10,000.

Marty Johnstone was then murdered a few days later. He'd been dead less than 10 days when his handless body was found on Sunday 14 October 1979 in England.

Terry Clark was then charged with the murder and was arrested in bed with Karen Soich, Peter Williams' lawyer.[15]

Peter Williams then went to London, picked up £2 million on his hotel bed, made bribes, kept the rest, got access to more of the stash, and bought Billy Boyd the Empire Hotel (land and buildings) to shut him up.

Looks like a murder wrap to me.

www.tv3.co.nz
TV On Demand

Terry Sinclair.

Karen Soich.

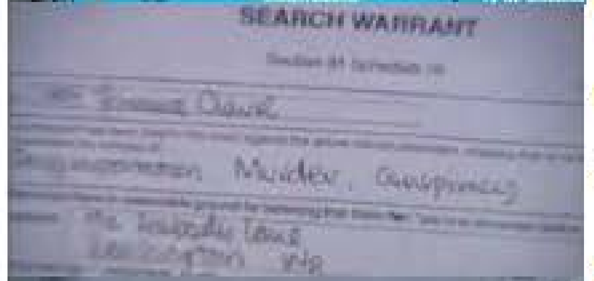
Postcard to Peter.
www.tv3.co.nz
TV On Demand

www.tv3.co.nz
TV

---

[15] Errol Hincksman was passed out on drugs in another room in the Kensington apartment. He had been Best Man at Terry Clark's wedding to Maria Muhary in 1974 and was a trusted lieutenant. His drugs got him 10 years in a British prison, several stints in New Zealand, and was still supplying heroin and cocaine in the mid-1990s.

www.tv3.co.nz
TV On Demand



SEARCH WARRANT
Murder, Conspiracy

www.tv3.co.nz

www.tv3.co.nz
TV On Demand

Terry Clark's gambling v. the Order for Marty Johnstone's Murder

After his murder of Norma Fleet, Terry Clark then went into a series of severe depressions blamed on mixing his cocaine with his new habit – heavy drinking.

But his new girlfriend Karen Soich was a known bisexual, which is depressing enough. But being one step removed from Peter Williams can also be very depressing.

Bisexuals stick together like integrity in a nightclub.

In legal circles, Peter Williams is referred to as "a very strange man".

Terry Clark's depression led to a series of blunders, not the least of which was his gambling in London casinos where he was able to lose £250,000 in a night. Gambling was one of the reasons Williams pulled the plug. He didn't want to lose money, he wanted to have others to make it for him.

There was one problem. Terry wrote his accounts in code.

There was another problem. Clark had a company in England called 'Cross and Mercer' and Marty Johnstone was the director. (Cross and Mercer is a totally MI-6 name.)

Marty Johnstone parted ways somewhat with Terry Clark, went out on his own against The Organisation, and began trafficking heroin himself. In 1979, he got ripped off in a heroin deal in Thailand, so the choice was between murdering Marty Johnstone, or murdering Terry Clark.

The choice was to murder Marty Johnstone.

Terry Clark was not the best choice to organise the hit. He lured Marty to London, who arrived penniless, then Terry botched the hit. They were all getting a bit tired.

Marty's flatmate (early 1970s) at the Bellevue Road flats at the entrance to the Mt Eden Swimming Pools, 9 March 2009: "The order to murder Marty definitely came from New Zealand. Marty was killed in England in October 1979. It was the syndicate, but one person had to make the phone call."

Marty's collective flatmates: "Marty fronted as nice guy, but deep down was actually an authority figure with delusions of grandeur, an itchy trigger figure, who liked to kill people himself, and paid so many people for information, the lines between criminals and police were blurred. He paid lawyers, police and crims for information and ended up with a better intelligence service than the government – but with all the same people as the government – as well as from Britain, which I believe was MI-6."

Underworld Golfer: "Smith (Graeme Friedlander) was given the message: 'If you don't stop Marty Johnstone, you'll lose your empire'. So the order was given for Marty's murder and he was lured by Terry Clark to England in early October 1979 for the hit."

Author: "This was around the time that all the property transfers were happening."

Marty Johnstone got ripped off and was supposedly broke when Terry Clark had him killed. However, it's just as likely that Marty Johnstone's money was pilfered by The Organisation – the financial arm of the Mr Asia syndicate – and the "broke" story was used so no one would look for Marty Johnstone's money.

Andy Maher straps Terry Clark with heroin.

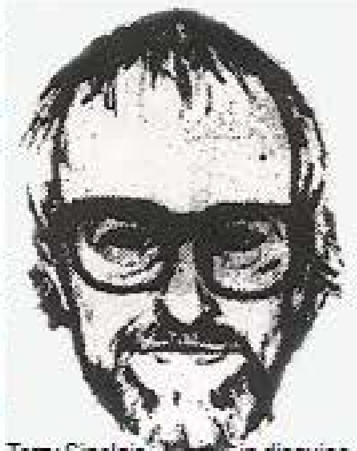
Marty Johnstone's flatmate as onfirmed by the Spymaster: "When the New Zealand financiers behind Mr Asia had their empire threatened by Marty Johnstone's breakaway heroin importing, Marty was considered "out of control", and the order to murder him came from New Zealand, from those who represented the Mr Asia financial syndicate."

Enough of the money was stored in Peter Williams' safe for him to pull the plug on everyone else – so it was mayheim, murders and jail.

Terry Clark employed two inexperienced hitmen – Andrew 'Andy' Samuel Maher and his cousin, former Scots Guard Jimmy Smith – to kill his former marijuana supplier, heroin trafficking associate, and 'failed Mr Asia', Marty Johnstone – who was now competition to Mr Big.

There is no murder without a body, but within a week of the murder, Marty Johnstone's body was found.

"Mechanic Jeff Ashcroft (22) and driver Ian Reading (34) from Ashton-in-Makerfield, were diving 15 km north at Marsden's Quarry, 300 km northwest of London, 30 km north of Liverpool, 50 metres east of Halfpenny Lane in the county palatine of Lancashire. Here on Sunday 14 October 1979 these divers found the body of a naked, mutilated corpse of a stocky man with long hair with 65 kg of weights tied to his legs. He was on a ledge 8 metres down near a dumped mini estate in the 18 metre deep disused quarry and picnic spot, Eccy Delph.



Terry Sinclair in disguise.

"Lancashire CID Detective Chief Superintendent Wilf Brookes, Assistant Chief Constable Keith Brown, Chorley Chief Superintendent Ian Hunter and Superintendent Phil Cafferty of the No. 2 District Task Force in Penwortham attended. Commander of the Lancashire CID Detective Superintendent Ray Rimmer was in charge. Home Office pathologist Dr Geoffrey Garrett carried out the post-mortem at the Preston Royal Infirmary mortuary.

"Marty Johnstone's severed hands and the murder weapon were not found."[16]

Marty Johnstone's Murder and the Money Trail (not Trial)

Since Peter Williams was arguably in charge of protecting the financial investment of the syndicate, it is debatable whether he:

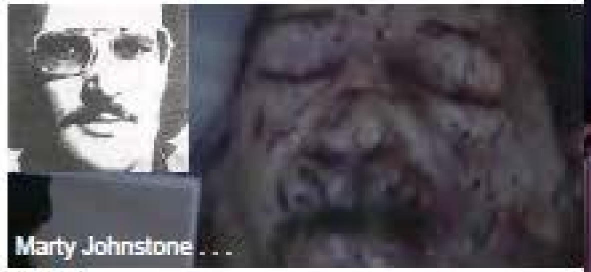
1. Made the call to Smith (Graeme Friedlander);
2. Got the call from Smith (Graeme Friedlander);
3. Made the call to Terry Sinclair; and/or
4. Used his junior lawyer Karen Soich to deliver the message with snatch attached.
5. All | Several | Both | One | Neither.[17]

From the time Karen Soich was Terry Clark's girlfriend, she was part of his drug trafficking keeping an eye on the investor's money. As soon as she moved to London "to be with Terry", she was a drugs and arms dealer.

Karen Soich kept an eye on the money even after Terry Sinclair was arrested, charged, and jailed.

Peter Williams was Karen Soich's boss, so it was a judicious takeover of the heroin finances of Mr Asia.

Peter Williams looks on as his QC status approaches.



Marty Johnstone . . .

---

[16] Ibid.

[17] Peter Williams protection at the time included Metekingi a.k.a. 'Mike the Spike' who stabbed a man to death just to see what it was like.

As soon as Terry Clark and Karen Soich were arrested on 28 October 1979, Peter Williams became Mr Asia.

From 28 October 1979, Peter Williams was Mr Asia. Thereafter he ran the entire operation, for as long as he could, taking as much money as he could get, and buying protection by the cheapest means necessary.

Still, for Williams, parting with money was the greatest sorrow of all.

From Sac to Cell: Show me the money

When British detectives sprung Terry Clark in his Kensington flat, he was in bed with Karen Soich. Errol Hinksman was passed out in another room.

The D's quickly produced photos of Karen bathed in money, which she no doubt sent back to New Zealand as confirmation that the New Zealand syndicate money/ heroin/ arms operation was still in Operation Flourish.

When the detectives interviewed Karen Soich about her relationship with Terry Clark, she responded: "I was just cooking for him".

I know Peter Williams and this is such a Peter Williams' trained response.

Terry Clark was charged with the murder of Marty Johnstone, and Terry Clark and Karen Soich were both charged with "Conspiracy to import and distribute prohibited drugs".

By that time, Terry Clark was worth millions and buying anything and everything was not a problem ("I couldn't even spend the interest on the money I'm making"), until the British wanted to clean up the operation – their operation.

Terry Clark had passports as Terrence James Sinclair, Terrence John Clark, Phillip Perkins, Phillip James Scott, Peter Simon Heffron, John Francis Pennington, Andrew James Gorrie, but to the British cops he preferred to be called 'Terrence James Sinclair' – a name he chose after he was advised by his lawyer Peter Williams to "get respectable" and purchase houses.

These names were all very MI-6, but so was the whole operation.

Clark, or Terrence James Sinclair, offered the two detectives who sprung he and Karen Soich, £200,000 each during the interview, then £250,000 each by the close of business, then close to £1 million each to walk him out the front door.

Terry 'Paddy' Clark was put away in custody as a guest of Her Majesty the Queen for Heroin Trafficking, and his finances were open for the taking.

When the detectives didn't oblige, Peter Williams went to London and was given the same amount – two million pounds (≈ £2,000,000.00).

Mafia in suits met Williams in his hotel lobby and said: "Your payment is in your room". So the very avaricious Peter Williams sprinted up to his room, fiddled, opened the door, and there on his bed was a large suitcase. To P. Williams, this was the golden rainbow. He opened up the suitcase and inside was £2 million.

He stuck his hand in his trousers and fiddled around for his balls as it felt like they had ascended. Eventually he found his penis and had a quick tug. Williams then lay on the bed tugging away and wondered what he was going to do with all the money. Would he cut and run? No, the mafia were involved! He had to use the money to get Karen off and get some sort of reprieve for his client. After all his reputation depended on it, and his masquerades had worked so far.

Peter Williams blows a load in London – one million pounds

Williams did his usual irritating self and found the cheapest option for a result. When the Vikings were warring against the Poms back in the day, the Poms used to arrange clandestine meetings in parks. So Williams arranged meetings in parks, in cars, and in cars in parks. He then took the money and paid the bribes.

For a lawyer, this is highly illegal, but being the new Mr Asia, Peter Williams considered this to be good business.

When I questioned Peter Williams QC in the Auckland Courts on this in 2009, he said: "I have never been admitted to the English Bar". He was reading off his written statement that said the same.

Neither answered the question Peter.

But still, Peter Williams QC would not deviate.

Williams bribed, paid for legal fees, and paid bribe money to those legal beagles who would listen to the legal fees speaking.

Peter Williams did not represent Karen Soich on the bench, but in all other ways he did. In this way, Williams had her acquitted of all charges including "Conspiracy to import and distribute prohibited drugs".

Peter Williams then had Terry Clark locked up. This way he got to keep the £1 million left. It was only after more money came forward – much more money – that Peter Williams and others arranged for Terry Clark to escape out of prison.

Terry Clark was tried for the murder – the most heavily guarded in British history – convicted, and served time at Parkhurst Prison on the Isle of Wight, off the southeast coast of England where he officially died of natural causes in 1983, aged 39.

But speculation arose that he had faked his death.

Peter Williams smuggles money into New Zealand

Whatever bribe money left was Williams to smuggle back into New Zealand, but how to engineer this without being noticed? My guess, is that in his irritating way, Peter Williams asked around until he found the cheapest way to get the money back to New Zealand.

At the time, £1 million was NZ$2.5 million.

In those says, NZ$10,000 was the maximum allowed to be brought in and out of New Zealand. Sheep farmers had wool sales accounts with more than this stashed in London, so that was a possibility in $10,000 lots, but quite slow – too slow for Williams.

Peter Williams' close friend, legal 'partner', and Mr Asia partner, Eb Leary, repeatedly took payments from Terry Clark 'not-through-the-trust-account' on 1 November 1979 and again the same month. He received payments which should have been paid into Terry Clark's trust account, but Eb Leary paid it into his personal account.

Then on 4 December 1979, the Inland Revenue Department phoned Eb Leary and questioned him about Terry Clark's finances. Eb "deliberately attempted to deceive the Inland Revenue Department of NZ$300,000 in tax", which was the tax on NZ$1 million.

So that was too risky, the Minister of Finance noticed, and there was still the NZ$1.5 million to transferm minus the money spent on bribes.

Was it to be a diplomat, the Minister of Finance, or Prime Minister Muldoon himself?

Muldoon was both, and noticed the money, contacted his old Tavistock home in London, got the background, then contacted Williams, saw the money, took his cut (which may have been all of it).

Muldoon was running heroin from the early 1970s. He was military. It was a military operation, and New Zealand was a police state.

It was then that Eb Leary was questioned by the IRD on 4 December 1979. This put the shits up him, but he still wasn't required to pay back the money. So from the £1 million/NZ$2.5 million, Eb Leary and Williams got to share NZ$1 million and Muldoon got the rest.

Prime Minister Rob Muldoon lost the election and was out on 14 July 1984, but refused to leave his office, got drunk, rang the Pentagon and asked them to declare the election null-and-void, rescue him back into power, and invade New Zealand. On the 26 July 1984, the Pentagon voted 4 for and 4 against, with the chairman casting the deciding vote against invasion. It was that close. Muldoon left office 12 days late on 26 July 1984, drunk and unshowered.

This was the second-to-last thing Prime Minister Rob Muldoon did before he left office. The last thing Muldoon did, in a fit of conscience, was arrange for Eb Leary's wife to win Lotto.

Robert Muldoon: "Hi, I'm a Tavistock trained (1945–47) double agent Prime Minister (1975–84) active during all the Mr Asia years. I find heroin to be a very effective way of destroying New Zealand's own.

"Between October 1979 and February 1980 I was bribed NZ$1.1 million and gave away New Zealand's oil to the Yanks. I was then taken to Pilau where I had sex with, killed and ate a K'Rd transvestite.

"I was also given scopolamine and any excuse is a good excuse. This one was an 'inhibition inhibitor'."

Lawyers get disbarred and get to keep the money.

Commoners get jail and have to return the money.

Where's the justice when lawyery is an excuse for drug trafficking and murders and your country's leader is a heroin trafficker.

Hang on a minute . . . That's no different from the current Afghan leader Hamid Karzai.

Is New Zealand that far down the integrity scale?

What do you expect? The whole thing was an MI-6 operation, and either the Queen of England or Prince 'consort Porn-King' Philip are the actual heads of MI-6 – so they could hand out 'Queen's Counsel' protection later . . . although not much later – 6 April 1987 – just when the whole Mr Asia heroin trafficking was winding down and the lawyers involved needed elevation for protection.

Undercover: "I did one of these double paper fullscap sheets full of names of those convicted of serious crimes, or unconvicted, but with connections to serious crimes. I showed it to Sergeant Peter Evans who said: 'This is all shit. I don't want to see this again. Don't bring it into the Police Station ever again. I'm sick of your lies and slander.'

"Now I understand why.

"Sergeant Peter Evans was killed soon after. I think he got too close to the truth, then killed. Yet the previous month, the 3-IC of the Police had paid me – the Detective Superintendent from Wellington – Peter Marshall.

"There were people on these lists – 300 to 400 people and coloured lines that illustrated where they paid money to each other, where they exchanged information – Undertakers who were prosecuted for serious crimes and their connections to paedophiles and people who were suspected of murder. There were people listed who were police, customs officers, lawyers, dealers in militaria, brokers, PIs, chiefs of companies, professional people, and politicians.

"The police routinely cover up murders in New Zealand, and consequently the number of missing persons in NZ has balooned out to epidemic proportions. Occasionally you'll get Detectives forming close relationships and that means rooting the deceased's wife, and very occasionally they will tell her the truth about these murders and a detective will sometimes say: 'There are thousands of bodies in the Waitakere ranges alone. And that doesn't even include Dunghill Farm, once owned by associates of the Head Hunters where the pigs were routinely fed on bodies'.

"When I reported this to the police, I told them that my informant had told me that the only part of the bodies that weren't devoured by the pigs were the teeth, the maxilla (cheek bone), and the patella (front of knee) and provided these are broken up with a hammer, everything is sweet.

"And it was the police who suggested to me 'Was I talking about Dunghill Farm?'"

"So the corruption happening in Australia was also happening here in New Zealand.

"I picked it all up and left, and put it into cold storage because I realised there would never be a legal commission into paedophilia here while the New Zealand Police still existed."

The Australian Anti-Corruption Team arranged Terry Clark's escape

The Australian Anti-Corruption Team (AACT) interviewed Terry Clark in 1983 while he was serving time at Parkhurst Prison. Terry Clark gave a statement, then 'officially died' before he could sign it. This meant that AACT had the information they required, but could not use it legally, so they would never have to present it, and the public would never know.

During this interview, negotiations between Terry Clark and the Australian Anti-Corruption Team went down, including:

1. What happened to all the drug money.
2. Terry Clark was to turn states evidence "in camera" [no gallery watching], then be given a new life where he could not be charged. (You can't be charged if you're dead.)
3. They agreed on a cover story for his death, cause of death, plastic surgery, a given job, place of relocation, and contacts allowed/disallowed.

The Australian Anti-Corruption Team were in on swishing Terry Clark back to Perth under a new identity, with plastic surgery, as a secondhand car dealer;

and

The AACT now had all the information to extort, control and promote whomever was involved.

Spymaster: "It seems that everyone was in on it.

"There are few Intelligence and Enforcement agencies who were not embraced into the Western Alliance of drugs."

Mr Asia's 'Death' a.k.a. Plastic Surgery at Brize Norton

Officially Terry Clark died of a heart attack in the grounds of Parkhurst Prison and was buried in the prison yard, with his family in New Zealand unable to attend the funeral, or sight the body, due to extremely short notice – one hour.

The rumour mill said that Terry Clark had informed on some IRA men.

Royal Commissioner, Justice Donald Stewart: "Hearsay evidence was a group of IRA men had murdered Clark using a prison blanket cut into strips. They grabbed him in a remote part of the prison and a sixth man sat on his chest."

And another version: "This was supposed to be during an elaborate escape attempt involving a drug used to simulate a heart attack that worked too well."[18]

The "prison blanket cut into strips" and the heart stopping medication had nothing to do with the way Paddy Clark 'died', and the British are constantly blaming the IRA for murders they'd committed. This is why the British created the IRA (and occupied 80 % of it). The British Arms Industry needed an enemy so they could occupy areas where their nuclear arsenal were buried in underground silos, so that they could prevent the Russians from taking them over, turning them around on the UK, then invading to the glee of the Irish.

---

[18] The Gisborne Herald, 'Mr Asia' case revisited, Marianne Gillingham, 4 March 2009.

A lot of New Zealand/ Maori, Australian, Canadian, and some South African military SAS were hired by the MI-6 arm of the IRA to go up to Ireland, dress as IRA, and carry out such attrocities as the Catholic girls school bus rape.

So "IRA" stands for 'Industry Royal Arms'.

The British got their agent Terry Clark out of prison under false pretences, with death as the cover. It is illegal to fake a Death Certificate, but the British Royal family gets away with it. They don't do it very often, but they will do it when it interfers with their profit margins, or when information about their money engineering practices could be compromised, as when one of their agents is under pressure to 'leak':

"I think Asia's going to take a piss. We should give him some relief."

The British Royal Family were involved in the high-profit heroin trafficking and they have the power to award protection. In Terry Clark's case, this came with plastic surgery and a new identity. Most often this comes in the form of elevation, just as Peter Williams was elevated to Queen's Counsel on 6 April 1987.

"The body said to be Terry Clark's was either buried in the prison yard or quickly cremated".[19] The grave site is not accessible, and either way, the remains are not recoverable to check the authenticity of Terry Clark's remains – a pile of rocks.

Terry Clark did negotiate a deal with the Australian Anti-Corruption Team. That IRA men sat on him until he died (heresay), took heart stalling medication that went too far (privileged heresay) or officially died of a heart attack, was buried in the prison yard and/or cremated . . . are all lies, lies, lies and more esteemed lies.

Terry Clark was given plastic surgery on a military base in England (Brize Norton), swished out to Perth where he lived/s in the world's most remote city as a secondhand car salesman.

Spymaster: "Terry Clark's plastic surgery was done at the RAF base in Britain that covers Northern Ireland – Brize Norton – pronounced 'Bree Norton'. They had a big stink there years ago because some RAF filing cabinets were sold from there and they had details of how to make IRA bombs . . . for fuckwits who needed directions.

"When the plastic surgery was done, Prince Philip was wearing his hat as Chief of MI-6, and not his Porn King hat – for the day."

Author: "Hang on, let me get this . . . RAF Brize Norton is the 'Home of Air Transport, Air-to-Air Refuelling & Military Parachuting located at Carterton in Oxfordshire, phone 01993 842551."

RAF Brize Norton is the largest Station in the Royal Air Force, employing some 3900 Service personnel and over 600 civilians. We are an extremely busy station and are constantly in the public eye, as the main airport used for deploying UK troops worldwide.

Our mission is "To project Air Transport and Air-to-Air Refuelling and support deployed operations and exercises".

Our vision is "Excellence in Rapid Global Mobility".

---

[19] 'Expose: The Real Mr Asia', TV1, 27 October 2004.

The plastic surgery was almost definitely organised and funded by Prince Philip, a well known porn addict of ill repute who sired a stone deaf child with his daughter-in-law, Sophie Rhys-Jones, thus bypassing his homosexual child-sex abusing talentless effeminate non-biological son – Prince Edward.

With his new Australian identity, Terry Clark was seen in Perth in 1985, two years after his 'death', with a small amount of facial surgery, but still recognisable to his mates. He was recognised by the most pragmatic of men who lived a life without illusion and had no delusions of granduer – a ship owner who supplied secondhand cars to both New Zealand and Australia.

In the same time frame as Mr Asia (1976–87) the New Zealand police were stealing their own cars by driving them onto ships for export to Australia via Tonga, and the Australian police were doing the same. Tongan customs officials were always distracted by prostitutes whenever the changeover was happening.

The King of Tonga would then fly to New Zealand to pick up his NZ$80,000 cut, personally.

Bagman: "He was so fat, the caravan almost toppled over."

The King of Tonga then produced a homosexual son who murdered his older brother in America in an arranged car accident in order to become the next King of Tonga. The FBI still have an open file on this.

Both King's of Tonga were absolute criminals.

'Underbelly: The Mr Asia Story' TV docudrama mini-series (4 March–20 May 2009) is a fair indication that Terry Clark was recently deceased . . . and that it contains enough Australian Anti-Corruption Team propaganda to fulfil the requirements of the people they continue to protect and promote, for that ongoing extortion

. . . Extorted people are reluctant to pay.

Allison Dine

When the Aussie Police interviewed Allison Dine they reiterated what she just said:

"You said you put up two million dollars for the Australian end of Terry's operation".

Allison Dine testified against the lawyer Brian Alexander. The judge was rigged and disregarded everything she said, stated that she was a despicable unreliable witness and was then awarded the DCM – 'Don't Come Monday'.

This was all very MI-6.

Allison Dine's parents were from Pommy-land but the family had been in New Zealand for a long time. Her mother understood spoken Maori, but MI-6 is bigger than local contacts and Allison Dine was given a new name and left with a non-prosecution certificate in her possession.

Others say she may have been swished with a death certificate left behind, or killed as she hasn't surfaced since.

"According to parliamentary records, Allison Dine was given a new identity after giving evidence in the Mr Asia enquiry."

All of this was so very MI-6, it reeks of men escaping jail dressed as women, and women escaping countries dressed as men.

Allison Dine now lives in England under an assumed name and is married with children.

The SIS pay a lightweight visit

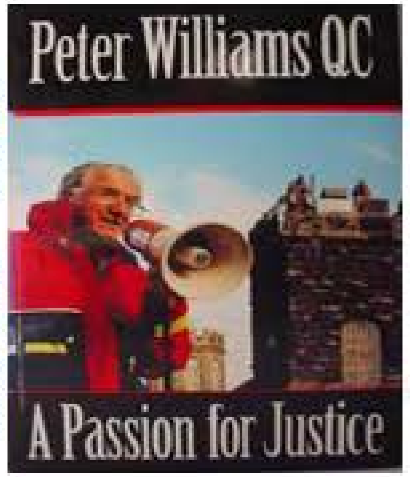
Greg Hallett: "This 60-year-old SIS woman came around to my house to buy a copy of New Zealand – A Blackmailer's Guide. She smelt like old piano teacher (mothballs), so I knew she was Security Intelligence Service.

SIS Old Mothballed Piano Teacher: "A group of us were sitting around the dinner table last night reading from your book Blackmail and discussing the points. It read really funny, but by the time we discussed it, it all seemed to turn out plausible, if not known by one in our group to be true. I just had to buy a copy . . . We all thought Mr Asia had to be run from the top . . .?"

Author: "Yeah, it was a QC lawyer who did it. He's one of the five top lawyers in the country. He's on TV. You know of him, very well."

Old Mothballed SIS Piano Teacher: "So where did you get your information?"

Author: "Aides to Prime Ministers. Oh, and Peter Williams himself – the QC lawyer. Typical of bisexuals, he can't keep his trap shut. It's wide open. You could stick a disgruntled generation in there."



Peter Williams Testifies as best he can

While I was still doing architecture work for Peter Williams QC (2003–05), sometime after I'd attended his Howard League meeting (c. September 2004), I went around to his house at 20 Pompallier[20] Terrace in Ponsonby and relayed a story to him to check his response:

Greg Hallett: "Terry Clark was put in prison in England. His death in 1983 was faked. Rocks were put in the coffin, and the coffin was buried in the prison courtyard. His family in New Zealand were phoned and given one hours notice, so they could not attend, and could not identify the body, nor were they allowed onto the prison courtyard to visit the grave or exhume the body later.

"Prince Philip then paid for Terry Clark's plastic surgery and arranged for his delivery to Perth where he was set up as a secondhand car dealer."

Peter Williams QC was sitting in his lounge chair and looked at me with a bit of professional station – through the eyebrows as lawyers and judges do – and replied: 'Yes, I have heard that'."

In another Court hearing, when I mentioned talking to Peter Williams QC at his home about Mr Asia, he and his partner denied I had been there for a second time, despite us doing architecture, going sailing, having this meeting, and attending one of his Howard League meetings in his home – which is charity cover for all his other crimes.

This thing was so close, Bob Jones, later Sir Bob Jones, cuckolded Peter Williams with his wife, resulting in the only lawyer in the family – which isn't Peter's.

The Head of the Terrorist Squad, the Heroin-Solicitor and the Prostitute

MICK P: "Drugs have been replaced by terrorism as the major threat and Brian Stewart's job has been taken over by Michael Cartwright now. Michael Cartwright has attended several terrorism conferences overseas. He's New Zealand's major anti-terrorist man, the head of the VIP protection squad, and not just a foot soldier."

Greg Hallett: "Michael Cartwright came around to my house at 9.30–10.30 am on Wednesday 26 November 2008, with his work partner (sandy-white hair, same age and build, but more British). They wore plain plain clothes with large key chains hanging from their belts. That gave them away. They were either the world's most fit storeman-and-packers, or police officers.

"They stayed for an hour and presented as having come from the Prime Minister's Residence 300 metres up the road (John Key's house). Later they confirmed they were from S.I.G. (Special Investigations Group that specialises in terrorism) and from Harlech House (482 Great South Road in Otahuhu, Auckland) where all the various levels of detective work are carried out . . . and the drug money is stored in the basement . . . as are the drugs.

"No doubt Michael Cartwright and his partner were there to assess me as they spent all of the following day writing up a report.

"Although I was very courteous and invited them in for a cup of tea, or coffee, and showed them the movie I had made of John Key on Election night, and generally had a laugh and discussion for an hour . . . their report inferred that I was very dangerous."

> "Because [Greg Hallett] is a very thoughtful man, he's a very educated man and very precise with his language. People who are very precise with language and say what they mean, and do it unflinchingly and unemotionally, are dangerous."[21]

MICK P: "Anyone who disagrees gets the label 'TERRORIST'. This includes those who protect rare snails from developers. Michael Cartwright was the one who organised the Ruatoria raids on 14 October 2007. These raids were synchronised to be on the same day occurring in eight (8) different countries around the world at the same time (NZ, Australia, Papua New Guinea, France, Spain, Canada etc). After a year, all the terrorism charges were dropped . . .

"Michael Cartwright is having marital problems."

Sure enough New Zealand's International Terrorism consultant Michael Cartwright organised the Ruatoki raid on the same day as the other countries on Sunday/ Monday 14/15 October 2007, and a year later, by October 2008 – two weeks before the 8 November 2008 Election – all terrorism charges were dropped, except for five people charged with illegal grouping, and one woman protecting snails from developers.

The whole thing had been an intense distraction for Helen Clarks' lesbianism and her attempt to launch a nuclear strike on New Zealand, her husband's homosexual child sex abuse in San Francisco, and broadcaster Paul Holmes' methamphetamine (P) use and supply to a child in exchange for anal sex with an old criminal who had paid half a million dollars for his knighthood as cover for his frauds, paedophilia and drug dealing . . . so they all became popular TV personalities.

Spymaster: "Welcome to New Zealand. Like you say – it's a Mafia State."

Author: "If Michael Cartwright is having marital problems, who is he going to the International Terrorism Conferences' with? Millie Elder Holmes? And was this compromising him into organising false terror raids? Terror for sex Michael? . . . It was the Labour Prime Minister Helen Clark who organised the terrorism from above, the more recent heroin trafficking, and the murder attempts against myself."

Helen Clark, a former St Petersburg prostitute, legalised prostitution in New Zealand, and then virtually ran it. She would call up a brothel keeper to do a hit at a moments notice. If they didn't comply, they would lose their brothel licence and their ability to use and distribute P to their prostitutes and clients with immunity. Mike Lewis Goold was an actual case (See Vol II, Murders, Pru Gee and Mike Lewis Goold)

It is now public knowledge that MI-6 are no longer protecting their heroin dealers, and they are open slather to the public and reluctant police. It's confirmed now that Peter Williams is an MI-6 heroin trafficker. So anyone who knows this, who isn't equally shamed, Peter Williams then tries to shame, or defame, or cause massively distracting court cases.

---

[20] Named after Bishop Pompallier, a cavalry man/ paedophile who spent 2–6 weeks training in France as a Bishop before coming to New Zealand and rooting the 6-16- year-old-native Maori. His shipgirl for the four month boat journey became Mother Aubert, the highest ranking Catholic Mother in New Zealand and when she died, she got a state funeral. Politicians love their prostitutes, especially when they provide a 'respectable' cover.

[21] Peter Schaenk, his radioshow, 28 January 2009, reporting on the return of Holocaust denier 'Bishop Richard Williamson' into the Catholic Church. A highly dangerous man for Zionist agenda addicts and lackeys.

Williams offers to show them Asian porn, some with underaged actors, and if they accept, he records their name and the time and date. If this fails, and he does not have the target bonded by other means, he attacks. There can always be a dangerous sailing trip in between with threats to kill from his staff – like Albi Orme.

Peter Williams QC just likes to be in the limelight. He likes to play with the big boys. He likes to think he's part of the action, but he frustrates the hell out of everyone in the process.

Heroin was the big threat then. Terrorism is the big threat now. Heroin makes a huge profit margin, about 400%. Terrorism's only profit margin is up the political ladder.

On Monday 15 October 2007, 17 people were charged with terrorism. They were environmentalists and Maori land activists. Peter Williams QC went down to Ruatoki to 'help' those accused of terrorism. Before he did this, and within ten days of it all going down, he got the phone call from judges who advised him: "Don't go down. It's all going to amount to nothing". We know this because we overheard the phone conversation.

Sure enough – "On 8 November 2007, the Solicitor General declined to prosecute under the Terrorism Suppression Act, citing insufficient evidence, and described the legislation as 'complex and incoherent', and 'almost impossible to apply to domestic circumstances', and recommended the law be sent to the Law Commission for review, which parliament has since agreed to."[22]

Tame Iti and Jamie Lockett were among those arrested. Tame Iti is a bisexual government agent and Jamie Lockett is one of Peter Williams' narcs. Jamie Lockett was No. 5 on the Terrorism list and when I made a documentary on him, Peter Williams had me named No. 10.

The whole thing was then dropped two weeks before the November 2008 election and is considered a national joke, organised by those scrambling up the political ladder to cover for their previous crimes. In 2007/2008, Williams was trying to be the lawyer for terrorism. Helen Clark was then made 3-IC of the United Nations. Peter Williams QC was a lawyer and partner of Terry Clark/ Mr Asia. He cannot go up the political ladder because he is the mafia boss and when he realised their was no money in terrorism, he dropped it like hotcakes, but still used it for as much political influence as possible. Generally, it was for immunity, and to 'turn' Lockett to not pay Hallett which he did with the assistance of Heeni Prozac Phillips.

I've had a legal claim against Peter Williams QC for an architecture fee of five grand. I brought charges in the Disputes Tribunal. We had hearings on 24 October 2008, 21 November 2008, and 5 December 2008, when Williams begged that they go to the District Court – where he would have the influence to stall indefinitely. Albi Orme could not be trained to say 'the right thing' and died 25 hours after the Williams/Terrorism/ S.I.G. visit, at 11.40 am, 27 November 2008, right in the middle of the Hallett v. Williams hearings, with Orme as Williams' uncalled witness. Albi seemed fine to me six days earlier, a little thinner, a little paler, but not deathly. Perhaps the S.I.G. analysis was favourable towards me.

So how close is Williams to the heroin and the terrorism, and is he then not capable of murder at arms length? . . . as you would expect of an MI-6 asset with Queen's Counsel status compromised by an Asian porn habit and shameful bisexuality which he denies as: "I am not an active homosexual."

While sailing, Peter Williams' researcher, Albi Orme (Churchill Scholar) threatened to kill Greg Hallett multiple times, and was a possible Z-man. He certainly had a well-known habit of threatening to kill and it would have been easy enough to get a witness. When I published as much in 2007, without his name, people were coming out of the woodwork and saying: "Was that Albi Orme who made threats to kill?" Of course I said "Yes", because it was. Peter Williams' narc, Jamie Lockett, was one of those who inquired and affirmed.

---

[22] Wikipedia: '2007 New Zealand anti-terror raids'.

New Zealand Courts refuse to acknowledge Slavery: As of 13 February 2009, Peter Williams is also up on accusations of 'Slavery' in the District Court of Auckland (CIV 2008-094-001717). Peter Wiliams then failed to attend the Judicial Conference as he hadn't yet found his bought judge. At the next Judicial Conference, Judge Mark E. Perkins then refused to let me speak, at all, on threat of lock-up, twice – and disallowed the slavery charged. The Somalis were very interested in the Slavery Charges . . . Judge Mark E. Perkins is a Mafia judge.

Terry Clark and Peter Williams were both NZ Police Narcs with MI-6 protection

"Terry Clark had been importing and distributing drugs in New Zealand, Australia and England, but he was also a police narc, who had ruthlessly forced himself to the top of the syndicate"[23] and in exchange, he was given prior information by the police, which in turn, allowed him to evade capture.

Terry Clark was a narc who was allowed to import drugs, distribute drugs, and get away with extreme violence and murder as long as he distributed drugs within the Western community, increased Western crime, and increased Western police powers to reduce the crime they had helped found and protect.

Drugs into communities is part of the Freemasons 'ORDER OUT OF CHAOS' programme, invented some 200 years earlier . . . and when the pressure was on, Clark sold the business to Bob Trimboli for AU$2 million, and when the pressure came on again, Trimboli wondered what he had bought – a few thermos flasks out in the woods and a whole lot of MI-6 protection."

Terry Clark was a criminal supported by the police in New Zealand, Australia and England to introduce drugs into their countries in order to increase the level of crime and therefore increase the control, arms, and rights that the POLICE would have. In some measure this was confirmed by Ernie Pemberton, one of the last British Police officers to interview Terry Clark: "I did think he'd been very lucky to get away with it for so long, very lucky. Because I don't think he was any more than a criminal. And he got an operation going he was very lucky to sustain it, and he sustained it by violence. That's how he sustained it, and by having money to pay people to keep quiet about it. That's how he did it."[24]

This is backed up by four other comments who describe the ruthless support Terry Clark received from police and authorities . . .

Errol Hinksman: "Terry Clark dreamed of becoming New Zealand's Al Capone."

Jimmy Shepherd (still alive): "Terry Clark developed a taste for murder."

Mr X, Scoop, Murray Williams: "Bent cops were a dime a dozen in the late 1970s . . . You couldn't get arrested if you tried back then . . . Clark had a hotline to them."

Royal Commissioner Justice Donald Stewart: "Terry Clark destroyed countless lives through heroin."

Greg Hallett: "MI-6 used criminals to target specific families with heroin. Those members who didn't take to it, were then attacked in other ways. Often it was a blacklisting order by the Judiciary for 'NO RELIEF'."

Peter Williams' junior lawyer, Karen Soich, was assigned to Terry Clark/ Mr Asia to ensure the money was paid back to the investors and Karen Soich (LLB) was implicated by the court. Peter Williams' very close associates, Eb Leary and Billy Boyd, were disbarred for laundering the drug money. Peter Williams got out by the skin of his teeth around the same time his associates were disbarred.

---

[23] Listener, David Lomas, 'The Fall of Mr Asia', 23–29 October 2004, Vol 196 No 3363: ". . . Clark, a petty thief and sometime police informant from Gisborne [who] ruthlessly forced himself to the top of the syndicate, eventually ordering Johnstone's murder when a Thailand drug deal went wrong."

[24] 'Expose: The Real Mr Asia', TV1, 27 October 2004.

Terry Clark and Marty Johnstone were not the leading conspirators. Graeme 'Smith' Friedlander,[25] Peter Williams QC, Eb Leary, Billy Boyd, Karen Soich, Aussie Malcolm and Prime Minister Muldoon (1975–84) were deeply in on it. Muldoon had been trained in the London Tavistock, so he was a dead ringer for anything that would destroy the country: "Heroin works. Let's do that. PS. I have congenital syphilis."

Detective Hutton was one cover between heroin importing and the Police, who, after enough bribes, were essentially complicit in the heroin trafficking.

When the high-ranking Freemason, Len Demlar, murdered Harvey and Jeanette Crewe in 1970, it was Hutton and Williams who provided the cover for the freemason murderer by planting evidence on Arthur Alan Thomas and delaying the court outcome for a decade using all sorts of front lawyers. What looks sweet in the police and judiciary turned out to stink like a cover of shit.

Peter Williams QC was a lawyer thrice associated with the Mr Asia heroin gang.

My favourite quotes from Peter Williams Queen's Counsel of 23 years are:

"I am not an active homosexual"; and

"I have never been admitted to the English Bar".

You're in New Zealand now mate.

Peter Alderidge Williams QC has been found marked, measured and wanting
It is therefore that I formally request:
Peter Williams QC be stripped of the silk – no longer to be a Queen's Counsel;

Peter Williams QC be removed from the Bar – unable to practise law;

Peter Williams be charged with slavery – as a master slaver;

Peter Williams return the £2 million in ill-gotten gains – pay half to the Undersigned, Joseph Gregory Hallett, for threatening to kill, accessory to attempted murder, slavery, hobbling, boiler-plating and blacklisting – and pay the other half to the Inquiry into Peter Williams' extensive judicial corruption;

Peter Williams apologise on page 1 of the New Zealand Herald to the Undersigned, Joseph Gregory Hallett;

Peter Williams apologise on page 1 of the New Zealand Herald to Eb Leary and Billy Boyd for setting them up as the fall guys for crimes Peter Williams was orchestrating;

Peter Williams apologise on page 1 of the New Zealand Herald for funding his daughter's methamphetamine habit;

Peter Williams acknowledge that he was cuckolded by the fraudster and paedophile (Sir) Robert (Bob) Jones, citing that one of his daughters – the one who's a lawyer – is not biologically his;

Peter Williams' passport be retained so he cannot communicate with his new Mossad masters in Fiji and arrange a further hit.

> Payment of £1 million plus statutory interest at 7.5/8.4 % is due within 72 hours of receipt under normal laws of Equity. Failure to pay within this equitable timeframe, and failure to respond within this equitable timeframe, and/or failure to formally resign all titles and positions, and apologise within this timeframe, will incur the four-fold Indemnity Bond (£4 million + Statutory Interest).

All rights, powers, privileges, and immunities, whether actual, contingent, or prospective: Reserved only in his capacity as beneficiary of the Original Jurisdiction.

---

[25] Spymaster: "I had reservations about the presence of a child with a man being prosecuted for kiddy-porn, so I mentioned Friedlander's daughter to the Police. Years later the answer came back that it wasn't connected. Then I had reason to go into one of his establishments in the Red Light area off Fort Street where I encountered the same girl working for Friedlander as a prostitute. I suspected it was his own daughter."

Related videos
7 hardcore porn har...

Aussie Malcolm, Danny Watson (loose mandible springs) and why no one listens
As well as a heroin trafficker with Mr Asia and organising identical boats to sail between Fiji and New Zealand, so it looked like both returned to homebase, Aussie Malcolm was a crossover paedophile (married and a homo-paedophile).

Aussie was controlled by the Australians because he was caught having sex with a child in Gladstone, Queensland, in 1967. This resulted in him losing his Seamans' Ticket. Aussie still wears a fag's ponytail[26] and sometimes it's hard to tell him apart from the talkshow host Danny 'Loose Mandible Springs' Watson.

Danny Watson is called 'Loose Mandible Springs' because he lets his jaw flop open and waver about before he engages his brain. He is a walking talking oblique non sequitur. He can sidewind off a topic faster than a briefcase full of money can change hands for suppressed information.

As you know, it is the talkshow host's role to wrap the public in ignorance and Loose Mandible Springs Danny Watson is a longstanding professional. Talkshow host Danny listen-to-me-don't-listen-to-yourself Watson also, ironically did what is arguably attempted manslaughter on Peter Williams QC.

Danny listen-to-me-don't-listen-to-yourself Loose Mandible Springs Watson (DLTMDLTYLMSW) sold Peter Williams a yacht and was required to install a two way radio. Well Watson dropped the unit in the seawater, scooped it out, removed the insides and left the 'on light' in, then installed it. In an emergency, this could have contributed to a death, and if death had resulted, it would have been manslaughter.

Williams told me that, so if you need verification, talk to the bisexual.

---

[26] Wikipedia: Anthony George 'Aussie' Malcolm was born in Australia (1940–) and attended Wellington College in Wellington, NZ. He was the Eden MP (1975–84) and Minister of Immigration/ Health during the third term of the Muldoon National government, then established an immigration (socialism/sexual deviancy) consultancy firm, and also has investments in the tourism sector..

Paedophiles and homosexuals and homo-paedophiles try to become MPs because that gives them police protection. They are also given a hand up by other queer MPs.

This 'Honourable' cover also gives them the kutspa to approach other MP's sons and MP Aussie Malcolm took an interest in MP Norm Jones underaged son, and propositioned him for fellatio.

Member of Parliament Norm Jones was just a hop-a-long amputee, but one crisp morning he waited at the top of parliament steps, behind a column . . . with his leg off.

MP Aussie Malcolm walked up the old parliamentary steps and said: "Gidday Norm how are ya".

Well Norm Jones wacked Aussie Malcolm across the head with his detachable prosthetic leg then slid down the parliamentary handrail and smacked Aussie again with his wooden leg, just as he was getting up. This is a well known story. Norm then re-attached his prosthetic leg and walked up parliament steps.

PM Muldoon was hiding behind another column and asked Norm: "Why did you do it?"

Norm Jones replied: "Because he wanted to do things to somebody close to me."

Muldoon: "That figures because he's a queer cunt . . . This is why you'll never be a member of the Cabinet. You're too honest."

Sounds like Muldoon hated Aussie Malcolm, but supported him in his heroin trafficking anyway. That's what good-old Tavistock cunts do. Perhaps they were in business together! All of them!

. . . And the term respectable now includes 'Heroin Trafficker' . . .

Anthony George 'Aussie' Malcolm.

What really cracked me up about all this was his 2-IC, all white and proper and designated to inherit the company, David Cooper, was on an overseas junket and employed the services of some Asian prostitutes. His wife Fiona, then 'discovered' this on his credit card. I kept quiet about it for two years ('cause I used to go around there for lunch in the 90s) then this co-producer on Skype from Montecito, California told me. The next day the whole suburb of Montecito caught fire and 8,000 were evacuated.

Fiona's sister was Aussie's therapist when his wife Astrid managed to drown in a drowning accident.

Danny Watson strikes again.

'Little Britain'
David Williams/ Walliams:

"Computer says 'No'."

Talkshow host:
Danny Watson.

On Air
Tell us w
Talkback Overseas
Text 9292
Cli
"Listeners say 'No'."

Dame Margaret Bazley is Lillian Bazley – the heroin trafficker and CIA contract killer Margaret Bazley – who was married to the convicted murderer Steve Bazley – and now controls Auckland

The same woman who presented this false DNA evidence for the DSIR in the Terry Clark case, presented DNA evidence for the Bain murder re-trial late in April 2009, this time for FRST, the 'Foundation for Research Science and Technology' which replaced the 'Department of Scientific and Industrial Research' (DSIR). FRST is headed by the CIA agent Dame Margaret 'Lillian' Bazley who was married to James 'Jim' Frederick 'Steve' Bazley – the convicted triple murderer in the Mr Asia Ring.

James 'Jim' Frederick 'Steve' Bazley (1924–) was a union heavy at the waterfront in the early 1970s with four bullet wounds to prove it, and was associated with the notorious Painters and Dockers Union who 'apparently' buried bodies under Sydney's Mascot Runway. 'Steve' Bazley, Joseph and Tizzone were tried and convicted of the murder of Don Mackay, Doug Wilson, and Isobel Wilson, and sentenced in 1984 to 13 years plus life, but Steve Bazley was released from Lodden Prison, Victoria in February 2001 and is now a budget advisor in Invercargill.

Mr and Mrs James 'Jim' Frederick 'Steve' Margaret 'Lillian' Bazley-Murder, who works with her fellow CIA agent Mr John Banks Queer Son Of A Career Criminal QSO ACC CIA

His wife at the time was 'Lillian Bazley, who is actually Margaret 'Lillian' Bazley, and now Dame Margaret Bazley the CIA agent, heroin trafficker, and contract killer of thousands who goes through government departments for the CIA and ensures they do not work, including. Director of Nursing, Department of Health, Commissioner of State Services Commission, Secretary for Transport, Director-General of Social Welfare, Chief Executive of Social Policy, Chairperson of Fire Service Commission, Chairperson of FRST, Commissioner for Inquiry into Police Misconduct, Member of the Legal Services Agency Risk Management Committee, and member of the Waitangi Tribunal (Maori).

The women are always more evil than the men. It's just that we can deny it for longer.

The Bazley-Banks CIA Takeover of Auckland (2009–10)

The CIA agent Dame Margaret 'Lillian' 'Mr Asia Ring' 'Contract Killer of Thousands' Bazley is covering up for the police paedophile ring in Dunedin that did the Bain family murders, and the paedophilia of the former Minister of Police John Banks who is a CIA agent running for first Super Mayor of Auckland – which is a CIA takeover of the entire Auckland region for the purpose of increasing rates, fascist policing . . . and mass murder.

This is being done by a NZ$7 billion asset grab that involves all of the new Auckland Super City's water supply. The water will then be the focus of a massive rates increase, poisoned, and the rates increase justified by cleaning out the poisons.

Millions will be charged, but it will be a simple antidote.

The CIA Mayor of Auckland John Banks has been using the same method employing Deloitte to consult, when all they do is take their reports from other cities and change the names. The reports are done, the money is exported overseas, but little, or none of the work is actually carried out.

John Banks has employed the asset strippers Michael Faye and David Richwhite to organise the legalese behind a whole lot of front companies for the takeover of Auckland. This will give them an unobstructed year to strip all assets.

As the Tui beer billboard says:
"Is it a bird? Is it a plane?
No it's Super Mayor."

Michael Faye and David Richwhite have previously been involved in stripping the New Zealand Railways by stealing the engines out of trains, buying the railways for NZ$1, putting the engines back in, then selling it for NZ$600 million.

No one was charged.

They were also involved in the Paul White murder and turning the movie about it – 'Spooked' – into a movie that never mentioned them and then blamed Spook for the murder. (See Attachment "Z^{8}", 'Commission of Inquiry into Police Murders')

Talkshow of Ignorance

When we go to talk about this on radio, we get cut off by the CIA asset Leighton Smith – CIA by virtue that he is a Captain in ASIO and Australia is run by the CIA, so he's a CIA asset who will keep mumsy about the SuperMayor and Auckland SuperCity being a CIA takeover. I call Leighton CASIO, others call him 'Captain Oasis'. That would explain the schizophrenia.

Similarly the lawyer turned newsreader Simon Dallow, his father was a Police Superintendent and found to be "not very good" so he and became a Waitakere City Councillor, which is a holding pen for people who are 'not very good' – often with a history of sexual deviancy. Mr Dallow Sr. was a twin and his brother was a Police Inspector in Remuera who was caught rooting transvestites in a public toilet, so he committed suicide.

We in the business call this Counter-Intelligence and point out that the role of talkshow hosts is to cocoon the public in a myasma of ignorance resulting in a public debating non-issues while the real matters go unchallenged.

Despite this, Simon Dallow is one of the best, it's just that they're all so bad. He has tried, it's just that his family history has compromised him, so now he's another talking hairdo.

Simon Dallow – nephew of a tranny-rooting cop.

"As I've said before, talkshow hosts wrap the public in a seal of ignorance, and anything beyond a talkshow host is madness, utter madness."

Kerry Woodham and Danny Watson face-off.

Murray Deaker – severe depression. Mike Hosking – bisexual child sex abuser. Paul Holmes – bisexual drug addict. Leighton Smith – ASIO/ CIA.

NewstalkZB

Bain Distraction

The CIA ran the Bain murder re-trial, and tried to rig it to find the then 17-year-old David Bain guilty again of murdering his entire family (despite all evidence to the contrary) . . . so that the police are not found to be 'a paedophile movement fronting as the peace police' as run by the CIA paedophile John Banks (former Minister of Police) . . . in order to take over Auckland, with the Bain murder retrial as the primary distraction.

I've met David Bain and so have my retired Intelligence contacts and we all agree that David Bain has a maximum 20 seconds of murder in him before he would burn out. The Bain murders (five of them) were done by someone who was used to killing, and most likely by several people at the same time.

I feel sorry for David Bain, since the person who has championed him is the former All Black Joe Karam, who is a good friend of Peter Williams QC (a treacherous sell-out) and has taken a lot of instructions from Williams (they used to play tennis together), not knowing that Peter Williams is an old dying MI-6 agent, compromised in that he is a bisexual MI-6 heroin trafficker, or at least Terry Clark's financial and legal lieutenant with foreknowledge of many intended murders, who then champions the innocent and exhausts the public, so the guilty is never charged. It is Peter Williams job to protect the guilty, and that's how he does it. Often he doesn't practise law, he has other lawyers do it, and just runs things from the background.

Williams has been dying for the last decade and has spent a fortune keeping himself alive, although this isn't the reason why he doesn't' pay his bills. (The mafia boss owes me five grand. The court referee exposed him for writing "a slavery contract".) He's just tight because he's compromised by the Australian Anti-Corruption Team (AACT).

A Compromised Government always has a role in Heroin Trafficking

Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser had a meeting in his limousine with the Australian detectives involved, just when they were preparing for the court case on the drug trafficking and murders:

"We are restructuring the 'Commonwealth Police' into the 'Federal Police' giving them wider powers, greater scope, including tracking narcotics." The 'Federal Narcotics Bureau' was disbanded" with MI-6 intervention.

Earlier, Sir Robert Mark conducted a review in 1978 and recommended the Australian Federal Police (AFP) be formed: "Administratively, a police force should be seen to be accountable to government . . . Operationally, it should be seen to be as free as possible from political influence . . . Any operational decision by a police force unduly subject to political interference will never be generally acceptable with consequent impairment of the reputation and status of the force . . . The ideal relationship is that the Chief Police Officer should pay the closest attention to the views of those whom he is administratively accountable to but that he, and he alone, should make operational decisions" . . . so the usual blah blah blah lies and cover-ups.

Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser (11 Nov. 1975–11 March 1983)

"On 15 June 1979 the Australian Federal Police Act established the Australian Federal Police (AFP) which merged the Commonwealth Police, Narcotics Bureau and the Australian Capital Territory police (ACT) which covered Canberra.

"There was three years of police association procrastination in the allegiance, and it wasn't until July 1982 that the Commonwealth Police Officers' Association (CPOA) and the Federal Police Association (FPA) merged establishing the Australian Federal Police Association (AFPA).

"The next month (August 1982) the Commonwealth Police Officers' Association changed their name to the Australian Federal Police Association (AFPA) – so like New Zealand, it was a change in name only – and in 1989 they incorporated all State, Territory and Federal Police branches, and affiliated with the Australian Council of Trade Unions – which is another large scale take over the country – a crime movement – with the Australian Federal Police Association lobbying for all Australian Police Associations/ unions under the guise of research, when really it's emetic shock testing on a public with ever decreasing interest in the crimes of the police."[27]

So what happened? Things were getting hot. It was becoming widely known amongst the public that the police were another gang involved in drug trafficking and murders – all the while receiving backhanders in their sandwiches wrapped in brown paper. So instead of charging the police and tainting the organisations, they created a new name, merged, let a few go, had the union associations adher slowly, then change their name, then reformed under a new union group – essentially MI-6 crime governance – and all was sweet in 'The Lucky Country'.

All of these changes (1978–89) went down during the Mr Asia heroin trafficking (1976–84 including the delayed 121 day trial).

PM Muldoon
(12 Dec. 1975–14/26 July 1984).

Undercover: "The heads of the new 'Australian Federal Police' decided who they would re-employ and sack. The straight coppers were declared redundant, some of the too-hot coppers became customs officers and cleared heroin trafficking cops through customs, and the really crooked ones rose to the top of the Federal Police. One of the most bent was arrested only recently."

Spymaster: "Around the same time, Prime Minister Robert Muldoon created the Nomads gang. He got Bully Hynes pulled out of the can (jail) and told him he was now a gang leader for Nomads."

Army Intel.: "Bully Hynes was named after a pirate in the South Island, who also helped found Dunedin."

Spymaster: "A lot of Maoris name their children after fighters or boxers, and Bully was no exception. Rob Muldoon told Hynes he was to take over Foxton – to guard the shipment of heroin from Thailand and Turkey (as arranged by Bob Trimbole/ Bob Jones & Bob Muldoon) as it was transported across the beach at Manukau Beach/ Waikawa Beach, just south of Levin and north of Otaki (100 km north of Wellington) – called 'The Cannibal Coast'.

They still use the three Bobs to this day to run the SIS – different Bobs, same name.

The Police sent one of their most crooked District Commanders to run this area (Foxton) out of Palmerston North. If you crossed him you were called 'Marked' – Marked for death', or in the case of Bully Hynes, his girlfriend was 'Marked for an accident'."

Wikipedia: "In 1977 the Nomads split from Black Power". Yeah right!

---

[27] Australian Federal Police Association, History. They really mix things up. The Police make their mergers sound honourable, when they are an ongoing cover-up for their ongoing crimes, and the end result is only a slight change of name, but all crimes of the police are washed, and now all under one new proud roof.

MI-6 takes over Australia

Admiral Sir John Kerr, Governor-General and slave to the Queen's heroin trafficking.

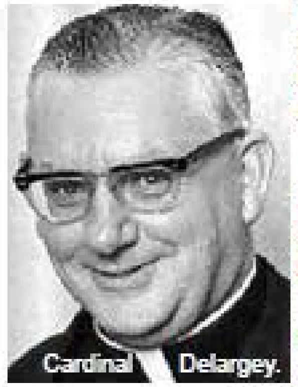
Australia wasn't just a 'dumping ground for excess convicts'. That's an Intelligence cover story. In the wake of the world shattering American Revolution (1775–83), Europeans settled Australia (1788–) as pro-American Republican political prisoners. They knew the British Crown/ Central Bank financial oligarchy was rape and pillaging the world so they formed the Labor Party.

When PM Gough Whitlam's Labour Government (5 December 1972–11 November 1975) threatened to 'buy back the farm' from Her Majesty's mineral cartels for the good of Australians, Queen Elizabeth II had Prime Minister Whitlam sacked, with the help of the Nugan Hand Bank.

Opposition Leader Malcolm Fraser worked with the Australian Governor-General Sir John Kerr and revoked Whitlam's commission on 11 November 1975 on the condition that he (Fraser) be immediately sworn in as caretaker prime minister, dissolve both Houses, and issue writs for an election.

So that was an inside job with MI-6 help.
You Aussies keep talking about it.

MI-6 takes over New Zealand



Cardinal Delargey.

Muldoon asked Cardinal Delargey for his current crop of priest trainees to go into the SIS for him; 35 years later they killed one of the SIS priests with instant cancer as he was believed to be talking to the NSW Royal Commission into paedophilia.

But more importantly Prime Minister Muldoon was worried the New Zealand Governor-General would do the same as Australia, so he called in the New Zealand Chiefs of Staff to stop it. It wasn't too hard to motivate them after all Muldoon had been in the military, militaries are ultimately funded by drugs, and the Governor-Generals were a soft touch. So here they are . . .

Blundell.

Sir Denis Blundell GCMG, GCVO, KBE, QSO (1907–1984) was Governor-General (27 September 1972–5 October 1977). He had served as Lieutenant-Colonel in the 2 NZEF (1939–44) and High Commissioner to Britain (1968–72) and since Britain ran WWII, Tavistock (hence Muldoon) and heroin trafficking – not to mention New Zealand's High Commission in London . . . so when Muldoon needed to get aproval for his heroin trafficking, he simply got MI-6 to phone the Governor-General who would influence anything and everything the WWII/ Tavistock/ heroin/ Muldoon required right through parliament, the judiciary and police.

And when Denis Blundell retired as G-G, there was a three week gap to slip things through (5–26 Oct. 1977) then we got . . .

Sir Keith Jacka Holyoake KG, GCMG, CH, QSO, KStJ (1904–83) who was the oldest Governor-General in New Zealand's history (26 October 1977–25 October 1980).

He wanted to retire from politics as his marriage was on the rocks via an aboriginal welterweight boxer called 'Buster Weir' who had been shagging Jacka's missus in the farm shed down by the river. Sir and Lady Holyoake virtually never spoke.

Sir Keith Jacka Holyoake had been National Party Prime Minister (20 September 1957–12 December 1957) after the removal of Sydney Holland ('Harry Fat') from parliament stuffed between two mattresses, thrown in the back of a red post office van and driven to Porirua Mental Hospital where he died four years later.

Brother Holyoake.

Holyoake was National Prime Minister again (12 Dec. 1960–7 Feb. 1972) then served as Governor-General for only three years because he was so old (aged 71–74) and could offer little or resistance, due to his compromised history of being cuckolded by an aboriginal, his age, his Freemasonry status, and his Freeman of the City of London status – one of the highest ceremonial civic honours in the Commonwealth, it also means Kiwi Keith could ride into the financial square mile of London bearing arms. Fat chance – good idea!

Holyoake spoke in a diplomatic plummy voice, so they maintained that his nickname was 'Kiwi Keith' from childhood, but he was an absolutely dedicated Freemason, with direct links to MI-6.

When Holyoake was Prime Minister, he was ultimately entertained by Christine Keeler and Mandy Rice-Davies[28] who were Mossad whores lent to MI-6 for the duration of the 60s. Holyoake went to England negotiating over frigates and returned to New Zealand with unnecessary frigates.

When the MI-6 Tavistock Muldoon became Prime Minister in 1975 he created a role for the Freemason Holyoake – "sinecure Minister of State" – which has little or no responsibility, labour, or active service, and no real day-to-day responsibilities. 'Sinecure' is essentially an easy salary and titles in exchange for plumby-voice-patronage when required – and due to his age, Freemasonry and City of London links, he would never be a threat to Muldoon's heroin trafficking government – which was essentially an extension of MI-6 – as was Holyoake.

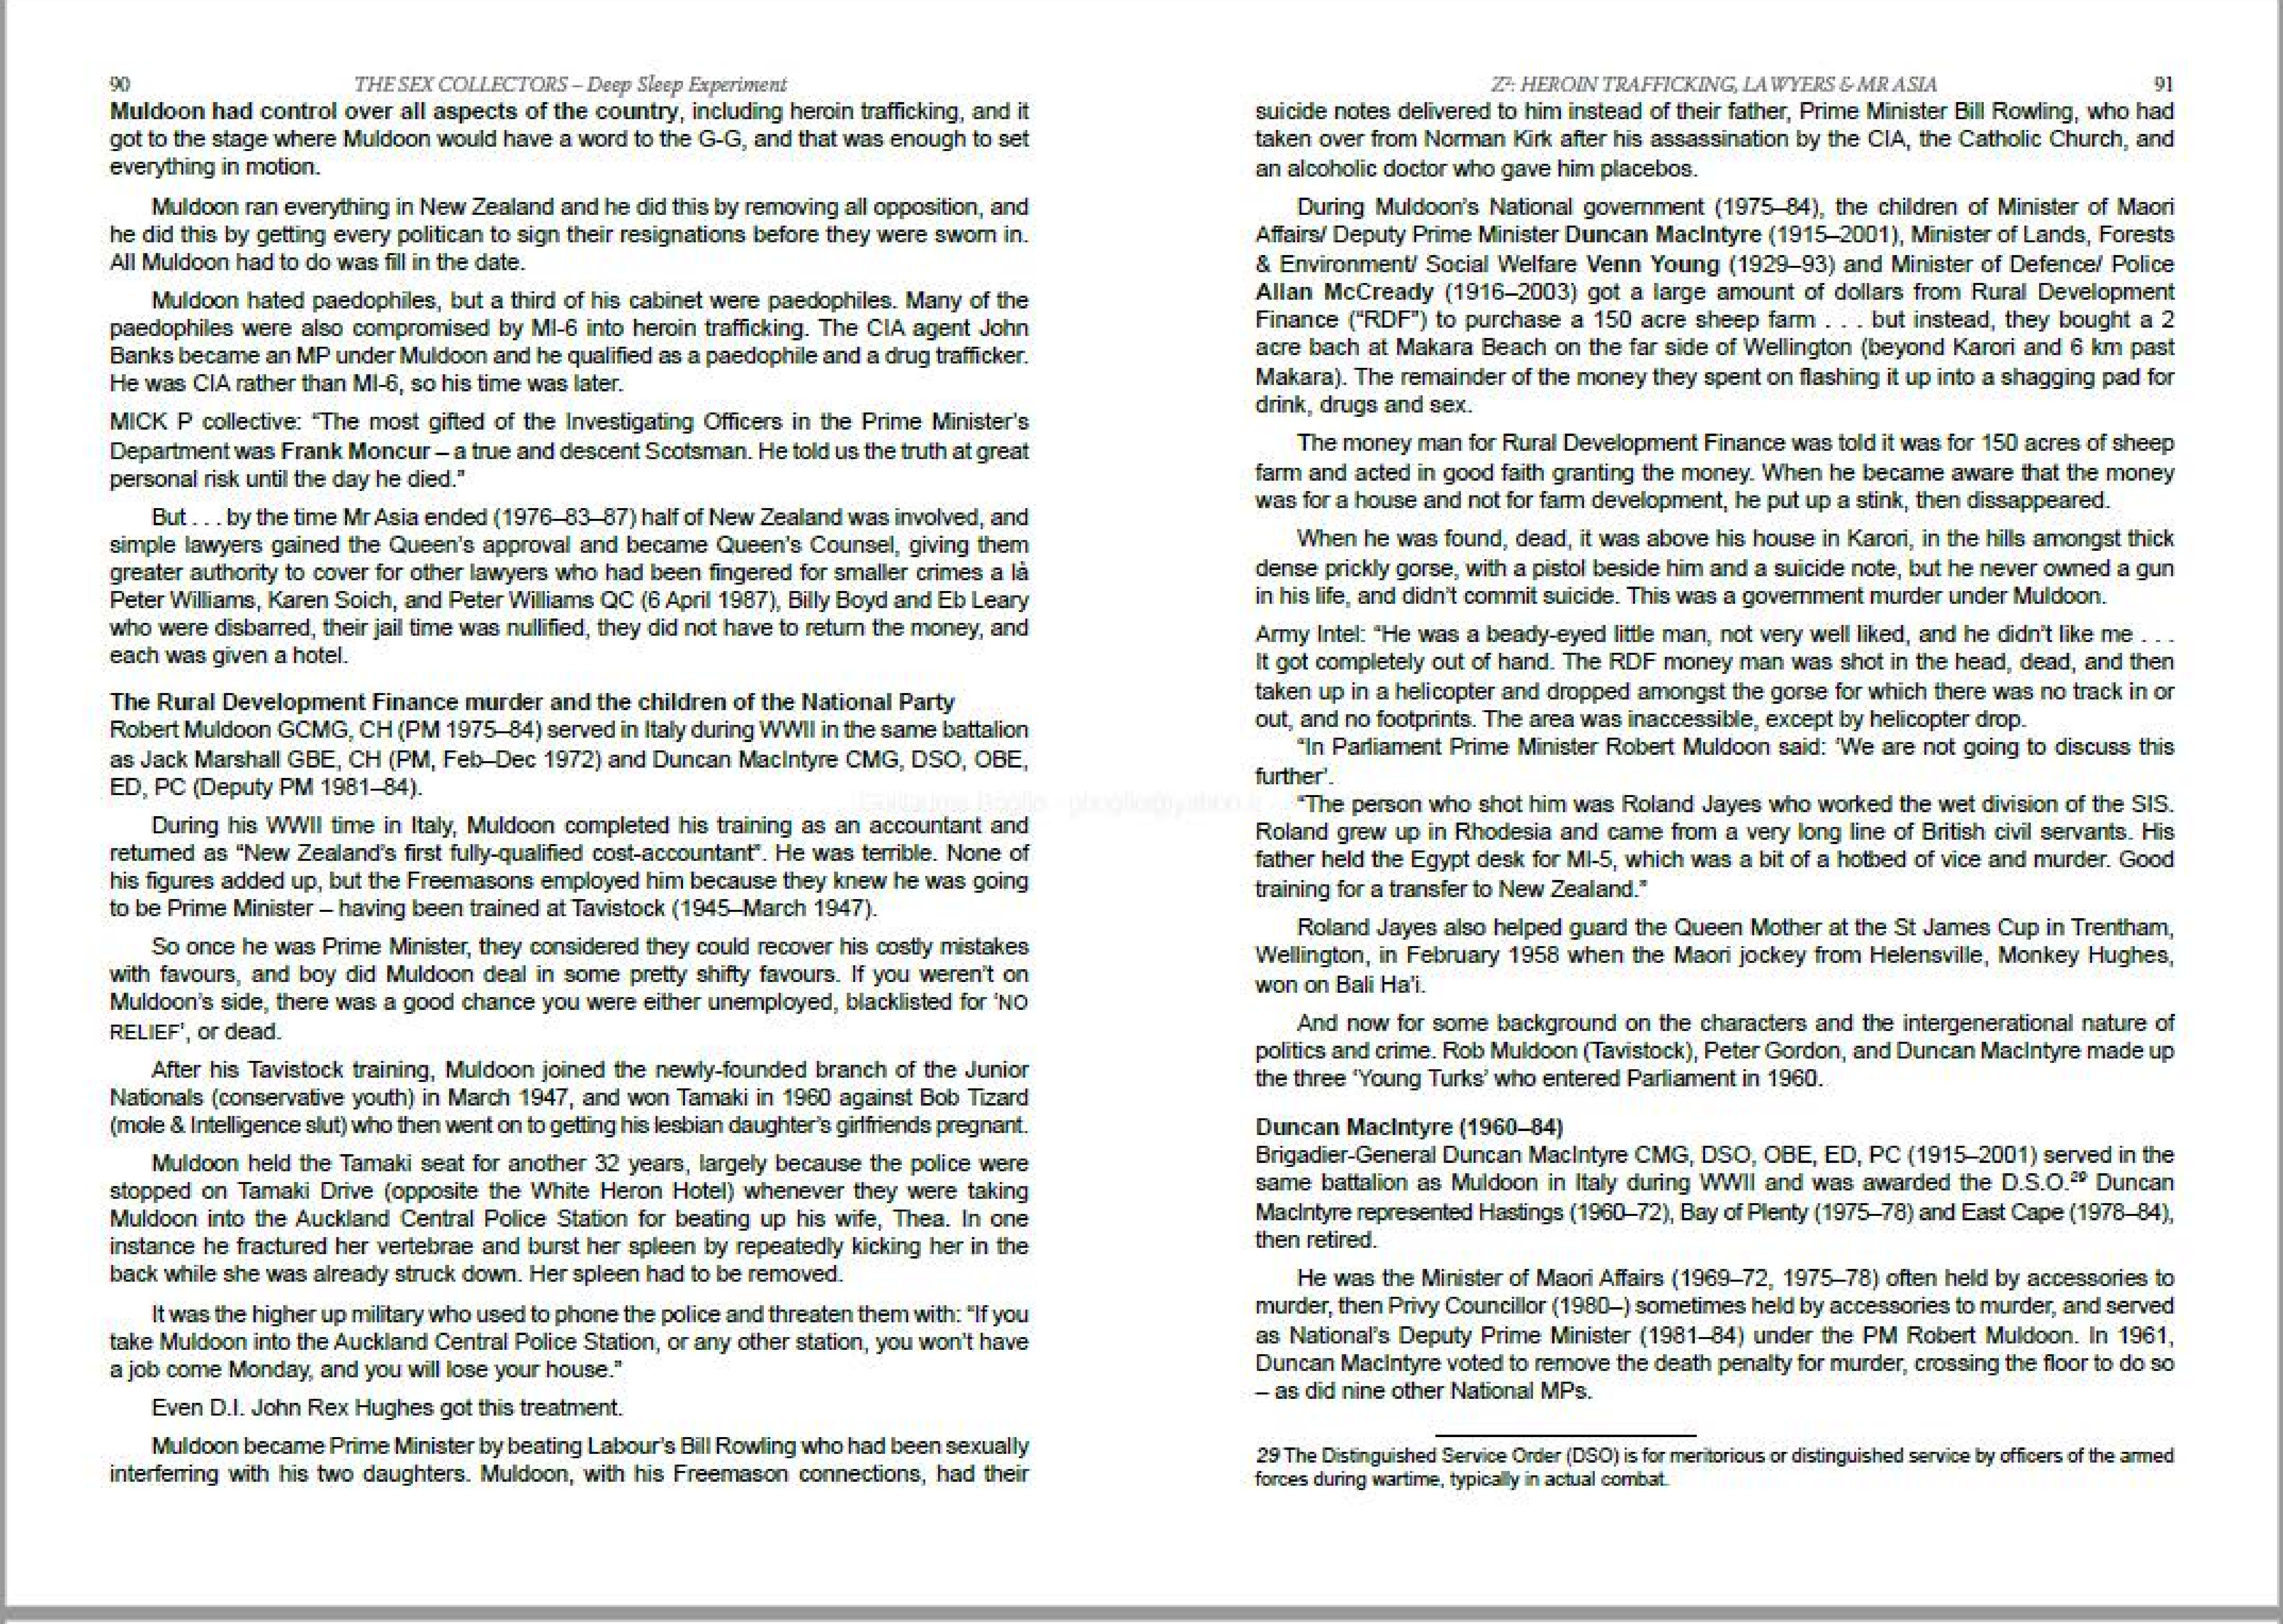
In 1977, Queen Elizabeth II announced Holyoake's appointment as G-G (Government-Gigilo) to a totally surprised New Zealand and many saw it as a controversial political appointment. Usually the most compromised person (who knows where the bodies are buried) becomes Governor-General. Holyoake no longer wanted to be in politics, and G-G gave him the opportunity to resign from the Pahiatua Electorate causing a bi-election.

Nice out.

---

[28] Mandy Rice-Davies had been married to an Israeli agent, lived in Israel and did busking there in 1966. She also had sex training in Israel, for Israel, against the British and her colonies.

Mandy.
Jacka.
Christine.



Muldoon had control over all aspects of the country, including heroin trafficking, and it got to the stage where Muldoon would have a word to the G-G, and that was enough to set everything in motion.

Muldoon ran everything in New Zealand and he did this by removing all opposition, and he did this by getting every politican to sign their resignations before they were sworn in. All Muldoon had to do was fill in the date.

Muldoon hated paedophiles, but a third of his cabinet were paedophiles. Many of the paedophiles were also compromised by MI-6 into heroin trafficking. The CIA agent John Banks became an MP under Muldoon and he qualified as a paedophile and a drug trafficker. He was CIA rather than MI-6, so his time was later.

MICK P collective: "The most gifted of the Investigating Officers in the Prime Minister's Department was Frank Moncur – a true and descent Scotsman. He told us the truth at great personal risk until the day he died."

But . . . by the time Mr Asia ended (1976–83–87) half of New Zealand was involved, and simple lawyers gained the Queen's approval and became Queen's Counsel, giving them greater authority to cover for other lawyers who had been fingered for smaller crimes a là Peter Williams, Karen Soich, and Peter Williams QC (6 April 1987), Billy Boyd and Eb Leary who were disbarred, their jail time was nullified, they did not have to return the money, and each was given a hotel.

The Rural Development Finance murder and the children of the National Party

Robert Muldoon GCMG, CH (PM 1975–84) served in Italy during WWII in the same battalion as Jack Marshall GBE, CH (PM, Feb–Dec 1972) and Duncan MacIntyre CMG, DSO, OBE, ED, PC (Deputy PM 1981–84).

During his WWII time in Italy, Muldoon completed his training as an accountant and returned as "New Zealand's first fully-qualified cost-accountant". He was terrible. None of his figures added up, but the Freemasons employed him because they knew he was going to be Prime Minister – having been trained at Tavistock (1945–March 1947).

So once he was Prime Minister, they considered they could recover his costly mistakes with favours, and boy did Muldoon deal in some pretty shifty favours. If you weren't on Muldoon's side, there was a good chance you were either unemployed, blacklisted for 'NO RELIEF', or dead.

After his Tavistock training, Muldoon joined the newly-founded branch of the Junior Nationals (conservative youth) in March 1947, and won Tamaki in 1960 against Bob Tizard (mole & Intelligence slut) who then went on to getting his lesbian daughter's girlfriends pregnant.

Muldoon held the Tamaki seat for another 32 years, largely because the police were stopped on Tamaki Drive (opposite the White Heron Hotel) whenever they were taking Muldoon into the Auckland Central Police Station for beating up his wife, Thea. In one instance he fractured her vertebrae and burst her spleen by repeatedly kicking her in the back while she was already struck down. Her spleen had to be removed.

It was the higher up military who used to phone the police and threaten them with: "If you take Muldoon into the Auckland Central Police Station, or any other station, you won't have a job come Monday, and you will lose your house."

Even D.I. John Rex Hughes got this treatment.

Muldoon became Prime Minister by beating Labour's Bill Rowling who had been sexually interferring with his two daughters. Muldoon, with his Freemason connections, had their suicide notes delivered to him instead of their father, Prime Minister Bill Rowling, who had taken over from Norman Kirk after his assassination by the CIA, the Catholic Church, and an alcoholic doctor who gave him placebos.

During Muldoon's National government (1975–84), the children of Minister of Maori Affairs/ Deputy Prime Minister Duncan MacIntyre (1915–2001), Minister of Lands, Forests & Environment/ Social Welfare Venn Young (1929–93) and Minister of Defence/ Police Allan McCready (1916–2003) got a large amount of dollars from Rural Development Finance ("RDF") to purchase a 150 acre sheep farm . . . but instead, they bought a 2 acre bach at Makara Beach on the far side of Wellington (beyond Karori and 6 km past Makara). The remainder of the money they spent on flashing it up into a shagging pad for drink, drugs and sex.

The money man for Rural Development Finance was told it was for 150 acres of sheep farm and acted in good faith granting the money. When he became aware that the money was for a house and not for farm development, he put up a stink, then dissapeared.

When he was found, dead, it was above his house in Karori, in the hills amongst thick dense prickly gorse, with a pistol beside him and a suicide note, but he never owned a gun in his life, and didn't commit suicide. This was a government murder under Muldoon.

Army Intel: "He was a beady-eyed little man, not very well liked, and he didn't like me . . . It got completely out of hand. The RDF money man was shot in the head, dead, and then taken up in a helicopter and dropped amongst the gorse for which there was no track in or out, and no footprints. The area was inaccessible, except by helicopter drop.

"In Parliament Prime Minister Robert Muldoon said: 'We are not going to discuss this further'.

"The person who shot him was Roland Jayes who worked the wet division of the SIS. Roland grew up in Rhodesia and came from a very long line of British civil servants. His father held the Egypt desk for MI-5, which was a bit of a hotbed of vice and murder. Good training for a transfer to New Zealand."

Roland Jayes also helped guard the Queen Mother at the St James Cup in Trentham, Wellington, in February 1958 when the Maori jockey from Helensville, Monkey Hughes, won on Bali Ha'i.

And now for some background on the characters and the intergenerational nature of politics and crime. Rob Muldoon (Tavistock), Peter Gordon, and Duncan MacIntyre made up the three 'Young Turks' who entered Parliament in 1960.

Duncan MacIntyre (1960–84)

Brigadier-General Duncan MacIntyre CMG, DSO, OBE, ED, PC (1915–2001) served in the same battalion as Muldoon in Italy during WWII and was awarded the D.S.O.[29] Duncan MacIntyre represented Hastings (1960–72), Bay of Plenty (1975–78) and East Cape (1978–84), then retired.

He was the Minister of Maori Affairs (1969–72, 1975–78) often held by accessories to murder, then Privy Councillor (1980–) sometimes held by accessories to murder, and served as National's Deputy Prime Minister (1981–84) under the PM Robert Muldoon. In 1961, Duncan MacIntyre voted to remove the death penalty for murder, crossing the floor to do so – as did nine other National MPs.

---

[29] The Distinguished Service Order (DSO) is for meritorious or distinguished service by officers of the armed forces during wartime, typically in actual combat.

Duncan's son, Hamish MacIntyre, was elected to Parliament (1990–96, Manawatu) and represented National, the Liberal Party and Alliance. Dissatisfied with the monetarist policy of moustached lesbian Ruth Richardson (known as 'Ruthanasia') he formed the New Zealand Liberal Party with National breakaway Gilbert Myles, and Frank Grover. This was soon absorbed into the left-wing Alliance Party run by the stickman, Jim Anderton. Hamish MacIntyre then stood for Alliance in 1996, failed and bowed out of politics, but he still gained enough public recognition and party hopping allegiance never to be charge with accessory to the murder of the Rural Development Finance money man.

Venn Young (1966–90)

Venn Spearman Young (16 Feb. 1929–14 Jan. 1993) was a dairy farmer, rugby player, Anglican and National MP (1966–90, Egmont, then Waitotara), then a Cabinet Minister under Muldoon.

Venn Young rooted transvestites.

Venn Young was also a drag queen fucker (right) – quite famous for it in New Plymouth and Wellington, and his wife kicked him out for it. Young tried and failed to legalise homosexuality in 1975, so we had some time left.

In mid-1974, Venn Young introduced a Private Members' Bill to make homosexual acts legal between consenting adults over 21 (then over 20) and was defeated 34 to 29 on 4 July 1975 with 23 'hiding-their-sexuality-as-many-politicians-are-bent-behind-closed-doors' abstained. This alienated Young from many of his National (conservative) colleagues, but not enough to prevent them committing a crime together.

Muldoon became Prime Minister (12 December 1975–14/26 July 1984) and appointed Venn Young as Minister of 'Lands, Forests, and Environment' (1975–81) and Public Works, then Minister of Social Welfare (1981–84). Venn Young retired at the 1990 Election and died three years later from a heart attack, leaving a wife and nine children.

His son, Jonathan Young became a primary school teacher, a Maori language teacher, a National Financial Administrator for the AGNZ (Agriculture New Zealand, Fielding), a Senior Minister at City Church Waitakere in West Auckland for 18 years, then won the New Plymouth seat for National (2008–) defeating Harry 'dances-like-a-chicken' Duynhoven – a collossal wanker in any mirror . . . but by less than 1 %.

This is all very slightly interesting, but it was Venn Young's daughter, Annette Young, that was involved in the Makara Beach shagpad/ accessory to murder. It does however go to show that politics is an intergenerational crime family.

MICK P: "Annette Young, entered Parliament for a short time" although I can't find a record of it. Wikipedia shows the "Annette's" dominated by Annette King, the Minister of Health who trafficked heroin, then became the Minister of Police, then the Minister of Justice.

Allan McCready (1960–78)

Allan McCready (1916–2003) QSO was an National MP (1960–72, Otaki, 1972–78, Manawatu) Minister of Defense (9 February–8 December 1972 & 22 July 1975–13 December 1978), Minister of Police (1975–78), then retired.

Army Intel. I: "In 1943, five Kiwi soldiers (one of them Allan McCready) were on final leave back in New Zealand when they dragged a housemaid around behind the Catholic Church – St Mary of the Angels, in Boulcott Street, Wellington – and gang raped her. The group were charged. It went before the Magistrate. They were prosecuted, and sentenced to the cognisance of their commanding officer who placed them on a ship the next day, to serve overseas at war."

Army Intel. II: "In the old days there were no passports and everything went under the auspices of the military. If you had any gripe with a person/ criminal travelling, you took it up with the military and they served you with a big pack of lies, either on plate, on a tray, or straight in the teeth. This lasted until the end of the Vietnam War (1975) when passports were enforced.[30]

"He should have been prosecuted and locked in the can . . . There were prisoners serving for murder that were allowed out of jail to serve in WWII. Despite that, McCready should have been imprisoned for gang rape. Instead he was made Minister of Police."

Gang rapist, Allan McCready, became Minister of Defence (1972, 1975–78), Minister of Police (1975–78) and was then knighted as Sir Allan McCready QSO. Who says knighthoods aren't a cover for paedophilia, murder and file theft. Now we can add gang-banger.

Army Intel. III: "To place a compromised person in charge of Defense is a Counter-Intelligence measure, and to elevate him to a knighthood just goes to show who was running the Counter-Intelligence operation – the British – MI-6 again."

But what we get on the news is the small news, and even that comes through fringe channels: ". . . debates amongst National Party MPs during the early 1960s over the issue [unionism] brought considerable tensions. And when things get hysterical in National Party caucus meetings, as we all know, things get real rough. Tom Shand, the fourth ranked Cabinet minister, incensed his colleagues so much with his support of retaining compulsory unionism that at one point during a debate, two backbench fellow National MP's physically assaulted him: Allan McCready . . . 'got Shand in a headlock' while Geoff Sim 'belted Shand with a stick'."[31]

Muldoon was a bit of a masochist

Army Intel.: "Private Len H. had a temper that went off once a year, and then you didn't want to get in his way. He was based in Italy and shared a tent with Muldoon.

"The roads leading up to Casino were all pre-registered by the Germans, which meant they knew the range, were dropping shells right on the top of the road, and knew how to shoot and bomb them at night.

"One day this Pole truck driver got mesmerised by the shelling and froze, so Private Len H. went up and bashed him and told someone else to drive the truck.

"The Military Police wanted to arrest Private Len H. but the Maori truck driver, whose job it was to remove the blown up trucks off the road, stood behind Len H. and backed him saying to the Poms: 'If you want him, you have to go through me' . . . and the Poms said: 'Let's take another view of this – Poles versus Kiwis – there's no reason for us to get involved.' And the Corporal said: 'Yes, there's no reason for us to get involved'; and the Lance Corporal said: 'Yes, there's no reason for us to get involved'; and the Pommy Private said: 'Yes, there's no reason for us to get involved'; so no one got involved.

---

[30] Wikipedia: "The United Nations held a travel conference in 1963, but passport guidelines did not result from it. Passport standardisation came about in 1980, under the auspices of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)."

[31] 'Rumble In The Bumble: Violence in NZ Politics', Oliver Woods, 27 February 2008; http://nzquest.blogspot.com/2008/02/rumble-in-bumble-violence-in-nz.html.

"On the banks of the River Po, near Florence, Italy, Private Len H. shared a tent with Robert Muldoon while he was studying to become New Zealand's first fully qualified cost-accountant. Private Len H. hated Muldoon and somebody somewhere else got pissed. Having had a few drinks himself, Private Len H. went for Muldoon and hit him with an army canteen full of plonk on the side of the noggen, and then whacked him with a big crescent on the other side of the head . . . He tried to kill him . . . perhaps he was a fortune teller.

"Strangely Muldoon was so impressed, he promoted Private Len H. alongside him as he rose through the ranks of the National Party.

"Len H. became a Presbyterian Elder and totally bent accountant, as bent as a fishhook in line for huge share issues from Muldoon, but then so was Muldoon – a bent accountant (nothing added up) and in line for his own share issues.

"Loved a bit of violence did Muldoon . . . even on himself."

Muldoon was a bit of a sadist (a lot of people had mortal accidents under him)

Army Intelligence: "A lot of people had accidents under Muldoon. The caretaker on Fitzgerald's farm (which was only about 2 acres) officially shot himself, but he was blown away by the SAS. This was at Makara (6 km from Makara Beach) below the graben (depressed land bordered by parallel earthquake faults) in the 1970s.

"Makara was a bit of a place for killing, but most of the murders were done over the other side of the Wellington Heads at Red Rocks which then didn't have a coastal road. Red Rocks was the true killing ground for the underworld in Wellington.

"There's a stream that runs down to the sea with shingles that are particularly easy to dig. On one occasion a missing young blonde girl was found there, but she wasn't reported as the finder was burying a pistol he had just broken up."

The media can create something out of hot air, but when the air gets hot . . .

Army Intel. I: "The Rural Development Finance murder/ children of the National Party shagpad became known as the 'Fitzgerald Loan Affair', but never told the full story.

"National MP Kenneth 'Ken' Mark Comber (1939–) was a fine rugby player for New Zealand Universities, and won Wellington Central (1972–81) by one vote and that's why he was called 'Landslide Ken'."

Army Intel. II: "In 1966 he married Diane Holyoake in a politically incestuous marriage. His father-in-law was Sir Keith Holyoake became Prime Minister and Governor-General. Ken Comber was supposed to take over from Muldoon as Prime Minister but it never turned out that way."

Army Intel. I: "Ken Comber freed up Maori land at Kinlock in Taupo. No sooner had he done so than the Holyoake family trust bought it at a good price, then the Kinlock development started. They built hundreds of holiday homes and made an absolute fortune and the Maoris, already paid out for their land, lost the opportunity to make improvements on it. Ken Comber also got entangled in the Fitzgerald Loan Affair."

Army Intel. I: "This involved a scrap over Fitzgerald and the son of a Cabinet Minister who was marrying Duncan MacIntyre's daughter, in another incestuous marriage within the National Party – one of these power sharing marriages. They ended up going to the High Court over the Minister of Agriculture, but the court was got at – as everything was for sale under Muldoon – and when there's enough heat, the media simply disappears.

"The media can create something out of hot air, but when the air gets hot, the media evapourates."

Army Intel. II: "Then they had another bank to save small towns, so a grant was given to Fielding to buy an icecream company to boost the town, but it put 300 people in Waipukarau out of work. There was a meeting to try and stop it. Gordon Christie was the Labour MP. The National MP was a big tall upper crust Tory and former Parson (d. 2007). Neither turned up to the meeting."

After the murder of Norman Kirk, the absence of Bill 'Peewee Herman' Rowling, and the ravages of S&M Muldoon, things just got worse with the transvestite-rooter David Lange.

Prime Minister David Lange's Fat Frolicking Foibles (1984–89)

Former 2IC of the SIS: "David Lange was a disturbed man. He was disturbed by his wife Naomi who failed him on all fronts, but she was English and therefore more or less a cover wife – someone stupid enough to turn a blind eye to her husband's sex with transvestites . . . you can't get much more British than that."

Army Intel. I: "Lange went to the SIS and the CIA and asked them to remove the prostitute in drag who had given him a blowjob by the duck pond in the Auckland Domain and phoned him the next day asking for money.

"They demurred on it (wouldn't do it).

"ASIO then accepted control of the mission and they let it to ASIS who did it.

"He/she was killed in Sydney and Lange was then blackmailed over this by the Australians.

"So then the obese David Lange removed 'Criminal libel and slander' to cover for this transvestite rooting."

David Lange was a disturbed man with disturbing glasses, a disturbing hairdo, disturbing eyes, a mouth that never stopped eating, and an English wife with a monobrow and a penchant for cardigan Methodism.

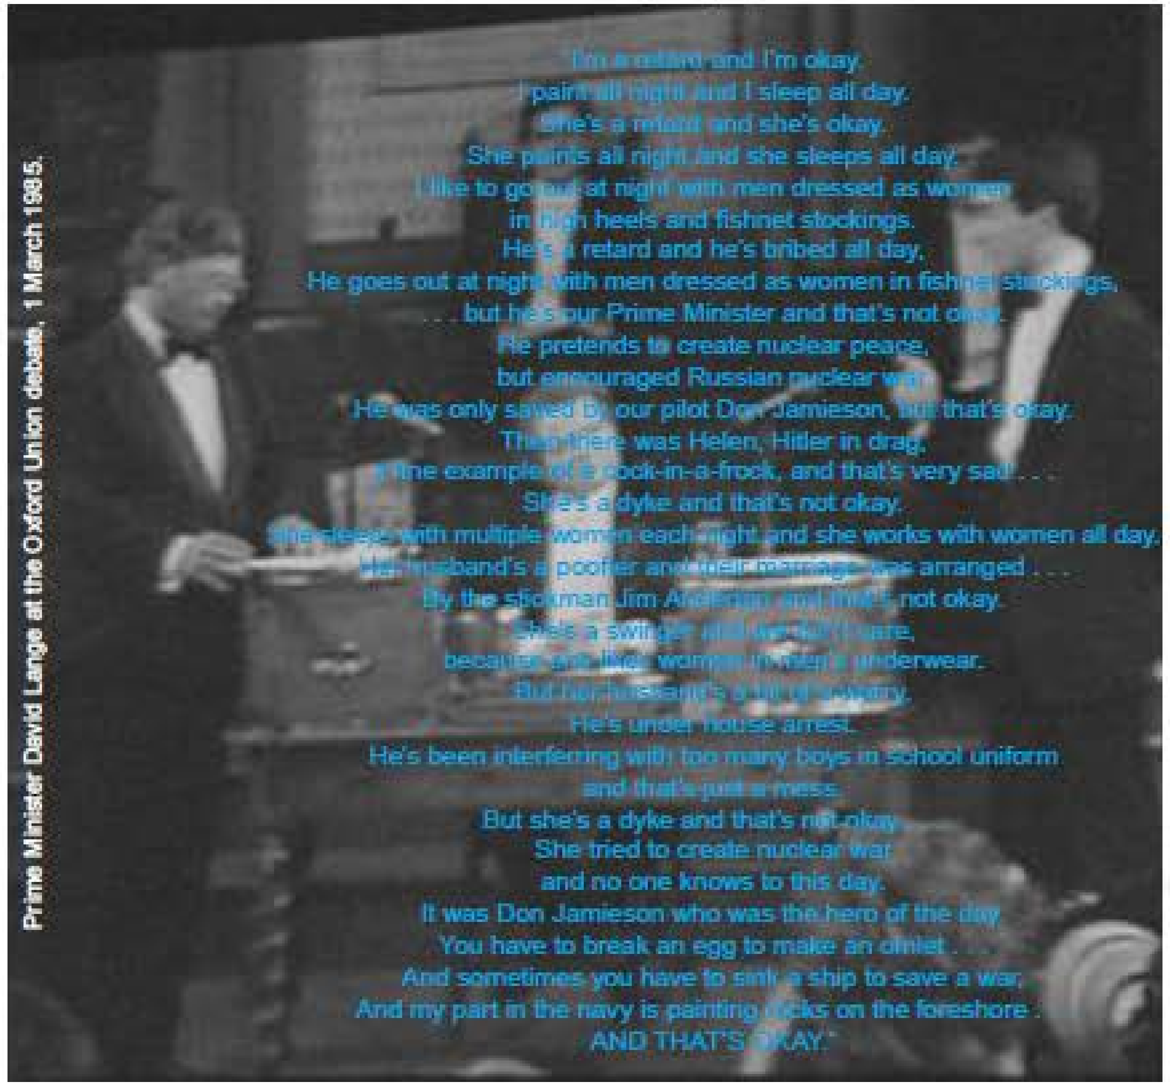
Army Intel. II: "David Lange had a problem with sleeping as he had too much fat and not enough muscle to burn off the food he had eaten. Parliament's Bellamy's restaurant soaked the food in all sorts of fat and kept three friers going for the politicians. This kept them stupid. So Lange would drag race cars around Wellington at night in preparation for the race in Levin. He was eventually beaten by the determine cook, Alison Holst.

"Late one night, he hit this Shelly Bay Air Force base employee outside the Waterloo pub by the railway station in Wellington. The employee was drunk at the time and not hurt, so it turned into something of a publicity stunt for Subaru cars."

Army Intel. I: "Lange also ran over a naval reserve seaman one night while showing another transvestite around the docks – like they didn't already know their way around. The seaman was then interrogated in Wellington Hospital by an Intelligence Officer who ascertained that he was too thick to get into the navy, so the I.O. arranged a navy interview and gave him instructions, which he memorised.

"In the interiew he said: 'I saw someone in high black fishnet stockings getting out of Lange's vehicle', and that got him into the navy, into a sleeping job. Now he's the stone painter at the Devonport Naval Base. He paints the roadside stones – then he starts again and paints the roadside stones."

I believe the song at the back of his head, which he can't quite grasp, goes something like this:



Prime Minister David Lange at the Oxford Union debate, 1 March 1985.

I'm a retard and I'm okay.
I paint all night and I sleep all day.
She's a retard and she's okay.
She paints all night and she sleeps all day.
I like to go out at night with men dressed as women in high heels and fishnet stockings.
He's a retard and he's bribed all day,
He goes out at night with men dressed as women in fishnet stockings,
. . . but he's our Prime Minister and that's not okay.
He pretends to create nuclear peace,
but encouraged Russian nuclear war.
He was only saved by our pilot Don Jamieson, but that's okay.
Then there was Helen, Hitler in drag, a fine example of a cock-in-a-frock, and that's very sad . . .
She's a dyke and that's not okay.
She sleeps with multiple women each night and she works with women all day.
Her husband's a poofter and their marriage was arranged . . .
By the stockman Jim Anderton and that's not okay.
She's a swinger and we don't care, because she likes women in men's underwear.
But her husband's a bit of a worry.
He's under house arrest.
He's been interfering with too many boys in school uniform and that's just a mess.
But she's a dyke and that's not okay.
She tried to create nuclear war and no one knows to this day.
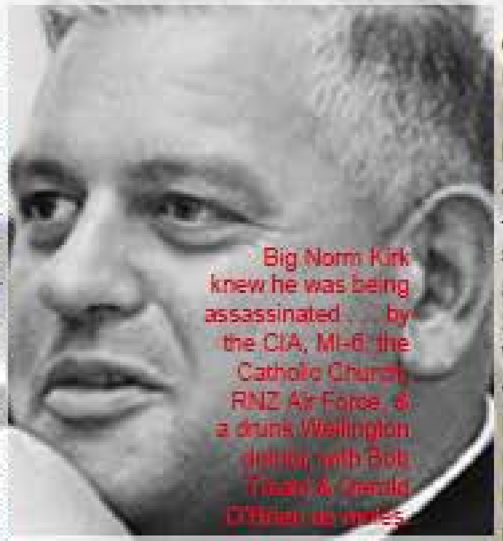
It was Don Jamieson who was the hero of the day.
You have to break an egg to make an omlet . . .
And sometimes you have to sink a ship to save a war,
And my part in the navy is painting rocks on the foreshore . . .
AND THAT'S OKAY."

Prime Minister Norman Kirk's Assassination (8 December 1972–31 August 1974)
Before the ravages of Muldoon and the transvestite-rooting of Lange, we had Norman Kirk – the talking whistle. Norm Kirk's friend: "He used to complain that he had spent so much time on uncomfortable seats in school halls attending the most boring meetings, that by the time he got the big job – he was stuffed. Then, in the first ten days, when the Yanks and the Brits came to present their credentials, 'they were actually twisting my arm behind my back and tying both ankles, as they dictated to me what was going to happen'. 'There was nothing I could do', he used to say."

Army Intel. II: "Norm Kirk ran a 'Think Tank' which included Bill Sutch, Gerald O'Brien, and Bob Tizard. Kirk wanted his Labour government to take over all the lucrative insurance in the country – to nationalise all insurance policies – to buy them out with a moratorium (they wouldn't pay out the insurance companies for another ten years) – then there would be no need for tax. When the "nationalised" word got out to the insurance companies, people rang O'Brien from all around the world every two minutes. They even rang him at the picture theatre and left messages. This was an official government pressure cooker to make him go mad. Gerald O'Brien (RNZAF, 1943–46) was married to a Russian communist so he was easily compromised by his strange sexual practises. MPs, communists and the RNZAF are renowned for it."

Internal Affairs Undercover: "Gerald O'Brien was flying up the North Island from Wellington to Auckland when he pulled a gun on this 13-year-old schoolboy and said: 'My name is Gerald O'Brien. I'm the MP for Island Bay and I want you to give me a blow job'. The gun was an air pistol but it fired a globular round. The boy was in someone else's school uniform, from another school, but he turned out to be a 16-year-old boy on some sort of secret mission (probably drug trafficking), so because he was over 16, the crime of 'propositioning' could not be enforced. Gerald was a not very subtle Catholic. He had used the same gun and the same language in Wellington on Mt Victoria two weeks prior. The Labour Party then said: 'Oopps, Gerald O'Brien's got a drinking problem. We can have a paedophile, yes, but alcoholic, no, so he has to go.' I was in the District Court in Wellington when Gerald O'Brien was charged with making the boy give him a blowjob at gunpoint on Mt Vic.. The funny thing was the Judge and Defense Counsel were pissed off that the cops had charged him. Gerald O'Brien was the Labour Party president, then became a trustee of 'The Norman Kirk Memorial Trust'."



Big Norm Kirk knew he was being assassinated . . . by the CIA, MI-6, the Catholic Church, RNZ Air Force, & a drunk Wellington dentist with Bob Tizard & Gerald O'Brien [illegible]

NZSIS: "Bob Tizard (husband of Cath Tizard) was the mole that ratted on Norman Kirk leading to his assassination . . . Rufus Youngblood was a Negro college football player who joined the CIA and worked at the American Embassy in Wellington as a gardener – code for bodyguard. He was pleasant, tall and skinny, looked like a cross between Sydney Poitier and Barack Obama, and used to drink at the Shamrock Hotel, the Irish pub on Rintoul Street in Wellington, where, if you pretended to be a guest, you could stay after six and up'til midnight. Here, Rufus talked about Jazz and the history of blues. Rufus Youngblood was famous for throwing himself over Jackie Kennedy after JFK was shot multiple times with the single magic bullet . . . Rufus Youngblood had relatives in New Zealand and was seeing them at the time of Kirk's death. The CIA motto is 'To protect American business' and Rufus was qualified . . . Labour then let their feet follow their assassination suspicions, eventually deselected Gerald O'Brien for Island Bay (1969–78) and replaced him with Frank O'Flynn. O'Brien then ran against O'Flynn, so there was no love lost from either side.

Reginald Delargey's mother died when he was 14 while he was at Sacred Heart 'masochists' College at 250 West Tamaki Rd,Glendowie, Auckland. Three years later he went to the Holy Cross College in Mosgeil (15 km southwest of Dunedin) and studied for a Priesthood, then went to the Pontifical Urbaniana University in Rome – "remember the Day of Atonement and deny, lie, deny" – from where he was ordained as a priest for the Diocese of Auckland in 1938.[32]

Priest Delargey (10 December 1914–29 January 1979) then worked in a parish in Takapuna and at St Patrick's Cathedral (43 Wyndham St, CBD, where I crashed the Nazi funeral) and was then the Director of Catholic Social Services for the Diocese of Auckland (1940–47) just when all the children were missing their protective biological fathers during WWII.

Priest Delargey was then chaplain at St Peter's College (Mountain Rd, Epsom) and also served as director of the Catholic Youth Movement (both circa 1950–68). Here he briefed the Catholic Brothers in the morning mass and attended to the boys in the afternoon.

---

[32] Wikipedia: Norman Kirk; Peter Cardinal McKeefry; Reginald Cardinal Delargey; St. Patrick's; St Peter's College, Auckland.

Reginald John Cardinal Delargey was the Roman Catholic Bishop of Auckland, then the Cardinal Archbishop of Wellington and the Metropolitan of New Zealand from 1974. His title was Cardinal-Priest of Immacolata al Tiburtino.

The previous Archbishop of Wellington and Metropolitan of New Zealand was Cardinal Peter McKeefry – the son of a police constable. He recruited priest from Ireland and developed 39 new parishes (1947–69) most of them associated with primary schools – and paedophilia. New Zealand's first Cardinal, McKeefry (74), died on 18 November 1973.

Cardinal Reginald John Delargey replaced him on 25 April 1974 . . . four months later Prime Minister Norman Kirk was dead (6 January 1923–31 August 1974).

Spymaster: "Cardinal Delargey was as queer as a fuck. He loved schoolboy's arses and looked after the queer bus drivers. He also knocked off Norman Kirk who was a . . ."

Author: "Salvation Army coal-shovelling nouveau communist who engendered empathy as the 'talking whistle'."

Spymaster: "That'll do."

Norman Kirk's bodyguard: "Big Norm was murdered on 31 August 1974 after spending three days in a Catholic hospital, all the while complaining that he didn't want to be in a Catholic hospital because he sincerely believed the Catholics were trying to kill him."

Army Intell. Medical Orderly: "A specialist in vascular surgery in Wellington Hospital, a drunk and a butcher, killed Norman Kirk. The last vestige of medicine of every drunken rogue is to put a shingle up in hospital and he treated old drunks and chopped arms and legs off them because they'd come down with gangrene[33] as they used to live pretty rough, are drunk all day, and fall over and suffer a fractured arm or leg. Before long it would be a major annoyance, then they'd be seen by a cop or an ambulance officer limping around the joint and they'd have this horrendous wound that was already in the final stages of gas gangrene and they'd find themselves in hospital getting amputated before they even knew what was happening. Drunks take two to three days to come down and start withdrawl, so if they operate on them in the first 24 hours of admission, the surgeon gets away without protest because they don't feel a thing for the first day and a night.

"This wombat surgeon would operate on them and he'd stick their stumps together with steri-strips (bits of paper) and they'd get back into the ward and the girls would clean and irrigate them – introduce water to it – and the whole wound would start to fall apart and the wombat surgeon would amputate again on the stump.

"After that had been done twice, they'd usually die.

"In one case he operated on the right hip when the left one was broken, then claimed the notes weren't clear."

The Spymaster Collective: "Operation HIGHTOWER originally came out of Vietnam – killing bods who were counteractive to American war aims. They were killing American military personnel by it as well. Operation HIGHTOWER was the military assistance programme for killing leaders and was bastardised into killing leaders all around the world. The CIA methodology is to kill everybody.

"At a conference in the Philippines, the Americans gave New Zealand Prime Minister Norm Kirk the poisoned handshake – Thallium[34] – courtesy of an American under the extended and expanded Operation HIGHTOWER. The American had wax on his hand, then the thallium. They use other barriers now.

"The Americans moved against Kirk by giving him heavy metal poisoning. They gave him instant cancer where you're guaranteed to die within three to four weeks.

"As treatment, Norman Kirk was put on placebos[35] yet he was known to have DVTs – Deep Vain Thrombosis and circulation problems because of his weight. Kirk was the last person who should have been on placebos. Placebos condemned him to death."

The CIA killed New Zealand Prime Minister Norm Kirk with a Thallium handshake in the Philippines.

Spymaster: "Justice Speight shot off old man McKray's arm as he was rooting his wife on a yacht moored off Kawau Island. No one was charged.

"McKray employed the biggest bunch of homo bus drivers this side of the Bombay Hills. They were bisexual Catholic ex-schoolboys who all knew Cardinal Delargey – who influenced the SIS from the Catholic Church and was chief of dirty tactics, known as "Captain D". He certainly had the credentials . . ."

I.O. "The paedophile bus drivers lived together in a house on the North Shore, eventually in Hauraki Corner and routinely met the police up the road. The police adopted a very legalistic means of dealing with them saying: 'We don't want to prosecute you because you're a very good source of information'.

"This is why paedophile inquiries in New Zealand don't go anywhere because they are just the best bunch of rats and grass off everyone. And this is why the police are forced, without actually liking them, to shield and protect them from everybody else with hostile intent . . . and this applies all the way up to NHQ – who are Catholic Freemasons.

"The police say: 'We don't like the paedophilia, and it's a major tragedy to us that we are forced to look after them so well. And if we had our own way, we would come down on them like a ton of bricks, but unfortunately that will never happen.'"

Spymaster: "One of the queer bus drivers was rooting his own daughter. He was a bisexual and had a house in West Auckland. His name was Mr McG. His criminal codename was 'the Cripple Crab'. His wife didn't know her daughter was being molested by her father, but would encourage her to get into bed, as she was sick. She slept in another room and he had all the pills and substances to knock his wife out, or write her off.

"Cripple Crab McG used to seduce his daughter and tell her he loved her. It was a complicated scenario of mind games that no child could reasonably be expected to counter. He was having sex with her before his wife died and nobody but the Catholic Church knew about it . . . and they did nothing to report it.

"Cripple Crab was in and out of Australia and used to have such friends as the Lord Mayor of Wollongong (100 km south of Sydney) – a paedophile running a paedophile ring who was later chopped up and found in many pieces all over his house. The murderer got dressed up in his clothes, so there was some sick revenge shit going on.

"Cripple Crab's daughter tried to bring charges against her own father, but the police became upset by this and tried to shield Cripple Crab as it's not a good look for a daughter to bring charges against the father, especially for a horrible crime such as incestuous paedophilia . . . and the police were forced to look after the father because he and his friends were rampant paedophiles, but the police resented protecting everybody as much as they possible could, so they lined the guy up in court. But before everybody got to Court, they cleared the court so nobody could hear the charges, then they dissappeared Cripple Crab McG – the incestuous paedophile.

---

[33] Gangrene: necrosis or death of soft tissue due to obstructed circulation, usually followed by decomposition and putrefaction.

[34] Thallium (Tl, 81): Used as a salt in rodenticides – the salt in rat poison.

[35] Placebo: a substance having no pharmacological effect, but given merely to satisfy a patient who believes it is medicine; a substance having no pharmacological effect but administered as a control in testing experimentally or clinically the efficacy of a biologically active preparation; Roman Catholic Church: 'the vespers of the office for the dead', named after the initial word of the first antiphon, in Psalm 114:9 of the Vulgate; origin, 1775–85: "I shall be pleasing, acceptable". Heaven is another placebo.

"The police, in such paedophile cases, routinely bring the most minor charge that the paedophile has pleaded guilty to. They ignore the more serious charges that could and should have been laid. This is why I believe New Zealand can rightly be called 'A paedophile ring masquerading as a country'."

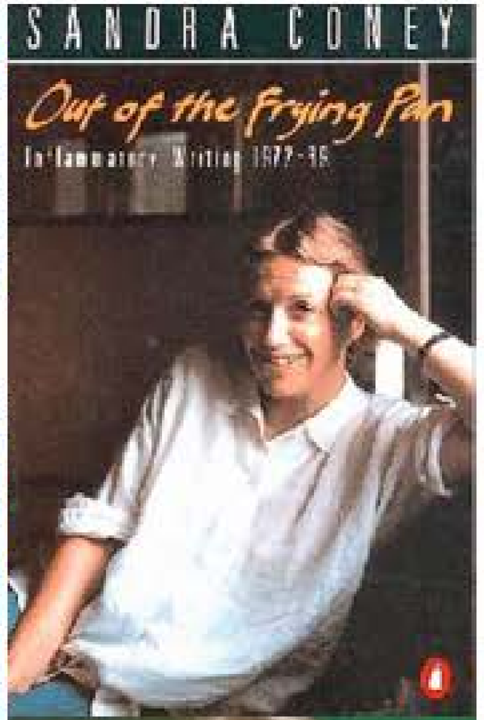
Pommy Detective in New Zealand to the Spymaster: ". . . Not because we were protecting him, but because they were just minding him, and you have absolutely no right to claims that we were looking after him because we weren't, and even though we didn't bring all the evidence that the daughter brought against him, we couldn't, just because we couldn't face it, and you have absolutely no justification in saying we looked after him, and if you spread that around, we will hunt you down and kill you, okay . . . I hate you because I know that you yourself are involved in more crimes than our guy has even thought about perpetrating, and one day I'm going to catch you with all the library books that you have been stealing – and there will be a massacre" . . . Sooo . . . more FUCKWITTERY.

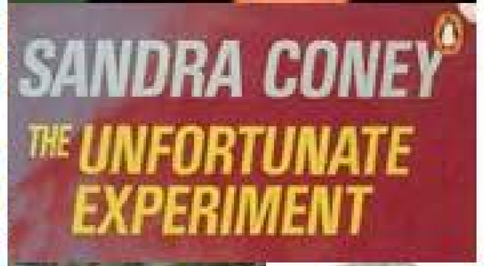
But it's not the men who are all bad – there's also Sandra Coney won the Auckland University competition to root the most people in the shortest amount of time in the 1960s. She caught all sorts of diseases, gonohrrhea, chlamydia etc and gave her parents a lot of grief. Her father, Tom Pearce, was chairing the sexually fringe ARC at the time (1965–76) . . . and by the 1990s Sandra thought the competition was still going.

Dame Cath Tizard was one of her competitors and when she got fat, she moved to transvestites and into a rotund orange velour tracksuit. The only thing missing was the white high-heels, but K'Rd was underfoot.

Sandra Coney did the book on National Women's Hospital, which caused the Professor, Dr Herbert Green to commit suicide in 2001, the same way Attorney-General Martyn Finlay did it on Tohunga Crescent in Parnell. He gassed himself in his car in the garage. He wasn't into drugs, but the official version was 'he got his pills mixed up'.

Dr Green was anti-abortion, a member of SPCU (Society for the Prevention of the Unborn Child) and Head of National Women's Hospital up to the beginning of the 1990s and "once described as one of world's 25 outstanding physicians".





"Dr Green believed the pre-cancerous condition did not automatically lead to cancer and that radical treatment like hysterectomies could be avoided."[36]

Good on you mate. Cancer is one of the biggest cons in history and hysterectomies, or 'her-director-me'.

"The women's treatment was reviewed in a seven-month judicial inquiry by Dame Silvia Cartwright (1987–88) which concluded the study was unethical"[37] – interesting because Cartwright is unethical and the most gender-biased judge in New Zealand's history, with 18 complaints against her, mainly for gender bias. She simply hates men and her husband lives in fear of her fridge magnet vagina – it's cold and all issues stick to it.

The horrible Sandra Coney did a letter writing campaign against Dr Green, with the purpose of changing the gender of the fanny-gawkers. If her out-come is viewed as successful, this is the only change.

Five or six of these Coney feminists wrote letters under six different names each, then referred to other people and made it look like a movement, but it was only five or six dragons.

The whole thing was a swopsy operation to change the gender of who would look at cunts. The female gender won, and since then, the midwives have been up on murder charges for killing babies using all sorts of witchcraft.

My favourite excuse from a midwife is:

"It's traditional Maori practise to leave the baby in the womb for up to ten days overdue with the chord wrapped around its neck" – FUCKWITTERY.

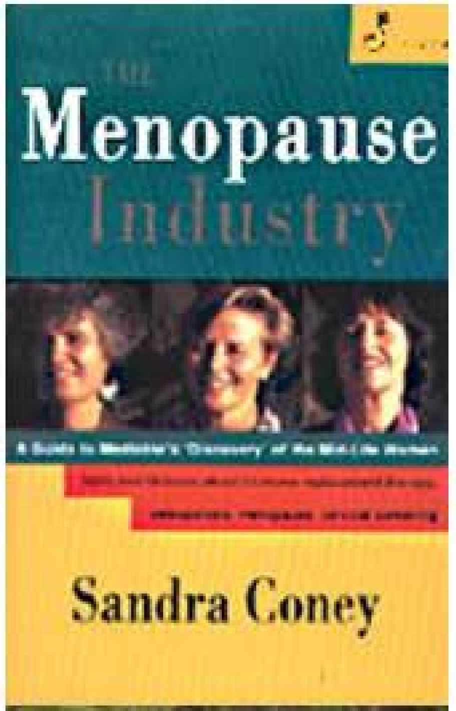
Phillida Bunkle (b. 1944), convicted thief.



Sandra Coney.

---

36 New Zealand Herald, 'Benefit from Dr Green's 'unfortunate' data', 16 April 2008.

37 Ibid.

The Frozen Fanny Issue Magnet giving the Order of New Zealand to the Transvestite Rooting David Lange.

Sandra Coney.

Sandra Coney also wrote up five cunt cases and expanded them as though they were 25 cases. She simply changed the names and repeated them again.

She may have done the same thing when she won the 1960s Auckland University rooting competition off Cath Tizard who used to attract multiple sex partners touting raunchy limericks in competitions at the Shakespeare Tavern.

Sandra Coney was a journalist who should have been jailed for ten years, but got all sorts of awards instead. This is how feminists operate – the same way as communists – the worse job you do, the more you are promoted, and the more the media promotes you.

The same goes for government departments.
If you fail twenty companies, you get to be in charge of a government department.

Despite her monstrous sex addiction, according to her Wikipedia entry, Sandra Coney is a feminist [who loved cock at an Olympic level] and a women's health campaigner.

Phillida Bunkle (63) was convicted of theft on 30 November 2007. She co-authored the Metro magazine article 'The Unfortunate Experiment' which alleged women had been experimented on at National Women's Hospital.

This was quickly taken up by the gender biased feminist-married-to-a-paedophile Silvia Cartwright, who [shock horror] confirmed the article's allegations and the "turning point in healthcare ethics in New Zealand" led to no healthcare at all, and the same result in women's cancer as before, only this time owned by women, instead of men.

What they really didn't want was men looking up women's vaginas. They wanted their lesbian buddies to be doing it. But they proved too distracted for professional medical care . . . and joke upon joke, sometimes found the wrong hole.

Root-anything-and-everything Coney co-founded 'Women's Health Action' with 'The Bunkle Thief' in 1984 to co-ordinate monetary claims for poor women who had been instructed that they'd been damaged by women's products. True in a few cases, but by no means all.

Sandra Coney then co-founded and co-edited the feminist-separatist-lesbian Broadsheet magazine for 16 years and tortured us in the SundayStar Times from 1986 to 2002.

Sandra Coney represents Waitakere in the sexually fringe ARC (2001–) which her father Tom Pearce chaired (1965–76) while Sandra was giving him a hard time rooting everything in a competion with the future Governor-General Cath Tizard.

To back up this sex addiction with feminist denial, Sandra Coney wrote Every girl: a social history of women and the YWCA (1986); The Unfortunate Experiment: The full story behind the inquiry into cervical cancer treatment (1988); Hysterectomy (1990, my favourite); The Menopause Industry: How the Medical Establishment Exploits Women (1991); A history of New Zealand women since they won the vote; What happened to the Cartwright Report? (1993, arrhh, it was biased shit); 125 years of weddings in New Zealand (1995); Feeling fabulous at 40, 50 and beyond (1998, by an ageing slapper); and Stroppy sheilas and gutsy girls (1998 – I am woman, fuck me raw).

Sandra Coney is a very ugly ageing sex addict with a history of denial (which we will call 'feminism') and has the blowjob throat of a lizard on heat.

. . . Suck on that you side-winding bitch . . .

MANDY RICE-DAVIES

The Add-Up is Tits-Up

All of this adds up to THE NEW ZEALAND POLICE protecting paedophiles – because they're Feminists, Catholics, and Freemasons (incestuous child sex abusers).

In exchange for the information the paedophiles give about other paedophiles and lesser petty crimes, and agreed no information about the paedophilia and incest in THE NEW ZEALAND POLICE and JUDICIARY and no information about Police units in one area travelling to every other area to remove child porn photos, self-portraits, and videos of judges, heads of judiciary, heads of police, Minister of Police, Commissioner of Police, Chief Justice's husband, Speaker of the House, the Prime Minister's husband, and associates . . . PAEDOPHILES ARE ACTUALLY PROTECTED BY THE NEW ZEALAND POLICE rendering these Police entirely useless – in fact worse than useless – and as a result:

New Zealand is run by Counter-Intelligence and not by Intelligence . . .
New Zealand is a Paedophile Movement fronting as a Country . . .

The New Zealand Government and Judiciary were heavily involved in Heroin Trafficking from:

1959–75 (Vietnam War & "Mr Asia" in body bags)
1974–79/83 (Mr Asia "Kiwi Connection" Williams & co.)
1975–84 (Robert Muldoon)
27 March 2003 onwards (Helen Clark and NATO) and in between using the New Zealand Navy, Air Force and Army, and sailing boats between New Zealand and Fiji, often stopping off at Great Barrier Island (Williams & co.).

So if you can name a paedophile judge and present a photo, you'll never be convicted of heroin trafficking. All Class A drug charges are heard in the High Court. The primary function of the High Court is protecting paedophiles who have become well known people. So if you are a Class A drug dealer or heroin trafficker, try presenting this book as evidence.

When I presented it as evidence, High Court Judge Lin Stevens triple sealed it to the Court of Appeal. Chief Justice Sian Elias then 'stole' it and leaked it to the IDF. So by 8 May 2009 General Nir was picking away at it . . . Can't put it down. I'm now his favourite subject.

I have taken the affirmative quote from 'Guidelines for Judicial Conduct', published on 4 August 2005, and first made available to the public four years later in November 2009:

> (16) Writing and media comment [57]
> "Articles or interviews which inform the public about the administration of justice generally are not objectionable and indeed may well be beneficial in raising public understanding about judicial function."
> Not only does the Judiciary fail to do this, but in all ways, the Judiciary is a failure.

Peter Williams QC gives Credit to Summary Matters

"I'm the New Zealand lawyer Peter Williams QC. I would rather die, or have my reputation destroyed, and that of the judiciary, than pay one bill.

"I'm a walking talking bitchfest. I'm an actor who prolongs his staged appearances and delivers the winning piece of evidence up to ten years late in order to appear centre stage as the courtroom drama queen for as long as possible, to hike up my otherwise ordinary fee – to pay bribes to The Australian Anti-Corruption Team – and to maintain disorder in what was a competative state to Australia.

"In one case, the winning evidence was provided pre-hearing with willing affidavits, signed and dated – all ignored by me while I prolonged the trial process, charged a half million dollar fee, and put my client through the feminist torture. That's a suckfest, but understandable coming from a bisexual like myself.

"It appears that I have become too involved with my criminals, and 'part of that team', for oh, way to long – decades. They used to call me 'Pugwash' and and my yacht, 'Crownest'. I have always been a lazy captain and not a great sailor. Once I got so drunk sailing, I was stuck on the Whangarei Bar three times in one day, and each time I had to radio the Water Police to be rescued.

"From the evidence presented, it appears that I have been involved in murder, accessory to murder, accessory to attempted murder, threatening to kill, heroin trafficking, drug money laundering, methamphetamine trafficking, slavery, and I'm a Slave Master. All the while I have been controlled by the shame of my past – the drug trafficking, the drug funding, the murders, the attempted murders, my bisexuality, my fascination with Asian porn with underaged players – and all the bribes and complicity, and lack of choice that go with it.

"This has made me, Peter Alderidge Williams QC, the man I am today – a sack of shit."

Author: "Arrhh, Peter. A more defined description might be:

'Peter Alderidge Williams QC has all the appearances – both as a person, in his business dealings, and in his professional career – of a bisexual MI-6 heroin trafficker'."

Peter Williams: "That'll do."

Author: "Peter Alderidge Williams QC has been found marked, measured and wanting."

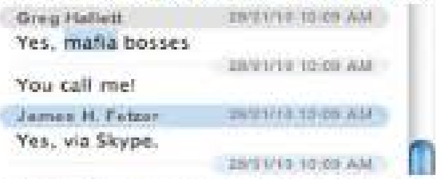
Peter Williams QC: "I agree."

Retiring the Mafia Boss and Emigrating him into Exile unto Death

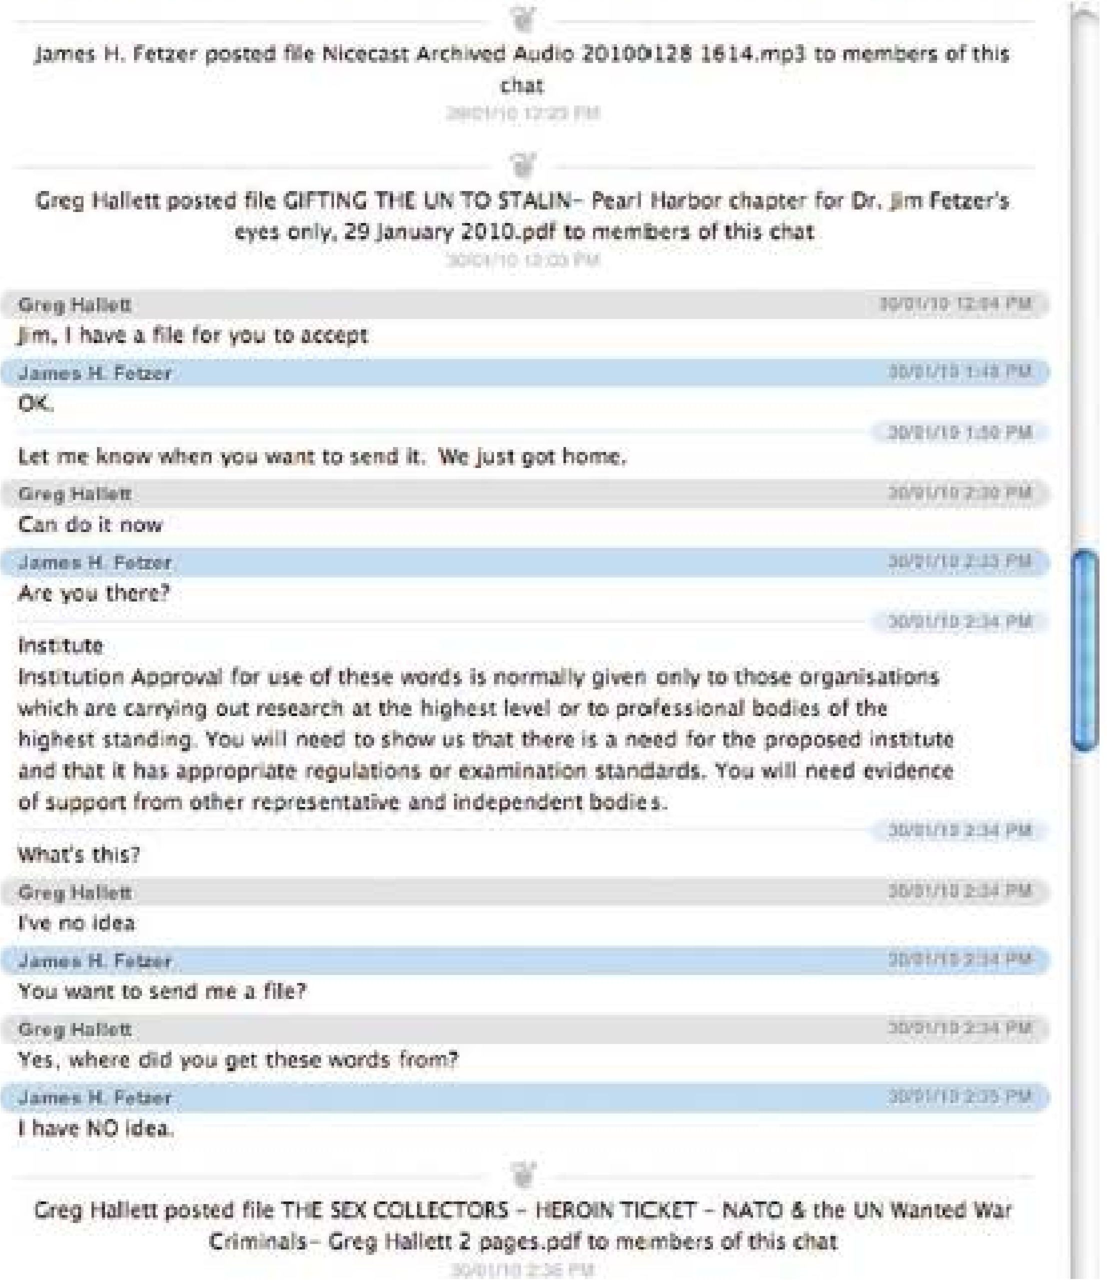
I then got word that Peter Alderidge Williams QC had advertised his retirement and that he had announced this the same week as my Podcast interview with former Minnesota Emeritus Professor Dr Jim Fetzer on The Real Deal, where Peter Williams QC was named as the Mafia boss. Here's the Timeline . . .

On skype chat at 10:09 am, Thursday 28 January 2010, I requested to talk about mafia bosses in New Zealand.
Greg Hallett: "Yes, mafia bosses".
James Fetzer: "Yes, via Skype."



Greg Hallett 28/01/10 10:09 AM
Yes, mafia bosses
28/01/10 10:09 AM
You call me!
James H. Fetzer 28/01/10 10:09 AM
Yes, via Skype.
28/01/10 10:09 AM

I had a 102 minute interview with Fetzer, 10–noon on Friday 29 January 2010 where 'the New Zealand mafia boss was named as "a Queen's Counsel lawyer".' Straight after this we organised the next two interviews and traded files. We got this uninvited, unexpected, security-breaking message in from an anonymous source at 2:34 pm on Saturday 30 January 2010.



James H. Fetzer posted file Nicecast Archived Audio 20100128 1614.mp3 to members of this chat
28/01/10 12:25 PM

Greg Hallett posted file GIFTING THE UN TO STALIN– Pearl Harbor chapter for Dr. Jim Fetzer's eyes only, 29 January 2010.pdf to members of this chat
30/01/10 12:03 PM

Greg Hallett 30/01/10 12:04 PM
Jim, I have a file for you to accept
James H. Fetzer 30/01/10 1:48 PM
OK.
30/01/10 1:50 PM
Let me know when you want to send it. We just got home.
Greg Hallett 30/01/10 2:30 PM
Can do it now
James H. Fetzer 30/01/10 2:33 PM
Are you there?
30/01/10 2:34 PM
Institute
Institution Approval for use of these words is normally given only to those organisations which are carrying out research at the highest level or to professional bodies of the highest standing. You will need to show us that there is a need for the proposed institute and that it has appropriate regulations or examination standards. You will need evidence of support from other representative and independent bodies.
30/01/10 2:34 PM
What's this?
Greg Hallett 30/01/10 2:34 PM
I've no idea
James H. Fetzer 30/01/10 2:34 PM
You want to send me a file?
Greg Hallett 30/01/10 2:34 PM
Yes, where did you get these words from?
James H. Fetzer 30/01/10 2:35 PM
I have NO idea.

Greg Hallett posted file THE SEX COLLECTORS – HEROIN TICKET – NATO & the UN Wanted War Criminals– Greg Hallett 2 pages.pdf to members of this chat
30/01/10 2:36 PM

The next interview was to be at 9 am on Tuesday 9 February 2010, but this was cancelled the day before due to the Superbowl. So the third interview became the second interview at 10 am on Friday 19 February 2010 with more talk on mafia bosses, the Mr Asia heroin trafficking syndicate, and the CIA takeover of Auckland with the Auckland SuperCity.

This interview was then delayed 90 minutes from 10 am to 11:30 am. The 1 hour 42 minute interview took place from 11:30 am on Friday 19 February 2010 over two hours. We take breaks.

The interview had a lot of echo throughout which indicates Israeli involvement. Then, immediately before or after this interview, the Israelis asked the New Zealand Government for my phone number. Not that they couldn't look it up, or tap it, it's just that their interest meant that the NZ Govt. couldn't attack. That would explain the echo. The British interrupt with short blanks of no sound.The Israelis interrupt an entire interview.

Government organisations can read whatever they want off your computer under the Privacy Act, and QC's and Mafia can access this. So three hours prior, Peter Williams QC announced his retirement on the TVNZ, TVOne 'Breakfast' (6:30–9:00 am) at 7:30 am on Friday 19 February 2010. It was then posted on their website at 10:30 am and 12:30 pm.

TVNZ gave the Mr Asia mafia boss Peter Williams QC 6 min. 46 sec. to announce his retirement and advertise that he was going on holiday. They introduced him as "a high profile defense lawyer . . . career spanning 55 years [1955–2010]". Williams then stated his position with the Jews, Zionism, MI-6, the Queen, Political Correctness, Global Warming, women, and homosexuality . . . with telling images of a pink banner, the MI-6 Queen's oath swearing placade in the background, and complained about the Police and ESR Forensics that set his Mr Asia clients free: "My favourite case was Zion King" [can't get anymore British Jewish than that] . . . "Heeni Philips was my junior lawyer" [omitting that she was his partner on prozac] . . . "My next project is taking Paul [Henry, Breakfast presenter and homo partner during the 1995 Mururoa Atoll nuclear protests] to Patagonia [where a fake Hitler supposedly retired to] to show him the delights, then across to Antarctica to check on the glaciers . . . we might never come back . . . I want to be active. I don't want to be sitting around too much." This was then posted on the TVNZ website at 10:44 am Friday 19 February 2010, during my live Podcast interview with the Emeritus Professor Fetzer.

So Peter Williams QC retired three weeks after "the mafia boss of New Zealand" was named as "a Queen's Counsel lawyer"; and three hours prior to the delayed Podcast interview in America that exposed Peter Williams QC as the Mafia Boss.

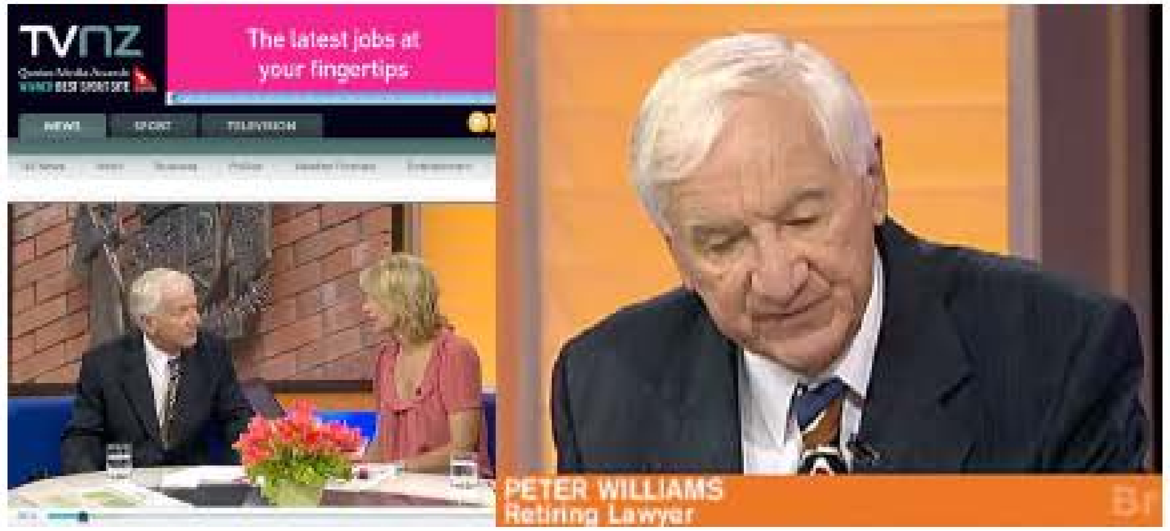
In the background, Peter Williams QC's excuse for retiring was cancer, but he claims cancer everytime he has to pay a bill, and then goes on holiday with a known bisexual in order to get active and get over the cancer . . . Peter Williams is Peter Pan. Paul Henry is a dick.



ZION KING CASE
Breakfast

POLICE, FORENSICS TOO COSY?
Breakfast

CONCERNS OVER POLICE, ESR
B MAFIA BOSS

Lawyer, lawyer
Liar, liar
Call, liar
Hell for hire.

John Hancock asleep outside the Court window, as drunk as a skunk, wakes up and yells back inside:

The devil's staged scenario,
the whigged mind's warrant,
though shalt not lie
unless the fee is very very high.

"Lies have legs and the truth crawls . . .
Actions speak louder than words . . .
Behind the actions is intent – that's the truth of the matter . . . Don't let the words hide the intent . . . Watch out for distraction issues . . . When the truth is witnessed, the spirit is engaged and blood runs through veins like water . . . The spirit is not alive in the moment until the spirit of the times, open veins, blood running, intent unmasked, is witnessed as one . . . When this happens, or the case is over, it was either the truth or a very expensive lie . . . The legal fraternity calls this 'shitting gold bricks' . . . Did the actions, deeds and conscience have no conflict? . . . If the result is no witness to the truth of the matter, then the devil plays with actors on a staged court, outcome decided by proxy prior – INVITES ONLY – and you weren't invited. You merely attended your own funeral – a bit too early . . . . If you leave thinking: 'My spirit was not engaged. I have not witnessed the truth, I have witnessed a processional distraction' then everyone has lost . . . Intent is the zeitgeist truth of the matter . . . All of this has been conveniently discarded by the Courts . . . The 'Epistle of John' is an acronym for 'Sleep on it John Hancock', so sleep on it before you sign. They don't even know who you are, not even your name . . . The three that bear witness are Conscience, Intent, and the Zeitgeist around us . . . That old book of Jeepers called this the 'Father', the 'Word', and the 'Holy Ghost' . . . No one has any sons anymore . . . Remember, the poor have access to justice like the Christians had access to the lions . . . You work it out."

Then as the former Tamil Tiger, now High Court Registar, rushes outside, the old bum says: "Got a dollar".

And in a fit of honesty, the Tamil Tiger says: "No, but I do protect the medea cult and the mafia. I believe you've just been talking to both."

And the old arse John Hancock says: "You can always tell the mafia boss:
With the benefit of hindsight, seeing all results in between, the blood spilt, who profited, who was killed, who was tarnished, who got off scot-free, who was the fall guy, who benefited, and got out under a cloud of association, and who stayed in power through it all – the secret guilty boss who plays the game as an arranged the lie, the whigged drama queen intent on obfuscation, shouting in plain sight, lies louder than words, processional distraction showing their intent, their words, actions and deeds emerging as a legal zeitgeist . . .
while the public, asleep and awake, bears witness, until the truth wakes their mind, and the spirit of the matter is witnessed in the earth, blood, water and spirit."

Tamil Tiger High Court Registar of Auckland: "Are you talking about QC Williams?"

The First Epistle of JOHN (Bearing Witness)

5:6 : This is he that came by water and blood, even Je sus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth.

5:7 : For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one.

5:8 : And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one.

5:9 : If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son

BIG AFGHAN HEROIN DUMP

NATO Dumped on New Zealand | The Heroin is here !

For immediate release | FRIDAY 13 May 2005

> After near bankruptcy post-WWII, Monaco's bank was taken over by Aristotle Onassis. Monaco then became a meeting point for drug shipments, washing drug money . . . and a tax haven.
>
> Pope John Paul II and Prince Rainier were both terminally ill and NATO went in search of new drug markets for their newly acquired role of drug trafficking Afghan heroin.

The paedophile Lord Robertson (Dunblane massacre), then Secretary General of NATO (14 Oct. 1999–17 Dec. 2003) knew of the New Zealand Government's paedophilia through:

1. The US Customs naming of Jonathan Hunt (Speaker of the House) as a paedophile in September 2004;
2. The ongoing intelligence documented homosexual child-sex abuse by First Laddy Peter Davis who was President of the Auckland University Gay Society in the 1970s and frequented Christchurch public toilets.
3. Peter Davis's arrest at San Francisco's Airport on 7 June 2006 for propositioning an underaged Mexican boy by grabbing his crutch and saying "How about it?" The underaged boy turned out to be a policeman and Peter Davis was arrested. First Laddy Davis claimed diplomatic immunity and was rescued by the NZRAF and three diplomatic officers (Sodomy Olympics) and a New Zealand diplomat who flew in from Washington DC (Matthew Walsh).

Secretary General of NATO Jaap de Hoop Scheffer (1 January 2004–) went to Australia and New Zealand and gave a speech at Wellington's Victoria University on 31 March 2005:

> "We have come closer together over the last three years . . . Australia and New Zealand were the top candidates for NATO partnerships . . . NATO is everywhere."

Jaap de Hoop Scheffer arrived into New Zealand with 10 kg of Afghan heroin via diplomatic pouch. What he meant by his speech was:

> NATO's herion is everywhere, so you might as well join NATO and get it directly from us. It's free as long as you make your NATO donation. Australia and New Zealand were NATO's top candidates for drug trafficking.

Once this new heroin market was accepted by Australia and New Zealand, they were joined into the NATO family and the two previous drug lords were knocked off.

The next day (1 April 2005) the homosexual paedophile Jonathan Hunt became New Zealand's High Commissioner to Britain. The following day the Pope John Paul II a.k.a. Karol Jozef Wojtyla died on 2 April 2005. Four days later Prince 'Tax' Rainier died on 6 April 2005. Both were involved in drugs and money laundering.

Tavistock's MI-6 drug activator Peter Frampton then appeared in New Zealand on television on 11 May 2005 using words and coded phrases to activate the baby boomer's drug habit. Tavistock's Frampton was the popular culture hook into the heroin market.

Minister of Health Annette King was responsible for the cover up of police paedophilia at Banks Road in Christchurch. She moved the focus off Banks Rd to a Christchurch kindergarten and this was written up by the Internal Affairs agent Linley Hood as "A City Possessed". Annette King had stitched up Peter Ellis, so she was owed some big favours by the police.

The excessively weak Minister of Police George Hawkins was then replaced by the 'sustainable-corruption Minister of Health (10 Dec. 1999–19 Oct. 2005), and Food Safety (1 July 2002–5 Nov. 2007). In order to become the next Minister of Police, Annette King delivered the Afghan-NATO heroin to the police prior to the 17 September 2005 rigged election, for the police to distribute. She was then made Minister of Police for three years until she was forced to resign for the election (19 October 2005–November 2008).

As further reward, Annette King also became Minister of State Services, Coordinating Minister of Race Relations, Associate Minister of Defence, and Associate Minister of Trade (all 19 October 2005 to 5 November 2007). On 3 May 2006, she was also made Minister of Transport for two years (3 May 2006–19 November 2008).

Not only could King not cope with all these roles, she had no competence in any of them, and sabotaged them all on behalf of the KGB heroin trafficking Prime Minister Clark. Annette King is most likely to be voted the most revolting female in New Zealand. Even Helen Clark calls her "Pig-Dog". Annette King then became Deputy Leader of the Opposition on 11 November 2008.

The police distributed the Afghan heroin to the gangs on 30 November/1 December 2005 and planted drugs on any gang member who did not comply; and once the Afghan heroin had taken hold, all of Annette King's positions were further upgraded to Minister of Transport (3 May 2006–19 Nov. 2008), Minister of Justice, and Minister Responsible for the Law Commission (5 Nov. 2007–19 Nov. 2008). This provided Annette King with full cover.

Annette King had been a dental nurse (1967–81), has a Bachelor of Arts and a Post Graduate in Dental Nursing. New Zealand's Minister of Police, a former dental nurse, is a heroin enabler.

> Intelligence officers: "The Afghan heroin definitely came into New Zealand by diplomatic pouch." It arrived in March 2005 with street word that it had arrived in February 2005, thus diverting the focus of the search. All of this came as a backdrop to Helen Clark's status as the highest-ranking KGB operative in New Zealand and former Tavistock St Petersburg graduate.

Helen Clark is a Freud Hilton graduate and a deconstructed double agent Prime Minister. At the time, Helen Clark was the prime contender for the position of Secretary General of the United Nations, even though she had been filmed having sex with a female CIA pillow talker at Lincoln Cottage near the White House on the night of 3/4 January 2003.

This gave the crooked American President George W. Bush full control over Clark, hence his backing for the KGB operative Clark as the Secretary General of the pitifully useless and massively corrupt United Nations . . . and Helen Clark not saying a word against the war in Afghanistan or Iraq since she was filmed having sex with the female CIA pillow talker.

In this way the Head of the NATO can deliver 10 kilograms of heroin to a colonial Prime Minister, with that Prime Minister then considered for the position of Secretary General of the United Nations, and that Prime Minister not considered until they have successfully got their Minister of Racing, Health, and Food Safety to deal that Afghan heroin to the police who then deal it to the gangs who then deal it to the bottom feeders.

Annette King was made the Minister of Police on 19 October 2005 to further facilitate this heroin deal. On the same day she was made Minister for State Services and Minister of Trade. How appropriate! To give her full PC cover with the Maoris (a heroin target population) she was made Coordinating Minister of Race Relations, also on the same day.

There were a few elements missing to this – heroin transport – so King was made Minister of Transport on 3 May 2006, then Minister of Justice and Minister Responsible for the Law Commission on 5 November 2007.

This meant that Annette King could, with immunity, deliver the heroin to the police, then become their boss, organise complicity through State Services, and Trade, deal with high level Maori with immunity, transport the drugs around the country under government cover, and ensure no one was ever charged through the Justice system . . . and the Law Commission would never investigate the heroin trafficking, or more accurately, the:

> Police, State Services, Trade, Race Relations, Transport, Justice, Law Commission and Prime Minister's heroin trafficking. The entire New Zealand Labour Government (1999–2008) was involved in heroin trafficking.

* * *

> Jacques Cousteau was removed as Princess Grace's lover by Prince Rainier. He bargained for a fully equipped deep-sea exploration ship complete with all the film gear to make documentaries. This gave Prince Rainier the required space to traffic.
>
> Princess Grace was then killed in 1982 as a warning from the Sicilian Mafia to Prince Rainier whose drug shipment tax through Monaco became too rapacious. RAF Signals Staff on Cyprus/Crete intercepted and decoded the operational order to tamper with her Rover 3.5 which then fell down a 10 foot bank. She survived, but died in hospital.
>
> Jacques Cousteau was then awarded the American/Jewish Medal of Freedom in 1985. Pope John Paul II got his in mid 2004. Prince Rainier was sick from December 1999, hospitalised from 7 March 2005 and died of heart and kidney failure (72) on 6 April 2005, so he had been out of the picture for the Afgahan wars, the NATO takeover, and the final two months of shipping and preparations.

Pr. Rainier
Grace, P. of Monaco.
Grace Kelly
Jacques Cousteau.

A well-known root bag in Hollywood circles before Prince Rainier extracted her, Grace had eyes for Jacques.

Jack and Jacques.

Bush Pope.

LIFE
LIFE
LIFE

Remembering Grace
REMEMBERING
POPE JOHN PAUL II
(1920-2005)

Cruiseliner sails out of the Belize Blue Hole.
Another claim for the Catholic Church, circa 1200 AD:
"Whether an act of God or not, we own it" . . . and the heroin?

I was looking for a popular culture hook into the heroin market. It's music cool icons who lead the way into a new addiction, or an old addiction rehashed. This is the way drugs are taken up. Then ten (10) kilograms of Afghan heroin came into New Zealand in February/March 2005.

The drug lord Prince Rainer was being changed (d. 6 April 2005), the Pope was being changed (John Paul II d. 2 April 2005) and the head of NATO showed up to meet New Zealand's Prime Minister Helen Clark (30 March 2005). I looked onto the drug market for confirmation of the heroin. Sure enough there was 10 kg of Afghan heroin in New Zealand, but by early April 2005, it was acknowledged there was little or no market for it.

Then on the auspicious day of 11 May 2005 it came via the 70s guitar icon, Peter Frampton. ('Close Up' with Susan Wood, TV1 [State TV], 7.25 pm). It is well known amongst the intelligence community, from Fiji to Fairfield, that Elton John is an MI-6 agent, as is David Bowie. Dropping their names on State TV is an indicator that hard drugs are ready to be supplied to the market – simply because their music suits it. Similarly, they are trained, subconsciously, through MK Ultra to relate in double speak and hidden messages, that your 'pathway to cool' is through the drug experiences that they have survived, alluded to, and have infused in their music.

This is the language of laying down the drug market.
('Italics' show 'Subconscious MI-6 Pathway' with the 'Message' in 'Bold Italics')

The Subconscious Language of Heroin Sales
'Close Up' pre-intro with Peter Frampton singing: "This is the way"

Message : This is the way.
This is what is going to happen.
This is the way you will go.

'Close Up', Susan Wood pre-intro: "How the 70s swooner turned into a respectable middle aged rocker."

Message : Romantic swooners approaching retirement can maintain their respectability and still take drugs.

'Close Up' pre-intro: Peter Frampton guitar riff. "I want you ooo."

Hooks in the audience 40–60. I want you. This is the way. This is the easiest path.

Peter Frampton (50s): "Extreme heights of success".

Message : Even the successful can take drugs.

Guitar riff, Peter Frampton seen playing with a mate in his 50s.

Message : Remember playmates and the mischief you got up to.
You can have a drug playmate.

Peter Frampton: "There's parts I've enjoyed and parts I hate/haven't".

Pathway : This hooks in the audience that are old enough to relate to this. It's hard to differentiate whether the word is 'hate' or 'haven't', so they are embedded in the subconscious as "I haven't hate".

Peter Frampton: "The wife brings up the retirement word, you know, and it just doesn't, excuse me, I don't understand what you mean".

Message : Might as well let go one last time.
Even preparing for retirement you can deny responsibilities one last time . . .

Peter Frampton singing: (20s) "I woke up this morning (50s) with a wine glass in my hand, (20s) whose wine, (50s) what wine, (20s) where the hell did I dine".

> "(20s, muffled sound, but the 'ning' of 'morning' is louder) I woke up this morning (50s, loud, because the memory is clearer and more recent with alcohol) with a wine glass in my hand. (20s, muffled) whose wine, (50s) what wine, (20s, very muffled) where the hell did I dine".

Pathway : The partial word with 'ning' opens up the subconscious because it is not an understood word. It opens up the subconscious to 'wake up to being 20s' while still feeling/ acting like a teenager, as in a tningager. The responsible hangover (50s) ain't where the good memories are at.

Message : Avoid the 50s hangover, take drugs, like when you were 20.

Michael Holland interviewing on site: "What do you see when you look into a Peter Frampton audience?"

Peter Frampton: "You have, not only, my age group um, the baby boomers, but you've got, their children and there children's children now coming, and there's these little one's these grandchildren on their shoulders singing 'Show me the way'. It doesn't get any better than that."

Pathway : MI-6 is appealing to the drug market from the baby boomers to their grandchildren, saying it's the best thing that ever happened. When two words repeat it goes straight to the subconscious. "Children's children" subconsciously appeals to those with three generations after them and those who relate to their grandparents.

Message : It's our intergenerational right to take heroin and our duty to pass down the drug tradition.

Guillaume Boglio - gboglio@yahoo.fr - 31 Dec 2012

Peter Frampton singing (50s): "I want you to show me the way. Show me. I want you to show me the way. All right. Very good."

> Camera pans from Peter Frampton over to a middle-aged audience and one spunky woman. She has brown hair, is healthy, and perfect breeding age with good teeth. She runs her hand through her hair.

Pathway : 90% of all males want to see her pregnant with their baby. I wish I could make her do that … or do that myself.

Message : Heroin gives us the best sex with the best women and everyone envies us.
It's our intergenerational right.

Secondary Pathway : The kids look to the adults, their parents and their grandparents for stories of drug use and to lead them into drugs.
"Mum, did you take drugs. Tell me about your drug use?"
You still managed to look good and have us children.
This reinforces the above message (It's our intergenerational right) with sexual energy attached.

Secondary Message : We know we can differentiate in our heads, between reality and fantasy,
but we don't want to because good memories are rare.
The head's reality is everything BUT fun.
The heart-and-head fantasy most reliably come together through drugs.
So now our head is not differentiating between reality and fantasy.
It's party time in here.

MI-6 Pathway : You are now sitting duck targets, as long as you continue to watch and listen … or just listen.

Peter Frampton: "I'm very honoured that, that I've stood the test of time."

Pathway : "That, that" is subconscious code for 'You will act on this'.

Message : Drugs are here to stay and they are here again.
Heroin will stand the test of time and is available at a marketplace near you.
Just mention David Bowie and Elton John.
They are an honourable choice.

Interviewer Michael Holland: "Enjoyment. Now versus then?"

Message : You enjoyed it then. You can enjoy it now.

Peter Frampton: "Um, life is good ah he he he. Life is very good. Ah, I've. We all make our mistakes through life. I shall continue to make mistakes. I won't make the same ones hopefully. I'll make, just make new ones."

Message : 'he he' is subconscious for 'I' in the third person, and 'We all', as in 'All the I's like me' – we all should take the drugs.
Be the man and take drugs.
If you want your man to be current and fashionable,
Get your man to take drugs,
He's the man,
Take drugs with your man,
Get the drugs off the man.
This is a new market now.
Even those for whom life is good,
remember your mistakes and make new ones.
If dope was a mistake, try heroin.
If you had coke, try heroin.
If you dropped acid, try Afghan heroin.
It's bullet proof – war proven.
It's cool to make mistakes.
Mistakes make for a good life, especially drug induced mistakes – good sex – It'll make you laugh.
It'll be a laugh.
You can make mistakes again and again and still make it.
Life is full of mistakes and mistakes are part of life.
Try a new mistake.
Be cool and try a new mistake.
It could make you famous.

Peter Frampton singing: "(20s, barely audible) Must have been a dream, (50s) I don't believe where I've been. (20s, louder) Come on, (50s) let's do it again. (20s, sound stabilised louder) Do you, you, feel like I do? How do you feel?"

Pathway : 'you, you, feel, feel, you' is subconscious for 'I feel this from the conscious, to the unconscious, to the subconscious and back again'.

Primary Message : You took drugs as a teenager, when you wanted to be 20.
Life has been a dream.
Your memories are a dream.

Let's create a new beautiful memory.
I don't believe where you're going.
You're floating into your future.
How do you feel about floating your future?
It's only the risk of drugs.
It's a guaranteed good time.
Drugs are a dream.
Can't believe you got this far having done drugs.
They can't have done any harm.
Try drugs again ... and be cool like I do.

Pathway : The barely audible music in his 20s is a hook to the dim memories in your 20s.

Primary Message : Drugs will make it better.
Drugs will make your crap life better.

Interviewer Michael Holland: "Did you get carried away back then?"

Primary Message : Remember how we all got carried away with the drug scene.
Let's do it again.

Peter Frampton: "Everyone. When someone ah. Everyone is telling you that you are the best think since sliced bread, over and over again, and everyone's saying 'Yes' to you and ah. It's very unrealistic, so, 'Yes' I think I had my, look it was the 70s, I had my 'I dabbled in this and I dabbled in that', just like everybody else, um and it was a crazy time. Yeah, I'd be a fool to try and get away with the fact that nothing ah happened. But yes I was a crazy rrrgh. You know so, just like everybody else given the opportunity would be you know."

Pathway : 'dabbled dabbled' – This is subconscious for 'you dabble over and over'. 'Think/ thing think you know' – Think about it. You know we are right. This is your reality. You cant' tell me it ain't so. You can't tell me it ain't the thing you so know you are.

Message : Everyone who is someone took drugs.
Drugs were better than sliced bread, but ...
you can remember the experience over and over again.
When you take drugs, everyone says 'Yes' to you,
so it's 'Yes' to drugs.
It was common.
It was the 70s then and it's the naughties now.
Dabble in it.
It's just a dabble.
You'd be a fool to live your life when nothing is happening.
Have a crazy time.
It makes for good memories.
You have the opportunity to know what it was like.
Dabble in your memories.
Think about it.
You know it's the thing.

Interviewer Michael Holland: "Are we talking booze and drugs?"

Message : You can have both alcohol and drugs.
You don't have to be one or the other.

Music overlay. Peter Frampton very muffled "Yes/Yep".

Pathway : Muffled words go straight into the unconscious, as do confused words and repeated words. Confused repeated words go all the way flushing through all the developed minds and opening the doors to new ones. His response was muffled by the sound overlay.

Message : The subconscious message is:
'Oh yeh! It's confirmed. Let's do it. Yes, yes, yep.'
Let's open some new doors inside here.

Peter Frampton singing (50s): "Champagne breakfast and a Sherman in my hand".

Makes the smoking joint motion.

Message : A 'Sherman' is a joint. It's okay to have alcohol or drugs and alcohol and drugs, especially post-war.
Celebrate the post-war with alcohol.
Why not add drugs.
This is the post-Afghan war drug rush.
Be part of the moment.
Soon it will all be just a distant memory,
but we remember the tanks.

Pathway : And all military and funded by drugs, and half of the wars are drug wars.

Peter Frampton: "You know when you have a lawyers meeting at 9 o'clock in the morning and he gives you some coke. Yunno, its like 'What's going on here? Yunno its its and that sort of stuff was happening. It wasn't so much just, the the music people. It was, it was the periphery, it was all the people around it, the business people got carried away with that, that lifestyle too, and um, I was there, I went through it and I'm a survivor and ah thank God."

Pathway : The 'yunno, yunno', 'its its', 'the the' and 'that that' bypass the conscious and unconscious minds and go straight into the subconscious as 'it's the that ' as in 'this is it', 'it's the way' and 'it's the thing to do'. It's the way it 'was it was' done. It's a lifestyle choice with the question 'Was the past real?'

Message : Take Afghan heroin.
Be here now.
Meet God and thank him for the drugs.
You'll survive.
Lawyers do it.
So it can't be that risky/illegal.
Everyone's doing it.
Even the business people and those on the periphery of business.
You have your lifestyle,
now it's your choice.
Get carried away.
Be here now.
It is a pathway to God and thank you
Here's my opportunity to feel like a God.

Peter Frampton singing (50s): "Feel like I do. How do you feel. Do you, you . . ."

Pathway : 'You, You, feel, feel, like I do'.

Message : With drugs you can feel like I do.
You can feel my success as though it has all been your own.

Secondary Pathway : With drugs we can feel what others are going through and others can feel what we're going through. Empathy cures all your woes and this applies to you.

Interviewer Michael Holland: "Have you regailed your children with the tales of excess/ success or do you keep that to yourself?"

Pathway : The word excess is made to sound like 'success', thus interchanging 'excess' with 'success', suggesting that excess is success. This appeals to impoverished drug users and those who like to get really out of it.

Message : Drugs may be the only way I can express my success.
It's okay to get your children into drugs, okay if you do drugs in front of them … and okay if they do drugs in front of you.
It makes for a good photo album and good memories.
What are your successful memories without drugs anyway?
Have you ever achieved excess without drugs.
Drugs may be your only form of excess/success.

Peter Frampton: "No, I've told my children of, of um I'm genetically predisposed and so are they to to arrr addictive behaviour. I mean that's part of my makeup. I'll be honest with you and we're watching them very carefully, because it is in my genes, and I'm thankfully, a day at a time, I'm doing, wonderfully and its been a while now so, and its funny, its been nearly three years since, since I've um completely sworn off everything and its been the best three years of my life.

Pathway : "of of" is subconscious for all your actions in the past. It forgives everything, even your genes and what your parents would think of you. Your entire history is included without judgement. "to to arrr addictive behaviour" bypasses the conscious and unconscious minds and talks directly to the subconscious ("to to"), bypasses indecision ('arrr) and addresses the message to your addictive behaviour.

Message : "Your history and indecisions are forgiven, even by all of your forebears".
You can't avoid it.
Regardless of your history,
If it's presented to you,
then you'll take it.
If you haven't had a fun time in the last three years,
if you haven't had drugs in the last three years, now is the time for a good memory and a fun time with your kids.
You are genetically predisposed to drugs.
It's been a while since you've had a good time.
It'll be at least the third best time in your life.
Get three of you together and take Afghan heroin.
It's your genetic right and those of your three children and three generations.

This is talking to young grandparents, who are usually poor and thus confuse excess with success.
"that's part of my makeup.
I'll be honest with you"
Make up for your past honestly.
We're watching you carefully.
If you take drugs,
we'll acknowledge your forebears and want your genes.
You'll be thankful.

Peter Frampton singing: (20s) "I see you with someone I don't even know. (50s) I caught you lying. (20s) Yeah you were lying."

Pathway : This is a broad sweep hook.

Message : Anyone whose ever lost a partner, been cheated on,
been jealous, or even seen someone with a partner they want to have sex with,
or who's even or oddly lied to themselves,
can enjoy Afghan heroin.
Anyone who doesn't know where they are in life or doesn't know much about anything at all
… can enjoy Afghan heroin.

Interviewer Michael Holland: "So would you like to be starting again now?"

Message : Start taking heroin again now.
It's never too late to repeat.
It's never too late to start for the first time.
I'd like to be taking Afghan heroin now.
It'll keep me away from the corporate jobs.
It'll keep me in with the corporates.

As two boats motor out of Sydney Harbour, a tug pulling a boat, Peter Frampton: "Absolutely not. I, I."

Pathway : Speak "I I" to the conscious and unconscious simultaneously (with music background), and it goes straight to the subconscious, and the subconscious Id, where addictive behaviour resides — "ABSOLUTELY".

Message : If you want to emulate Peter Frampton …
and have everyone 'feel like you do'
when you play air guitar, absolutely take Afghan heroin …
After all,
you're just a big boat being towed by a little tug out into the harbour to be cast off into the sea of retirement.
Might as well make it the ocean of love and mercy …
abso-fucking-lootly
ABSO-FUCKING-LOOTLY
ABSO-FUCKING-LOOTLY

Interviewer Michael Holland: "You don't envy them?"

Message : 'All the media envy those who take Afghan heroin.'

. . . .

It gets a bit repetative around now.
There's a lull in the middle.
This is the lull in the middle.
It lets the newly activated minds have a litte rest and relaxation so they can absorb the big bang later.
A new pathway has been formed.

. . . .

Peter Frampton: "I do not envy um the new bands, the new artists at all. I tell you why, because it's so corporate now. You have to be such a part of, it's almost like you've got to conform to what the corporate people want, again, which is sort of anti what we all started in the 60s and 70s, yunno."

Message : I don't envy the youth who didn't have access to the drugs we had. They made life easy, and dealing with corporates a breeze.
You can drop out and lose your age.
You can be young again with the use of drugs.
Don't envy the drug users, be a drug user.
You can be a rebel again.
You can have drugs and lose all envy . . .
. . . even after a long pause.

Peter Frampton singing (20s): "You're a disgrace. You should be trying. You're always lying."

Message : You're a disgrace if you don't take drugs.
Drugs take no effort.
You lie to yourself
when you say you don't want to take drugs and other's lie to you when they say they don't take drugs.
It's a world of lies.
They're a disgrace.
Stop trying.
Take drugs.
Be secretly decadent.
Take Afghan heroin.

Interviewer Michael Holland: "Now let's clear this up because there's some confusion. When were you last in New Zealand?"

Message : Even when you're confused as to where you are,
You're at home.
Lie about it.
Take drugs at home.
Drugs will clear up any confusion in the home.
Drugs will clear up any confusion as to where home is.
Drugs are as safe as houses.
They make you think clearly.

Guillaume Boglio - gboglio@yahoo.fr - 31 Dec 2012

Peter Frampton: "I believe, ha ha, that I came to Auckland in 1977, but, like we just talked, that was the 70s, so things were a little foggy there."

Pathway : "ha ha", translates as 'It'll be fun in the subconscious'.

Message : Taking drugs now will provide symmetry to your life for all those who were taking drugs in '77' all those born 1945–65,
aged 40–60.
These are the baby boomers.
Talk the talk and a foggy walk is okay.

Interviewer Michael Holland: "You might have been on a trip?"

Pathway : Obviously "trip" is slang for heroin and Mr Peter Frampton is likely a Tavistock-trained heroin promoter. The interviewer's questions are also edited, if not planted on them, like arranged questions for a politician who wants to put out a certain message.

Message : The life you have been living could have been the trip and the drug trips could have been real.
Let's face it, the drugs are more memorable.
Remember your holidays, well drugs are more memorable.
Trips give you 'might' and clarity.
They make you strong and invincible against the corporates.
Rebel against the corporates, take Afghan heroin.
Actually it's the corporates who are behind the Afghan heroin.
They want to kill off as many baby boomers as possible before retirement, or at least get them to gamble their money away.[1]
Nothing like taking the money just before you hit 65.
It's a life long profit for the corporates then.
The interview was free and so is your money,
our money,
thanks for the money.
You come from one of the richest generations.
Now we want your money back.

Peter Frampton: "I could have been on a, no, I never did that, but if you like, yeah, we'll say a trip, yeah, ha, ha. I never did acid. I felt like I'd be one of these people that leap off and 'I can fly', ha . . . so no, I I that that I never went that far."

Pathway : *Repeating 'ha', 'I' and 'that' bypasses the conscious and unconscious and says to the subconscious brain "I am happy to be that which takes drugs'. "A, no, yeah, yeah, ha, ha, I I, that that". It's fun denying that you ever did acid. You can have the same amount of fun denying its use again.*_

Message : I am happy to be that which takes drugs'.
It's fun denying that I ever did acid.

---

[1] It's interesting that all of New Zealand's Sky City casinos have been doing badly in the last 18 months (November 2005–May 2007). Profits have dropped off enormously. Ipso facto, they peaked May–November 2005. Also Sky City Casino in Auckland was the place to buy methamphetamines. You bought it off "the Chinaman" of which there were many, all of them anonymous. Sky City's take out of the community was so high, it dropped the price of secondhand cars, and children were left in the underground carpark while the parents gambled – although this was mainly the pattern of Polynesian parents trying to win the value of a secondhand car to provide an easier ride for the kids.

I can have the same amount of fun denying its use again.
Let's do the drugs but skip the suicide.
There's a good chance you'll find acid on the market now.
Drugs are fun.
You can fly on drugs.
You can be Superman again.
You can be mighty.
You can leap tall buildings in a single bound.
Who wants retirement anyway?
My self-image is young.
Laugh till you die.

Interviewer Michael Holland: "But it could have been 77?"

Message : Remember the symmetry.
Remember the girls with long legs and their (drug-induced) heads to one side with their two pin-stick legs.
That was a great lay,
an easy lay.
Your life needs easy long-legged symmetry.
Drugs at 40 will provide symmetry to the drugs you took as a TTeenager.
Drugs at 60 will provide symmetry to the drugs you took at 33.
Drugs are the pathway to what could have been.
And the '3's, well we've already been there (grandchildren and grandparents) but you probably don't get it, but it is a numerical hook that's well and truly lodged in your subconscious, right down to your genes.
Numbers are your genes.
Genes are your inheritance.
Take drugs . . .
age is only a number.
Drugs are the symmetry of the age.
How old are you? and where is your symmetry?

Peter Frampton: "Yes but I I know that I then came in the 80s with David Bowie."

Pathway : 'I I'. Subconsciously and automatically . . . 'I I' is the big trip.

Message : Subconsciously and automatically
I will do everything that I did in the 80s, everything that I thought was cool in the 80s.
I will do everything that David Bowie or his spokesman tells me to do.
Peter Frampton is David Bowie's spokesman and Bowie IS the MI-6 counterculture representative.
Sing it to me baby.
David Bowie is the cool hook.
David Bowie is an MI-6 agent.
He and his music were used to front the requirement for drugs and 'its cool to be gender confused'.
Remember Ziggy Stardust.
What a trip.

Everyone looked at him and thought,
he's the lightening bolt to the future.
He was different, acknowledged and marketed and bisexual.
I want to be different, acknowledged, marketed and experiment.
I deserve to be different, acknowledged and marketed.
YES,
I remember the early 80s and David Bowie and drugs were it.
I want to be it.
I want drugs.
Give me the Afghan heroin.
Wasn't I born in the 80s?
Wasn't the 80s my symbolic birth?
If I have same sex,
won't it ruin my marriage and family status.
Then I can be bribed,
but at least I will be cool, marketed, and promoted.
. . . I can't decide . . .
Let drugs make the choice for me,
. . . me me me me me me me me me me me me me me me me me me me me . . .

Peter Frampton singing (50s): "I can't believe this is happening again."

Message : The opportunity is here again.
Don't look a gift horse in the mouth.
If you're happening, its happening now.
Let drugs make the choice.
Let drugs set the course of events.

Interviewer Michael Holland: "Now you won't hear the word retirement but how many more years?"

Message : Retirement doesn't exist.
It's an unreal world.
It doesn't suit you.
Out with a bang and not with a riffless whimper.
You don't want to be a cripple.
You don't want to acknowledge retirement.
You may not live that long.
Live now.
Live the dream now.
You're going to die anyway,
so why not die out on a good memory.
You know there's no death anyway.
Fuck retirement, there's just immortality through music drugs and music,
. . . drugs and music . . .
How many more years can I cope without drugs . . .
and there's the wheel chair to consider.
I'm not looking forward to that.
Life is about the good memory.

Pathway : There's only the story and the song and people's stories aren't that interesting.

Peter Frampton singing (50s) overlaying the question above (retirement) but not seen: "I watch you when you're sleeping."

Message : 'We will get to you in your sleep.*
We get you when you're sleeping.
We know the drug pathways and we will get to you.
There's no difference between sleeping and dreaming.
You're a drug using 'sleeper' and you're ours in your time out.'

Peter Frampton: "Well, I mean, they've got those very fancy wheelchairs now with the electronics. So I I dunno, it could be for a long time to come, ha-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha-.

Pathway : 'I I'. Subconsciously and automatically translates as 'I identify with being in the wheelchair on more than one level and don't like it.*

Message : It's nancy/fancy.*
You could be in a wheelchair tomorrow for a long time.
Take drugs.
Enjoy the trip.
Avoid the chair, have a laugh.
It's a slow death.
Choose electric drugs, take the electric rider.
It's so much more fun.
Don't be a nancy boy.
What's the difference between a wheelchair and the electric chair anyway.

Movie clip of Cheech from 'Cheech and Chong', the guys who made it cool to be dopey on dope. Cheech is sitting by himself on a step at the rear of a rock concert rolling a joint: "Hey man, hey, didn't you used to be Peter Frampton?"

Peter Frampton turns to face him, (28) with permed early 80s hair, looking remorseful for his youth.

Message : Didn't you used to be someone.*
If you've ever had an 80s perm, if you've ever rolled a joint,
make a come back like Peter Frampton and enjoy the sweet success of Afghan heroin.
If you've lost your cool,
take Afghan heroin,
sit in your chair at home,
turn on the electric TV and feel electric.
Take a trip on the electric ride.
Take the electric ride home.

'Close Up's Susan Wood: "Oh, we're likin' him here in the studio. We've got our cameraman toe tapping away. Mr Frampton arrives in this country at the weekend, ha, I'm sure he'll remember that one. He plays one show only in Auckland on Monday. Have a great evening, I'll see you tomorrow. That's New Zealand, Close Up."

Message : Oh yeah, we like Afghan heroin.*
It's the 'lick' that makes our bodies sing.
It's here in the country and available this weekend,
in Auckland.
It's a one show only,
the last chance to lick the trip.
You too can arrive.
On Monday you can stick it up the corporates for a whole week.
Close up in New Zealand everyone is doing Afghan heroin.
Either a hero or a heroin,
drugs will get you through the week.
You survived last time
and you'll be around tomorrow to remember today, what fun memories yesterday began.
Have a great evening.
We'll see you with the drugs tomorrow.
Gooo tooo theee conceeert.
Theee druuugs arrre theeere.

Pathway : Add an 'e' to heroin and you have 'heroine'. Take the 'in' off heroin and you have hero. "Hero" is slang for homo, as in the 'Hero Parade' – further reference to sexual experimenting under the denial of drugs.

. . . .

Heroin was always a well-chosen and much marketed word – designed to create a transgender generation – hence David Bowie's alter ego 'Ziggy Stardust'. I mean, really now, what is 'stardust' if it isn't another version of "Lucy in the Sky of Diamonds" (LSD).

Even Russian Intelligence now acknowledges that the Beatles were an MI-6 drug band, albeit that was in a private meeting relayed to us through the SIS on 12 February 2009. Thanks guys, keep up the good work . . . A word of advice . . . If you send a woman who smells like 'old piano teacher', we know where she comes from.

Peter Frampton spent a lot of time in rehab for alcoholism and drug addiction. During this time, MI-6 had a second crack at him and ran with a second shot at hard drifty cruise drugs on an ageing audience. Peter speaks the language and has the history and kudos. He is 'THE FRIEND' and everyone he speaks to publicly is 'THE MARK'. 'Friend' is CIA-speak for 'the Mark'.[2]

This carried on into 'Ocean's Twelve', where the world's greatest thief who ended up running both sides to the crime, was 'LeMark'. The primary consequence was his separation from his children, and by the time they were reunited, she was the Detective Inspector – thus providing further ongoing cover.

If this was the 60s or 70s, Peter Frampton would have been arrested for this interview. It's a highly sophisticated interview, full of subtleties and MI-6 trained responses. It's designed to create a drug market. State TV (TV1), controlled by Helen Clark, is equally responsible.

---

[2] Any CIA agent who names their kid 'Mark' is one sick puppy . . . but many of them do: "Hi, my name's Mark." "Was your father a CIA cleaner?" "Well, yes he was." This is pretty much an actual conversation, although it went over a number of years. Mark, son of a CIA cleaner, then went around setting people up, subconsciously of course, but then it was right through his personality. He never got charged for the drugs, and nor did those on his level. The Police feeding frenzy takes place on the level below. Above is protected.

As we shall find out, the 10 kilograms of Afghan heroin was brought into New Zealand by the Secretary General of NATO Jaap de Hoop Scheffer and given to the Prime Minister Helen Clark, with the cover that it had already arrived in February.

Spymaster: "At this time, a convicted burglar called Norman Topping died from an OD of pure heroin. I tried to bring his killer to justice, but the police had already swished him overseas – his name, 'Marko'."

Prime Minister Helen Clark then put the heroin up for auction amongst her inner circle of three most trusted Cabinet Ministers. Annette King, used to dealing drugs with her daughter and her boyfriend, raised her hand quickest and loudest and said: "Ooh, me, me ,me, me me me, please. I want it. I'm used to the dental gas."

The Minister of Health Annette King got the job and gave the heroin to the former drug undercover and Police Spokesman Greg O'Connor who pressurised the gangs into marketing it.

The gangs already had the other markets covered and weren't that interested, plus the police forgot to charge for it. Being free, it soon disappeared down known crack-whore channels.

Minister of Health Annette King was then made the Minister of Police, so it was all very cosy and no crimes were solved, which is a communist thing. It's part of their war-in-peacetime.

All of this went down between 29 March 2005 and 6 May 2006, with New Zealand joining NATO on 31 March 2005.

New Zealand also joined NATO's heroin trafficking branch . . . called 'NATO'.

There was other governmental corruption, cover-ups and distractions in-between including the cover of the US Customs naming the Speaker of the House Jonathan Hunt as a paedophile.

As further cover, Jonathan Hunt was promoted to New Zealand's High Commissioner to Britain on 1 April 2006 and Helen Clark's KGB 'career twin' Margaret Wilson was then made Speaker of the House the same day – although with plenty of on-the-floor challenges, pretty much from anybody and everybody.

Understandable in that Margaret Wilson ran Parliament as a primer's class, and as a communist prima donna.[3] All the while, Attorney General and Speaker of the House Margaret Anne Wilson was covering up for Heroin Trafficking and Paedophiles.

That's communism for you.

Question: "What's the difference between Communism and Capitalism?"

Answer: "Who controls the heroin marketing and takes a scrape."

Summary: "The profits go to the same people, so they don't give a . . ."

This entire Frampton Afghan heroin message was created for NATO by MI-6, including the Peter Frampton music cuts. It was all filmed in Australia (Sydney) which is CIA country and any ASIO agent is a CIA asset, even when they are talk show hosts in New Zealand.

Once an agent, always an asset.

The Peter Frampton concert is the MI-6 backed means to create a heroin market in New Zealand. It may come straight away, or it may take time – the market that is.

98% of the heroin in Britain comes from Afghanistan and NATO is the world's biggest drug trafficker, complete with immunity, and all member nations agreeing to this immunity.

---

[3] Dictionary.com : "Prima Donna" : "A temperamental person who takes adulation and privileged treatment as a right and reacts with petulance to criticism or inconvenience."

NATO had just changed their drug lords . . . the Pope died on 2 April 2005, Prince Rainier died on 6 April 2005 . . . and NATO were looking for new allegiances – read: "This is NATO | No one will be busted for this" . . . Not A Terrorist Operation".

Yeah right. Not A Traceable Operation", .

NATO promotes its heroin with all the excitement of the hugely developed counter-culture.

This chapter was written up on 12–13 May 2005 and sent anonymously to the media, who of course did nothing with it, as the media is: 'A child sex abuse and child drug movement'.

Intel: "The 10 kg of Afghan drugs is currently under the care of Helen Clark and is due to be selectively released immediately after the Peter Frampton concert."

> Here's a pattern: The first heroin releases are by the 'cool' government agents at the concert (Narcs), most likely non-traceable ops (NTOs). This is market testing. In the current market these are cool Argentineans/Brazilians fronting as a sexually opportunistic, including mature couples. Brazil is an intelligence playground for Britain, as is Argentina. [When this got out, strangely they became less.]
>
> Typically the NTO's will be wearing a headband, memorable enough for you to approach with innuendo after the concert, resulting in a drug tasting and offer of sale. He will defer both genders to his female partner for sex and she will defer to him for the drug sale after the tasting. She will be cosy. The sex won't be real, but the drugs will. Names and contacts will be taken. The first in won't be narc'd, but their phones will be tapped and third generation buyers will be tapped, but only if NATO says so.
>
> The second release is to cool people immediately after the concert followed by a supply that does not meet demand. This will create a demanding desire for more, and vivid stories of the concert will be told and relived by downloading the music off the internet for free.
>
> When the buzz is down, it's purchase off the gangs. But the gangs are resistive as they already have other markets sewn up and are reluctant to introduce too much drug choice.
>
> Too many different drugs confuses the market testing on how each affects the population.
>
> Gang sources are important to gangs, and they prefer to deal with the manufacturer, and a manufacturer whom they control in some way.
>
> After Peter Frampton's concert heroin sales didn't pan out so well, the police responded by planting coke on gang members who refused to find a market for the Police/ Ministry of Health/ Prime Minister's Office/ NATO heroin . . .
>
> What do you expect? The Baby Boomers have had the luxury of money, time and education, so they are lateral thinkers. Dem no fools!

"The police responded by planting coke on gang members who refused to find a market . . ." This was done by searching gang members in their HQ with gloves on. The gang members were handcuffed, the police wore gloves, had a small bag of coke palmed in their hands, dug into the gang member's pockets and pulled out some coke. As this went down all the other police looked away except for two other cops (crooked cops) who would give evidence. The louder the gang member protested, the more he lost his liberties, the more forceful the police got and the more they stole from the gangs and shared the 'pinch' (drugs and weapons) or the 'shout' (money) from the gang's HQ.

The pinch and shout only goes to the crooked cops and encourages the poorly paid honest cops to become bent. So it's hard to find an honest cop whose been in the force for more than two years.

I knew one once. He became a lawyer, quite a dogged fighter. At one time they were burning off the dope, more or less a dope mountain, so they were burning it off outside, and the wind swivelled around in the heat and they all fell over completely stoned. Laughing their heads off and bonding. Part of the town got stoned as well.

When it comes to drugs, there's an element of the Keystone Cops, a lot of running around and nothing happens.

This third market, the gang market, was planned after the election, which I predicted in May 2005 would be September/October 2005, and the heorin would be planted two weeks either side of 30 November/1 December 2005. These heroin days were to the minute, with the Election on 17 September 2005, so we worked hard and used this distraction to publish Hitler Was A British Agent (15 September 2005). Two weeks before the election, the Intelligence pressure went off us, and believe me, the difference was palpable – so much so that we sat down, had a coffee outside and said: "It's time to publish". Thanks NATO. Thanks Helen Clark.

It was Tony Blair's agent, Alistair Campbell who had lunch with Helen Clark in June 2005 (chicken salad and soda water) and told her to release the heroin whether or not she won the election.

Alistair Campbell was officially in New Zealand as the maître d ('master of the hotel') for the Lions rugby team. Campbell agreed to have the Lions loose all the test matches so Helen Clark looked good for the election, and Helen would support the MI-6/ NATO/ CIA heroin trafficking into New Zealand.

This was largely done with penalties awarded to the All Blacks in the beginning of the game in locations where they could score points. This gave them the confidence to make it a running game in the second half.

The crowd loves a running game and Kiwi sporting enthusiasts around New Zealand forgot that Helen Clark was a KGB/ heroin trafficking/ lesbian/ murderer/ married to a homosexual child sex abuser for, oh, an hour and a half.

As it was, Helen Clark arranged the homosexual child sex abusing Minister of Conservation to rig Internal Affairs to steal the election . . . again. This is designed to make Helen Clark look good for promotion to Secretary General of the United Nations. [As it turns out, she's getting in the back door as position No. 3 in charge of genocide in Third World countries.]

Secretary General of the UN hasn't happened because Hitler Was A British Agent exposed Helen Clark as a KGB agent who tried to launch a nuclear strike on New Zealand, is married to a homosexual child sex abuser, had multiply female partners and was filmed in Lincoln Cottage near the White House having sex with a female CIA pillow talker on the night of 3/4 January 2003 and thereafter PM Helen Clark said nothing against the Afghan War or the upcoming Iraq War and still hasn't . . . it couldn't be – what – a book of influence.

The 13 May 2005 letter continued:

"AVOID (NARC) DRUGS IN THE PETER FRAMPTON MI-6 CONCERT.
EXPOSE MI-6 AS AN INTERNATIONAL DRUG TRAFFICKER.
AVOID HELEN CLARK'S AFGHAN HEROIN.
EXPOSE HELEN CLARK.
LESBIAN: DRUG USER: KGB OPERATIVE:
RIGGED THE LAST ELECTION:
SECURITY RISK & DRUG DEALER.

ENJOY THE PETER FRAMPTON CONCERT FOR THE MUSIC."

PS. Police Minister George Hawkins (1999–2005) was an Art teacher who had a stroke that impaired his speech. He got the Head Hunters into a work scheme cleaning roadsides and sponsored them. This is often mistaken for him being their investment banker for the entire first term of the Labour Government. Nevertheless, Hawkins once confided to the financial head of the Head Hunters: "It's easy enough criticising the opposition, but it's a lot more difficult getting things done when you're in power." The KGB's Helen Clark chose George Hawkins as Police Minister for his incompetence, his inability to get things done, his doormat qualities, his low IQ, and the lack of respect he commands within the Police Force, or anywhere else in the country . . . Police Minister George Hawkins is a marionette.

For immediate release
Drugs R'US
UNcontrolledleak
MI-6secureNZretirement fund, Afghan hook successful. hconway2un.

THIS LETTER WAS FORWARDED BEFORE MAILING
PLEASE DESTROY THE ORIGINAL COPY & ENVELOPE

TIME Inc
Level 4
61 Lavender St
Milson's Point
Sydney, NSW 2061

TIME magazine
Rory Callinan
Ph 00614 176 04302
Fx 00617 3378 6932
Rory-Callinan@tiime.com.au

. . . .

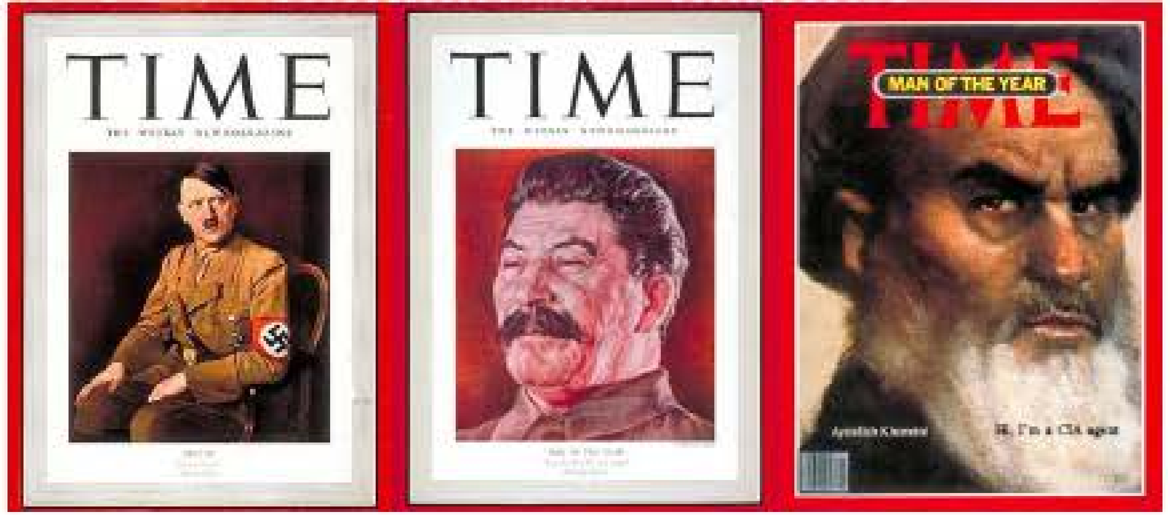
This letter was sent to TIME [magazine] Inc., but they're a Zionist rag. They promote every war they can, albeit with a intelligent bent, always informing the West on new groups and prominent people to hate and loath, and then promote those we should hate with a full page colour distraction of Hitler, or Stalin, or the Ayatollah Khomeini as 'Man of the Year'.

It's all front cover.

TIME you suck!

I say to the West – "Look at your own bathwater. There's the baby you're creating."

Zionists fill up both ends of the spectrum – war and liberty – arms and drugs – and it is the Zionists that control our media and the media that controls the wars – which ones we get into and how long they last – each one a fabrication – each one a fabricated distraction.



Each war has its front cover reasons, usually tribal conflicts. But really, come on now, the Afghan war was created to wrestle the lucrative heroin trade off the Russians and give it to the Americans and British who would then supply Britain, America and other NATO allies, with direct Afghan heroin NATO flights to your Western nation.

And then there was the oil pipeline.

With this huge Afghan heroin dump, NATO was looking for new allies. Whenever NATO looks for "new allies" read 'new and expanded heroin markets for the black budget economy – the black dollar that has so many ongoing consequences.

World press – you suck!

"Peter, dig your music, but check out who your promoters are."

– Le Mark.

Frampton Comes Alive!
ROLLING STONE
THE LOST YEAR OF THE SLA
THE PRETTY POWER ROCKER BY CAMERON CROWE
PETER FRAMPTON
Frampton Comes Alive!

The Daily Show with Jon Stewart (and Gretchen Peters) 8 June 2009

Jon Stewart: "My guest tonight, a journalist who has written a book, Seeds of Terror, How Heroin is Bankrolling the Taliban and al Qaeda. Please welcome to the programme, Gretchen Peters."[4]

Jon Stewart: "Very nice to see you. You spent how long on the border of Pakistan and Afghanistan researching the book Seeds of Terror."

Gretchen Peters: "Well I wrote the book over five years, so I didn't live the whole time on the border, I lived in Pakistan."

Jon Stewart: "And you blended in because when you walked out, I thought, oh my God, is that a Taliban! . . I couldn't tell, because you look, it's very hard."

Gretchen Peters: "Well I left my burka out back stage".

Jon Stewart: "Did you have to wear a burka though".

Gretchen Peters: "Argh, no. When your six foot tall you kind of can't get away with wearing a burka."

Jon Stewart: "Are you bin Laden? You're a six-foot tall blonde haired woman, with, in these border regions, with these Islamics and these drug runners, did they hassle you? Were they mad at you? What was your relationship with them?

Gretchen Peters: "Actually what one of the most interesting things I found about researching this book was that – I started working on this after Danny Pearl was killed[5] – so I was very nervous about my security. I wouldn't go and meet people in private places. I'd insist on meeting them in restaurants, hotels, that kind of thing. And they would all come and see me, smugglers, traffickers, farmers we would, you know, go to the farm areas."

Jon Stewart: "What is this like match.com".

---

[4] Gretchen Peters was a journalist for The Associated Press, then a reporter for ABC News.

[5] Daniel Pearl (10 October 1963–1 February 2002) was the Wall Street Journal South Asia Bureau Chief based in Mumbai (Bombay) India. He was in Pakistan investigating alleged links between the shoe bomber Richard Reid, al Qaeda, and Pakistan's Inter-Services Intelligence (ISI), when he was kidnapped, murdered and beheaded in Karachi, Pakistan. (The ISI are intelligence sluts.)

Ahmed Omar Saeed Sheikh (b. 23 December 1973 in Pakistan) studied at the London School of Economics and became a British national. He was recruited by MI-6 from the London School of Economics – a favourtie hunting ground, it means that they can add up the heroin numbers.

On 15 July 2002, Ahmed Omar Saeed Sheikh was sentenced to hang, but appealed and is still in prison.

The British don't really like killing their own agents. It gives them an even worse reputation and makes recruiting difficult. So five years later, in March 2007 at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba, during a closed military hearing, Khalid Dheikh Mohammed 'admitted' that he had personally killed Daniel Pearl.

So it lookes like the MI-6 agent Ahmed Omar Saeed Sheikh will be set free to practise heroin economics at London, where 95% of the heroin comes from Afghanistan.

Gretchen Peters: "No one ever gets . . . nobody ever gets caught. No one has ever tried to stop the drug trade. The only thing we ever do is try and get rid of the poppy crops, which just pisses off all the farmers. Nobody ever goes after the trafficking side of the drug trade out there."

If the US were serious about removing poppies, they would use a combine harvester and not soldiers haphazardly plucking one at a time and carrying an armful 200 paces across some field.

Jon Stewart: "Well you have named many of them now in your book".

Gretchen Peters: "Yes . . . which is why I now live in the United States . . . I think when you write a book about terrorists and drug traffickers, it's a good idea to get the hell out of Dodge."

Jon Stewart: "I think that's probably wise. Now, this is incredible. They're making what, four to five billion dollars a year and that money is being split by the Taliban and al Qaeda."

Gretchen Peters: "Afghanistan's drug crop now is believed to be worth four billion dollars within Afghanistan. According to my calculations, and the research that I've done, the Taliban alone – Afghanistan alone, and I'm talking about the Afghan Taliban, Pakistan is a whole other branch – the Afghan Taliban make about a half billion dollars a year off the drug trade."

Jon Stewart: "Okay, so after buying a few Xboxes and a few other things, where is this money going. I'm assuming buying arms, and hiring people, and corruption."

Gretchen Peters: "Absolutely. It's very clear from the research that I did that drug money pays for all their operational costs in Afghanistan – so every time an American soldier is killed or wounded in an ID attack, or roadside bomb, opium money helped to pay for that."

Jon Stewart: "But how do you . . . we can't even stop it in Mexico, in Columbia. We've had a war on drugs for years. That has not gone away. How can we possibly think that we can control it in an area as rugged and as disparate as Afghanistan and Pakistan."

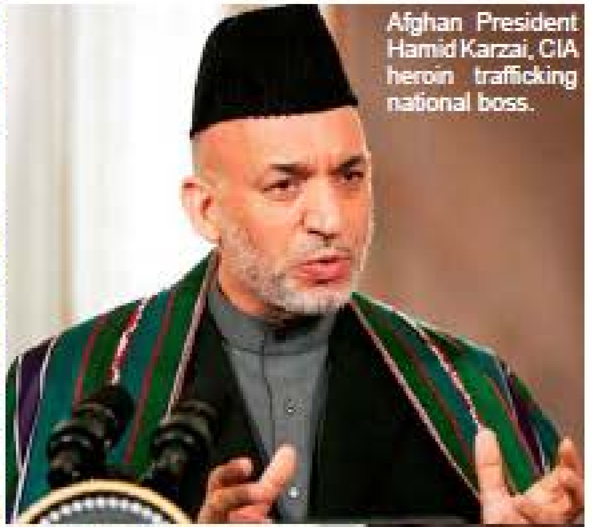
Gretchen Peters: "Well, it's not going to be easy. I'm not suggesting it will be easy. I put forward a nine point strategy that I think will at least cut off the terror groups from their drug money, but the priority here has to be disrupting their ability to fund themselves. I mean that is a central principle of any counter-insurgency campaign – is to cut and degrade the enemy's ability to fund themselves."

Jon Stewart: "We can't pay them four billion dollars".

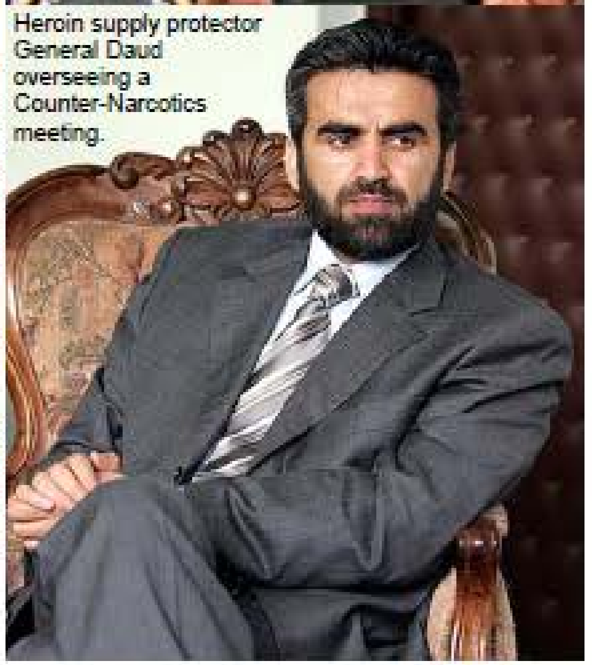
Gretchen Peters: "I know, but we need to go after the trafficking end of things. We need to start arresting traffickers, disrupting their drug networks, bombing the drug convoys."

Jon Stewart: "What if we just keep Amy Winehouse from . . . How much of that . . . What does that say of us."

Gretchen Peters: "Send her over there. That's a really good idea. Now I'm going to put that in my [book]."



Afghan President Hamid Karzai, CIA heroin trafficking national boss.



Heroin supply protector General Daud overseeing a Counter-Narcotics meeting.

Jon Stewart: "That's your tenth point. This is how entrenched it is. This is what I'm stunned about when reading it. Hamid Karzai, his brother is a major linchpin in the narco-trafficking."

Gretchen Peters: "Widely believed to be THE MAJOR facilitator of the drugs trafficking in Afghanistan, and, to me, this is the biggest problem that we face out there.[6] It's not the fact that Taliban and al Qaeda are making huge amounts of money off the drugs trade. That's a big enough challenge on its own. Our challenge, and it's not just Afghanistan, our challenge in both countries, in Afghanistan and Pakistan is finding reliable partners to work with.

"The drug corruption has permeated both of these governments to the very highest level. I mean, I was shown Intelligence reports indicating how much the US Government knows about Hamid Karzai's brother[7] and his involvement in the drugs trade and yet, again, he still has a job, he still has a provincial position in Kandahar."[8]

Jon Stewart: "One of the main ministers in charge of narco-trafficking?"

Gretchen Peters: "There was a terrific article recently in The Globe and Mail about the fact that the Deputy Counter-Narcotics Minister Daoud Daoud is himself a drug trafficker. Yep."[9]

Jon Stewart: "FUCK!!!!!!"

---

[6] Ahmed Wali Karzai (Hamid Karzai's younger brother) is the chairman of the provincial council in Kandahar, and is influential among the Pashtun clan 'Popalzai' (500,000 of them). He is also the head of a group that smuggles/trafficks opium and heroin through Iran and Turkey to the West and provides the protection through southern Afghanistan. ('Karzai's brother under Drug Suspicion', Speigel Online, 31 August 2006.)

[7] Hamid Karzai (24 December 1957–) was the CIA contact for financial and military support to the Mujahideen during the Soviet invasion in the 1980s. His brothers immigrated to the United States and were personally dealing with CIA Director William Casey and former CIA Director George H. W. Bush, then Vice President under Ronald Reagan and Frank Sinatra.

Hamid Karzai emigrated to Pakistan during the Soviet occupation, and upon Soviet withdrawal, Karzai (CIA) was amongst the first Mujahideen leaders into Kabul in 1992. When the Taliban were 'removed' in late 2001 (although they still very much exist to this day, so that was a media success and a real failure), Hamid Karzai became Chairman of the Transitional Administration (December 2001), then Interim President (2002–04), then President (7 December 2004–).

[8] Kandahar (Qandahār) is the second largest city in Afghanistan.

[9] Afghan Deputy Interior Minister for Counter Narcotics Daoud Daoud (aka General H. E. Mohammed Daud Daud, b. 1 January 1969) studied engineering, then joined the war against the Soviet Union and became the military commander of the Northern Alliance which spearheaded the defeat of the Taliban with 40,000 men. He then became commander of the Konduz Military Corps.

President Hamid Karzai (CIA) then gave General Daud the title "Hero of the Afghan Nation".

Gretchen Peters spent two years in Afghanistan's Helmand province.

Gretchen Peters: "It's not a lite read, I'll give you that. But, this is really important and I also believe, that if we follow the money, if we follow the money, we will round up the guys that we've been looking for. I mean I was just walking down by Ground Zero earlier today and I want to get those motherfuckers. This is . . ."

Jon Stewart: "Let me tell you, I'm incredibly turned on right now".

Gretchen Peters: "We could go get a drink later".

Jon Stewart: "I agree with you, so are you suggesting a more Mafia-like, the way that they, corruption and things, but how do you go get them, you still have to send in the army to go and get these guys, because they have armies."

Gretchen Peters: "Well, we have to absolutely have to . . . I believe the troops surge that's going out there has to happen to stablise these border areas. The problem, to me is, there also is going to have to be a civilian surge of people, to . . ."

Jon Stewart: "To turn the civilian population against the Taliban . . ."

Gretchen Peters: "No, no, no. The civilian population is already against them. They hate them. The problem is actually stablising these border areas that have been left ungoverned for years.

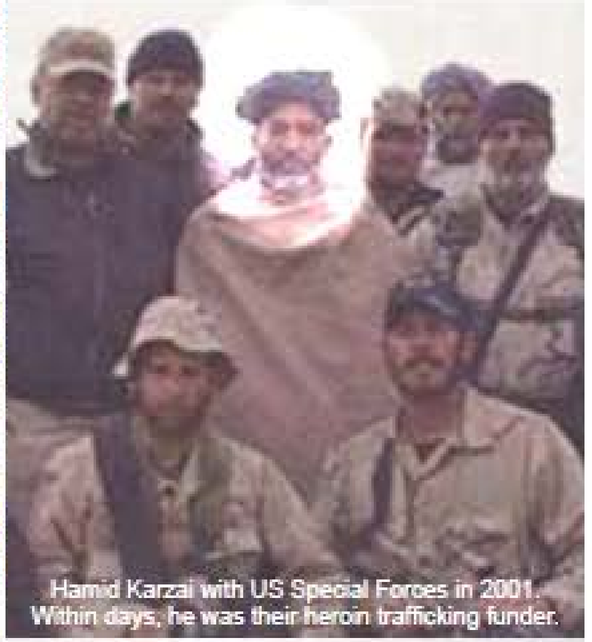
"To me the big worry is that we will just push it over the border to Pakistan which hs enough problems of its own.

"How are we going to do this on both sides, exactly."

Jon Stewart: "Is that in your nine points? . . . I look forward to the sequel 'Flowers of Terror'. Thanks. It is unbelievable read. It is eye-opening. Seeds of Terror on the bookshelves now. Thank you so much for coming, Gretchen Peters."

One person achieves more in five years than governments do in twenty.

But here's the reason for the ongoing Afghan War and sabotage . . . My Nine Points



Hamid Karzai with US Special Forces in 2001. Within days, he was their heroin trafficking funder.

Heroin trafficker Hamid Karzai is given a royal welcome at the White House in 2007.

The beheading of the Jewish Daniel Pearl was ultimately organised by the Jews to create animosity between the Christians and Islam.

1. Afghan President Hamid Karzai is CIA working under George H. W. Bush to ensure heroin gets to the United States and Britain with total secure chains from production to supply and sale.

2. Hamid Karzai's brothers were also CIA agents working with CIA and US military heroin trafficking. Hamid Karzai's younger brother (Ahmed Wali Karzai) is one of the major heroin traffickers. Both the CIA and the US military fund their operations through drugs – principally heroin. So these Afghan and Pakistan heroin traffickers are actually installed by the US/UK military as part of an ongoing funding drive, and are treated back in the US as national heroes complete with presidential welcome and Air Force One helicopter ride.

3. MI-6 train Pakistan citizens (often through the London School of Economics) and don't care whether they remain MI-6 or turn rogue. 'Rogue' just means the war continues longer and more viciously.

4. When someone (Danny Pearl) investigates a media sacred cow/false connection between the shoe bomber/al Qaeda/ISI they are killed by CIA/MI-6 Pakistan/Afghan agents in (reportedly) the most gut wrenching Islamic/anti-Christian fashion. This creates a hatred of Muslims in the Christian world and justifies the army, thus creating moral support back home.

5. A false killer is then blamed, either the MI-6 agent Ahmed Omar Saeed Sheikh, or the MI-6/CIA agent Osama bin Laden, then held in protective custody.[10]

6. This helps to boost the price of heroin. The same tactics are used around oil.

7. Five years later, the true killer confesses (Khalid Dheikh Mohammed) although in a closed court, thus justifying Guantanamo Bay. This lets the MI-6 agent off the hook, and makes the 2007 MI-6 recruiting drive at the London School of Economics a whole lot more willing.

---

[10] Osama bin Laden was the British Public schoolboy Harry bin Laden (considered a very nice boy) who became the CIA agent Tim Osman. In the spring of 1986 Harry wore casual Western attire to a covert meeting with the US State Department at the Hilton Hotel on Ventura Boulevard in Sherman Oaks, California. He travelled on a Turkish passport where another Osman is a Turkish official.

8. Meanwhile the CIA General in Afghanistan (Daud) in control of Interior is given immunity from prosecution by being named the "Hero of the Afghan Nation" (Heroin of Afghanistan) by the CIA plant President Hamid Karzai who works directly under Bush senior and Bush junior, as well as successive heads of the CIA to supply the West with heroin, thus advancing communism.

The Bushes are heroin-trafficking oligarchical communists.

9. To top it all off, the new Secretary General of NATO (Fogh Rasmussen, 1 August 2009–) is a cross-dressing coke addict, who will do anything to support the importation of drugs into Northern Europe, thus opening up a new drug market.

10. All we are empowered to do is advise our children that heroin ain't such a good thing . . . but if you're going to die, it's a great way to go out. So the world's governments have organised a suicide epidemic by destroying every foundation of society and made morality look like a path to poverty.

Meanwhile, the heroin General Daud exchanges documents with the Chinese.

Fogh Rasmussen:
NATO's choice of coke using cross-dresser.

Karzai shakes hands with Pirate Captain Temporary – a.k.a. U.S. President Bush, 1 March 2006.

Coffee anyone?

The CIA's heroin trafficking Hamid Karzai applauded by the US Congress at Capitol Hill in June 2004 – with Evil's Dick Cheney looking on.

NATO & THE UN WANTED WAR CRIMINALS

No One Hunts War Criminals

Despite what the public thinks, there are no people hunting for war criminals. The public thinks it is NATO and the UN thinks it is NATO, and NATO thinks it is the 'UN and the public'. War criminals are only ever caught if they give themselves up by saying:

"Hi. I am a war criminal! Perhaps you are looking for me???."

When they say: "I am the war criminal. Give my bodyguards and family the reward money", they don't get paid, or caught. Even when war criminals are sick and in hospital, they get protection from foreign countries . . . who guarantee their protection in exchange for information, former adverse agent locations holding the stolen loot (if there is enough of it), and a biography which never ever gets published in its raw form.

People mistake greatness for 'pure evil' and 'pure evil' for greatness on both sides of the war. The public also mistakes 'absence' for 'humility', but finds out later it's 'pure evil'.

Vice President Dick Cheney was more or less absent for the entire Iraq War and it's aftermath. It is protocol in double agent wars to station the 2-IC with the real Double Agent villain as security . . . like U.S. Vice President Dick Cheney hanging out with the real Saddam Hussein, killing time playing cards, receiving Intelligence reports and debating if any interference is required to deviate from the agreed plan . . . 'Saddam's swish, the destruction of Iraq, America gets the oil, and installs a puppet government'.

This happened 58 years earlier when Ian Fleming was stationed with the real Adolf Hitler on his exit out of Berlin (2 May 1945) and arrival into Spain (3 May 1945).

The winner of the war always has the greatest control over the media.
No one ever wins a war, but the media says otherwise.

All wars are arrangements with double agents on both sides who have agendas on both sides. The result is always something the media wants – more socialistic social policies etched out of empathy, taking the entire population somewhere between 'barely tolerable' and 'just short of civil war'.

There is a new political dynamic in Iraq that transcended and crushes all previous customs. When 'Saddam Hussein was 'caught' on 13 December 2003:

> "We will see a new political dynamic in Iraq. Why can't they have an election sooner than June 2004. This could precipitate a faster handover of Iraq, or do the Americans want to put their own people in and just seize Iraqi oil."[1]
>
> But there's always a political motive . . .
>
> "This will play extremely well for the presidency . . . The Democrats have been saying there is no evidence at all that our troops are ever going to get home from Iraq . . . Saddam was caught like a rat".[2]
>
> "This is the boost that President Bush needs at the moment. Politically I think this benefits him considerably. It is the first tangible concrete move forward other than the killing of Oday and Qusay. From a political point of view, it is very significant."[3]

But Saddam wasn't caught. It was one of fifty (50) or so doppelgängers, at least two of which ended up in New Zealand.

---

[1] ABC News, December 2003.
[2] Justin Webb, Washington, December 2003.
[3] ABC News, December 2003.

This is nice news 12 days before Christmas and just what America needed to hear . . . Not that it was true . . .

An outgoing war leader, as corrupt as hell, is then shown giving his exit speech to a tough interviewer, and it screened in the wee hours of the morning.

Lord George Robertson, Secretary General of NATO (11 October 1999–5 January 2004) was interviewed on HARDTALK (2am New Zealand time, 20 December 2003) about his four years of complete lack of success as the head of NATO.

NATO and Paedophilia

Nine days before the war started, on 11 March 2003, Lord George Robertson (NATO Secretary General) was accused of being involved in Thomas Hamilton's paedophile ring and it has been suggested this was the reason Britain was drawn into the war – that they were bribed into the Iraq war by Robertson's FBI file.

Thomas Hamilton was running a paedophile ring for the Labour politicians before they came into power in 1997. Hamilton was a mentally unstable Freemason, known to the police as a paedophile, and was consequently refused a gun license.

Thomas Hamilton went to George Robertson who used his Freemasonry influence to get Hamilton a gun license. Thomas Hamilton then shot 16 children, one teacher, and himself in the Dunblane massacre, in Scotland on the 16 March 1996.

It was the personal effort and glowing character reference from George Robertson that got him the gun license. If George Robertson didn't do this, Thomas would have exposed his paedophilia and would not have got a gun licence.

The police knew Thomas Hamilton was a paedophile. They'd investigated him several times for "procuring boys for sexual services", and didn't charge him because the British police are under the thumb of the Freemasons and are paedophile minders – essentially adult Boy Scouts (the same as in New Zealand). Freemasons are given police protection from paedophile charges for a fee and those fees are usually paid as a large sum in a convoluted manner.

The police fee was established through collusion. Hamilton blackmailed one of his richer paedophile customers and the Strathclyde Police seized the man's launch (from Loch Ness), did not prosecute, and had a private auction selling the boat to none other than Thomas Hamilton for £5,000. Hamilton lived nowhere near water and had no need for the launch.

The profit from the resale of the launch then funded the police collusion to allow Thomas Hamilton to continue to supply children to British paedophiles with Masonic Police Support.

George Robertson was involved in a Scottish paedophile-and-blackmailing-ring that included the Strathclyde Police.

One of the last calls Thomas Hamilton made was to Prince Philip, the Queen's husband, Head of the Freemasons, and international paedophile minder.

> "The paedophile ring was falling apart and 'someone' instructed Thomas Hamilton to get rid of all the children and any witnesses. So on the 16 March 1996 at the Dunblane School in Scotland, Thomas Hamilton, the unstable Freemason who ran a Scottish paedophile blackmailing ring, shot all of the Boys club members, the teacher and himself.
> "The gun was provided through a character reference provided by George Robertson (Freemason) who then became Lord George Robertson, the UK Defense Secretary and then the Secretary General of NATO [11 October 1999–5 January 2004]."[4]

---

[4] Mike Sullivan, The Sun, 11 March 2003.

Robertson talks up to 'Cocaine Bobby' Powell.

HARDTALK: "You said NATO has delivered real security from Kosovo to Kabil [Aghanistan]. The Foreign Office doesn't agree with you".

Lord George Robertson: "I have discussed it with the Prime Minister today. It's not ideal . . . but we are making a big difference out there".

> We are still the major supporter and supplier of M-PAD (MONEY, PAEDOPHILIA, ARMS, AND DRUGS)

HARDTALK: "The UN is just warning that Afghanistan risks degenerating into a state controlled by narco-terrorists and drug cartels unless soaring open production is curbed. That's not much in the way of security either is it?"

Lord George Robertson: "No, but we're making a difference . . . but frankly the countries of the West have got to face up to the fact that they will have to put more troops and more resources and bigger investment".

> We won't create security, but we will create a secure supply of drugs into western countries and we will create wars in order to secure that drug supply.
> In return, we want more of your money, to make the countries so secure that the media will not see or hear anything of this drug trafficking.
> After setting up wars to secure massive drug deals were are not about to share those rewards.

HARDTALK: "But here's an irony isn't it. You want all the western countries and NATO members to spend more on defence. When France and Germany decided they wanted to spend more and set up their own military headquarters, then you jumped down their throats".

Lord George Robertson: "I want to see people investing in large airplanes . . . I want to see people spending money on air-to-air refuelling tankers . . . Pathetically mean was about the countries that will not give NATO more money".

> We require large airplanes with neutral labels like NATO and UN to ship those drugs to Western countries and we want air-to-air refuelling so we can't be checked at any customs. This stops the need to bribe third countries.
> We don't want other countries like France and Germany muscling in on our drug deals, or getting any of the details, which can then be used for bribery.

HARDTALK: "The UK spends £34 billion on its defence".

Lord George Robertson: "The total civil budget of NATO budget is €171 million (Euros) among 26 countries. It's one of the best bargains that any of those countries get in terms of collective security. And I do criticise the meanness of governments who will not give us the money to do what everybody wants us to do as well".

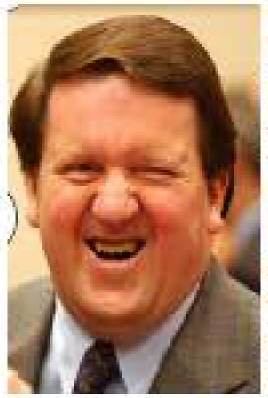
As my face shows, I am a man of absolutely no quality.

A 4-year-old in charge of NATO.

That is to watch wars, supply drugs, create crime, and destroy familes and culture in order to create a One World Order world full of malais.

HARDTALK: "Could it be that they actually don't believe that investing in weapons or indeed the threat of force is the way to a safer world".

Lord George Robertson: "In the last analysis that's the only way you protect democracy and freedom and lives as well".



We need the military to protect the drug supply to the West. In the last analysis that's the only way you ensure the breakdown of Western society and that is one of the major goals of the Bent World Order, as it works towards the goals of the One World Order and the Illuminati – yunno, the destruction of private property, inheritance and religion; the end of the family, marriage, morality, school education, and patriotism. We're well on our way.

HARDTALK: "Not after Iraq surely . . . Many of them objected strongly to the war. They objected strongly to Washington's policy of pre-emption and they found that the declared reason to go to war to disarm Saddam of weapons of mass-destruction has turned out to be nonsense".

Lord George Robertson: "Well I'm not looking for them at the present moment, but Osama Bin Laden hasn't been found and still exists" . . . we knew he had them in the past and we knew he used them in the past . . . NATO is not united as to the reasons for going into that war [Iraq]".

> Any excuse for war is a good excuse in my book. We've always been a warring planet and we are always pandering to the lowest common denomenator. There are drugs supplied from Afghanistan to the Western 5 as well as oil in Iraq, and we intend to dominate the markets from these countries.
>
> Yes, it is international theft. It's piracy and that's okay with me. We're backed up by the President of the United States who is actually 'Pirate Captain So-&-So' – currently it's Pirate Captain Temporary – Bush [and 'Pirate Captain Black' – Barack Obama – who's role is to appear like he's putting America back in the Black].

Lord George Robertson: "I represent 19 countries inside NATO . . . What was important was that he [Bush] went to the United Nations with it. He went to the United Nations with it and then a very tough UN resolution was passed. NATO had a very tough statement at the Prague summit [planning wars]".

> Summits are where wars are created. We must secure the oil supply from Iraq. If we don't then America won't pay the 50% of the UN budget that it normally receives, and America has starved the UN before (in 2000).

Lord George Robertson: "Let us get Afghanistan, because that is now our total responsibility".

> Don't question our continued presence in Afghanistan. We expect we will be controlling the drugs from Afghanistan for a very long time, if not forever. This gives us a ready supply of heroin to Britain, which in turn creates crime there. This in turn employs a large number of Freemasons and this gives us reason for a police state, so shut it.

HARDTALK: "You and I have been talking for four years about getting Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić, the two most seriously indicted war criminals since the end of WWII and you leave NATO now with these two still on the run, 8½ years after there indicted . . . . It's a huge failure isn't it".

Lord George Robertson: "Well it's a failure of those countries that pledge to hand over all those who were indicted. NATO, and this is not generally known, NATO does not have the responsibility for arresting war criminals and those indicted for war crimes. If NATO soldiers come across them in the course of their duties under the Dayton Agreement, then they are to arrest them".

> NATO is not responsible for finding war criminals. We will do our best not to find war criminals. The seach gives us the power of presence. If we find a war criminal, we can always turn around due to, say, lack of fuel, or conflicting arrest warrants, or local custom. Any excuse is a good excuse.

"I'm a 5'2" paedophile minder and heroin trafficker."

HARDTALK: "And they never came across them. Here's an area the size of Wales, in 8½ years, you said last time 'These two have to be lucky every day, we only have to be lucky once. Not one moment of luck in 8½ years. That's stretching credibility isn't it."

Lord George Robertson: "We haven't got Osama Bin Laden and we haven't got some other people as well".

> Osama Bin Laden is an MI6 agent and is our new reason to be financed. We don't want to catch and kill Bin Laden because he was Barbara Bush's lover in 2000. Even George Herbert Bush knew about their affair. They, the Bin Laden's were living in False Church, Virginia, the town just behind Langely and CIA headquarters. Can you believe the cheek of it? Still they got away with it.

HARDTALK: "The truth is there isn't the political will to do it is there".

> We protect our war criminals as jealously as we protect the need to go to war. We trained these people, some of them in Tavistock, England, and we need their presence to create war. We have an agreement with them that they will not be caught. If they're caught, there is a reduced need for our presence. Without war we have a recession as 16% of GNP, at least in America, is involved in war. In England it is £34 billion. Wars are expensive and we need to spend that budget annually. If we don't we start a military recession, and we have been expanding for a long time now.

HARDTALK: "Come off it. If the West wanted to do it, they would have done it by now. This is a clear obstruction of the process. Someone is obstructing this process. You know where they are don't you".

Lord George Robertson: "No I don't". Absolutely hand on heart, and if we did, we would go and get them".

> Freemasons lie better than most people tell the truth and I work for M-PAD and find that war provides me with many oportunites with fatherless children. Some of these children are then sent back to England and America for paedophile clubs to prey upon, often under the guise of religious orders, social services, foster homes, Department of Health Social Security (DHSS) and/or Child Youth and Family Services – afterall it is a public service. See, higher up, sex is actually covered as part of the salary. Our employers have a vested interest in keeping our sexual secrets quiet, so they have turned to supply, and find their best employees come from those who can provide that demand.

HARDTALK: "And nobody in NATO knows. I find that very difficult to believe after 8½ years".

Lord George Robertson: "Well you'd better believe it". You don't think that I would have loved to have been the secretary general of NATO and go to a press conference and announce, 'We got 'em', just like Mr Bremer did in Iraq. You don't think that there are not thousands of soldiers out there who would love to be the ones who said, 'The secretary of NATO sends his good wishes' as Karadžić and Mladić were picked up. Yunno, come on, that is a very difficult part of the world. These people are moving all the time, and they have a lot of protection from a lot of people who should know better, but eventually they will be caught because they are, yunno, they have got to face justice in The Hague just like the dozens of others that we've actually arrested in the meantime are doing".

> We keep them in a safe house whose location we guard jealously, and suppress any reports that they are living freely and openly in Belgrade.

Killer teeth.

We haven't got them because we haven't found good enough doppelgängers yet, not even in neighbouring aligned Russia. They are our own agents, effectively the heads of state of our economic allies – at least in terms of militarily employment – so we will not have them killed or place them under any unnecessary duress.

HARDTALK: "The former Labour MP Dennis Canavan, said some of the companies involved in the defence industry, the ones you're going to be joining, he said, 'There should be strict rules to stop former Defence Ministers and NATO officials from taking up such directorships".

Lord George Robertson: "Well, Dennis was expelled from the Labour Party and he never liked me so, I didn't expect him to be particularly friendly and that."

> Dennis Canavan knew I was exposed in the Thomas Hamilton paedophile scam and that was why he was expelled from the Labour Party and I was promoted. He needed to be silenced. Paedophilia and the military have always walked hand-in-hand, yunno, when the big hand meets the little hand . . .
>
> The military have the means to implant sickness in people – cancer, brain tumours, motor neurone disease etc, so we killed two or three of his sons, all of them under suspicious circumstances.
>
> Dennis Canavan was a maths teacher elected to Westminster in 1974 as Labour MP for West Stirlingshire. His son Paul (16) battled with skin cancer for eight months and died in 1989.
>
> In 1999, Dennis tried to stand for Scottish parliament, failed to make it to the Labour candiate list, complained the selection process was rigged, stood as an independent for Falkirk West (in Strathclyde between Glasgow and Edinburgh) and beat the Labour Party candidate fair and square, and with a big margin. He set up in Holyrood, [and now we're in the future] announced his retirement (63) in January 2007, to stand down in May, and we got to his third son in February.
>
> Absolute bastards like myself, Lord George 'Paedophile' Robertson, don't give up. We just keep on killing until our enemy is so weak they are no longer an enemy, but a dependent ally.
>
> Dennis (35) died from a brain tumour in November 2006 and three months later, in February 2007, his son Mark (41) died from the motor neurone disease he'd been battling since 2004. Prior to us, he'd had a perfect health history and even an engineering degree from Strathclyde University. So we had to get him.[5]

Dennis Canavan.

HARDTALK: "But there is a worry that your public service gave you access to important secret information that gives you an unfair advantage now working for a commercial company. A former Labour man like you . . ."

Lord George Robertson: "I take absolutely no secrets away with me into that sort of world".

> I am the person who is best placed to serve the Bent World Order and expand paedophilia, arms and drugs onto the world stage.
>
> I am the person best placed to breakdown Western society so that the Bent World Order can gain a complete grasp in those societies. What, do you think I'm into 'peace, freedom and culture'. Get real. I am evil in a suit, and I am best suited to evil. If anyone speaks out against me, I can always create a war in their country.
>
> I am now the deputy chairman of British-based Telecoms group Cable and Wireless – the ultimate position for spying on drug and paedophile markets . . . and supplying them.

HARDTALK: "Lord Robertson, former Defence Secretary of the United Kingdom . . ."

---

[5] Paraphrased from www.guardian.co.uk, 'Ex-Labour MP loses third son', 20 March 2007.

Paedophiles under the flag.
Robertson and Bush.

Secretary-General of NATO Lord George Robertson: "Jaap [de Hoop Scheffer] has a distinguished record as both diplomat and politician that make him superbly qualified to be secretary general of NATO . . . I am delighted that we have found the right man to ensure NATO remains the world's most successful defense alliance."[6] Amsterdam-born Jaap de Hoop Scheffer is a reserve officer in Dutch Air Force, a senior diplomat before entering Parliament in 1986 and "an extremely talented professional". Scheffer: "The enemy is international terrorism . . . that is why NATO is in Afghanistan."[7]

Scheffer is an extremely polished drug trafficker, a lot like Colin 'Cocaine Bobby' Powell.

. . . .

CIA Hitman: "We love this [Vietnam] war. We own it"

Australian ex-serviceman: "Bullshit".

CIA Hitman: "Bullshit?, you think its bullshit. We've got our own people in the government. Why else do you think we'd be fighting this war in the middle of nowhere, uh? We set it up. Ho Chi-Minh – the whole lot. They're all working for us and they don't even know it. And you know why – heroin. Who are we sending over there, uh? Niggers, white trash. They go over there what do they get? They get cheap heroin. They get hooked. They bring it back to the States and we've got a ready-made market. It's niggers and white trash so the cops don't care. We'll keep this thing going a few more years yet. We've got the whole thing set up. We've got the poppy farms – everything. We're making a killing".[8]

. . . .

Ho Chi-Minh (1892–1969) originally Nguyen That Tahnh, made frequent visits to Moscow once Political Correctness had been invented in May 1921, and was one of the founding members of the Communist Party in France. He studied politics in France from 1918 and washed dishes with Mao Zedong (1883–1976). He was the Vietnamese Prime Minister that started the Vietnam War from 1954–75. Almost everyone appears to be trained in the West. Even the new Afghanistan leader has a strong Texas accent. The Americans and British are placing their own as leaders in foreign countries and have been doing so for centuries.

. . . .

> Tony Blair talking to his troops during the clean up eight months after the Iraq war ended: "A brutal and repressive state, but because of that brutality, because they don't actually have the support or consent of their people, they're developing weapons that can cause distraction and destruction on a massive scale."

Reporter: "Oh dear. Tony Blair probably knows that that argument is lost for now at least . . . Even though it's many months since the war was over, even though Saddam is now captured, he still has to try and persuade the British public it was the right war to fight.[9] [6] BBC News, 23 September 2003.

---

[7] Ibid.

[8] 'Dirty Deeds', 2002, starring John Goodman and Sam Neill.

[9] 6 o'clock news, TV3, 5 January 2004.

British Distraction and Destruction on a Massive Scale

At a private party in Clapham, London, in 1986,[10] the Treasury Financial Secretary Norman Lamont[11] revealed that Gordon Brown was a practising paedophile, and his activities were known to British, American and Israeli intelligence services, Rupert Murdoch, and his senior editor at the Sunday Times.

Lamont had been the director of Rothschild Asset Management at N M Rothschild & Sons. He told this to the British television media scriptwriter, Mike James. Norman Lamont was then elevated to life peer as Baron Lamont of Lerwick in 1996, and promoted to Chief Secretary to the Treasury in 1989, and Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1990. Scriptwriter Mike James was then run out of the UK and lives in exile in Germany, and sometimes Africa, etc.

From 1986 to 2003, Gordon Brown's name popped up again and again related to paedophilia, paedophile rings, and the 1996 Dunblane Massacre of 16 school children and their teacher.

Thomas Hamilton with naked children.

Dunblane school children – 16 killed, plus the teacher.

Prior to the Dunblane Massacre on 13 March 1996, Thomas Hamilton was allowed to roam free through the Queen Victoria School (QVS) and pupils were regularly bullied, kidnapped, and sexually abused. QVS ex-housemaster Glenn Harrison kept dozens of files these pupils had written as affidavits. In 1991, he even wrote to parents warning them of the dangers. The pro-paedophile police then raided his home, confiscated the files, and days later he was tresspassed off the school. Glenn Harrison then told the UK's News of the World: "I'd discovered Thomas Hamilton (43) creeping around the dormitories at night . . . Hamilton had been a friend of Ben Philip, the senior housemaster at QVS."[12] In response, Judge Lord Cullen refused to call ex-Queen Victoria School housemaster Glenn Harrison to give evidence in The Cullen Inquiry into the Dunblane Massacre.

The American FBI provided discreet leaks of a secret list of British and Scottish paedophiles to the Sottish Sunday Times and Sunday Herald newspapers, who published it as 'Child Porn Arrests Too Slow' (Neil Mackay, Home Affair's correspondent, 19 January 2003), just prior to the illegal invasion of Iraq on 20 March 2003, where the Americans had twisted Tony Blair's paedophilic arm. This included details of a child-sex ring involving senior ministers of the Blair New Labour government.

In fear of scandal, a swift end to his administration, and being embarrassed out of the history books, Prime Minister Tony Blair issued a gagging order and a 100-year blackout order. The cover-up even had a name – Operation Ore – which undermined the reporting of the Dunblane massacre of 16 school children and one teacher, as shot by the ex-Boy Scout leader | convicted child molester | Manchurian Candidate | paedophile agent of the UK's aristocracy and MPs | Thomas Hamilton – who was actually walked to the shooting by Lord Cullen (SS) on 13 March 1996.

Lord Cullen
Thomas Hamilton
Gordon Brown
Alan Milburn
Lord Goldsmith
Baron Forsyth
Lord Mandelson
Rt Hon Tony Blair PMF CGM

Tony Blair's administration suppressed Scotland Yard's anti-paedophile investigation. Very soon after, close ally of Tony Blair – Alan Milburn, dramatically resigned as Secretary of State for Health on 13 June 2003, citing the usual excuse – need to "spend more time with my family". Once the heat was off, 15 months later, he re-joined government in the soft-touch position as Minister for the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.[13]

Emergency service personnel and leading journalists then accussed the above of having achieved a cover-up. Within weeks, the articles disappeared off the Internet and the Sunday Times, Mackay's editor at the Sunday Herald, the British Home Office, and Scotland Yard refused to answer or return calls.

Lord Cullen (SS) – who had physically walked Thomas Hamilton to the massacre, and therefore an accomplice to the mass murder, and most likely his Manchurian Candidate controller

---

[10] 'Revealed: British Premier Gordon Brown Is A Paedophile', Mike James in Germany, The Truth Seeker, 28 February 2010. These several pages are based around this article.

[11] Norman Stewart Hughson Lamont (8 May 1942–) worked for the investment bank N M Rothschild & Sons and became director of Rothschild Asset Management. He was then Conservative MP for Kingston-upon-Thames (4 May 1972–22 Jan. 1986); Under Prime Minister John Major, he was Financial Secretary to the Treasury (22 Jan. 1986–24 July 1989); created a life peer as Baron Lamont of Lerwick, PC (1998–); Chief Secretary to the Treasury (24 July 1989–28 Nov. 1990); and Chancellor of the Exchequer (28 Nov. 1990–27 May 1993).

[12] Ben Philip (46) then died in December 1993, falling from a ladder while hanging decorations.

[13] Alan Milburn (27 January 1958–); MP for Darlington (9 April 1992–); Chief Secretary to the Treasury (23 Dec. 1998–11 Oct. 1999); Secretary of State for Health (11 Oct. 1999–13 June 2003, resigned); Minister for the Cabinet Office Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (reassigned 8 Sept. 2004–6 May 2005); then worked as an advisor to Australian Prime Minister Kevin Rudd (2007) a.k.a. 'Joe 90 NWO Fire Starter'.

– was then made the judge who conducted the inquiry into the Dunblane Massacre. To add insult to injury, it was known as The Cullen Inquiry (1996) and he was titled Lord Cullen for the duration, 12 years before he was actually elevated (2007/08).

Named and implicated were: Attorney-General Lord Peter Henry Goldsmith[14]; Secretary of State for Scotland Michael Forsyth (SS)[15]; George Robertson (SS); Secretary of State for Health Alan Milburn; Robert Bell (Chairman of the constituency party at Edinburgh Pentlands/ friend and associate of British Foreign Secretary Malcolm Rifkind); the flamboyant homosexual Peter Mandelson[16] (now Lord Mandelson/ paedophiles are elevated); Tony Blair[17]; Gordon Brown (from at least 1986); and many of Gordon Brown's senior and junior ministers. They were given free licence to engage in paedophiliac activities, and were actually protected by the British intelligence services.

This is on-going.

---

[14] Lord Peter Goldsmith announced his resignation on 22 June 2007, taking effect on 27 June 2007 – the same day Prime Minister Tony Blair stood down. Goldsmith had been the longest serving Labour Attorney-General and now works as head of European litigation (no doubt protecting the paedophile-accused) for Debevoise & Plimpton (U.S.).

[15] SS = member of the secretive Super-Mason "Speculative Society" lodge formed in Edinburgh University through Masonic connections in 1764. These are also considered to be New Labour "Scottish Mafia" figures, which includes the gang association of Tony Blair, Gordon Brown, William Cullen, George Robertson, John Reid, judges, sheriffs and advocates ,etc.

Officially The Speculative Society is a Scottish Enlightenment society dedicated to public speaking and literary composition, acting as a venue for professional competency in rhetoric, argument, and the presentation of papers among fellow members. It is mainly (but not exclusively) a university student organisation, that includes Edinburgh University Law students, Harvard University Law students, and University of Southern California Philosophy students. In Scotland and the UK, The Speculative Society has been accussed of being a secret society of prominent people who utilise undue influence over the legal system. Lord Brian Gill then led a Judicial Enquiry (not Inquiry) which discounted this, as you would expect with the undue influence of prominent people. Lord Cullen is the only person listed here, who is formally listed as a Speculative Society member. The others are off the list, which tends to indicate it's a secret society.

William Douglas Cullen (18 November 1935–) studied at the University of Edinburgh; admitted to the Faculty of Advocates (1960–); Standing Junior Counsel to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise (1970–73); Queen's Counsel (1973–); Advocate Depute (1978–81); Judge (1986–); Senator of the College of Justice; Judge of the High Court of Justiciary and Court of Session. As Lord Cullen, he Chaired the Public Inquiry into the shootings at Dunblane Primary School (1996). Lord Justice Clerk and President of the Second Division of the Inner House (1997–2001); Lord Justice General and Lord President of the Court of Session (2001–05); created life peer as Baron Cullen of Whitekirk, of Whitekirk in East Lothian (2003–); President of the Saltire Society (25 June 2005–); Knight of the Thistle as Lord Cullen (30 November 2007–) knighted by Queen Elizabeth II at a ceremony held in Edinburgh on 2 July 2008. Lord Cullen sits as one of the five additional Lords of Appeal in the House of Lords/ House of Peers. William Cullen has received all the cover and promotion traditionally supplied to a paedophile, paedophile enabler, paedophile minder, murderer and file thief. He is Baron Cullen of Whitekirk, KT, PC, QC, FRSE, Hon FEng and one of the senior members of the Scottish Judiciary. Tony Blair was born in Edinburgh, Scotland (6 May 1953).

[16] Peter Benjamin Mandelson (21 October 1953–) was the MP for Hartlepool (9 April 1992–23 July 2004); Minister without Portfolio (2 May 1997–27 July 1998 under Tony Blair (so organising paedophile meets and covering up the Dunblane Massacre); Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (27 July 1998–23 Dec. 1998); Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (11 Oct. 1999–24 Jan. 2001); European Commissioner for Trade (22 Nov. 2004–3 Oct. 2008) under José Manuel Barroso; Secretary of State for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform (3 Oct. 2008–5 June 2009) under Gordon Brown; who then had Peter Mandelson elevated to life peer, making him Baron Mandelson PC, and taking his seat in the House of Lords on 13 October 2008. Baron Mandelson was then made Lord President of the Council | First Secretary of State | Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills, all on 5 June 2009–.

All of this stinks of paedophile cover in a pre-arranged play from Tony Blair and Gordon Brown.

[17] Tony's father, Leo Blair, was the illegitimate son of two English actors who adopted Leo out as a baby to Mary and James Blair – a Glasgow shipyard worker, then junior tax inspector who studied law at the University of Edinburgh, and thus would have come across The Speculative Society. Leo then lectured in law at the University of Adelaide and Durham University. Tony Blair's elder brother became the High Court judge, Sir William Blair. Tony Blair then appointed Charlie Falconer (a pupil at the rival Edinburgh Academy) as Lord Chancellor.

The base of the elevated paedophile movement was a Freemason lodge in Edinburgh University called the "Speculative Society" lodge (SS) with close links to the Duke of Edinburgh Prince Philip. It is more or less equivalent to the Skull and Bones Society in America.

Many of the above were either members, associated with members as university students (them or their fathers), or were promoted by members or associates during their careers, and owe their careers to them.

The "Speculative Society" members had a close relationship with Thomas Hamilton – the Dunblane mass murderer. When this was revealed by the Home Affair's correspondent Neil Mackay in the Sunday Herald on 19 January 2003, and at subsequent times, all those named failed to sue.

George Robertson was very close to Thomas Hamilton, and due to his association with paedophiles, he was elevated to Lord Robertson, and promoted to the Secretary General of NATO (11 October 1999–5 January 2004) where he excelled in heroin trafficking.

Tony Blair and Gordon Brown had a vested interest in "wasting" the Dunblane paedophile victim children who were beginning to talk. So, at their request, the gun for Thomas Hamilton was organised by George Robertson, Michael Forsyth, and Robert Bell.

Edinburgh Evening News, 23 March 1996, front page lead: "Chairman of British Foreign Secretary Malcolm Rifkind constituency party at Edinburgh Pentlands, Robert Bell, sold guns and ammunition to Thomas Hamilton only a few weeks before the Dunblane massacre, and it was reported he said he would sell him guns again."

"Robert Bell supplied Thomas Hamilton with two .357 Magnum revolvers and two 9 mm Browning pistols with an alternating full metal-jacket and hollow point ammunition. This was despite Hamilton being a convicted child sex offender, and having close ties with a top policeman, etc.."[18]

Conveniently the UK banned handguns soon after.

This reeks of the Port Arthur Massacre in Tasmania, Australia (46 days later) where on 28 April 1996, 35 people were killed and 21 wounded. That was blamed on the retard, Martin Bryant (28). Two weeks later, Australia banned all sorts of guns.

When the exposure became too much, and he failed to sue, Lord George Robertson simply and promptly disappeared from public life.

Lord Burton, former Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Scotland (1993–2000)[19]: "Lord Cullen's inquiry into the Dunblane massacre was a cover-up . . . It suppressed crucial information to protect high-profile legal figures . . . who may belong to a secretive 'Super-Mason' group called The Speculative Society . . . formed in Edinburgh University through Masonic connections . . . I tried repeatedly to raise concerns about the inquiry during my time in the Lords, and I was bullied and threatened by powerful peers loyal to the Conservative Government of the day [Margaret Thatcher 1979–90 | John Major 1990–97], who warned me of dire consequences if I continued to embarrass them."

The abduction of Scottish children for rape and murder is still closely linked to senior Labour Party political figures in England and the colonies, and continues unabated.

It is alleged that Labour supremo and flamboyant gay, Lord Peter Mandelson PC, was involved in kidnapping underaged boys and girls for the European Union's elite Commissioners in Brussels.

---

[18] Edinburgh Evening News, 23 March 1996, front page lead, paraphrased.

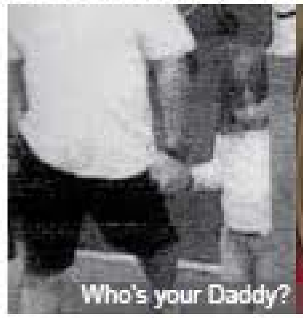
[19] Marcello Mega, News of the World, UK's biggest selling newspaper, 28 December 2003.

Michael Evan Victor Baillie (27 June 1924–) was created 3rd Baron Burton of Burton-on-Trent and of Rangemore (28 May 1962–). His mother was a Cavendish. He was educated at Eton College; Lieutenant in the Scots Guards (1943); For Inverness-shire, he was County Councillor (1948–75), Justice of the Peace (1961–75), Deputy Lieutenant (1963–65); Executive of the Scottish Landowners Federation (1963–92); and Grand Master Mason (1994–2000).

Peter Mandelson was the European Commissioner for Trade (22 Nov. 2004–3 Oct. 2008) under José Manuel Barroso when Madeleine McCann was abducted from British parents in Portugal on 3 May 2007. Then in 2008, Gordon Brown elevated Peter Mandelson to life peer, making him Baron Mandelson, PC, and taking his seat in the House of Lords/ House of Peers on 13 October 2008. This is called 'perfect elevated cover'.

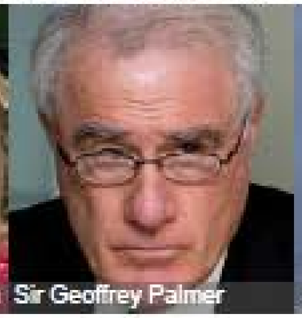
The disappearance of Madeleine McCann in 2007 spotlighted the kidnapping of young boys and girls for Brussels' EU Commissioners – so it slowed it down briefly.

Then, three years later, on 4 March 2010, it was revealled by security camera photograph on the front page of the Dominion Post newspaper, that a possible location for Madeleine McCann was with the Dunedin Police in New Zealand – who are well known for their paedophile rings, either running them, or covering for them, locally, or internationally.



Who's your Daddy?

Madeleine McCann



Sir Geoffrey Palmer

SS Stoner Blair

Her Majesty's Privy Council is an advisor to the Queen – usually members of England/ Northern Ireland's House of Lords/ Commons. It is very, very, rare for it to be given to a colonial, or a New Zealander. So it is very, very likely that Geoffrey Palmer was caught doing what shamed him (S&M) in 1985/6 and this was used to control him – hence his elevation to Her Majesty's Privy Council in 1986 and the title – "The Right Honourable".

To avoid embarrassment, the Queen saw fit to promote Geoffrey Palmer into the ranks of the British paedophiles, their minders and enablers. This made The Right Honourable Geoffrey Palmer a police paedophile minder, while he was Attorney-General and Deputy Prime Minister, under Prime Minister David Tranny-Rooter Lange.

These elevated people are then called in to cover up the messes of state.

The New Zealand Police paedophile ring at Banks Road in Christchurch (300 km NE of Dunedin) was covered up by The Right Honourable Attorney-General Geoffrey Palmer, resulting in three distractions – the Christchurch Creche case where Peter Ellis was stitched-up in 1991; the Bain family murders (5 dead) on 20 June 1994, where newspaper delivery boy David Bain (17) took the wrap for his incestuous child-sex abusing Freemason murder/ suicide father; and four Prime Ministers in 15 months (David Lange | Geoffrey Palmer, 8 August 1989 | Mike Moore, 4 September 1990 | Jim Bolger, 2 November 1990).

So when the New Zealand Police were caught in a paedophile ring at Banks Road in Christchurch, the Queen called in a favour from her Right Honourable Geoffrey Palmer, with promises of further elevation when it was covered up and innocents stitched-up.

When The Right Honourable Attorney-General Geoffrey Palmer covered it up, by creating and running a series of stitch-ups over years and decades, he then paid to have his arse whipped by S&M's Christine Rankin, that night, and was then made Prime Minister in a swapsy with the transvestite-lover David Lange – who in turn became Attorney-General.

The Right Honourable Geoffrey Palmer was then rapidly elevated beyond question – literally so he didn't have to talk to anyone he didn't want to, or answer any questions he didn't want to – created a Knight Commander of the Most Distinguished Order of St Michael and St George (CGMG, 1991); Honorary Companion of the Order of Australia (1991); listed on the UN Global 500 Roll of Honour (1991) for environmental work (saving Beluga whales); his law practise was then elevated creating the Resource Management Act (1991) which made captialism all the more difficult (and kept more commoners poorer for longer); Judge ad hoc on the International Court of Justice (1995); and Senior Counsel (2008–), equivalent to Queen's Counsel.

The Right Honourable Sir Geoffrey Palmer GCMG has also taught other lawyers how to be paedophile minders at the University of Iowa and the University of Virginia; and was given honorary doctorates from Hofstra University NY and Washington University, St. Louis.

The Right Honourable Sir Geoffrey Palmer GCMG, police paedophile minder and faux jailer, is most remembered in New Zealand for boring the nation to sleep (replacing the Goodnight Kiwi); and being Christine Rankin's whipping boy, then promoting her to the head of New Zealand's largest government department, having failed School C twice as a 15-year-old, then again as a16-year-old. Her attention span was severely limited.

The security footage of Madeleine McCann in the Dunedin Warehouse was taken in December 2007, seven months after she disappeared. She spoke with a British accent and went by the name 'Hailey'.

"New Zealand interpol passed the CCTV footage of the girl to Portuguese police, but the sighting was apparently ignored by them . . . Acting Southern District Commander Inspector David Cambell [paedophile minder] said police obtained the CCTV footage from the store [The Warehouse] of the child and the family with her and investigated, but were unable to find the girl of the family she was with [because they were covering for them]. The file was forwarded to Interpol [who are the Nazi SS with Hitler's picture taken down, and paedophile minders].

"The lead jurisdiction, in this case, Portugal, directs how the case progresses and has not asked NZ Police for any follow-up to date . . . Dunediin Police last night said another person had phoned in to report a possible sighting of Madeleine . . . Portuguese police authorities there ruled the CCTV photos 'not relevant' to the case . . .

"Mrs McCain told Britain's Daily Mail: 'It's absolutely shocking and difficult. Some of the information handed in was very credible' . . . They were shocked when they saw the scale of the information that came in and the lack of action taken. There are potential leads in the file that are now being followed up by our investigators."[20]

Gordon Brown was under scrutiny by Scotland Yard for crimes against children, and was also identified by the FBI as an active member of the paedophile ring run by Thomas Hamilton. Paedophiles surround themselves with other paedophiles, and elevate them so that those around them are also untouchable. These include: British Prime Minister Tony Blair; and his rorting appointed/ not voted successor and bully, British Prime Minister Gordon Brown; Lord President of the Council and First Secretary of State, Lord Peter Mandelson; NATO Secretary General Lord George Robertson (SS); Lord William Cullen (SS), Attorney-General Lord Peter Henry Goldsmith; Secretary of State for Scotland Baron Michael Forsyth Kt (SS), Secretary of State for Health Alan Milburn; Prince Philip to whom Thomas Hamilton made one of his last phone calls; and The Right Honourable Sir Geoffrey Palmer GCMG, Judge of the International Court of Justice, UN Global 500 Roll of Honour, Honorary Companion of the Order of Australia, and Honorary Doctorate.

The Right Honourable Tony Blair – Presidential Medal of Freedom,
Congressional Gold Medal:
"Rolling Thunder –
I think I'll send it home to the kids."

---

[20] 'Second NZ Link to Maddie, Portuguese police ignored NZ Interpol CCTV footage', Emily Watt, The Dominion Post, Thursday 4 March 2010, A1.

UN WANTED WAR CRIMINALS

Slobodan Milošević

Slobodan Milošević.

Slobodan Milošević (20 August 1941–11 March 2006, Milosevic/ Miloshevich) led the Socialist Party of Serbia from its foundation in 1990, to become the President of Serbia (1989–97) and the President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (1997–2000). He was Chinese supported and Russian backed, and as with most Russian leaders, the country broke down, a revolution took place, this led to a confusing war with mass deaths in which no one took responsibility, and he left the place in disparate ruins. That pretty much sums up the history of Chinese and Russian colonies . . . divide, divide, divide and rule.

Slobodan Milošević parents separated and his father committed suicide in 1962. His mother was an active member of the Communist Party and hanged herself in 1974. The children of communists are the worst kids of all, right shits, and that both his parents committed suicide just made him a 'right shit murderer', so he studied law, and became head of the ideology committee of the student branch of the Yugoslav Communist League where he met the communist prime minister's nephew, who sponsored him.

Slobodan left university in 1960 and became an economic advisor to the Mayor of Belgrade. Five years later, he married Mirjana (Mira) Marković who had all the movers and shakers contacts, and became the leader of the Yugoslav Left (and Milošević's junior coalition partner) in the 1990s. So these people were out and out communists.

Milošević began working at Tehnogas in 1968, was chairman by 1973, then sponsored to head of Beobanka (arguably Yugoslavia's largest bank) and travelled to Paris and New York . . . so he learnt English.

In 1984 Slobodan Milošević was elected to a two-year term as president of the Belgrade League of Communists City Committee, and in 1986 he was elected to the 10th Congress of the Serbian League of Communists.

With even more Russian backing, Milošević declared support for Serbs in Kosovo who claimed they were being oppressed by a government dominated by ethnic Albanians (that's the racial divide). He called for political change to protect minority Serb rights and initiated a strong crackdown on separatism (the ideological divide). Having voiced the plan for divide and rule, the Russians gave him the push and Milošević emerged as a force in Serbian politics from 1987.

A year later I was cruising through Yugoslavia and a mechanic there, a young guy who owned six garages, said there was going to be war between six factions, that it would be all over the place, very destructive, containing decades of hatred – racial and ideological – and he couldn't see it stopping.

It had already begun and took off in two years.

Nationalism was taboo in the Yugoslav Communist system, and the Kosovo Albanians and other nationalities were accused of being nationalist (the nationalist divide). The Yugoslav Communists were commited to a 'Brotherhood of Unity', which was to turn out like Milošević's parents, all ideological and dead.

As animosity between Serbs and Albanians in Kosovo deepened, 15,000 rioted against the police on 24 April 1987. The plants in the crowd attacked the police. Milošević came out and the plants in the crowd yelled: "We are being beaten by the police" and Milošević responded: "You will not be beaten. No one should dare to beat you again!"

Like most riots, they had been organised, and organised by the Russians who wanted to make their man Milošević look good, so Milošević addressed the crowd as the peacemaker. It was an inside job. Russians specialise in organising crowds – they're called unions.

The Interior Ministry then found "the total conduct of the citizenry in the mass rally before the cultural hall in Kosovo Polje cannot be assessed as negative or extremeist [and] the police's use of rubber truncheons breached . . . Articles 100 and 101 . . ."

Former President Stambolić (1978–82): 'I see that day as "the end of Yugoslavia".

So here we have a totally corrupt and manipulating system in Yugoslavia, as run by the communist Russians for another last ditch post-WWII attempt at turning socialist Yugoslavia into a communist dictatorship run on fear and not much food.

This came with full UN and NATO support.

When Milošević's successor (head of the Belgrade Committee) Dragiša Pavlović criticized Milošević's Kosovo policy, he was expelled. President Stambolić supported Pavlović and was then accussed of abusing his office and fired. With Stambolić's resignation formalised in February 1988, Milošević took his place as Serbia's President. This was simple mass organised corruption, and it was that easy to become President of Serbia.

Milošević then initiated a program of IMF-supported free-market reforms, setting up the "Milošević Commission" in May 1988 comprising Belgrade's leading neoliberal economists.

This was the Russians working for the Jewish Central Banks turning Yugoslavia into a debt-laden globalisation slave state, and sure enough, when I went through there in late August 1988, the devaluation on the currency was at least 500% and each day the price of the ferry to Greece would go up another 20% (15,000 dinar to 17,000 dinar). So everything had to be bought on the day, including groceries, and loans were complicated transactions between families that strangely involved the pantry and the amount of food in it.

As is typical of Russian Revolutions, to add to the confusion, everything has a name nearly the opposite of what it is.

From July 1988 to March 1989 the 'Anti-Bureaucratic Revolution' led to the resignation of state governments (like Montenegro) not aligned with Milošević, to be replaced with people in governments who were. Milošević's sold this revolution to his supporters as an authentic grass-roots political movement, but all the local governments were filled with hardened communists, shits of children whose parents had committed suicide etc.

Yugoslav President of Presidency Stjepan "Stipe" Mesić: "Milošević implemented an anti-bureaucratic revolution, as it's called, by which he destroyed Yugoslavia."

This is the second time the communist Milošević has destroyed Yugoslavia, and he's beginning to look like a KGB agent.

Slovene newspapers published articles comparing Milošević to Italian Fascist dictator Mussolini, a one-time Marxist, who became a British agent, turned Italy to Nationalism, then destroyed it, and was in turn killed by British SAS who let the local mob take the credit.[21]

No one believed the mass meetings and rallies were spontaneous, Milošević was deliberately fanning nationalist passions,[22] and the Russians are the world's experts at organising mobs to protest (It's still called 'Unions').

Milošević's political allies were Serbs, Albanians and Montenegrins who did not want a separated Yugoslavia, but who had to go to war to prevent this, and thus created it. That's the problem with Nationalism – it's the Devil's cut.

---

21 TIME, 24 October 1988.

22 Milosevic Trial Transcript, 2 October 2002, p. 10722, and 21 May 2003. P. 20859.

In Vojvodina 100,000 demonstrators rallied outside the Communist Party headquarters on 6 October 1988 demanding the resignation of the provincial leadership. The majority of protesters (Milošević supporters) were workers from 40 km away and had been bused in.[23]

Nevertheless, the demonstrations were successful, the provincial leadership resigned, and the local League of Communists elected a new leadership who were all Milošević allies.

On 10 January 1989, the Anti-Bureaucratic revolution targetted Montenegro where 25 % were unemployed and 20 % lived below the poverty line. 50,000 turned up and a day later Montenegro's state presidency and delegates in the Yugoslav Politburo collectively resigned and a Milošević ally was elected Montenegrin President.

Beginning in 1982 and 1983, the SFRY League of Communists adopted a set of 'conclusions' to centralizing their control over the police, courts, national defence and foreign affairs in the Kosovo and Vojvodina provinces. They labelled the Albanian riots in Kosovo, 'nationalist', and used this as an excuse to invade.[24]

This is all formula communism.

On 28 March 1989 the Serbian [Milošević] control over the police, courts, national defence and foreign affairs resulted in mass demonstrations, and violent street rioting, and some bad shooting at the police – 156 were killed or injured, mainly injured. It was so corrupt, ethnic Albanians boycotted the provincial Kosovo government, and Milošević took control of every aspect of governance. Entire states voters were striking their vote.

Slobodan Milošević became the 1st President of Serbia (8 May 1989–23 July 1997) and now held power in half of the Yugoslav federation. The other half became separatist from Milošević, abandoned the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, and adopted democratic multiparty systems in 1990 – the opposite of what Russia and China wanted.

Milošević, who had undermined the Yugoslav federation, now had to follow suit and all agreed to create the Federal Repulic of Yugoslavia in 1992. This dismantled the remaining communist infrastructure and created a federal democratic multiparty system of government.

The Russians didn't like this, so there was mayheim and war. There was mayheim and war, but they managed to keep Milošević alive and make him the 3rd President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (23 July 1997–5 October 2000) and still prevent his conviction, as well as provide for his family in exile.

Milošević's government censored the media. In March 1991, Serbia's Public Prosecutor ordered a 36-hour blackout of two independent media stations (B92 Radio and Studio B television) to prevent the broadcast of demonstrations in Belgrade. When challenged, the Public Prosecutor simply didn't respond.

Mind you, we had the same thing against Helen Clark's Labour government in New Zealand (1999–2008). The most hated woman in New Zealand's history, most of the protests filmed never made it to the media, and those that did failed to show the sign:

"Helen Clark wears incontinence nappies".

Milošević's government then restricted free speech, with Article 98 of the Serbian Penal Code providing up to three years prison for "public ridicule".

That's interesting because the KGB's Helen Clark brought in the 'Electoral Finance Act' in December 2007 which prevented public ridicule of any Member of Parliament in any election year (the next was 2008).

---

[23] The Times, London, 7 October 1988, 'Angry Serbs topple the leadership of Vojvodina province; Demonstrations against the Communist Party; Yugoslavia.

[24] Milosevic Trial Transcript, 1 December 2004, p. 34030.

It was actually created for Greg Hallett (the author) who had exposed Helen Clark as born AIS Grade 5; that is, conceived as a male, and rejected Androgen only to the extent that she was not quite an hemaphrodite; and was a KGB agent who tried to launch a nuclear strike on New Zealand, et cetera.

The penalty was two years without trial – worse than Russian-controlled Yugoslavia.

The result in Yugoslavia was multiple charges against a variety of people opposed to the Milošević's policies and even the Serbian political satire cartoonist was charged.[25] Even the Army was protected and we all know that Army Intelligence is an oxymoron.

Similarly in New Zealand, a whole bunch of unrelated people were charged with terrorism on the same day (14 October 2007, from Ruatoki and the Tuhoe Nation to Manukau in South Auckland), and all charges were dropped two weeks before the 8 November 2008 Election.

With this history of backroom manipulations, and obviously being run from Russia as a KGB agent, and as a failed child with two parents who separated then committed suicide, Milošević continued his path of destruction to divide and rule, mayheim and war, laid the bedrock for war through political instability, and started the wars in Kosovo, Bosnia, Slovenia and Croatia.

Milošević was Yugoslavia's Hitler. He was a Serbian nationalist (who denied he was a nationalist) who incited a murderous drive to carve a Greater Serbia from the ruins of Yugoslavia. He did all of this under the guise of peace – just as Hitler did.

Milošević blamed the wars on the states that broke away, which they did rather than become another Hitler's Austria. Regardless Milošević managed to turn them all into Czechoslovakias, and overrun them despite any peace agreements.

As Yugoslavia collapsed, Milošević then openly supported his nationalist policies in an attempt to keep his communist regime in power.

By that time his opposition was the ultranationalist and anti-communist Serbian Radical Party. And let's face it, any party that is not in power is labelled by the incumbent party as "radical". It is only when the overall population agree that change is required in the opposite direction, that a party can successfully call itself 'Radical'. Adding the word Serbian makes it 'nationalist'.

So most of the population agreed that a radical national party was required to remove the foreign Russian/ KGB/ warring/ IMF/ Jewish bankers/ bankrupting/ Globalisation/ below the poverty line slavery party that was Milošević.

Milošević agreed and formed a coalition with them.

Even The Hague indictment agrees that, starting in 1987, Milošević "endorsed a Serbian nationalist agenda . . . in order to strengthen centralised rule in the SFRY."[26]

Former U.S. President Bill Clinton: "Milošević "sought to expand his power, by inciting religious and ethnic hatred in the cause of Greater Serbia by demonizing and dehumanizing people, especially the Bosnian and Kosovar Muslims . . . He unleashed wars in Bosnia and Croatia, creating 2 million refugees and leaving a quarter of a million people dead . . . he stripped Kosovo of its constitutional self-government, and began harassing and oppressing its people."[27]

---

[25] Mark Thompson, Forging War: The Media in Serbia, Croatia, Bosnia, and Bosnia-Hercegovina, The Bath Press, England, 1994, p. 60.

[26] Second Amended Indictment; Case No. IT-99-37-PT; Prosecutor v. Slobodan Milošević, 16 October 2001.

[27] Remarks by the President to Veterans Groups on Kosovo; Eisenhower Hall, Ft. McNair, 13 May 1999.

Former U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright: "Slobodan Milošević initiated four wars during the 1990s, including a devastating campaign of ethnic cleansing in Kosovo which killed thousands and drove almost a million people from their homes."[28]

Milošević had a murderous ambition to create an ethnically pure Greater Serbian state. Forces under his command committed atrocities against civilians as part of a systematic campaign to secure territory for an ethnically 'pure' Serb state."[29]

Milošević was the 'Hitler of Serbia' and the 'Stalin of Yugoslavia'.

You should never underestimate 'the evil of a child of communism whose parents had both committed suicide – with a law degree'.

The UN failed so greatly to prevent this second Hitler-Stalin-coming that Hague Prosecutors could not produce one single order issued to Serbian fighters.

Milošević: "There are none, that's why you haven't got one."[30] Hitler engineered the same situtation. The orders we verbal and implicit and placed through his inner circle.

But even his supporters admit that Yugoslavian President Milošević commanded Serbian security forces in Kosovo during the war.

Milošević was a ruthless political opportunist whose goal was to become the second Tito (populist socialist dictator ad-infinitum, and Churchill's cousin). In August 1988 Tito's picture was still up behind (almost) every shop counter.

Like Hitler and Stalin, Milošević pursued political alliances and friendships with whoever was in power in order to strengthen his career and fulfill his ambitions. Opinions he held privately, he kept secret publicly. By the 1980s, with his secret amibitions and opportunism for political alliances, he made it to No. 2 in Serbia's political ranks.

When Milošević's communism collapsed around him in the 1980s, leading to the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989, and the end of the Cold War in 1991, he turned to divide and rule.

Milošević developed and engineered ethnic tensions to ever greater heights accusing the ethnic-Albanian government in Kosovo of systematically persecuting Serbs.

This is beginning to look like a textbook re-run of WWII in Germany. The Jews being both the persecuted and the persecutor, just at different levels (Hitler and the SS were Michling Jews), all the while fronting as Nationalist, but bringing in Socialism – communism watered down to somewhere between 'barely tolerable' and 'just short of civil war'.

Tito had a tradition of rallying the population of Yugoslavia to remember the total casualties of WWII at the hands of the Allies. Milošević replaced this with remembering Serb casualties of WWII at the hands of Croatians. This confused 'nationalism and international war', with 'separatism and civil war' and transferred all the emotional energy behind nationalism and WWII, to separatism of Serbs from Croates.[31]

It was a brilliant move, evil, and worthy of either Hitler, Stalin, the Russians that ran him, or the Jews that ran the Russians that ran Milošević that ran the Serbs, that ran the four wars in Yugoslavia.

This was evil on a stick.

---

[28] Address by Secretary of State Madeleine K. Albright To the UN Human Rights Commission; Palais des Nations, 23 March 2000.

[29] Norman Cigar & Paul Williams, Indictment at the Hague: The Milosevic Regime and Crimes of the Balkan Wars, New York University Press, 2002.

[30] Milosevic Trial Transcript, 27 January 2004, pp. 31577–676.

[31] Wydra, Harald, Communism and the Emergence of Democracy, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2007, p. 232.

Not only was it evil on a stick, but the Jewish bankers also ran the UN and NATO. The UN was a gifted to their son Stalin (an illegitimate Rothschild and Jew), in exchange for a seven day war in northern China (8–15 August 1945) removing the Kwantung Army of sick, feeble, old, decrepid and unarmed occupying Japanese. (They were armed with bamboo shaped into guns and swords made out of straightened truck springs.)

NATO (The North American Treaty Alliance) was also as useless as tits on a bull. They did fire some shots off and dropped some bombs, but essentially they were war spectators who couldn't hit a mark unless it was too late, or they could be accused of war crimes, thus getting the mass murderer off his case. When they hit the wrong crowd it's – 'Oopps. Sorry. Collateral Damage'.

By the 1990s, Milošević was bombing and invading areas wherever their leader did not side with him. Kosovo-Albanian politican Azem Vllasi: "Milošević only decided to overthrow me when I refused an invitation to support his political agenda during the Anti-Bureaucractic Revolution."[32]

With the fall of communism in the Eastern Bloc, Milošević and his ex-Communist members formed a new 'Socialist Party of Serbia' – essentially the same thing, different title, with watered-down communism revealled publicly, but heavy-handed totalitarian communist plans held privately.

Milošević recognised the Army of Yugoslavia was largely Serb, so he gave weaponry and supplies to the Serbs of Bosnia and Croatia, thus giving the order for war, not with paper, but with arms.

Worse.

Milošević controlled the media with a heavy hand, censored footage of bad Serbians, and featured controversial reports which villainised the other ethnic groups. Dušan Mitević, Director of Radio Television of Serbia: "The things that happened at state TV, warmongering, things we can admit to now: false information, biased reporting. That went directly from Milošević to the head of TV".[33] Milošević's state media was promoting fear-mongering and utilizing xenophobic nationalist sentiments, further drawing the Serbs to support all out war.

Reeks of Hitler.

While the Serbian state media has been condemned for inciting ethnic tensions, no direct orders to commit atrocities by Milošević have been discovered. What's wrong with a phone call. Better still a walk talkie, or an old fashioned nod, a hand signal, or sending weaponry and military supplies (as confirmed).

Milošević made no effort to punish people responsible for these atrocities, and when Ratko Mladić was accused, Milošević promoted him to lead the Bosnian Serb Army. Milošević had found his killing machine and ordered Mladić to murder thousands of Bosnians in Srebrenica.

Meanwhile the UN wore their UN hats and watched.

The UN then accussed Mladić of the attrocites and Milošević simply held up his now high-ranking diplomatic hands and said: "Who, my boy? No, couldn't be". And that was pretty much the end of the matter in terms of real justice.

Milošević's new ultranationalist Serbs then began killing non-nationalist Serbs. So it really was mayheim and the killing fields with views to the beautiful beach, which really attracted the UN.

They like to watch.

---

[32] Death of Yugoslavia, British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC), 1995.

[33] PBS, Wide Angle, Milošević and the Media, 'Part 3: Dictatorship on the Airwaves'.

By 1990, ultranationalism was such a thrust, Milošević's government had to join forces in coalition with the Serbian Radical Party and the Serb's right to "self-determination" in Bosnia and Croatia. This meant, 'the people you kill, the land you control'. This was killing towards a Greater Serbia (1990–93).

The coalition Serbian Radical Party's ultranationalism was so strong, even the Milošević-appointed ethnic Albanian representatives were replaced by minority Serbs.

The media finally got in there in 1993 and covered the large-scale atrocities of the siege of Sarajevo by the Bosnian Serb armed forces. Western governments then threatened sanctions, but it was Milošević's wife who had a word in his ear: "Your alliance with ultranationalists is endangering your hold on power", so Milošević changed his speech patterns, stopped the nationalist rhetoric, and briefly arrested the ultranationalists leader in 1994 – for show.

Being an intelligence slut of the highest order, a ruthless plagarist of history, and a political opportunist who shifted with the winds of sentiment, Milošević then entered into a coalition with the liberals and advocated a peaceful settlement to the war he had formented, funded, fostered and unleashed.

The Milošević liberal coalition abandoned its support of Radovan Karadžić, repressed the Serbian Radical Party challenge to Milošević's regime, and pressured them to negotiate a peace treaty.

Thus began the Dayton Accord. The intention was good, but all the negotiated add-ons made it the usual piece of US contractual shit – a footprint with no feet inside the boots.

U.S. Peace Accords have a habit of achieving the opposite of what's intended. Hitler had the same help and escaped Berlin with British and Russian assistance.

Milošević and Karadžić sparred with words. Milošević supported the accord as it retained Bosnian Serbs self-governance over most of the territories they had claimed – 'self-determination' in Bosnia and Croatia.

Karadžić didn't support the Accord, but got the most out of it. In 1996 he neogitiated that if he would dissappear there would be no charges against him. Karadžić ran with it and lived openly in public, and didn't make any public statements.

Despite all these attrocites and obvious guilty parties, the UN and NATO sat around in big planes, and Milošević (the Russian agent mass murderer) was elected Yugoslav President on 22 July 1997.

Within a year, liberal-minded parties consolidated in opposition against Milošević, so he formed a national-unity government with the Serbian Radical Party.

That should shut up the liberals into worrying about their lives.

This was quickly followed by attoricites on Kosvo, and low and behold – media reports. NATO finally woke up and got involved, launching air raids against Milošević's Serbian paramilitary and Yugoslav military forces who were fighting against ethnic Albanian civilians in Kosovo.

The UN peacekeepers were in there handing out food parcels in exchange for sex with children, at least that's true for a third of the countries they act as pie lady for.

It was 1998, ten years too late, with the destruction done, when NATO decimated Milošević's armed forces. Regardless, Milošević – history's great ideological and national slut – claimed "victory" as the ethnic Albanians did not officially separate Kosovo from Serbia . . . but it is debateable whether they wanted to.

Typical Russian distraction.

Like other KGB leaders (New Zealand and the KGB's Helen Clark included) every word that came out of Milošević's mouth was a lie. That people like this should reach the top of their country's political structure shows that politics is just 'Poll it I can".

Little more and much less.

Milošević denied Serbia was at war during the wars in Slovenia, Croatia and Bosnia as he was President of Serbia and not of Yugoslavia, and acted in support, and was not directly involved.

But Milošević, with Jović, had a scheme to transfer every Bosnian Serb unit from the Yugoslav army to the newly formed Bosnian Serb army upon Bosnia's separation from Yugoslavia.[34]

So Milošević was a separatist and a nationalist. He was the separtist and nationalist. This would have happened sooner had their budget been big enough, but Serbia was suffering from hyperinflation, as I experienced.

To forment the war further, Milošević supported the right of Albanians to "self-determination [bare arms and fight for your land], but not to independence. So the Albanians could fight, but had no chance of reward. To back this up he cited numerous churches and cultural relics in Kosovo. He also claimed the KLA were a neo-Nazi organisation that sought an ethnically pure Kosovo"[35] when it was Milošević who was a neo-Nazi who sought a Serbian Yugoslavia.

Milošević denies he gave orders to massacre and blames it on sporadic events confined to rural areas committed by rebels in the armed forces, paramilitaries, Serbian army, or Serbian police and these people were arrested with many sentenced to long prison sentences.[36]

As it turns out, Milošević had the Russian tendency to arrest and jail his enemies with the attrocites he had committed.

U.S. Ambassador Zimmerman later reported that "Milošević's conflicting positions and unusual mannerisms were conducive to schizophrenia. On the face of it, he was polite, conciliatory, eager and willing to find moderate and peaceful solutions to a crisis; but then staunch about Serbian nationalism against all opponents; and arrogant, stubborn, authoritarian and aggressive towards others."[37]

Sounds like Hitler.

Milošević primarily saw Yugoslavia as a state for ensuring the unity of Serbs, and had little interest in preserving the unity Yugoslavia outside of areas of Serb national interests.[38]

Sounds like Stalin.

In public appearances, Milošević would appear strong, confident, bold and serious.

In private, he was laid back, interested in comic strips and cartoons, only allowed a small inner circle to visit, and was paranoid when others visited. He refused to take notes of talks on important issues, then met with his most trusted men and give instructions and directions, with no substantial discussion . . . because he was taking his instructions from elsewhere – Russia.

Sounds like Hitler – Perhaps they had the same Tavistock training. They certainly killed off their opponents in a similar manner.

---

[34] Death of Yugoslavia, British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC), 1995.

[35] Washington Post, Slobodan Milosevic Interview, Belgrade, 16 December 1998.

[36] IPI, Slobodan Milosevic Interview, Belgrade, 30 April 1999.

[37] Zimmerman, pp. 26–27, paraphrased.

[38] Ibid.

M: "We shouldn't forget that Russia was taking its orders from Washington who were working on Yugoslavia in conjunction with Clinton, who set up Pamela Harriman as the heroine."

Milošević's stubbornness and unwillingness to compromise caused many of the political problems and wars which marked his years in power, as well as his unrelenting defence in his trial, which went on and on until most lost interest, and he 'died' a fortnight before conviction.

On 25 August 2000 former Serbian President Ivan Stambolić was kidnapped. He was then murdered by eight Special Operations Unit officers on Fruška Gora (hilly area near Hungary) who were working under orders from Milošević. The police announced his body was discovered on 28 March 2003. Several members of the Serbian secret police and criminal gangs were convicted in 2005, along with other murders of a high police official, a Defence Minister, and the head of Yugoslav airlines JAT.

But twist on twist, those accussed were the same people who arrested Milošević in April 2001.

Then in June 2006 the Supreme Court of Serbia ruled that Milošević had ordered the murder of Stambolić, and it was politically motivated.

In an attempt to bring Milošević to his knees there were mass protests for 96 days, and on 4 February 1997, Milošević recognised his opposition's victories in some local elections, and, when accussed of electoral fraud, he simply admitted to it. Everyone gives an honest thief a moment's grace, and he assumed the presidency of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on 23 July 1997.

Amazing! . . . So more war from a fraudulent incumbent . . .

Armed actions by Serbia against the Albanians in Kosovo culminated in escalating warfare in 1998 and NATO air strikes against Milošević's armies from March to June 1999, resulting in a full withdrawal of all Yugoslav security forces from the province. It was during this time, on 27 May 1999, that Milošević was indicted.

Milošević's rejection of claims of a first-round opposition victory in new elections for the Federal parliament and presidency in September 2000 led to mass demonstrations in Belgrade on 5 October 2000, known as the 'Bulldozer Revolution'.

The Yugoslav constitution called for a second election round for the two leading candidates, where one had to reach more than 50%. Official results put Koštunica ahead of Milošević but at under 50 %.

How can this be?

The U.S.-financed CeSID claimed Koštunica had more than Milošević but kept changing their story between 24 September and 5 October 2000.

How can this be?

Milošević was forced to accept Vojislav Koštunica had won when commanders of the army, whom he had expected to support him, indicated they would not, and they would not permit the violent overthrow of the Serbian government.

It was over for Milošević,

On 6 October 2000, Milošević publicly accepted defeat and Koštunica took office as Yugoslav president on 7 October 2000, but not until Milošević had announced it.

Vojislav Koštunica had sat out the Serbian political struggles since the mid-1990s and did not participate in the 1997 Serbian parliamentary or presidential elections. He waited until the other Serbian politicians had beaten each other to death before he ran.

This coup d'etat placed the Democratic Opposition of Serbia (DSO) leader Dr. Zoran Đinđić Ph.D. in power. He forced the Serbian parliament to create a new government under his effective control (with help from Hungarian autonomist politicians for its parliamentary presence) and a few minor parties as window dressing. With the entire media under his control, Đinđić arranged for Serbian parliamentary elections and became the Serbian Prime Minister.

Zoran Đinđić then had a warrant issued for Milošević's arrest on charges of corruption, abuse of power and embezzlement. Milošević had vanished some US$30 billion which no doubt went straight to the Russians for their services.

There was an armed stand off at his fortified villa in Belgrade. Milošević was forced to surrender on 31 March 2001, then held in the Belgrade jail.

The initial investigation into Milošević faltered for lack of hard evidence, prompting the Serbian Prime Minister Zoran Đinđić to send Milošević to The Hague to stand trial for charges of war crimes instead.

Three months later on 28 June 2001, Milošević was transferred to UN custody just inside Bosnian territory and then transported to the ICTY. The Yugoslav Constitution prohibits extradition of Yugoslav citizens, so Vojislav Koštunica formally opposed the transfer on legal grounds, but the transfer went ahead anyway.

This cost Zoran Đinđić his life on 12 March 2003. He was shot with a high-powered bullet through the heart in broad daylight outside the Serbian Government building. His assassin was Zvezdan Jovanović (37) who got paid, then sentenced to 40 years in a foreign prison.

Zvezdan Jovanović a.k.a. Zveki/Zmija (Snake) was a Lieutenant Colonel in the police, a member of the feared paramilitary Red Berets, active in Kosovo, and connected to the infamous Zemun Clan of Serbia's organized crime network.

Sounds like a re-run of Anarchists build up to the Russian Revolution.

Zvezdan 'Snake' Jovanović worked under Željko 'Arkan' Ražnatović (1952–2000), a Serbian career criminal, paramilitary leader, and particular favourite of Slobodan Milošević.

Arkan was on Interpol's most wanted list in the 1970s and 80s for robberies and murders committed in a number of European countries and led many genoicides in Yugoslavia, but was assassinated in 2000 before his trial.

These were Milošević's mates. Hardly 'clean hands in equity'.

In May 2008, ICTY-imprisoned Serbian Radical Party leader Prof. Dr. Vojvoda Vojislav Šešelj compared Đinđić's assassin with Archduke Franz Ferdinand's assassin, saying "he [Zvezdan Jovanović] would enjoy the same fame and glory that Gavrilo Princip has in Serbian history."[39]

This is interesting because many believe that the Yugolsav wars, in four areas, over two decades, were designed to create a third world war, which is why the Russians put so much energy into training Slobodan Milošević in the first place. They are always after disgruntled nationals (like Hitler), and with two communist parents who had committed suicide, he was the perfect candidate to promote with a law degree and into the Communist Youth. Such minor costs can lead to spheres of influence over an entire country . . . plus the US$30 billion.

Dr. Vojislav Šešelj.

---

[39] B92 News, 'Šešelj: Đinđić killer merits same glory as Princip', 21 May 2008.

Perhaps the Russians never left.

Željko 'Arkan' Ražnatović who ran Zvezdan 'Snake' Jovanović who assassinated Serbian Prime Minister Dr. Zoran Đinđić Ph.D on the orders of Slobodan Milošević.

Milošević's Relations with Russia and China

Over centuries, Russia has had consistent close and strong relations with Serbia and the former Yugoslavia. Russia and Serbia have significant affinities in majority populations of Slavic ethno-linguistic groups, multi-ethnic policies and Orthodox Christianity. Russia ensures it is remembered for assisting Yugoslavia in the 1800s to become autonomous from the Ottoman Empire and established itself as the Kingdom of Serbia.

During Milošević's rule, Russia pursued policies that generally supported the Milošević regime. During the Kosovo conflict in 1999, some observers suggested the possibility of Russia deploying troops in support of Serbia.[40] Russia also provided political asylum to Milošević's family to the protest of the relatives of those murdered.[41]

Milošević first visited China while head of Beobank in the early 1980s and again by invitation in 1997, when he was treated by the Chinese state-media as "Comrade Milošević" and with affection as "Lao Mi".

The Chinese government strongly backed Milošević throughout his presidency – one of his only supporters. They stopped their support as soon as they heard of his surrender.

China was also one of the few countries to oppose NATO intervention, which is probably why NATO listened for so long and took so long to act. China being so big'n'all with its slave trade economy, cheap goods and Jewish backing – Chairman Mao also being the illegitmate son of the Jewish Baron Edmond de Rothschild.

China supported the KGB Tavistock agent Slobodan Milošević and vocally opposed NATO armed intervention in Kosovo. Then Milošević presented the Chinese parliamentary leader Li Peng with the Great Star (Yugoslavia's highest medal) in Belgrade in 2000.[42]

Milošević and his wife viewed the Chinese communist Party as their ally and perhaps their only ideological comrade since the fall of those in Eastern Europe, but the Milošević's were beginning to look worse than their neighbours, the Ceauşescus, shot in public to great celebration on 25 December 1989.

We watched it on TV from Hungary, almost live, and the Hungarians were so happy that one of the neighbouring dictators was dead, along with his shopping basket wife, that the nation literally jumped off their couch with their arms in the air, got dressed up and paraded down the streets arm in arm.

I was one of them. It was better than Christmas!

Nicolae & Elena Ceauşescu preparation, execution; & street celebrations across the Eastern Bloc.

[40] Christopher Deliso, Kosovo, 1999, 'An Insider's View', balkanalysis.com, 17 June 2005.

[41] Congoo News, Reuters India, 'Milosevic widow, son granted asylum in Russia', 1 February 2008.

[42] Erik Eckholm, New York Times, 'Showdown in Yugoslavia: An Ally; China, Once a Supporter of Milosevic Against NATO, Sends Its Congratulations to Kostunica', 8 October 2000.

Milošević's Trial and Autopsy

Milošević was indicted in May 1999, during the Kosovo War, by the UN's ICTY for crimes against humanity. Following Milošević's transfer, these charges were upgraded to war crimes in Croatia, genocide in Bosnia, grave breaches of the Geneva Convention in Croatia and Bosnia, and violating the laws or customs of war.

On 30 January 2002, Milošević accused the war crimes tribunal of an "evil and hostile attack" against him.

Fair and equitable accusations on both sides.

The trial began at The Hague on 12 February 2002, with Milošević defending himself while refusing to recognise the legality of the court's jurisdiction.

The trial was a controversial issue and featured many conflicting testimonies. Just as Russia is an alphabet soup of Intelligence agencies, they can really mix it up during a trial. Everyone who has even been recorded by them as a sexual deviant, and is remotely involved, is used to testify some conflicting and unresolvable remark.

Add to that a team in Belgrade sending Milošević the secret police files, Serbians supporting Milošević's point of view; and Bosnian and Croatian witnesses supporting the indictments . . . as you could appreciate, the prosecution took two years to present their case and covered the wars in Croatia, Bosnia and Kosovo.

Milošević became increasingly ill during this period. He had symptoms of high blood pressure and severe flu, but he was taking medication for these symptoms (to create them), appearing in court, then taking medication to counteract these symptoms . . . then taking his real medication. This caused six months of delay, and intermissions whenever Milošević either could not cope with his triple medication, or he was looking too well.

When Milošević started presenting his defense in early 2004, he announced over 1,200 witnesses, of which only 5 would testify. Any ruse was a good ruse, and some of them refused to testify until Milošević's two court-appointed British lawyers were removed and he was allowed to represent himself.

Former Soviet Premier Nikolai Ryzhkov became Milošević first high profile witness in late 2004. His presence was the statement required. If Milošević was allowed to present his case, and he could establish that NATO's attack on Yugoslavia was aggressive (NATO called it "Operation DELIBERATE FORCE"), and was thus a war crime under international law, and this was established as prima facie, then the ICTY was legally obliged to indict the leaders of most of the NATO countries, as per the UN's terms of reference.

So NATO, the UN and the ICTY (also UN) had a vested interest in the trial not concluding, and either killing Milošević, or swishing him out of The Hague to live with his family in exile in Russia.

This was something the Russians were pushing for, had planed, and were experts at. After nearly five years, the trial was stopped with just 40 hours to go. Milošević was found dead in his cell at 10 am on Saturday 11 March 2006, in the UN War Crimes Tribunal's detention center, Scheveningen, Den Hague.

He had been dead for at least three hours, so were there no video cameras of his cell?

Saturday was a convenient day to die, as any weekday, Milošević would have been woken around 7.45 am to get prepared for the day's trial.

Critics suggested Milošević (64) caused his own heart attack and supporters say the ICTY did it. Shortly before his death, Milošević had requested heart surgery, but the ICTY expected he would escape, and refused to trust his guarantees. So Milošević expressed fears that he was being poisoned, but he was in charge of his own medication, and no one else could keep track of it.

Then a 12 January 2006 test showed Milošević's blood contained rifampicin, an antibiotic for TB and leprosy, which neutralises the effects of the high blood pressure medication. However these tests were only received on 7 March, which allowed Milošević to continue using the drug for another eight weeks, apparently unaware, but still getting the desired side effects.

Milošević even wrote to the Russian foreign ministry and complained about the rifampicin in his blood. Supporters suggested he was being poisoned by the ICTY, but others more accurately judged that Milošević was trying to get himself sent to Russia for heart surgery and escape. Russia is a strange location for heart surgery, but the operations are cheap, about US$300.00. Not that the money mattered. Milošević had stolen US$30 billion and Russia was where the US$30 billion went to. So if he got to Russia, there was no stopping him.

Despite all vistors being searched, it was the same as any prison, and Milošević was able to get any drug he wanted. They are generally hidden in the mouth, up the nose, anally, in a shoe, under a cuff, or simply palmed. Even Serbian doctors were taking him unapproved medicine in September 2005.

The autopsy then showed that Milošević had not taken rifampicin in the final few days before his death, but then, if the high levels of the UN and NATO agreed, the Russians could easily swish in another body, swish Milošević out, and end the trial of what could have been a total embarrassment. So there was agreement on both sides.

The director of the Russian heart surgery centre where Milošević had requested treatment, and The Times' medical columnist, both asserted Milošević's heart attack could, should, and would have been prevented with standard medical help.

The Times' medical columnist Thomas Stuttaford: "Taking into account Milošević's health condition, I am 'surprised that Milošević has lived for as long as he did' [and] using rifampicin might have been 'a cunning way to kill a man with minimal expertise' . . . Given the data that existed, he "should have been considered for a Coronary bypass or angioplasty (unblocking of the arteries)".

This prevented NATO and the UN from scratching any further. Not only did they not want the case to finish, they didn't want anything to do with the body, so they didn't look too hard, and nor did his wife, family and close friends. Threat of arrest and protests took care of that.

So we really should look into the Russian files for any compromised sexual history amongst these medical opinions, the guards and all the UN personnel.

Milošević lawyer Zdenko Tomanović confirmed to reporters on 12 March 2006 that rifampicin neutralised some of the effects of Milošević's heart medicines.

Tomanović then formally requested the autopsy to take place in Moscow. The ICTY tribunal rejected the request, but allowed a Serbian pathologist to attend the autopsy.

On 13 March, Dutch toxicologist Donald Uges confirmed that rifampicin was found in Milošević's blood, then suggested it may have been deliberately taken as a 'get out of jail free card', to seek medical treatment in Russia, where his wife and son were living in exile.

Likewise, sources at the war crimes tribunal say that Milošević had regular access to unprescribed drugs that were smuggled into his cell under a lax prison regime.

Timothy McFadden, the prison governor responsible for Milošević, complained in December 2005 and January 2006 that he could no longer monitor drugs taken by the former leader.

Milošević had the key to his own office, which had a fax machine, a computer and a telephone, and access to a private "comfort room" for visits by his wife.

The preliminary results of blood tests on 17 March 2006 showed no indication that Milošević's died from poisoning . . . Although this was reported by Reuters (essentially Jewish Zionist banker propaganda that'd just got US$30 billion back to the Zionist homeland – Russia), and it was worded in a very biased way:

> "On 17 March, it was confirmed that preliminary results of blood tests showed no indication that Milošević's death by heart attack was caused by poisoning."

President of the UN war crimes tribunal, Judge Fausto Pocar, told a news conference: "So far no indications of poisoning have been found at the time of Milošević's death". But rifampicin disappears from the body within days and the autopsy just shows it wasn't used in the previous three days.

On 5 April, the Dutch pathologist concluded that Slobodan Milošević had died of natural causes (a heart attack), and final toxicological studies had confirmed there were no traces of poison/s or substances which could have triggered the heart attack . . . but rifampicin disappears from the body within days.

The prosecutors then announced that non-prescribed medicines had been found in Milošević's cell in December 2005, but none were found in his cell "the day after he died".

This does not discount the 24 hours in between, or if the drugs were removed, along with Milošević? and a cadaver installed? as there were obvioulsy no video cameras on in his cell! because it took the ICTY at least three hours to discover him!

The president of the UN Yugoslav war crimes tribunal welcomed the final report that formally closed the Dutch investigation, but he said the tribunal will continue investigating the medical treatment Milošević received in detention . . . which means absolutely nothing.

ICTY Chief Prosecutor Carla Del Ponte then gave the usual United Nations verbal tripe in a vain attempt to not make the United Nations look totally useless, compromised and scared of becoming the accused:

> "I deeply regret the death of Slobodan Milosevic. It deprives the victims of the justice they need and deserve. In the indictment which was judicially confirmed in 2001, Milosevic was accused of 66 counts of genocide, crimes against humanity, and war crimes committed in Coatia, Bosnia, Herzegovina and Kosovo between 1991 and 1999.
>
> These crimes affected hundreds of thousands of victims throughout the former Yugoslavia. During the prosecution case, 295 witnesses testified and 5000 exhibits were presented to the court . . . thereby confirming . . . that the prosecution case contains sufficient evidence capable of supporting a conviction on all 66 counts.
>
> The Defense was given the same amount of time as the prosecution to present its case. There were in total 466 hearing days, 4 hours per day. Only 40 hours were left in the Defense case, and the trial was likely to be completed by the end of the spring. It is a great pity for justice that the trial will not be completed and no verdict will be rendered.
>
> However, other senior leaders have been indicted for the crimes for which Slobodan Milosevic was also accused. Later this year, the trial of eight senior leaders . . . But the most senior perpetrators are still at large.
>
> Now more than ever, I expect Serbia to finally arrest and transfer Ratko Mladic and Radovan Karadzic to The Hague as soon as possible. The death of Slobodan Milosevic makes it even more urgent for them to face justice.
>
> Finally, I would like to share a thought for Zoran Đinđić, his wife and his family. Exactly three years ago, he was murdered in Belgrade. He is the man who had the courage to bring Slobodan Milosevic to The Hague so that he could face justice."

But there wasn't any.

The Spymaster on ONI and Milošević

Spymaster: "The British wanted Milošević like a hole in the head. When he was imprisoned he realised someone was out to get him and he threw his hands up and said, 'So fucking what', and the way to piss off these guys is to ignore them, which he did. He thought he was being poisoned by the water, even by the doctors using the water, so he was going about everything fatalistically. He knew they would get him in the end, but he didn't know that was 'getting him out'.

"Milošević used to tell stories that the Poms used to routinely come in and issue everyone with Audis. That was how they kept track of them all. He considered the British had so many spies in the Balkans that they would be stopped by all the purveyors of accomodation reacting to the shear weight of them leaving.

"Milošević used the ONI (Department of Naval Intelligence) in 1994, in the middle and latter stages of the war, and he used to say to ONI that everyone's Yugo kids were in the London School of Economics and that's why the British knew nothing would ever happen because they had their next generation of Yugos invested and nobody's going to shit on their kid's future by speaking out."

Look-alikes, Body Doubles and Doppelgängers in live storage in Russia

Spymaster: "When the Russians want a body double they just get in the car and go to the valley with the same bloodlines, and the first stop they make is with the local police. They pull out a photo of the subject, show it to the local police chief and record everything he says. Then they gather together about ten or twenty look-alikes, pick out the best two or three, and earmark them for surgery.

"This surgery can even cut someone down to the height they're looking for. By the time the surgery has settled, and the dental work is done, they're ready to swish the person, alive or dead. Dead is easier, but it's still easier to walk them in alive, as long as the cover story is temporary ("its just a short break"). With the Muslim swish, you can always promise them seven virgins in heaven et cetera.

"With Slavs, it only takes them five weeks to teach them another language under hypnosis. Serbo-Croat can be taught to a Russian under hypnosis in 10 days. French takes a little longer because it's a different language base. If you encourage them to root more than one person in one language, they tend to become a casanova and get a hard on as soon as they speak the downloaded language. This is not the done thing, so it's carefully played out.

"It was even easier with Milošević's doppelgänger, because they didn't need to teach him to speak – a few words perhaps, a grunt or two."

Novotel Interrogation by Richard Holbrooke's man, Auckland 1994

Spymaster: "I was walking along Queen Street in Auckland City in 1994 when I was asked up to the Novotel (now the Rendezvous) on the corner of Cook and Vincent Streets, just down from the Auckland Central Police Station, like across Vincent Street. On the day it had a whole lot of international flags out front. Something was about to be had, or just had.

"I was taken up to the 5th or 6th floor where ONI had taken out the entire floor, which meant they could throw someone off the internal balcony without anyone opposite getting a direct line of sight as to who dunnit. At this level, the Novotel's internal attrium was seven or eight stories up, perfect for throwing people off and getting naming rights to the hotel.

"I was led into the hotel suite and sat down in a chair at the far end of the room with the door opposite. As per training, I was expecting to be tortured, and admitted I didn't mind such. I waited, waited, waited, then someone walked in – the interrogator – from the Office of Naval Intelligence – Darren, an Australian from the back of Broken Hill, in his mid-30s.

"I was really expecting an American.

"ONI Darren had been working with Richard Holbrooke, who he referred to as 'Rick'. "Richard 'Rick' Holbrooke used to ring Darren up, spill the beans and ask for all sorts of advice. Darren noted Rick's previous mission was also a fuck up in the capital of Nepal where he was running a crooked king, in Darjeeling or Kathmandu – the capital of Nepal."

"Richard Holbrooke wrote the Dayton Accord, essentially a series of outs for the international war criminals in the war in Yugoslavia (Milošević, Karadžić, and Mladić).

"Rick Holborne got ONI Darren to interrogate and threaten anyone who might know where the war criminals were hiding out, or what had actually gone on in Yugoslavia – like an attempt to create WWIII et cetera. Part way through the interview, ONI's Darren said:

> 'You're an absolute arsehole because you believe in grabbing people. The best agents in this situation are the ones who are always on the brink of making an arrest, but never make one . . . not some cunt like yourself who wants to feel somebody's collar. You're very lucky I hold a degree of sympathy for you, because I know, I will never admit to it, there's actually a part of me that would like to do what you've done."

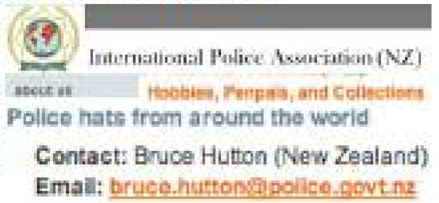
Inspector Hutton's naming rights of Auckland Hotels

"City Hotel was called the Prince Arthur on Hobson Street and was the 'Paedophiles, Police and SIS Hotel'. The Regent Hotel on Albert Street was the 'SIS HQ', actually it was the Crown Plaza behind, connected at the back. The Harbour Lights on Symonds Street was the 'Whores, Cops and Drug Dealer's Hotel'. This had a killer drop from the top floor and throwing someone off was called 'naming rights'.

The Auckland Novotel (now Rendezvous).

"They used to hold parties for skanks, whores and narcs and other legitimate businessmen, and in the middle of it, someone would get chucked out the window, or drowned in the bath, then naming rights would go to the murderer. Inspector Bruce Hutton used to do the bath drownings, then get naming rights. He had naming rights all over New Zealand.

"Once Inspector Hutton got in trouble after the second Arthur Allan Thomas trial for the Crewe murders. He invited the jury to an after party, and it was the same place as the skanks party. Hutton got in trouble for screwing one of the jury girls and she turned out to be respectable . . . she had a job working for an accounting firm in the city."



International Police Association (NZ)

Hobbies, Penpals, and Collections

Police hats from around the world

Contact: Bruce Hutton (New Zealand)

Email: bruce.hutton@police.govt.nz

Milošević's funeral and Organised Cover for the Replacement Body

There was a heated dispute in Serbia regarding Milošević's funeral, but this was more organised cover for the fake body.

The Socialist Party and nationalist leaders demanded that it should be state-sponsored and high-profile and ought to have a prominent resting place in the "Alley of the Greats" alongside other Serbian leaders.

Serbian President Boris Tadić rejected this, so the Socialist party threatened to withdraw political support, end the coalition, collapse the government and cause an election. So, it was agreed that Milošević should have a farewell ceremony outside the federal parliament in Belgrade, then a private burial in his hometown, in Požarevac.

For more distraction (as organised by the Russians), about 50,000 Serbs attended the ceremony, turned it into a mass demonstration, and prominent supporters made fiery and distracting speeches, so no one considered looking too hard, or inside the coffin. Then the coffin was taken to Požarevac for burial in the backyard of Milošević's family home under the tree where the Milošević's had their first kiss back in 1958.

Milošević's friends and family did not want to attend their Slobodan's funeral when he was still alive elsewhere (the Yugo's are a superstitious lot), so they pulled out at the last moment, despite the burial being in their own backyard.

His wife didn't even travel to Serbia with the casket, nor did she attend the funeral. The Russians engineered a late out for her. They arranged for the issue of a current arrest warrant related to fraud charges. This was apparently very controversial and difficult to resolve, and could not be resolved before the funeral.

It was all the more funny because the Russians had received the embezzeled money.

The Milošević family also cited anonymous threats (they don't cost anything) and the Serbian authorities unable to guarantee that they would not be arrested (also free).

Milošević's daughter had the best one of all when she said: "The Socialist Party has hijacked the funeral for political ends" . . . Nice.

Miroslav Milošević (not a relative), claimed to the police he had driven "a three-foot-long wooden stake into the ground and through the late president's heart" to prevent him from "returning from the dead". He was from the Resistance (OTPOR) movement widely credited with overthrowing Milošević in 2000. He was also a self-confessed vampire hunter.[43]

Aren't caskets buried six feet under?

Anyway, buried at a private residence/private military compound prevented public exhumation – so no doubt the Russians have someone standing guard.

---

[43] 'Vampire hunters drove stake through Milošević heart', Ananova.com; 'Vampire slayer impales Milošević to stop return', Gabriel Ronay, Sunday-Herald.com.

Radovan Karadžić

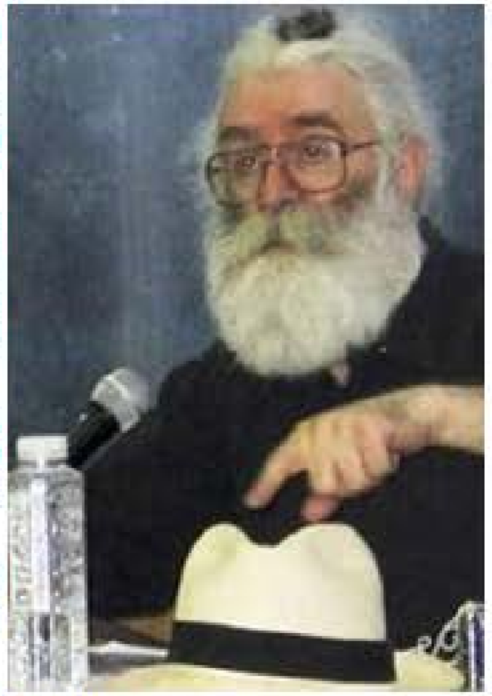
Radovan Karadžić (19 June 1945–) was one of the top half-dozen child psychologists in the world before he was called into politics.[44] He was also a poet, and Yugoslavia has a long history of making its poets political leaders. He was the first President of Republika Srpska (1992–96), indicted for war crimes by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia ("ICTY"), and a fugitive from 1995.

Despite being a fugitive, he was invited to the United Nations the same year.

As a fugitive wanted by NATO, and invited by the UN, Karadžić worked at a private clinic in Belgrade specialising in alternative medicine under the company 'Human Quantum Energy'; practiced psychology as Dr. Dragan David Dabić; had a website on sexual disorders; gave lectures in front of hundreds of people on alternative medicine, bioenergy and the macrobiotic diet in Belgrade; sold medical amulets in the shape of bullets; and sold herbal solutions and ointments as Petar Glumac in Vienna, where he lived in 2007, attended football matches . . . and visited Venice.

While living in Vienna as Peter Glumac, the Austrian police visited Radovan Karadžić at his house regarding an unrelated homicide, but failed to recognise him. Peter Glumac is a real 'other' person who practices alternative medicine in Novo Selo, Serbia. They do not look dissimilar.

The former CIA agent Bosko Radonjich then helped Radovan Karadžić avoid capture in 2001.



Four years later Radovan Karadžić was sighted in a loud red Mercedes in Foca in 2005, but there was no political will in Britain or America to arrest him, so they arrested his son instead and detained him for 10 days in mid-July 2005.

Three years later, Radovan Karadžić was arrested in Belgrade (18 July 2008) bought before Belgrade's War Crimes Court, and extradited to The Hague to the custody of the ICTY on 30 July 2008, and appeared before a judge the following day for genocide.

Here, Radovan Karadžić stated that it had taken 13 years for the ICTY to capture him because he had made a deal with Richard Holbrooke and Madeleine Albright.

Bosnian Foreign Minster Muhamed Sacirbey then confirmed the existence of the Karadžić-Holbrooke deal made in July 1996 and quoted (paraphrased):

---

[44] He studied at Sarajevo, Denmark and Columbia University in New York.

The three faces of Radovan Karadžić.

> 'The United States promised Radovan Karadžić he would avoid trial at the UN war crimes court if he withdrew from public life. Richard Holbrooke acted for the United States and is credited with designing the Dayton Peace Agreement that ended Bosnia's 1992–95 war.'

The U.S.'s Richard Holbrooke got Karadžić to sign:

> "I must withdraw not only from public but also from party offices and completely disappear from the public arena, not give interviews and not even publish literary works, in a word, become invisible long enough for the Dayton Agreement to be implemented in full."

In return, Holbrooke promised Karadžić freedom from prosecution by the ICTY, and his Serbian Democratic Party could take part in elections.

Then the US Secretary of State Madeleine Albright (Hillary Clinton's lover of the last two decades)[45] proposed to the president of Republika Srpska, Biljana Plavsic:

> "Radovan Karadžić is to get out of the way and go to Russia, Greece or Serbia and open a private clinic, or at least go to Bijeljina."[46]

The trial was to be heard on 17 September 2008, but the prosecution delayed citing it needed to amend its indictment.

It is the prosecution that is now delaying.

Radovan Karadžić then dismissed the ICTY court as a "court of NATO" disguised as an international court.

So, Lord George Robertson, you have been found marked, measured and wanting. You are a paedophile involved in war, and providing ongoing cover for international war criminals. If you have done this for Radovan Karadžić, what did you do for Slobodan Milošević and Radko Mladić, not to mention Saddam Hussein and Osama bin Laden.

---

[45] Hillary is now Secretary of State for America, so it's 'can't trust the mouth that munches rug'.

[46] Associated Free Press, The Hague, 1 August 2008.

"Radovan Karadzic (64) was indicted in 1995, spent 13 years on the run, and was then arrested in July 2008 posing as New Age healer Dr. Dragan Dabic.

He snubbed the UN's Yugoslav war crimes tribunal at the Hague by not turning up on the first day, Monday 26 October 2009, nor the second. He hasn't even entered a plea, so it was a boycott the psychiatrists way.

The prosecution's opening statement could not be read because it requires a defence counsel to receive the presentation and they weren't there either . . . and it's not deemed evidence. So the judges adjorned for the day after 15 minutes.

If Karadzic doesn't turn up in the first week, he waives his right to represent himself. Judge O-Gon Kwon could then appoint new defense counsel, but it would take them months to get up to speed. This should provide Karadzic with the extra nine months he is after and frustate the hell out of the 200 Bosnian Muslim prosecution witnesses – the first due on 4 November 2009 – but that will be more like 2010.

So Karadzic is still the social engineer – and it is well-known that delays and frustration have a habit of erasing evidence, even under the judge's orders.

Prosecutors are required to trace a chain of command from threats of mass slaughter to the systematic slaughter on the ground. Karadzic is charged with 2 x genocide, 9 x war crimes and crimes against humanity for Serb atrocities throughout Bosnia (1992–95), from ethnic cleansing campaigns against Muslims and Croats in 1992, to the 1995 massacre of 8,000 Muslim men and boys in Srebrenica.

The Bosnian war left more than 100,000 people dead, most of them victims of Bosnian Serb attacks. Dozens of Bosnian survivors traveled across Europe to squeeze into Courtroom One's small public gallery. It seems that Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic is the model as he dragged his trial out for over four years refusing to cooperate with court-appointed lawyers."[47]

Radovan Karadžić, 3 November 2009,
UN Yugoslav War Crimes Tribunal at the Hague.

"Karadžić turned up to court on Tuesday 3 November 2009, but refused to listen. He said he'd need another eight months to prepare. The trail is expected to take 3–5 years."[48]

Karadžić turned up again on 1 March 2010 into a well established procedural morass, complicitly provided by both sides.

So it's a farce in the making that's already 15 years old.

[47] 'Prosecution snatches back the initiative in Radovan Karadzic trial', David Charter, The Times, 28 October 2009; 'Karadzic boycotts opening of war crimes trial, Ex-Bosnian Serb leader is accused of genocide, crimes against humanity', msnbc, 26 October 2009, paraphrased.

[48] TV1 News, 6 pm, 4 November 2009, paraphrased.

Ratko Mladić

Ratko Mladić in 1993.

Ratko Mladić (12 March 1942–) is another war crimes fugitive, former Chief of Staff and top military general of the Bosnian Serb Army (Republika of Srpska) during the Bosnian War (1992–95).

Despite arguments and a rift between Karadžić and Mladić where Karadžić blamed Mladić for the loss of two key Serb towns in western Bosnia in August 1995, then demoted him to 'Advisor' and "madman", neither NATO or the UN could find either. Rather they provided tacit, complicit, and contractual cover for both.

On 11 July 1995 the ICTY recognised Mladić was responsible for the massacre of around 8,300 Bosniak Muslims and issued an international arrest warrant. He was indicted 13 days later and by 16 November 1995 these had expanded into 'genocide, crimes against humanity and numerous war crimes', all of them outstanding ever since.

The U.S. government then offered a US$5 million reward (but we all know how hollow America rewards are), and the Serbian government watered this down to a €1 million reward for information leading to Mladić's capture and arrest.

As long as the information was not acted on, there was no payout. I experienced the same with information leading to the capture of Saddam Hussein, Oday and Qusay Hussein.

Ratko Mladić (fugitive from the ICTY and NATO) is suspected of hiding in Serbia and the Bosnian Republic of Srpska, although he lived freely and openly in Belgrade, visited public places, ate in the finest restaurants[49]; and attended an international football match in Belgrade in March 2000, entered through the VIP entrance and sat in a private box – albeit with eight of his armed guards – the whole situation screaming attention.

It wasn't until the former Yugoslav President Slobodan Milošević was arrested on 31 March 2001 that Mladić disappeared from public life. He then stayed in the facilities of the Army of Republika of Srpska and Yugolslav Peoples Army facilities including Mt. Povlen, near Valjevo until 1 June 2002. Over the previous seven (7) years, these were obvious places to look, as was normal public life in Blegrade.[50]

In November 2004, British defense officials stated that military action would be unlikely to capture Mladić and Karadžić, but pressure on the government might help. This pressure had been applied earlier, and The National Assembly of Serbia passed a law mandating cooperation with the ICTY.

So the Chief General of the Yugoslav Army Nebojsa Pavkovic requested Mladić vacate the Mt. Povlen Army facility, and then "lost all trace of him" . . . Although reports the Yugoslav Army and NATO had access to cited Mladić staying in Han Pijesak just outside Montenegro, in his wartime bunker (as you would expect);[51] and according to the Chief U.N. Prosecutor Carla Del Ponte "in February 2004 both Mladić and Karadžić were in Belgrade";[52] and in April 2005, Serbian Foreign Minister Vuk Draskovic reported his Serbian security agents knew where Mladić was.[53] To top it off, from October 2004, former Mladić aides began surrendering to the ICTY,[54] and still they couldn't find Mladić.

---

[49] BBC News: Profile : 'Ratko Mladic', 31 July 2008.

[50] Politika, Serbian Newspaper, citing Serbian military intelligence leak, early February 2006.

[51] BBC News: Profile : 'Ratko Mladic', 31 July 2008.

[52] Ibid.

Quite comfortable with his apparent move, in June 2005, Ratko Mladić demanded US$5 million in "compensation" for his family and bodyguards if he gave himself up to the ICTY in the Hague.[55] Mladić was offering himself for the U.S. reward money to be split between his family and bodyguards.

This was quite realistic since a poll showed two thirds of the country would not give Mladić up, and only 14 % would.

Then on 21 February 2006, Mladić was arrested in Belgrade and was in the process of being transferred to the U.N. war crimes tribunal via Tuzia, a Bosnian city in the northeast, for transfer to The Hague.

The Serbian government did not deny rumors of a planned negotiated surrender between Mladić and Serbian Special Forces, but did deny the arrest.

The next day the Romanian government claimed Mladić had been arrested in Romania by joint Romanian-British Special Forces near Drobeta-Turnu Severin and the Serbian border. This was backed up by Serbian sources.

To stop this going ahead, the same day, Chief U.N. Prosecutor Carla Del Ponte denied rumours of the arrest claiming they had "absolutely no basis whatsoever", and then 'urged to find Mladić without delay', threatening non-membership of the EU' if Mladić wasn't found by 1 May 2006.

This gave Mladić another ten weeks to escape his arrestors.

This 21 February and 1 May 2006 non-capture was backed up with a pro-Mladić PR release in June 2006 where: "Mladić had recently suffered a third stroke . . . and had low chances of survival" – so we should all feel sorry for him, give up the hunt, and wait for him to die.

This weak and see-through cover was then supported by the PR of the Democratic Party of Serbia, Andrija Mladenović, who asked: "Who would be responsible for the halt in EU negotiations if Mladić were to die?"

This was backed up by a statement that: "Mladić's appearance has changed as a result of age and poor health".

But despite Mladić's arrest by joint British and Romanian forces, he still had full complicit cover of the Chief General of the Yugoslav Army, the Democratic Party of Serbia, the Serbian Foreign Minister, the Serbian government, the various press agencies, America (who refused to pay the reward money), the UN, and NATO.

This was local cover, full international cover, and no want of arrest for what Mladić could reveal to The Hague, to the ICTY, to the UN, and to NATO, and also expose all of the above, and indict them for war crimes, as well as the leaders of most of the NATO countries – merely by establishing a prima facie case that NATO's attack on Yugoslavia was at some point aggressive, and thus a war crime under international law.

To seal the judgement with public empathy . . . for the poor, ill, destitute and dying stroke victim, a shonky story was published about his daughter, Ana Mladić, committing suicide twelve years earlier, but the details could not be firmed up as to where she died, how she died, whether she killed herself or was killed, what gun was used, and whether their was any positive identification whatsoever.

The son couldn't commit suicide as his name is "Darko", and being male with such a demonic name, it would engineer less empathy, whereas everyone in the West knows an 'Ana' who is someone's daughter.

So in June 2006, it was published that Ana Mladić died way back on 24 March 1994 (in the second year of the war):

> "There were conflicting reports in various Serbian publications regarding her death and body discovery. Some media were saying that her body was found in her blood-splattered bedroom, while the others claim it was found in a nearby park or in the woods near the Topcider cemetery . . .
>
> "However, the weapon was established as her father's treasured pistol, awarded to him as a young man from his military school, and Ana Mladić had just returned from Russia."[56]

Russia is a holding pen for look-alikes for Western Europe (especially Yugoslavia) and has a long history of providing doubles for European leaders – like 'Woodpecker' for Hitler's 2-IC and head of the money, Martin Bormann.

Either the Russians provided Ana Mladić with a body double to return to Yugoslavia, or they told her how to engineer the cover, using a 'Coffee Run' look-alike body from the morgue. That was easy enough. There are plenty of Yugoslavs who look like each other, and her father definitely had access to the morgues.

Ratko Mladić's son then had a child on 2 March 2006 (three months before the empathy building June press release) and named it after the patron saint of Serbia, 'St. Stefan', and the Bosnian entity of Replublika Srpska.

Since the Yugoslav wars were ethnic, religious and politico-idealistic, this was brilliant PR. I wonder if he had given his child a third name, hyphenated perhaps, like 'Adolf-Joseph-Tito', that the empathy could increase.

Probably not . . . It was at its limit.

Come on now. This is a military family that knows how to engineer its PR – its births, deaths and marriages.

If you are the head of the military, you can locate a look-alike, plant the evidence of a suicide, shoot them in the head right through the dental work, swish the daughter to Russia to live as another identity in exile, and swish her back to join her very healthy father as a bohemian in home military exile.

If they can't find Ratko Mladić, then they certainly can't find Ana Mladić, especially since they aren't looking for her.

Is this not what Army heads do?

Do they not create history?

Do they not manufacture history to suit their personal ends?

Do the UN and NATO provide support in 'not locating, arresting, and deporting war criminals'? Do they not pick them up and drop them off to conferences?

Since the UN and NATO manufacture wars as a distraction for paedophile and drug trafficking, do they not 'squash the arrests of war leaders before the stories get too big'?

---

[53] BBC News: Profile : 'Ratko Mladic', 31 July 2008.

[54] Ibid.

[55] The Times, June 2005.

[56] Wikipedia, 'Ratko Mladić'.

Ratko Mladić

The UN capture/ non-capture, escape and trials/ non-trials of Slobodan Milošević, Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić are as weak as international horse piss.

These were Russian-trained anti-National Anarchists, who through the psychological manipulation of committees were allowed to advance into positions where they ruled militaries.

James Bond III: "The Yugolsavian Wars (1991–2001) were run from Washington."

The Yugolsavia Wars were based on the Spanish Civil War (1936–39) and were supposed to create World War Three. U.S. President at the time was George Herbert Walker Bush (1989–93) followed by his radio-controlled rent-boy, Bill Clinton (1993–2001).

Yugoslavian War Result

The end result of the Yugoslavian war was little to nothing . . . The Dayton Accord was thrashed out 1–21 November 2005 at the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base near Dayton Ohio, with Milošević present. Richard Holbrooke was the negotiator. Then it was signed on 14 December 2005 in Paris by Pamela Harriman, also with Milošević present.

The Dayton Accord changed the land less than 4% to what had been claimed during the war.

The major part of the agreement was the mandate to retain a wide range of international organizations to monitor, oversee, and implement components of the agreement. The NATO-led IFOR (Implementation Force) was responsible for implementing military aspects of the agreement taking over from UNPROFOR on 20 December 1995, thus setting up the first really intense international police state.

The Yugoslavian war set up the first really intense international police state, just as Russia, the Jews, the UN, NATO,
the Americans and the Communists wanted.
Failure was the name of the game and it brought all the rewards.

Governance – You suck!

Washington and Russia you are responsible for the four wars in Yugoslavia . . . and for training Helen Clark and Margaret Wilson who similarly trained in Russia for the destruction of their countries. Sadly it was also mine – New Zealand.

There lay the influence in an attempt to create WWIII – hardly clean paws in equity.

Boris Yeltsin – embezzler of US$1.5 billion.

Vladimir Putin – ZIONIST SEX COLLECTOR.

UN – Just un-'everything of value'.

NATO – Afghan heroin trafficker extraordinaire.

So where do we send our war criminals? Back to the UN to train the next generation of war criminals! . . . and we hide 8,000 war criminals in greater Auckland.

Helen Clark is widely considered by the Rothschild's to be the 'Hitler of the South Pacfic', and by their occult inner circle as 'The reincarnation of Adolf Hitler'. She is heading back to the UN as 3-IC in charge of the United Nations Development Programme in charge of Genocide.

Lies, lies and more lies . . . Everything that comes out of her mouth is a lie.

Security Intelligence Service (6 February 2009): "Helen Clark has been offered the head of UNICEF in Paris, but didn't want to live in Paris, so they got her a penthouse apartment in Manhatten, working in the United Nations – something to do with the Arts. She is being visited by the homosexual ex-MP Chris Carter and his wife Peter Kaiser in March 2009. They are staying at her apartment whether she is there at the time or not."

Not for public use

This was mailed to both addresses and emailed to the TV station where Bruce Willis offered US$1 million for information leading to their capture. Actor Bruce Willis fronts for DIA and promotes the latest military equipment – to scare opposition viewers . . . so no response.

'Rewards for Justice'

11 January 2004

Richard Boucher
State Department Spokesman
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20500

Colin Powell
Secretary of State
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr Boucher/ Colin Powell,

I believe that the information contained within entitles me to the USD50 million reward from the State Department as part of the 'Rewards for Justice' program for showing that America does not have the real Saddam Hussein, Oday or Qusay Hussein and that America has used Saddam Hussein and his sons as CIA trained agents to create war in Iraq and the Middle East for the purpose of destabilising the area so that the United Nations, Coalition and American Forces are required to secure the area and the oil, which is then taken for years on end as payment for services rendered.

I hereby claim USD50 million for information leading away from the false capture of Saddam, Oday and Qusay Hussein, this being the first real step towards their real capture. I understand that none of this money has been paid to a real informant to date and that the payment authorised by Colin Powell on 30 July 2003 was just another part of the illusion of this war.

I hereby claim USD50 million from America's State Department as part of the 'Rewards for Justice' program for giving tips as to where Saddam, Uday and Qusay Hussein have been and who their controllers are.

For the current location of Saddam Hussein, just ask the George Bushes; there are two of them as well. George Bush senior knows how to contact his agent Saddam Hussein at any given time.

Eagerly awaiting your reply and financial compensation.

Your sincerely,

Greg Hallett

Founder and Chairman of Fathering New Zealand Inc.. Author of: Are You My Father? The Family Court and Other Experiments, 2002; Sex Lives of the Rich and Famous, A Sexual Political History [withheld]; Drugs and Paedophilia [withheld, 2003]; and Double Agent Prime Ministers, 2004.

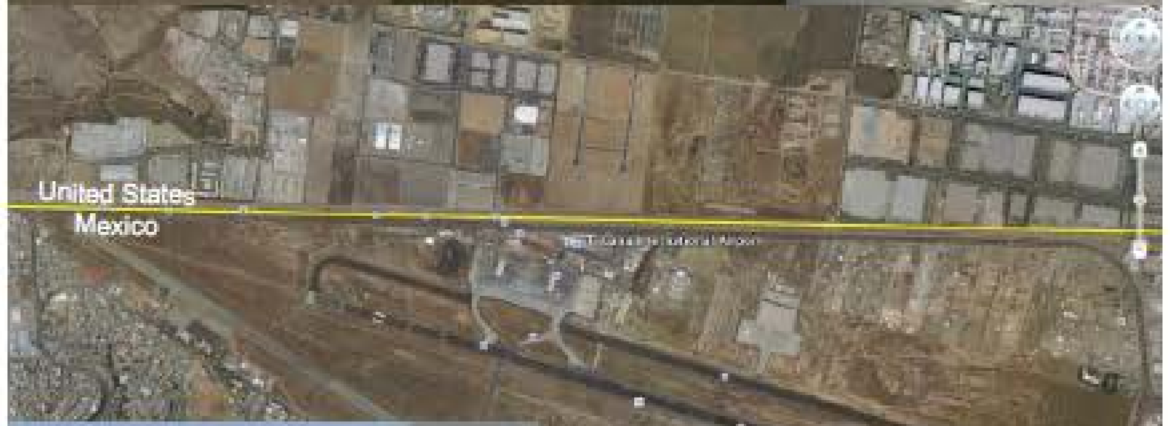
P.S. I will not be requiring your witness protection program.

Military and Government Drug Running

Spymaster: "Colin Powell used to meet all the South American Generals in Mexico. The US Embassy was out of bounds because it was too full of spies, and the Mexican Officers Club was too dripping with drug bribes, so they met on the Mexican side of the border at Cartagena. They'd fly in for meetings on the runway (1980s and 90s) and park their planes at the General Abelardo L. Rodríguez International Airport (Tijuana Int. Airport), at the closest runway point, just 50 metres from the U.S. border, and within shooting distance if required. Colin 'Cocaine Bobby' Powell declared the runway American Territory – for diplomatic purposes of course, and every U.S. agency has tunnels under the border supporting the Narcostate – Mexico.

"As a successful drug runner, Colin 'Cocaine Bobby' Powell then became the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (1989–93), then succeeded Madeleine Albright as the U.S. Secretary of State (2001–05). Now you can't tell me the U.S. military aren't running drugs."

U.S. Mexican Border wall, 50 metres from the Tijuana International Airport Runway.



'GLOBAL PEACE AMBASSADORS' plane, at Tijuana Int. Airport, funded how?

Spymaster: "It was similar between Australia and New Zealand. Australia's leader of the opposition Andrew Peacock (1983–85/1989–90) used the runway at Ohakea Air Force Base (14 km from the West Coast, 2 km outside Bulls, and across the Rangitikei River) to meet Prime Minister David Lange (1984–89) and Finance Minister Roger Douglas (1984–88) to brief them on what Prime Minister Bob Hawke (1983–91) wanted them to do. Even though Hawke and Peacock were in opposing parties, the Aussies owned Lange and Douglas through transvestites and paedophilia. Similarly Prime Minister Helen Clark (1999–2008) was a mole for every other country in the world except New Zealand."

Australia
Google

Ohakea Royal New Zealand Air Force Base. Who said X never marks the spot?

Spymaster: "The British had been running Vis (off Split) for a couple of hundred years. From Vis and Kos, the British ran crime and drugs in Yugoslavia. The British were always doing deals with the Yugoslav Royal Family which was just like a revolving stage."

'Monarchies of Europe, Yugoslavian Royal Family'

"Two feuding families, the Houses of Karageorgievich and the House of Obrenovich, rivalled for the title King. This was often to the death and reads like a Shakespearean play.

Prince Alexander of Serbia (1806–85) was from the House of Karageorgievich and the son of the founder of the Karadjordjevic dynasty, Djordje (George) Petrovic (1752–1817). Prince Alexander was elected Prince of Serbia (1842), then forced to abdicate (1859) in favour of Prince Milosh (1780–1860) from the House of Obrenovich. Serbia became a Kingdom (1882) and was ruled by the House of Obrenovich until King Alexander I (1876–1903) and Queen Drago were murdered in their palace during an army revolt on 10 June 1903.

The rule of Serbia then returned to the House of Karageorgievich and five days later, Peter I of Serbia (1844–1921) became King of Serbia (15 June 1903–21); 15 years later the Kingdom was extended and renamed 'Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes' in 1918; and then renamed again as 'Kingdom of Yugoslavia' on 3 October 1929.

Prince George (1887–1972) was mentally and emotionally unstable and forced to renounce his right to the throne on 12 March 1909.

King Alexander I of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes (1888–1934) was then assassinated on 9 October 1934 in Marseilles by Croat revolutionists using the Macedonian revolutionary Velucko Kerin, who was then shot.

Peter II of Yugoslavia (1923–70) succeeded his father in 1934, aged 10, but when Hitler invaded in 1941, he (18) fled . . . and on 29 November in 1945 the monarchy was abolished without Referendum and Yugoslavia was proclaimed a Republic. Peter II of Yugoslavia then became an alcoholic and destitute, tried a liver transplant at Denver Hospital Colorado but died, becoming the only king to be buried on United States soil (St. Sava Monastery Church in Libertyville, Illinois). Prince Andrej (b. 1929–90) then suicided in 1990.

Prince Alexander (b. 1945) is the present Head of the Royal House of Yugoslavia. Born in London in Claridges Hotel, the family suite was declared Yugoslavian territory by the British Government for his birth. Yugoslavian Constitution stipulates that Monarchs have to be born on Yugoslavian territory. Canada did the same thing for the Dutch during WWII."

Royal Yugoslav
Serb Croat Slovene Anniversary.

New Zealand is a Fascist Country fronting as a Socialist Country

Zarko 'Sharko' Milich

Zarko Milich (88) died on 6 September 2009 in Auckland Hospital. He was the head of a Croatian section of the Ustashi during WWII, then escaped from Italy to New Zealand in 1953.

He then founded Sonny Elegant Knitware[57] on Dominion Road, Auckland and made a lot of money in the 1980s.

His son, Tony, then expanded the company into Sabatini in 1990, winning a Trade New Zealand Export Award in 1997 – now appearing on runways all around the world.

Zarko Milich was a major war criminal responsible for 14,000 murders. His brother was also Ustashi SS, whose daughter Yvonne Milich (Zarko's niece) married Mike Moore.

Mike Moore then became New Zealand's Prime Minister for three months (4 September–2 November 1990).

Former 2-IC SIS: The Labour Party's Mike Moore had cancer in the 1980s and lost his complete genitalia to it.[58] As an absolute neuter he was made Prime Minister for 59 days and his wife Yvonne née Milich/ Dereany Moore had a long-standing affair with the Huka Lodge BOSS (Bureau of State Security for South Africa) in Taupo, which has continued for the last ten or fifteen years. I can't really blame her, but she didn't have to choose a fascist."

So when we say:

"New Zealand is a fascist country fronting as a socialist country" there are reasons in the bedroom.

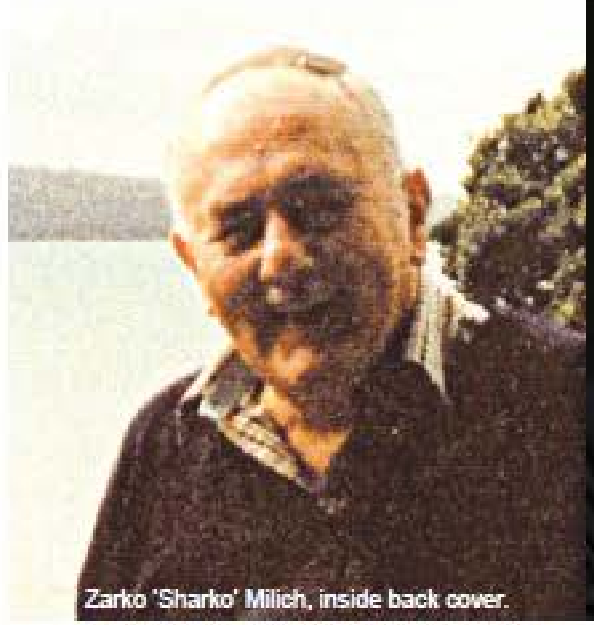
NZ Herald ★ Wednesday, September 9, 2009

MILICH, Zarko. On September 6, 2009, passed away peacefully at Auckland Hospital, aged 88 years. Dearly loved husband of Sonia, and dearly loved father to Tony and Margi. Cherished grandfather to Anja, Antony and Danielle. Loved father-in-law to Sheryl and Allan. Requiem Mass will be celebrated at St Patricks Cathedral, 43 Wyndham St, Auckland City at 10.30am, Thursday 10 September 2009. To be followed by private cremation.

MILICH, Zarko. Uncle Zarko, You are now with Mum and Dad probably drinking wine, singing, eating fish and telling your funny stories and saying 'one more thing'. You were a tough, dynamic man who filled the room whenever you walked into it.Your life was long, fruitful and successful. You were much loved. Always remembered. Love Yvonne and Mike Moore.

MILICH, Zarko. You will be sadly missed. Your memories will always be in our hearts. Lots of love from your close friends Mate, Mando and the Pocrnich family. Pocivaj u miru.

MILICH, Zarko. An amazing



Zarko 'Sharko' Milich, inside back cover.

P.M. Mike Moore, inside back cover.

Unable to have sex, and with plenty of time alone, Mike Moore wrote a series of the most boring books on record,[59] all with whitewashed communist themes, as cover for his fascist wife (daughter and niece of Yugoslavian Ustashi genociders) having an affair with her fascist South African BOSS.

For reference to these Ustashi genocides of see Genocide in Satellite Croatia 1941–1945. It portrays a shocking record of mass persecution and slaughter by Croatian Ustashi in the Nazi puppet state Croatia:

> "In proportion to nation's population, this was the greatest genocide of WWII where some 750,000 Serbs, 60,000 Jews and 26,000 Gypsies – all non-Catholic men, women and children – perished in a gigantic holocaust (1941–45) . . . using hammers, saws, knives, garden implements . . ."[60]

This was the mass extermination of some 836,000 Serbian men women and children – systematic brutal massacres which were even too much for Nazi tolerance, so they ignored them, as did most history books.

The Croatian Ustashi were assisted by Croatian Catholic clergy – who were also Ustashi, so they massacred non-Catholics – which seems to be a Catholic tradition . . . It was a Catholic funeral I attended for Zarko Milich. I left when they started singing 'Amazing Grace'.

Former 2-IC SIS: "Mike Moore's wife, Yvonne Moore (née Dereany) used to run the children's television programmes. Her father, Mr Milich, was a war criminal and the Israeli's came to New Zealand to ask for permission to extradite him and take him to Israel for trial.

"So Mike Moore was made Prime Minister for 59 days and told them to 'fuck off'.[61]

---

[57] The Film Archive: Reston's 1971 Fashion Footage. Hotpants, presenting the works of Zarko Milich in association with Sonny Knitwear; Filmed for the 'On Camera' show, 1971. New Zealand television has always backed foreign criminals, fascists, child drug dealers, and child sex abusers, so why should a mass-murdering exiled war criminal be any different.

[58] I suspect Helen Clark. She is well known for killing the men around her, either by poison, heart gun, or burning car. She hates heterosexual men. Investigate magazine even published this: ". . . matched with Clark's dislike of men generally . . ." As a neuter, Mike Moore had the following New Zealand appointments: New Zealand Government Trade Envoy; Labour Party Opposition Spokesman, Foreign Affairs (1993–99); Leader of the Labour Party (1990–93); Prime Minister of New Zealand 1990 [actually 4 September to 2 November 1990 Mike]; Minister of Overseas Trade and Marketing (1984–90); Minister of Tourism, Sport and Recreation (1984–87); Chairman, Cabinet Committee, Economic Development and Employment (1984–90); Minister for the America's Cup (1988–90); Minister of External Relations and Trade (1988–90); Deputy Minister of Finance (1988–90); MP, Waimakariri, Papanui & Christchurch North (1978–99) [neutered here and above], and Member of Parliament for Eden (1972–75) . . . As a neuter, Mike Moore had the following overseas appointments: Director General of the World Trade Organisation 1999–2002; Commissioner, Global Commission on International Migration; UN Commission of Legal Empowerment of the Poor; Adjunct Professor, La Trobe University, Melbourne Australia and University of Adelaide; Special Advisor to the United Nations Global Compact for Business and Development; Special Advisor, China Institute for Reform and Development's World Trade Organisation Reference Centre; Senior Counsellor, Fonterra; Founding member, Global Leadership Foundation; Member, Trilateral Commission; Member, Economic Development Board, South Australia; Member, Board of Governors Institute for International Business, Economics and Law, University of Adelaide; Former Board Member to the Gottlieb Duttweiler Institute.

[59] Mike Moore's books include: A Brief History of the Future; Children of the Poor; Fighting for New Zealand; Hard Labour; The Added Value Economy; A Pacific Parliament; On Balance; Beyond Today; A World Without Walls.

[60] Genocide in Satellite Croatia 1941–1945, Professor Edmond Paris, Paris, 1961, 1962; Publ. The American Institute for Balkan Affairs, 1990, Introduction, slightly paraphrased..

[61] Mike Moore took over from the paedophile-minder, Geoffrey Palmer (8 August 1989–4 September 1990). Both had replaced the Goodnight Kiwi in putting the nation to sleep. The Goodnight Kiwi survived from 1981 to October 1994 – longer than any Prime Minister in New Zealand's history. Richard Seddon served the longest at 13 years (27 April 1893–10 June 1906). Ironically, Seddon was born in Eccelston, Lancashire, 15 km south of where the New Zealand born heroin trafficker Marty 'Mr Asia' Johnston was found with no hands, no teeth and dead in Eccelston Delph (flooded quarry). His murder in England was ordered from New Zealand.

"Mr Milich (Yvonne's uncle) made a lot of money from clothing manufacturing in Auckland in the 1980s. It's still going. He saved a lot of money and is a millionaire, but he still has to live with his history.

"Zarko Milich ran a campaign during WWII just outside Belgrade. He issued his staff with slash hooks, like heavy sickles, and brought in 14,000 people over a week. Under his leadership and direction, his men bashed 14,000 heads in and cut many of them off with sickles, axes and saws. It was one of the worst, bloodiest and most vile crime scenes of WWII.

"Milich supervised the whole thing while working for the Nazis. He was a virulent anti-communist so the Americans and Brits put in a good word for him because he kept pointing out: 'I killed a lot of communists and trade unionists'."

"In June 2008 the Labour Government organised a dinner in Wellington for Croatian and Dalmatian settlers. The Nazi mass murderer Zarko 'Sharko' Milich will be at the head of one of the tables. Not invited are two of the most important creative artists of Dalmation origin – the architect/artist Milan Mrkusich and the actor/writer John Yelash – both heterosexual. Prime Minister Helen Clark is not. She is a Nazi-leaning lesbian paedophile minder with KGB training.

"There are 8,000 foreign war criminals living in greater Auckland. Prime Minister Mike Moore's father-in-law and uncle-in-law were two of them. Both are now dead. That just leaves 7,998 foreign war criminals living and hiding in greater Auckland.

"Over thirty war criminals under his command attended his funeral at St Patrick's Cathedral on Wyndham St, 100 metres from the Auckland District Court at 10.30 am–12.25 pm on 10 September 2009."

Author: "Thanks for the invite. Here's the photographs."

Requiem Mass for the Catholic Ustashi Zarko Milich
at St. Patrick's Cathedral,
Auckland City on 10 September 2009.

Former 2-IC SIS: "The SIS were there taking photographs. No one there knew who you were."

Author: "That's okay. I've got a cover. My parents used to buy clothes off Zarko mid-1970s to mid-1980s, all except the hotpants. It was a conservative 40s-plus women's 'fashion' shop. Have you ever seen an over-40s in hot pants. Not a good look, especially in the regional suburbs. It's got that crazy feel like boil on cellulite."

Funeral Crashing

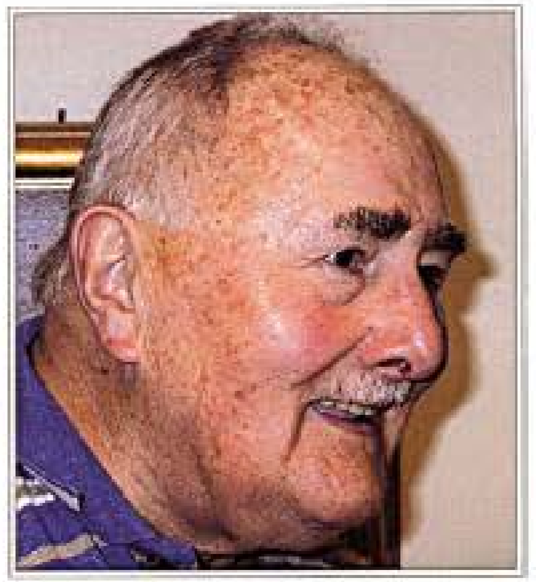
So I crashed Zarko Milich's Nazi funeral at St Patrick's Cathedral in St Patrick's Square in the centre of Auckland. There's always a few pointers that you never get anywhere but during a eulogy. Two hundred people attended and when they stood up, only half a dozen were over 6 foot.

Zarko married Sonia in 1943 during the height of the genocide, when she would have known he was a mass murderer. They moved to New Zealand and bought their first building outright in 1959/60 at the top end of Dominion Road.

This is surprising because Zarko hardly spoke any English and only had his business up and running for a brief time, around three years. He then drove around in big American cars, with big fins, and styley European cars, described by one eulogist as "a Balkan James Bond . . . and his wife Sonia looked like Sophia Loren". He also had beach houses and launches. So there's every possibility Milich had some Nazi/ Ustashi/ Catholic money behind him – the same money misappropriated off the 836,000 dead Serbians and Gypsies he contributed to murdering.

In Loving Memory

of



Zarko Milich

20th April 1921
Split, Croatia

6th September 2009
Auckland, New Zealand

Zarko kind of was a Balkan James Bond. He assumed the Catholics gave him a licence to kill non-Catholics, but it was more than 007 kills. It was more like 7000 kills twice over.

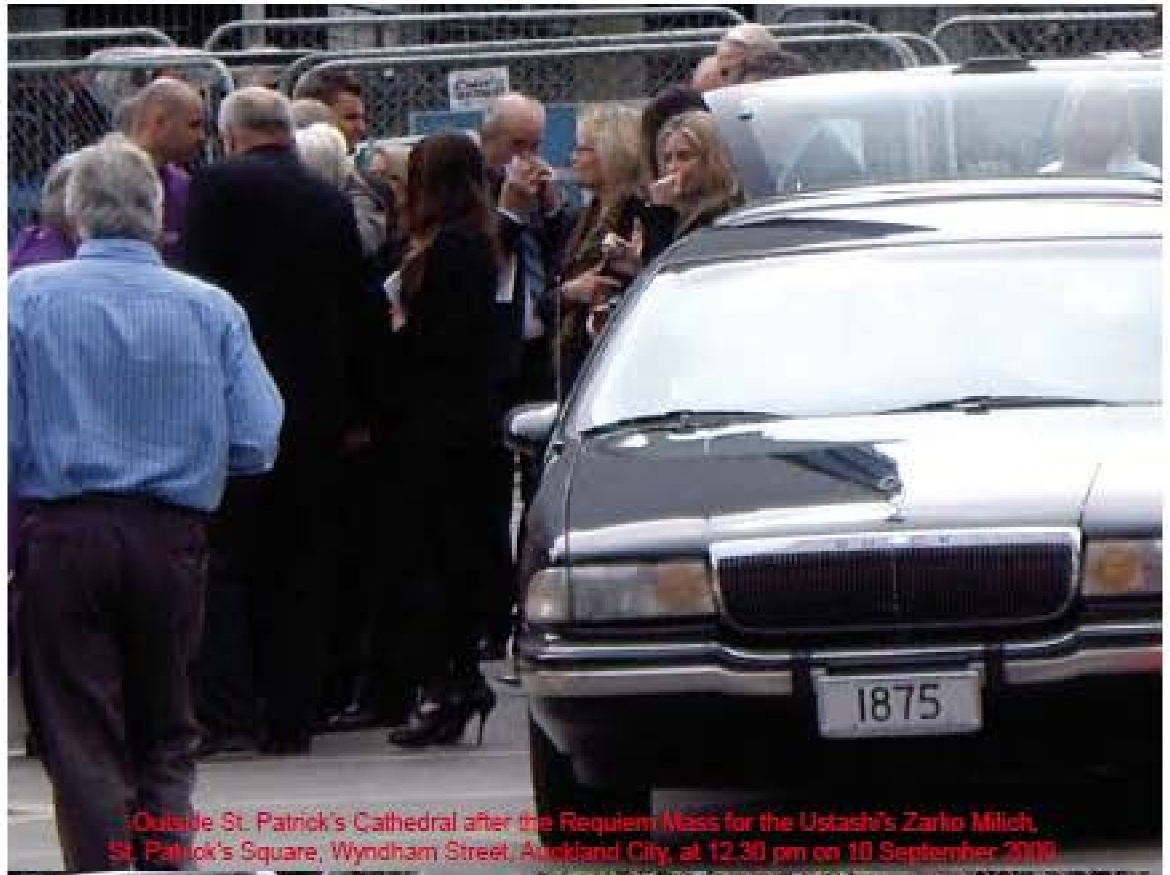
In the early 1970s Zarko caught a mako shark and this made it to the papers: "Sharko catches a Mako", and thereafter he was called "Sharko", but referred to as "Sharkwell" in the eulogy and Requiem Mass.

He didn't lack money and had plenty behind him. He owned commercial buildings on Dominion Road, between Walters and Onslow Roads and the houses behind it, some of which backed onto Helen Clark's house at 4 Cromwell Street.

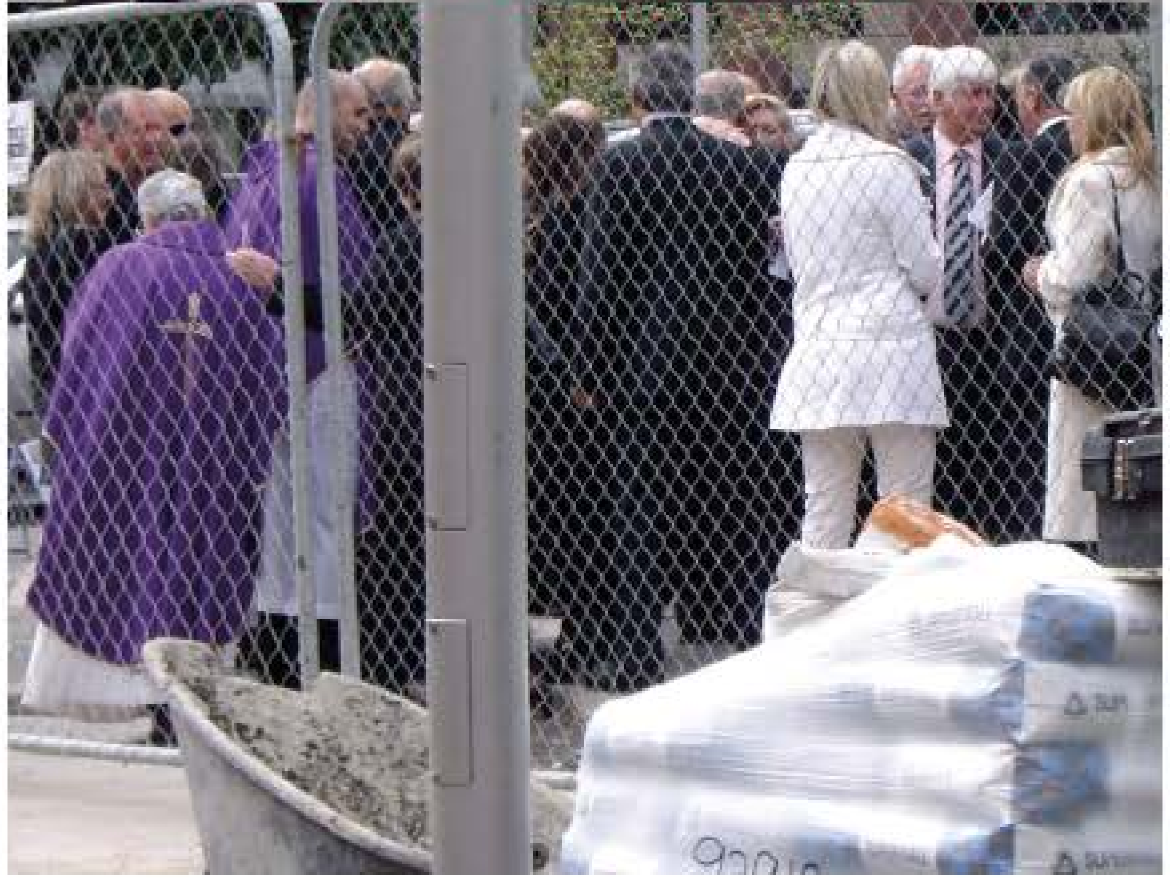
Pedestrian: "I rented a house off him around 1991. It didn't work out, so I told him, and he said, 'I appreciate you coming to tell me, don't worry about it', and he let me off the three weeks notice and even returned my bond. So he had money to spare."

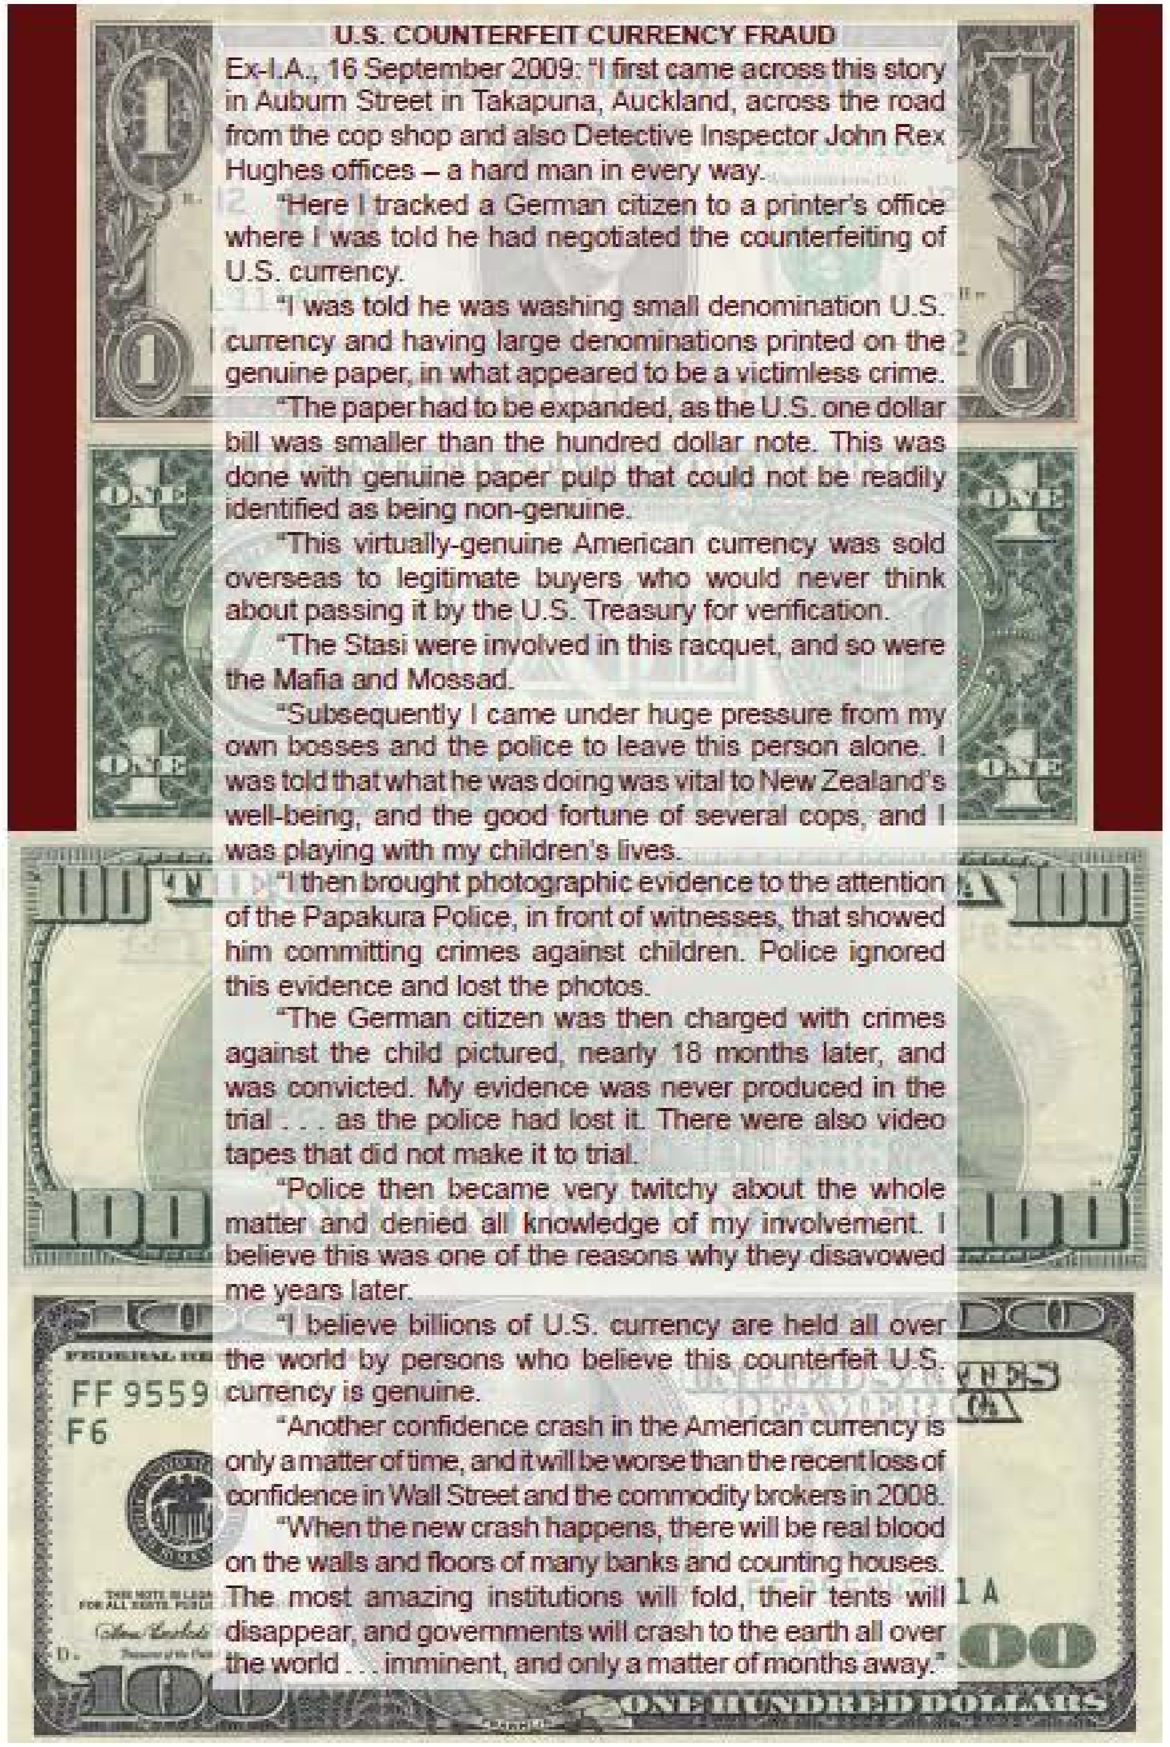
Zarko emersed himself in New Zealand culture, while still singing Yugoslavian songs as he made his salad. He joined virtually every organisation, like Commerical Travellers, yacht clubs, and keenly attended rugby matches with barbeques afterwards. This is common training for war criminals – complete immersion in the local culture and business.

So I attended the funeral and took some photos inside and out. When I went for a closer look, I realised I knew some of the players, and they knew me. One was a Croatian lawyer who'd made verbal passes at my girlfriend, in front of me . . . I used to come up with my parents on buying trips during the holidays and Sharko was one of the suppliers. I remember my father muttering something, but it went over most people's heads.



Outside St. Patrick's Cathedral after the Requiem Mass for the Ustashi's Zarko Milich, St. Patrick's Square, Wyndham Street, Auckland City, at 12.30 pm on 10 September 2009





U.S. COUNTERFEIT CURRENCY FRAUD

Ex-I.A., 16 September 2009: "I first came across this story in Auburn Street in Takapuna, Auckland, across the road from the cop shop and also Detective Inspector John Rex Hughes offices – a hard man in every way.

"Here I tracked a German citizen to a printer's office where I was told he had negotiated the counterfeiting of U.S. currency.

"I was told he was washing small denomination U.S. currency and having large denominations printed on the genuine paper, in what appeared to be a victimless crime.

"The paper had to be expanded, as the U.S. one dollar bill was smaller than the hundred dollar note. This was done with genuine paper pulp that could not be readily identified as being non-genuine.

"This virtually-genuine American currency was sold overseas to legitimate buyers who would never think about passing it by the U.S. Treasury for verification.

"The Stasi were involved in this racquet, and so were the Mafia and Mossad.

"Subsequently I came under huge pressure from my own bosses and the police to leave this person alone. I was told that what he was doing was vital to New Zealand's well-being, and the good fortune of several cops, and I was playing with my children's lives.

"I then brought photographic evidence to the attention of the Papakura Police, in front of witnesses, that showed him committing crimes against children. Police ignored this evidence and lost the photos.

"The German citizen was then charged with crimes against the child pictured, nearly 18 months later, and was convicted. My evidence was never produced in the trial . . . as the police had lost it. There were also video tapes that did not make it to trial.

"Police then became very twitchy about the whole matter and denied all knowledge of my involvement. I believe this was one of the reasons why they disavowed me years later.

"I believe billions of U.S. currency are held all over the world by persons who believe this counterfeit U.S. currency is genuine.

"Another confidence crash in the American currency is only a matter of time, and it will be worse than the recent loss of confidence in Wall Street and the commodity brokers in 2008.

"When the new crash happens, there will be real blood on the walls and floors of many banks and counting houses. The most amazing institutions will fold, their tents will disappear, and governments will crash to the earth all over the world . . . imminent, and only a matter of months away."

Catholic Ustashi in New Zealand

Spymaster: "Perhaps I can give you some background. The way it works is the top guy is supported by the Catholics with Ustashi money and then he sponsors the rest to come out and engage in business. The banks lend their money to the individuals, but they operate under the guarantee of the main man. This saves the Catholic Church a fortune.

"In the future, there's always a payback, and the payback is the Catholic Church have to sometimes be responsible financially and in other ways for that person's welfare. Often this involves medical care and hospital care generated by the state. The Catholic Church operates through an 'Avocato' – virtually an Italian spelling for 'advocate'. Usually a priest, layman, lawyer, or Papal Knight, the Avocato will have three or four of these people on their books and they only deal with Catholics in hospitals. The hospitals are aware of this system for dealing with these people, so they refuse to acknowledge if anything has gone ary."

Army Intelligence: "The Ustashi did atrocities in the last two years of WWII. My father used to say: 'No religious minority, or even a majority acknowledged that anybody they were fighting against in Yugoslavia was human, or had human feelings. This is what enabled them to launch the kind of brutality they accomplished'.

"The key player in of all was the Catholic Church. Because the Catholic Church was as old as it was, and stretched back to the Romans, and came from the time when Roman Generals were virtually religious leaders, the force the Catholic Church was prepared to use in the Blakans, was the degree of force everybody else went to straight away.

"It was Roman conquering force. Because the Catholic Church enthusiastically resorted to war crimes and rapes, and has institutionalised them in the Balkans, it's the automatic reaction of every other group. My father was told that as soon as a family fell into the other side's hands, the patriarchal leaders of families were executed first. This was based on the old adagé: 'Removing the family's leader would leave everybody else running around like chooks with their cut heads off'. The women and girls were raped, usually in front of their mothers, as this heightened the trauma. The Roman Army developed rape as an act of war, and the Catholic Church inherited every other tactic the Romans used, including torture . . .

